Pre-registration process to begin next week

By AMY JAMISON & BETH PETTIBON
Staff Writers

In an attempt to ease University of Idaho students into a touch-tone registration system within two years, the first phase of pre-registration will begin Monday.

The new pre-registration process begins with students meeting with their respective advisers to discuss spring semester classes.

For the next two weeks, students will pick up a Sample Registration Card at their dean's office and meet with their advisers. This process is the same as the one used at the beginning of the fall semester. Advisers will be available in their departments throughout the day except during their class times.

The following week, Nov. 13-17, pre-registration for course selections will begin. Students will pre-register according to alpha groups by seeking validation for courses at the various departments.

After students obtain their adviser's signature, they take the card back to their dean's office on their specified date, according to the first initial of their last name, and pick up a Course Selection Sheet (CSS).

Registrar Matt Telin said that this process will be quite similar to registration in the ASUI-Kibbie Dome, but will be stretched out over a one-week period.

The schedule is as follows: Nov. 13, D-I; Nov. 14, J-N; Nov. 15, O-T; Nov. 16, U-C; Nov. 17, all students who missed their scheduled time.

Students will fill out the sheet with their scheduled classes and take this to the various academic departments for course validations for each course listed on the CSS. A list of the course validation locations will be posted at several campus locations and is available in the pre-registration packet.

According to Bert McCroskey, associate dean of the College of Letters and Science, a list should be available at each of the dean's offices. Students can pick up these packets at the Registrar's office.

To complete the pre-registration process, students must file the validated CSS at the Registrar's office before 5 p.m. Nov. 17. Students can make schedule alterations by using drop/add cards, which are available at the Registrar's office.

The time remaining before the beginning of the 1990 spring semester will give students a chance to make schedule

Senator accuses VP of unethical conduct

Allegations denied

By VIVIANE GILBERT
Staff Writer

A memo accusing ASUI Vice President Lynn Major of being engaged in "ethically and legally questionable activities" during the fall 1988 ASUI General Election was given to ASUI senators at Wednesday night's senate meeting.

The memo from ASUI Sen. John Goettsche, which was addressed to the members of the senate's Ways and Means Committee, accused Major of hiring several students to save her and former ASUI Sen. Steve Smart's campaign posters when they cleared other candidates' posters from the University Classroom Center during last fall's election.

Goettsche's memo also claims that Major purchased beer for the students, who were all under the legal drinking age.

Major denied all the allegations. "I did not pay off people, and I did not give beer to minors," Major said. "That memo is so full of hearsay, innuendos and lies, it's ridiculous."

Major also questioned the timing of the allegations, and wondered why, if Goettsche thought something was wrong since last summer, he waited until two weeks before the election to bring it up.

"My first impression upon reading the memo was that they're grasping at straws," Major said. "They're going to slander anyone they can."

Major has announced her candidacy for ASUI president in this month's ASUI General Election. Goettsche has announced his intentions to run for re-election.

Goettsche said Thursday that he became aware of the alleged activities last summer, but did not take action sooner because none of the students involved would agree to let their names be used.

However, all three sources who finally agreed to be identified have disagreed with the information attributed to them in Goettsche's memo.

The memo claims that Major was informed of the time and the date that a group of students planned to clear the UCC of all campaign materials, and that she requested a group of four Targhee Hall residents to take down and save her and Smart's posters prior to the clearing, and then put the posters back up the next day.

After the students removed and saved the posters, Goettsche alleges, Major purchased two cases of beer for them.

For confirmation of the claims, Goettsche referred to UI student and former Targhee Hall resident Mike Godbold. Goettsche states that Godbold was present when Major made the proposal to the Targhee residents.

Godbold, however, said that he only heard about the proposal later, and that there were only two students involved, not four as stated in the memo.

Godbold said that as he understood it, the students, who did not return to UI this year, approached Major with the information about when the posters would be destroyed, with the expectation that she would warn the other candidates. Instead, Godbold said, she offered them beer as payment to help her.

Godbold said he was present when Major "paid" the students with beer on two separate occasions. He said he also saw Major leaving pre-taped campaign posters and instructions for the students to hang them up with the ones they had removed and saved.

Major, who was Targhee Hall's senator for fall 1988, said one of the hall residents helped her by watching the UCC prior to the election to make sure her posters were safe, but he denied any illegal activities.

"If he did anything else, he did it without my knowledge and sanction," Major said.

Goettsche's memo also stated that Smart told him and ASUI Sen. Mike Gotch that he knew Major actively sought out students to tear down campaign materials.

Smart, however, called the comment "blatantly wrong," and said the memo was putting words in his mouth.

"Not only did I not say that, but it never happened," Smart said. "I have no knowledge of Lynn being involved in tearing down any posters."

Greensboro journalists deny Zinser's claims

By M.L. GARLAND
& SHERRY IDEAL

University of Idaho President Elisabeth Zinser said she was able to proof articles written by student journalists at Greensboro. However, there are discrepancies between Zinser's account and Greensboro students' statements.

Zinser, who made her statements last week at a student senate meeting, said at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro she was often given a chance to look over student reporters' articles prior to publication and was allowed to clarify information and quotes. Zinser was employed as vice chancellor at Greensboro before she took the position of UI president this summer.

"I was frequently sent a copy when a student was writing a piece that was especially complicated," Zinser said. "I'd like to have enough trust to do that."

Zinser is out of town until Monday. But, according to UI Communications Director Terry Maurer, who did not attend the meeting, Zinser didn't say that she was allowed to proof articles at North Carolina, but rather that she occasionally saw articles before they ran and did not try to change them.

However, student editors at the Carolinian, a weekly publication, reported there has never been an administrative reviewing policy.

"That's a lot of shit," said Elizabeth Todd, editorial page editor and former staff writer. "She never had anything to do with the paper and never proofed stories. I've never even seen Elisabeth Zinser."

Editor-in-Chief and former news editor Susan Brewton agreed with Todd's comments.

"The administration has no strings on us. No restrictions are placed on us," Brewton said.

As a corresponding reporter, Brewton wrote a feature, "Southerners describe Zinser as regal, exemplary," for the April 4, 1989 Argonaut.

"The content was handled solely by me," she said. "There was no proofing."

Latchkey program settles at Tumble Town

By M.L. GARLAND
Editor

After months of shuffling the 25 children enrolled in the University of Idaho latchkey program, officials moved the children into Tumble Town USA today. "It's ready and it's beautiful," Norma Bawdon, UI's Early Childhood Learning Center Director said of the latchkey program's location. "It is a relief, to put it mildly."

Bids were put out within the last two weeks for a location to house the after-school childcare service for the children of UI students and employees, according to acting Vice President of Student Affairs Hal Godwin. UI officials signed the one-year lease Wednesday, with a provision to renew for the Tumble Town USA gymnastics center's space at the Palouse Empire Mall.

"The feedback has been positive," Godwin said. "It is a covered location, warm and safe, designed for children. A lot of the best aspects of childcare are built in."

According to Bawdon, Tumble Town has provided a space with new carpeting, tile and a sink. "I think it will work very well," she said.

Godwin has organized a childcare task force of 11 representatives, including faculty from the College of Education and the Margaret Ritchie School of Home Economics, as well as parents and UI staff members. Peggy Pletcher, home economics director, will head the committee.

"There has been a lot of concern on the university's philosophy on childcare expressed by parents and teachers in the program," Godwin said.

The committee will make recommendations on funding, growth, facilities and organization of UI childcare programs. Godwin said a task force report should be prepared in January.

According to Godwin, the purpose of the committee is to study the entire picture of childcare and receive input from the clients and providers. He said they will look into the relationship between the home economics department's daycare and the education department's laboratories to train students in these areas.

"We have never looked at Student Affairs as a laboratory to train students before," Godwin said.

Godwin said he feels childcare under Student Affairs may be a task force recommendation.

The task force will also look into building a new site by next fall when the Sweet Avenue House, one of the Early Childhood Learning Center buildings, will be taken back by the owners, the Kappa Alpha Theta sorority.

The latchkey program has had difficulties since its proposal last May, when officials realized additional space would be required for the 25 children. However, no campus space was available.

Bruce Pitman, dean for student services, gave Bawdon approval to find a site in August. For three weeks the children occupied space in the McConnell Building, at the corner of First and Main streets above Mingles, but Jerry Wallace, assistant vice president for budget and planning, canceled the agreement due to the lack of a playground and off-street parking.

The Carolynian is supported through advertising revenue and a small percentage of student fees. The newspaper's adviser, Irwin Smallwood, is on call for guidance and story ideas.

Smallwood, a retired journalist, taught journalism part time at Greensboro for 15 years and has been the paper's adviser for about one year. Smallwood also said he has had no knowledge of administration or faculty review of student articles.

"I don't regularly review stories for the paper," he said. "I don't think I've been called once in the year I've been doing it."

Smallwood recently held a meeting concerning policies. "There is no policy that I know of for the chancellor at University of North Carolina at Greensboro to review stories," he said.

Smallwood said he personally has never taken any stories to administrators to be proofed. However, he said he would encourage journalists to review facts on complicated stories.

At the senate meeting, Zinser said open meeting laws are interpreted much differently in Idaho than in North Carolina.

Idaho's open meeting law states that any meeting of a governing body that consists of two or more members with the authority to make decisions for, or recommendations to, a public agency regarding any matter shall be open to the public.

"I believe in the First Amendment and what it means," Smallwood said.

Zinser also informed the Argonaut reporter and the senators at the meeting that her desire to talk candidly with student leaders could be affected by the media coverage she receives.

"I'm starting out very open ... but I may get very closed. That will be very painful for me," she said.

Maurer said that Zinser does not feel she has been treated unfairly in the Argonaut and that she has no intention of trying to censor it. He said she would like to have a relationship with the newspaper where reporters would feel comfortable enough to call her and confirm facts and quotes in difficult stories.

New UI Greek advisers juggle wide variety of duties

By J.E. ERICKSON
Senior Staff Writer

On any given day, they might be asked to give advice on fraternity rushing practices, meet with chapter house corporation members, deal with discipline problems, meet with visiting national Greek field consultants or "do lunch" with house members.

For new University of Idaho Greek Adviser Linda Wilson and Assistant Greek Adviser Todd Wiggen, there is no "average" day.

"There is no normal day in the day of a Greek adviser or assistant Greek adviser," Wilson said.

"It's just one of those things where you're never dealing with the same thing twice," she continued. "Additional challenges face you every single day whether it be a good challenge or a little bit of crisis management."

Wilson, 23, began her duties in mid-July, replacing Greek Adviser Frances Dobernig. Wiggen, 24, started in early September and filled the nearly yearlong vacant assistant position.

And while Wiggen says Wilson is charged with the overall responsibility of Greek adviser, he says they consider each other co-advisers.

"We're a team of Greek advisers," Wiggen said. "We both handle different facets and pick our little projects we like to do within the system."

While they advise the governing bodies of the Greek system, the Interfraternity Council and the Panhellenic Council, they also find themselves dealing with groups related to the Greeks.

"We are liaisons between the students, and the faculty, staff, parents and alumni," Wilson said. "I see myself as trying to manage them all."

In addition, Wilson says she works to maintain a good relationship among the Greeks and the students living in the residence halls and off campus.

"I facilitate between those different groups," she said. "A lot of what I do is to act and react to different situations that arise and try to ensure that they don't arise again."

Both Wiggen and Wilson have had practical experience in advising Greek organizations, and both have close ties to the Palouse. Wilson received a degree in communications from Washington State University in 1988. Following graduation, she spent a year as a traveling consultant for the Alpha Gamma Delta women's fraternity.

While a student at Eastern Washington University, Wiggen was instrumental in the colonization and eventual chartering of a chapter of the Sigma Nu men's fraternity. In 1988, Wiggen earned an undergraduate degree in government. And while working on a degree in communications, he formalized the position of Greek Life Coordinator for EWU.

Although both are from Greek systems dramatically different from the one here, both agree UI's system has a great deal going for it.

"This is such a strong Greek system," Wilson said. "We are so lucky to have a residential campus, traditional housing and a university and administration that supports us. That isn't the case on 75 percent of other campuses with Greek systems."

"You drive down that Greek Row, and it is just like seeing one in the movies," she said. "It is just beautiful."

Wiggen concurs.

"Compared to some campuses I've been too, we have a supportive atmosphere as far as the administration," he said. "Just having a full-time Greek adviser and assistant is a level of support a lot of campuses don't have."

Both also agree the university has strong Greek ties.

"Through the Greek chapters we develop a lot of loyalty not only to the national organization, but it also comes back to the university," Wilson said.

Wiggen credits a long history of Greeks on campus and "remendous alumni base upon which to call" as other factors contributing to the success of the system.

But there is room for improvement within UI's Greek system. The Greeks' image, alcohol use and intra-Greek system support are areas Wilson and Wiggen identified as needing work.

"Image is real big," Wiggen said. "But we can make inroads if I can get the Greeks to realize everything they do reflects back on the system."

"I'm not going to tell them not to do certain things but to maybe be more careful with it and be careful with the image they project," he said. "It would be nice to have the community say, 'Those Greek boys sure are nice guys,' rather than, 'Those damn Greeks, just like Animal House.'"

Wiggen says there is a problem nationwide with the perception community people hold about the Greek system. Often, people just don't know what Greek is all about, he said.

NEWSBREAK

FOOD SERVICE COMMITTEE UNDER WAY

The University Retail Food Service Committee held its orientation meeting Tuesday morning in the SUB.

According to Grant Fagg, committee chairman, the group will address the problems with the retail food service.

"We are not going to deal with Wallace," he said.

In addition to food quality, the group will focus on the proposed December remodeling of the Vandal Cafe and will discuss the "Munch Card," which would allow students to open an account with the university and use the card to purchase food.

"Marriott's all for it, but the university is saying no, and we need to find out why," Fagg said of the proposed card.

The committee plans to distribute a questionnaire in the near future to fully assess what the students want from Marriott. The group will meet again Wednesday at 4:30 p.m. in the SUB.

FUND-RAISING EFFORTS FALL SHORT OF GOAL

Architecture students were disappointed with the amount of money collected for their fire fund last weekend.

The students set up booths at both the Eastern Washington and homecoming football games.

The architecture students hoped to attract support from both local and visiting Vandal fans and raise $500 for Greg Harvey and Rob Norwood, two architecture students who were left homeless after a fire destroyed their apartment building in October.

"We got quite a bit less than we expected," said Mary Overstreet, one of the fund organizers.

The administration also considered housing the program at the Presbyterian Church at the corner of Van Buren and Third streets, but the childcare staff felt the space was inadequate for their needs.

"They were just allowing us to use the space," Bawdon said of the Presbyterian Church location. "They were being kind to help us out."

During the interim periods, the children were shuffled to recreational activities and were allowed to occupy the back yard of the Deakin House, where the UI childcare center for toddlers is located.

Election serious despite characters

There is a large and amusing cast of characters running in the Nov. 15 ASUI election, but unlike Elmer Fudd, Yosemite Sam and Wiley Coyote in the old Warner Bros. cartoons, the actors themselves aren't always amused.

Thus it is pointed out at the outset that this is a good-natured and good-humored editorial.

According to ASUI Political Concerns Board Chairman Bill Broadhead, 29 petitions are out and 25 candidates have attended candidate meetings. Two candidates have withdrawn.

"I really think it's great to see this kind of turnout, and I hope voter turnout matches candidate turnout," Broadhead said.

Yet, some of the names and faces turning out are the same ones that keep turning up. Would-be politicians never disappear, they just get more ambitious.

Enter the good-natured and humorous Residence Hall Association President Ray Horton. RHA changed its election policy so that elections could be held each November rather than in the spring. With this arbitrary policy change, Horton can now run for ASUI president.

Convenient? Yes, but now look at a more cleverly arranged, convenient situation.

Seven law students are in the running, with David Pena shooting for president. Perhaps it might be a good thing for these law students to get ASUI positions. At least then they will not have any cause to complain (scream and whine, actually) about having to pay ASUI fees because they are a "special" (unfortunately we don't have a special place to put them) group that doesn't have the time or opportunity to take advantage of ASUI programs.

The ASUI Senate has often been referred to as a pigpen or a playpen. However, the former could be a platform for presidential candidate Mike MacDonald.

You know, the farmer. "Ee-i-ee-i-oh."

Out of the playpen and into the wrestling ring — mud, that is — are Vice President Lynn Major and Sen. Lisa Krepel to oppose each other as the only current ASUI government officials running in the presidential bout.

Despite all this mud, screaming and maneuvering, there are some serious issues to consider come election day.

Incentives to vote include the fees vs. tuition issue that will appear as a referendum on the ballot, and choosing representatives to voice your concerns to the administration and the Idaho State Board of Education.

So avoid the mudballs, have a laugh and come and vote Nov. 15. That's all, folks!

• GOOD FOR U. •

It appears the Campus Christian Center is taking a progressive turn with its new Burning Stake Coffee House. The coffee house, which features refreshments and live music, holds its grand opening tonight from 8 p.m. to midnight.

Moscow is starving for an alternative to bars, bars and more bars for student socializing and entertainment. For students preferring to avoid the deluge of alcohol-related activity, the Burning Stake may be just the place for them to spend their time.

Bruce Wollenberg, director of the Campus Christian Center, said the Burning Stake is non-denominational and non-profit, although donations are accepted to help cover the operating costs of the coffee house.

The Burning Stake is actually making a comeback. Originally opened in 1963, the Burning Stake was a result of the church seeking a way to deal with current social issues.

"The sense was, and we really haven't lost that sense," Wollenberg said, "that unless the church addresses real issues and answers questions that people are really asking, then the church will not survive."

Thus it appears the Burning Stake is a progressive and serious attempt on the Campus Christian Center's part to gain input from students about their concerns and problems while offering an entertainment alternative. Such a relationship that the Campus Christian Center is offering through the Burning Stake is a reciprocal and giving one.

The Burning Stake is a welcome addition to the UI campus and a Christian one, in the truest (and non-denominational) sense of the word. Good for U, Campus Christian Center!

Full-credit candidacy

Editor:

In response to the article in the Oct. 20 edition of the Argonaut, I think it is necessary for some other "student leaders" to voice their opinions about the full-time student issue.

Granted, the requirements of the ASUI positions are time consuming. The senate is required to serve a whole five hours per week of office time and whatever time they put in for committee work and living group visitation. The president and vice president probably serve an average of 30 hours per week, so I guess their positions are a little tougher. However, there are other positions of leadership on this campus that require just as much if not more time, effort and responsibility than our illustrious ASUI president, vice president and senate.

These other leaders have the same 24 hours per day to work with, are looked to for leadership and advice, and represent their constituents as best they possibly can. But the difference is, these other "student leaders" have the capacity to perform their duties while attending the university as full-time, registered, fee-paying students. When I say full time, I mean they can successfully complete a measly 12 credits per semester toward their academic degree.

Who are these student leaders the ASUI speaks so highly on behalf of? Try the RHA advisers and presidents of Greek houses who are on call all 24 hours per day, the RHA Panhellenic and IFC presidents and officers who put in upwards of 30 hours per week, or the SARb, APO, O of O, and IK officers who organize the various service projects and philanthropic events throughout the year. It's even more interesting that these students perform these

Ask Lois:

Dangerous diskette dilemmas

Q. If people are going to go to the bother and expense of laser printing their resumes, why do they insist on using Courier (the ugly, flat and squarish default font), when the whole purpose of laser printing is to allow a wider font selection than a regular printer offers? Personally, I think Courier looks as bad as regular dot-matrix output. And another thing, as long as I'm griping, why do people insist on storing their 3.5 inch diskettes in those dumb little plastic baggies they're packaged in? In short, why are people so stupid?

A. I could respond to this question most rapidly by saying, "I don't know why people are so stupid, but the fact is that they are, and there's not much you can do about it but accept it and try to live with it, because you will be surrounded by stupidity and mediocrity for the rest of your natural life, and that's all there is to it." But I will take a little more time than that, because Ask Lois is a kinder, gentler columnist.

First, people use Courier for the same reason they use PC-Write. It's easy. Just like PC-Write is Shareware and therefore free, and therefore simpler to use than stealing or buying more sophisticated software, Courier is simpler and easier because it's the default font. Joe Stupid says, "Hey, it's there, and I don't have to do any extra work, and my resume is laser printed at least!" Wrong, you insipid people. Your chances of getting hired will absolutely plummet if you use Courier! You might as well type your resume on an archaic typewriter.

In response to your second question, I consulted the nice people at Ag. Computing Services. They say keeping the diskette in the little plastic baggy can be "not only dangerous, but dumb." Remember how someone told you once that you shouldn't leave the shrink wrap on your record albums (back when we had record albums, of course) because it could allow condensation build up? Guess what? The same principle applies to 3.5 inch diskettes! Condensation can rust the shutter mechanism and, as a special bonus, destroy data! The 3.5 inch diskettes were specially engineered to allow easy care. You don't have to store them in baggies! The little shutter protects media from dust and other damaging factors. They were designed to let people escape from evil 5.25 inch diskettes and their stupid envelopes that always got lost. But, back to Response #1: People Are Fundamentally Stupid. In evolutionary terms, we are still trapped in the stupid little plastic baggy stage.

Bush no tax pledge just a fish story

Today we were going to discuss President George Cornish Gamehen Bush Jr.'s pledge of "No New Taxes." But a recent poll of college students revealed that your peers would rather take long summer vacations than read about issues that may never affect them — like making enough money to pay taxes. And so instead, we're going to trash a subject that only a person who's been away from academia for several millennia would defend — year-round school.

At the risk of revealing my total objectivity, let me just say that it's a bad idea. The only good argument for it is the sad fact that our current educational system continues to produce these wiener-dawg philosophers who believe in it. And instead of pointing out why the Air Force is capitalized, or why it doesn't need $900 zero gravity coffee makers that require seven-pronged plugs, they pick on practically defenseless school-kids: "the scapegoats of tomorrow."

Why? Because they're out swimming or playing baseball or riding bicycles or throwing sticks and rocks at each other while empty school buildings (and paid consultants) sit idle. Why not stuff them (the buildings, that is) with ungrateful prepubescent and sniveling coalescents, who know full well they can't be tried as adults, and let them sweat and scratch obscene initials into their desks? Is that any kind of learning environment?

Don't get me wrong. I don't want to confuse "school" with "learning." Because if you actually listen to politicians and educators, you might think that learning is a phenomenon unique to schools. And that it's measured by how many days a year you're supposed to be there. Japanese students go three or four weeks longer than Americans, which prompted the experts to come up with a bold, creative, innovative idea: Make OUR kids go longer, too. And save a little precious heating fuel by spreading out the school year ... as if summer were just another season. And Moby Dick just a fish story. Ptoooooooy!

Of course, when American students were told that their Japanese counterparts were spending 20-30 days more per year in school than they were, 90 percent responded, "Do we have to know that for the test?"

BILL

Commentary

And if that wasn't enough, and it certainly isn't, there's even more ammo in the year-round advocates' arsenal. It deals with the yearly review period that hypothetically, if there were no summer break, would only be necessary for the rest of your life when you finish school.

Now think carefully. Remember way back in August, how you had to spend several MINUTES listening to the professor tell you that the first 10 chapters of your Precious $55 16th Annual Slightly Revised Edition Textbook should be reviewed for you, and you were thinking, "Boy, if only I'd gone to school all summer and reviewed this material. ..."

Ha ha. For the benefit of any year-round school supporters out there reading, let me just emphasize that that last sentence was supposed to be a joke (insert loathsome wince here).

It's ironic that the people who say that summer break is just a living relic of our agricultural heritage want to crank our kids through the production grinder just like a corn crop. Which begs the obvious question: Why corn? Because even the best and brightest corn won't be able to compete with the Japanese, or rescue our nation from some of George Bush's more absurd campaign promises (Remember? The "education president"?? Read my lips?? NO NEW TAXES??!!).

On the other hand, even the least intelligent corn cob probably couldn't have gotten us into this mess (at least not without the help of a few political consultants).

What level of desperation makes us want to believe politicians? We're talking about a supposedly educated electorate that would have voted for Ferdinand Marcos if only he'd promised not to raise taxes, the same people H.L. Mencken was referring to when he said, "Nobody ever went broke underestimating the intelligence of the American public except the federal government (Note: Italics indicate author's embellishment).

So hey, education president, you listenin'? Yeah, that's right, I'm talkin' to YOU. And the way I figure it, you've got no more than four options: 1) Declare martial law; 2) Keep your promise of no new taxes and build your credibility among right wing lunatics who actually believed you were being sincere when you announced that you could balance the budget any ol' day of the week, without raising taxes and with one hand tied behind your back; 3) Continue with the Reagan tradition of raising taxes and shrewdly calling it "revenue enhancement"; or 4) Opt for political suicide: THE TRUTH. Admit that we're a couple vermillion dollars in the hole and ask corporations and citizens to cough it up before even General Manuel Noriega can afford to assume our debt payments with 90 DAYS SAME AS CASH FINANCING.

It's not a pretty picture. But we certainly wouldn't want the president to have to do anything unpopular — you know, something done for the good of the country instead of for his personal approval rating, something that might make some people not like him and hamstringing the number one priority of the Bush administration: re-election. Heck, even a president has to feel good about himself. BUT COULDN'T HE DO IT BY EATING WHOLE GRAIN FOODS OR SUMTHIN'?

So when you're slumped in your sweat-wet chair in mid-July, staring in the direction of the professor, who's tensely waiting for the federal budget to spontaneously explode, as your mind negotiates some far-off rapids on an icy cold river raging through a mountain canyon, try to convince yourself that a schoolroom is the best place to learn. Or that year-round school is for the good of our country. And try not to dwell on the education president, who's probably celebrating re-election on his presidential yacht, in Kenneblaupt or wherever, telling another fish story as he escorts us all up the creek without a paddle.

duties and those of their various other offices while enrolled as "full-time" students. Since most of us do perform these duties for free, we work jobs, too, so we can make ends meet.

Why do we hold these positions? Because these are "extracurricular" activities we enjoy doing.

Extracurricular activities, however, were not created to take the place of education. Rather, they were developed to enhance it. Anybody associated with athletics can tell you the same thing from a different perspective. If you can't handle the responsibility that coincides with an activity, you drop the activity, not school! Student officers and representatives are elected to their offices as students to serve the students. The two kinds go hand in hand.

And since the other "student leaders" must carry 12 credits to get financial aid, live in their respective living groups and maintain their responsibility to stay involved in clubs and sports, the argument to drop our credit load doesn't really carry much respect.

So, I guess what I'm saying is, "Suck it up or get out." School comes first, and the rest comes in a very distant second.

Before any ASUI officers say I don't know what I'm talking about because I'm not in their position, try this. I plan to run for senate this fall. If I'm elected, I'll take my regular 15 credits and work my 30-hour per week job; and just like the rest of those tough "student leaders" who carry a full load, I'll do just fine.

"All they see is what's projected at the parties," Wiggen said.

Alcohol use is also a concern within the Greek system.

"We're still hung up on the drinking age thing," Wilson said. "We have to quit living in the past and in the glory days and start taking responsibility for our actions."

While Wilson admits change won't come quickly, Wiggen believes Greeks can learn to have "fun" without alcohol.

"It's a matter of helping those groups learn how to follow the policy and realize they can still have fun," he said. "There's a big attitude that 'If we don't have kegs, we can't have fun.' That's not true," he said.

The advisers also expressed concern about intra-Greek system support.

"There are some chapters, I wouldn't necessarily call them struggling chapters, but ones that aren't up to the level of the other ones," Wiggen said. "We are going to work with those and try to bring them up so we have a totally strong system."

Wilson echoed Wiggen's concern.

"How can we be so proud of our numbers when this group over here is struggling," she said. "We need to help each other out. IFC and Panhel need to really realize and face head on that we (the Greek system) are only as strong as the weakest group on campus."

And Wilson and Wiggen agree that there is a "fine line" between advising the Greek system and making decisions for it.

"It is best when students have their hands in the pie and are taking ownership of the program they are going to initiate," Wilson said. "If I see they are getting way over their heads or they're getting in trouble, that's where I have to step in."

While Wilson believes a certain amount of failure is "a good learning experience" for student groups, she'll intervene if a situation is going to be detrimental to a group or harm someone else.

"The fine line comes when you have made suggestion after suggestion and things are out of control," Wiggen said. "If we have a situation that is out of control we will have to say, 'You will do this and it will not happen again,'" he said.

"Up until that point, you have to take a laid-back approach ..." Wiggen said.

Neither Wilson nor Wiggen believe their age will be a problem when dealing with students just a few years younger than they are. In fact, they believe their age will be beneficial.

"I want to see these people succeed and help them and nurture them along," she said. "I don't see it as a problem being almost as young as they are."

Wiggen doesn't believe age will be a problem either.

"No, I don't see that because I can deal with the students on a peer level," he said. "In a way, it is kind of easier for me to say, 'Listen, I know where you're coming from but ...'"

"The biggest problem I have now is trying to tell the houses I can't come to their parties," he said.

changes.

Jan. 16, after students return from Christmas break, those who are pre-registered and have no class changes to make can pick up their pre-printed registration form and pay their fees.

Pre-registered students will be able to drop and add classes through finals week of the fall semester and until the regular schedule deadline for the 1990 spring semester.

"The drop-add system will always be there," Telin said.

Pre-registered students will attend spring registration Jan. 16 at the regular appointed times to complete registration and pay fees. A special section in the Kibbie Dome will be designated for pre-registered students unless changes are needed in their schedules.

Telin said this new process will also help determine class sizes, which will be built around the number of students who are interested in classes.

Telin noted the importance of undergraduate participation, especially when trying to work core classes into their schedules.

However, he said he feels many students, especially those who live off campus, will not be informed about the new process.

"I'm afraid it will be confusing at first," Telin said. "The more we talk about it, the less confusing it will be."

Telin and Registrar's office employees have placed posters throughout campus encouraging and informing students about pre-registration.

Fliers are inserted in today's issue of the Argonaut. Telin said he hopes everyone will read the fliers and participate in the pre-registration process.

This is UI's first attempt at pre-registration, and Telin hopes to get a good turnout.

"I hope to get at least a 50 percent turnout," he said. "It's important that undergraduate students participate."

Smart also denied any involvement in the poster accusations brought against Major, and said he could not recall whether or not his posters were torn down with all the other campaign posters.

Goettsche's memo also referred to former UI student Bart Rambo, who lived on Targhee Hall last year. Goettsche said Rambo had overheard bragging from the students who received beer from Major for tearing down posters.

Rambo said Thursday that he had overheard bragging, but was unsure if it was from anyone directly connected with the poster removal.

Major said she lost as many posters as the other candidates did, and estimated she lost $50 worth of fliers.

"If I were guilty, I'd come out and say, 'Yes, I'm guilty, burn me at the stake,'" Major said. "But I'm not."

In the memo, Goettsche requested an investigation into the situation by the Ways and Means Committee, "in order to discourage this kind of destructive activity in future ASUI elections, and to provide Ms. Major with the opportunity to address these allegations."

According to the ASUI Bylaws, the Ways and Means Committee is responsible for the investigation of improper governmental activity.

CLARIFICATION. The article that appeared in Tuesday's Argonaut concerning stolen student art said Campus Nightwatch only checked the outside doors of the Art and Architecture Building. Mike Farley of Campus Nightwatch said that only the east door of Art and Architecture South is unlocked 24 hours a day, and that all other doors are locked at 11 p.m. We regret any confusion this may have caused.

Alpha Phi would like to thank the Sigma Nus for making this year's Homecoming one of the best.

'89 Halloween fun for all

By GRETCHEN KELLEY
Staff Writer

Halloween on the University of Idaho campus was an exciting, fun and productive day for all.

PUNKIN' PUNKERS. Sigma Nus J.J. Jaeger, Rob Haggart and Erik Dague enjoy a party at the Betas.

Activities throughout the campus and community included concerts, trick or treating, pumpkin carving, haunted houses and costume parties.

One More Time and Z-FUN sponsored a concert/costume party at the Latah County Fairgrounds, featuring The Untouchables from Los Angeles and Imaginary Friend from Moscow.

"The bands sounded great. Everybody I talked to seemed to really enjoy it," said UI marketing senior Bob Stull. "Everything went smoothly."

Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity held its annual haunted house to raise money for the fraternity's national philanthropy, Special Olympics. The haunted house included a chain saw massacre room, an execution room and a maze.

"We had about the same number of people we had last year," said Eric Caba, Teke social chairman and a junior in chemical and metallurgy engineering. "We charged $1 a head and raised about $220."

Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority sponsored trick or treating and Sigma Chi fraternity sponsored a pumpkin carving party for the 25 children involved in Friends Unlimited.

"The pumpkins were donated by Safeway, and the kids were able to take the pumpkins with them when they left," said Jason Lee, Sigma Chi public relations officer and a sophomore in accounting.

Delta Tau Delta fraternity sponsored a Big Brother program for a local day care center. Eighteen children, ages 3 and 4, dressed in Halloween costumes and visited the house Tuesday evening.

"They brought bats that they had made filled with jellybeans, and we each gave them treats. They stayed and played on the hill for about an hour and a half," said Martin Maxwell, a mechanical engineering sophomore. "We all had a great time."

Theophilus Tower decorated each hall and invited children to trick or treat at the dorm rooms.

There were no reports of vampire attacks or werewolf sightings so, all in all, Halloween turned out okay.

Coffee house offers alternative to bars

Imagine yourself in a small, dimly lit, plain-looking place. Cookies and coffee have been placed at a table, and a mural, with all its '60s originality, hangs on the wall. You sit down at a table that looks like it has been in existence for more than 20 years, and it has. On every table is a brightly colored Italian restaurant-style candle, and you hear folk music.

Where are you, and why? You are in the Burning Stake Coffee House to converse, express different ideas, and hear those of others. It is a mellow atmosphere, and that is exactly what Bruce Wollenberg, director of University of Idaho's Campus Christian Center, wants the Burning Stake Coffee House to be.

The coffee house, located at the corner of Elm Street and University Avenue, across from the Perch grocery store, is a service of the Campus Christian Center.

The Burning Stake's grand opening, technically its grand reopening, will be held tonight from 8:00 p.m. to midnight and will include refreshments and live entertainment, Wollenberg said.

Donations for refreshments will be accepted, but since the coffee house is a non-profit service of the Campus Christian Center, no entrance fees will be charged, Wollenberg said.

"It's not intended to be an income generator for the Campus Christian Center," Wollenberg said.

According to Wollenberg, all the donations will go toward meeting the coffee house's expenses.

Tonight's entertainment will include Lorelee Lindsley and Dan Maher, folk singers from the Palouse Folklore Society. Wollenberg said that he hopes people will eventually step up and become part of the entertainment with poetry readings and chamber music.

Those who come to the coffee house need not be of a particular denomination or of any denomination at all, Wollenberg said.

Student works shown at gallery Ridenbaugh Hall hosts dual exhibit

By MARY HEUETT
Staff Writer

Art students and members of the University of Idaho Student Art Association will have a dual show that opens Saturday at Ridenbaugh Hall.

Students from Mike Rainey's advanced graphic arts class and his alternative photo processes class will fill one room.

The photo processes exhibit is composed of cyanotypes, a type of photographic technique that lasts longer than any other form of art.

"It will last longer than the paper it's on," said UI student and exhibitor Noel Brevick.

The photo pieces consist of flat works, photographs and sculpture. Each deals with photographic issues.

The alternative photo processes class will show a special piece involving video cameras and students during the opening.

Rainey described the piece as "an act of viewing and an act of seeing."

The exhibit, which graphic arts students have named

Typographic Messages, consists of posters that take passages from literature and try to make them exciting so that people on the street will read phrases they wouldn't normally read.

The graphic arts exhibit will be shown in some of the small towns in the area after the Ridenbaugh show closes.

The other room will feature pieces by members of the Student Art Association. This eclectic display includes sculpture, jewelry, ceramics, painting and printmaking.

The two exhibits open Saturday at 6 p.m. and run for two weeks. The performance piece by the photo processes students will be shown Saturday night only.

Prichard shows garden designs

Allows architects to express ideas

By MARY HEUETT
Staff Writer

Gardens and paintings will be featured at the Prichard Art Gallery today through Dec. 31.

Conceptual gardens, free of cost concerns and client interests, will fill the downstairs area. These 12 ideal gardens are shown with models, drawings and written explanations.

The gardens represent the individual designers' personal ideas, feelings and philosophies. Each combines ideals with regional styles in an effort to transform nature.

Each garden design encompasses numerous acres, requiring the viewer to take a step into the imagination to appreciate the entire effect of the design.

Johanna Hays, director of the Prichard Art Gallery, said each design is a form of expression combining the artistic and the scientific.

The individual nature of the design projects ensures that each is unique. One is a tribute to sports.

The purpose of the show is to allow younger architects to express their design ideas.

Michael R. Van Valkenburgh, associate professor of landscape architecture at Harvard University, thought of the idea for the show. While looking in a magazine from the 1930s, he came across photos of a similar show. Since nothing like it had been done in years, he felt it was time to let members of the younger generation show their ideas.

On the Prichard Art Gallery's upper deck, Carson Legree will exhibit a series of oil paintings.

Legree's works consist of floral and vegetable motifs, which she describes as fragmental visions of domestic moments.

The opening reception for the two exhibits is today from 3 p.m. — 6 p.m.

"You don't even need to be a member of the Christian church," Wollenberg said.

According to Wollenberg, the Burning Stake should be thought of as a place people can come to with or without a date or friends. He describes it as a place that is "one step above a Bible study" in size and formality.

The opening tonight will not be the first opening the Burning Stake has had. It originally opened in 1963, during a "big boom" in the appearance of coffee houses across the country.

"It was a 'natural' in the early '60s to have a coffee house," he said.

For a while the Burning Stake will be open Friday nights only, but that may change, depending on its success, Wollenberg said.

The creation and subsequent naming of the Burning Stake in 1963 was a direct result of a growing feeling within the church that more had to be done about addressing current social issues, Wollenberg said. He said during the '60s, the religion boom of the '50s was wearing away.

"The sense was, and we haven't really lost that sense, that unless the church addresses real issues and answers questions that people are really asking, then the church will not survive," Wollenberg said.

Thus, the Campus Christian Center came up with the "ironic" name "Burning Stake," referring to the burning of the heretics during the Inquisition, Wollenberg said.

The church was being criticized from within, Wollenberg said, for past mistakes such as the Inquisition, and for trying to show people that it had created a place where dissenting opinions and an open display of ideas were welcome.

The Burning Stake disappeared after a while. The building was still there, but the demand for the coffee house was not, Wollenberg said.

"Things have a life, things have a shelf life, and the college scene is very volatile," Wollenberg said.

Wollenberg said he hopes it is the right time to bring it back.

After the opening, Wollenberg said that he hopes some people will be interested in forming a committee to run the coffee house. Until then Wollenberg, along with the rest of his staff, is solely responsible for everything involved in running the Burning Stake, he said.

Wollenberg's staff includes: Kathy Williams, Methodist minister; Kim Williams, Lutheran minister; and Betsy Peterson, secretary at the Campus Christian Center.

"Coffee houses historically have been nightmares from an administrative point of view," Wollenberg said.

Although Wollenberg wants the opening to go well, he said he understands that there is a possibility the coffee house will not be as popular as it used to be.

"Obviously we're trying to test to see if there's a need, and if there is, fine; if there's not, we'll close," Wollenberg said.

Wollenberg said the Burning Stake is an alternative to bars.

"We have no idea whether it will go or not," Wollenberg said. "This Friday will tell."

If you go to the Burning Stake's opening tonight, remember to greet the psychedelic turtle (rocks in the form of a bright orange turtle) on the way in.

WELCOME TO THE '60s. The Burning Stake offers a mellow atmosphere where people can converse or just hang out. (JASON MUNROE PHOTO)

Vandals face Bengals Could clinch Big Sky title

By ERIC ELG
Staff Writer

Saturday in Pocatello's Holt Arena the University of Idaho Vandals have an opportunity to do what only one other team has done in the history of the Big Sky Conference: win three straight league titles.

With a victory over Idaho State University, the Vandals will at worst clinch a tie for the title. UI will win the championship outright if the following three factors occur: 1) UI defeats in-state rival ISU; 2) University of Nevada-Reno beats Boise State University in Reno; 3) Montana State University upends the University of Montana in Bozeman.

The Vandals have placed themselves in this fortuitous position due to a 6-0 conference mark and a seven-game winning streak.

ISU enters the contest with a 3-4 record overall and a 2-3 standing in conference play. Last week the Idaho State Bengals defeated Northern Arizona University 24-20.

The most dangerous elements the Bengals present are their quarterback, Jason Whitmer, their defensive secondary, and a penchant for playing tough against the Vandals.

Whitmer is ISU's career leader in passing and, although just a junior, has cracked the all-time Big Sky Conference top 10 list in career passing yardage, completions, attempts and touchdowns.

ISU's defense, led by defensive backs Troy Shippen and Bruce Givens, ranks second in the Big Sky in pass defense, yielding 207.9 yards per game. ISU has intercepted only four passes this season but has managed to deflect 29 passes.

The most disconcerting aspect of playing ISU on the road is the fact that the Bengals have been one of the Vandals' toughest opponents throughout the decade, particularly at home. The two teams have split in games played since the 1981 season. The last two times UI faced the Bengals in Pocatello, the Vandals were dealt their only league losses of the season: 30-21 in 1987 and 38-37 in 1985. The last Vandal victory on ISU turf was a 20-17 win in 1982.

UI might be playing this weekend without their leading tackler and leading offensive lineman due to ankle injuries. Linebacker Jimmie Lee Jacobs and tackle Todd Neu are listed as questionable after sustaining injuries in last weekend's defeat of Nevada-Reno.

Lady Vandals meet tough UM, MSU

By AMY WILLIAMS
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho Lady Vandals face Montana State University tonight and the University of Montana Saturday in two conference games at Memorial Gym.

"We have to play tough defense."

— Tom Hilbert
Volleyball coach

UI Head Coach Tom Hilbert and the Lady Vandals have been practicing defensive play, focusing especially on shutting down outside hitters.

"Both teams are strong on their left sides," Hilbert said. "We have to play tough defense."

The University of Montana, which is 16-8 overall, is riding a five-game winning streak.

"They are a competitive team," Hilbert said. "We will have to serve tough, and side-outs will be crucial."

Montana State University is led by Stephanie Nowicki, who recorded 24 kills in the previous matchup with the Lady Vandals. According to Hilbert, trying to stop Nowicki will be tough.

"She is hard to read because she has a good range," Hilbert said.

MSU is 10-17 on the season.

The Vandals will play with emotion and focus hard on the matches, Hilbert said. Conference games are becoming important as the season draws to a close and postseason play approaches.

Both games will be played at 7:30 p.m.

WANDERMERE MEN'S RESULTS. The University of Idaho men's cross country team had no team score at the Wandermere Invitational in Spokane, Wash. last weekend, but did have four top finishes. Bernardo Barrios earned first place with a time of 25:01.8, followed by Wayne Bunce, sixth, Rob Demick, 10th, and Chris Leibbrandt, 13th.

LUNCHEONS BACK TO UNIVERSITY INN. Vandal luncheons, held at noon every Monday and featuring University of Idaho head coaches, will take place at the Chinese Village Nov. 6. They will then move to the University Inn for the rest of the year. The luncheons cost $6.
