

Horton says food committee has lost objectivity

By KARA GARTEN
News Assistant

The Residence Hall Association passed a motion Monday night which representatives hope will improve the Wallace Cafeteria food service committee that works with Marriott.

"It has come to my attention that the food service committee is not working out real well," said RHA President Ray Horton.

"Some food service representatives seem to have left their objectivity in the toilet."

Horton said some hall representatives have become essentially "dupes for Marriott."

Early in the semester when hall members were upset with Marriott's food service, the committee made some real changes, Horton said. But during the semester interest in the committee has waned and attendance at the meetings has dropped from about 20 representatives to just eight regular attendees.

RHA voted Monday night to require hall vice presidents to serve on the committee in hopes that students who serve as vice presidents are older, more responsible students who have enough experience to know about the general issues.

In other business Monday night, RHA elected officers for next semester. Ray Horton was re-elected RHA president, Matt Frogness was re-elected treasurer and Eric Kegel was elected GDI Week chairman. There were no candidates for the offices of vice president and secretary.

Also Monday night, RHA approved a vendor's permit for Marriott's Wild Pizza to allow them to distribute fliers in the halls.

Representatives discussed the idea of withholding the permit until the profit issue is resolved. This week the ASUI questioned whether dining halls can operate for profit under the Idaho Code, and the issue is being examined.

McCoy Hall President Christi Rucker said, "I realize the wicked enjoyment of being a small thorn in Marriott's paw, but ..."

Marriott's permit was granted through the end of the year.

Kagi calls for UI audit

A resolution to audit student fee allocations is being considered by the ASUI Senate.

Proposed last week by ASUI President Tina Kagi, the bill is intended to call for an internal University of Idaho audit to clarify accounts and to see where the money is being spent and if it is being handled properly. According to Kagi, a thorough audit has not been conducted in the last decade, and the annual financial audit merely serves to confirm that the budget is balanced.

"The taxpayers and the students have a right to know where their money is being spent," Kagi said. "I want to know where every dime is being spent."

Kagi said the resolution was prompted by confusion about university finances.

"How can we be so desperate for money that former President Gibb discussed eliminating the political science department, and then $100,000 of unallocated money is available for Dr. Zinser's personnel?" she said.

Despite earlier reports, Kagi said that she is not demanding an external audit. She said she feels the university auditor could do an unbiased and impartial report. However, next month the Idaho State Board of Education plans to look at how student fees are collected and used at each of the four-year institutions.

What's up?

A RISING STAR. Jeff Kimberling and Neil Hahn hoisted a star up the KUOI Radio tower Thursday, located on top of the SUB. According to Kimberling, KUOI chief engineer, the star belongs to the SUB, and KUOI just decided to put it up at the last minute. He said the star was left over SUB decoration, and was not in use. Kimberling is pleased with the way the star looks, which will be lit up at night in celebration of the holiday season, and said KUOI may put it up again next year. (JASON MUNROE PHOTO)

Zinser clarifies misinterpreted house manager position

By SHERRY DEAL
News Editor

University of Idaho President Elisabeth Zinser's request for a house manager was misinterpreted, the president said in an interview with a KTVB television news reporter from Boise Friday.

Zinser said her biggest mistake with the house manager position was giving it the title of house manager.

"I think people translate it to housekeeper," Zinser said.

Zinser said that she did not need a full-time housekeeper, and that she was trying to save the university money when she combined several duties and created the house manager position.

She said only about 25-30 percent of the manager's job would involve housekeeping. She said a wide range of other responsibilities would be placed on the house manager, including arranging house parties, meeting with local organizations, such as the university faculty and the retirement organization, and just being a general support to the president.

Zinser said the house manager position was the only completely new position she created. She said when she requested her personnel, she was required to fill out a request form for new positions, even though three of the four positions were simply reallocated, rather than newly-formed.

Under former UI President Richard Gibb, the president's office consisted of an assistant to the president, an executive assistant to the president and an administrative secretary.

The assistant to the president, Judith Reisenauer, is still in the president's office. However, Carolyn Youmans, administrative secretary, moved to Student Affairs with Hal Godwin, acting dean of student affairs. Terry Armstrong, former executive assistant to the president, has returned to teaching.

Zinser said she chooses not to have an executive assistant to the president, but instead to reallocate the funds paid to the executive assistant to add the editor/writer and production typist positions to her staff.

She changed the title of administrative secretary to office manager and redefined the duties associated with the job. She had to write up the newly-titled

PUNCH AND JUDY. KTVB news followed UI President Elisabeth Zinser to the Early Childhood Learning Center, where she put on a puppet show. Megan Godwin and Jenny McIvor, both 4, assisted the president. (JASON MUNROE PHOTO)

Environmental group sets long term goals

In an effort to educate students about environmental issues, the ASUI Ad-Hoc Committee has formed subcommittees and has drafted a plan of action.

Twenty-five students attended last week's meeting and dedicated their time to the following subcommittees: Paper Recycling, Aluminum Recycling, Marriott/Food Service, Earth Day, Education/Public Relations, and Energy Conservation.

"The Education/Public Relations Committee is the most important in that it is intended to educate people on what they are using that is environmentally harmful and suggest a reasonable alternative," ASUI Sen. Lisa Krepel said. "We want to reach as many people on campus as we can."

The committee is working with the Environmental Law Society on a forum about the Andrus-McClure Wilderness Act, and with Wildland Recreation Management on expanding Earth Day to a week in April.

According to member Dave Jones, the Environmental Law Society plans to coordinate the forum with Earth Day. The Andrus-McClure Wilderness Act, dubbed the Non-Wilderness Act, would be the topic, along with Rep. Pete Kostermayer's bill on the wilderness.

Committee member and senator-elect Brent King has looked into Washington State University's paper recycling program and said he would like to implement a similar cooperative with the administration on campus next semester.

"It is advantageous to implement a program now; 1992 will bring stricter landfill laws," he said. "We won't lose money when everyone has to start recycling because our start-up costs will be taken care of."

WSU's program works with the administration in an exchange of disposal costs for each ton of paper salvaged. King said that with disposal savings channeled back into the program, he does not expect a profit for the first year. The committee is unsure about how the actual recycling income would be used.

The Ad-Hoc Committee plans to file for ASUI club status with the ASUI Activities Board and will be working with the "Cool It" division of the National Wildlife Federation. The next meeting will be held Dec. 12 at 7 p.m. in the SUB Gold Room.

However, the committee is looking for a chairperson. Anyone interested should contact Krepel at the ASUI office.

Zinser said although she has four on her staff, compared to three on Gibb's staff, her staff will cost the university $8,700 less annually than Gibb's, because she does not have the highly paid executive-to-the-president position.

All these positions were written up as new positions on Zinser's request sheet for staff funds.

Zinser said her job involves about 18-20 hours per day. She plans to do more in the future with campus relations, such as inviting student leaders to her house for lunch, and scheduling 18 dinners so she can host all the spouses of university personnel.

"I would like to be able to rise above some of the day-to-day obligations," Zinser said. "I want to focus on the big issues."

According to Terry Maurer, UI Communications director, the new house manager will take on some of the duties of Carl Kiilsgaard, director of special projects/legislative relations. Kiilsgaard plans to retire soon.

According to Zinser, the $30,000 salary she plans to pay the house manager is conservative for the amount of work this person will do.

Zinser said she plans to retitle the house manager position to avoid more confusion about the person's job description.

Controversy arises over vacant senate seats

By VIVIANE GILBERT
Staff Writer

Controversy surrounds the appointments to the vacant ASUI Senate positions.

ASUI officials are in disagreement not only over why nomination bills were left off last week's agenda, but also over who should make the appointments.

The nomination bills that ASUI President Tina Kagi submitted before the meeting were withheld from the agenda by ASUI Vice President Lynn Major.

ASUI President-elect David Pena said he believes he should make the senate nominations.

The senate positions, formerly occupied by Marc Boyer, Brian Casey, Mike Gotch and Patti Rambo, were declared vacant at Wednesday's senate meeting.

Kagi nominated former Political Concerns Board chairman Bill Broadhead, vice chairman Bill Heffner and member Tony Lingner to the positions. All three nominees resigned from the ASUI board the same day the senators resigned, due to the possibility of being appointed to the vacated senate seats.

Kagi said the nomination bills were submitted to Major on time and should have been put before the senate for consideration at Wednesday's meeting.

Major, as president of the senate, is responsible for preparing the agenda. She said that nomination bills for vacant positions could not be considered until the first meeting after the seats were declared empty.

"She (Kagi) tried to fill positions that were not even open yet," Major said.

Major said the bills would be on this week's agenda.

Kagi said that since the resignations were effective Nov. 27, the senate should have been able to consider the bills at the Nov. 29 meeting.

"Her (Major's) declaration of the empty seats is just a technicality. She still should have let my bills go on the agenda," Kagi said. "I don't think anyone has the right to censor the agenda."

Pena said last week that he wants the appointments left open until he gets into office.

"I don't want to seem adversarial. I just want a chance," Pena said. "The students voted to give me a chance; now I'm asking the senate to respect those wishes."

Major agreed, and said she felt Pena should be the one to make the nominations.

"Students have said, 'We want a change,'" Major said. "The best way to begin change in a positive way is to allow him to appoint his own cabinet."

Kagi disagreed, saying it was her right as president to make the appointments.

"It's my right and my obligation to fill those positions," Kagi said. "It really doesn't matter who appoints them, as long as they're good people, and willing to work for the students and the best interests of the ASUI."

Pena said he is not opposed to the nominees, but feels he should appoint the new senators since he will be working with them during the next year.

"I'm not going on their merits (Kagi's nominees); I'm just going on the right to appoint them," Pena said.

Andrus to visit with students

Idaho Gov. Cecil Andrus will visit the University of Idaho Monday.

The highlight of the visit is a no-host luncheon with students, staff and faculty at noon in the SUB ballroom. The lunch will consist of a croissant sandwich, a salad and a beverage. Andrus will deliver a short speech at the luncheon.

"It's intended to be a chance for Governor Andrus to meet people," said Brad Cuddy, former ASUI president. Tickets can be purchased for $5.75 at the Vandal Cafe in the SUB or at the ASUI office from Tina Kagi. The $5.75 covers the cost of the meal only.

During his visit here Monday, Andrus plans to spend some time walking around campus between classes to meet and talk with students.

The luncheon is sponsored by the UI Young Democrats.

Open doors to better, equal representation

If a pollster comes to your door this week, don't slam the door. This isn't a magazine scam, but a chance for you to contribute to the University of Idaho student body and help yourself.

Off-campus students comprise about 55 percent of the UI campus, but they receive two of the 11 student body senate representatives.

You don't need to take Math 50 to figure out there's a problem with that ratio.

But an ASUI Ad-Hoc Off-Campus and Non-Traditional Student Committee will be pounding on doors this week to discover what the majority of you have to say about the student government and what interests you.

At least 15 pollsters will ask students what they know about the ASUI and what specific interests they have.

"We are trying to get a general idea of what off-campus students feel are important issues," said committee member and poll organizer Gayla Galbraith.

A report will be submitted to ASUI President Tina Kagi next week.

Galbraith's personal goals include making the Ad-Hoc Off-Campus and Non-Traditional Student Committee an ASUI committee, forming a concern group, increasing ASUI representation and conducting monthly meetings for interested students.

Despite verbal concern about the off-campus representation, a senate minutes mailing list and a proposed newsletter, the ASUI has not taken steps to actually involve the majority of the students. But now there is a way to participate and let the student body know your concerns.

So open your door and take two minutes out of your day to fill out a survey. Or take the initiative and fill one out at the ASUI office.

Just don't slam the door to better representation.

• GOOD FOR U. •

Madge Brown has become an indestructible asset to the University of Idaho. And now she's proving it.

Madge, proprietor of The Perch convenience store for more than 40 years, underwent intestinal surgery at Gritman Memorial Hospital. She is recovering physically in her typical ornery manner, but the financial end could use some help.

That's where we come in.

Madge doesn't have insurance. The Campus Christian Center has dedicated a "Madge Fund" to which students can donate. Several fraternities and sororities have been pooling money, and $431 was collected at the UI School of Music's Christmas concert Sunday night.

The Perch's doors closed Friday, but with financial help and encouragement for Madge's recovery, the store will reopen in a few months.

Won't it be wonderful to badger with Madge again while sipping coffee at The Perch? Please contribute to make this a reality.

Success advice for free

By BILL GRIGSBY
Commentary

Phony baloney editor's warning: Use the FREE advice in this column ONLY if you DARE to be a SUCCESS. There is no obligation, and no salesman will call. Really!

As the semester winds down and we have more leisure time to reflect on our blessings, or go to the bathroom, or both, let us not forget that there is a group of people out there that doesn't want to be forgotten. I'm referring of course to corporate executives. They're in the news again, and I for one am sorry you had to hear it from me. But you should know that 90 percent of the executives with beards say they grew them to improve their appearance. And there's more. Seventy-two percent say their beards give them a competitive edge over their baby-faced counterparts.

This is like a new 30 DAYS SAME AS CASH lease on life for a lot of would-be CEOs who probably thought those guys sat around scratching their chins, with that serious, constipated look of severe importance, contemplating: 1) which company to buy out; 2) which computer system to purchase; 3) which new car model is lifestyle-compatible; 4) what appetizer to order with lunch; 5) how many office memos it takes to jam the document shredder.

... Nnnnnnope. Now you know. They're trying to feel their beards growing. So scrap plans for the Harvard MBA. All you really need is a thick mat of facial hair. Unless of course you happen to be a woman, in which case the only place a beard might give you a competitive edge is in the circus.

So you're skeptical? Seems too easy? Well, just check out this likely boardroom scenario:

YOU: OK, if there are no further questions, I move we vote on my proposal to require all upper-level management personnel to wear lumberjack shirts. Yes, Snodpecker, what is it? One of your whiskers come loose??

SNODPECKER: Sir, those lumberjack shirts give me a rash. I suggest we make them optional and vote on Bigley's market expansion proposal.

YOU (tilting your head back to scratch your neck hair): OK, anybody here wanna second peach fuzz's idea? No?? Well, Snodpecker, next time you pull a stunt like that you'd better have the facial hair to back it up! (Withersby raises her hand.) Yes, Withers-by, what is it??!

WITHERSBY: Two points. One, I don't think women should have to wear lumberjack shirts. Two, only from the mouth of an insecure macho PIG could such a suggestion ooze!

YOU: All right Withersby, calm down. We'll let the gals wear tank tops and leather miniskirts. IF they'll promise to shave their underarms and legs daily. ...

Case closed? Convinced? Good. I was afraid I would have to assert my beard. But if you really want to set yourself apart, then a beard barely scratches the surface of possibilities. Why, just the other day the famous fashion consultant Sacrebleu came out with a new book called You'll Wear What I Tell You to Wear! In it he's got some advice for those in the bizness world who are slow to recognize a good money-making scheme until guys like Sacrebleu can afford to buy their own islands with cash.

But the book can be summed up in one word: blue. So instead we're going to look at my suggestions for gaining that beard-like competitive edge without resorting to steroids or firearms. The following tips, not available in stores, are based on years of scientific fashion research conducted on various family dogs. The tips are in chapter 4, "Exposing Executives," of my upcoming book Dress for Excess Stress: 1) mutton chop sideburns — emphatically declare that yer not to be messed with; 2) epaulets — preferred choice of Third World dictators; 3) Swatch electronic radio collars — go beepers one better; 4) shiny medals — can stop a bullet or an overzealous underling; anything will do — third place finish in the company picnic sack race if you have to; 5) state troopers' shades — they can only SUSPECT that you're laughing because you're staring at their pitiful patches of facial hair; 6) 10-gallon power sombreros — sez "GIMME SUM SPACE OR I'LL COVER YOU IN SHADE!"; 7) 100 percent vinyl pocket protectors — lets 'em know you'll use an ink pen to get ahead if you have to; 8) corporate tattoos — the fashion statement for carpoolers; 9) Rauff Lauren rawhide chewsticks — preferred by four out of five dogs who chew rawhide.

Before you can say "Sacrebleu!", drab corporate board meetings will look like a scene from The Road Warrior. Now, if you'll excuse me, I'm gonna go count my whiskers in the bathroom mirror.

finger nail scratches and chisel gouges in Walenta Avenue are from something else.

... a "bursar" is a medium-sized burrowing rodent.

... KUOI can actually be pronounced Q.E.

... U.S. Sen. Steve Symms wore a helmet while playing football for the Vandals.

Make Madge's holiday season brighter

Editor:

Everyone knows and loves Madge at the Perch. You may not know that she has just had major gastrointestinal surgery at Gritman Memorial Hospital.

But that's not all. Madge has no medical insurance. So we at the Campus Christian Center are asking that living groups and individuals consider making contributions to the "Madge Fund" as soon as possible. You might have a fundraiser, take a collection, whatever. Use your imagination.

Checks should be made out to the Campus Christian Center (822 Elm Street, across from the Perch) and labeled "Madge Fund."

Sherlock Holmes play proves suspenseful

REVIEW By MARY HEUETT
Staff Writer

A plot on the life of Sherlock Holmes, greatest detective ever, is afoot on the Hartung stage. This plot is guaranteed to make you jump, laugh, and occasionally wish to knock Holmes over the head.

Suzan Zeder's The Death and Life of Sherlock Holmes is as intricate as any plot of Arthur Conan Doyle's ever was. She weaves plot lines from Doyle's short stories with his struggle to rid himself of Holmes.

In a world of disguise and deceit, numerous attempts are made on Holmes' life by his client Mary Altamont, who is really Mary Doyle.

"Murder, this is good, this is very good," says Holmes as a series of murders and attempted murders begins. Zeder mixes fact and fantasy until it is impossible to separate the two.

Layers of subplots leave the conclusion of this play up in the air until the very end. Naturally you'll have to see for yourself who wins — Holmes or Doyle.

In Zeder's play, Holmes faces his greatest enemy ever: his creator.

Doyle, played by James F. Petersen Jr., is a genius who is skilled in many fields. But he has become obsessed with his alter ego and creation, Holmes.

Petersen's Doyle is a brilliant man, quick to seize on new ideas for a story, but he also is a child unable to free himself of his obsession.

His daughter, played by Amy Edelblute, assumes the role of the parent just so she can have her parent back. She badgers him into giving up Holmes and killing him. Mary does not realize this will also kill a part of her father, and she is single-minded in her desire to free her father from Holmes' grip.

Rick McKinnon's Holmes is a man of ego and self-assurance. He is a gentleman and a genius, but like Doyle he is a child lost outside his specialty.

Holmes' sidekick, Watson, serves as Mary's alter ego. He protects Holmes and is the realist of the pair. John Hurley does an excellent portrayal of Watson. He maintains a stuffy, narrow-minded character who strives to master the details the way Holmes does.

Madame Bergolia, played by Sara Hansen, is the essence of the gypsy medium. She is both humorous and commanding when giving the seance.

Wiggins, played by Rich Graham, is a sneaky little pickpocket and a loyal helper to Holmes. Wiggins is the ultimate tomboy.

This play is not only blessed with wonderful acting but is superbly directed by Fred Chapman and has beautiful sets designed by Kevin Seime. Brent Edelblute plays Mary as a strong, independent woman willing to risk anything to save her father. Although her acting is at times stiff, Edelblute is both the daughter saving her father and a mother protecting her offspring.

Zeder's Holmes is an obvious flip-side of Doyle. Throughout the play we find Doyle's words later emerging from Holmes' mouth.

Karlberg designed the blinding and deafening special effects.

Debra Dutkiewicz-Zetterberg's costume designs, especially those for Madame Bergolia, Mary Doyle and Holmes, are rich and colorful.

If you like mystery complete with disguises, snakes, seances, gunshots, kidnappings, plots and subplots, then you will love The Death and Life of Sherlock Holmes.

The play will be performed Thursday, Friday and Saturday at 8 p.m. and Sunday at 2 p.m. at the Hartung Theater.

By SCOTT TROTTER
& RUSS BIAGGNE
Commentary

University of Idaho senior quarterback John Friesz's selection as College Player of the Year for Division I-AA Wednesday capped off an era for Vandal football that might never be topped.

Friesz, also selected to the first-team Big Sky Conference offensive team for the third consecutive year, led UI to its fifth-straight berth in the NCAA Division I-AA playoffs and to its third-straight Big Sky Conference title — an accomplishment that has never been matched in UI's long football tradition.

Although in its last five playoff berths UI has fallen short of winning a I-AA national championship, this one stumbling block is overshadowed by the success the Vandals have enjoyed in the late '80s.

For example, former Vandal quarterback standout Ken Hobart has enjoyed post-college football success in the Canadian Football League, former offensive guard Mark Schlereth is starting at center for the Washington Redskins, and this year's defensive standouts Mike Zeller, Roger Cecil and Charlie Oliver were named to the first-team Big Sky Conference defensive football team. UI's offensive guard Troy Wright and wide receiver Lee Allen were also placed on this year's first-team all-Big Sky offensive team.

Vandal fans should now keep their eyes on the 1990 NFL draft and should see Friesz picked up within the first two rounds. Who knows, maybe he won't be the only Vandal from this year's team with the opportunity to play with the pros.

OUTDOOR BY MATT WALO OUTLOOK

Now that most big-game seasons have closed for rifle hunters, it's time to switch guns and take afield for upland game. Chukar and hungarian partridge, commonly called huns, provide upland gunners with excellent wingshooting and equally good table fare.

Both species inhabit many of the same areas, and it is not uncommon to have flocks of both birds found on the same hillsides.

Around Moscow huns can be found in the stubble fields and bare dirt fields that are so common to the Palouse. They are also found in the transition zones where farmlands meet timbered slopes. Huns generally hold fairly tight, so unless they are heavily hunted, they shouldn't flush far out of range.

Huns often fly only a short distance after they have been flushed and shot at. Most hunters just watch the remaining flock until they land and walk to where they were last seen. Unlike chukars, which hit the ground running, huns will generally be close to where they were last seen. This leads to easy follow-up shooting.

Chukars are another story. These birds love to chatter loudly above the hunter, and when he climbs up slopes meant only for bighorn sheep, the birds flush out of range and fly downhill. This characteristic is probably responsible for the old saying that is considered so true: "Your first time hunting chukars is for fun and all other times are for revenge."

After the birds have flushed and flown downhill, don't chase after them. For some reason, different flocks of chukars are often found around the same elevation. This is definitely to the hunter's advantage, as he can parallel a slope for miles without getting too tired.

If the slopes are covered with snow, chukars will congregate below the snowline. This will not always be true if there are exposed rocky outcroppings in the snow where "old redlegs" can sun themselves, so don't overlook those areas.

Hunting with a dog helps to locate birds and hold them, but if you are dogless, it just means extra legwork.

Good luck, and remember, you're out for revenge!

Wrestlers encounter different styles, officiating on coast

By RUSS BIAGGNE
Sports Editor

Due to injuries and conflicting schedules, the University of Idaho wrestling club took only three wrestlers to Forestgrove, Ore., to compete in the Pacific University Open Saturday.

"Todd is going to be real solid for us once he gets some experience."

— Pat Amos
UI Wrestling Coach

Only one of the three came away with a win.

Freshman Todd Brooking, 190 pounds, from Bonners Ferry, defeated Kory Kier of Pacific University 5-2 to claim his first college victory. This was also his first college match.

"Todd is going to be real solid for us once he gets some experience," wrestling coach Pat Amos said.

Unfortunately, Brooking lost his next two matches.

Amos said the wrestlers encountered poor officiating at the open, and attributed that to their performance.

"The officiating was real poor," Amos said. "There were a lot of illegal and unnecessary roughness calls not being made."

Amos said it was the club's first time competing on the West Coast, where the wrestling and the officials' calls are different from what the UI club is used to.

"They call it and wrestle a lot differently than we do over here (eastern Washington, northern Idaho)," Amos said. "We have to go over there two more times this year, and at least we know what to expect now."

The Vandal wrestlers will travel to Cheney, Wash., to compete in the Eastern Washington University Tournament Friday, and then to Moses Lake, Wash., to participate in the Big Bend Open hosted by Big Bend Community College Saturday.

UI / WSU marathon a success

By RUSS BIAGGNE
Sports Editor

From 10 p.m. Friday until 6 a.m. Saturday, about 80 people participated in the University of Idaho-Washington State University Baptist Student Ministries volleyball, racquetball and basketball marathon.

The marathon featured head-to-head competition between the students of both universities, with UI proceeds going to the Foreign Mission Board of the Southern Baptist Convention to aid world hunger.

According to Bob Royall, UI Baptist Student Ministries director, the marathon was a huge success.

"I was surprised with how good it turned out," he said. "We had about 80 people show up and 16 of those stayed all night. It was a great time."

Royall's goal of raising $300 for world hunger was not only met but was surpassed by $400.

"We raised over $700," Royall said.

Royall attributed the marathon's success to the predominance of UI students who were involved.

"Approximately 25 of the 80 students who showed up for the marathon were from WSU. The rest were from here," he said.

Royall said he was pleased with the UI students' participation.
