Board allocates money for library expansion

FROM STAFF REPORTS

Several University of Idaho concerns, such as research and student fees, were addressed at the Idaho State Board of Education meeting in Boise March 15.

Student fees charged at Idaho's four-year colleges and universities were properly collected and reported in the last fiscal year, according to Stacy Pearson, the state board's internal auditor.

One of six capital improvement requests was appropriated by the Joint Finance and Appropriation Committee. The committee passed a motion to provide $9,369,600 for the UI library addition.

University administrators originally requested $11,611,000 for library expansion.

Ray Stark of the legislative budget office said that the Idaho Legislature did not approve $2.4 million of the request because that portion of the funding would be used for remodeling.

Last year the board appropriated money to remodel the library basement. The 1984 university accreditation report stated that the library "is moving the UI toward a crisis situation in providing information services."

UI requests that did not receive funding were: a forest nursery cold storage, the upgrading of Renfrew Hall, a proposed advanced technology building, a theater arts relocation project and the Life Sciences Building renovation.

Those requests totaled $4.8 million.

The allocation of the fiscal year 1991 lump sum appropriation was deleted from the meeting's agenda because Gov. Cecil Andrus had not signed the proposed budget bill.

The university presidents did review legislative capital improvement funding, however.

Included in the proposed budget is $10 million for preventive maintenance. The majority of the money is allocated to repair and upgrade the UI primary power grid and to eliminate common campus-wide power outages that occur when the system is overloaded.

Pearson reported that UI student fees were collected and allocated in accordance with the Idaho Code and the state board policy.

Pearson's audit, which examined fiscal year 1989, was intended to determine whether student fees were collected and reported legally.

Pearson conducted the audit after UI student leaders questioned the allocation of last year's $25 per semester fee increase.

Leaders questioned the constitutionality of the fee hike, which they believed was to be used for faculty salaries.

Idaho Code and state board policies define tuition as the cost of instruction at colleges and universities. Institutions are prohibited from charging in-state students tuition but are allowed to charge them matriculation fees.

Matriculation fees are charged for educational costs, excluding instruction. These fees are further defined by the board as "maintenance and operation of the physical plant, student services and institutional support for full-time students enrolled in academic credit courses."

UI collected $3.4 million in matriculation fees in fiscal year 1989, according to Pearson. About $2.8 million was used for physical plant operation, $400,000 for institutional support and $200,000 for student services.

"Based upon Stacy's audit of the actual collection, application and accounting of these fees at the institution, it appears the fees in question are not being charged and applied for instruction, and

Students encouraged to complete Census questionnaires

By SALLY GILPIN
Staff Writer

Moscow area mailboxes have been flooded with U.S. Census forms. Have you filled out yours yet?

Census forms should have been mailed to every residence in Moscow. The Census Bureau encourages everyone to fill out the questionnaires and return them by April 1.

The form asks for information about the residence and the people living in the residence.

Census information is vital to federal, state and local government organizations. It provides a population count needed for legislative boundaries, federal programs, and state and local government programs, as well as information for academic research, business and marketing organizations and individual research needs.

All census information is confidential. The 1990 Census records will not be released to any institution or individual for 72 years, until the year 2062.

Historically, the census count for Moscow has been inaccurate because not all University of Idaho students have been counted. Often students do not know they should be counted, do not take it seriously, or leave town and are not caught by the field workers who follow up on unreturned forms after the semester ends, according to Kelly Woodward, Latah County census recruiter.

This year the forms will be mailed in instead of being picked up by census workers. If for some reason a form is not received from a residence, the door-to-door follow-up will catch those who did not return the questionnaire.

The District Census Bureau is trying to get a more accurate student count this year, according to Woodward. The bureau hopes to have the door-to-door follow-up completed by May 18.

"It's going to be close, but I think we can do it," Woodward said.

Off-campus residents will receive a census form that should be filled out listing all residents. On-campus residents will be handled differently.

"Group residences will be counted differently than individually of the District Census Bureau. "Enumerators (counters) will collect data from dorms and Greek houses individually."

Some students have had questions about whether they should fill out the questionnaire. The instructions on the form state that college students should not be listed on their parents' form unless they live with their parents while attending school.

The Census Bureau will employ more than 500,000 people this year to collect and process the population data. Locally, census workers are still needed, according to Woodward. She encourages students to apply for the temporary positions.

The positions include enumerators and crew leaders. The census employees will work in the field collecting data and interviewing people, usually afternoons and Saturdays. Woodward said the bureau tries to assign people to their own residential area. Crew leaders get paid $6 per hour, and enumerators receive $5 per hour.

Those who are interested can apply and take the enumerator test Wednesday at 10 a.m. at the Job Service building or April 3 at 6 p.m. in Brink Hall.

"The positions are temporary and flexible. People can work from two to six weeks," Woodward said. "It's the perfect job for students."

For questions about any aspect of the census, call 1-800-283-6826.

However, Pearson has recommended that the institutions provide annual reports to the board identifying student fee collection and expenditure by major program.

Also at the March meeting, board officials approved a cooperative program between Idaho's three universities to coordinate a $5 million raptor research project.

Symms protects the sanctity of cow dung

As he indicates in his March 12 newsletter, Steve Symms knows what methane is: "Now, we all know what methane is. Methane itself is odorless, but it happens to be associated with that smell you notice near an outhouse or in the stockyards. It is a gas — a volatile gas that makes an excellent fuel. Methane is created when organic material decomposes or is digested. Old landfills often produce methane gas as the material in them breaks down."

Symms knows methane all right. According to an article by Steve Thompson in Wednesday's Idahonian, Symms accepted $182,372 from the energy industry in the form of political action committee (PAC) contributions.

These contributions included $10,000 from Dallas Energy PAC, $10,000 from Standard Oil Company/Amoco and $9,410 from Standard Oil Co. of California/Chevron.

These companies also know what methane is.

Symms states in the newsletter that he is concerned that the Clean Air Bill, if passed, will result in Environmental Protection Agency officials chasing cattle with methane meters and probing cow pies for methane content. Although Symms states that he is for clean air, he will refuse to accept this bill "which will cause the federal government to pry into every aspect of American life."

Are we to believe that Symms is dedicated to protecting the sanctity of every piece of cow dung and the privacy of every cow? Is that why he is against this bill that is bent on improving the quality of the environment?

Are we to believe that the campaign funding Symms receives from the energy corporation PACs couldn't be affecting Symms' opinion regarding environmental matters? Is Symms completely indifferent to the wishes of the energy corporations?

Perhaps these questions are too troubling. It is easier to swallow the notion that Symms is defending the cows' right to privacy and the sanctity of peacefully resting cow pies from the hordes of EPA officials who would invade those idyllic Idaho stockyards.

Food service workers not 'Marriott trained' treated unfairly

Editor:

I am writing to you in rebuttal to Linda Byers' "Marriott treats employees well" letter.

It is time for another comment from an employee of Marriott to let the students, faculty and staff know how I feel. I have been working at Marriott for more than six months in the capacity of certified chef. At the time I was employed in my position, I was given handbooks and was informed that if I was efficient in my position there would be room for promotion and I would be treated fairly. Since then I have been told by my supervisors that I have carried out my job duties with expertise and efficiency.

Last week I found out in an employee newsletter (which was an embarrassment to have co-workers and subordinates read) that Marriott would be interviewing for two chefs who would supervise over me. I was not informed of this news and was not given the opportunity to apply for the positions. Later, after discussing this with one of my supervisors, I was told that the reason I was not made aware of the positions or given the opportunity to apply for them was due to the fact that I was not "Marriott trained."

I inquired as to Marriott having its own chef school and was informed that it does not have one. I have owned my own restaurant, was trained and certified under a master chef for two years, attended Gonzaga University for five years (business and pre-law), and have worked in food service for at least 18 years. I think that would definitely qualify me.

Also, I was told this week by a supervisor that the following day (during voting on the referendum) that we would be having a TV crew in to research the issues concerning the referendum. Another employee and I were told that under no uncertain terms were we to converse with this TV crew.

Now I don't know about you Ms. Byers, but frankly, I don't feel that is "treating employees well." I feel that I have been discriminated against because I was not

"Marriott trained" (whatever that means) and that my constitutional rights were infringed upon. In the past I have had to put up with being reprimanded in front of other co-workers and subordinates rather than privately. These "Marriott trained" employees in the upper echelon are not the least bit interested in promoting capable and qualified individuals into management or creating hope for them to excel unless they are employed and trained by the company "Marriott."

I have inquired about getting "Marriott trained" and was told I had to wait until I worked for them for one year. To my knowledge, there is no one who has worked here more than a year who is getting Marriott trained who wasn't already working primarily for the company. So Ms. Byers, if you think that "we are Marriott," ask for a promotion and think again.

I am speaking for myself and the bewildered employees who feel they have not been dealt with fairly but are afraid to voice their opinion for fear they will lose their jobs or be harassed.

Patriotism can be a nightmare

Last night I dreamed I was the most expensive bureaucracy in the world — the U.S. Armed Forces. I had four heads, eight arms and two wobbly legs, all operating independently. I had epaulets on every shoulder and medals on every chest. I looked damn good.

I was invited to a party. Come to think of it, I was the host. ... Yeah, it was a theme party — the COLD WAR — and it was held at the Pentagon. The cover charge was $1,000 for taxpayers. I let politicians in through a side door.

The decor was red, white and blue (of course). General Dynamics won the catering contract with a non-competitive bid of $7 crup-tillion, plus a lifetime supply of hors d'oeuvres for yours truly. Drinks were expensive. A Peace-keeper Meltdown — nothing but a shot of plutonium and a splash of agent orange, on the rocks — ran about $47,000. One reason was the caterers' 40 percent cost overruns included in the price of the drink, which was served in collapsible "combat tumblers" that had a tendency to leak. Most of the drinks had a military theme. Lite beer did not even exist. ... This dream was quickly becoming a nightmare.

I sat at the politicians' table, and they kept filling my leaky glass, telling the bartender to "put it on the taxpayers' bill." It seems the Russians were also having a party that night, and this little man who called himself the CIA claimed "they were gonna buy up all the liquor, come over here, crash our party and take our women, and we'd better be ready."

BILL GRIGSBY

Commentary

"How did he know this?" asked a skeptical taxpayer.

"Why (you idiot), that's top secret," he said.

Some wanted to know more. They were seated on my right, where one of my hands was peddling patriotism — in tablet form — under the table. The pills were $10 each, guaranteed to make you see stars and stripes. People and politicians took pride in their addictions. Jesse Helms was one of my best customers.

I got 'em hopped up on patriotism and told them wild stories about "the arms race." I had eight arms, but my Russian enemy, the CIA said, had at least 10, and if they did crash our party, the arm wrestling championship was theirs for the taking. And then ... THE WORLD!

With this, warning bells went off in the patriots' heads, and they turned on their fellow taxpayers, who had been waiting all evening for a glass of tap water. They accused them of being soft on Russian arm superiority. Why else would they drink fluoridated water, when patriotism was so cheap??

The civilians were making me nervous. I went to the door for some fresh air, but it opened up onto a disco room floor, where a pony-tailed Steve Symms was strumming a ukulele to the tune of "America the Beautiful." I think. ... "Oh pitiful, disgraceful skies, for acid waves of raaaaaattiiiiii, for clearcut mountain traaaaaagedy, ABOVE THE POY - ZUNNED PLAAAAIIIIIN!"

I shook my heads, looked up again, and there was Henry Kissinger, in a general's uniform, doing a lounge act. "Ha ha! Cold war's been beddy, beddy good to me.

Ho ho! My last gig was the Bikini Atolls. I really blew 'em away! Oh well, a half-life is better than no life at all! Hee hee! Hey, you know how the Armed Forces spells relief? N-O-R-I-E-G-A-I ... Hmmm, I see those of you in the cheap seats are not sufficiently amused. ... Guards, take them out and have them shot!"

... It was getting weird. The room was spinning, the drinks were flowing, fights were breaking out. ... I took two patriotism pills and worked my way toward the fallout shelter bar. ...

The patriotism cleared my head. I was ready for another drink. The bartender was a new guy, from the GAO. The regular was under investigation for diluting drinks. My Air Force head ordered 100 Stealth Bombers.

"Who's gonna pay?" asked the bartender.

"The taxpayers. These drinks are vital to the life of this party."

"Oh yeah?" he said. "Well all's

I know is, you keep lousy records. There's a $2.4 billion discrepancy in the Air Force's bill, and the other branches' records are scribbled in illegible crayon." "Those 'illegible crayons,'" offered the admiral's head, "will survive a 12-megaton blast. Now gimme a 600-Ship Float to go."

"Nope."

"OK," said the head of the Army, "I'll settle for 30 Bradley Fighting Martinis. Make 'em doubles."

"Sorry."

"Listen," I pleaded, "we're all bureaucrats here, right? Now here's one we can all agree on — four midgetman daiquiries!"

"Forget it."

I was losing patience. "The Rooskies could be on their way over here right now!"

"The Rooskies," said the bark-keep, "are exchanging low-level drink secrets with us these days."

What? I should've been relieved, but I was too thirsty.

"Listen, I got over $300 mil bet on the Contras. When they win I'll pay you back. Now gimme a —"

"NO!"

Then, all of a sudden, in walks the commander-in-chief. "Here, here," he says, "we'll have no party poopers at my party. Now how 'bout one more round of drinks, courtesy of the taxpayers!"

And then I woke up, I think. I checked my wallet to be sure. All my money was gone. Coincidence? Maybe.

Then I looked at myself in the mirror. To my horror, I had become the U.S. economy, and boy did I have a headache. The dream continued, but the party was over — too late for many, too soon for the party animals. And my hangover was just beginning.

Eighth Annual Chuck Wagon Breakfast to be held Saturday. This year's breakfast extravaganza is held in conjunction with University Dining Services and the University of Idaho Rodeo Club's eighth annual collegiate rodeo to be held in the ASUI-Kibbie Dome Friday through Sunday. This event is one of the finest intercollegiate rodeos in the Pacific Northwest. Collegiate competitors are drawn from the entire northwest, ready to demonstrate their roping, riding and all-out rodeo skills.

Our Chuck Wagon will again offer those delectable man-sized blueberry pancakes, ranch eggs, country sausage, juice, milk and coffee. The wagon will serve from 7 a.m. - 11:30 a.m. in the south concourse of the ASUI-Kibbie Dome. Grab your hats and boots, bring your family, friends and appetite, and be prepared to savor the best breakfast on the Palouse.

Moscow Central Lions Club continues to work hard in providing community service and support. The proceeds of this event will again help sponsor academic scholarships given to UI Rodeo Club students, as well as numerous other community projects throughout the year. On behalf of the Moscow Central Lions Club, thank you for your generous support of our club activities.

Lord of the Flies: save bucks, read the book

REVIEW By WILL SCHMECKPEPER
Staff Writer

The one and only time I read William Golding's Lord of the Flies, a novel about the inherent savagery of human nature, was during a three-day period my senior year in high school while listening to Pink Floyd's just-released A Momentary Lapse of Reason. I don't know what it was that made the atmosphere so perfect — the music, my self-imposed isolation while reading the book, or both — but I got more out of reading the book than the four bucks it cost me to buy it, so maybe it's for this reason I was disappointed with the movie adaptation of the novel.

For the illiterate minority who has not yet read Lord of the Flies, the book is about children, ages ranging from eight years to early puberty, stranded on a tropical island after their airplane crashes into the ocean, leaving no one to look after them but themselves.

Essentially, Golding's novel is packed with symbolism relating how closely "modern man" is to actually being a bunch of savages. All it takes is a little "push." ... If you have not read this book, do one of two things: Shoot yourself now or read the damn thing.

Unfortunately, the movie Lord of the Flies falls way short of the novel, and expectedly so. It stars several young, unknown actors who surpass their years in ability, especially Paul Balthazar Getty who plays Ralph, the boys' deposed leader. Look for him in movies to come.

The movie is expertly edited to be visually perfect and has an excellent soundtrack. This film is perfect except for its one fatal flaw: It can't be as good as the book, no matter how hard it tries. It tries hard, but things just get screwed up. Golding's novel is more of a "mind" book, containing structural dialogue but seating the book's essence in the mental aspects of the reader, stuff that just does not come out on the movie screen. On its own, the film finds its way along all right until finally it fails to come full circle. It eventually wallows in a pit of base symbolism that doesn't make the film click, although the subtle comparison between the American soldiers in their camouflage gear to the boys dressed in war paint is kind of nice.

I hate to be too hard on this movie, however, because it is actually a good film that aims high but just doesn't reach its mark. It rates an eight on the 10 scale. Just be forewarned: This isn't the book; it just almost looks like it.

Olympian and BSC champion Ross continues to excel

By MATT LAWSON
Staff Writer

University of Idaho's Jackie Ross has come a long way since running in her physical education classes in Kingstown on St. Vincent Island in the Caribbean. She has come a long way in both miles and accomplishments.

At age 20, she has already competed in the Olympics for her home country and has a Big Sky Championship in the triple jump to her credit.

This is a great accomplishment since she started triple jumping only three years ago.

People may often ask why she came all the way from the island of St. Vincent to Moscow.

Men's Head Coach Mike Keller played a major role in her decision to come to the University of Idaho. In the off-season, he puts on track clinics throughout the Caribbean and recruits potential athletes.

After a few of her friends decided to go to UI, Ross decided to join them.

St. Vincent is about a 10-hour flight from Moscow, which makes it difficult for Ross to get home often.

"I only get to go home at Christmas and during the summer," she said.

So while the rest of us were enjoying spring break outside the friendly confines of Moscow, she was here working out and studying.

Ross first got into track competitively when she was at Bishop's College in Kingstown, which is the equivalent to our high schools in the United States.

"We ran in our physical education classes, and if we were good enough we tried out for the team," she said. "I tried out and made the team."

Ross competed in the long jump at the 1988 Olympics in Seoul, Korea.

She described it as a "great experience" and said it has helped her a great deal in competitions.

"I was very nervous," she said. "Now it is hard for me to get nervous at regular meets because of how big it (the Olympics) really was."

Ross proved she can perform under pressure when she jumped a personal best of 42 feet in the triple jump at the Big Sky Conference Indoor Championships earlier this month. The jump was good enough to give her a first-place finish that qualified her for the NCAA Championships.

At the NCAA competition, she did not fare as well as she had at the Big Sky meet, however.

"I wasn't nervous," she said. "I just didn't have a good day. I don't have any excuses, because I don't like to make excuses."

Her finish was not a result of a lack of hard work or a bad attitude, according to her coach, Scott Lorek.

"Her attitude is tremendous," Lorek said. "She's great to work with and has a great desire to reach her goals. She is that way in all of her life."

The island of St. Vincent is east of Jamaica in the Caribbean Sea, about 200 miles north of South America. Typically the temperature is in the 70s and 80s year-round.

This made coming to Moscow a difficult adjustment for Ross.

"I can handle school," she said. "But I can't handle the weather."

Ross said she has strong feelings about her coach.

"He is great," she said. "He doesn't yell at you, but he sees that you work hard."

Both Ross and Lorek said they have set goals for this season but feel that the goals are personal.

Lorek said he does have expectations for Ross, however.

"I want her to compete well and keep improving," he said.

Ross is studying psychology and plans to stay at UI for two more years before moving on to another school for two years. Her future in track is still uncertain, but she said she wants to compete in the 1992 Olympics in Spain, and she will possibly compete unattached in the United States after that.

Women qualify two at Banana Belt Relays

By TOM BITHELL
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho women's track team opened a tough outdoor schedule and earned two Big Sky Conference qualifying marks Saturday at the Banana Belt Relays in Clarkston, Wash.

Freshman Karen McCloskey qualified for the Big Sky Outdoor Championships in the 55-meter high hurdles, and teammate Kris Kasper, the team's only senior, made the conference mark in the discus.

Head Coach Scott Lorek said he is happy with his team's overall performance.

"I think everyone did well," Lorek said. "With relays, you won't get many qualifying marks. These relays were pretty much to get us going."

Lorek said he mainly wanted his team to prepare for tougher upcoming competition.

The Vandal women are scheduled to compete against Pac-10 schools University of Oregon, University of Washington, Washington State University and Stanford University during the season. They will also face Notre Dame University and various Big Sky rivals.

Lorek said the Vandals will not worry about team scores against the big schools but will focus on the individual competition.

"We're not concerned with team scores because those teams have too much depth," Lorek said.

The women's and men's teams will face their first giants when they travel to Seattle next weekend for a triangular meet with Washington and Oregon.

Smith was joined by late Loyola Marymount star Hank Gathers, UCLA's Trevor Wilson and Don McLean, and UNLV's David Butler, Stacey Augmon, Anderson Hunt and Greg Anthony.

VANDAL TENNIS. The University of Idaho tennis teams had their ups and downs during spring break. On March 19, the women were defeated by Eastern Kentucky 5-4, while the men defeated Towson State 6-3 and Monmouth College 6-1. Wednesday, the women fell to Columbia 6-3 before defeating Akron 5-4. On the same day, the men lost to Rutgers 6-3 despite a No. 1 singles win by Scott Andersen. Andersen and John Bladholm also won the No. 1 doubles match.

Foreign students attracted to Idaho's price, technology

By BRANDY CORGATELLI
Contributing Writer

Foreign students come from many far-off lands to study at the University of Idaho, but they usually have the same motivation as Americans: a low-cost education.

"I came to the university because the tuition is not too high here," said Chong Ping Neo, a 25-year-old electrical engineering student from Singapore.

John H. Cooper, UI foreign student adviser, agrees with Neo. "Foreign students get what they are looking for at a bargain price," Cooper said.

According to Cooper, foreign students want technical training.

"Most of our foreign students are from developing countries, and they come because they need the technology to modernize their nations."

Of the 449 foreign students who have attended classes at UI this year, nearly 30 percent are enrolled in the College of Engineering.

At the classroom level, this group of foreign students often makes up 15-25 percent of the enrollment for engineering and computer science classes.

Tom Miller, assistant professor of computer science, said he probably spends more individual time with foreign students. He said that fortunately these students come to his office prepared to ask questions.

"That's the way they have to do it in order to learn," Miller said.

According to Miller, most of their questions concern the meanings of words used in lectures or in the textbook.

Neo said that university humanities requirements, which involve language skills, are particularly difficult for foreign students.

"These are subjects that are more demanding for language," he said.

Neo said that fortunately he has not had to take a "dreaded" essay exam at UI.

Foreign students often do not ask questions during a lecture because interrupting the instructor is considered disrespectful in many of their homelands, Cooper said.

"They haven't grasped the idea that in the American system, you can question the instructor," Cooper said. "He (the instructor) is God in their countries."

According to Cooper, an instructor can take several steps to aid foreign students. While lecturing, the instructor needs to be consciously aware of the foreign students in the class and go over critical points slowly, he said.

"It would help the American students, too, believe me," Cooper said.

Low grades can also help an instructor detect when a student may be having trouble, and at this point the instructor can help or seek help for the student, Cooper said.

To meet foreign students' academic needs, the UI College of Forestry, Wildlife and Range Sciences and the UI College of Agriculture have appointed graduate students to foreign student adviser positions. These advisers have effectively detected and helped with problems, according to Cooper.

However, the UI College of Engineering, which has more foreign students than the forestry and agriculture colleges combined, has no foreign student adviser position.

HEALTH AND NUTRITION FAIR

The first annual Health and Nutrition Fair for University of Idaho students, faculty and staff will be held Wednesday from 9 a.m. - 4 p.m. in the Student Union Building.

Exhibitors from the university and the northwest will set up booths in the first floor lounges and hallways as well as in the SUB Ballroom for viewing and participation.

There will be educational displays of numerous health concerns and nutritious food samples to taste.

The health appraisals that will be available include: lung capacity testing, diabetes checks, hearing evaluations, body fat measurements, flexibility, circulation evaluations, blood pressure checks and dental evaluations. MMR immunizations will also be available.

Cholesterol testing will be available for $2.50, and lipid blood screening will be offered for $5. Participants will need to fast for 12 hours before the blood test.

The Health Fair is sponsored by the Student Health Center and the UI's Employee Wellness Program.

Finding Someone Who Cares

There are times when you need a good friend more than anything else in the world. But finding people who make good friends isn't always easy. Unless you look in the right places. Like our church. It's full of people who care. Compassionate people who know how to love and support each other. People who make faithful friends. That's why we're inviting you to visit our services. To experience firsthand the love and unity that Christ has given us. And realize that it's not that difficult to find someone who cares. There's always hope because Jesus cares for you.
