Administrators to review results of Marriott survey

By SHERRY DEAL
Managing Editor

Student leaders expressed varied opinions concerning the food service issue Tuesday.

ASUI Sens. John Goettsche, Bill Heffner and Brent King and Residence Hall Association President Ray Horton met with Jerry Wallace, assistant vice president of budget and planning, to discuss the future of food service at the University of Idaho.

According to Goettsche, UI President Elisabeth Zinser will make the final decision about whether to renew Marriott's contract. However, Goettsche said he feels the administration has already decided to keep Marriott.

"They are only going to make a decision for their immediate benefit," Goettsche said.

Goettsche said he is disappointed with the administration's lack of attention to the results of the recent referendum that asked for student opinion of Marriott's performance.

"They should be listening," Goettsche said. "Obviously students don't want Marriott. This referendum is a test to see if the UI administration is willing to listen to student opinion."

Goettsche said he is happy with student turnout for the referendum, considering it was not an election.

Wallace said he believes the referendum was a valid gauge of student opinion, but he and other administrators are working with RHA food service committee members to compile a more specific survey asking more questions than the referendum.

The survey has been handed out to all students living in the residence halls. Wallace said he feels most student concerns regarding Marriott are about the food service in the Wallace Complex cafeteria.

Wallace said he plans to use the results from the survey to negotiate with Marriott or whoever receives the contract.

Goettsche said the RHA survey was a "noble effort," but he does not believe RHA is representing student opinion.

"They have admitted defeat before even starting to fight for what the students want," he said.

Elizabeth Kniep, RHA vice president and RHA food service committee chairwoman, said she feels administrators are willing to consider the survey results before making their decision. She said Wallace and Zinser were pleased with the survey.

According to Kniep, the survey results should be tabulated by Monday.

She said she predicts most of the complaints concerning Marriott will be about the cafeteria and the snack bar in the Wallace Complex, and that the survey will produce some specific comments on Marriott's food service.

The survey asks students to answer yes or no to some questions, rate Marriott in several areas such as service and food quality and gives students room for additional comments.

Borah Symposium to examine 'The New Europe' next week

By SALLY GILPIN
Staff Writer

The recent dramatic events in Eastern Europe will be explored during the 42nd annual University of Idaho Borah Symposium that begins Monday.

The theme of the two-day symposium is "The New Europe."

The Borah Symposium was designed to be an ongoing discussion of the causes of war and the solutions for peace. It is derived from the "Outlawry of War" crusade popular in America in the early 1900s.

Monday's topic is "Revolution in Eastern Europe: New Hopes and Old Problems." Panelists will discuss the historical context of the recent Eastern European events, as well as the events themselves.

The panelists will be:
■ Stephen Fischer-Galati, United States; editor of the Eastern European Quarterly and professor emeritus of the University of Colorado.

■ Geza Jeszensky, Hungary; committee chairman and national board member of the Democratic Forum.

■ Michael Nakoryakov, Soviet Union; senior editor, North American desk of the Novosti Press Agency in Moscow.

■ Karel Stoszek, UI professor of forest resources and Czech emigre. He is an expert on Eastern European environmental problems.

The moderator for Monday night's discussion will be Orval Hansen, former Idaho Republican congressman, now in private law practice in Washington D.C.

Tuesday night's topic is "European Integration: Implications and Responses." Panelists will discuss how the disintegration of the Berlin Wall, the revolutions in Romania and Czechoslovakia, and the other changes in Eastern Europe will affect the whole European community and the world.

The panelists will be:
■ Guy VanHaeverbeke, Belgium; head of the European Parliament's information office in Brussels.

■ Jan Kurlmann, West Germany; head of the European Parliament's information office in Bonn.

■ Col. Ken Hamburger, United States; member of the history department at the West Point U.S. Military Academy. He will discuss the American military's present and future role in Europe.

■ Kazimierz Poznanski, professor of international studies at the Henry M. Jackson School of International Studies at the University of Washington in Seattle.

Bethine Church, political and community activist, will moderate this session.

Both symposium discussions will be held from 7 p.m. - 9 p.m., followed by a question period. The symposium will take place in the UI Student Union Building Ballroom and is free and open to the public.

The Borah Symposium is a function of the Borah Foundation, which was created when Idaho Sen. William Borah was approached by Chicago attorney Salmon Levinson, founder of the "Outlawry" movement in 1919.

Levinson needed a renowned orator with influence to be the spokesman for his movement, and he chose Borah.

While in the U.S. Senate, Borah introduced many resolutions calling for the outlawry of war. As a result of Borah's efforts, 57 nations eventually signed an agreement renouncing war as a national policy.

To express his gratitude for Borah's efforts, Levinson gave the university $55,000 to establish the William Edgar Borah Foundation for the Outlawry of War.

Past symposium topics include American-Soviet relations and drug trafficking.

KWSU-TV and National Public Radio will broadcast both symposium sessions live.

WITHDRAWAL DEADLINES. Today is the last day to withdraw from a course or the university.

Finalists announced for vice president of student affairs

Four finalists have been named for the position of vice president of student affairs at the University of Idaho. On-campus interviews are scheduled to be completed by the end of April.

The finalists are: Timothy F. Brooks, dean of students at the University of Delaware; William R. Donohue, vice president for student life at the University of South Dakota; Narbeth R. Emmanuel, assistant vice president for student affairs at the University of Vermont; and W. Hal Godwin, acting vice president of student affairs at UI.

The four candidates will meet with UI faculty, administrators, students and student government representatives during one-day campus visits in April.

Brooks, who has been dean of students at the University of Delaware since 1983, has a doctorate in education from Oregon State University. His experience includes student service positions at the University of Maine at Fort Kent as well as at Oregon State, Pacific Lutheran University and Green River Community College in Washington.

Donohue has been at the University of South Dakota since 1982. He has a doctorate in higher education administration and has previously served as vice president for student services at Fitchburg State College in Massachusetts and as vice president for university/community life at Phillips University in Oklahoma.

Emmanuel, who has a doctorate in educational administration and supervision from Bowling Green State University, has served as the University of Vermont's chief student affairs officer during 1989-90, following seven years as associate dean.

Godwin, who has been acting vice president for student affairs since the position was re-instituted last fall, has a doctorate in clinical psychology from Washington State University. He has been at UI since 1975 and has served as centennial coordinator, interim athletic director and director of major gifts for the UI Foundation. He is a professor at the Student Counseling Center.

ASUI Senate opposes abortion bill

By TRACY PEEL
Staff Writer

The ASUI Senate passed a resolution Wednesday night urging Gov. Cecil Andrus to veto Idaho's latest abortion legislation.

The resolution opposes House Bill 625, which was passed by the Idaho Legislature and will become law if the governor signs it.

"We strongly urge Governor Andrus to veto House Bill 625 on the grounds that it is an unworkable and very likely unconstitutional piece of legislation," the main clause of the resolution reads.

The law would prohibit abortions except in certain cases of incest or in case of rape, as long as the rape is reported within seven days of its occurrence. The law would also allow abortions necessary to save the mother's life.

Sen. Charlene Johnson opposed passing the resolution without first gathering student opinion.

Sen. John Goettsche disagreed, saying, "The bill will be vetoed or become law before we can take it to living groups."

ASUI President David Pena agreed with Johnson, saying that the resolution would cause too much dissent, and that it was impossible to separate the moral issue from abortion.

Sen. Julie McCoy, who co-authored the bill, said that the resolution did manage to separate the moral issue of abortion from the legal aspects of the legislation.

"In my mind, I can separate the two," she said.

She said she opposes the House bill because it is just bad legislation.

The resolution opposes the bill in part because of the estimated $3.5 million it will cost to defend the bill in court.

"The general consensus is that this legislation is going to challenge a constitutional case. There's no doubt it will go all the way to the Supreme Court," Sen. Brent King said.

Sen. Kris Torgerson opposed sending a resolution "in areas where we shouldn't be trifling."

"This is our business," Sen. Patty McCray said. "That is our money being used."

After much debate, the senate passed the resolution 10-2, with Johnson and Torgerson in opposition.

Use of fee increase revenues discussed

By VIVIANE GILBERT
News Editor

University of Idaho administrators met again with student leaders to ask for more input on the proposed $77 per year fee increase.

UI President Elisabeth Zinser must finalize her fee proposal by Wednesday. She will present the proposal at the State Board of Education meetings April 19 and 20.

Zinser met with the ASUI Senate Wednesday night. She was accompanied by Hal Godwin, acting vice president of student affairs; Joseph Geiger, financial vice president; and Tom Bell, academic vice president.

The proposed increase would generate about $1.6 million in additional revenue for the university next year.

According to allocation figures the administrators proposed to the senators, Student Services will receive $440,000 of the revenue next year.

Minority student recruitment efforts would receive about $29,000, which will go toward development and retention programs. A new minority recruiter position would also be established. Minority scholarships would be boosted by $10,000 from private donations and an additional $10,000 from fee increase revenues.

About $100,000 of the revenue would go toward completing the campus touch-tone pre-registration system. An unspecified amount will go toward improving other student services.

About $200,000 of the non-resident tuition revenue, which can be used to hire instructors, will go to graduate student teaching and research assistants, and $288,000 will be used to help meet accreditation needs and hire new faculty to lower the student-to-faculty ratio.

Another $532,000 will be allocated to university facilities maintenance, for the upkeep of things such as campus sidewalks, roofs and electrical systems.

ASUI President David Pena said he is happy with some of the programs for which the administrators proposed allocations, especially the gains in minority student services, but said he still feels the increase is "a bit much."

"I support the programs that would be instituted. They're good ideas," Pena said. "But that's still a bit much to ask for."

Pena said he is asking for a trimmed-down proposal, and hopes that the increase will be lowered to 6 percent.

ASUI Sen. Steve Dunn called the recent dialogue with the administrators "encouraging."

"I really don't believe the students can tell the administration to not have a fee increase," Dunn said. "However, I do believe the students can change their (the administrators') minds as to where the money is going to go."

Dunn pointed out the huge backlog of needs on campus, and said that an increase now would be making up for the years when there were no increases, as well as improving the quality of education for the future.

"It's gotta start somewhere," Dunn said.

Another student leader said he opposes the increase and the administration's actions.

ASUI Sen. John Goettsche called the increase "really foolish" and said there was no need for it.

"The university doesn't need this added money," Goettsche said.

Goettsche said he is also unimpressed with the administrators' attempts to meet with students about the increase.

"They're not interested in student opinion," Goettsche said. "This is just a farce."

If the proposal is adopted, fees for full-time undergraduate students would be increased $38.50 per semester, which would bring total per semester fees to $587.50.

Full-time non-resident tuition would be raised $77 per semester, full-time graduate/professional fees would be raised $12, and part-time fees, including summer school fees, would increase by $5 per credit hour.

Construction on $1.8 million incubator completed on time

By BECKY JONES
Staff Writer

Construction on the University of Idaho business incubator is complete.

The incubator is for young, high-growth businesses that need a place to start. It will provide receptionists, copy machines, a conference room, a lunch room, computers and bookkeeping services that under normal circumstances might not be available to beginning businesses.

The new businesses will move out of the incubator once initial problems have been taken care of and the businesses can stand alone, usually after one to three years.

The rent collected from the companies staying in the building will provide money for incubator maintenance.

The incubator cost $1.8 million to build, and $1.2 million came from grant funds secured by the UI, the Moscow-

Latah County Economic Development Council and the city of Moscow.

A $485,000 grant came from the Idaho Community Development Block Grant Program, and a $787,000 grant came from the Economic Development Administration of the U.S. Department of Commerce.

In addition to providing a start-up place for businesses, the incubator will create jobs for the community.

"We project that it will generate 75 new jobs within two years," said Bill Anderson, director of the Moscow-Latah County Economic Development Council.

Companies scheduled to move in by the end of May are Advanced Hardware Architectures Inc., CID Inc., Idaho Research Foundation Inc., and Pacific Simulation.

The Moscow-Latah County Economic Development Council will also be housed in the incubator.

On July 14, 1960, Jane Goodall, a 26 year old woman from Bourne-mouth, England stepped from a government launch onto the sandy shore of Lake Tanganyika. Accompanied only by her mother and an African cook, she had been sent by the famed anthropologist/paleontologist, Dr. Louis S. B. Leakey, to begin a long term study of chimpanzees in the wild. Although at the time she had no scientific training to prepare her for scientific research, Jane's arrival at Gombe signaled the beginning fulfillment of a twofold childhood dream: "to study animals in Africa and to write about them."

Idaho needs to remove residual racism

The Idaho Legislature represents a population that is conservative and almost entirely Caucasian. It is possible that this is reflected in the difficulty the Legislature is having in creating a Martin Luther King Jr. holiday.

Perhaps Idaho legislators feel that their constituents will not be happy if they support another holiday for government workers. It is also possible that they fear a racist reaction in the next election.

Whatever the motive for this footdragging, it is giving Idaho a bad reputation. For many years Idaho enjoyed a type of positive anonymity that pleasantly combined with our potato state image.

This has been replaced by "Oh, Idaho. Isn't that the state with the Nazis?"

It is up to the Legislature to lead the state as well as represent its constituents, and by ignoring this image problem the Legislature is ignoring its duty to lead the state.

The ups and downs of Idaho's cash flow indicate that the most important part of the Legislature's leadership duties is improving Idaho's economy.

Idaho is a state with a fragile economy that badly needs diversification. To diversify, Idaho must attract new people, money and ideas; to do this, Idaho must shed its racist hillbilly image.

Racism is a serious problem that will not go away if ignored, because racists accept silence as consent. It is time for Idaho leaders to show their lack of tolerance for bigotry, polish Idaho's tarnished image and improve Idaho's economy.

This can be done simply by supporting a holiday that honors human rights, Dr. King, and his efforts to bring the benefits of the U.S. Constitution to all Americans regardless of race, color or creed.

The people who settled Idaho were often ahead of their time in legislation dealing with issues such as women's voting rights and community property laws. However, many of the people who settled Idaho were confederate veterans of the Civil War who brought their attitudes with them.

The first victims of racism in Idaho were the Native Americans who were forced onto reservations to make room for white settlers. The next were the Chinese miners who were treated so poorly that almost all of them returned to China.

In the 1920s and 1930s, Idaho was one of many states with an active Ku Klux Klan, and many racist local laws were put into effect. The federal government made these laws illegal, and they were quietly dropped during the 1960s and 1970s, but the attitudes of many Idahoans did not change.

It is time for Idaho to move away from the residue of racism and work for a fair and open society where people are judged by their actions rather than by the color of their skin. In their capacity as community leaders, legislators should use Dr. King's holiday as a tool to create a more democratic society in Idaho.

Gov. Cecil Andrus 'in hell with abortion bill'

After seeing a political cartoon in the Spokesman Review depicting Gov. Cecil Andrus in hell, abortion bill in hand and indicating that the Senate sent him, I realized that Andrus is a man with experience and ability. Only figures who have become institutions are honored with cartoonists' hands and ink. And, for those Republican senators who feel they can relate, you need to look up the difference between institutions and institutionalized.

Remember when the cartoon character Ronny didn't know that Gov. Reagan didn't have a "let it burn" policy for California, but that Yellowstone did? Don't worry; he doesn't either. Many of today's Republicans have the greatest ability to forget, while in Idaho we hear Gov. Andrus saying, "I remembered." He gave North Idaho representation as we asked, as well as a better highway, and in due time the wilderness issue will also be settled.

The governor is in hell with an abortion bill in hand. He has what could become a no-win situation, and all the state and national interest groups are waiting on both sides of the fence to tally the damage now that a decision seems to be forced. It is sad that in this election year so many of Andrus' accomplishments will become obscured by this well-planned battle over abortion. After 30 years of productive public service, many voters will not see the healthy forest for the flailing tree in front of them.

Latah, Power County students participate in school exchange

Editor:

Last week the gap between northern and southern Idaho became a little closer. As part of the Sister County Program, 11 students from five Latah County high schools and 12 students from American Falls High School were participating in a school exchange.

The Power County students spent the week attending classes at one of the Latah County high schools, viewing the various historical and geographical sights of the Palouse, as well as visiting the University of Idaho campus. The students also gave presentations about their high school and the Power County area.

Latah County students attended classes at AFHS and gave presentations about their area and high schools. Throughout the week they toured the Idaho Power Plant, the Idaho State Fish Hatchery, Driscoll Potatoes, the UI Aberdeen Experiment Station, Simplot Potato Processing, the Idaho State University campus, the Museum of Natural History, and the Massacre Rock State Park. A very special thank you to all the individuals who helped with transportation and to those who took the time out to show the students through the various sites.

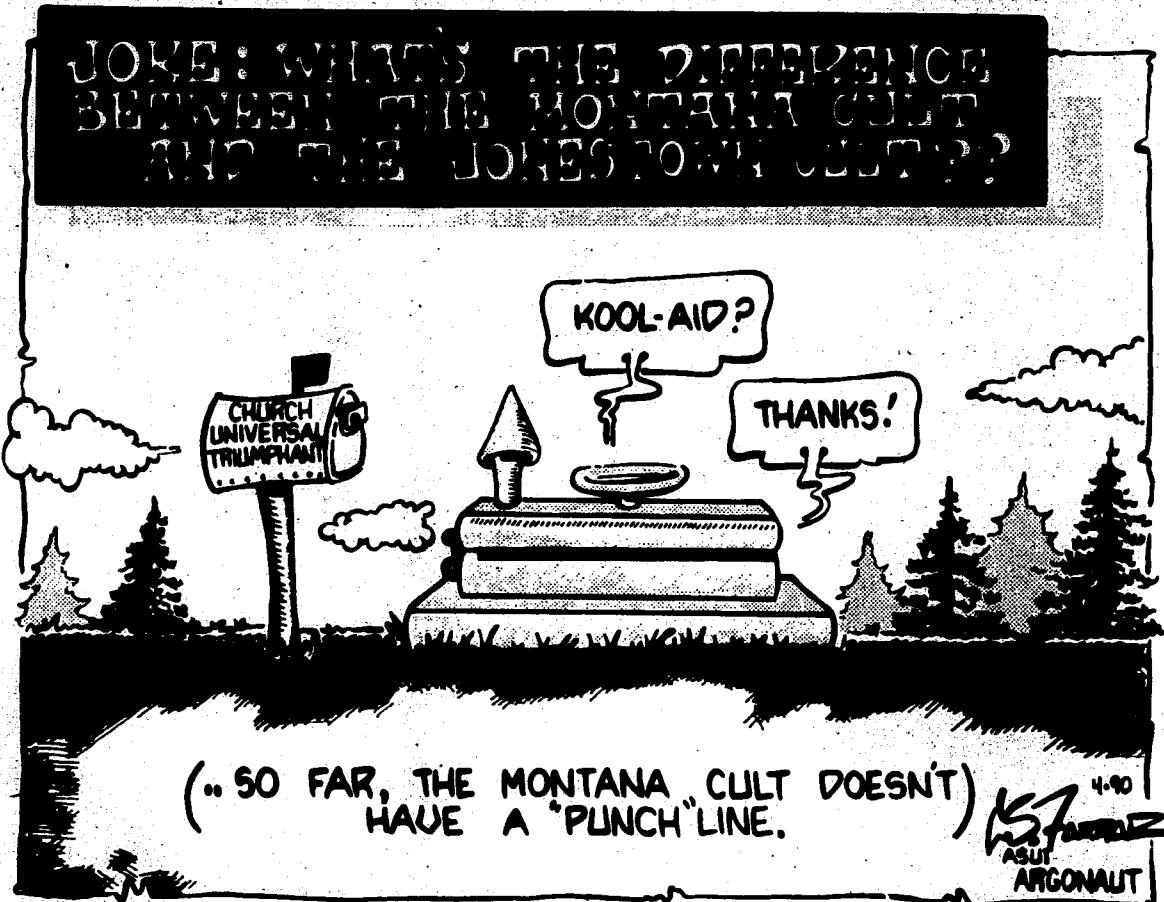

I would also like to express my deepest appreciation to all the host families in Power and Latah counties, and a special thank you to Bob Schriber, AFHS coordinator; Mary Reed, Latah County Centennial chair; and to the UI for the use of the vans. Without your long hours and dedicated service, this project would not have existed.

If this past week is any indication of what the centennial year will be like, I can hardly wait to attend the other activities! I have never seen such enthusiasm and interest as I had with the exchange students from both counties. It was exciting to observe cross-the-state friendships develop. To me, this is what the centennial is really all about, uniting the state!

Once again, to all those involved with the exchange, big or small, thank you very much for all your hard work.

Celebrate Idaho!

Power County Centennial Chair

Chinese students victims of policy

President Bush's veto of a congressional plan to allow Chinese students to remain in the United States — and not be forced to return to their homeland to face possible persecution — is diplomatic policy at its worst. Certainly it shows support for continued Sino-American relations in the short term, but it is a slap in the faces of our international counterparts who voted in favor of a U.N. resolution condemning China for its violent suppression of student protest. The trouble comes with forcing people from another country out of ours for the sake of maintaining diplomatic channels. This is punishment inflicted on innocent victims to soothe and mask troubles in Chinese and American relations. It is undignified policy-making.

"I've taken a position that I do not want to isolate China by no contacts and set the clock back," Bush said in mid-January.

What clock, George? China's dread of democratic reform dates back long before any clock was invented. And what about these people, mostly students, who are in the United States? What are they to do when their temporary visas expire? Should they be forced to return to a place where intimidation, scorn and imprisonment are the accepted measures to quell dissent? What kind of democracy does America represent when its own government leaders do little or nothing to take a stand against such a violation of humanity?

BRANDON LEVER
Commentary

More than one million people crowded the streets of Beijing last spring to protest government corruption; the suppression of democratic principles and the use of a highly adept police body designed to weed out potential "dissidents" by shooting them.

As a result, more than 1,000 people died in the Tiananmen Square massacre June 4, 1989.

Sure, this brought a few token gestures of subdued outrage from our executive branch of government, but it certainly did not dampen any political or business relations between the United States and China. Sino-American trade exceeds $14 billion a year, which makes the United States the largest foreign investor in that country. Companies like Chrysler, Boeing and RJR Nabisco, the conglomerate cigarette manufacturer, all have vested interests in continued business relations. After all, even student protesters need to smoke, right?

Bush's connection to and affection for China is steadfastly rooted in his long association with the immorally backward Communist government, beginning with his job as U.S. envoy to China in 1974 and 1975. It is this

Trent Talks: The best of all possible worlds

"Life is an endless chain of being ... lines of fate govern and tie us together ... I am your mother, Luke."

In the best of all possible worlds, tartar would still be an obscure word for a white powder that fizzes when eaten (yes, I have tried it) and the Brady Bunch never would have returned to television. But we don't live in a perfect world (as can be seen by the fame of Alan Thicke), so problems continually plague our undeserving human existence. For your convenience, here are some examples:

Q: Last night I dreamed that the whole cast of the "Mary Tyler Moore" show took turns eating pork at the foot of my bed. I told my roommate (let's call him Bob) about my dream, and he said that it was a sign of sexual frustration. Is this true? What do you think?

A: I've never heard of anyone becoming aroused by watching

Ed Asner chew chops, but I've led an isolated existence. I think that your problem probably stems more from a fear of television or pork than it does from sexual frustration. I suggest you see a trained "Mary Tyler Moore" specialist and keep your eyes open at night to see if it isn't Bob eating at the foot of your bed.

Q: Last week at the library I met a nice guy who asked me to walk home. He seemed really nice until he began to drool and then begged me to strip nude and run circles in a canal next to his home. I declined and left, disgusted. What would make a nice guy suddenly become so crude and interested in canals?

A: He probably suffers from Pond Water Syndrome, a rare illness that makes a person crave kinky encounters in or near stagnant water. Next time he bothers you, simply hose him down with fresh water and wait for an apology.

Q: Do you play the banjo?

A: No.

'Pro-logging mischief'

Editor: Sen. Steve "yours for a free society" Symms won't let the Idaho Conservation League (ICL) speak at the College of Forestry, Wildlife and Range Sciences (FUBAR). Could the $50,000 in PAC (politician ala corrupt) money the timber industry has contributed to his next campaign have anything to do with this most recent display of pro-logging mischief?

Maybe the Idaho Women in Timber (IDWITS) and Sen. Steve "yours for something in the first digits" Symms could organize a book burning at the FUBAR. It has been rumored that texts are available that (UGH) dare to discuss the wise use of dwindling natural resources. Worse yet, there are actually professors of forestry, wildlife, range and wildland recreation who teach knowledge rather than timber industry jive. Perhaps a burning at the snag is in order. Happy Earth Day!

relationship that has skewed his judgment of right and wrong.

Honestly, is it so wrong politically to allow the relatively few Chinese living in America to decide what is in their best interest? Wouldn't they be better off in a society that (usually) promotes democracy? Why ask, since Bush's veto effectively disallows that choice. The sad thing is that the people the president intends to expel are the very people we Americans could learn from, the ones who teach that morally corrupt governments need to be protested against, that human rights violations need not be tolerated and that students with progressive ideas should not be treated as public enemies.

Most of the Chinese, some of whom attend school here and in Pullman, will return soon, but to what? Many of those returning who are targeted as dissidents will surely die. From a humanitarian perspective, that stinks. I may have voted for Bush, but that does not mean I don't hold him accountable.

Protesters to wash flag in opposition to foreign policy

By CHARLES RICE
Staff Writer

A public flag washing designed to protest American foreign policy will take place at 4:30 p.m. today at the Federal Building (post office) in downtown Moscow.

Kris Siess, one of the event's organizers, said that the flag washing should have taken place Saturday, because that was the 10th anniversary of Archbishop Romero's assassination by a right-wing death squad in El Salvador. The event was delayed until today, however, because most University of Idaho students were out of town for spring break.

The flag washing will "symbolically cleanse it of U.S. crimes in Central America," Siess said.

The public is invited and encouraged to bring their own flags to wash, Siess said. The flag washing will be followed by a short march to a rally at Friendship Square.

Siess said that the flag washing will not be a flag desecration, but instead "an attempt to reclaim the basic American values that are underneath the dirt."

After the scheduled speeches, an open microphone will be available for people to speak their minds, Siess said.

"Also, there will be a clothesline supplied so people can dry their flags," he said.

"We are urging people to not desecrate the flag because we do not want to provoke the police to do anything rash, but obviously we cannot control the actions of individuals," Siess said. "We are just home-grown patriots who feel that U.S. foreign policy has gotten out of hand."

The event is sponsored by Students in Support of Central America, the Palouse Area Pledge of Resistance and the Coalition for Central America.

The flag-washing sponsors have a legal permit to assemble. Siess said that he anticipates no trouble from local police or federal employees. According to Sgt. Mikelson of the Moscow Police Department, the city approved a special event request and a banner permit for the event.

The event will last from 4:30 p.m. to about 7 p.m.

Following the demonstration, a concert/dance will be held at John's Alley beginning at 8 p.m., featuring the bands Ignatius, the Idiots and Papa Legaba. ID cards will be required at the musical celebration, which will be a fundraiser for SISCA.

UI Nutrition Fair draws over 300

By SALLY GILPIN
Staff Writer

If you were wandering through the Student Union Building Wednesday, you probably noticed the crowds of people anxiously awaiting their turn to hop on the scale.

No, it wasn't a scale-tester's convention. It was the first annual University of Idaho Health and Nutrition Fair.

The fair was a huge success, according to coordinator Mary Schwantes, the UI Student Health dietitian.

About 300 to 400 UI students, faculty and staff came to the day-long event. Booths featuring everything from lung capacity testing to nutritional food samples and exercise options filled the first floor and ballroom of the SUB.

Organizations from the northwest and the university set up exhibits featuring educational displays and health appraisal booths. The exhibits and booths were designed to teach people about the importance of proper nutrition, health care and exercise, along with new trends in health and wellness.

Exhibitors included Gritman Memorial Hospital and the Marriott Corporation.

"We were just delighted with the quality of the exhibits," Schwantes said.

The most popular booths, according to Schwantes, were the blood pressure/weight booth, which had more than 400 visitors, and the cholesterol testing and health-age appraisal booths, which had more than 150 visitors.

Schwantes said that since Wednesday's fair, several people have come to the Student Health Center for more information about weight loss, nutrition programs and other health concerns.

Dr. Donald Chin, UI's student health director, came up with the idea for the health fair.

Schwantes, Student Health Center employees and UI Employee Wellness Program members organized the fair. After Christmas they started seeking booth sponsors and community support for the fair.

"The community support was wonderful," Schwantes said. "The community was great in volunteering and donating."

Rosauers donated a Vitari machine that makes all-fruit and fruit juice frozen desserts, and the Moscow Food Co-op donated granola.

Because of the success of this year's fair, the coordinators are already thinking about next year and already have some exhibitors lined up.

Grad students show artwork at Ridenbaugh

By JAMES ROBERTSON
Staff Writer

The University Gallery on the first floor of Ridenbaugh Hall will host an opening reception tonight for Philip Argent and Jane Callister, two graduate art students who are presenting their work to fulfill master's degree requirements.

Argent is originally from Southend-On-Sea, Essex, England, and he did his undergraduate work at Cheltenham in England.

Argent's show consists mostly of large oil paintings, although he is showing some work in other media. Many of his paintings present human figures in abstract environments. Viewers are confronted with narrative suggestions, but the ambiguity of the work leaves the interpretation open.

"Some of the titles will be quite specific, although I think it should be up to the viewers to draw their own conclusions," Argent said.

He said that his recent work included in the show is more figurative than his earlier work.

Callister, who also studied at Cheltenham, will be showing seven large oil paintings and 10 smaller oils on paper.

Her work is rich in color and creates mysterious spaces through the use of invented forms and illusionistic techniques. Callister said she has found that her art work is progressing in the opposite direction of Argent's work. When she arrived at the University of Idaho, her paintings were figurative, but much of her recent painting is more non-representational and abstract.

Both artists plan to return to England after they graduate. Callister is originally from the Isle of Man and has been asked to do a show there when she returns. She then plans to move to London. Argent said he would like to return to the United States sometime to study further.

The opening reception is at Ridenbaugh Hall from 5 p.m. - 8 p.m. today. It is free and open to the public, and refreshments will be served.

The graduate thesis exhibition will run for one week, and all the work is for sale.

The University Gallery is open from 9 a.m. - 5 p.m. weekdays and noon - 4 p.m. Saturdays.

Goettsche shows work at SUB

By STEPHANIE BAILEY
Entertainment Editor

Art work by John H. Goettsche is featured at the Student Union Building Gallery through Thursday.

Goettsche said he uses mostly oils on canvas, but for the works featured at the SUB he used a variety of media and different painting techniques. He spilled paint on glass and added ingredients like salt to make the paint separate in different ways and tried paint splatters.

"My attitude is, it doesn't matter what you use as long as it looks good," Goettsche said.

He mainly works from photographs and tries to convey the emotion of each situation and subject. His main focus, however, is on color theory and application, not necessarily the subject matter.

"My goal is to get people to feel some emotion when they see the painting through the application of paint and the use of color," Goettsche said.

He said the paintings are self-explanatory.

"When someone looks at it, they know what is going on there. The subject matter is pretty clear."

Goettsche, a senior studying fine arts, has been painting for the last eight to 10 years. He hopes to continue his art work in the future and "hopefully someday make some money at it," he said.

The art work is for sale for the best price offered. Messages can be left at the SUB Information Desk.

Recently excavated David Giese

Editor's note: This is the first article in a five-part series on David Giese.

By MARY HEUETT
Staff Writer

Walking through the dry atmosphere of David Giese's lab, I spot scattered moquettes, remnants of Mardi Gras. Yellow sunglasses, molded of concrete, perch on the face of an angelic character who stares at me through the open door of Giese's office. Gray paint coats the cinder-block walls supporting the cherub's niche. Gray concrete covers the legs of the black-topped desk. Its decorative additions, remnants from past creations, are formed of the same gray concrete. But it's not the traditional gray of concrete; it's darker and bluer. Papers, boxes and supplies litter his desk and floor.

Concrete lightly coats the door and door frame, roughly texturing it. His desk has the same smooth-rough feel. On the door an elaborate, glassy-finished plaque reads "David F. Giese, Professor of Art." He greets me inside the door and asks me to have a seat while he runs up to talk to the department secretary.

His office bursts with muted color. Greens and oranges meld and slip in and out of one another on the floor, contained by a barely discernible border pattern. A spectrum of grays, speckled with rose, covers the cupboards, the back side of the door, and the lower third of the room. On the east wall, his portrait stares at his chair, complete with cigarette and now non-existent beard. Beneath it a glass-topped table sits with a row of hunks flexing across its lip.

His Macintosh II hums gently, with moire drifting across the screen. He enters, sits and lights the first of many "More" cigarettes he'll smoke during the interview. He leans back and watches me through a pair of red and black tinted glasses that he'll trade for black multi-speckled frames when the photographer arrives. His china-blue tie with white speckles stands out against the shades of gray that compose his outfit.

Born in Fargo, N.D., Giese grew up in Minneapolis and rural Minnesota. Based at the University of Idaho since 1977, the almost biophysicist teaches a color and design class. In his junior year of college, a semester of fun classes, theater history, art studio and music theory, convinced Giese he belonged to the arts, not the sciences. The dialogue and atmosphere of the arts excited him. The influence of certain people during his educational process gave him a strong belief that culture must pass its collective sense to the future and augment it with new information, Giese said.

Although he free-lanced for a time, the dialogue between generations and the atmosphere of the academic world drew him to teaching. Living frugally on his earnings from the fall and spring semesters, Giese taught summer school and saved money to invest in his art. Unencumbered by the financial and emotional strain of a family, he needed only to please himself.

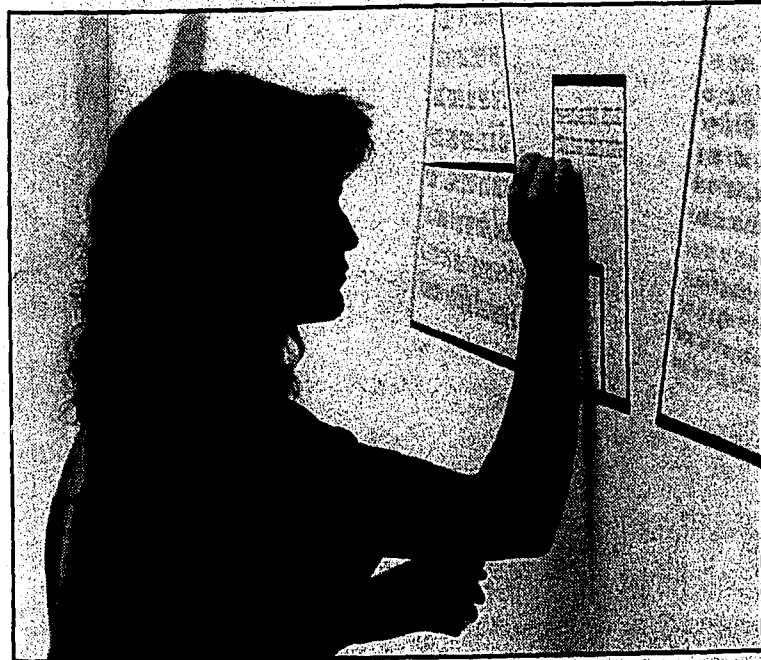

Moscow's artistically barren atmosphere frees his fantastical imagination. Giese incorporates the historical works he sees in the East and Europe but avoids the danger of slavishly copying them.

Accessible on some levels and complex and mysterious on others, Giese's work contains clearly impossible constructs, a Duchampian thing where no sense makes sense. The tension between reality and fantasy makes the pieces work and confronts viewers with their own knowledge of history as compared with what they are seeing. Serving his work in a sumptuous manner, Giese breaks art taboos, incorporating decorative surfaces and humor to provide insight.

During the late '70s and early '80s, the university supported Giese but also endangered his art. A member of an overworked art faculty, Giese said some days he would be sucked dry by 180 students and come home unable to do more than take off his shoes. He said the community also drained his personal resources by taking advantage of his art work. People expected him to donate unlimited time and energy and expected everything for nothing.

Conceptual work featured at Prichard

By JAMES ROBERTSON
Staff Writer

The Presence of Absence, a traveling exhibition of contemporary installation art work, opens today at the University of Idaho Prichard Art Gallery in Moscow.

The show consists of 13 installations by 13 artists. Many of the concepts were commissioned for this show. Featured artists include Judith Barry, Sol LeWitt and Krzysztof Wodiczko.

As a traveling exhibition, The Presence of Absence is quite unusual. The show's roots lie in the conceptual art projects of the late 1960s and early 1970s. Conceptual artists generally considered the execution of a work of art less important than its conceptualization. This show follows that philosophy in that the institutions participating in the tour do not receive any art works, nor do the artists travel to create their works at each site. Instead, the institutions receive written instructions, diagrams, stencils and slides that explain how to create the actual art works in the gallery.

For the past two weeks, an installation team has been hard at work in the Prichard Art Gallery re-creating the art works for the exhibition. Those installing the work include undergraduate and graduate art students from UI and Washington State University.

One might think that it would be quite boring to meticulously follow written instructions to produce a work of art. This is not the case, however. The installers are allowed some discretion in executing several of the exhibition pieces, and for some pieces the installation team must choose new elements to add.

One such piece is by LeWitt. The two people installing the LeWitt work are Karen Watts, the Prichard director's assistant, and Chris Stanley, a WSU graduate art student. LeWitt specified in his instructions a minimum number of lines to be drawn for the piece. Watts and Stanley have the option of adding as many lines as they want.

"We devised our own set of rules," Watts said. "We each take turns working, and we each have the option to quit at any time."

She said that she spent a great deal of time just looking at the piece and deciding what to do next.

Some pieces in the show push the limits of what most people would call art. A piece by Jenny

■ SPRING OPERA

A trip back to childhood tales is in store for everyone April 6 and 7 when the University of Idaho Opera Workshop presents its production of Humperdinck's Hansel and Gretel.

The old story of two children who wander through the woods and happen upon the witch's house will come to life on stage through narrative and music under the combined effort of the Lionel Hampton School of Music and the UI theater arts department, according to Alan Eggleston, visiting assistant professor of music.

As most people remember, the tale goes on to show the evil witch and her efforts to turn the children she catches into gingerbread. Hansel and Gretel are a bit wiser than average children and manage to foil the witch's plan. The story ends happily as the evil witch is turned into gingerbread.

Tickets are on sale at Ticket Express in the UI Student Union Building.

■ YOUNG BRIANS

The Young Brians, a rock band from Spokane, will perform at John's Alley Saturday. The Lonesome Polekats will open at 9 p.m. A $2 donation will provide happy hour prices all night.

He spent the school year mentally evolving the concept of his current body of work and devoted the summers to creating his architectural fragments.

Having shown in juried shows and two-person shows since his graduate years, Giese began seeking single-person shows. Lack of money and stiff competition daunted him, he said. In the northwest, only a few Seattle galleries handle regional artists; most want someone exotic. In New York, the galleries see 15-30 artists from the streets and another 35-40 portfolios in the mail each day.

In 1980, the 35-year-old Giese began traveling to New York on a regular basis to visit galleries and museums. After looking at displayed works, he realized a market existed for his work, which was as good as or even better than much of the work he saw. The tone and feel of younger artists' works encouraged him, Giese said.

"That's when I began to say: 'Why is this person showing? His work is terrible. Why aren't you showing? Your work is good.' A lot of it was well-done technically. There's no question about it. Yet it had absolutely no content and was about as exciting as wallpaper," Giese said.

Since his work was selling, sustaining and perpetuating itself, in 1984, Giese decided to take his portfolio to New York galleries. His goal was New York representation.

Holzer uses programmable moving text advertising signs to display various short messages. The signs are set up at various Moscow and Pullman locations, including Bruneel Tire Service, Cavanaugh's, the Beasley Performing Arts Coliseum, Frontier Federal Savings and Loan, the UI Student Union Building and the UI Administration Building.

"It's a completely different aspect of modern art," Prichard Gallery Director Johanna Hays said of the show. "It's going to raise a lot of questions like 'What is art?'"

Hays said that the show is unique because all the artists are internationally known and quite famous.

"It's not the kind of art normally seen here in Moscow," she said.

The Presence of Absence was organized and is circulated by Independent Curators Inc. of New York, a non-profit traveling exhibition service that specializes in contemporary art. The guest curator for the exhibition is Nina Felshin. The exhibition, tour and catalog are made possible in part by grants from the National Endowment for the Arts, the Lannan Foundation, and Art Matters Inc.

The Presence of Absence will be showing at the Prichard Gallery through May 4. The opening reception is from 5 p.m. - 9 p.m. today and is free and open to the public.

The gallery is located on Main Street in downtown Moscow.

Mark Twain performance free to students

By MARY HEUETT
Staff Writer

When Mark Twain, alias Samuel Clemens, lectures in the Lionel Hampton School of Music recital hall Saturday, he is sure to insult local teachers, politicians and journalists.

Born in 1835, Samuel Langhorne Clemens spent his 75 years bouncing from job to job: steamboat pilot, reporter, editor, publisher and traveling lecturer. He began the lecture tours in 1893 to fight off bankruptcy triggered by bad investments.

Known for The Adventures of Tom Sawyer and The Adventures of Huckleberry Finn, Twain felt free to use his biting commentary on anyone and anything, particularly politicians and teachers.

"It could possibly be shown by facts and figures that there is no distinctly native criminal class in the United States ... except for Congress," Twain said.

On another occasion, Twain said, "In the first place, God made idiots. This was for practice. Then he made school boards."

Three hours before Twain picks up his cigar and whiskey to make his entrance, Ken Richters sits down in front of his mirror, makeup in hand.

Richters, in his early 30s, has transformed himself into the elderly Twain nearly 700 times in the past 10 years.

His research into Twain's private and public life produced five hours of specially edited material from which to draw each two-hour production, allowing him to don the personality and mannerisms of Twain as easily as he dons Twain's trademark white linen suit.

Critic Al Reiss said, "From his first entry through his final exit, Richters is totally within the character of Twain as many people envision the author: mane of white hair, mustache, white suit and a walk that slightly drags the right foot."

The actor first portrayed Mark Twain when he was a high school student in Simsbury, Conn.

Community theater, Broadway plays, soap operas and television drew Richters. His credits include Happy Days, Love Boat, Search for Tomorrow and Johnny We Hardly Knew Ye. On the stage he has been seen in Promises, Promises, George M!, The Man Who Came to Dinner and They're Playing Our Song.

In 1976, on a return trip from Los Angeles to Connecticut, a car breakdown in Hannibal, Mo., Twain's hometown, reminded Richters of his high school portrayal of Twain. That sent him on the path from which his unique one-man show evolved.

Tickets for Mark Twain on Tour are limited. Call Ticket Express for reservations. Students with ID cards are admitted free and adult tickets are $3.

The show, sponsored by SARb, begins at 8 p.m. Saturday.

Kermit's gone; Hunter searches for replacement

By JOHN CARTER
Staff Writer

Texas A & M University named Kermit Davis its new basketball coach Wednesday.

A & M Athletic Director John David Crow said that the university wanted a young and aggressive coach, and that the goal had been accomplished.

Davis coached the University of Idaho to two straight Big Sky Conference titles and two NCAA first-round tournament berths after being named head coach in 1988 at the age of 28. He is the youngest coach in NCAA Division I basketball. He compiled two consecutive 25-6 records at UI after two successful years as a junior college coach at Southwest Mississippi, where he went 39-20.

Davis will replace interim coach John Thornton, who finished the season for former A & M coach Shelby Metcalf. Metcalf, a family friend of Davis, was fired after 19 games and had a 438-296 career coaching record.

"I know how well Shelby was liked, and it's going to be difficult to follow the winningest coach in the SWC," Davis said.

Davis should have no problem filling the gap if he continues his ways, however. He has won 82 percent of his games as a head coach and ranks fourth on the list of winningest active coaches in the NCAA.

The Aggies finished this past season with a 14-17 record and a 7-9 Southwest Conference record.

Davis said he expects the team to battle for a championship in four years.

"We aren't trying for any quick fix," Davis said. "The first year or two you try to gain credibility. The third year you should contend for a championship, and the fourth year you should have a chance to win the championship."

Davis had not yet signed a multi-year contract at UI. The contract had been discussed but not finalized with UI officials.

Davis said that money made a big difference in his decision. He estimated that his four-year contract at A & M will pay him $125,000 - $150,000 per year to start. By the end of his contract he could make $200,000 - $300,000 including perks such as shoe contracts and TV commercials. He made about $52,000 per year at UI.

Davis said that although it was a hard decision, it was one he had to pursue.

The question now is whether UI's program will remain on the rise or bite the dust.

UI Athletic Director Gary Hunter will set out to duplicate the difficult task he accomplished two years ago: Replace a successful basketball coach with one who will fill his shoes and keep basketball on the Palouse in the

Tracksters face tough weekend

By TOM BITHELL
Staff Writer

Outdoor track will shift into high gear for the Vandal men and women this weekend when they travel to Seattle for a triangular meet with Pac-10 powers University of Washington and University of Oregon.

UW and UO are commonly ranked as two of the nation's top dual-meet teams. Both schools have big programs and strong depth. The Vandals, on the other hand, have fewer scholarships and have to make do with what they have.

The Vandal men will forfeit five field events and one running event because of team size, according to men's Head Coach Mike Keller.

"We want to be able to come up with some Big Sky qualifying marks and make progress," Keller said. "With a small school you can't be worried about scoring."

Keller said that he thinks competing against big schools is good for the team and can help down the road.

"You can compete against small Division II and NAIA-type schools and win a lot of races and look good but run slow times," Keller said. "Year in and year out I try to schedule the toughest competition and not worry about team scores."

"The Big Sky Championships are really the only thing for us to shoot for, and if you happen to qualify for the NCAAs along the way, great," he said.

According to Keller, the Vandal men should be strong in all the running events but will be hampered by the absence of runners Eversley Linley and Stephen Lewis, who have injured hamstrings.

Like the men, the Vandal women will miss some key athletes at the meet, but they will cover most field events.

Stacey Asplund, who is not yet ready for the outdoor season, will stay home, vacating the high jump, and Jackie Ross will not compete in the triple jump or the long jump because of a sore knee.

"That will hurt us considerably as far as team points go, but that's really a secondary thing," women's Head Coach Scott Lorek said. "Our emphasis is always to try to get conference qualifiers. I expect to have a lot of people come out of this qualifying for the conference meet."

Lorek said he likes competing against out-of-conference teams because it helps prepare the team for the conference meet.

"If we're real confident against outside people, then we'll be real confident against people in our league," Lorek said.

The women should do best in the 100 and 400-meter high hurdles and the 100-meter relay, according to Lorek.

national scene.

The front-running candidate for the UI job appears to be ex-Vandal assistant Larry Eustachy, who is now an aide at Sweet 16 finisher Ball State University. Eustachy and Davis assisted former UI Head Coach Tim Floyd from 1986-88.

Hunter said he met briefly with Eustachy two weeks ago at the NCAA West Region tournament.

"He expressed that he might be interested, pending some further information from me," Hunter said.

Although Hunter has not formally interviewed anyone for the job, he knows exactly what he wants.

"An exact Kermit Davis copy," he said. "Obviously the challenge is to find someone who has, hopefully, been a head coach at a successful Division I program, who is a good recruiter, is committed to academics and graduation rate, who can relate to students and faculty and boosters."

That would be a dream. But Hunter said he realizes that UI is limited with its $50,000 offer.

"I've had some people interested in this job who are very successful coaches already making 75 to 80 thousand dollars," Hunter said. "But when they hear they have to take a 30 to 35 thousand dollar cut in pay, that somewhat dampens their enthusiasm."

Hunter started with a shocking offer to San Antonio Spurs Head Coach Larry Brown, who already has an NCAA championship under his belt.

"He said had I made the same offer at this time last year, he would have been sorely tempted to take it," Hunter said in a Spokesman Review article.

Brown was referring to the time right before he signed a five-year contract that pays him $3.5 million. Hunter said UI could not offer Brown more than $50,000.

Another question is whether UI's entire coaching staff will split the scene. Both of UI's full-time assistants, Fletcher Cockrell and James Green, said they were planning to accept Davis' offer to join his staff at A & M unless UI lured them with a head coaching job. Steve Barnes, a part-time assistant, is also awaiting UI's selection of a head coach. He too has been offered a similar position at Texas A & M.

UI's biggest concern is the status of its underclassmen players. With mixed emotions on Davis' departure, some are debating transferring to other schools.

"I understand his profession is a business," said junior guard Leonard Perry. "He's got to do what's best for him and his family. This is a good opportunity for him."

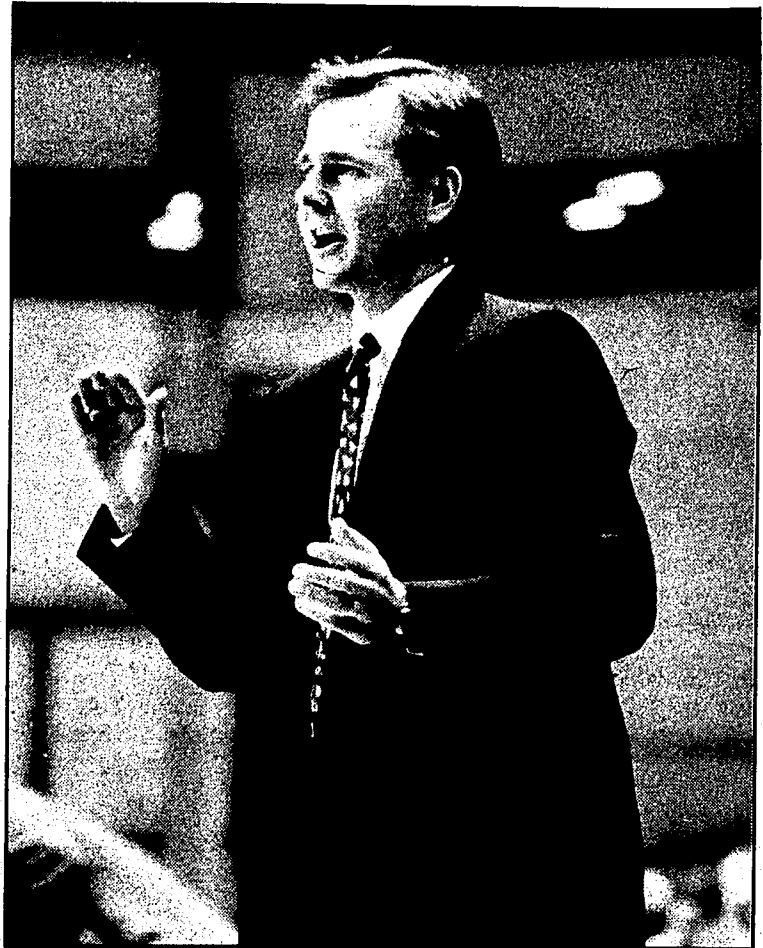

Other players were not so sympathetic.

"I'm happy for him," reserve guard David Henderson said. "(But) I'm glad he's gone. Maybe we'll get somebody who'll run the ball."

Junior guard Ron Shields said earlier that he would leave if Davis left, but he has decided to wait on UI's new coaching selection.

Forwards David Foote and Ricardo Boyd are also considering leaving.

"Right away, the concern would be the players who are left here, that you don't lose them; that you don't have to start from scratch," Green said. "It's got to be a continuation."

Annual Idaho Western Classic returns

If you are looking for something to do this weekend, why not check out the Idaho Western Classic Rodeo at the ASUI-Kibbie Dome.

This year's rodeo will feature intercollegiate competition and appearances by national rodeo stars Clint Corey and Brad Gjermund-son, as well as bullfighter Rob Smetz. The national stars will teach their tricks of the trade to roughstock cowboys starting at 8 a.m. today.

Rodeo events will begin at 7 p.m. today and Saturday, and the finals begin Sunday at 1:30 p.m. A dance featuring Cabin Fever will be held tonight and Saturday at 10 p.m. at the Moscow Moose Lodge.

The Moscow Central Lions Club will serve breakfast at the Dome Saturday beginning at 7 a.m. The Palouse Kiwanis Club's hamburger fry will follow at 11:30 a.m.

Tickets are $5 per person and $4 for students with ID.

Give yourself a lift for less.

The quickest way to go from blah to beautiful is with a perm. And at our salons, you can do it in one afternoon—without an appointment. And without spending a lot of money. So get a perm, including cut and style, starting at just $29.95. Long and bleached hair extra.
