'Skinheads, Murder, & the First Amendment'

By ANDREA VOGT
News Editor

To Eldon Rosenthal, the suit against white supremacist Tom Metzger for wrongful death provided a golden opportunity to vindicate his family who suffered bigotry and injustice under Hitler in World War II.

"That's a big part of me. The reason I decided to become a lawyer was that I thought the difference between America and what happened in Europe was that we had a legal system where those kinds of things couldn't get that far out of control," Rosenthal said.

Rosenthal is the victorious prosecuting attorney in the landmark case against Tom Metzger, Metzger's son, and the racial-separatist organization called the White Aryan Resistance (WAR). He will be speaking in the SUB Borah Theater at noon today.

Rosenthal was co-counsel last fall in the Metzger trial held in Portland. Metzger is the leader of WAR, which organized the brutal killing of an Ethiopian immigrant, Mulugeta Seraw, with a baseball bat. Metzger also was a former Grand Dragon of the California Knights Ku Klux Klan.

Rosenthal worked with Morris Dees of the Southern Poverty Law Center and Seraw's family, filing a wrongful death claim against the leaders of WAR. The jury returned a record $12.5 million judgement.

In his speech, "Skinheads, Murder and the First Amendment" Rosenthal will be speaking on the concept of Vicarious Liability which legally corners racist organizations for their indirect role in acts of violence against others.

Rosenthal will discuss this new approach toward civil rights cases and the issue of whether potential liability over "reckless speech" could have an effect on First Amendment freedoms. Admission is free to the public.

Borah Symposium begins

The first event planned for the 1991 Borah Symposium, "The New Order for a New Century," will take place Monday evening at 7:30 p.m. in the University Auditorium.

It is entitled "Environment as a Global Issue," and will feature speakers L. Hunter Lovins, environmentalist and author, and James Burke, British journalist and television host.

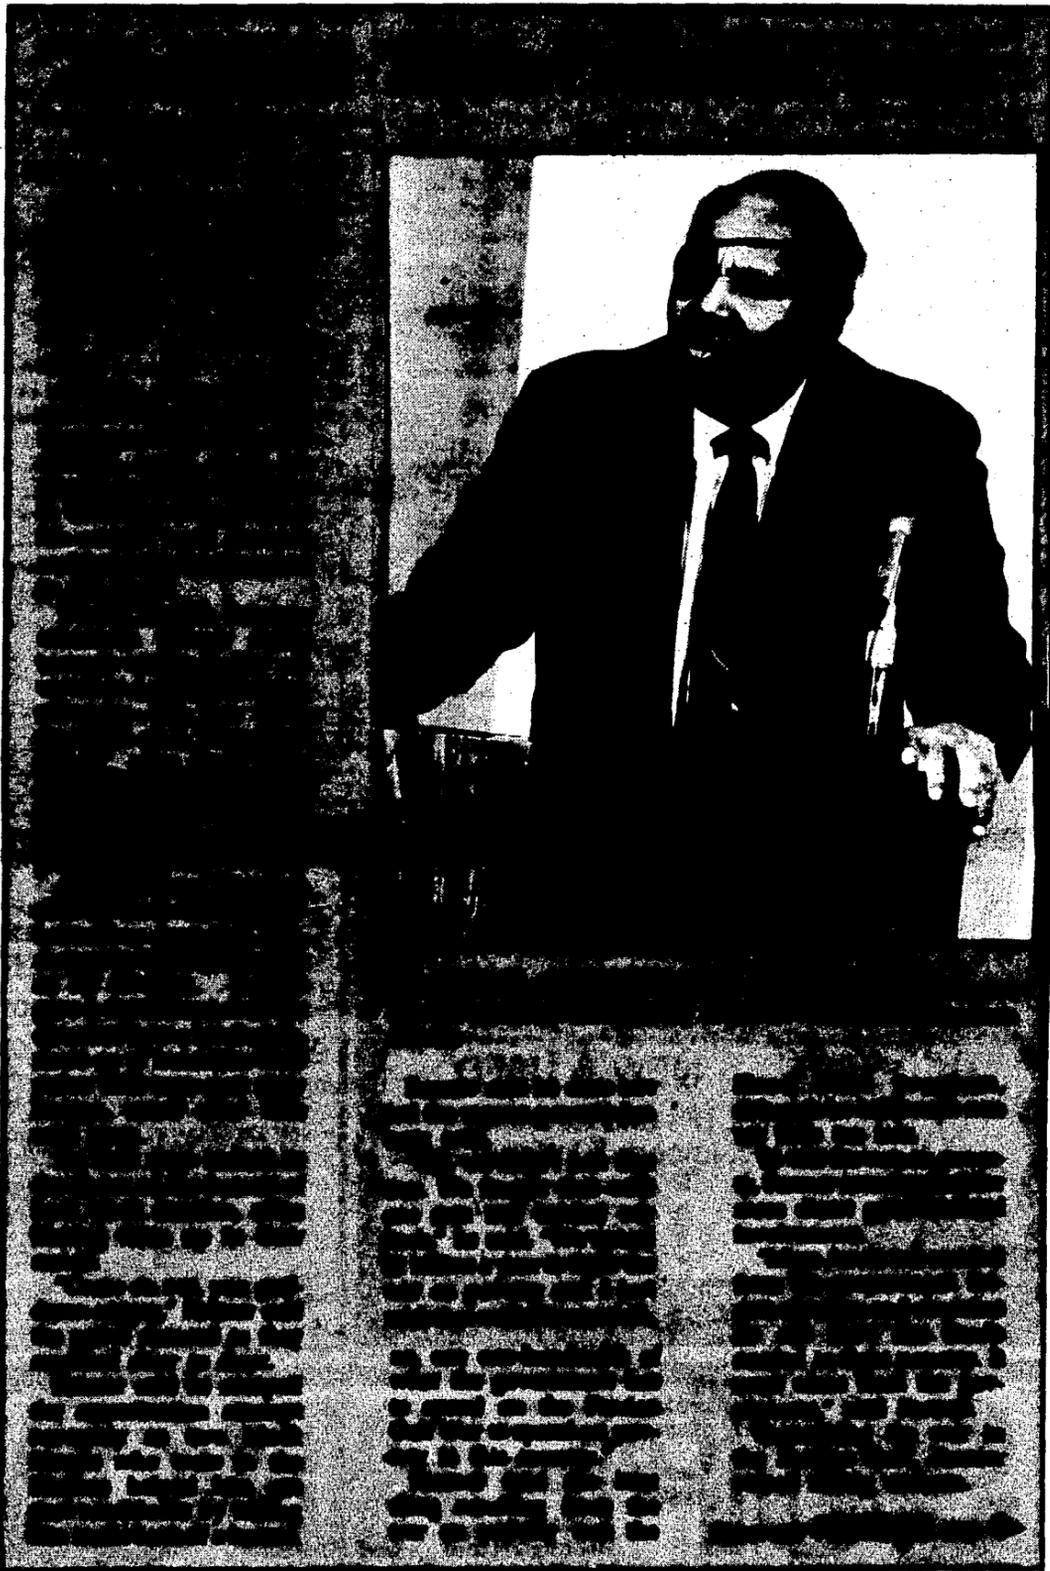

Lovins is president and executive director of the Rocky Mountain Institute. A member of the California Bar, Lovins helped establish and served as assistant director of the California Conservation Project, an innovative urban forestry group. She is co-author of six books and many papers.

Burke is a British journalist who has taught at the Italian universities of Bologna and Urbino and was director of the English School, Rome. He has written and edited many books and is an active lecturer, frequently addressing employees of large world corporations.

There will be a press conference on Monday morning at 9:45 a.m. in the SUB Silver Room, and both speakers will attend three classes each during the day.

This is the first of three symposia, accompanied by three speakers and four 1-credit seminars. The format of the Borah Symposium has been changed so that the events are presented throughout the semester instead of being concentrated in two or three consecutive evenings of intensive lectures and panels.

The State Board of Education sets guideline on fee increases

By MAREEN BARTLETT
News Editor

Despite objections by ASUI President Mike Gotch, the State Board of Education voted to implement a guideline that ties University of Idaho student fee increases to the Consumer Price Index.

These fee increases will be based on the Consumer Price Index, set at 6.1 percent in 1990, plus a 2 percent increase. It will increase UI student fees by $43 per semester next year. This proposal was supported by BSU, ISU, and LCSC. Gotch says this support will fade with time as students realize the full monetary effects.

"I don't think the other presidents saw the implications of it," Gotch said. "I don't know why they supported it."

As well as increasing the fees by a substantial amount, Gotch said the guideline will also eliminate the debate on how much money the universities can ask for.

"Universities don't have to ask for that much, but they will and more. I think it sets a horrible precedent," said Gotch.

Because the University of Idaho is a land-grant institution, state law prohibits charging students tuition. Members of the State Board who supported this measure justified their action by comparing the universities to a business, because they are acting for economic reasons.

The legislators said they wish to raise fees in order to approach the peer group level at other western schools. Currently, Idaho fees are the 49th lowest in the nation, followed only by California and the District of Columbia.

Gotch disputes this justification, stating that public institutions are not in the private realm, and that they are in the business of educating, not in making a profit.

"Idaho education was meant to be affordable," said Gotch.

But State Board of Education

Chairman Gary Fay looks at the guideline from another point of view, one that sees the guideline as protecting the students from the administration and from the state legislature. Fay operates from the position that the guideline is not a fee increase, but that it is actually intended to maintain some control on arbitrary increases.

"We recognize that the universities are not islands in the storm," said Fay, referring to cost of living increases in food, postage, and gasoline. These increases affect the university as well as the student and Fay said that must be considered.

The standard of living increase is measured in the CPI, and the State Board feels that this increase, with a margin of 2 percent for extras, will enable the universities to operate. It would also allow the students and their parents to know what to expect year to year as far as fees are concerned.

"Basically it is more of a protection for students than institutions," said Fay.

The State Board said this guideline will also help to protect students from the state legislature.

"Due to decreases in revenues there have been cutbacks...we do not want students to have to make up the difference," said Fay.

PEACE VIGIL TO BE HELD. The Coalition Against War in the Middle East will be holding a vigil at 1 p.m. today at the Palouse Empire Mall entrance, in the parking lot across from the University Inn.

AMNESTY INTERNATIONAL TO MEET. The UI chapter of Amnesty International, a world-wide human rights organization, will hold a monthly meeting on Tuesday at 7 p.m. in the Chief's Room at the SUB. Cases from China and Nigeria will be discussed.

PHOTO CONTEST HELD The Idaho Forester cover photo contest deadline is Jan. 31. There is a five slide limit and the slides must be natural-resource-related. There are prizes to the top three entries. Submit your entries to Joseph Ulliman, Forestry Bldg., Rm. 204D.

TODAY

ROSENTHAL TO SPEAK ON CIVIL RIGHTS. Civil Rights Attorney Elden Rosenthal will speak at noon in the Borah Theater on "Skinheads, Murder, and the First Amendment," and again at 2:30 p.m. in the UI College of Law Courtroom on "Legal Issues Pertaining to Civil Rights."

MLK, JR. DANCE AT COMMUNITY CENTER. The 1991 Martin Luther King, Jr. Community "World Beat Dance" will be held at the Moscow Community Center tonight from 8 to midnight. Reggae, Salsa, World Beat, Soca, and African, along with many other types of music, will be played. A donation of $2 will be appreciated.

Tuesday last day to register, drop/add

The last day for late registration for the Spring 1991 semester is Tuesday, Jan. 29. Tuesday will also be the last day to add courses or change course sections and to change from pass/fail to regular grade basis. After this deadline there will be late fees for both of these services.

Students registering Jan. 30 through Feb. 12 are required to pay a $50 late registration fee. After Feb. 12, successful petition to the Academic Petitions Committee, and payment of the $50 late registration fee is required. A $5 fee is charged for each petition submitted to the Academic Petitions Committee.

Students who have not finalized their registration by payment of fees should be aware that Jan. 29 is the deadline for payment. After this date, registrations will be cancelled and names removed from all official class lists. Re-registration will require the above petition process.

After the end of the two-week registration period, which ends Jan. 29, students will be assessed a $5 fee for drop/adds. This fee will be paid at the Registrar's Office and is applicable to each transaction (all drop/adds presented at one time). For example, a student adding or dropping a single course will be charged $5; a student presenting several drop/adds at one time will be charged a total of $5.

'Awareness and education a key to peace'

By MAREN BARTLETT
News Editor

Changes in many of the laws concerning the draft, how it will be reinstated and who will be exempt has caused much confusion among University of Idaho students. In order to clear up this confusion and concern, the awareness group Students For Peace is sponsoring an informational meeting on the draft.

The meeting will be held on Monday at 5 p.m. in the SUB Borah Theater. It will feature distinguished speakers Rev. Jim Nielson, Director of the Koinonia House at WSU, and James MacDonald, professor of law at the University of Idaho Law School. MacDonald will speak on the legal elements of the draft, including the current draft registration provision and the issue of conscientious objection to war as an exemption.

A question and answer session will follow the presentations by the featured speakers.

Students For Peace is not an anti-war group as stated in last week's paper, but rather an awareness group working positively for peace. They believe that the biggest preventer of war is awareness and education.

ASUI Senate appoints Platt

By MAREEN BARTLETT
News Editor

The ASUI Senate passed a resolution of financial support for the Mardi Gras Beaux Arts Ball Wednesday evening. Without this resolution, the budget office would not have allowed the ball because of the possibility of debt.

The resolution ensures that if the ball loses money the ASUI will cover the loss, "up to $2,000."

In other senate business, two senators reportedly resigned. Julie McCoy has moved to Washington, D.C. and is presently working as an intern under U.S. Senator Steve Symms. Amador Chavez will not be attending the University of Idaho this semester as his reserve unit has been notified they will soon leave for the Persian Gulf.

A third senator, Katherine Moriarty, has also left her post, as she graduated at the end of the fall 1990 semester.

Seth Platts was appointed to the senate to replace Moriarty.

Nutritionist gives advice on fat-free foods

By MARY A. SCHWANTES M.S., R.D.
Nutritional Counselor
Student Health Center

They are popping up in grocery stores and restaurants everywhere. Cakes, cookies, ice creams, and other traditional "diet busters," only now with a new twist — they are low in fat.

Lower-fat foods have been around for a while, but earlier attempts just did not taste right. When the fat was removed, so was the flavor.

Now, thanks to advances in food technology, we can have our cake and eat it too. Standard ingredients in food can be manipulated to fool the taste buds into thinking you are eating a full-fat food.

In 1990 food technology added fat-free fat substitutes to the consumer menu, revolutionizing the possibilities for healthy desserts, snacks, cheeses, salad dressings and condiments.

What are some of these developments?

Simplese became the first fat substitute to gain Food and Drug Administration (FDA) approval, making its debut in the form of a frozen dessert resembling ice cream call "Simple Pleasures." Simplese is a blend of round micro-particles of egg white and milk protein that feel creamy as they slide over the tongue. Its natural components are considered safe, but anyone allergic to milk or eggs will also be allergic to Simplese. In the future, consumers will see Simplese used in salad dressings, mayonnaise, margarine, yogurt, sour cream, dips, cheese spreads and other foods that do not require heating, which would harden the proteins and make them unpalatable.

Olestra can be heated for use in fried and baked foods. Since it is made up of a huge chain of sugar and fatty acid links that cannot be digested or absorbed by the human, Olestra contains no calories. Pending FDA approval, Olestra can be expected within the next few months.

Olestra will be used to replace up to 35 percent of the fat calories in oils and shortenings and up to 75 percent of the fat in commercially prepared foods. FDA studies have not yet yielded conclusive long-term safety results and some question exists regarding its effect on the absorption of fat-soluble vitamins. To compensate for possible losses, Olestra will be fortified with vitamin E.

Cellulose gel, a common bulking agent, is the main filler in the nonfat ice cream "Seal-test Free." Frozen yogurts also incorporate gels, gelatins, and plant gums.

Oatrim comes from oat bran. This fat substitute is being tested for use in non-heated foods.

Trailblazer, another mixture of egg white and milk protein, may have FDA approval soon.

It sounds too good to be true, now a large order of french fries can have only four grams of fat instead of the usual 16.

But nutrition experts worry that fat substitutes might backfire, giving an opportunity for human nature to justify eating more fat rather than eating less. It happened before.

America's sweet tooth seized upon sugar-free sweeteners and then raised its sugar consumption with a decade increase of seven pounds per person. A survey of American women's diet in 1990 revealed that they are eating fewer eggs and full-fat dairy products, but are eating more fat than ever in rich desserts and salad bars.

Fat substitutes are not a panacea against obesity, cancer or heart disease. Over time, however, they may help reduce the fat calories consumed from dessert and snack foods. But no fat substitute can replace the benefits of a diet rich in whole grains, fresh fruits, and vegetables, naturally low-fat foods.

Dealing with racists' actions embarrassing for some

Our nation seems to finally be coming to its senses on the civil rights issue. This is evident through the many activities that universities such as Idaho hold in celebration of Martin Luther King Jr.'s birthday.

However, I still find myself rather embarrassed to be white during this holiday. It is beyond me how a race can denounce another race just because of color.

This issue really struck "home" with me last year when I was celebrating Easter with my family. To spare everyone the details and make a long story short, my grandfather is an extreme racist and firmly believes in the so called "white master race."

He found me on Easter Sunday watching the Cosby Show in the basement and laid into me.

In so many words or less he asked, "How can you watch that garbage? Don't you know that the niggers are trying to take over the country?"

Take over the country huh? That's a new one to me.

Of course, as anyone who believes that racists are misguided fools, I reacted by defending my beliefs. This led to a rather heated argument during which he discovered that I had black friends (God forbid!).

Well, now that he knew his grandson was a "nigger lover" he couldn't accept me as being part of his family anymore. My reaction to this was to (in words which cannot be printed in this paper) tell him what he could do and where he could go. I then left the house, glancing briefly at my grandmother who was crying. I told her that I loved her, but that I couldn't say the same for the man downstairs.

That day still haunts me.

I used to look up to my grandfather like any normal grandson would. But, this is something I can no longer do. My religion tells me to forgive the man, which I try to convince myself I've done.

I have not spoken to him since that day, and I don't care to ever again. As far as I am concerned, I don't have a grandfather any more. It pains me to feel this way, but it is the only way I know to deal with the knowledge that I am related to a person who still believes that the black man is inferior because of the color of his skin.

To the black race (and any other minority race) I would like to offer my apology for the actions of my race. I know it may not change much, but at least it will help me deal with the embarrassment I feel.

To my grandfather: I've tried to forgive you, but it will take time. You have left me with a scar that I will not soon forget.

— Russ Biaggne

Protestors not missing the point in Gulf War

The three things I choose never to discuss, (but do anyway) are religion, politics and as of late, the war in Iraq.

Saddam Hussein is probably the closest thing to the anti-Christ since Hitler, and George Bush was the head of the CIA, so I am sure he, unlike Saddam, has never committed any atrocities against mankind.

Art Distline

Commentary

I believe sanctions against Iraq could work, and were working. I realize they might not have worked fast enough, and that Saddam may have gained more power and became increasingly difficult to deal with.

However, sanctions would have had more time if the United States would have listened to pleas earlier by everybody and their dog for sanctions against Iraq. As it stands, our young men are going to die and the economy is going to get a boost.

It is too bad that Saddam is bombing civilian areas. I know that in over 8,000 air raids by the Allied forces, not one single civilian area has been hit. I think this statistic falls under the "pulling the wool over our eyes" category. But my opinion on this little show in the gulf to divert attention away from bigger problems at home is neither here nor there.

I wish to take issue with the attacks upon the peace protesters that have been going on recently.

First of all, many seem to believe that the peace protesters are really nussing the point — Saddam is a monster and needs to be stopped. No doubt that some may be, but the majority are protesting the use of force, not the fact that this is a war for oil. Even if these protesters were only protesting the "blood for oil" issue, that is their right and more power to them. The idea that this minority of people should keep quiet and support the majority is too Orwellian to be tolerated.

While sitting at a local watering hole, I could overhear men talking about how we are kicking ass and how those hippie protesters should pipe down. Perhaps when the first 10,000 dead (forever) U.S. fathers, brothers, sisters, husbands and wives come home in black body bags, a lot of these armchair Rambos with nothing at stake will change their tunes. War is not glorious, it is death, and as far as we know, getting killed is not too fun, nor is killing someone else.

I also support the war monger supporters who are out there cheering on our efforts in the gulf. I don't agree that the best way to support our troops is to support the war in the gulf, but I certainly don't think that these people should shut up and see things my way.

The war in the gulf is an unnecessary war. Seventy percent of the blame for its occurrence can be laid on Saddam, and the other 30 percent on Bush for not implementing sanctions against Iraq earlier. Bush is in Iraq to stop the cruel dictator, so when do we start operation Baltic Sea Bombardment?

The peace protesters should hold their ground, as should the war monger supporters. Everybody should scream, yell and be obnoxious about what they want. That privilege is truly worth fighting for.

The peace protesters support our troops, they want them home. The war mongers support our government's actions, and I won't even venture a guess why. My only advice to the peace protesters is not to blame returning soldiers for the actions of our "if it doesn't fit, get a bigger hammer" government officials.

Support our troops, and not our leaders. The leaders lives are not at stake here, but are they ever?

MLK Unity March not about war

Editor;

I would like to address the various individuals (you know who you are) that took it upon themselves to hurl insults etc. at a peaceful group participating in Wednesday night's 2nd annual Candlelight Unity March in commemoration of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Those of you who only had spiteful and hateful utterances to offer — GROW UP! There is more going on around you than the war. This whole past week has been dedicated to commemorating the ideals of a man who deeply believed in and preached the value of every human; that we should grow to love and appreciate the differences among us as well as that which we have in common. That was the purpose of our Unity March this year as well as last year. Had any of you (who could only offer your insults from a distance or behind the safety of your fraternity walls), bothered to take note of the local news, posters and articles, you might have known the nature of our procession. It certainly had nothing to do with whether any of the marchers thought we should be at war or not! Knowing that, maybe some of you might have even joined us. As it is, your rudeness based on ignorant assumption only served to show what immature, closed-minded dolts you are. For those of you in fraternities: incidents like this do nothing to enhance your image, and only perpetuate the stereotype most people have about greeks and the greek system.

Brockway wrong

Editor;

Hello, I'm one of the "angry hoard of people" that walked from Pullman to Moscow on Saturday. My letter is in response to a few of the things Chuck Brockway mentioned in his latest commentary. Mr. Brockway has homogenized, simplified and generalized a group of people, failing to see the genuine nature of what they've been doing. He says that protesters are driven by uncontrollable emotions and support themselves with frail platforms that lack comprehension of the real picture. He further asserts that protesters believe that if they are obnoxious enough, their message will be heeded.

What I found myself surrounded by on Saturday was a group of people from a variety of ages, races, social classes, occupations and both sexes. They carried signs and smiles, held hands, laughed and talked and generated positive, benevolent good will to everyone they passed. These were educated, informed people who believe in better solutions to problems than violence.

Although most of the people who passed the procession waved or honked in support of the peace movement or in support of the war, there were the eloquent few who flipped the bird at the peace contingent, and it certainly wasn't a dove. One passer-by yelled "Peace Sucks" while another rose to the occasion with the graceful refrain, "F---k you, you hippie mother f---s." One guy in a pickup truck feigned running over the group, veering at them while extending the favorite finger. Others brandished signs exclaiming "Blow the f---s up" or "Saddam's a C-kucker." These are the educated majority who have a grip on reality? If so, the point of people who support peace on the Palouse, or anywhere, is made more clear and more important.

The people who made the Pullman-Moscow walk were not aggressive, violent or obnoxious. Peace advocates do what they do because they feel it is their part. Not for ink, you certainly wouldn't have heard from me if it wasn't for Mr. Brockway, and nobody is lining the pockets of people who support peace. These people have goodness in their minds and hearts, and hope, knowing goodness is infectious, that it will spread.

Further, if Mr. Brockway feels the need to bring up the atrocities of Hussein, then he might as well busy himself with atrocities in such places as South Africa, where the will of the majority is certainly not sovereign, or Central America. My point is not to discuss these theaters of injustice, but to remind Mr. Brockway that they are very real and equally as atrocious as any of Hussein's madness, and to ignore them is an exercise in hypocrisy.

I have no bone to pick with Mr. Brockway. I just felt like reminding him to pay keener attention to the people he sees advocating peace. Perhaps, if he did, he'd see the truer nature of these people and the motives that move them.

Lex P. Levy

Peace movement supports troops

Editor;

During the Walk for Peace from Pullman to Moscow Saturday, a number of passers by were shouting from their vehicles. One comment I heard yelled several times was, "How about supporting our troops!" These people who were hurling words at the walkers were guilty of making a false assumption; i.e., those who demonstrate against the war in the Mid-East do not support our troops.

The above statement is a fallacy. It does not logically or necessarily follow that a person who walks for peace does not support American troops in Saudi Arabia.

While I cannot speak for all 250 people who participated in the Walk for Peace, I can speak for my own conscience.

I am in favor of the immediate cessation of war in the Mid-East.

At the same time I support our troops in the Christian way: I want President Bush to stop this unnecessary war immediately and to bring all of our troops home today — whole and alive — not broken in pieces in body bags.

"No minority should have to fight in this war," he said. "Poverty is the reason they're fighting in the first place. They enlisted to learn a skill and earn some money while escaping poverty stricken neighborhoods, and no interests are being served in this war."

While Farmer said he is not calling for any civil disobedience towards fighting the war, he believes that sanctions should have been given more time before going to war.

Farmer also addressed the issue of misconceptions the public has about minorities.

He said people believe blacks are the prominent users of drugs in America, as a result of what is seen on T.V.

"Whites don't purchase their drugs on the street like many blacks do," said Farmer.

He said that another misconception people have about blacks is that they make up the majority of people on welfare, when three-fourths of those on welfare are white.

In 1972 Farmer served as President of the Council on Minority Planning and Strategy and later that year as Associate then Executive Director of the Coalition of American Public Employees (CAPE).

CAPE represented organizations with nearly four million public workers in all 50 states.

Farmer referred to the riots and conflict in the 1960s as he asked the audience how much could have been different if all the youthful energy that was expelled would have been put into solving national problems, such as the environment or cancer.

In closing, Farmer said "fighting the war against racism does not require one to be black, just for one to be human."

'All That Jazz'

By ANDREA VOGT
News Editor

"All that Jazz," a non-credit enrichment course, will explore the roots of jazz music and tradition for a $28 class fee.

The class will begin Wednesday, Jan. 30, and run each Wednesday thereafter until Feb. 27 from 6:30 to 8 p.m. in Music 119. Participants will attend the Lionel Hampton/Chevron Jazz Festival on Feb. 22.

The instructor will be Robert McCurdy, a UI faculty member, jazz historian and performer. Much of the instruction will be done through lectures and tapes. The fee includes the Jazz Festival ticket price.

Class members will be entered in a drawing on Jan. 27 and the winner will be awarded a limited edition, signed and framed 1991 Jazz Festival poster. Contact the UI Enrichment Program for more information.

Art shows opening tonight in Moscow

By SARAH-JAYNE PARSONS
Staff Writer

So what do you have planned for this weekend? Grocery shopping? Laundry? Homework? Feeling like the semester is settling into a rut already? Or, maybe you're "Gulfed out" in front of the television too much, and you feel you need a breath of fresh air from all the bad things that are happening in the world, away from Moscow? Then, this weekend, do something different.

My advice, for what it's worth, is to visit the Prichard Art Gallery and Ridenbaugh Hall.

Today's opening exhibitions at both galleries compliment each other well, not only in terms of diversity and freshness, but also in the fact that both students and faculty worked on the show.

At the Prichard Art Gallery, the College of Art and Architecture Faculty show has over 20 contributors. The exhibits cover a whole range of mediums from sculptures to drawings, prints to ceramics, and photography to mixed medium items. Walking into the Prichard Gallery becomes a bit like opening Pandora's Box, as I'm certain that everyone will find at least one exhibit that suits their taste.

Singling out a few items, the delicate drawings by Lynne Haagenen and the striking prints by Jill Dacey are just two examples of the appealing quality of the overall show. Or, if you prefer something perhaps more out of the ordinary, then the bizarre photographs by Bill Woolston, or the large charcoal works by Jennifer Douglass which are dramatically brutal, may suit your sense of the grotesque!

At Ridenbaugh Hall, the artistic diversity continues. Here, the Graduate Review Exhibition features the new work of both first and second year Fine Art graduate students. The 14 exhibiting students use a variety of mediums and those I spoke to were keen to tell me about their work.

Kellie Risk, an M.F.A. student who recently moved here from Nebraska, explained that her watercolor paintings take on a family theme. Jennifer Rod, working in oils and also charco-

"If you want to see something inventive done with Jalapeno peppers, then check out Fred's work."

als, also seemed to be continuing this theme of domesticity, with distorted still-life paintings of everyday, household items.

A three-dimensional ceramic piece by Fred Diebel is most ingenious, as is his theme, "nests" and how to construct them. (If you want to see something inventive done with Jalapeno peppers, then check out Fred's work.)

The final student I spoke to was photographer Marty Froun, who commented that in his photographs he was trying to "separate the medium from how it is typically used, to how it can be used." I agreed with him, but don't take my word for anything. See for yourself.

Admission is free to both galleries and, to be honest, I think that we are being spoiled by having two such good exhibitions on display at the same time. Take advantage of this.

The College of Art and Architecture Faculty Show at the Prichard Gallery is having its opening reception tonight from 5 to 8 p.m. The exhibition will run until February.

The Graduate Review Exhibition at Ridenbaugh Hall is also having its opening reception tonight from 4 to 7 p.m., and this show will stay on display until Feb. 15.

News coverage is a bit too much

Opinion by TRENT YOUNG
Staff Writer

So you sit down with a snack and some Kool-Aid, hoping to watch some television before drifting into the land of homework, but all you can find is news. You flip the channel — news again.

News, news, news. News on every channel except for MTV, HAI, and the Home Shopping Channel. Desperate for some sort of relaxation, you end up watching re-run episodes of The Occasional Wife, cursing the other channels for not trying to broadcast anything without scud missile attacks or war protests.

Hopefully the war will be over soon, and TV schedules will return to normal. The networks can't possibly continue on like this for much longer, because their sponsors need some advertising time for their money. The interruption of prime-time for news reports seemed important for the first few days, but now the whole thing is completely out of hand. All this broadcasting and re-broadcasting of the crisis in the gulf has backfired on its original purpose — to gather morale for the allied forces in the gulf — and has, instead, created a whole nation of apathetic viewers.

At first, the war spelled coup bucks for the networks. President George Bush's address Jan. 16 was the most watched television spot in history, with almost 80 percent of all televisions tuned to his lovely face. Subsequent days also netted huge ratings results. After a few more days, though, the ratings began to fall. One station after another began to drop war coverage and return to regular schedules, leaving the three television giants and CNN to squabble over who has the best coverage.

Basically, all I want is to see some normalcy return to life. If I sound crass, it's just because I'm sick of seeing images of destruction, and would really go for a good episode of Murphy Brown right now. I don't mean to seem flippant. I realize the seriousness of the war, and I support and feel support and sympathy for the soldiers and their families, but I just wish that the whole thing would just pass by and leave me alone. With all the propaganda and fears and misunderstandings running around, I would much rather stand next to the tennis courts and pretend to be an oak sapling than attend classes and exist as a "draft-able" male.

Maybe that's what this whole sordid article is really about. Maybe I just don't want to go through six weeks of boot camp and years of combat with Arabs just to further the cause of liberty in a land where tribes have warred for more than 2,000 years. Maybe if everyone would just stop ranting and raving for and against the war for just a moment or two and watched ALF and realized that violence and hatred have never solved anything, maybe then we'd have some peace. Maybe then we'd get our television shows back.

ASUI presents Michael Johnson

This free ticket thing is great. I'm speaking of the ASUI's decision last year to sponsor entertaining events, free of charge to UI students. This allows students to take a chance and see someone they may never have heard of, without losing anything.

Saturday, students can take advantage of the ASUI policy by seeing singer/guitarist Michael Johnson who is performing at the UI Auditorium at 8 p.m.. Johnson has been performing for over twenty years and has ten albums under his hat. Billboard magazine described him as "a dazzling guitarist and a wonderfully expressive singer. No two shows are alike."

Michael Johnson's music has the kind of diversity, depth and sophistication that takes a wide-ranging experience to develop. He has been influenced by a variety of musicians from Chuck Berry to classical guitarists. This classical influence is one element of style that distinctively sets Michael Johnson apart from other popular musicians.

"A dazzling guitarist and a wonderfully expressive singer. No two shows are alike."

— Billboard Magazine on Michael Johnson

His songs include the 70's hits "Bluer than Blue", and "Almost Like Being in Love," and he has performed in big cities from New York to Los Angeles.

Johnson first entered the recording world and rose to prominence after winning a CBS records national amateur contest while he was in college. This led to a contract with Epic Records. Later he toured with the Chad Mitchell Trio. He also claims influences from Chuck Berry and Gene Vincent to Charlie Byrd.

His experiences also include performing as a supporting actor in "Jacques Brel is Alive and Well and Living in Paris" in New York as well as recent television appearances and work on film soundtracks.

Advance tickets for the performance are available at the Ticket Express in the SUB. A maximum of two free tickets are available to students who show I.D.. Non-student ticket price is $2.

Inside game lifts Vandals past Boise State

Boise State center Tanoka Beard was the subject of pre-game talk before the Idaho Vandals took on the Broncos Wednesday night. But by the end of the game, Beard didn't want to talk, Idaho's Sammie Freeman and Keith Stewart took center stage, and the Vandals overcame a physical battle with Boise State for a 60-50 win.

Freeman and Stewart continued to pound on Beard throughout the game, eventually wearing down the sophomore from Ogden, Utah. Beard showed frustration after the loss as he refused to speak to reporters.

Beard only attempted seven shots the entire game and was limited to two points in the first half. The sophomore did finish with 15 points, but the abuse he took from Idaho showed as he only had two rebounds, both of which came in the last minute of the game.

"At first we tried fronting him (Beard) and when he found out he couldn't get the ball he got frustrated," Freeman said. "The fronting helped and it definitely worked out for us."

While Freeman and Stewart slowed Beard on the defensive end, they did everything but slow down on the offensive end for the Vandals.

Freeman scored in double figures for the second straight game with 17 points while Stewart added 14 points including 10 straight in the first half during a 10-0 run by Idaho that turned a 17-15 deficit into a 25-17 lead.

Freeman felt pleased with his effort but wasn't ready to be totally satisfied.

"I hope so," Freeman said when asked if he was out of his slump. "I am not going to say anything right now because I don't want to jinx myself."

Bronco guard Lance Vaughn responded with a three-pointer to tighten the score to 25-20, but Freeman answered with a bomb of his own to give Idaho a 28-20 halftime lead.

The Bronco's two top scorers, Beard and Jeff Sanor, were held to two points each by a tenacious Vandal defense in the first half.

"Our defense is the bread and butter of our game," Freeman said. "We have to play good defense to give ourselves a chance (to win)."

Vandal coach Larry Eustachy agreed with his senior forward.

"We didn't want to foul, but we wanted to come out and set the tone," Eustachy said. "We thought Boise State would back down but they didn't."

Idaho never relinquished their lead in the second half, but the Broncos came close as they made numerous runs at the Vandals. Boise State cut Idaho's

Promotions look to boost attendance

By TOM BITHELL
Staff Writer

If you happen to attend the women's home basketball games this weekend you might notice that there are some extra events going on at half-time. Things like a drawing for $583, a half-court shootout for a $75 gift-certificate, or a three-point shooting contest for $100.

However, chances are you won't notice because, like most students, you won't be there.

These prizes are being offered because of the low attendance at women's basketball games. Currently Idaho women's games average 281 fans per home game, sixth in the Big Sky behind both Idaho State University and Boise State University.

"We're trying to build a good base," Eric Preston, director of marketing for UI athletics, said. "We're giving them an incentive to go."

Preston has launched the promotions along with the sponsorship of local businesses to boost support for women's sports.

Taco-Time sponsors the in-state fee drawing.

"We put every full-time student's name in the drawing and if they are there, they can win $583," Preston said.

So far no one has been present to win.

The Bon Marche offers a $75 gift certificate to whoever can hit a half-court shot within two attempts. Contestants are picked from the crowd.

The athletic department sponsors a three-point shootout. Here the half-court line is lined with Vandal helmets. Two chosen contestants shoot three-pointers with a time limit. For each shot made the contestant turns over a helmet. Underneath one is the ticket for $100.

There are other promotions too. Some are aimed at non-student supporters, and some are offered on specific dates, like Feb. 15, when Idaho faces the University of Montana. At that game University Dining Services will give away a slice of pizza to as many fans as 50 pizzas will feed. If attendance is average everyone will get a slice, maybe two.

"We try to make it more than just the game itself," Preston said.

"Anytime you get a free item your bound to go away feeling better."

The women play at home this Friday and Saturday night against Weber State University and Eastern Washington University.

lead to under five points four times after intermission, but the Broncos couldn't get closer than the 44-41 deficit they faced with 6 minutes remaining in the game.

Free throw shooting had been a nemesis for Idaho in their two previous road losses, but returning home to the Dome would improve the fortune. Idaho made 7 of 9 free throws in the last 4:30 of the game including 4 of 5 from Leonard Perry.

Perry was the difference during crunch time as he scored six of Idaho's last 11 points including a three-point play in the final play of the game. The senior guard also added four assists to go with his eight points and only committed one turnover in 32 minutes of playing time.

Idaho controlled the ball admirably against the toughest defensive pressure they have faced all year, while only committing 10 turnovers.

Idaho out rebounded the Broncos 30-28 after being out rebounded in the first half by a 16-11 margin.

SMITH STAYS

Something happened to Idaho head football coach John L. Smith that has only happened once in the history of the University of Idaho — he got a multi-year contract. The only other coach to have the same thing happen was former Vandal basketball coach Tim Floyd. Floyd was given his contract under former President Richard Gibb. This is the first multi-year contract that current president Elizabeth Zinsler has approved. The state board of education gave the okay on the contract Tuesday morning.

"We are very happy that this deal came about," Idaho athletic director Gary Hunter said. "John is a great recruiter, a great coach and he really cares about discipline."

Under the new contract Smith will receive just over 58,000 a year until the summer of 1993.

There is a safety clause in the contract for the UI. If Smith leaves Idaho in 1991 he has to pay back $15,000, in 1992 $10,000, and if the Vandal coach leaves in 1993 he will have to pay the University $5,000.

INTRAMURALS

The deadline for Co-Rec Volleyball is Jan. 29. Play starts Feb. 5. Raquetball singles will be played Feb. 1 in the Kibbie Dome. The men begin at 4:00 p.m. while the women start at 4:30 p.m. The 3-point shootout is set for Jan. 26 in Memorial Gym.

treatment." The article is very badly written and basically revolves around one individual's past experience in Moscow, ID. I am a Muslim American living in the Moscow-Pullman area for the last ten years and I am very pleased to report that I haven't had any problems with racial bias or discrimination in our community. On the contrary, I have found the people of the Palouse to be kind, supportive and friendly.

A few words of advice for Ms. Sheikh:

1) Grow up, show maturity and get out of your high school mentality.

2) Furthermore, please try to learn from the wisdom of Dr. King: "Love not hate is the only force capable of transforming any enemy into a friend." Show people by your actions rather than by your hated words. "Let us rise up tonight with a greater readiness. Let us stand with a greater determination, and let us move on in these powerful days, these days of challenge, to make America a better nation."

Ms. Sheikh and other leaders of tomorrow should learn and take credence from the aforementioned words of Dr. King and should strive to create a cohesive Moscow community and a strong and cohesive America, rather than a polarized and segregated America.
