UI student leaders meet at CDA's 'inspiration point'

By STONE AND BARCLAY
Staff Editors

Some of the universities finest leaders gathered last weekend for a retreat on leadership skills at Camp N-SID-SEN, located outside of Coeur d' Alene.

Administrators, faculty members, students and guest speakers all gathered to discuss leadership qualities and to teach one another some of the skills they possessed and how to improve them.

The retreat started Friday morning with a breakfast at the Student Union with speaker Senator Larry Craig. Craig is a former ASUI president and is currently serving his first term as a US senator.

Other key note speakers for the retreat included UI President Elisabeth Zinser; C. Shaw Smith, a 40 year veteran of Student Affairs at Davidson College, Davidson, North Carolina; Jane L. Freund, executive director of the Idaho State Democratic Party; Mary Ruth Mann, proprietor of Mann Law Offices in Seattle and Dirk Kempthorne mayor of Boise. Freund, Mann and Kempthorne are all former ASUI Presidents.

"Student leaders who were there had a chance to have a prolonged contact with the (guest) leaders present," Hal Godwin, vice president of student affairs said. "It gave them a chance to sit around and talk with the directors present also."

There were a wide variety of administrators, faculty members and students there

Money raised for cancer research

By JEFF KAPOSTASY
News Editor

People teeter-tottering on the front lawn of a sorority at 4:30 a.m. is not something one normally views on campus, but patients being treated at St. Jude's children cancer research center are mighty thankful they were.

Members of the Delta Delta Delta sorority and the Sigma Chi fraternity each gave up an hour of their time to teeter totter a marathon 48 hours non-stop from Friday evening to Sunday evening. The teeter-totter was built by Sigma Chi on the front lawn of the Tri-Delts.

The reason for rocking up and down for this long period of time was to raise money for the Tri-Delts national philanthropy, a cancer research foundation for children. Money was raised by passer-by donations. This is the first year for this "Teeter-a-thon," but Caryl Kester says she has no intention of making this brainchild

Students study abroad through exchange program

By LANE GRACIANO
Staff Writer

A new offspring has joined the ever-expanding family of student exchange projects at the International Programs Office (IPO).

In operation since 1983, the project is the brainchild of the University Studies Abroad Consortium (USAC). Whose global membership consists of the universities of Iowa, Nevada (in Las Vegas and in Reno), Basque Country, Bayonne, Pau and Turin—as well as Boise State University and, farther south, Chile University. Starting this school year, UI students have a chance to apply for admission to the United State's USAC schools to become eligible for USAC overseas studies.

USAC offers fall, spring and summer studies in Spain and France and semester programs in Italy and Chile. An island program, USAC's numerous possibilities set it apart from the currently running International Student Exchange Program (ISEP) in many ways.

For example, as IPO's Study Abroad Advisor Bob Neunenschwander explained, the faculty switch allows USAC professors from the home and the host institutions to trade teaching places. Another offering, directed study in a major field, is available to upper-division and graduate students on the approval of the consortium. With the varied lodge-and-board options comes the opportunity of a mutual exchange, where students swap families and homes for the duration of their stay in their chosen study sites.

According to Neunenschwander, UI's foreign exchange programs have proven extremely successful in recent years. Besides the ISEP and the new USAC program there are the Cooperative Center for Study in Britain (CCSB) program and a myriad direct exchange programs. Twenty-five students from various corners of the world—including the United Kingdom, Fiji, Korea and European and Latin American countries—have enrolled in the university this school year through ISEP. While on this side of the swap 18 UI students are matriculating into colleges in Ecuador, Sweden and France and into BSU as well.

For the most part, some students who studied abroad last year evaluated IPO's foreign exchange programs positively. After nine months of French studies in Pau, graduate student Jenny Altman said it was the best experience she ever had.

Lisa Hamilton, who traveled all over England during the five weeks, she was studying at King's College in London, said, "It's a good way to see the country and get credits at the same time."

As with any fledgling program, there will be details to iron out concerning transfer of credits from one education system to another.

"There were flaws, considering it was the first year it was being done," commented junior Melanie Savage on her direct-exchange study trip to Ecuador. "But the faculty was helpful—they would bend over backwards for anybody who had problems."

The problem of culture shock might also arise with the transfer that will tend to prove both fascinating and intimidating for a first-time traveler.

"Little things will be new to you everyday," said English major Marne Arnzen, who spent an entire year in Scotland. "It affected my life in many ways," she remarked. "I

Fraternities build new image

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

As many people already know, last year was a very rough year for the greek system here at the University of Idaho. Two fraternities, Kappa Sigma and Sigma Alpha Epsilon, were placed on probation for hazing. The new year, however, has brought many positive changes.

Sigma Alpha Epsilon is already off probation and Kappa Sigma is soon expected to follow. The positive aspects don't stop there though as both fraternities have taken many steps to ensure that hazing won't occur again.

Mike Lincoln, president of the SAE's, spoke positively of the many steps his house is taking to prevent a hazing incident from happening again. He said an educational and leadership advisor is helping his house move ahead by offering advice about such things as alcohol policies. In addition the house has been taking seminars on hazing as well as getting a guest speaker to come talk to them about hazing.

Lincoln said perhaps the most important thing to come out of the hazing incident was a total reorganization of the pledge system. "We have totally changed our program...we don't need to haze to have good pledges," said Lincoln. He expressed his confidence that his fraternity has moved forward with help from their national chapter and the UI's Intrafraternal Council.

Steve Nate, the vice president of the Kappa Sigma house, indicated that his house is doing many of the same things the SAE's are in terms of preventing another hazing incident from happening.

Nate said a graduate counselor, Dan Streeby, has been a tremendous help in terms of contributing input at house meetings. Nate indicated that Streeby is a former member of the Delta Tau Delta house, and his advice has been pertinent to the Kappa Sig's as well as helpful.

In addition to advice offered from a graduate counselor, Nate said his house has been taking educational seminars on the dangers of hazing. His house has also brought in a UI counselor to speak about various ethical decisions that a fraternity might have to make.

Both Nate and Lincoln expressed a positive future outlook for their respective houses. Nate summed up this new attitude by saying, "We would like to put this incident behind us."

Student banking options explored

By STEVE CORDA
Asst. News Editor

Go ahead and try to cash an out of state or even out of town check in Moscow. I'll time you... with a sundial.

One of the realities of leaving home for college is having to open a local checking account. Moscow banks, however, offer special checking services for University of Idaho students. Here is a list of the five local banks and the student checking services they have to offer.

■ FIRST INTERSTATE BANK offers student accounts, with no service charge, no minimum balance, and use of an automatic teller machine (ATM). First Interstate also gives students their first 200 checks free and returns all cancelled checks.

■ FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF NORTH IDAHO calls their student checking accounts the "Thrifty" checking account. The Thrifty account also has no minimum balance. There is a $12.00 a month service charge, though. The holder of a Thrifty account can write only ten checks in a month without a service charge. For every check after the tenth check there is a forty cent service charge.

■ FIRST SECURITY BANK charges students no service charge, requires no minimum balance, and gives the account's first fifty checks free. They also offer use of an ATM. A student must have an opening balance of $25.00. After the month's tenth check they charge a fee of fifty cents per check.

■ WEST ONE BANK requires no service charge, no monthly per check charge, and no minimum balance. Each account is given an ATM card and the first 200 checks free.

■ KEY BANK OF IDAHO student checking accounts charge a $36.00 annual fee up front and requires no minimum balance. There is unlimited checking and no per check fee. An ATM card and the first fifty checks are given to the holder of each account. The regular Key Bank's "Key Choice" checking account seems to be more popular with students than the student account. The only difference between the two is a $100 minimum balance required by the Key Choice account.

as well. From Dan Davenport, director of financial aid, to Theresa Rhodes, president of Mortar Board, an honorary club for seniors.

Bruce Pittman, dean of students said that he was impressed by the hard work and cooperation of the student leaders at the retreat.

"It was one of the most extraordinary student and staff retreats which I have had an opportunity to be a part of," Pittman said. "Many barriers of communication were broken down and new bridges of relationships were created."

Camp N-SID-SEN is a church camp that has been around since the 1930s. N-SID-SEN is an Indian term that means "Point of Inspiration." The location was an ideal place for the leaders to gather and hopefully become more inspired about their offices and positions.

"I thought it was really productive," John Finney, president of Alpha Kappa Lambda fraternity said.

"It was very inspirational and I think all of us are excited about our accomplishments of the past year and the plans and goals we set for the future," Jody Fay, president of Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority said. "It was an excellent opportunity and I am really glad I went. The other leaders on campus who couldn't attend really missed out."

Cars biggest threat to Palouse environment

By SHARI IRETON
Staff Writer

When students are asked who the biggest polluter on the Palouse is, we tend to point our fingers at Potlatch, local agriculture, or the Physical Plant. What most of us don't realize, is students with cars can be the most destructive to the environment.

"The car has completely changed not only society, but the environment," said Tom Lamar of the Palouse Clearwater Environmental Institute. To use cars, we must destroy the natural habitat of many animals to build highways (like the Moscow-Pullman Highway) and parking lots. Not to forget the land destroyed by drilling for oil and minerals or the endless piles of used tires which are rarely recycled.

Lamar stated approximately 80 percent of the cars traveling between Moscow and Pullman are single occupancy vehicles (SOV's). "If we could double the people in those cars (like carpooling) there would be half as many cars going back and forth," said Lamar.

Everyone in the Palouse is responsible for the environment, and this is what University of Idaho officials have finally realized. Last June, the idea of a bus system running between Moscow and Pullman was brought before the UI Board of Regents.

Carol Group of UI Financial Affairs is hoping the new bus system will begin running in the fall of 1992. The bus system, or University of Idaho/Washington State University Intercampus Shuttle, as it will possibly be called, is working on the release of the request for proposal this week.

Students are encouraged to contact the ASUI senators to speed up the process for the proposal and to ensure the bus system will come about.

As good as the new bus system sounds, it still has many obstacles to overcome. Because of a bill put into effect July 26, 1991, the bus system must be equipped for all handicapped citizens. This would include picking up handicap persons door-to-door with no access to bus stations and having equipment for boarding wheelchairs and such on the bus.

Eventually, Lamar (and much of the community) hopes the buses will run not only between campuses, but to neighborhoods, shops and restaurants. Pullman is more popular for their restaurants, while Moscow has the Empire Mall and busing between these towns would tie the communities together.

Now, for the big question: will UI students utilize this new form of transportation? On Friday, I randomly called over fifteen UI students and asked them the same question. The answer for all was an overwhelming "Yes!"

If this bus system would be well used and more environmentally secure, then why is the Washington Department of Transportation currently planning a four lane expansion for the Moscow-Pullman Highway? This construction would have a great environmental effect on the local farms and Paradise Creek. The estimated cost of this project is $10 million, and for half of that amount, the state could put in a top-of-the-line bus system and bike path. The cost of running the buses five days a week would be approximately $66,300 per university.

It seems the problem now is which is more important: moving cars or moving people? The government is trying to take care of the immediate problem by expanding transportation for cars. However, the overall problem is trying to move people with less damage to the surrounding environment.

Lamar also discussed the fact that Moscow could have the same public transit bus system that Pullman currently runs. Because ASWSU pushed the university, the public bus system offers free transportation for students to and from the campus. Even students in apartments can flash their I.D. cards and ride to campus for no cost. As Lamar said, "There is no reason to drive to campus in Pullman unless you're carrying an elephant." If Moscow had its own bus system, gone would be the days of the dreadful 5:00 p.m. rush hour.

Even before the bus system evolves, students with cars should seriously think about changing their mode of transportation. Walking is a great form of exercise and, with the

Students need to think before they drink and drive

As I glanced out the window from the eighth floor of Cleveland Metro-General hospital, I observed grungy smokestacks belching pollution into the atmosphere. The sky was soggy, grey, and depressing, and the neighborhood below gave an explanation as to why few tourists visit my hometown.

After taking in this collage of lousy images I turned back to the reason I'd visited this place, and found the glum outside world did a painfully good job of matching the situation inside the hospital room.

I was visiting a friend from high school named Rick. Several months ago, Rick and some friends were driving home late at night, back to his Alma Mater, Ohio University. Suddenly, an on-coming car piloted by an intoxicated driver swerved into the wrong lane and struck Rick's car. Fortunately, everyone in the car was all right, Except Rick. Rick remembers waking up in the folded mass of sheetmetal to dead silence. His arms were dangling in front of him, his shoulder was cracked and he had no feeling in his legs.

This situation was bad enough as it was, but the scary part is that little has changed from that night to this day as I stood at his bedside. Chances are Rick will never walk again.

If you think this is another sob story about a poor kid getting hit by a drunk driver, you're 100 percent correct. And by watching the actions on this campus, it looks to me like most people are still not getting the message.

Let me ask you this: How many of you reading can honestly say you've never drunk and then driven a car? By observation and personal inquisitions, my educated guess would be very few. Oh sure, many students say, 'I'm fine to drive,' or give some other lame excuse about how their driving improves once they've had a few beers.

I wonder if the man who hit Rick was thinking the same things as he started his car that night?

There's this really philosophical saying in a Skid Row song that goes, "...you can't think of dying when the bottle's your best friend..." and every time I hear that line I think of the dummies I see here at UI. They go out, load up on alcohol, and because walking a block or whatever just seems overwhelming, they hop in their cars and swerve off.

One time, I told a friend of mine he wasn't fit to drive, and he promised me he wouldn't get in a wreck. The problem with this is he's made two decisions: One, he's chosen to risk his own life and two, he's choosing to put someone else in Rick's shoes, a decision which no one has the right to make. What my friend failed to realize is that it was the latter part I was most concerned about.

People just blow off the fact that mixing a few innocent, refreshing, happy beers with a set of car keys can change lives forever. In the name of a good time, people don't stop to consider the consequences. Heaven forbid that something so troublesome as asking for a safe ride home be allowed to interfere with social activities.

If that's not bad enough, I hear people joke about how smashed they were, and how they were swerving all over, avoiding cops and throwing beer cans out the window. Well, I hope you people are happy, because I believe you're just as responsible for putting Rick in that wheelchair as the driver who did.

Speaking of the driver, he got the normal light punishment a drunk driver/murderer usually gets.

But for Rick, it's 18 and life.

Resident hall story not offensive

Editor;

I am writing in response to the letters the editor published against the article "Dormitory Students Settling In." A number of people have voiced their opinion against this article, saying it has insulted them and further damaged an already precarious situation with the living groups. These same people are demanding an apology from Ms. Ireton and the Argonaut. I do not believe that either party needs to give an apology.

Ms. Ireton wrote the article in good faith and she wrote nothing she did not believe would not be taken in the light that it was written: that of humor. Everyone has been a freshman and had to go through the first few days of knowing no one and "cowering in a corner." It comes with the territory. The term "geek" was not a slam, but was poking fun at ourselves as residence hall students. If one cannot laugh at one's self, then who can one laugh at?

As to the "situation" in the living groups, where is it? I do not see one. Most people on this campus are bigger than basing their friendships by places on a map. There is rivalry, but it is friendly for the most part, and doesn't interfere with peoples lives.

Why don't we hear more about the residence halls? That information could be passed on dur-

Medical science going too far

On Thursday night I was trying to fight through two chapters of reading in my genetics class when I came upon a startling contradiction the book presented.

On one hand, the book kept pointing to man as a detrimental and possibly fatal force to the worldwide environment due to his unregulated population growth the last few centuries.

The paradox occurred when the book mentioned the current work being done on the mapping of the human genome. This mapping of all human genes would enable man to better understand and possibly treat many genetic diseases which are not completely understood right now. OK Taylor, the reader asks, where is the contradiction in all this?

The contradiction occurs when the big picture is considered in regards to man tinkering with the human body until all ailments and diseases are effectively wiped out. By deciding who will live and die, man is going to have a direct part in determining the future population of this planet. With scientific research progressing like it has, it is becoming entirely possible that man will be able to prevent most deaths from happening.

The last statement may seem incomprehensible to most people, but a person simply needs to look at what man has accomplished in the field of medical and scientific research to see what I'm talking about. With artificial limbs and organs and life support machines, man has been able to sustain life where it wasn't possible before. This technology-gone-mad approach has enabled people to live much longer than they used to. In addition, there is a much better possibility of bouncing back from an accident or a disease formerly deemed terminal.

This brings up the troubling issue of living space for all the people that are going to be living on this planet during the next few centuries. With the rapid surge in world population that has occurred over the last few centuries, the obvious victim of all this growth is going to be the environment.

The solution to this is probably the hardest thing man must deal with in future generations. The government in China had to deal

Eastern Oregon not that bad

Editor;

I enjoyed reading the commentary by Pete Gomben about his impressions of Eastern Oregon. Especially since I recently spent a year in Condon (population 700, about 120 miles from John Day). My job involved working with farmers, ranchers, loggers and agencies to develop a watershed management plan. I even ventured to John Day a few times.

Mr. Gomben seems to have difficulty with the social life in John Day, as well as with federal timber management policies. I'd like to share my own opinion about these issues.

Small town America is a part of our culture that brings out the best and worst in people. As increasingly developed as our country becomes, it is the rural areas that have shaped what we are today. So what do small towns offer? How could working in a rural area be a rewarding experience? What I found in Eastern Oregon was a place to be a big fish in a little pond, a place to get back to basics, and a place to make a difference in the world. I found people that are not so hung up on things and seemed a little more accepting and interested in building friendships.

If Mr. Gomben places such value on what he did not find this summer, I might remind him he did not have to go to John Day. His government job surely might have been better allocated to someone that could be a little more appreciative and have the desire to make a difference. Certainly there are students with a background in entomology (apparently Mr. Gomben's field of study) that could see working in John Day as a golden opportunity. The spruce budworm, pine beetle and a host of other insects infesting the forests of eastern Oregon, have perhaps been a greater detriment than some of the clearcuts he mentions. Sharing a vision of what our forests can become, rather than highlighting the damage done, might have greater influence toward improved timber management.

In conclusion, I would encourage any road-tripping college students to check out eastern Oregon; the small towns out there are the jewels of society. So what if they still ride their horses down main street, maybe this is an example where "tradition meets the future?"

you can effectively express your own opinion without offending some individual or group of individuals.

I am sure I will receive criticism for my opinion expressed in this letter by the readers, but I will respect their opinion in turn as would like them to respect mine. Unlike yourself I believe everyone has the right to express their opinion as freedom of the press and speech are part of this country's heritage and in the heat of people with opinions of their own, such as the "muscle-flab-bag" person who opens his or her mouth to express an opinion about a public display of one thing or another, not to mention when he or she begins to receive 'thoughts' from their 'brainstem' again. With that in mind, please remember he is only one person you decided to badger and attack without you having the guts to face him and stick up for what you believed in. The only reason I am writing you through freedom of the press, is because I have no other way of reaching you to communicate this disagreement. Oh, by the way, if you can't stand the heat of America's freedom and the way we, as Americans, do business, then get the hell out of the fire and quit bitchin'! Amen!

Vandals dump Sonoma State 49-7

By CHRISTOPHER GATEWOOD
Sports Editor

It took nearly the entire first half, but the University of Idaho Vandals got it going in time to record 573 yards in total offense as they routed the Division II Sonoma State Cossacks 49-7, in front of 10,000 fans at the Kibbie Dome.

The Vandals won their first opening game since 1988 and will face Southwest Texas State this Saturday at home.

In the opening quarter it looked as if the Cossacks would give the Vandals all they wanted. Idaho's first score didn't come until 6:58 of the quarter when Devon Pearce ran a draw 23 yards into the end zone to give the Vandals a 7-0 lead. Pearce finished the day with 62 yards on 16 carries.

"If it wasn't for a few bad breaks on their part, the game could have been a lot closer," Vandal Head Coach John L. Smith said. "When the game first started they were a pretty good football team."

Actually, Sonoma could have been in the hunt if it hadn't been for the whopping 75 yards on eight penalties they had in the first quarter. In all, the Cossacks finished the day with 17 penalties for 177 yards. 60 of those penalty yards were for personal fouls.

"We were thoroughly outplayed both offensively and defensively," Sonoma State Head Coach Tim Walsh said. "But the thing that upsets me the most was the penalties. This team is going to find out on Monday that we don't do things like that here."

Idaho wasn't perfect either as they had 11 penalties for 102 yards.

"We shot ourselves in the foot

so many times, I'm surprised we still have toes left," Smith said.

Even though mistakes were coming fast and furious, Sonoma was still in the game. With 4:16 remaining in the second quarter, and trailing 14-0, the Cossacks had a third and goal from the Vandal four yard line with a chance to cut the lead to 14-7. Instead Freshman safety Sherridan May, starting in his first college game, intercepted quarterback John Spear's screen

Save the salmon before extinction

Idaho has always offered what states like California have mostly lost — wilderness, mountains, great hunting and fishing, and little development.

These opportunities are slowly dying out, like Idaho's salmon runs.

Once-upon-a-time Idaho's rivers were loaded with fish, game fish — trout, salmon, steelhead, and sturgeon — not chubs, squawfish, suckers, and carp.

Redfish Lake located outside of Stanley, Idaho and near the head waters of the Salmon River, got its name because the spawning, red Sockeye salmon were once numerous there.

Were, is the key word. Now the Sockeye won't be going back to Redfish Lake anymore. Their runs are all but extinct.

It used to be Chinook, Coho, Sockeye, Humpback, and Chum salmon travelled up the Columbia River to the Snake River. From there they went into the Clearwater, and Salmon Rivers, where they dispersed into countless streams.

Once there, the fish spawned. In the spring, with the mountain snow run-off flooding the streams, the baby salmon, called smolts, were washed down the rivers to the ocean in about a weeks time.

A couple of years later, the fish would return, swimming up the rivers and streams, to the place where they came to life. Nature's cycle was complete, and a new generation carried on.

For centuries this went on. Indian tribes along the Columbia basin survived on the salmon runs, storing enough food during the three month run to last the year. Yet, the tribes had respect for the salmon, and took only what they would use.

Then the white man came, and with him civilization, technology, progress — and dams.

In 1938, Bonneville Dam was built on the lower Columbia, above Portland, Ore.. The problem had began.

In the next 40 years seven more dams were built for hydroelectric purposes.

Enter the present.

Now, Idaho and the Columbia's runs are grossly endangered. The Coho runs are extinct on the Snake, and the other four are in danger.

Estimates from the Oregon Department of Fish and Wildlife state that 90 percent or more of the smolts that come into contact with the dams are killed on their journey to the ocean. Of those that attempt to return, 5-14 percent of those that come into contact with each dam are killed.

And, although the dams themselves are the major killers, some of their side-effects hurt the runs too.

Defense gets three interceptions in win.

By TOM BITHELL

Defense wins games.

While the University of Idaho offense didn't need to rely on the old axiom in Saturday's season opener against Sonoma State University, the Vandal defense made sure it held true anyway.

The visiting Cossacks, a Division II team, could never get a running game established against the Vandals. When the defensive line wasn't stopping Sonoma's backs at the line, the linebackers were. Sonoma accumulated only 39 yards on the ground all day, while Idaho ran for 134.

Forced into passing situations over and over, the Cossacks went to the air against Idaho's inexperienced secondary.

Though, the Vandals gave up 260 yards in passing, they also intercepted three passes. Two of those passes could have been Sonoma State scores.

With 5:47 left in the first quarter, and trailing 7-0, Sonoma State had the ball on the Idaho 20, 2nd-and-10. SSU quarterback John Spear dropped back and, under pressure, threw an interception to free safety Jeff Jordan at the three yard line.

Then, with 6:48 remaining in the half, SSU trailed, 14-0. Spear lead a Cossack drive from his own 29 to Idaho's 1. First-and-goal. It looked like Sonoma would score.

But not so soon.

Billy Simms broke through to drop SSU tailback Ed Bailey for a three-yard loss. An incomplete pass later and it was third-and-ten. SSU's Spear took the snap, rolled right under pressure and threw...right into the hands of Idaho freshman Sherridan May, who took it back 98 yards for a touchdown.

Another saved score, and Idaho lead 21-0 at the half.

Idaho Head Coach John L. Smith, not pleased with the teams overall play, was happy with the secondary.

"The defensive backfield played better than I expected," Smith said. "I think they performed well."

SSU never got any chances for a close game in the second-half, when the Vandal defense harassed them throughout. When the Cossacks finally did score with 4:06 to play, it was against Idaho's bench, and the game was long over at, 49-7.

This Saturday the defense will get another shot at proving its abilities. But unlike Sonoma State, Southwest Texas State University will be no patsy.

SWSU plays Division I-AA football in the Southland Conference. Like a lot of southern teams, the Bobcats run a serious option attack called the "flex-bone." Defending the option won't be easy for the Vandals, who gave up 388 yards rushing last year against SWSU in a, 38-35, win.

"You can practice it (defending the option) all you want during the week, but until you see it in person, it's so fast and quick, it's hard to believe," Smith said. "The thing about the option, and your players have a hard time believing it, is you have to execute. (Last year) we were just blowing assignments, playing instinct football rather than assignment football. You have to play your assignments."

Further creating problems for the Idaho' defense, and the still young secondary, will be defending SWSU's pass attack. Idaho Defensive Coordinator Craig Bray said it is harder to defend an option teams pass attack, than a passing teams air attack.

But both Smith and Bray agree that after playing three option teams last year, Idaho should be better prepared for it.

"I hope so," said Smith. "I hope we have learned something as far as coaches and players."

Idaho volleyball team suffers two tough losses

By MATT LAWSON
Editor

A grueling pre-conference schedule finally caught up with the Idaho volleyball team last weekend at the University of Oregon Tournament in Eugene, Ore.

Idaho dropped its opening round match to the University of Oregon Friday night in three games (5-15, 14-16, 8-15).

The loss came in the Vandals' fifth match in eight days as the young Idaho team had difficulty adapting to another road trip. Senior setter Christie Roes had a consistent outing for Idaho, recording 28 assists to go with a season-high 13 digs.

"Oregon is a good team, but I think we could have beat them," Roes said of the loss. "We had errors that need to be eliminated to win."

Dee Porter and Jessica Puckett anchored the offensive attack for Idaho combining for 17 kills and 17 digs.

Puckett was coming off a shoulder injury suffered Sept. 1 against Rice.

"I improved my play a lot from the previous week," Puckett said. "I was more relaxed and played better because of it. The shoulder felt good but it still gets sore at times."

Nancy Wicks had 11 digs for Idaho while freshman Brittany Vanhaverbeke added nine digs and six blocks.

Life didn't get any easier for the Vandals Saturday night.

Idaho faced Illinois the #11 ranked team in the country. The Illini suffered an upset at the hands of Gonzaga Friday night.

After Illinois ran away with the first game 15-4, Idaho responded with inspired play before losing in three games (4-15, 12-15, 11-15).

"The second game we thought we could beat them," sophomore Dee Porter said. "We missed a few serves that hurt us at crucial times."

Porter finished the tournament with 20 kills and 16 digs while Roes added 48 assists and 22 digs.

Idaho continued to struggle with passing and suffered mental mistakes at key points as the Vandals dropped to 2-4 on the season.

"We're making mistakes at crucial times and it is frustrating," Roes said. "We know we can play with these teams and it is hard to take these losses."

Idaho travels to the California Irvine Tournament this weekend to face Loyola Marymount, Florida State and the host team UC Irvine.

"We are looking forward to playing again after a disappointing tournament last weekend," Porter said. "It's tough to lose a lot of matches early in the year, but we realize how tough our schedule is."

"We are benefiting more from playing nationally ranked teams and losing than playing average teams and winning," Roes said.

Because of fewer salmon spawning because of the dams, fisheries have been implemented to replenish the supply. But these fisheries, along with the slower moving water the reservoirs create, provide an excellent habitat for smolt predators, like squawfish.

Out of the goodness of their heart (Ha, Ha!) Bonneville Power Administration provided $6 million to help reduce the squawfish infested Snake and Columbia rivers over the next five years. Fishermen can register daily from May-Sept., and get $3 for each fish over 11-inches in length.

Though the program undoubtedly cut squaw numbers down, it will still not save our salmon runs.

In order to do so, a serious plan must be implemented now. Idaho Gov. Cecil Andrus is currently battling for the "Idaho Plan."

The plan is somewhat radical by political standards, but not ecological ones. Under the plan, the river would be returned as near as possible to pre-dam conditions during the peak migration from mid-April through June. In the short-run, Snake river reservoirs levels would be drastically drawn down to create a faster flow for smolts. This in order to get them to the ocean sooner. In the long-run, the lower Snake dams would be rebuilt to allow two-way spawning traffic. The Columbia dams would then follow.

Last Saturday, at the Oregon River Rendezvous in Bend, Ore., Andrus said that if the Bonneville Power Administration and Army Corps of Engineers did not participate in the experimental draw-down next spring, he may declare an emergency and have the National Guard pour con-pass and returned it 98 yards for a touchdown.

"They ran that exact same play on second down, and I didn't think they would run it twice in a row," May said. "We were in the right coverage and I knew what was coming. It was a pretty easy play."

Instead of being just a touchdown down at halftime, the Cossacks found themselves trailing 21-0.

"I really believe we could have thrown the football against them," Walsh said. "If we could've got that score it would have really boosted our confidence. The interception hurt."

In the second half the Vandal's offensive machine got rolling. Quarterback Doug Nussmeier finished with a career high 336 yards on 24 of 34 attempts with three touchdowns and two interceptions. Nussmeier spread his completions around as eight different Vandals caught passes. All-

American Kasey Dunn led the way with 10 catches for 126 yards with a touchdown. Tight end Elia Ala'ilama Daley added 5 receptions for 83 yards and scored two touchdowns.

Somoma's blitzing defense was content with giving the Vandals all the short passes they wanted as Nussmeier's longest completion of the day was just 32 yards.

"It was amazing, I think they blitzed every down," Dunn said. "They had guys everywhere."

The Vandals suffered one major injury in the game as starting offensive tackle Jody Schnug went down with a broken left ankle. Smith estimated he'd miss four to six weeks.

Hammerbox concert provides great, noisy rock

By MEYLA BIANCO
Staff Writer

It's not surprising if you missed them, the show wasn't widely advertised. Treepeople and Hammerbox, two bands from Seattle, (Treepeople are originally from Boise) screamed into Pullman last Friday night. They played to a large and appreciative slam-dancing crowd made up of both high school and college students. Not only would I gladly pay the four dollar cover (non WSU student fee) again, but I'd even go if my boyfriend drove, despite his apparent doublevision and nonchalance toward the yellow line. Treepeople are: Scott Schmaljohn, Doug Martsch, Pat Brown and a new drummer.

I was so close to this bearded skinny guy (Martsch) that I was watching the spit fly from his mouth after every syllable. The weird part is, I was having the most fun, and it was all because of him, the chubby drummer (flailing away) and the two twin fuzzy-headed, horn-rimmed guitar players.

They played "Tongues on Thrones," "Radio Man," "Neil's Down," "Handcuffs," "Important Things" and some new ones from the upcoming album.

It was loudness so real you could see, feel, taste and especially, hear it. It was stinky, unfamiliar arm-pits in your face and you didn't even care. It was like smelling Fruitstripe gum, Rightguard and somebody's socks all at once.

I loved Treepeople. You will too. Go out now and buy all their records.

Hammerbox are: James Atkins, Harris Thurmond, Dave Bosch and Carrie

Akre. With Carrie's searing vocals laid over a strong drum and guitar rhythm and volume so loud you didn't know if it was pleasure or pain, Hammerbox put on a great show.

Carrie's tomato colored tights under a black dress were topped off by short red hair and this voice you couldn't believe. It's the pink Cadillac of grunge vocals, a mix of tortured agony, good dark chocolate and last night's spaghetti. Similar to the female voices of Mary's Danish and Broken Siren, her voice sort of lifts you up out of your shoes and slams you down with a canine growl.

That's not all. The rest of the band throws out this powerfully loud grinding sound that is at once melodic and abrasive.

The Van Halen cover at the end of the long set convinced me entirely (if I wasn't already) that Hammerbox is a great band, and they put on one of the best shows I've seen.

Hammerbox has already been touted as the next "big thing."

Local eatery treats two 'really' nice guys poorly

Cook admits the water and table settings were quite gnarly

By TRENT YOUNG AND TIM COOK
Staff Waiters

TRUE CONFESSIONS ... so Tim Cook and I are walking downtown, browsing around, when we get a great desire to sit in an air conditioned room, have some drinks, and eat some cheese fries. (Well, at least Tim wanted the cheese fries.) We look down the street and see the Nobby Inn, with its dark windows.

Tim says, "Let's go in there." I tell him I've never been in there and frankly the place disturbs me, with the unusually large amount of old women entering, but never leaving.

Tim laughs and steals a cigarette from my pocket. A male passer-by notices the act and looks at me as if I'm some sort of drug freak or male prostitute. I can't tell if this has excited or upset him, but his staring forces me to enter into the restaurant with Tim to escape a full-fledged encounter.

TIM INTERJECTS ... Okay Trent, the fact of the matter is that I love the Nobby (or the "Nob") passionately because its name is English slang for "sophisticated" and "intellectual" or something but it gives me the whole "down to earth" kinda thing. I only thought I should subject you to one of my favorite recreational activities.

TRENT IGNORES TIM AS USUAL AND CONTINUES ... Anyway, we go inside. The place is nice, much like your average J.B.'s Big Boy Restaurant, and some elevator music is playing. The sign says to seat yourself, so we do. Then I notice that we're the only people in the place.

I ask Tim if the place is closed. Tim says, "No," and goes to get an ashtray. The waitresses (there were two of them) look nastily at the lad as he approaches the blessed "counter of condiments and napkins." One of the two snaps, "What do you need?" Tim tells her, but she ignores him. He gets the ashtray and comes back.

"I'm sure there's just no mistake I want to look at something other than Tim."

By now the two have clued in that we are here to eat. They start whispering to each other about who "gets" us, and one says she needs to go to the bank and practically sprints out onto Main Street. The other one pours out two glasses of water and saunters over. We weren't smoking yet, but I felt like we needed to be.

"Do you want something to drink?" Asked the one who "got" us. Tim lifted his head, smiled, and said: "Maybe." Then she left and never came back. Ever.

TO HER CREDIT MY DEAR TRENT ... I have never been treated to this absence of service at the Nob in all of my six million trips to this mecca of lonely hearts. I'm sure her thoughts were with a colleague who had an appointment at the bank.

WELL, TIM, WHAT I'M TRYING TO SAY ... is simply, we were prejudiced against because we looked different. As people who make their living off serving others, these waitresses made a big mistake in not serving us. We may have looked strange and poor, but we had money to spend on food and, dare I say, a tip.

I wouldn't have taken the whole thing so seriously if two women hadn't walked in after us and received incredible service--the kind of promptness and attention to detail that's normally reserved for either gods or stars of Who's the Boss. I mean, when I wave at someone and say "menu" two or three times, I'm sure there's just no mistake I want to look at something other than Tim.

POLITENESS, TRENT ... is a very important angle to this saga of good and evil. Though I felt we were polite, we still are inherently evil, or more obviously smell evil...I still feel it was we who were the problem, and perhaps my remark of 'maybe' was impolite given the circumstances of her friend having gone to the bank and everything. The table water tasted okay and the silverware arrangement looked pretty too. Thumbs up for the Nob, aye Trent?

came out of France with a different attitude, with different ways of looking at things. And it's not yet over—it's still going on."

With more students each year expressing interest in traveling while studying, last year's exchange students foresee bigger successes for IPO's overseas-studies programs. Already the USAC program has garnered considerable interest and two sign-ups. As Elizabeth Meunier, who studied theatre and British culture in London, urged, "Anybody who has the chance and the money to go abroad, do it."

project a one-time event. "We want to make this to become a tradition," she added.

Exactly how much money was raised is uncertain, but Tri-Delt member Alicia Murray said everything went "great."

"The biggest donations have come from students walking by; some donated five dollars or more," said Murray, "But police were constantly stopping by and making donations."

Understanding the need for food during 48-hours of teetering, Pizza Hut sent over a bunch of free pizzas and coupons.

Spirit on the teeter remained good. Most members contributed one hour shifts, although some did two shifts. Participant Nadine Zeier said it was fun even though her knees hurt after a while.

"Participation both in the houses and from the students has been great especially since this is the first time," said Kester. "Next year, we hope to do even better."
