California station hoaxes hometown

By KELLY TYNON
Staff Writer

The recent events in the Soviet Union prompted a Sacramento, California radio station to promote a live broadcast from Moscow...only they didn't say which Moscow.

Radio station KSFM from Sacramento broadcasted live yesterday from the Circle K on Main Street. The two morning deejays, Chris Collins and Mike Reynolds, made no mention of Idaho, just Moscow.

"We started off the broadcast saying, 'It's 6 o'clock in Sacramento, but it's 8 p.m. in Moscow,'" said Collins. "We got it right down to the time zones."

Throughout the morning, they interviewed several Moscow residents who went along with the joke. The Executive Director of the Chamber Of Commerce, Ray Murphy, talked about promoting new businesses in Moscow, and mayor Paul Agidius explained why he spoke perfect English.

"I said we had an excellent English department in the American University here and are now free to speak without an accent," said Agidius.

There was even discussion about the shortages in Moscow.

"We talked about the housing crunch in the area," said Collins. "Our listeners in Sacramento were calling the radio station to ask what the stores were like and if the McDonald's was the same."

The broadcast lasted until 9:00 a.m. when the deejays started to interview a local news reporter from the Idahonian.

"The Idahonian!? You mean we're not in Russia?," asked Reynolds. Back in Sacramento, the radio went to a dead signal. Collins, who was on the phone to the station, said the phones lit up.

"I expect we'll get 5,000 calls for this."

The idea for the broadcast came from the recent unrest

Women's center provides support

By ALISA STOFFEL
Staff Writer

The Women's Center began a 'Noon Program' last Tuesday directed toward educating the public about current issues facing women today. The discussion covered the gender role awareness in different cultures and how it affects women in the United States.

Tuesday's panel included Betsy Thomas, the Women's Center director, Dr. Maria Krasnec, director of the Psychology Department, Shahrar Shirkhani, a doctorate candidate in Economics and Diane Allen, director of Minority Services.

Diane Allen, from the Coeur d'Alene Tribe, explains the changes made in the last 30 years. Originally, the men were expected to "keep their women in line" using whatever means "necessary." Now, women are able to speak out against unfair treatment and hold a much more equal position in the society. They are a major part of decision making and control most of the offices on the reservation.

Dr. Krasnec believes awareness and the realization of women's changing social position will help shape the world for our children. Women must be willing to "visualize where (they) are heading" and follow through with their goals.

Mr. Shirkhani left Iran 14 years ago. He notes the level of women's freedom changing in Iran whenever he goes back to visit his five sisters.

"I was surprised by my youngest sister; she was so worried about covering herself before going out," Shirkhani said.

Iran is heading back to more traditional gender roles--including the domination of women.

This backwardness is a result of individual attitudes, says Shirkhani, and can only change when "individual empowerment" takes hold.

"Iranian women must move beyond the confining kitchen and house, and have access to economic, political, and social opportunities," Shirkhani insists.

Betsy Thomas, a women's activist since the late 50's, states that "sexism in the United States is now on an insidious level." Women are expected to work a second shift at home after a full day at work. Violence against women is a massive problem and touches one out of two marriages at some time in the relationship. To face these problems, Betsy encourages women to "support each other in an egalitarian way, knowing that next time, it may be you who needs help."

The call to action demanded issues be addressed on a political and personal level. Both women and men participate at the Women's Center, discussing possible answers to the global issues affecting each person. Next Tuesday at 12:30, the talk will resume.

Outstanding GDI's take home the gold

By SHARI IRETON
Staff Writer

Once again, University of Idaho residence halls gather to show their spirit for GDI Week, from dancing on stage in a towel, to participating in a keg toss.

The week began on Sunday morning at 8:30 a.m. (a little too early for many of the students) with the annual GDI Week fun run. First place for the women's halls was Steel House and Targhee for the male halls.

One of the more popular events of GDI Week, the skit and airband competition, was held at the SUB Ballroom Monday night. First place for male halls in the skit went to Targhee for their own version of Star Trek, with crew members transporting pizza up to their ship and pulling down the captain's pants.

The first place winner in the women's hall division for the skits was Hays, with a slow motion version of the Gault Stride done to "Chariots of Fire".

Snow hall took first in the men's division of the air band competition by ripping out Robert Palmer's "Simply Irresistible". Some of the men from the hall dressed as Palmer's girls, wearing tight black mini skirts and low cut tops. The men ended the song by flipping up their skirts to reveal phone numbers written on their underwear.

First place for women's halls for air bands went to Houston hall with "The Pirate Song". The captain of their pirate ship was ranting about going on raids and plunders, while his son just wanted "to sing and dance".

Peace Institute searching for peaceful resolutions

By CHRISTIAN THOMAS
Staff Writer

Many of you have walked past the building, probably even read the sign, and maybe even questioned what it meant. But few, if any of us have walked inside, ventured down the stairs, and entered the office to ask, "What is the Martin Institute?"

The Martin Institute for Peace Studies and Conflict Resolution is a multi-disciplinary center at UI. It was founded in the belief that war and violence are neither necessary nor inevitable. Its purposes are to encourage education and research to advance peace at all levels, and also to resolve local and regional conflicts with alternatives to confrontation and litigation.

Institute scholars seek to understand the major causes of disputes and violence and to provide information, training and assistance for the resolution of conflicts. The Institute brings together scholars, students and present and future leaders. There they develop the knowledge needed for the new and ongoing challenges of establishing peace, according to the Institute's mission statement published in its July newsletter.

The Institute's director, Dr. Joel Hamilton, admits it sounds convoluted and lofty, but he also agrees with the message it gives to others about their mission. Though the description is long, it encompasses all that the twelve year old institute tries to do.

The Institute is basically trying to develop a wide body of theory and practice for ways of managing and resolving conflict. It does this by studying human behavior to find peaceful alternatives to terrorism, violence, and war.

Dr. Joel Hamilton said, "the same emotions and motives involved in individual conflicts can be paralleled to those seen during an international crisis. People get excited and won't listen." Hamilton went on to say that interest in international affairs and international development is one of the keys to fostering peace, the Institute's main goal.

In the past, the Institute has tried to achieve this goal by offering courses in association with the political science department that taught conflict resolution, peace studies and the concepts of

Environmental art displayed

By STEVE CORDA
Asst. News Editor

The two university art galleries are flirting with bad luck. They aren't breaking mirrors or walking under ladders, but they're holding a reception on Friday the Thirteenth.

The receptions are being held at the Pritchard Art Gallery, on Main Street across from the Nobby Inn and at the University Gallery in University of Idaho's Ridenbaugh Hall to celebrate the opening of new exhibits in each gallery. The Ridenbaugh reception will be from 4:00 to 7:00 p.m. and the Pritchard reception will be from 5:00 to 8:00 p.m.

The University Gallery at Ridenbaugh Hall will present "New Housing in Vienna," an architectural exhibition sponsored by the Austrian Cultural Institute and the city of Vienna. It spans architecture in Vienna, Austria from the 1920's through the 1980's. Karen Watts, assistant director of University Galleries, said the collection of architectural plans, drawings and photos "Very important...for anyone interested in contemporary architecture."

There are two exhibits opening in the Pritchard Art Gallery. One is an Installment, a work of art which fills a room and creates its own environment, by Seattle artist David Nechak. The second exhibition is called "Environmental Impact Statements." This is made up of paintings, sculptures, prints and photographs by artists from Montana and Washington. The exhibit is a collection of work that was put together based on a competition put on in Montana.

Joanna Hayes, director of University Galleries, describes each piece as "the individual artists response to their concerns about the environment." She went on to say "I think we all are concerned about the environment. I think it's a very timely exhibit."

The Pritchard Art Gallery and the University Gallery are both affiliated with the University of Idaho. Both are under the direction of the UI College of Art and Architecture. They also receive funding from UI's work study program. Eighteen UI students are currently employed by both galleries. The University Gallery is more of a forum for university developmental reviews, undergraduate juried shows, and required departmental shows while Pritchard Art Gallery attracts shows from across the country.

The University Gallery is funded solely by the College of Art and Architecture and work study. The Pritchard Gallery, on the other hand, receives a grant from The Idaho Commission of the Arts, and holds an annual fundraising auction.

This year, the club hopes to expand their elementary education project by teaching kids about water, animals and recycling. The club will also be writing weekly letters to Idaho's senators and representatives concerning Northwest environmental issues.

These days nature has few friends, but here at the University of Idaho, nature has the Environmental Science Club.

From cleaning up the UI campus, to starting residence hall recycling, the Environmental Science Club was very busy last year. It even traveled to elementary schools and taught children about planting trees and how they can help the environment.

For all their good work, the club is still quite small. With only about five members, they are hoping for a larger group for the 1991-92 school year.

"We hope to see an increase in membership this year", said Tom Liebler, a UI wildlife biology major and President of the Club dormant after 43 years

By ROBB BRENNAN
Staff Writer

When the Corner Club, a historic local watering hole closed its doors a few weeks ago, it closed a chapter in the history of the Palouse.

Started back in 1948, primarily as an after work, men's tavern it became the stuff of legends in the annals of taverndom.

Contrary to some rumors fluttering about Moscow, the rest of the tavern is not doomed for demolition. Owner Gene Goetz, said the Club is only closed temporarily while he is on vacation and will stay closed while he negotiates its sale.

"It was just a good workin' man's beer tavern," remarked Nick Roberts, who has been a bartender in Moscow for over 50 years. "When the workin' men had left, then the college kids could come in," Roberts said. "It was the kind of place that would always cash a check or you could always start a tab."

The Corner Club even had slot machines until they were outlawed in 1954. But the law was not always of utmost concern at the Club. For instance, during the days of the Blue Laws, when it was illegal to sell liquor on Sundays, you could get a beer served in a coffee cup.

Some of the more infamous antics of the Club include horses and a Bison bellying up to the bar back in the early fifties.

"It all started when a local pro-cowboy boasted he could ride his horse in the bar and have it drink beer out of his cowboy hat. It ended up starting a 'top this' contest," remin-ised Roberts with a chuckle. "The Nail" was the personification of 'top this' at the club. The 11 foot 3 inch mark on a ceiling beam was touched by former Vandal basketball player Gus Johnson back in 1961. The feat has only been repeated once since then about five years ago.

in the Soviet Union. Two weeks ago, Collins and Reynolds started giving away backpacks on their morning show.

"The packs were filled with 'stuff you can't get in the Soviet Union', like CD's, video cassettes, and condoms," said Ken Kashan, the marketing director of KSFM. "The winners of the backpacks were eligible for the grand prize; a trip to the Soviet Union."

Collins and Reynolds, however, have to be content with Moscow, Idaho.

"No wonder the plane trip was so short," said Reynolds with a smile.

Individuals must help in the fight against prejudice

Talk of racism continues to echo throughout the University of Idaho campus and our community, along with the entire state of Idaho.

Why is it such a highly discussed topic?

No definite answers can be given to this question, but the problem is always open to an informal analysis.

No matter what color your skin, your religious beliefs, your nationality or your gender, you can be labeled as prejudiced.

But has anyone ever taken the time to interpret what causes this reaction?

The word ignorance comes to mind more often than any other.

Moscow may have the highest per capital minority population in the entire state. Idaho is a fairly moderate state, with a few radicals, but not many. We start out with one strike against us, growing up in an environment which is so homogenous. But this is not an excuse for our ignorance, nor should we let it become one.

Do people show prejudice toward others because of the color of their skin, religious upbringing, or political beliefs?

It is time that the students at this university dropped the beliefs that have been passed along by their elders and influential people in their lives.

If they, these people whom you look up to, believe in racism or hint toward it, beg to differ.

Why?

Because they're wrong.

Just open your eyes and see what is going on around you.

The activities of the Klu Klux Klan have slowed considerably, the Aryan Nations are on the verge of being run out of Hayden Lake, and minorities are continuing to make a conscious effort to become seen as equal members of society.

So what is stopping them from achieving this?

Ignorant people that feel threatened and do not have enough diversity in their own lives to accept others.

Does this really have to happen?

Were we not brought onto this earth to live as one humankind, no matter the color of our skin?

There are alternative to racism but rebellion is not one of them. Everyone must work together to fight the problem.

Sit down today and ask yourself if you show or feel prejudice in your everyday life, and if you tell yourself you are not, you're lying.

Everyone does and a good portion of this society always will.

That does not mean that people have to sit back in their easy chairs and accept it.

Take a stand against racism.

Put the pressure on your friends and neighbors to make an effort to become aware and tolerant of other political and religious viewpoints, to actively welcome racial and cultural diversity into their lives, and to drop stereotypical gender roles.

I know I have and it has been a great influence in my life. Who knows, maybe you might meet someone that may change your life.

If you disagree, just crank that chair back a little further and let that narrow mind of yours continue to get smaller.

Don't be afraid, because the only fear you should have is the fear that you were wrong.

Oh, what a terrible thought.

— Matt Lawson

Cook's editorial untrue

Editor;

I would like to address Tim Cook's editorial of September 6.

Tim, (can I call you Tim, it's a lot nicer than some other words that come to mind.) I am the bohemeth that you chose to talk about.

First, thanks for the "few obligatory video games." Your 75 cents goes to my salary, which I use to keep myself at the peak of burlyness, so thanks.

Tim, your article was interesting at least. It was also unprofessional and untrue. I feel that you should take your own advice and learn some respect for other people, you know, those with views other than your own. You can consider yourself lucky your article was less than kudos. (The responses ran from "did you kill him?" to "Cut off his head and use it as a Rugby ball.")

The editorial was the most blatant display of hypocrisy that I have ever seen. Just because I don't believe what you believe, that makes me intolerant? Come on Tim. If you did not like what I said, why didn't you say so then, instead of scurrying off through the door to write your misquoted article. I wouldn't have hit you

Disturbing stories need to be shared

Ahh, a chicken gordo, a stein of Sun Valley lager, some familiar faces, and my L.L. Beans taking up residence on the only corner of the table not covered with food or drink. I slowly gazed around at the familiar surroundings. Mama Inez. In layman's terms, great mexican, great beer, and even greater friends whom serve it. The palce to eat in Ketchum, Idaho. Well worth the nine hour drive.

But my weekend away from Moscow and school was quiet and un-eventful, albeit perfect, so I will forgo the theatrics. Instead, I wish to share two stories told to me by a friend while we were enjoying a few cervezas Saturday night.

However before I begin, I ask for one simple thing. That both accounts be taken for what they are. Indeed, at the least, these stories describe very sick individuals. My only reason for relaying these is that I found them so absurdly disturbing that I felt it necessary to share. There is absolutely no attempt on my part towards malice or discordant, only to further prove that our world can indeed be a distressing place. Welcome to a real life twilight zone.

Story number one, a true nightmare lived by a friend of a friend, takes place in New York City. Picture yourself at one of its countless nightclubs, throwing down expensive imports and mingling with wildly-clad, big-apple night persons. All of a sudden a hand grabs you and a striking figure whisks you onto the dance floor. You begin to feel faint. After a few tangos, and more than a few more imports, you are lavishly invited outside to an awaiting limousine. You do not resist.

Inside the limo, this mystery, clad only in black, reeking of excitement and promise, pops the top off a bottle of Dom. This is the last thing you remember.

Act two, story one takes place on a bench in Central Park. Slowly you awaken, feeling groggy, sickly. You rise, checking your watch, while at the same time realizing that you still wear the same clothes from the previous night. You then shriek in horror. The previous night was actually three days ago. A sharp pain in your abdomen region tells you that something is indeed awry. Raising your shirt reveals an ugly railroad track of stitches traveling down your stomach. Fainting is the next logical step.

Story two, also played out in New York, has you, the actor, married and on vacation. Reservations made months prior at a downtown hotel give you and yours the freedom to play at will. Dinner, dancing, a late night cocktail and carriage ride around Central Park, and it's back to the suite for much needed rest.

Upon arrival, you discover the door to your room ajar. Countless hours engrossed in mystery novels aids you in deducing that someone has broken in. But after close examination of the open suitcases, it is realized that nothing was taken. Perplexed, you eventually fall into a much needed sleep, the next day dawning bright and clear. The remainder of the vacation goes off without a hitch.

The story picks up a month

West's letter in poor taste

Mr. West:
I was horrified to read your article in the 10 September issue of the 'Argonaut'. If you are seeking to express the feelings of hunters in general, then I beg of you, please stop! It is closed-minded, hostile, and belligerent hunters--like your self--that contribute to the bad reputations hunters suffer in some circles. Animal rightists are not going to go away because you call them nasty names and threaten personal injury. Hunting is a part of life that has been with us since the settling of America. Hunting is a vital management tool, as well as an important link for many to the outdoors. Research and land acquisition are supported to a great extent by monies that come directly from the hunters pocket. The Pittman-Robertson act, for example, levied an 11 percent excise tax on the sale of sporting arms and ammunition; this revenue is vital to wildlife management in our country. It would be a great blow to all natural resource managers, wildlife enthusiasts, hunters, and non-hunters, if hunting were abolished.

If people like yourselves continue to speak your minds, I am afraid you will turn public favor away from hunting. The majority of hunters in our state are well-spoken, responsible, and reasonable human beings. I suggest you leave it to them to contend with animal rightists. Could I also suggest that you enroll in a hunter safety class? They teach the basics of hunting techniques, as well as hunting etiquette--which you seem to sorely need. Call the Idaho Department of Fish and Game for the next class offered in a location near you.

I am very sorry the Argonaut had the poor taste to publish your article.

Pres. complaint no big deal

Editor;

I am responding to the student not happy with Mike Gotch, A.S.U.I. president. Mike didn't appear at the ground breaking ceremony of the library's new addition. Big deal! If someone wants to nag about our president's performance why not choose a subject of importance like his accomplishments. Being A.S.U.I. president is a busy job, perhaps Mr. Gotch was in the process of accomplishing one of his administrative duties. The complaint could have had bearing if A.S.U.I. money had been appropriated for the addition. Is that the case? If so an explanation is due, since student's money was and is being spent, but all this hubbub about missing the ceremony as a reason to judge Mike as president is hogwash. Is there something personal going on? Another question. Why is a letter to the editor a story complete with large headline? This isn't a news item, just feed back. I hope the unhappy student didn't interrupt his valuable homework time composing the lengthy and single minded attack, but everybody likes to bitch, this letter is proof of that.

-Marty Ross

Reader extremely upset by editorial

Editor;

The Argonaut Letter Policy states in part, "Letters may be edited for length, mechanical errors and spelling errors." If they are that strict with letters from students, why are the editors so lenient with writers on their own staff?

Timothy Cook's editorial in the September 6th issue of the Argonaut is a glaring example of this laziness. Within the first four paragraphs of his dismal editorial, he had mis-spelled 'podium,' 'obligatory,' and 'behemoth.' He left out commas, created run-on sentences, and said things that just didn't make any sense at all (look at the last several sentences).

All this was so Cook could use his exalted position on the Argonaut to hammer some guy who not only could read, but could make reasonable deductions accordingly. If I saw someone wearing the T-shirt Cook described, the last word I would think of would be "Republican." Even another Democrat would be able to figure that out.

Cook tried to use the 'incident' with the 'meat-head' as a soap-box from which to preach liberal rhetoric about the intolerance of 'the new face of power in Amerilater as you begin to examine the photographs from the vacation. You laugh and moan your way through roll after roll of kodachrome. A mystery roll then appears. Again, you begin the process.

Slowly, with each passing print, the mystery of that one night begins to unravel. You gag your way through 23 photographs of the eyes, ears, and mouth of a total stranger. The 24th print, however, is the clincher.

It reveals the photographer sprawled completely unclothed across a bed. You recognize it as being the one from the hotel. Indeed you question his intent, and his taste, but the creativity intrigues you. You now then realize that nothing was taken from that hotel room except for a few photographs.

But as you further study this last print, you become interested in the foreign object protruding from his, anatomically speaking, gluteal region. You intensify your gaze, and slowly the object familiarizes itself with your memory banks. It then becomes quite recognizable. You bellow a scream of horror, mixed with hysterical laughter, which awakens your napping spouse. You make haste to the bathroom, finding the object you seek. Your spouse's toothbrush is sent to its doom via the waste receptacle. The vacation mystery has been solved.

In my last writing, I preached the sins of thievery. Of taking that which is not yours to take. However, after listening to these accounts, I consider my friend, the object of my last column, lucky to have only lost his bike seat. But not to leave you hanging.

Story one ends with the discovery of a stolen kidney. You, as the actor, fell victim to the latest in new-wave, high-tech areas of taking without asking. Your lust after a cushy limo and a night of romance lead you into a living nightmare. The champagne was drugged. You thus were drugged, and your kidney was illegally removed from your body, being sold on the black market to the highest bidder.

Then story two. Described was a true life incident revealing just how devious the criminal mind can be. Illegal his actions were, I agree, and of the utmost disgusting, but talk about an imagination.

I guess that the main reason I was so saddened and confused by melec one was because of my background. For I have, four times over, been the recipient of an organ transplant. And because of some person's goodness, I am now able to see. But melec two, however disgusting, did cause me to smile, even laugh. I was able to vision the buffonery behind it. But nonetheless, it did create cause to worry. Eventually, I will be faced with life in the big city. My search for employment may demand it.

So, the morales behind this article? Quite simple. One, be wary of sultry desires robed in black soliciting free limo tours, and two, always buy a new toothbrush after every vacation. Or, better yet, stay away from New York.

Tim, I am a nice guy. To clear this up, what I said was That radical change or proposing it will not get you anywhere because people like stability. Look how well the revolutionary movements of the sixties did to give you an idea of what I mean.

You accused me of marching ca.' He failed utterly.

In fact, Cook's editorial (I flatter his writing by using that name) proved exactly the opposite, which is that he himself is 100 percent intolerant of views other than his own.

He is even less tolerant of any system of morality. His antagonist claimed that people today merely want "a white picket fence, a two-car garage and a good job." On the basis of this statement, Cook decided that the man also was an NFL fan, a Bud drinker, a Christian, and (to top it all off) possessed a sense of decency.

The meat-head had proclaimed his own beliefs clearly and concisely, had not forced Cook to remove his T-shirt, and had not gotten Cook thrown in jail for wearing it. As far as I'm concerned, he displayed a great deal more tolerance for Cook and his opinions than Cook has since shown him.

Who needs to eat?

These guys don't eat lunch. Who has time to eat lunch when the shoes are squeaking and the sweat is dripping every day at Memorial Gym from 11:30 a.m.-1:30 p.m.

I'm talking about noon ball, and it's been an institution at this university for the last 20 or so years.

Call it a club. Call it a fraternity. Call it whatever you want, but every day, 20 or so athletes get together to cuss, push, shove, run, jump and live out every basketball fantasy that's ever entered their minds.

Just like any club, there is a cast of characters. Carlton Brown never misses a day. Just like the dust and ancient memories that linger in the gym, he is a part of the scenery. He just sits and watches. He never plays. He is the commentator. There's 44 year old Architecture professor Bruce Haglund, who comes to shoot his 15 foot jumper and get the kinks out.

Jay McMillin, former Nebraska Wesleyan star, comes by to watch and to remember the smell of leather and hardwood. Former Vandal Caesar Prelow is on hand. Barry Keys, a small quick guard, is also present to frustrate opponents with his deadly jumper. 6-foot-6 Sean Jonz, a UI student, is a regular. Even Vandal Women's basketball assistant Robin Stewart stops by for a game.

Noon ball is a melting pot of all sizes, races and colors, a brew of athletic talent. Here, your athletic skill is judged. The guys that can "ball" and "fill-it-up" play on the center court. The rest get pushed to the side courts, where the fouls and bruises are the norm most afternoons.

The best and most interesting thing about noon ball is the mix of people that are present daily. I challenge this university to find a place where students and professors can relate on a more personal level. Where else can you tell your Economics teacher to --off one minute and sit in his 2:30 p.m. class the next?

That economics class could be with Richard Coffman, who has been coming to the gym since 1978.

"They sure don't do anything like this at WSU," Coffman said. "They have separate courts for faculty and students. I like the fact you can get to know some of your students better."

Coffman and Don Crowley, a Political Science professor, can be called the gym's chairmen of the board. They are permanent fixtures of the gym and often troubleshoot when the occasional fight breaks out.

Coffman and Crowley have seen it all. Injuries: Coffman speaks of them with a morbid humor. There was the time when

Vandals look for war with Bobcats

Slowing running game key to success for Idaho defense

By CHRISTOPHER GATEWOOD
Sports Editor

After just barely losing to the University of Idaho Vandals last year, 38-35, Southwest Texas State University Head Coach Dennis Franchione says when his Bobcats travel to Moscow to play the Vandals at the ASUI Kibbie Dome this Saturday at 6 p.m., that a payback won't be the motivator.

"I don't think the revenge thing is really going to be much of a factor," Franchione said. "We're just looking at this as a chance to play our second game, and play a very good football team in Idaho."

But is Franchione really being honest? In fourth quarter of last year's game, the Bobcats held a 17-point lead and looked as if they were going to cruise to an easy win. A punt block for a touchdown and a spectacular second half by quarterback Doug Nussmeier, brought the Vandals to the brink.

Compound this to the fact the Vandals might have cost the 6-5 Bobcats a playoff spot. Add that they were playing with ineligible receiver Brandy Harris, and suddenly, this match-up looks like an old rivalry.

"I think they are looking at this as their biggest game of the year,"

Vandal coach John L. Smith said. "They want to come in here and beat the team that kept them out of the playoffs. They want to show everybody they've arrived."

The fun and games of playing schools like Sonoma State are over. Now the Vandals are faced with the realization of playing a team in the top 10. SWT is ranked ninth in the nation and the Vandals are ranked fourth. This could possibly be the premier match-up in I-AA this weekend.

SWT finished with a 6-5 record last season, the best record they've had since they went 14-0 and won the Division II National Championship in 1982. But, four of their five losses were by three points or less. In all SWT had struggled in I-AA until Franchione took over last season. He arrived from Division II Pittsburg State (Kan.), where in five years he went an incredible 53-6, making it to the semi-finals four straight years.

"I've had some success other places, but we're just getting things figured out here at Southwest Texas State," Franchione said. "Idaho is a fine team and I just hope we can stay with them in the Kibbie Dome."

Idaho volleyball team looks for road wins

By MATT LAWSON
Editor

The University of Idaho volleyball team has had one of its most difficult preseason schedules in several years.

Things won't get any easier for the Vandals this weekend as they travel to the Cal-Irvine tournament this weekend.

The tournament field includes Cal-Irvine, Florida State University and Loyola Marymount University.

Idaho is looking to rebound after two tough losses last weekend in the University of Oregon Tournament.

Those losses to Illinois and Oregon dropped Idaho's record to 2-4 with four matches remaining before its Big-Sky opener against Eastern Washington Sept. 20.

"There aren't any teams the caliber of Illinois at this tournament, but it will still be a tough tournament," Vandal head coach Tom Hillbert said. "We had a good practice Wednesday and the girls are excited to play again."

Idaho faces the host school Cal-Irvine tonight at 7:00 p.m. before facing FSU and LMU on Saturday.

"Loyola could be the team to watch in the tournament," Hillbert said of the competition his team faces. "They always play Gonzaga tough and Gonzaga has already proven they are one of the top teams in this area."

Idaho lost to Gonzaga Aug. 31 in the Safeco Volleyball Classic held at Memorial Gym.

The Idaho players were somewhat frustrated after last week's performance, but after a strong week of practice the Vandals appear ready to rebound.

UI graduate finding success with Expos

By CHRISTOPHER GATEWOOD
Sports Editor

Ask any person in the front office of a major league baseball team if losing hurts. They'll tell you it does. Like any major league player, they take stress home with them at night.

Ask Bill Stoneman, the Vice President in charge of Baseball Operations for the Montreal Expos and University of Idaho graduate. He'll tell you how it feels to lose.

"It isn't fun because of the constant scrutiny by media and fans," Stoneman said. "I try to keep it all in perspective. I don't take it home with me."

Stoneman has been trying to wake from what has been a nightmare 1991 for the Expos. The problem is, he can't. As of today the Expos have a brutal 60-78 record, good enough for dead last in the National League East, 22 games behind the front running Pittsburgh Pirates. The Expos have won nine out of there last 11 games, but like there whole season, it's all for naught.

Stoneman has watched players that are annually productive have horrible seasons. Third baseman Tim Wallach, an All-Star in the past, is hitting in the .200's this year. He normally hits near .300. Andreas "Big Cat" Galagarraga has been in a steady decline since he was an All-Star in 1987. This year he is in danger of driving in less than 50 runs.

The lone bright spot has been Ivan Calderon, who the Expos acquired at the beginning of the season in a trade with the Chicago White Sox involving outfielder Tim Raines. Calderon has been consistent and is hitting right around .300.

"To tell you the truth Wallach is having a horrible season," Stoneman said. "He has been that kind of player over the years. He will have a good season and then a bad one. He's had more good ones than bad. Ivan has sort of been a surprise because he's gotten used to National League pitching very quickly. On the whole this season hasn't been fun."

Stoneman remembers a time when things were simpler. A time when he could play baseball and be a student at UI. Stoneman was born and raised in West Covina, Calif. He played baseball and graduated from West Covina High School in 1962.

After graduation he watched some of his closest friends migrate to UI and become members of Sigma Alpha Epsilon, the popular fraternity at the time. Stoneman was having nothing to do with Idaho. Instead, he enrolled at Mount San Antonio. Please see STONEMAN page 11 >

Gilbert Price

Maybe it's the Vandals who should be worried. They have to stop the Bobcat's powerful flex-bone offense. An offense which gained 388 yards in last year's game, including over 100 yards rushing by three different backs. One of those backs is senior quarterback Gilbert Price, who rushed for 738 yards on a team record 229 carries in 1990. Price is still learning the position because he played cornerback in 1989. Nonetheless, Price is still the Southland Conference's pre-season first team selection at quarterback.

"I've run the option for a long time and Gilbert is as good a quarterback as I've had," Franchione said. "He's comparable to other option quarterbacks that run throughout the country."

At least the Vandals won't have to worry about 6-foot-2, 220 All-American fullback Reggie Rivers, who is now playing for the Denver Broncos of the NFL. The Bobcats will replace him with 5-foot-8, 220 Willie Caesar, who rushed just 24 times last season.

"Reggie was an outstanding running back," Franchione said. You don't replace a guy that's playing on Sundays.

The other two backs, junior Todd Scott and sophomore Davy Smith aren't too shabby, either. Scott carried the ball just seven times against the Vandals last year, but still had 128 yards rushing.

Excluding SWT, the Vandals saw the option two other times last year, so this is nothing new for them. But the Vandals haven't seen the Bobcats on film yet this season. The Bobcats crushed Division II Texas A&I 29-14, last week, but refused to trade films with the Vandals.

"Obviously they aren't too crazy about us, so they didn't send us a film," Smith said. "I think this is all a little silly. I wish we could be adults about it."

Regardless, the Vandals know discipline and the ability of the defense to follow assignments is going to be the key to stopping the Bobcats. Things like flying around and playing with reckless abandon, which are instilled in defenders from day one, go right out the window.

"The thing about the option is you kind of have to sit back on your heels and wait for the offense to make it's move," Smith said. "If you miss one assignment everything breaks down. We have been practicing against the scout team all week, but nothing is going to prepare us for what we'll see on Saturday."

The game just might end up being a shootout. The Vandals won't see a passing attack this good for the rest of the season.

"I think we'll have trouble stopping them, but on the other hand, I don't think they're going to shut us down," Smith said. You're going to see a high scoring football game."

Sonoma State's strategy of blitzing every down and shutting down the long pass didn't work. Nussmeier picked them apart as All-American receiver Kasey Dunn caught 10 of his passes for 126 yards and a touchdown.

Don't expect that much blitzing from the Bobcats. They run a conservative 3-4 defense and stay in mostly zone coverage. It will be up to All-Southland Conference free safety Rod Woodward to try and stop some of the attack.

"We will stay mostly in zone coverage, but we will occasionally line Rod up in some man to man," Franchione said. "Dunn and the rest of that offense are outstanding. A seventh grade defense might have as much luck as us."

Smith and the rest of the Vandals know they are going to have to play better than they did against Sonoma State. Even though they won easily, 49-7, they were sloppy at times committing 11 penalties for 102 yards.

Rod Woodward

have one of the most powerful passing attacks in the nation. An attack led by Nussmeier, who had a career high 336 yards passing against Sonoma State. SWT

Cross country opens season

By DOUG BAUER
Staff Writer

With both of their top two runners not being able to compete tomorrow at the Whitman Invitational, the Vandal men's cross-country team is looking at a giant question mark.

Mark Olden, the team's top runner, will not be able to compete until mid October, due to injury, and Stephanos Phygetakis, a freshman from Athens, Greece, will not be able to compete until his transcripts arrive in early October.

The men's team will be made up of a majority of untested walk-on freshmen. "We need quick maturity, a team can't be very competitive in the Big Sky with freshmen," men's cross country coach Mike Keller said.

Placing in tomorrow's meet doesn't mean much to Keller. "It's just a matter of learning process."

As for the women's team, they are also hoping tomorrow's meet at Whitman will be a positive learning experience.

"We are really hoping for each person individually to compete well and just get their racing heads on," women's cross country coach Scott Lorek said.

Dianne Knudson, the top women's runner is still in the healing process from a stress fracture that she received in her ankle last spring, however, she will be ready to run according to Lorek.

"She's ready to run and compete. I wouldn't say that she's one hundred percent, but she is definitely ready to go," Lorek said.

As for the team as a whole, Lorek is enthused. "I think we're in good position right now. I think we're ahead of schedule fitness wise," Lorek said. "I think that the team really did a good job training over the summer. I feel really good about the team depth."

"If we can compete well mentally, we can finish high in the meet," Lorek said.

"It will be interesting to see what happens, we'll just have to wait and see," Keller said.

two players knocked heads and one came down with the teeth of the other hanging from his forehead. There was another time when a player's kneecap was knocked so far out of joint that it was hanging down around the shin area.

The development of Division I players: Coffman speaks highly of Gordy Herbert, who played during the glory years of Don Monson. He was a 6-foot-6 player who developed ball-handling skills and a jumper that might have gone untapped under the structure of practice. Many former and current Vandals come to the gym to play.

"It's not so fun to play with these guys all the time because they stack their teams, but we get to critique them," Crowley said laughing.

It's fun to test you skills, but what is the real motivation for coming out and missing lunch? Are these arthritic men trying to regain youth, or is it something else? Coffman, who was good enough to walk on at the University of Washington in 1960, says it's simply a matter of staying in shape.

"I don't enjoy being too competitive anymore," Coffman said. "I come out here to enjoy myself and run. The only thing that bothers me sometimes, is that the mind says go and the body doesn't cooperate."

Crowley, who played basketball at Costa Mesa High School in California, agrees. "I like to run off some tension and anger.

When I play basketball, I'm usually a little more vibrant in the afternoon. We also get some talented guys running around out here."

There is still a competitive atmosphere that keeps this place from looking like a volleyball game at a children's summer camp. These guys don't rub elbows on the golf course, they work hard and don't like losing. It's not uncommon to see coach Crowley coming up with logical reasons for his team losing. But there is no rhyme or reason to this. You just "run," baby.

The former head of the physical education department tried to end this, but the noon ball drum beats on.

We'll see you at lunch. Hold the mayo.

"I am really excited to play again," sophomore outside hitter Jessica Puckett said. "I feel healthy again and the team is ready to prove we're better than we showed last week."

Freshman Brittany VanHaverbeke is still suffering recurring shin splints and a cold she had during the Oregon tournament. The middle blocker from Portland, Ore. is ready to play in a tournament that features smaller and quicker teams unlike the tall teams Idaho faced last weekend.

"It is both good and bad for us," Vanhaverbeke said of playing teams with a different style of play. "It will help Jessica and Heather (McEwen) a lot more in their hitting.

McEwen, a junior outside hitter from Snowflake, Ariz., leads Idaho with 72 kills including a season high 20 against Rice Sept. 1.

Senior setter Kristie Roes has 201 sets to lead Idaho, but is recovering from an ankle injury suffered against Oregon.

"Kristie has only practiced half of the time this week but she will be ready to play," Hillbert said. "She is tough to keep out of the lineup."

Idaho has suffered from inconsistent serving and passing during its rough start.

"Our timing is starting to come around a lot more," Hillbert said. "We are looking forward to the quality of teams we will be playing in California."

Idaho has had only 38 service aces compared to 79 service errors, while their opponents have only committed 45 errors to 34 aces.

Junior College and continued to play baseball.

"There was no way I was going to go that far away from home," Stoneman said. "I just wasn't having it."

His friends insisted he come to Moscow to try it out during spring break. He went, stayed in the SAE house and took in the scenes of the UI.

"I went there and had a pretty good time," Stoneman said. "Then I came home and forgot about it."

But a UI baseball player wouldn't let him forget about it that easily. Stoneman, a pitcher had a great career at Mt. Sac and was an All-Southcoast Conference selection. UI baseball coach Wayne Anderson was given the press clippings by that player and decided to recruit him. Stoneman was willing to come.

"I was sort of surprised that Idaho recruited me," Stoneman said. "It was sort of ironic because I already had friends that were trying to convince me to go there. They didn't give me a full ride, because they didn't have enough scholarship money. But the university went out it's wat to help me."

Stoneman wasn't too bad of a baseball player, either. He pitched for the now defunct Vandals from 1964-1966 and was part of a pitching staff that had three pitchers throw in the major leagues. In 1966, the Vandals inaugural year in the newly formed Big Sky Conference, they came within a double-header of going to the College World Series in Omaha, Neb. They dropped two games in the West Regional to the University of Arizona 7-6 and 3-1.

"Bill was an excellent pitcher, but then the whole staff was excellent," Anderson said. "Bill always had good control of his pitches."

After a Major League Baseball career that spanned from 1966-1974, he retired and began working with the Royal Trust Financial Firm. He came to the Expos in 1983 and worked as general manager for eight months before becoming the vice-president.

Stoneman has now passed the torch on to his 19-year-old daughter Jill. After going to St. Anne De Bellvue University in Montreal, she decided to transfer to the UI and major in Architecture. She is also a member of the Delta Gamma sorority.

"The big thing is that I wanted to study in the states and learn architecture," Jill said. "I'm also enjoying the sorority."

Jill's interest definitely doesn't fall under the realm of the baseball world. She will occasionally look at the sports section to see how the Expos are doing, but that's about it.

"Jill and her mother just never got into it," Stoneman said. I was at the ballpark so much that their interests lie elsewhere."

Jill sees her father as a man that's good at his job, but also someone that would like to come back to the states.

"I do miss some things about being in the United States and maybe eventually I'll get back, who knows?" Stoneman said.

It has been said more than once that Montreal is perhaps the toughest city in the league to have a baseball franchise. Stoneman must deal with such problems as a rough media, French Quebec's repeated attempts to secede from the union and baseball player's whinings that they don't get the media attention they deserve.

"I think that in the West the media is more subjective and a little more laid back," Stoneman said. "As far as the Quebec issue goes, it really affects attendance. Montreal is becoming more and more French. Many of those people simply aren't interested in baseball."

But Stoneman is encouraged by the development of the young players and sees a bright future for Montreal fans.

"With players like Delino DeSheilds, Marquis Grissom and Larry Walker I think we can reach the level we had in the early '80's," Stoneman said.

Administration Spotlight: Vice-President Hal Godwin

By KARMA METZLER
Staff Writer

For Hal Godwin, it all started with an experiment.

When he was in college at Cal State-Sonoma, the same Sonoma State the Vandals played last weekend, a friend invited Godwin to join a research project on human behavior.

Godwin fell in love with the work and decided to major in Psychology. The rest, as they say, is history.

Godwin is now the Vice President for Student Affairs at UI. He came here in 1975 to work in the counseling center. He and his wife, Peg, now an assistant at the bookstore, planned to be here five years. They liked it and stayed.

The Palouse was a familiar place to the Godwin's. They met while attending Washington State University, where he got his doctorate. Godwin said UI and Moscow provide an atmosphere he enjoys.

"The Institution is very friendly and the people are dedicated," Godwin said. "It's a fun-loving school, but we take ourselves seriously."

Godwin stayed at the counseling center until four years ago. He was then asked to be the NCAA Faculty Representative, then the acting Athletic Director. When that position ended, he was asked to take over the reigns of the Centennial celebration.

After President Elisabeth Zinser took office, she re-created the position of Vice President for Student Affairs which hadn't been filled for several years. Godwin was appointed acting Vice President, applied for the job, and got it.

Godwin said he uses his psychology experience in his job. "I use the organization skills. When I do a research project, I form a theory and put it into action," he said. "That's employable in leadership. I have to mobilize an idea into action."

However, because of his counselling background, he said some people assume he's

Land of The Lost rock group plays ballroom

By TIM COOK
Staff Writer

There was a quality performance turned in last night by the Boise based (and Texas bound) Sleestacks Wednesday night, it was a shame so few actually turned out for the event.

"Their music is amazingly good, considering they got their names from a show where a little guy named Chaka got all the best lines."

According to my eyes, the head count peaked at about 200, and as the band furiously played to an empty ballroom my mind began to wonder where the others might be.

Let's see, the event pitted against a few disadvantages: half-priced drinks at the Garden lounge, a new I-D system that no one seems to understand quite yet (if you showed up without the new I-D you found yourself pitching in two bones) and a policy that forbids under 18 year olds unless accompanied by a gaurdian of some sort or another. Oh, and I showed a minute too late therefore missing the "ala mode" portion of the evening.

Did anyone get any ice cream? I dunno, though next time an "ala mode" portion is promised, the production team here at UI had ought to put a work-study student on the task of assuring me in particular the promised goods. Call me a communist, big spending liberal type if you must, but if ice cream is promised for all, ice cream should be received by all.

I guess the ASUI is afraid of a repeat of the Crazy 8's debacle of last year, oh you know, the "mosh" pit and all, by booking tamer, less aggressive acts anymore. Those can be good too I suppose, as the Sleestacks, witnessed for the second time this semester. I preferred Wednesday night's show, despite the hollow, empty and otherwise flat acoustics of the ballroom because the band seemed a shade more focused and a bit tighter this time out.

It seemed, as the lonely few that gathered around the stage agreed that the "of-age" UI students that stayed through the brief intermission had turned their backs on the last opportunity to cash in on those fifty cent draughts at ten till ten.

Probably the correct moral choice, I mean, why stand in crushed oblivion in a sweat shop lounge downtown when a brilliant outfit was to be had practically to yourself?

Their music is amazingly good, considering they got their names from a show where a little guy named Chaka got all the best lines.

Sleestacks rock the SUB Ballroom.

Seductive film provides break from mainstream sludge

By MEYLA BIANCO
Staff Writer

The film Henry and June is an interesting tale based on a true story of seduction, romance, personal growth and intense sexual relations.

Interestingly enough, it's rating is NC-17 because of a combination of erotica and lesbian sex. In Henry and June, the women involved in such activity suffer no dire consequences such as death or illness as a result of their actions, while other movies that show lesbian sex ending in unpleasant circumstances receive an R rating.

The setting is in Paris in the late twenties or early thirties, mostly in the more fortunate parts of town. The costumes are beautiful, and the sets are lavish. One particular scene showed a street festival, similar to Mardi Gras, in which special effects and the art of film unfold.

The lead character, Anaise, is (unfortunately) also called "Pussywillow" by her husband, Hugo. Anaise is a cosmopolitan searcher, a sheltered individual who is just beginning to feel the power of her newly discovered adulthood. She does this through several adultruous liasons, including a wildly sexual affair with an American writer, Henry, and through a lesbian episode. Yet, the character of Anaise is a skilled actress, and interesting to watch.

Henry is caught up in writing a novel about his wife June and their sexual experiences. (The book was banned in all English speaking nations for years after it was published.) Henry is not only a writer, but an avid and skillful philanderer. He not only sleeps with his wife June on an exceptionally frequent basis, but also with Anaise and various "ladies of the night."

Anaise's husband Hugo is a banker whose job occupies most of his time and his thoughts, but provides an ample cash flow. I found his character dull and annoying.

June, on the other hand, is the complete opposite of boring. She is beautiful and intelligent, and uses this to her advantage. The Brooklyn native spends most of her time searching for something unspecified in the bottom of a bourbon glass. Unfortunately, all she finds is pain. I found June to be the most skilled actress in the film, especially in the "drunken breakdown" department.

Henry and June explores the morality of extramarital affairs, erotic and lesbian sex, yet makes no proclamations for the viewer. Instead, this film leaves you to contemplate these issues yourself. Henry and June is so entertaining because you are prompted to think of things beyond the four sided screen, things you have probably never thought of before, or at least in the same light. Not many movies can boast this.

While I can't say I skipped out of the WSU theater with abundant feelings of happiness or joy, I'm glad. Henry and June is a refreshing change from the usual mainstream sludge. It used creative cinematography, clever transitions and several exceptionally beautiful shots to compliment the relatively complex

The last lines in the movie, spoken by Anaise, typify the theme of personal growth in a memorable way. When she says "I weep now because I will not weep so often after this," and "I weep now because I have become a woman and the process was painful," it is plain to see Anaise has changed and grown.

The first lesbian scene made several people get up and leave, but if you keep your mind open, Henry and June is an entertaining and different movie that you can appreciate on many levels.

Gambino's features Italian meals, fishbowls on menu

By LESLIE ALEXANDER
Staff Writer

Sitting out on a Venezuelan patio with red, white and green umbrellas swirling overhead on a sunny Friday afternoon aptly describes the atmosphere at the well-known Gambino's Italian Restaurant. Located on 6th Street, near Taco Time and the old Murdoch's, Gambino's has become a part of local history as "the" student hangout.

While I sat out on the patio WITHOUT my side kick Arnie, (who will be helping me review bars and restaurants through out the Palouse, but is most notably absent today) I couldn't help but notice the mural on the wall painted by Tod Smith. Cool.

I also noticed college students were the center of the whole scene. The whole patio was literally coated with college people, many of which had fish bowls in hand and garlic bread loaves nearby for appetizers.

For those of you who don't know what a fish bowl is, (HA! HA!) it's a round snifter the size of a fish bowl, (without the fish—that would only cloud the senses) that contains 60 ounces or the equivalent to five beers. And yes, by the time you actually finish it you are definitely swimming like a fish.

A favorite pastime at Gambino's is climbing the ladder, where (for some odd reason) people who want to drink a hellish amount of beer start with a small, sip down a medium, and then end the evening blasted, and bladder-happy, with a fishbowl. Yet, Gambino's does not just serve beer alone for drinks. Their sangria is available by pitcher or glass, and is the closest thing to that official Southern Italian atmosphere since oregano.

Beside the beverages that are a big hit, Pops, the owner of Gambino's, makes sure the food is of top quality; made with only of the freshest ingredients and secret spices.

"The hottest selling items are the lasagna and the combination dinners, which will please the palate," Pops said. The owner of Gambino's for fourteen years now is still going strong, getting customers from all around the Palouse.

By the way, the waitresses and cooks work real hard so don't forget to leave those donations to the needy in the form of T.I.P.S. The word "tips" is an old acronym for "To Insure Prompts Service," and that is the only way to describe the friendly, helpful people serving you there.

Gambino's is a pleasant and relaxing restaurant to go to with your friends or family for lots of fun. Since Arnie isn't around to help me rate it, I'll let you judge for yourself, but I'll have to give it a thumbs-up from my side.

Arnie and I will be reviewing some fine, or not so fine establishments through out the Palouse to let all you party hounds know where all the action is happening. Look for further reviews coming soon. Until then, eat, drink, and be merry!

SHARIN' WITH KARIN

Advice by Karin Mason

Dear Karin,
I have been a staff member at UI for two years now. I picked up the 9/6/91 Argonaut this morning and noticed your column. I was appalled by your insensitivity to the problems of your fellow students.

You might be popular and outgoing, but "Eager to Answer" is obviously new to the college system and probably very shy. That person didn't deserve to be called a "wimp," as you do not deserve to be called Miss Manners. Believe me, you're not.

Your other answer to "The Shrub Jumper" was just as insensitive. A young person loses an eye, a horrible handicap that he/she will carry with them for the rest of their natural lives, and you say, "...tell him to put on a patch and buck up. He'll get over it."

Where do you get off saying things like that to people? I figure you've led a charmed life and believe that bad things only happen to the people that deserve it, or you're a quadriplegic who is not impressed by other peoples silly little problems.

Karin, if people actually go through the trouble of writing down their problems and sending them to you, then they are probably hoping for a sincere and sensitive answer. If this is a problem for you, maybe you should be reporting sports news instead.

Disgusted With Karin

Dear Disgusted,
I appreciate your letter and concern for Shrub Jumper and Eager to Answer. Thanks for writing. However, I really think you should take a load off your strained mind. Relax. You're taking this a bit too seriously. You've obviously failed to realize this is the entertainment section, not Science and Medicine. This is most definitely not anything worth getting hostile about.

My job is to entertain, and from the feedback I've received, I've done my job. Thus far, you are the only one gullible enough to lose sleep over these problems. I understand where Shrub and Eager are coming from, but I have a hard time believing it's from the world of reality. I'm sorry you feel this way, but if you want to waste your stressful energy on something valid, then read the news section.

Also, to be fair, I invite Shrub Jumper and Eager to write back and tell me what they thought of my advice. I'd rather hear complaints from someone whose opinion I might value, than from people who are looking for trouble.

P.S. Next time have the guts to sign your name. I had the guts to print your letter, and to sign mine.

Dear Karin,
My brand of shampoo makes a nice lather, but fails to really get my hair clean. My hands feel oily. They do! I think it might be the hard water found so often in upper Idaho, but I'm not sure.

My Mom tells me that my hair is damaged. I can't believe that's true, either. I want to blame this all on the government, but I haven't had a real lead yet.

Anyway, I've tried other brands, but they all make my head and tender parts itch as the foam trickles down. I feel tragic. Often, still in the shower, I'll stop and realize that the water isn't going, and I have my clothes on.

What should I do? I need shiny hair. I want to know my follicles are happy. I can't live in a society where hair is considered to be less important than other cellular products like toenails. I need to hear the roots singing. La la la.

Love, T.

Dear T.,
It sounds like you have a serious problem on your hands. Have you ever thought of shaving it? I mean, just letting loose and going bare. A bald head is bound to glimmer and shine. That is what you're looking for, isn't it?

Of course, if you don't want a smooth shine, have you ever considered vaseline? I mean, it just may be the answer for you. Rain or shine, clean or polluted water, your hair will always sparkle with a fine layer of lube on it. Before long, your roots will be whistling Dixie.

About your shower problem, you know, when you find yourself in it with your clothes on, I think that's a more deep rooted problem. I'm not sure I can help you, so please contact Dr. Ruth.

Dear Karin,

An upsetting episode in my life has turned my special personal times into emptiness as I have no significant role models to fixate my thoughts upon.

I am willing to move on and acquire someone/something else to dominate these cherishing moments, but I'm not quite sure where to look. Could you send photos to me as well as handwriting samples?

Signed, Stumped

Dear Stumped,
I'm curious about what your upsetting episode was. But, if you won't share, then I will ask my readers to answer this one for me.

Dear Readers,
Please help out Stumped if you feel you are qualified material to be his role model. As he said, he needs photos and handwriting samples. If you feel he needs an inanimate object to share his moments with, please send in a photo of it. Anything is welcomed and encouraged.

Please send these and letters, or whatever you like to the Argonaut, 301 SUB.

Swilly's proves a restaurant's beauty is only skin deep

By TRENT YOUNG
Entertainment Editor

All I really have to ask is how such a beautiful restaurant, loaded with atmosphere, can be so terrible to visit?

Picture this: Early July, in the midst of a big thunderstorm; the sky is orange. Cecile (my fiancée) and I are starving, but, tired of all the fast food Moscow has to offer, we hunger for something new. I grab a phone book and play the "God's-Will-Be-Done" game, where a closed eye and a pointing finger reveal the slippery ways of destiny.

My finger lands on Taco Time. We ignore that suggestion and try again. (A glance back in time reveals that fate was trying to keep us from any digestive harm—we were foolish.) The next time, my hand falls heavily down and the phone book collapses to the floor. Cecile mentions something about F Troop under her breath.

I pick the mess up and notice a name I've wondered about—Swilly's. To me, the name places an image in my mind of a small, brown shack with ripped linoleum and specialty hamburgers in a wide range of grease. I smile. Two of my favorite restaurants anywhere are Lewiston's Zany Graze and Effie Tavern: both of which feature the best in meat 'n bun edibles.

So, to get on with this story, Cecile agrees with my suggestion, and the two of us set out for Pullman at about eight o'clock. We reach the restaurant, and my first big shock arrives—Swilly's isn't a greasy-spoon hamburger dive, it's a New Age (Nouveaux Cuisine) eatery. I notice the ladies clad in expensive summer clothes drinking fancy wines, and the men talking openly about European politics, and I stop.

Cecile (ever the representation of culture upon our relationship) prods me in the side and pushes me through the entrance. I feign sudden illness, but she ignores that and herds me past the "seat yourself" sign towards a small table in the rear. Once seated, I begin to breathe for the first time in fifteen minutes

Looking around, I found my troubled heart put to rest. The music playing was excellent Billie Holiday jazz, and the walls were decked with paintings of unusual origin, blending together to form a little world of tranquility. I took the crayons provided and started to draw on the paper placemats. Waiting for service, Cecile and I drew ... and drew ... and drew.

After about forty-five minutes, a rude little man (whom

"How can such a beautiful restaurant, loaded with atmosphere, be so terrible to visit."

I now assume was the manager) came and took our order. Cecile asked if she could order french fries with her roast beef au jus sandwich. The man just sneered and said that he didn't serve food like chopped greasy potatoes. All was quiet on the Western Front. I ordered a Greek chicken pita sandwich. Cecile ordered a Diet Pepsi, I stuck with my water.

Ten or fifteen minutes later, we got our food. Cecile asked if she might have some ketchup for her sandwich, and the faux-fashion dwarf explained how he didn't have any of that either, (all the while giving us the patented "get out of my place, you hicks" stare that only ex-McDonalds employees can muster) but offered to bring her some special dressing—which turned out to be either tartar sauce and tomato paste, or something stolen from Bonanza.

I looked at my sandwich. The menu said it would be a breast of chicken with grilled mushrooms and onions stuffed into a pita. False Advertising! What I got was some cold chicken strips, no mushrooms, a chunk of fresh red onion and a good deal of some sort of salad (complete with such "usual" sandwich fixin's as shredded cabbage, diced carrots, spinach leaves, and past-due bean sprouts) piled atop a hard, cold, sealed-up pita that I could never manage to actually open, even with my knife.

In disgust, I looked to Cecile, but she wasn't faring much better. Our eyes met. I asked how her sandwich is, and she frowns. "Tastes like tuna fish," she says. I take a taste. Tuna, my dear readers, was much tastier than what my gal was eating, and would've costed about eighty percent less.

The bun was warm, but the meat and cheese were stone cold, and covered with some awful pickle sauce that I would hesitate to feed to convicted criminals.

We tried to flag down our friendly helper-man, but he was off quipping with some others about some "delightful wine" from Los Angeles. In despair compiled with ravenous hunger, we ended up eating most of our awful food, while other patrons whirled around happily, bouncing on air.

Ever tuned-in to my emotions, Cecile whispered across the table, "I'll pay for this if you'll buy some tacos when we get home." I didn't argue, and she shelled-out around twenty-five bucks for our night of eternal blandness. I can't help but wonder, though, at how much better our night would have been had we took our first choice and just gone to Taco Time.

Exercising students find pure energy in aerobics

By ALISA STOFFEL
Staff Writer

Aerobics in Moscow is alive and well. A new outlet thrives on all the energy participants have to offer.

Pure Energy, on Main Street next to the Moscow Gym, offers programs suited for fun and exercise.

Pure Energy's "step" aerobics classes incorporate dance moves with controlled impact movement. Jan Neglay, the owner/manager, explains this combination gives the most efficient workout possible. Vertical movement done on the step intensely works the major muscle groups. That means major fat burning on the thighs.

The primary muscle groups in the arms get a run for their money also. Everyone "follows the leader" as she goes through various dance routines focusing on strengthening the upper body. Emulating the instructor is easy because she wears a microphone and can be heard over the music. She also faces the mirror, so it's easier to follow her.

Being able to see and hear the instructor at all times makes the going a lot more fun, and the calories burn off before you know it.

Jan has been an aerobics instructor for seven and a half years. Before starting Pure Energy, Jan managed another Moscow fitness club. For her, getting the best workout and avoiding injuries is goal one with Jan and the three other instructors who lead classes.

Each instructor is certified by the International Dance Exercise Association and has a current CPR certification. They also attend classes to update their teaching methods.

"I do a lot of 'hands on' work to correct misalignment," said Jan. Participants react differently to this method. Most are surprised initially, but soon begin to appreciate the individual care given to each student.

Students appear to learn faster from the one-on-one attention. An attendance incentive program encourages everyone to make all the classes and enjoy the results.

"I am an educator, not just a person who shouts orders," Jan explains. Part of her education includes an initial fitness assessment. Flexibility, blood pressure, and pulse are measured during a ten minute step test. Jan discovers and helps to develop each student's goals in order to build an individualized portfolio. This is all done free of charge.

When the preliminary work is done, the neophyte joins the class. The Monday, Wednesday, and Friday classes are 75 minutes long and are split into three sections. The first 10-12 minutes is used as a warmup. The next 40 minutes is the fast paced cardiovascular workout. The last 15 minutes are devoted to strengthening exercises and relaxation.

Suitable music accompanies each stage, and sets the pace for the workout. Because Jan has "a real thing about canned aerobics music," she makes her own tapes. It takes about five hours to make a quality tape. "I've got a lot of myself in these tapes," Jan admits.

"Being able to see and hear the instructor at all times makes the going a lot more fun, and the calories burn off before you know it."

Every month 150 students respond to Jan's music and her methods. Her program has "well exceeded (her) expectations." Almost all the classes are full, and students must register for the times they want to attend. To make room for new people, Jan is beginning two new classes September 17. These are expected to fill up quickly, so get your name in!

Many pardons. Miss Mahalo has gone to watch the Cattle Demons of Awagura in a celebrity bout with the girls from Facts of Life and won't be back 'till next week. In the meantime, I will endeavor to read the stars for your benefit.

ARIES: People with hair like mine should try to use lots of gel. People with no hair don't need gel. I see a man running down an alley wearing a polo shirt and screaming about the rain. Avoid stores with pickled herring displayed too prominently.

TAURUS: (No, I'm not putting the dates for these in—you should know your sign by now) My cards are telling me that beyond the door is another door filled with fun and prizes. Something strange and warbled is broadcasted... do not be taken in by shinehead drones no matter how attractive their salespitch. Delta Burke isn't on TV anymore, so find a new role model for your pain.

GEMINI: Get a horse, know where you leave the horse, and make sure that the horse is here. I was the tree and the tree was me. A dollar is a hundred pennies pressed into paper.

CANCER: See my coated tongue, love my coated tongue. Mail that letter. If you see an old, drunk man in the bar with no money asking people for drinks, then by all means give him your Discover card. Maybe he can charge enough to beef-up your annual cash-back bonus. Wear more copper.

LEO: A name of power, and the name of my favorite toy as a child. My Mother sewed the little lion by hand when she was just two months away from her tragic death by the combine. He stayed with me for many years, until the one fatal day when fire gutted our house and turned him to a pile of goo. I miss him.

VIRGO: Malcolm McDowell will assume a new state of prominence in your dreams, and Mickey Rourke will wear an abnormal amount of white lip gloss. Some will say having two girlfriends is wrong, but you disagree, since you want to branch-out into other adventures. Bi-sexuality is an option that the real poker players will consider.

LIBRA: Stevie Wonder has some sight, or so your psychic powers tell you, and that fact will lead you to Washington (probably Pullman) to make the truth known. (Although I see the people at Budget records kicking your butt.) A strange, savage dog near your trash will find some dirty diapers and try to scatter them near your window. Don't interfere. The dog will die soon enough.

SCORPIO: Contrary to popular belief, Kevin Costner is British. A small woman with a bag of bagels will come and talk frankly about her son, "Ted." If female, tell her that you're not interested and walk away. If male, tell her that "Ted" sounds nice enough to eat, and quote The Satanic Bible: "For I tell you, nothing is more pleasing to Lucifer than a naked Ted on a wafer." New friends are in the making this month!

SAGITTARIUS: A young girl will walk into your house and claim that she lives there. Kick her out. A small man with one arm who likes to dance will also appear, but he will be looking for a young girl. Invite him in and put on some music. As the hips sway, so will fortune smile like Lorne Green down upon you.

CAPRICORN: Find your true KARMA. She will be available on Main for free physical evaluations; she has not seen another man worthy of her love since the mid seventies. Wear something slick and non-flammable. Garlic is a bonus.

AQUARIUS: Drown your sorrows in liquid love. (Hidden smile.) KARMA says that you are welcome, too. That's Main Street, near the Pipeline. (Hidden smile, glint of hushed sexuality reaching the breaking point.) I was joking about the garlic, it causes rashes. Buy some nutmeg.

PISCES: Whoopi Goldberg will eat sushi, and for a moment the food and consumer will be virtually indistin-

Writer melts over new ice cream flavors

By MEYLA BIANCO
Staff Writer

At one point or another in your life, you have undoubtedly sampled one of my favorite reasons to go on living: ice-cream. Whether your experience was limited to the more common Neopolitan or your taste buds were aroused by the sensuous Peanut Butter Coffee Parfait, unless you are lactose intolerant, it was probably the high point of your day.

Ice cream has influenced my life in so many ways, that I feel I have a responsibility to recount just one incident so that you too can benefit from the food nirvana I call ice cream.

Once, on a family vacation, after having endured seven full hours of automobile travel with my immediate family, I was understandably suicidal. As I teetered on the outermost rim of the Spaceneedle, the Seattle mist in my hair and thoughts of permanent termination of family related endeavors frighteningly tempting, I was saved.

Miraculously, I had spied a dripping and luscious Goo Goo Cluster ice cream cone in the hand of a young child far below, and thus, a reason to live. I had a complete attitude adjustment. Life was no longer a collage of leering parents, or cramped family wagons, or stinky hotel rooms with complimentary cellophane showercaps.

It was an opportunity to sample the flavors of the world, from ice milk to the decadence of Haagen Daz. I wanted to live and spread the faith.

Now I have been blessed with the mighty power of the pen and can help save people, with ice cream knowledge. This week's vital ice cream review tells of the value of one flavor I feel is important and beneficial to humanity, made by Ben and Jerry of wide spread fame, otherwise known as the Funklords of Ice Cream.

Ben and Jerry's Chunky Monkey is a satisfying blend of banana ice cream, walnuts and chocolate chunks with SURPRISE: no preservatives! The word "flavored" does not appear in the ingredients, denoting plastic, or waxy tasting substances, always a plus.

Finally, a great ice cream with no chemical additives to make you sit up in bed at night, or walk into doors in the daytime.

This Ben and Jerry's masterpiece is smooth and creamy yet tropical and exotic with just the right ratio of walnuts to chocolate chunks. It makes you want to Hula in your kitchen, even though it was made in Vermont.

At a steep $2.59 per pint, some individuals who have not yet felt the power of the Funklords, may balk. Do not be afraid. Blow the money on something you'll enjoy thoroughly rather than on six blocks worth of gas for your car.

While Chunky Monkey is monetarily relatively precious, amazing flavors exist that are unbelievably cheap compared to the ecstasy that they provide.

Take Rosauer's "Whoppers" for instance. It is a flavor so unique and exquisite few words do it justice, yet it costs a mere $1.57 per half gallon. (Something to keep in mind on one of those late nights when you need something, but don't want to be in pain when you wake up.) "Whoppers" is a chocolate malt flavor chock full of drool-inducing "Whoppers" candies.

Many flavors are works of art in themselves, but if you're really serious about ice cream (like me) you realize that ice cream alone is not always the only option. Add condiments and compliments. Not ketchup or paper napkins, but like Hershey's syrup and plenty of imported beer. Especially, eat too much at one sitting and gain five pounds overnight. Remember; too much is never enough. Eat it in mixing bowls. Have a bowl as a mid-morning snack.

Ceremony pays tribute to missing soldiers

A public ceremony honoring prisoners of war and families with members missing in action will be held at the University of Idaho on September 19. Scheduled for north of the UI Administration Building, the proceedings will begin at 11:45 a.m.

The ceremony will demonstrate community support for ongoing efforts to account for those still listed as MIAs. The event is being held in conjunction with POW/MIA Recognition Week, September 16-20, as proclaimed by President Bush.

The local ceremony is jointly hosted by the Army, Air Force and Naval ROTC units at the UI, and by local posts of the American Legion and Veterans of Foreign Wars.

Lieutenant Colonel Michael P. Whiles, state safety director for the Idaho National Guard, will be the guest speaker. Lieutenant Colonel C.L.

"Dutch" Pullmann, professor of Military Science at the UI Army ROTC, will serve as master of ceremonies.

Guests of Honor will include several family members of service personnel still listed as missing in action and military members who were Prisoners of War during World War II and the Vietnam conflict.

The ceremony is open to the public. People coming from off-campus are being asked to park at the Kibbie-ASUI Activity center where a shuttle will be provided to the ceremony site. In the event of rain, the ceremony will be held in the Kibbie Dome.

war and terrorism. But, right now its curriculum is in limbo, according to Hamilton.

The Institute no longer wishes to associate with only one area of the university, but wishes to expand into interdisciplinary courses involving many different studies. The reasoning behind this is all areas are involved in conflicts that need to be resolved. Much knowledge could be gained from the study of how each area has resolved conflicts in the past. Hamilton mentioned the schools of forestry, law, and philosophy as examples. Hamilton wants to commit the Institute to interdisciplinary courses but they are still in the progress of being formed.

Family members will try and get you to admit that the love you're now experiencing is just infatuation, but they know

Through all of this, the Institute appears lofty and out of reach for the mere college student. And after direct questioning, Hamilton admitted the Institute's direct involvement with students seemed to be embarrassingly small. He also outlined the Institute's future plans to be more accessible.

At this time, Hamilton is trying to begin a conflict resolution service where students can receive help for personal problems, much like the legal aid clinic serviced by the law school.

Not only would students benefit from this service, but it would give the Institute a chance to become more involved and allow Institute scholars and students a chance to gain practical experience in the area of conflict resolution.

The Institute is also trying to integrate its 3,500 piece private library into the university's main library branch to allow students more access. As it is now, any student can check out a book but few know where to find the Institute in the Continuing Education building. By integrating the library, more students will have access to the books and the Institute will gain more recognition among the student body.

For now, the Institute is trying to create new courses for the curriculum, and providing speakers on the subject of peace and conflict resolution. In the future, we may see more of the Institute's name and understand its goals and aspirations.

"analyzing them."
"I'm not, it would not be appropriate for me to try to act as a counselor," he said.

Godwin said he likes his job because of his contact with other people. He is involved in some way with every aspect of a student's life. His office oversees Admissions, Student Health, Student Advisory Services, New Student Services and student government, just to name a few. But it's the human contact that keeps him coming to work.

"I enjoy people. That is a motivator. It's gratifying to have an effect on social change."

Godwin spends a lot of time with students and says he's working to build more student leaders. He doesn't see his job as being a spokesman for the students, but says he speaks for them.

He keeps tabs on how students feel about professors and staff. Godwin said if a student is treated poorly, he wants to know about it.

"Students have a choice about where they want to go to school. They are the clients. If someone treats a student rudely, they'll get a call from me," he said.
