Phi Beta Sigma fraternity receives charter

By MATT LAWSON
Editor

The first traditionally black fraternity in Idaho was adopted during a chartering ceremony on the University of Idaho campus September 29.

Seven African-American students at the UI were pinned as members of Phi Beta Sigma Fraternity, Inc. by the fraternity's national president Carter Womack.

The fraternity's motto is "Culture for Service and Service for Humanity" as announced by Taylor, who will serve as the President.

"It felt like a dream of ours had finally come true and we were happy that all the hard work paid off to get a charter started," Taylor said of the ceremony. "We felt good that we had a lot of commitment from the community and we are glad that we will have their support."

The ceremony included speeches by President Womack, Theresa Williams, the Development Coordinator at Washington State University and Munique Briggs, the 2nd Vice Regional Director of Phi Beta Sigma.

"The ultimate measure of a man is not where he stands in times of comfort, but where he stands in times of challenge and controversy," said Womack who is also the executive vice president of Black Collegiate Magazine. "We are visionaries, proud of our past, but building on our future."

The charter became the first charter to receive a key to the city of Moscow from Mayor Paul Agidius along with a presentation from the Director of the Women's Center Besty Thomas.

The University of Idaho Interfraternity Council and Panhellenic Council officially recognized the fraternity at the ceremony along with a welcome from Vice President of Student Affairs Dr. Hal Godwin and ASUI President Mike Gotch.

"It was a historic day for the state of Idaho and this university," Godwin said. "It helps us to create a real sense of community for African-Americans and people of different cultural backgrounds."

Bennie Harris, the Idaho State Director of Phi Beta Sigma, presented the pins to the members.

"I am very excited about the young men who have been chartered and what they have done," Harris said. "I am also excited about how the university along with the Moscow community embraced and welcomed our national president. We look forward to the partnership that will now exist with the University of Idaho and Phi

BSU moves on without Keiser

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

The September 20 firing of Boise State University President Dr. John Keiser has resulted in varying levels of response from students and officials all over the state of Idaho.

The Associated Student Body President for BSU, Tamara Sandmeyer, represents a segment of students at Boise State who would like Dr. Keiser to be reinstated. Their rationale is that any charges of improprieties leveled against Keiser haven't been proven. In addition, Sandmeyer objected to the fact that Keiser didn't receive due process when he was fired.

Sandmeyer also indicated that reports surrounding Keiser's refusal to litigate against the Idaho State Board of Education are false.

"Dr. Keiser is planning on a lawsuit charging the Idaho State Board of Education with breach of due process," said Sandmeyer.

Supporting Sandmeyer is Idaho Governor Cecil Andrus who issued a recent statement asking the State Board of Education to reconsider the firing. His objection was to the method of Keiser's firing, but according to Sandmeyer, Andrus himself can't reverse the board's decision.

Sandmeyer indicated that the Idaho State Legislature can reverse this decision.

However, she said the most important factor was the legislature's ability to recall or force resignations from board members. Sandmeyer said that supporters of Keiser would actively seek resignation from Idaho State Board of Education members.

There is also a faction of people who adamantly support the Idaho State Board of Education's decision to fire Keiser. Jane Foraker-Thompson, an associate professor of criminal justice at BSU, said eighty to ninety percent of the students supported Keiser's firing. She indicated that the free flow of Today, the University of Idaho will welcome the first Director of Admissions in twelve years.

Peter T. Brown was chosen to take on the new responsibility of Director of Admissions. He was selected from a nation wide search that was narrowed down to a panel of thirty candidates.

Over a decade ago the Director's position and the Admissions office combined to form one office to manage the Admissions affairs. This year the University came to the conclusion that an additional professional was needed to manage admissions policies and procedures.

Mr. Brown will serve as a liaison with university vice presidents, deans, administrative officials, faculty, and non-university personnel on matters related to admissions. He will also be responsible for all admissions policies and procedures, establishing and directing marketing and recruitment programs for prospective students, and overseeing all processing activities.

In addition to these duties, ideas had stopped at BSU

ORVs causing damage

By SHARI IRETON

These days, though the environment is on all of our minds, people seldom realize that acts like driving just once across a pristine meadow once can ruin its ecology forever.

Last Wednesday night, Jonathon Stoke of the Idaho Conservation League and member of the Sierra Club, came to the University of Idaho to speak about the problem of off road vehicles (ORVs) on public lands.

Senators state goals for term

By STEVE CORDA
Asst. News Editor

A survey was handed out to the members of the ASUI Senate asking them to, "Please list your two personal goals for this year's Senate."

The following is a list of who responded and what they said.

*Senator Gary Botts

1. My primary goal is to be responsible to my living groups and to adequately reflect their ideas in the ASUI.

2. I feel any projects we can do to improve the relations between residence halls and Greeks would be beneficial. I have lived on both sides and I know there are things that the ASUI Senate can do to help.

*Senator Amtul-Mannan Sheikh

1. My main goal is to keep trying to get International Students and Minority Students involved with the ASUI. I have spent this past year speaking to various groups and recruiting members to ASUI boards and committees. International and minority students need to realize that they are a part of the ASUI also, we all can make the ASUI better. I'd like to see more off-campus students involved with student activities. Off-campus students represent the majority of UI students, but we lack in representation. It would be great if off-campus students could join boards, committees, or run for senate.

2. I also want to see a campus bus going from Moscow to Pullman. It's in the works now and I have spoken to a few people about it, and am gathering information on it.

*Senator Amy Anderson

1. To form a students' tenant union. There have been numerous complaints from fellow students regarding problems with their landlords. I would like to start this organization for students to resolve these types of problems.

2. ASUI sponsored semesterly all-campus activity. This will include faculty, staff and students. I believe this is something we need on our campus so there can be interaction between the different groups. I am currently planning a "Winter Extravaganza" which will include an assortment of "games" and activities. Further details will be available after the plans become finalized.

*Senate Pro-Tom Bill Heffner

1. Get the University to expand its campus wide recycling program by making a financial commitment in the next budget. I worked to establish a recycling program in the Student Union Building, and it's worked great. It is about time the University brought its program up to par by hiring several full time staff and increasing its work study program.

2. To insure that students interests are looked after during the next legislative session. More and more state legislative action affects students in Idaho when pre-paid tuition legislation, minimum wage legislation, or student fee increases are an issue. We need to focus on the legislature and lobby for our interests.

*Senator Charles D'Alessio

1. To increase awareness about programs, monies available through ASUI and positions throughout the ASUI for students. Ultimately, I would like to see more student involvement in ASUI. There is much ASUI can offer to all students.

2. Another goal I have is to see more student involvement in the Financial Aid Committee. There are many ambiguities about paperwork and processes involved in ascertaining financial aid. We need to clear up some questions.

*Senator Brad Moeller

1. Satisfy the students, whatever it takes to get more people aware and involved with the ASUI.

2. Focus on the area of ASUI communications. The ASUI must set goals in this area yearly, this year's goals are looking great.

*Senator Brian Oswald

1. Get a bill to change the way Senators are elected through the Senate and on the ballot by November for student vote.

2. Get ASUI more involved in UI programs like Women's Center, Day Care, non traditional student programs, etc.

*Senator Jeff A. McClain

1. My first goal is to serve and represent the students the best way I know how, and that starts by fulfilling all of my obligations. My first personal goal, however, is to work on the ASUI rules and regulations (as rules and regulations chairman-this is an ideal and lengthy job). I have already begun to work toward this goal and will combine to screen new bills from both a legal and constitutional standpoint.

2. My second personal goal is to work on election reform and try to reorganize the way things are done in the ASUI (Yes, I am agreeing with Senator Oswald.) We have already targeted the on campus groups as much as possible (i.e. roving polling booths). It is now time to start targeting the off campus groups.

*Senator Brent Carr

1. Develop a working relationship with each of my living groups and fellow senators. This will enable me to know how the students feel about different issues. That way, my votes on different issues won't be off the top of my head but from the student body.

2. Further research into what is becoming an annual fee increase at the University of Idaho. The university officials are continually asking for fee increases which has raised questions of placement and reasoning from students of the university. Also the parking situation on and around campus still needs more work and development.

*Senator Allison J. Lindholm

1. This year, I would like to see duties and responsibilities of the ASUI Parliamentarian outlined and defined in the Rules and Regulations. The amendment is in the process of going through the Senate, and I would like to see it pass.

2. I would also like to see increased responsibility of the Senators to the living groups and colleges. I feel that since we, as Senators, are elected by the students, we should be responsive to their ideas and opinions.

under Keiser, and that the university no longer had an atmosphere of enlightenment.

Most people, however, are ready to move on from this event. The Boise State University Alumni Director, Dyke Nally, indicated his people are in the midst of preparing for BSU's homecoming week.

"We are really a big factory that is too busy to shut down because of something like this...we just have to move on," Nally said.

Another person indicating it was time to move on from this incident was Idaho Lieutenant Governor Butch Otter. In a memorandum issued Thursday, September 26 he indicated that although "the firing of President Keiser has been devastating and had harmful potential effects...there can be some visionary opportunities to change this situation."

Stoke said most of the damage on public lands is caused by the first pass of a vehicle.

"Desert habitats are extremely fragile and have to have time to heal", said Stoke. He also said "wet areas are probably the most susceptible to environmental damage."

He said that ORV users like to test the machine strength of a motorcycle against the steepness of a grade of certain hills.

Stoke believes not only are ORV's environmentally damaging, but so are humans traveling on foot.

Although they cause much environmental damage, ORV users have been trying to patrol their own people. For example, motorcycle riders will clean up the trails after long distance open desert races, such as the ones in Southern Idaho.

In the Moscow area, the local trail motorcycle club, Latah Trail Riders, have spent several days a year doing volunteer clean up on the trails, an estimated $8,000 worth of volunteer maintenance.

Stoke had three suggestions for citizens who have a complaint about public land use.

First, citizens should be put on mailing lists for public hearings and meetings concerning public lands. Second, attend the forest service forest planning meetings, which occur about every ten to fifteen years. Third, attend the travel planning meetings which may take place yearly.

"Good government is responsive to citizen concerns," said Stoke.

Although in many areas of the United States the damage from ORV's is extreme, Hank Johnson of the Forest Service Potlatch Research Center, says the Moscow area does not seem to suffer the same damage.

Tired of Keystone? Brew your own beer

By KALISTA BARCLAY
Asst. News Editor

For beer drinkers this year is a dream come true.

Homebrewing Introduction, a class offered by The University of Idaho Enrichment Program on Oct. 3, provides students with an opportunity to learn the basics of homebrewing. The one session class is taught by Kane Franetich, the president of the Palouse Homebrew Club and a homebrewer with five years of experience. Franetich will explain how beer is made, the history of brewing and how to make your first batch of homebrew. Recipes and take-home samples will be available, but no tasting is allowed since the class is university sponsored. The class will be from 7-9:30 p.m. in Home Economics room 101, and there is a $23 registration fee in addition to a $1 supplies fee.

According to Mary Lou Thompson, Enrichment Program coordinator, this is the first time a class in homebrewing has been offered. The enrichment office reviews classes offered by similar programs at universities all over the United States. It does this in order to get ideas for programs which have worked on these other campuses.

Thompson said that students have expressed interest in the subject of homebrewing, and that a wine class was offered by the enrichment program a couple of years ago. According to her, it was well-received at this time.

"There is an interest there and people are happy to see the class offered," Thompson said.

For those who have dabbled in beer making themselves, or those whose interest has been sparked by this first class, a four session class, Creative Homebrewing will be offered Thursdays, Oct. 10-31 from 7-9:30 in Home Economics room 101. This class, also taught by Kane Franetich, will offer hands-on experience in homebrewing and a more in-depth look at a wide variety of beers. Students will get a better understanding of the ingredients and processes of beer-making including the things that affect the taste of beer. Demonstrations with different grains, malts, hops and brewing waters are scheduled and students will work with not only beer but mead and rausch (smoked beer) as well, according to Thompson.

The final class will be a bring-a-friend-to-class session for "the tasting of the many different beer styles of the world." This last class session is scheduled to be held at an off-campus site in order for taste testing. This class is limited to 15 students and 12 are registered presently. There is a $39 registration fee and a $8 supplies fee.

OPINION

Edited by Larry Olsen
Opinion Desk - 208-7715

Lack of visual literacy damaging in our society

All the senses come into play in our everyday lives, but it is the sense of sight that the vast majority of people in our society rely on most. We are bombarded by visual images from the moment we awaken in the morning until we turn in at night.

The day starts with the television news blaring while the paper is being read. The drive to work or walk to school has billboards and store signs screaming their messages at us. Movies, television and magazines are ways in which we visually entertain ourselves after we have been overloaded with images all day.

The problem that arises from all this exposure is that we start taking too many things for granted. Literacy in America is big news but visual literacy is a skill which most of us are lacking. News stories are in theory unbiased; however, the reader of a news story normally understands that the writer's biases have been added even in a best case scenario. A photograph, conversely, is assumed by the viewer to be absolute fact. This is where the danger arises.

For evidence look at the number of people who buy the tabloids that are displayed at the supermarket checkout stand. On the covers we see aliens from outer space, celebrities together that have never met and Elvis sighted all over the world. The photos that are used are shoddy cut-and-paste jobs that are done using an x-acto knife or a razor blade. There isn't even an attempt to make the photos look real, yet people by the droves choose to believe them and buy these publications.

Another form of manipulation is used when a photographer shoots an image that will deceive the viewer either intentionally or unintentionally. A small group of ten or 20 peaceful protestors can be changed into a frothing angry mob by the use of proper equipment and shooting angles. Even if the photographer doesn't intend to show a biased view, it is inevitable. Every person observes an event differently, and each photographer will record it differently.

The latest step that has come into widespread use is the use of digital separations. Photographs are scanned into a computer in order to be screened for the printing process that newspapers and magazines require. While the digital information is in the computer it can be manipulated so easily and cleanly that it is virtually impossible to detect the changes. The cut-and-paste jobs that look so bad in the tabloids suddenly appear on TV Guide in the form of Oprah Winfrey's face on Ann Margrett's body. It is in the mainstream folks.

The truly scary thing is this technology is now in use locally. A couple of weeks ago, the Lewiston Morning Tribune ran a photo of the previous day's WSU football game. The photo had a strange look to it. What had been done was the photo had been electronically stretched to fit the space that had been allotted. While this doesn't seem extreme, it must be remembered that if this was done who knows what will be next? Will the electronic cut and paste come to the local level?

We must all attempt to become visually literate. Unfortunately this will require us to become skeptics of everything that we see.

Red tape getting frustrating

Editor;

The bureaucracy is in full swing at the U of I!

Upon returning to the Residence Halls this year I discovered that the meal plan I had chosen was inadequate for this semester. I decided to switch to a smaller meal plan. I was informed by University Dining Services that my refund would be ready within ten days at the Controller's Office. This was three weeks ago. I am still waiting, yet not so patiently anymore, for my refund. I have been turned in circles for the past three weeks by the Controller's Office and UDS. Apparently, the two groups are in disagreement over who should refund the money. I have been told three times now that officials from the Controller's Office and UDS are "holding meetings" to get the situation straightened out. I don't know about you but I would think that after three weeks of meetings, they could have figured something out!

I know that I am not the only person awaiting a refund. From my understanding, there are over a dozen others also waiting. Most of us are in desperate need of the money and have bills to pay.

My suggestions to the Con-

Suicide prevention options insensitive

At one time or another, the thought of suicide has crossed everyone's mind. Fortunately, most people don't carry this thought into action. There is, however, a tremendous number of people who try and succeed in killing themselves. In order to comprehend the magnitude of this problem a person simply needs to look at an ominous national statistic listing suicide as the second leading cause of death among teenagers behind accidents.

In order to understand this problem for myself I spent Sunday afternoon trying to recreate the steps a potentially suicidal person might take. I decided a person contemplating suicide would first try and communicate his problem with a friend, parent or counselor.

So I opened up the yellow and blue pages to see what counseling was available. I was very angered to see roughly half of the advertisements were for professional psychologists who expected to be paid for their work. The remaining half of the advertisements were for free counseling, but with one catch: they all had sweet-sounding recorded messages telling me that if I called during business hours someone could help me with my problem. Oh, I see, if I'm feeling suicidal then I just need to make sure it is between 8 a.m.

Doug Taylor

and 5 p.m. Okay, I'm feeling suicidal, but it's only 7:30 a.m., so I guess I'm screwed.

From this point I went into the white pages and looked under suicide. I found an organization that called itself the "Suicide Prevention Helpline," and so I dialed the 1-800 number to get some information. Surprise, another prerecorded message told me that if I had a real problem I could call the operator or 911. If I wanted to talk to someone from their agency, however, I could call a 900 number which would charge me 25 cents for the first minute and $2.50 for every minute thereafter. After two minutes of this insensitive rambling, I became convinced there wasn't any help available whatsoever for a suicidal person.

My last resort for some human contact on this subject was the Palouse Regional Crisis Hotline. I couldn't reach anyone at the Moscow number, and so I tried the Pullman number where I finally found a human voice.

The lady I talked to, Margaret Coahran, was incredibly helpful in trying to clarify any statistical questions I had about suicide. This is the kind of person that should be available to everyone with problems because she sounded like someone who could be implicitly trusted.

I talked with her for a few minutes about the problems I had encountered earlier in trying to reach someone, and I specifically

War views very annoying

Editor:
While having a casual conversation with a woman on the new U.S. troop movements back into the Middle East, she made the comment that it seemed all the money, time and lives spent on the war didn't have the desired effect. Hussein is still in power and back at his same old games. I noddingly agreed, and prepared to end the conversation, adding with complete sincerity it was really a pity the man was still breathing.

At this point, turning for the door I noticed a dark-haired young woman sitting in a chair, contempt for me welling up from her obviously enraged (deranged?) eyes.

"But what a waste of innocent lives!" She spat at me, adding something about having a parade for that was nauseating.

"I guess we're just fortunate that there were so few American deaths," I added solemnly, hoping to make my retreat before she could drag out signs of Jane Fonda and peace symbols, and hit me with them.

"No, I'm not talking about American lives, I'm talking about the Iraqis!" she said, with tears of liberal compassion welling up.

The Iraqis???

First of all, lady, in a war, anyone in uniform is fair game, so on that count there were no "innocent" Iraqis. They all had the option, which many of them capitalized on, of taking off across the desert and surrendering before the bombs began to fall, and they were to give their lives for Allah.

Secondly, the number of Iraqi civilian deaths attributed to American bombs, etc., was so minimal (due to sophisticated "smart bomb" weaponry employed) that when placed in the context of such a huge military campaign, again your point is moot.

Lastly, I hope that you can for one moment wipe away the clouds of 60's liberalism that fog your view of things, and see this: the celebrations and parades that took place for the troops returning home from the war acted as vents, to release built up anxieties and fears of large scale American death that thankfully never happened. They were not celebrations of the death and destruction caused by the coalition forces. They were instead celebrations for the life that was returning to us--over 99.9% of those deployed. Isn't that worth celebrating?

-Mike Steele

mentioned the "Suicide Prevention Helpline" number. She agreed it was absolutely unacceptable. From there I asked her about how her agency is funded. She told me funding comes entirely from the local level, and that state and federal subsidizing is nonexistent.

After I had ended my conversation with Margaret, I began to think how frustrated and angry a suicidal person might feel in trying to find someone to talk to. Don't get me wrong, Margaret, you were the only real person I talked to all day, and you are someone who could really help a potentially suicidal person with problems he or she was having. My gripe stems from the fact there are so few Margaret Coahrans and too many people who either want to be paid an ungodly amount of money for counseling, or are content in giving callers a prerecorded voice. With no one to talk to, a person considering suicide is only reinforced into believing suicide will end their loneliness and suffering.

What needs to happen is a recognition that suicide is an enormous problem that needs to be handled seriously. Most people thinking about suicide simply want someone to talk to, but if they don't have anyone to talk to, what does this do to their self-worth?

In addition, Margaret Coahran's statement about lack of funding from the state and federal level needs to be addressed. Can't a government that claims to be "by the people for the people" fund programs for a segment of its population that is killing itself? I hope the answer is yes, because young people everywhere are killing themselves and nobody seems to care (Note: The number for the Palouse Regional Crisis Line is 332-1505).

Mr. Brown will supervise the development of computer-based admissions systems and direct programs related to identification and selection of freshmen scholarship candidates, in cooperation with other university activities. Other obligations which accompany Brown's job are delegating people to represent the university at high schools and colleges.

The new director will be implementing staff training programs, supervising the development of publications, forms and applications. Brown will also be required to perform auxiliary duties for special projects and institutional committees as assigned by the vice president for student affairs.

A master's degree, administrative experience, knowledge of the principles and practices of admissions, and knowledge of academic and fiscal operations of universities were the qualifications necessary to apply for the position of Director of Admissions. Considerable skills in written and verbal communication, effective intrapersonal skills and an understanding of the role of admissions were also required.

Brown has considerable job experience. He has been Dean of Admissions for Lewis and Clark College in Portland, Oregon since 1984 and previously worked in the Admissions office at Dartmouth College in New Hampshire.

Women weave for worthy cause

By ALISA STOFFEL
Staff Writer

Today, hand woven Guatemalan clothing will be selling in the SUB. The Coalition for Central America has organized the sale in cooperation with 'A Thread of Hope', a women's weaving cooperative which allows Mayan women to maintain their tradition and support their families. These women's husbands have been killed or have "disappeared," most likely due to the ruthless, army-controlled government.

These people "have been exploited as a result of conquest", said Christy Mundt, an office coordinator for the coalition.

A Thread of Hope was started by marketing the crafts made by Guatemalan refugees in Chiapas, Mexico in 1983. The cooperative enables them to sell their products themselves. In 1990, a New Year's dividend of $7 was paid to each of the 150 weavers, and a cooperative thread store was established for participants to weave their own clothes. Money was allocated for a medical insurance plan which pays half the cost of medicine and treatment for those in need. Two health professionals from the United States spent days attending to the needs of the women and children involved.

In February 1990, they organized into the legal Association Maya de Desarrollo, which has seven directors and a budget. This association holds a title to its land and workshop.

Confidence and determination have driven the women to believe si podemos, (we can) rather than the more commonly heard nostros non sabemos nada, (we don't know anything). The women now produce materials and sell them through the coalition, which acts as an outlet.

The coalition has successfully backed other projects to help

South American people in need, as well. On Aug. 5, the coalition sent 24,300 pounds of clothing and sewing supplies to Nicaragua. Donations were accepted from the Palouse, Spokane, Boise, Missoula, Alaska, and even Kansas. Donations came from peace groups, schools, and churches.

Actor Mike Farrell spoke in Moscow, and a concert with L'Orchestra Afrisound and Planetary People helped to raise money.

"Providing humanitarian aid and changing foreign policy" are the aims of the Coalition, said Skott Larsen, office coordinator for the coalition. But their actions are not "purely political" adds Larsen; rather, they strive to "diffuse cultural information" and educate the community about the atrocities in Central America.

The coalition meets at the Campus Christian Center every two weeks. The next meeting is Oct. 6, at 7:30 p.m. Everyone is welcome.

Beta Sigma Fraternity."

University of Idaho President Dr. Elisabeth Zinser met with the charter members Monday to discuss the goals and expectations of Phi Beta Sigma.

"Phi Beta Sigma is going to make a wonderful opportunity to students who join and the students on campus," Zinser said. "They are eager, but want to start slowly and spend more time learning and listening."

The idea of adopting the charter on the UI campus came in 1988 when former University of Idaho student Leland Allen was initiated at the University of Washington's chapter.

The chapter considers themselves service oriented individuals who want to be more a part of the community. Phi Beta Sigma, nationally, works with organizations such as the The National Pan-Hellenic council, the National Association for the Advancement of Colored People, the National Urban League, March of Dimes Birth Defects Foundation, and the National Boys' Club of America.

While Phi Beta Sigma is for African-American men Womack and Taylor said it is open to men of all races. The fraternity, which was founded in 1914 at Howard University, has more than 92,000 members in 600 chapters throughout the continental United States, Switzerland and Africa.

N. Iowa humbles Vandals, 36-14

Vandals fall from top 10 in loss

By CHRISTOPHER GATEWOOD
Sports Editor

Saturday at the ASUI Kibbie Dome the University of Idaho Vandals died a quick death. Rather than bleeding to death slowly, the Vandals fell apart and shot themselves in the head.

The second ranked Vandals committed four turnovers in their first four possessions of the third quarter and were handled by the 17th ranked Northern Iowa Panthers, 36-14, in front of 11,500 disappointed and silent fans.

The loss drops the Vandals to 3-1 on the season and the dream of this week's one vs. two match-up with the University of Nevada Wolfpack won't materialize. NIU is also 3-1 and will surely move back up in the rankings. The Vandals will likely drop out of the top 10. It was their worst loss to a non Division I opponent since losing 38-7 to Furman in the 1988 playoffs.

"We fell apart all the way around," said Vandal head coach John L. Smith. "The longer we let them stay in the game, the more confidence they got. They're a good football team and they did what they had to do to win."

The Vandals led 14-13 at half-time, but things turned sour quickly. On the fourth play of the third quarter quarterback Doug Nussmeier threw the first of his his three interceptions right into the waiting arms of linebacker William Freeny.

UI better show next week

Yes, Idaho played one of the worst football games I have seen the Vandals play during my four years at this university.

But what really happened Saturday?

Who is there to blame and why did the Vandals lose?

The bottom line is that everyone is to blame and no fingers can be pointed at a particular player or coach.

The only thing that should have been pointed at was the scoreboard when it read 36-14 with no time remaining.

Idaho flat out lost and it is time to come back to reality.

The Idaho Vandals will not go undefeated this season.

There it is in writing and now it is time to move on.

Only one thing should be on the minds of the players, coaches and fans at this university.

That just happens to be a team from Nevada that has the No.1 next to its name.

The Nevada Wolf Pack is the best team in the nation until proven otherwise.

Forget about all the hype of the No.1 Nevada Wolf Pack playing the No.2 Idaho Vandals in the Kibbie Dome Saturday because both teams play in I-AA where rankings, other than being in the top 16 at the end of the regular season, don't really matter.

Sure it's nice to be the top ranked team in the country, but the only ranking that counts is the one decided in Statesboro, Ga. come Dec. 21.

People seem to forget that Idaho has been down on canvas before and come back.

Yes, it is true the Vandals haven't been 4-0 since 1923 and that streak continues on for another year.

Since John L. Smith took over as head coach in 1989 the Vandals have a 5-5 record in the month of November.

Turn your clocks back to last season when Idaho was 2-3 after an overtime loss to Nevada and everyone was ready to write the Vandals off.

Everyone, that is, except for the Idaho Vandals.

Unfortunately something was missing Saturday that has traditionally been a trademark of Smith's teams.

Intensity and a never-say-die attitude that led Idaho to seven straight wins last season and nine straight in 1989 before playoff losses ended both.

The fans, admirably, have gone to the games and now it is time for the Vandals to prove something to their supporters, but more importantly themselves.

The Idaho players know they played terrible Saturday and they don't have to be reminded of it.

UI drops BSC foes

Labeling Idaho's two volleyball wins over Boise State and Idaho State as 'big' wouldn't give the weekend sweep due justice.

The Vandals defeated ISU (15-7, 15-6, 8-15, 15-5) Friday night in impressive fashion and continued their dominance by dumping BSU (15-7, 11-15, 15-9, 15-12) Saturday.

Idaho moved its Big Sky Conference record to 2-1 (6-9 overall) and won for the fourth time in six matches.

The significance of the wins came in the form of overcoming a history of losses to both teams.

Idaho's win over Idaho State was its first win since 1985 and its first win at home since 1984.

The same was true in the win over BSU as the Vandals defeated the Broncos for the first time since 1986, but more significantly it marked the first time Idaho had even won a game against BSU since 1987.

"It was real important," sophomore outside hitter Dee Porter said. "They've (BSU and ISU) traditionally beat us and by winning we made a statement that we're contenders in this conference."

Idaho's wins were marked by less mistakes on defense and better passing, two areas that plagued the Vandals during their slow start.

"We're starting to do things on a more consistent basis," Idaho head coach Tom Hilbert said. "Our passing is getting better and it allows our hitters to play better and get into a rhythm."

That passing allowed setter Amie Hanks to deliver 97 assists, including a season-high 55 against the Broncos.

Hanks added eight kills, sixteen digs and three blocks in the two matches.

"She's (Hanks) becoming a threat which allows us to open up some other avenues on offense," Hilbert said.

The Vandals responded by hitting .238 (60-147) against ISU and .235 (65-170) in the BSU victory.

Freshman middle blocker Brittany VanHaverbeke had a nearly flawless hitting performance against the Bengals with 12 kills in 19 attempts (.579) while committing only one error.

The Vandals continued their potent attack against BSU with three players hitting over .300. Heather McEwen responded

Vandals turn over game

By TOM BITHELL
Senior Staff Writer

Down to Earth.
That's where the University of Idaho football team is right now, their dreams of an unbeaten season gone with Saturday night's 36-14 loss to the University of Northern Iowa.

Going into the game, Northern Iowa was ranked 17th and an underdog, having lost the weekend before, 21-20, to Southern Illinois.

Idaho was ranked No. 2 with the nation's leading offense, and coming off a 48-14 road win at Montana State University. MSU was a dream game for Vandal quarterback Doug Nussmeier, who threw five touchdown passes for 396 yards against the Bobcats, a career high.

But Nussmeier's dreams turned to nightmares Saturday against the visiting Panther defense.

After completing 15-of-21 passes for one touchdown in the first half, Nussmeier led the Vandals into the locker room with a 14-13 lead. Idaho had controlled possession for 16:19, compared to UNI's 13:41, just what UNI Coach Terry Allen said he didn't want.

In the second half UNI controlled the ball as the Vandals turned it over on their first four possessions. The Panthers had the ball for 23:30 in the second-half — more than the 22:49 Idaho had it the entire game.

"I made some terrible reads," Nussmeier said in the post-game press conference. "We absolutely lost our composure."

Idaho's woes started three plays after the second half kickoff when Panther linebacker William Freney picked off a Nussmeier pass thrown right to him — seemingly because of some miscommunication with the intended receiver.

Northern Iowa had the ball on the Idaho 44. Six plays later UNI quarterback Jay Johnson scored on a one yard dive and UNI led, 20-14.

Three plays after the ensuing kickoff, Panther defensive back Simon Nelson grabbed UNI's second interception at the Idaho 37. Held at the Idaho five, UNI kicker Brian Mitchell kicked his third of five field goals to up the score to 23-14.

The next Vandal series saw another interception as Nussmeier's frustration grew. This time it was at the Idaho 34 on the second play from scrimmage. This time UNI managed a touchdown out of it and led, 30-14.

"It's a combination of things," Idaho Coach John L. Smith said. "You can't blame it on Doug. It's the fault of the receivers, the line, and the coaches as well."

Nussmeier's interceptions weren't the end of Idaho's turnover plague.

With 4:55 to play in the third quarter Ronnie White fumbled on the Idaho 44, setting up another UNI field goal.

As the crowd of 11,500 began silently shrinking, so did Idaho's comeback hopes. And the worst home loss since a 1986, 24-0, defeat against Northern Arizona University became fact.

"You can't turn the ball over that many times and win," Smith said.

■ Notes- Safety Jeff Jordan suffered a ruptured achilles tendon Saturday against Northern Iowa and will be out for the rest of the season.

NIU scored five plays later to go up 20-14. Just three plays later Nussmeier threw his second interception to Simon Nelson. Nine plays after that NIU went up 23-14 when Brian Mitchell kicked his third field goal, a 22-yarder. Mitchell kicked five field goals on the day.

After Nussmeier's third interception and a Ronnie White fumble, the Vandals found themselves down 30-14 with just over five minutes left in the third quarter. The game, at this point, was essentially over.

"I just didn't make my reads," said a battered looking Nussmeier. "In our offense you have to have a quarterback that can make reads and find the open receiver. I'll take the blame for this loss."

In the first half it looked as if Nussmeier would have his fourth straight career high in passing. He was near perfect completing 15-of-21 passes for 177 yards, including a two-yard touchdown pass to tight end Elia Ala'ilima-Daley.

Whatever adjustments NIU made at halftime, were the right ones. The Panthers' secondary and linebackers played as if they had mental telepathy. On all three of Nussmeier's interceptions, the defenders had the play read perfectly.

"We didn't really make any super adjustments," NIU coach Terry Allen said. "We just told the players to keep doing what they were doing. They were becoming more familiar with the Idaho offense as the game went on."

The Panther defense also spent much of the game becoming familiar with Nussmeier. He was under a fierce pass rush the entire game. NIU recorded just two sacks, but Nussmeier was hit a dozen times right as he delivered the ball. On one of the sacks, by Freeney, Nussmeier's arm was pulled back just as he threw it. The minor injury left him in a large ice pack at the press conference.

Offensive tackle Erik Wiker tried to explain the line's inability to block the NIU defensive front.

"They were small up front and they knew they couldn't stay with us physically," Wiker said. Their game plan was to run a lot of stunts and games up front. We didn't do a very good job of picking their stuff up."

The Panthers also did what many teams haven't been able to do to the Vandals — expose their weaknesses. Example: On the game's fourth play, NIU quarterback Jay Johnson hit receiver Kenny Shedd for a 52-yard pass right over the top of inexperienced, walk-on cornerback Brandon Millsap, putting NIU up 7-0. Shedd tortured the Vandal secondary all day catching five passes for 136 yards.

"Kenny is as good a receiver as there is in I-AA," Allen said. "He's the fastest receiver in the state of Iowa."

The other coaching gem by Allen was running right at All-American defensive end Jeff Robinson, rather than running away from him like many teams choose to do. Robinson's strength is chasing plays from behind.

"We felt Robinson's strength was his pass rushing and his quickness," Allen said "We wanted to see how he would react to people flying at him."

The result was a balanced Panther offense that rushed for 220 yards and passed for 209.

"They were a good football team that came ready to play," Smith said. "We have to decide ourselves how good we want to become."

after a tough match against ISU with 18 kills while hitting .341. Middle blocker Nancy Wicks had a .318 hitting percentage on 11 kills and outside hitter Jessica Puckett added 17 kills and hit .309.

With their performance the Vandals upped their kills-per-game average up to 15, which pleased Hilbert along with the competitive desire that has been vacant at times during the season.

Idaho used a consistent defense to create its offensive opportunities. The Vandals had 30 block assists including 22 against BSU in addition to 113 digs.

VanHaverbeke continued to be the main blocking force for Idaho with seven in both matches while Porter and Wicks had eight each for the weekend.

Porter had 28 digs while Puckett added 22 and sophomore outside hitter Leah Smith had 17.

The Vandals are now hitting .222 in the conference compared to .159 for their opponents.

Idaho now takes another step in achieving success when they face Northern Arizona Thursday and Nevada Saturday.

But what better way to motivate a team than a good ass kicking.

And if Idaho doesn't come to play Saturday it could get a lot uglier against Nevada. You could be looking at a big-time blowout.

It is time for a few players besides the expected leaders to step up and make a difference.

The team that wins this game will obviously win the Big Sky Conference and there is no doubt in anyone's minds. Look at the history books. The team that has won this game has won the Big Sky Conference the last six years in-a-row. No questions asked.

Vandal fans listen up. You don't want to miss this game because it is guaranteed to be one of the best games of the year with arguably two of the most talented teams in I-AA facing off.

But just remember, if the chips are down and the Vandals fall behind not to quit on them and they might not quit on you.

Foreign toons invigorate animation festival

Review by TRENT YOUNG
Entertainment Editor

When I watch something like The Third Annual Animation Celebration, I naturally become very anxious about my own future. I mean, here I am watching all this wonderful animation on television that 13 year-old hackers are doing for LucasFilm in their sleep. Meanwhile, people my age all around the world are busy producing their own brand of quality cartoons. It makes me sick. Are we being graded on points, or does congeniality count towards the goal?

Animation Celebrations have always been a means to demonstrate the rest of the world is just as hip and intelligent as America, but this one in particular threw me for a loop. Nothing made by the Americans was watchable, saving perhaps, the sketch Lava Junior, where a be-bopping, obnoxious lava lamp gets a whippin'.

Other than that one bright spot for the Americans, the rest of the picture had to be carried by the foreign cartoons. Animated selections by Bill Plympton, who is best known for his 200 Ways to Stop Smoking series, captured my vote for worst, since they relied solely upon visual trickery and grotesque figures to capture attention. Plympton, who seems to have a remarkable talent for caricatures, should stick to the glossy-but-hollow world of MTV, and let some others use his timeslots.

Darkness, Light, Darkness, by the Czech artist Jan Svankmajer, was my pick for best of show. Unlike recent claymation productions, this is a masterpiece of both originality, and realism. Svankmajer slowly evokes the creation of a human being born entirely of clay from a dirty, two-doored flat; never hurrying or hampering the visual effects for the sake of movement. When the clay tongue and brain enter the room slithering, it is indeed a great

KUOI-FM PRESENTS FOR YOU: PREVIEW '91

Oh my how we here at this 50,000 milliwatt station have this sacred ritual taking place each and every evening at ten-thirty where upon the stupid looking music director picks an entire album that the d.j. has to play all of...and, if they refuse, we shoot them(make them dead). This is a regularly scheduled event kinda thingy. Listen to it. Tonight you will hear the vocal group Sister Double Happiness and his orchestra preform their newest offering Heart and Mind (Reprise), while the next night you can hear The Potato Eaters sing songs from their own eponymously titled C.D. (Rastacan). On Thursday you can hear J.J.Johnson's Standards-Live At The Village Vanguard (Antillies), followed on Friday night's awesome selection: Civilization Vs. Technology by the vocal group H.E.A.L., featuring members of BDP, REM, LL Cool J, PE, Billy Bragg and many other favorites. Wow, that was sure fun to type, let me tell ya. Saturday gives us The Sonny Sharrock Band's instrumental offering Highlife (Enemy) and Sunday will provide us with the psychedelic caribbean tones of Ranking Ann's A Slice Of English Toast (RAS), mixed by your favorite psychopath in the world, the Mad Professor. Oh my, this leads us to the last of the bunch: MC 900 Foot Jesus (without DJ Zero) and the work known widely as Welcome To My Dream (Netzwerk/Capitol), and might I say that this is one angry youngster. He just doesn't understand that this is one of the nicest places in the world, Moscow, Idaho. We just love being alive, don't you? Listen everynight and make plenty of milkshakes, they're really pretty easy to make if you have a blender. Opinion by Timmy Cook.

Dr. Seuss gone, not forgotten

Opinion by JILL SEDDON
Staff Writer

So Theodor S. Geisel died almost a whole week ago. So there are probably more important things to be concerned about, and I didn't even know the guy. So why am I still so sad?

Dr. Seuss was 87 years old when he died, so of course I knew he'd leave us sometime. But as a kid growing up, he was like the grandpa I never had but wished I did -- wise, comical, creative, jolly, yet a bit twisted too. I remember his tales more than any other stories of my childhood, because his books actually meant something. Dr. Seuss taught children and adults alike about greed, individuality, hope, preservation of the environment, right and wrong, and how we should treat one another.

The books of Dr. Seuss are timeless. Fifty years ago, he changed the dry, droll Dick and Jane type of childrens books to his type of creative, colorful, fascinating storytelling. Any of his 47 books are still relevant today. We'll always need to know how to count fish, understand the true meaning of Christmas, or appreciate (and therefore hop on) our parents. He's similar to classic, canonical literature but with pictures. He's an American legend, our own God of Goof. People devour his books, quote his philosophies, even tattoo themselves with his characters.

Through the Grinch, Sam-I-Am, Sneetches, the Lorax, and other shaggy characters, Seuss taught us simply but effectively. I still remember this stuff now -- at a restaurant a few years ago, I wasn't interested in trying sushi for the first time. Then I thought of the grump in Green Eggs and Ham ("I would not like them here or there. I would not like them anywhere"). Of course, now I love sushi ("I do so like green eggs and ham! Thank you! Thank you! Sam-I-Am!") I think this is the way that Dr. Seuss influences us, in small but significant ways. Simple but effective.

BLAST FROM THE PAST

This Blast from the Past came from the Oct. 3rd issue of the Argonaut, 1967

A new girl for girl-watchers to watch...

Her name is Joan Parker, and she's the new Dodge Fever Girl. Watch her on television this season, dispensing Dodge Fever to a variety of unsuspecting souls. (Dodge's TV schedule is listed below.)

A new car for car-lovers to love...

Its name is Charger, and it's the best-looking Dodge ever built. Complete with disappearing headlights and sports-car styling that features a European-type spoiler on the rear deck. But since looks aren't everything, we made it exciting to drive, with a 318-cu.-in. V8, bucket seats and an airplane-type instrument panel. Even pockets in the doors for your shades and/or rally maps. With all this included, we've reduced Charger's list price by more than $100. Maybe you can't please everybody, but we sure try. See your Dodge Dealer right away.

both from Dodge.

You know, the people who build the cars that give you... Dodge Fever.
