Deforestation topic of panel discussion

By SHARI IRETON
Staff Writer

In the last ten years, deforestation has become a household word", said University of Idaho professor Jo Ellen Force at a panel held earlier this week.

Tuesday evening, five individuals concerned with global deforestation spoke at the Student Union Building for the third of five "Exploring Global Issues, an Intercultural Perspective" panel discussions.

Force, the moderator for the panel, said deforestation is a "terrible problem that must be stopped". According to her, about 35 million acres of forest are destroyed every year.

Force said the American people won't face the fact car emissions have a greater effect on the increasing global temperature than does the destruction of the rain forests.

Sam Butterfield, an international environmental consultant, has spent time researching deforestation in third world countries. He focused his discussions on two countries, Nepal and Botswana, Tuesday night.

Nepal, a country about the size of Tennessee, is interested in the deforestation of their own area due to the popular use of bamboo. In one city, Butterfield discovered the people of Nepal had over 80 uses for the wood.

Botswana, a larger country in Africa about the size of Texas, is covered with flat and arid grasslands. The people of Botswana are primarily cattle herders, who use the trees as fodder, fuel and fencing material. This over-use of the forest has led to the deforestation problem in this country.

Daniel Zirker, the acting chair of the Political Science Department, has spent time in Brazil observing the destruction of the Amazon Rainforests.

Many scientists (excluding Brazilians) say the Amazon Rainforests produce one-third of the world's oxygen supply.

However, according to Zirker, due to the increase in the economic interest of raising cattle, many Brazilians are slash-and-burning the forests to quickly form grasslands.

"Brazil is the third largest debt owing country in the world", said Zirker, pointing out the country will sometimes experience a 10,000% inflation rise.

Silas Whitman, the director of fisheries management for the Nez Pierce Tribe, discussed the problem with Pan American (Central and South American) Indians and the effects of deforestation on their land.

Deforestation is what the Indians are referring to as the "rape of their homelands."

"They (the Indians) are being victimized by the very thing (the forest) that has kept them alive", said Whitman. He said the Pan

Real-life 'James Bond' visits UI

By JEFF KAPOSTASY
News Editor

Yes, UI, there is a James Bond.

If you doubt such a man exists, consider Peter James. During his years of correspondence with the Central Intelligence Agency, he drank Russian vodka with the KGB in Athens Greece, drove a green Porsche 911 through the Swiss alps, and later, took photos of Russian subs slithering through a bay in Cuba—a photo that could easily put James in a Cuban jail for "about 30 years."

Such Bond-esque adventures ended years ago for James. He has traded his well-used passport for a chance to relay his experiences and thoughts to the minds of others. Besides being involved with the CIA, James authored two books on national security, is a journalist, and has a degree in physics from Case Western Reserve University. James made a stop at the UI University Auditorium Wednesday night for a presentation on everything from how to spot KGB agents to why he feels President Reagan was intimately involved with the Iran-Contra scandal.

"After hearing my lecture," began James "you will go back to your dorm room, home, or whatever, with more questions than you came with."

Fresh out of college, James went to work for a Florida based aircraft company called Pratt-Whitney which was involved with the U.S. space program in the the mid-sixties. Soon after he was hired, the company asked him to represent their company in Athens, Greece at what was basically a convention of rocket scientists from all around the world. This was all during the height of the cold war, when national security was at its highest value.

"During the conference, you'd have all the people from the West on one side of the room, and all the Russians on the other," James said.

After business hours at the conference ended, happy hour began. James found the Russians had a hearty appetite for vodka of there native around, drinking and hob-knobbing with these Russian scientists was quite easy, and sipping vodka for hours tended to allow slips of the Russian security tongue. He thought little about it and returned to Florida.

Delts march against domestic violence

By WENDY DEAL
Staff Writer

This Sunday in honor of their philanthropy, the University of Idaho fraternity Delta Tau Delta will be walking to the Delta Tau Delta house at Washington State University. Members of the fraternity are walking about ten miles to raise money for Alternatives to Violence of the Palouse Inc., which is an organization that aids victims of domestic and sexual violence in Latah and Whitman counties.

Alternatives to Violence provides 24-hour crisis intervention, and confidential shelter & temporary housing for survivors. There are also support groups available for domestic violence, and skilled volunteers who are trained to effectively explore options and discuss whatever choices are appropriate for the victim. In addition to these services, programs and workshops are also put on for community groups and agencies who want more information on domestic violence and sexual assault.

Leonard Plaster, president of Delta Tau Delta, commented on why they chose to help Alternatives to Violence.

"After realizing what the program was about, we decided we would like to give additional support to a program that would affect not only the UI cam-

President Bush gets report card

By Christian Thompson
Staff Writer

How am I doing? This is a question we all ask in order to evaluate our performance. Probably even President George Bush, especially since elections are coming up in 1992.

Several members of UI's Political Science department were asked to evaluate President Bush's performance over the last four years. Here's what they had to say.

Al Rouyer, political science professor, said Bush has done a "magnificent job in foreign policy. His initiatives have been very successful...outstanding."

"So much has happened," said Don Crowley, political science professor, "it would be hard to predict. He's been reacting. During the fall of the Soviet Empire, he reacted well."

Crowley believes Bush sees the U.S. as a world policeman. His example was our commitment in the Persian Gulf war.

"It appears successful, but in some ways it was not so," Crowley said.

Dan Zirker, political science professor, agrees it wasn't totally successful.

"There are still hundreds of oil fires burning and they will most likely continue to do so for years. Saddam Hussain is still in power, his weapons are still there, and the Kurds are still harassed by Iraq and Turkey. The war was not very effective, but I cannot say it is entirely President Bush's fault."

Crowley added, "The Gulf is not more stable or safe since the war, even over a year later."

In reference to domestic policy, Rouyer said Bush has "pretty much ignored it... allowed it to drift... no changes... no initiatives."

Crowley said Bush doesn't have "too much of a domestic agenda - he talks in terms of being an environmental and educational president," but doesn't always follow this ideology.

Crowley also pointed out the economy has grown more slowly over Bush's term than with any other president since the 1950's. He stated it is not necessarily Bush's fault, but he has done little to correct the situation.

Domestically, Bush has had problems coming to an agreement with congress. There have been problems with the budget and the Savings and Loans crisis.

"His administration record is mixed. He has done some things that are useful in environmental issues, but put-off or avoided other issues," said Crowley.

Advertising shapes everyday life

By ALISA STOFFEL
Staff Writer

Advertising powerfully influences our society. Each person sees an average of 500 ads a day in magazines, on TV, billboards, and bumper stickers. Each person will see about 15 million advertisements by the time he or she reaches 60.

Techniques used in the advertising field are highly sophisticated and specifically directed toward evoking a response. Each ad is carefully designed to reach consumers in 15 seconds or less.

The advertising media influences attitude, which affects behavior. Many ads are offensive to women and men, and are producing a byproduct that society does not need: sexism.

Carefully contrived ads often depict a negative image of women. The sex symbol is a measure of flawless beauty; she has no scars, no blemishes, and probably no pores. What the ad does not tell is the amount of touch up and airbrush done to the photograph. Women are made to conform to an ideal that can't be reached realistically.

Yet half a million dollars are spent each hour on cosmetics by women trying to reach the ideal. More than half the cost of a cosmetic is its packaging and advertising. Female consumers are not only paying for the product itself, they are supporting the industry which objectifies them.

The face is not the only playground for advertisers, the female body is used constantly to sell everything from cigarettes to alcohol. Many ads directly link sex with whatever product is being pushed. The Black Velvet ad that shows a woman in a slinky black velvet gown says, "Try it on" effectively does this. The double meaning is hard to mistake.

Another popular stereotype is "the modern woman." Ads like Virginia Slims have adopted revolutionary language and trivialized it. Saying "You've come a long way, baby" and showing antiquated pictures of women smoking links an important concept with a petty action. Now that you're liberated, you can smoke.

Relationships between men and women are often skewed in the advertising world. Women are shown clinging desperately to a man who is looking away, and her throat is exposed in a classic position of helplessness. Women are depicted as passive sexual creatures without personality.

Censorship is not an answer. Complaining is not an answer.

Consumer outrage is an answer. Refusing to buy products advertised with sexist design tells the company to use a different method. Writing a letter to the company explaining reasons for not purchasing their products is the most effective way to make a point. So just do it.

International Program brings diversity to UI

By LANE GRACIANO
Staff Writer

As the University of Idaho continues with the rest of the world along the road to greater global awareness, UI's International Programs Office (IPO) keeps working to link cross-cultural bridges on campus and overseas.

Located in Morrill Hall, the IPO provides more than the 70 to 80 countries in which it offers study abroad programs. "We do a million things here it's hard to remember off the top of my head what kinds of things we do," said IPO's Study Abroad Advisor Bob Neuenschwander. To put it simply, the IPO acts as a clearing-house for international activities such as student and faculty exchanges, training and research agreements.

This school year, 507 international students and scholars are pursuing various academic interests at the university with the majority, 127 students, coming from China. Of that entire international student population, 298 are graduate students, 172 are undergraduates, 34 are non-matriculated and three are studying law. The colleges of Agriculture, Forestry, Art and Architecture, Business and Economics, Letters and Science, Education, and Mines represent some of the schools attended by international students. The College of Engineering, where 159 students are enrolled, is the most internationally populated student-wise, while the colleges of Agriculture and Forestry have more international advisors than other UI colleges.

As IPO Interim Director Ken Laurence told the UI Alumni Journal at Idaho, the IPO doesn't have to recruit international students because the students know they can get advanced degrees at a relatively inexpensive cost here at the university.

On the research and development front, the IPO provides technical training and assistance to Third World countries while allowing UI faculty members to acquire international experience. The wealth of new knowledge the faculty members bring back, IPO Associate Director Gleanne Wray told at Idaho, are used in their own classes and ultimately benefits Idaho as the new trading partner of the Third World nations.

The IPO sponsors various seminars on international awareness, the most recent of which, the ongoing forum entitled "Exploring Global Issues," deals with topics ranging from traditional culture to global communications. The concurrent Lunch and Learn seminars, dubbed educational "international adventures" in IPO's monthly newsletter International News, focus on such topics as Japanese lifestyles and the total solar eclipse in Baja. Conversational English, directed by graduate students of English as a Second Language Joyce Dannenberg and Carol Ritchie, is an IPO-sponsored service-oriented club for international students. In the spring semester the IPO will organize an International Week featuring foreign language films, exhibits, food bazaars, and sports tournaments.

Working closely with the IPO are International Student/Scholar Programs Coordinator Jack Cooper, who specializes in immigration services, and new International Student Adviser Mary Furnari, who joined the IPO's University Classroom

Center branch in September. Another affiliated group, the International Friendship Association (IFA), a joint IPO-ASUI association, puts together cross-cultural community services such as pairing international students with local host families and organizing global culture workshops.

The IPO stands behind many other service-oriented projects for UI international students as well as its U.S. students and the general community. As its wide range of activities suggests, its main goal is to facilitate cross-cultural learning among the university's student, faculty and community members. "We organize new and different things for student groups as they need them," said IPO Administrative Secretary Cathy Merickel. "You name it, we'll do it for you."

Mandatory attendance classes unfair to students

Now wait a minute. This just hit me. Do you remember in high school (when it was free to get an education) how, in one semester, we were allowed up to nine absences? WOW. That's something I could only dream about now.

Now here we are in COLLEGE. This is great — being away from the parents, we can stay out as late as we want, determine the course for our own lives, and no one makes up the rules...

Except for the university itself. Freshmen, meet your new mom and dad. At this university, they have what are called "REQUIRED ATTENDANCE" classes — anywhere from two to six absences are allowed, but any more, kids (as the taxing finger of power wags in our faces), and you FLUNK.

Great. Just when I thought I was being allowed to live my own life, here comes an external force making decisions for me. Listen, this is college. We pay for it.

Therefore, we, as students, should have the power to decide if we want to go to class or not. If I went to a Circle K and bought a Butterfinger, I highly doubt that the owner would follow me home to make sure I ate it. Or for that matter, make me consume it right at the checkstand.

That is what being an adult is all about — having the right to make our own decisions and either suffer or prosper from the consequences. Our experiences define who we are, and all of our mistakes and successes constitute our experiences.

It is shameful for me to say it, but I did not complete English 104 until my fourth try! I had to keep on dropping it, because my instructors would have failed me due to poor attendance. Yes, I made the decision to not show up for class, but perhaps I felt I really wouldn't have learned anything new.

Finally, though, I passed. Not without a lot of pleading and caring from my instructor, however. And one of the most important things I learned that semester was that if I'm going to pay for my own schooling, I will take advantage of my opportunities.

That, however, is something that can not be grilled into anybody's head by a silly and egotistical little rule. I had to learn it for myself.

This country's basis is freedom — one of those freedoms is the power of choice. We do not have those rights until we are 18 and considered legal adults. After that, it's open house on adulthood — and should remain that way.

We gain nothing by squeaking through college by rules. Going away to a university is a wonderful opportunity to grow up and learn for ourselves. If we allow those chances for growth to be taken away from us now, that is just one more experience that, as a whole, will be lacking from our character.

Hemp can be very useful

If it weren't for marijuana, the United States of America could easily have been overlooked; that's right, the country may not have been discovered. The reason for this is simple. Christopher Columbus' ships used hemp sails to get to the new world.

This most vital use of hemp is just one of the numerous and highly efficient ways hemp can be used to the advantage of the American people.

Problems such as widespread pollution can be drastically reduced if marijuana is cultivated to be used as fuel. The marijuana plant, which is hardy enough to grow in any part of the United States, is the key factor in reduction of the Greenhouse Effect.

If cars ran on methane fuel, produced by compression of the hemp seed, pollution of our atmosphere could be reduced by 50 percent. Methane gas gives off only harmless carbon dioxide and water vapor, whereas gasoline produces carbon monoxide, the deadly chemical largely to blame for the Greenhouse Effect.

According to Hemp for Victory,

Dr. Suess meant more than fairy tale children's books

Mark Twain said to write what you know about. Jimmy Buffett claimed that the Aboriginal people of Australia believed that the earth was slung into creation and held together by songlines and dreamtimes, and every so often in a person's life, he will get the calling to go walkabout. Twain also directed the human spirit to not let schooling get in the way of an education. And I believe that a dry white goes best with baked chicken and garlic.

Early last week, tragedy and sadness inflicted the literary world. The death of Theodor Suess Geisel (aka. Dr. Suess) brought an abrupt end to an era of children's adult literature. Indeed, the Cat in the Hat, the Grinch, and Yertle the Turtle would no longer dine on green eggs and ham, Sam I Am. Devastation. I wanted escape.

Saturday last then bloomed grey and overcast. I felt rain. Staring out my bedroom window, I shuddered, turned my back, and returned to my previous, oblivious state. Mourning was still needed, but alas, would be short lived. My visiting companion came bounding into the room and terminated my bliss. She had driven many hours and did not want to spend her weekend viewing the outside from the inside. It was off to the market we ventured.

The day felt warmer and calmer than first perceived. We rambled towards the fresh breads, hot coffee, and personality of the local Farmer's Market. Slowly, my frozen body began to thaw. We both saluted Mr. Coffee.

Our feet wandered, and took us from Market to the local winery up the street. Inside, the friendliness was overwhelming and soon we were chatting with the owners, indulging our taste buds in a few of their tasty creations. We simply hung out, enjoying the tasting. Upon departure, we felt that a purchase was more a necessity than an obligation, so buy we did.

We were exited and aimlessly shuffled on. We walked and talked and watched. Comfort and security oozed from our host surroundings. We ventured through bookstores and grand openings, window shopped, discovered inspiring menus, and feasted on fifty-cent slices of pizza. It was all so simple, so close. In less than 15 minutes from contacts to concrete, we were amidst a world few ever cared to discover.

Fire victim's appreciate kindness

Editor;
 As we watched our lives flame in front of us, we were consoled by strangers, people of the friendly town of Moscow, Idaho. We were offered clothes, food, and shelter. The kindness of the community was unbelievable. With in a matter of hours we had a place to stay and clothes to put on our backs. The response of the Moscow Volunteer Fire Department was incredible, they were on the scene within ten minutes. If it weren't for the complications of the blaze and the unforgiving weather we would not have lost our homes and our belongings. We would just like to give a special thanks to all the people that helped on that dreaded afternoon. We would like to thank some very special people Cheryl Kubart, Amy Widman, Karen McClousky, Kirk Kottkey, Mark Anderson, Mark Camper, Michelle Martinson, Dave and Becky Skinner, Todd and Tonya Skinner, Toni Warnocks, Laura Moore, Scott Lorek, Will Dur, and the entire Cross-Country Team. We would also like to thank the Idahonian for the excellent story written on the incident. A very special thanks goes to the following organizations for their great consideration of the situation: Vandal Card Office, ASUI, American Red Cross, Sheriff Ken Buxton, Financial Aid Office, United Cable, GTE Phone Company, Washington Water Power, Sharp Apartments, The Lock Shop, Tidymans, Norma Bendel in the Vandal Ticket Office, Darlene Baily in Athletics, Joyce Holstein at West One, First Interstate, McDonalds, and the Argonaut's Editor, Matt Lawson. Again we would like to extend out thanks to all these great organizations.

This is old news to a lot of residents of Moscow, But not to us. This was our lives that burned down and we really appreciate the help everyone gave us. The last but the most important people to thank are our parents. We appreciate all the help from everyone.

We then came to an abrupt stop. Silently, my escort disappeared from view. She had discovered yet another bookie. Leaving me alone, I accepted the silent invitation of a nearby bench. As I lounged, I remembered back to earlier days in school, and the rantings of the unaware and unadventurous, as they described their feelings as to the lack of fun and excitement this community had to offer. I laughed at their guise. If only they looked beyond their limited vision, and took the time to discover.

My companion then returned, a slight mischievous grin upon her face and a brown paper sack clutched in her fingers. Proudly, she presented me with her purchase. I opened and pulled out the innards. In my clutch was Dr.

Theodor Suess's greatest contribution to the literary world. It was the Lorax. He whom speaks for the trees. My heart applauded, and my eyes thanked my friend for such a wonderful gift. I opened, and as I thumbed through the pages, I realized that Dr. Suess was indeed not passed, but even more so alive.

I realized many other important things that afternoon. Things worth sharing. That simplicity, friends, and lazy afternoons can sometimes be life's greatest offering. That wine need not always be expensive, that a good book is worth sharing, and that quiet dinners are a necessity. That everyone should read Dr. Suess. And that the town of Moscow has more to offer than simply a university.

And I know this, therefore I will write it.

minating the inefficient and harmful consumption of fossil fuels.

Hemp's uses go beyond fuel, however. Oh yes, there are even more reasons (besides the preservation of the entire planet) to legalize and cultivate hemp. Hemp is a medicinally legitimate substance, and has been proven to ease the negative effects of many ailments. For example, marijuana has been shown to increase the appetites of cancer patients in chemotherapy, to help epilepsy and anorexia patients, and to decrease pain associated with migranes, depression, stress and emphysema. One additional ailment, glaucoma, can be helped with marijuana. Maybe this directly practical use for hemp will prompt President Bush toward legalization.

Besides helping to relieve all of these problems, marijuana is not a drug that has toxic side effects, as synthetic pharmaceuticals often do. In fact, marijuana has never been officially recorded as a cause of death. By contrast, aspirin, a commonly used drug, causes hundreds of deaths each year.

Why then, is hemp not legal and in common use in the U.S.? For one perverse reason: greed. Large oil and fuel corporations simply do not want to be put out of business by such a powerfully efficient energy source. In cooperating with the government, these money mongering conglomerates are allowing our planet to be decimated and its people to suffer for no good reasons other than complete avarice. While Cuisinarts, Gucci bags, trips to the French Riviera and caviar may be their priorities, what gives them the right to speak for you? Just because large companies would rather make big money than be responsible does not mean the majority, the working class agrees.

People like you and I own the planet just as much as they do,

Hemp is an extremely feasible and necessary alternative fuel source for our country, as well as a tremendous help to many people in terms of health. Corporate greed and ignorance should not be allowed to interfere irrationally with the reasonable arguments of legalization and cultivation of hemp.

Vandals set to tame the 'Pack

Vandals to face top team in land

By CHRISTOPHER GATEWOOD
Sports Editor

Saturday's game between Nevada and Idaho has lost a little of its luster, but nonetheless, it's doubtful that either team is going to have any trouble getting fired up for this one.

For the 15,000 fans that will be in attendance at the ASUI Kibbie Dome, time will stand still. A moment to capture for all time. For the players it's the reason they play football. The big game. One of those games that will become a war story at the local bar.

"I'm so fired up I can't believe it," said running back Ronnie White, who transferred from Nevada. "I'm ready to put the pads on right now and kick somebody's ———."

Last week the Vandals nearly forgot to put on the pads in their 36-14 debacle to the ninth ranked Northern Iowa Panthers. That's why the game has lost a little bit of its luster. If the Vandals could have managed a win against NIU, the match-up with the No. 1 ranked Wolfpack would have been the top two teams in the nation battling for national supremacy. Instead it just means USA Today, who was scheduled to cover the event, has lost interest and will lose a chance to gain some frequent flyer miles.

Regardless, the 3-1 Vandals find themselves at a critical point in their season. They can turn the corner and become a championship contender or go backwards and become a could-have-been.

"After last week's game we came out to practice and re-focused," said Vandal head coach John L. Smith. "Last week when we lost, it hurt real bad and I don't want the team to forget what that pain feels like."

If the Vandals don't come ready to play this week, they could wind up with an Excedrin

Ask White, he tells it like it is

I said he was a little slow. I said he only had good enough speed to be a short yardage back. I said University of Idaho running back Ronnie White would never compare to Vandal All-American Devon Pearce. Shows you what I know.

White, a transfer from the University of Nevada has played well enough for the Vandals to be currently splitting time with Pearce. Yeah, White is real slow.

Saturday, the Vandals just happen to be playing White's old Nevada team. The Vandals as a unit have plenty to be motivated about. Nevada is No. 1 in the nation. The last six years the winner of this game has gone on to win the Big Sky Conference Championship. Last year Nevada was handed a win by the officials on the worst clipping call since dirt was invented. If the Vandals need motivated they better get their pacemakers checked.

White remembers the game and the clipping call like it happened yesterday.

"I saw the clipping call and so did the coaches," White said. "The coaches couldn't believe it, they were in shock. They just turned around and said 'It was a bad call, but we'll take it.'"

White has his own special motivation for this football game. A motivation unique from his teammates in silver and gold. White was a member of the Wolfpack. He knows the team inside and out. He knows the team better than you, better than me and better than any of the Vandal coaches. White doesn't need to see any game films.

"Name a player," he said. "I can tell you their weaknesses, strengths and tendencies. You name it."

White has left Nevada and is now filled with memories of the death of a football career. He relishes his rebirth with the Vandals. His second chance.

He red-shirted for the Wolfpack in 1988 and got a chance to start in 1989 in front of running backs Ray Whalen and Jason Freirson, but broke his collarbone before he got a chance to strut his stuff.

This was the beginning of the end for White at Nevada. Saddled with the broken bone, the depression set in. White moped and didn't study. He would eventually flunk out of school and wind up at Sacramento City College trying to get his grades up.

"I didn't take school seriously enough," White said. "I was just happy to be in college and away from home."

He intended on returning to Nevada in the spring of 1990, but decided to stay that spring to get his Associate of Arts Degree with every intention of returning in the fall. But White took a little

NAU outlasts Idaho

By TOM BITHELL
Senior Staff Writer

The University of Idaho dropped their second Big Sky Conference match of the season last night in a hard fought 3-2 decision to Northern Arizona University.

Playing in their first conference road match, the Vandals dropped a tight third game, 18-16, to give NAU a 2-1 game advantage in the best of five match.

The loss cost Idaho the match win, Idaho Coach Tom Hilbert said.

"The third game was the key match for us," Hilbert said. "We missed some critical serves and our hitting was real streaky tonight."

After losing the first game, 11-15, Idaho came back to win the second, 15-7, to even the match up at 1-1. And the Vandals (6-10, 2-2) appeared to be on their way to a third game victory, leading 13-6.

But NAU (12-1, 2-1) held strong and rallied to win the crucial middle match.

"We would have won if we would have won the third game," Hilbert said. "I hope our kids realize how close they were to winning this match."

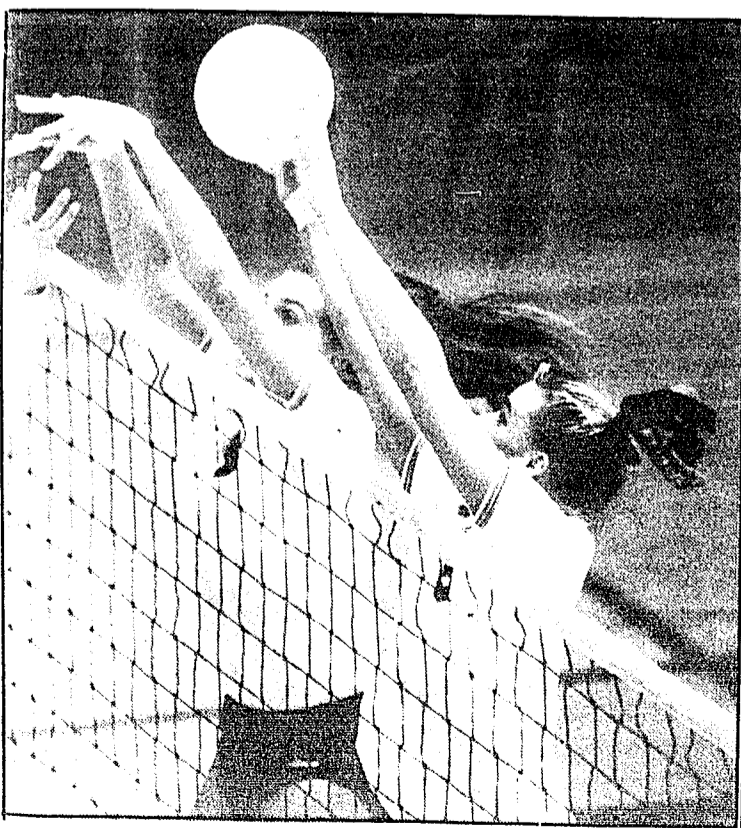

Despite a 15-9 Idaho win in the fourth game, the tired Vandals couldn't keep up the pace and lost the deciding game, 15-8.

"NAU won because they served tougher and made some key blocks down the stretch," he said of the Lumberjacks that managed 18 service aces against Idaho.

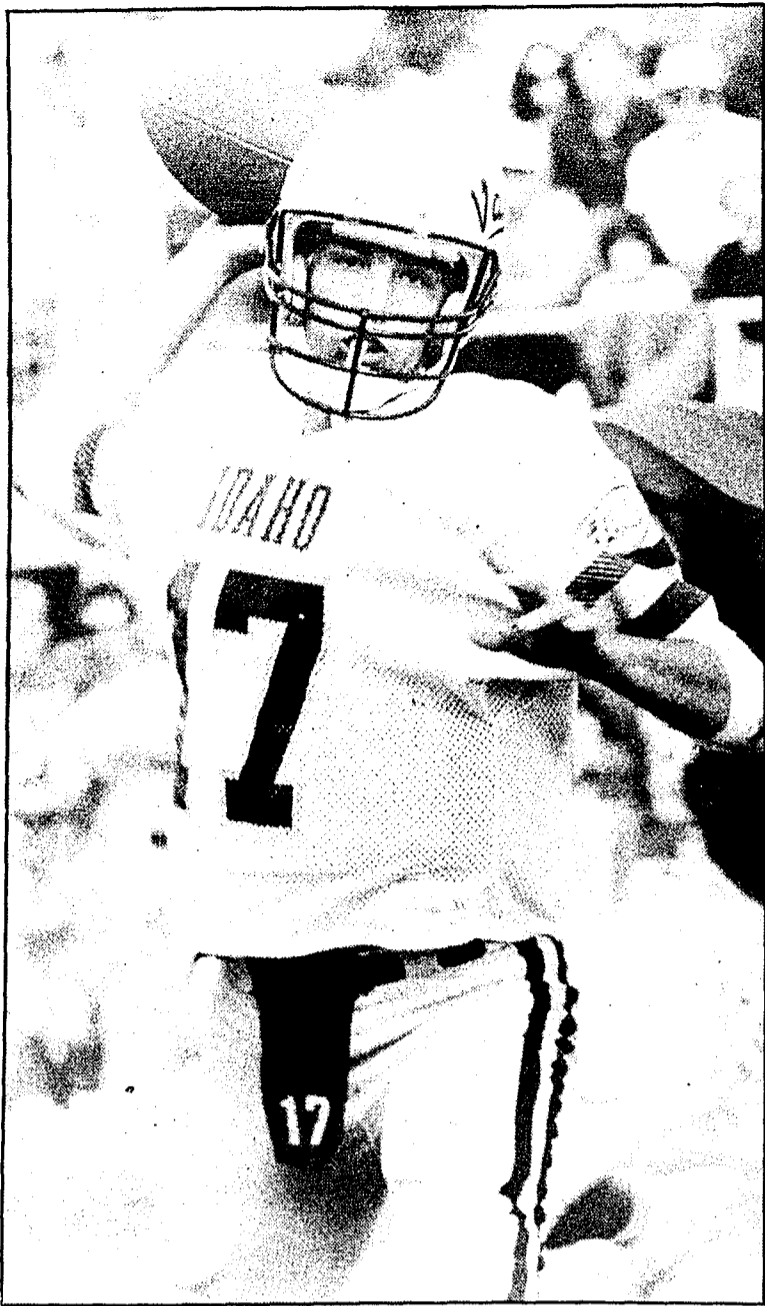

Hilbert said the Vandals didn't play well in the middle at times, but outside hitters Heather McEwen, Jessica Puckett, and Dee Porter played well.

McEwen had a career high 25 kills in the match. Puckett added 25 kills of her own along with a

NFL providing surprises in '91

By MATT LAWSON
Editor

THIS IS A TWO-PART SERIES ON THE NFL.
TUESDAY— THE NFC

By MATT LAWSON
Editor

Heading into the sixth week of the NFL season more than surprise has arisen. Here is a look at the first five weeks and expectations of what might occur the remainder of the season.

■ AFC EAST

BUFFALO (5-0)- The Bills have proven that they are the team to beat in the AFC and after last year's heartbreaking loss to the Giants in Superbowl XXV incentive is not a problem. With a proven veteran like Jim Kelly at quarterback, a dominating running back the caliber of Thurman Thomas and one of the deepest receiving corps in the league the Bills may be tough to stop. But don't forget their defense. Bruce Smith is healthy now and anchors a defense that has shown signs of greatness in the past.

MIAMI (2-3)- The Dolphins are definitely the biggest disappointment in their division and if Cincinnati wasn't winless Miami would take the crown as the underachievers of the league. Miami didn't show up last week when losing to the Jets 41-23. Sure Don Shula got his 300th win this season, but don't expect Miami to make much more noise than that.

NEW ENGLAND (2-3)- Dick MacPherson has to be commended on the start the Patriots have had. They have doubled their winning output from last season and the win over Houston has to be one of the top upsets of the young season. Look for the Patriots to finish below .500, but a weak division could help for a few easy wins.

NEW YORK (2-3)- First-year coach Bruce Coslet proves that Bill Walton couldn't really coach and that the Jets are a definite upcoming team that could challenge for a wild-card position. Quarterback Ken O'Brien has found his groove and the win over the Dolphins was a great confidence booster after a tough Monday night loss to the Bears. Blair Thomas has been a pleasant surprise and the Jets look to improve on defense.

INDIANAPOLIS (0-5)- Good-bye Ron Meyer and hello more pain for the Colts. Indianapolis actually looked like a new team during the final weeks of last season. But things have changed and Eric Dickerson has proven that he is definitely overrated. Time to put Albert Bentley back into the offense and win at least four games before the season is thrown completely down the tubes. They just might end up competing for that coveted first round draft choice.

■ AFC CENTRAL

HOUSTON (3-1) With the exception of the loss to New England Houston has proven they will challenge Buffalo for a shot at the Superbowl. The days of stupid plays and a bad-boy image left with Jerry Glanville and the Oilers have learned the right way to win in the NFL. A great offense and a physical defense. Warren Moon is still one of NFL's best quarterbacks and if he can stay healthy look for big things in Houston.

CLEVELAND (2-2) The Browns have come from tough circumstances to get big wins over Cincinnati and the upstart Dallas Cowboys. If Bernie Kosar stays healthy and the Browns' defense continues to improve Cleveland could finish with a respectable record.

PITTSBURGH (2-2) Pittsburgh has still failed to put it together on offense, but a tough defense has helped the Steelers to a 2-2 season so far. Pittsburgh has suffered humbling losses against Buffalo and Philadelphia and will have to play well against division rivals to make the playoffs.

CINCINNATI (0-4)- The over-achievers of the AFC. After a strong season last year and basically the same players returning Sam Wyche was looking for big things from his team. But it just hasn't happened. Boomer Esiason has struggled behind an inconsistent offensive line and the Bengal defense has been more than generous. One other variable is the Bengals odd year curse. The Bengals traditionally have done poorly in odd-numbered years.

■ AFC WEST

DENVER (4-1)- Denver is tired of being called the brides maide and John Elway has proven that he might do something about it. The record is better than the team based on the wins against average teams and Broncos coach have problems against detour, and ended up in Moscow, where the deer and the antelope play. White met Defensive Coordinator Craig Bray in Sacramento and the rest is history.

"I'd seen Idaho when we (Nevada) lost to them at the Kibbie Dome and thought they had a good program," he said. "But the main thing I wanted was a fresh start. I wanted to start at a new school."

So White finds himself at the crossroads, his past meeting his present. His old "homeboys are coming to town. White recently spoke with two of his old pals, cornerback Forey Duckett and running back Dedric Holmes.

"They tell me: 'We love you, but we got something for you come Saturday. I hope you bring it,'" White said.

Don't worry, White's ready and he'll bring some of his own. You can see it. He's got that look in his eyes. A burning desire with a touch of bitterness. A sour taste for his old coach, Chris Ault, the lerry Tarkanian of Reno. He has a stranglehold on the city. Besides being coach, he is also the athletic director. Ault can do no wrong.

"They love him in Reno," White said.

But Moscow isn't Ault's town, and everytime White carries the ball Saturday, a little of the yardage will be for his old coach. The two didn't part on the best of terms. When White left, Ault cursed him and called him a traitor.

"I went back to visit some of my buddies during spring ball and the coaches acted like I didn't exist," White said. "I didn't care I was there to see my friends. I just don't think it was necessary for him to badmouth me. I can understand his position, his other running backs couldn't get the job done."

White isn't afraid to tell you what he thinks, the game included. His keys to a Vandal victory: pressure quarterback Fred Gatlin and run the ball down the Wolfpack's throat.

"If you hit Fred a few times, he'll crack," White said. "In terms of the running game, with backs like Devon and I, we get stronger with more carries. It's just a matter of time before we break one."

I tend to agree with White except for a few intangibles. On defense the Vandals need to take chances and play with emotion. Against Northern Iowa they acted like they came from a funeral. If they have to blitz occasionally, so be it, because if Gatlin has time to sit back and throw, he'll pick a depleted secondary apart. And yes, even if it hurts, the Vandals must establish the running game.

Nevada is a poor road team and UI is their first road test, but White warns: "This game will be a battle. They're the type of team that doesn't quit no matter how bad the score looks."

Nicely stated for a guy who's pretty slow.

career high 16 digs.

Also with a strong match for Idaho was setter Amie Hanks. Hanks set a Idaho school record with 78 assists on the match.

Leading NAU was outside hitter Angel Leath with 19 kills and 15 digs.

NAU setter Ruth Parsons also "made a real difference in the match," according to Hilbert with her 52 assists, nine kills, and seven blocks.

"They (NAU) are a really good team and there are going to be a lot of (Big Sky) teams that aren't going to win down here," Hilbert said.

"We're getting better, but I hope we learned something tonight," Hilbert said, adding the team can't quit playing defense when they get tired.

Saturday Idaho will travel to Reno, where they will meet the University of Nevada (5-7, 0-2). Hilbert, in his third year, has yet to lose to the Wolf Pack and the Vandals lead the series 6-4.

This year's match will come closer to home for Hilbert than in the past, though. He and first year Nevada Coach Paul Lenae share a common background: Hilbert served as an assistant at the University of Oklahoma from 1984-1988 before coming to Idaho in 1989. When Hilbert left Oklahoma, Lenae took his assistant spot for the next two years before leaving for Nevada.

But Lenae has a task set for him. Last year Nevada finished last in the Big Sky with a 0-16 record and a 2-32 overall finish. That outlook isn't expected to improve this season as the 'Pack was again predicted to finish last.

The Vandals will host NAU and UN on Oct. 25 and 26 in Memorial Gym.

Next weekend Idaho will return home to face Montana State University and the University of Montana on Friday and Saturday nights. Montana (10-3, 4-0), the pre-season Big Sky favorite, is currently leading the conference while MSU (3-9, 1-1) is locked in the middle.

 headache of the worst kind. Nevada comes into this game with a gaudy resume'.
 Led by quarterback Fred Gatlin, the Wolfpack are second in the nation in total offense averaging 513 yards per game, Nevada is unscored upon in the first half this season and are outscoring their opponents 221-34.

 Nevada is tops in the Big Sky in total defense surrendering just over eight points per game. Nevada is also third in the nation in turnover margin.

 The Wolfpack are winning by a margin of 45 points per game, tops in the nation.
 "This has been one of the most fired-up weeks of practice we've had since I've been here," said Vandal All-American defensive end Jeff Robinson. "We know this game could make or break our season."

 Nevada doesn't see this game any differently themselves. They know just like the Vandals that the road to the Big Sky Championship goes right through Moscow. The winner of this game the last six years has won the conference. The Vandals talk of their mission of winning the national championships, but after being turned away by Georgia Southern in the title game last year, the Wolfpack is on a mission of their own.
 "Idaho is as good a football team as we'll face all year," said Nevada coach Chris Ault. "We just can't show up. We have to play our best football game to win."

Some speculate the Wolfpack haven't had to play their best football game yet. Of the four teams they've played: North Texas, Northwestern State (La.), Montana State and UNLV, none are in the top 20. Although UNLV is Division I, they are one of the worst in the country. And for goodness sakes, all those games have been played in Reno.

"We have things working for us this week," Smith said. "I don't think they're the greatest road team in the world and they haven't played a top 20 team yet."

"I'll defend the team's we've played," Ault said. "The teams we've played are traditionally good football teams."

 The scary thing about the Wolfpack is that even though they've lost All-Americans in cornerback Bernard Ellison and wide receiver Treاملة Taylor, they seem to be more powerful than last year.
 "Actually I'm surprised that we are doing as well as we have been," Ault said. "A lot of turnovers and good field position have helped us."
 Those turnovers can attributed to a secondary that is the best group in I-AA. Cornerbacks Brock Marion and Forey Duckett and safeties Reggie Robinson and Xavier Kairy are all at least 6-foot-3 and near 200 pounds. In 1989, when the Vandals blew out the Wolfpack at the Kibbic Dome, they were inexperienced. Now the group has developed savvy and has grown together.

"They're tough," White said. But you have to go right after them."

And with a corp of outstanding receivers led by Bryan Reeves, who has 24 receptions, the Vandals could get killed. Smith calls the Wolfpack receivers as good or better as his own group of pass catchers.

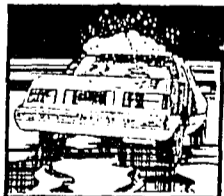

"We have to come out and play our best game," Smith said. "This could be our biggest game of the season."

Kansas City and the Raiders.

KANSAS CITY- (3-2)- The Chiefs may be the best 3-2 team in the league but Steve DeBerg has come back to earth after a cinderella season last year. Defense will have to be the mainstay for the Chiefs to win this season, but it does win games and Kansas City will go to the playoffs.

LOS ANGELES- (3-2)- The Raiders proved they are ready to contend with a physical win over San Francisco last week. Ronnie Lott and Roger Craig will make a difference and Art Shell has overcome a shaky quarterback in Jay Schroeder to try to gain respect after an embarrassing 51-7 play-off loss to Buffalo last season. The Raider defense may be one of the best in the league and it will win more than one game for the silver and black in Los Angeles.

SEATTLE- (2-3)- Seattle shouldn't even have two wins and will suffer against the stronger opponents in its division. No team can win without a good quarterback in the NFL and Seattle is no exception. Ground Chuck just can't get it done.

CHARGERS- (0-5)- The Chargers are not as bad as their record indicates, but have more problems than just an inexperienced quarterback in John Friesz. The defense has given up too many big plays and without an effective Marion Butts San Diego can't get it done. Dan Henning needs to be fired before the Chargers will win.

SUMMARY- With the exception of a few teams the AFC has taken a serious drop in overall quality from last season. The disappointments obviously outnumber the pleasant surprises and it might be ugly when the wild-card teams are selected. Look for injuries to play a major role in a more physical league than in years past. The Bills will be tough to beat. The playoffs will come down to the Oilers, Raiders and Chiefs challenging Buffalo's bid to return to the Superbowl. Look for the Bills to only lose two games and roll through the playoffs into their second-straight Superbowl appearance.

Ski team looks to exciting year

By KATIE HOLESTINE
Staff Writer

The cooling weather has just begun to touch the Palouse region and most of the students are longing for summer to hold on, but a few want it to snow, snow and snow some more.

Recently, Curtis Seiss, the director of the ski program here on campus, began preseason training for the alpine and nordic ski teams that will represent the University of Idaho this winter.

"It's difficult to assess the team before we're on snow," Seiss said. "We do have a jump with the dry land training."

Seiss is nothing but optimistic about the upcoming season for many reasons.

The University of Idaho calls Brundage Mountain in McCall home. Two years ago the Vandal skiers hosted their first race there, the Kiilsgaard Cup, and they are hoping to host it again this season.

"It's a big deal for us, but we won't know for sure until next Saturday," Seiss said.

Other positive notes to begin the season are suppliers, sponsors and the team equipment pool appear to be in great shape. The UI belongs to the National Collegiate Skiing Association (NCSA) and is nationally sponsored by the Ford Motor Company.

The NCSA recently merged with the United States Ski Association (USSA).

"Every weekend we'll be racing against U.S. Ski Team members," Seiss said.

Seiss plans to travel with 20 alpine skiers, "probably the largest (traveling) team in the conference and the west," Seiss said.

Last year the team advanced to the conference championships and they hope to make it one step farther to regionals this year. The roster has five skiers listed in all four mens' and womens' alpine and nordic competition events.

Brian Delcuso and Tom Rust are both returning for the ski team this fall.

"Brian, Tom and Kevin Fletcher will probably round out the top three for us," Seiss said.

"We're still looking for nordic skiers," Seiss adds, "If anyone is interested come by Targhee Field at 6 p.m. on weeknights."

Cross country to battle at Eastern

By DOUG BAUER
Staff Writer

Get ready Eastern Washington, Mark Olden is back.

That's right, Olden, the top cross country runner for the University of Idaho is healed from an achillo-buritis injury to his ankle and ready to run this weekend at the Eastern Washington Invitational in Spokane, held at the Finch Arboretum course.

"I'm going to be racing but right now its more important to train, we've been working really hard and things are improving with us," Olden said.

The number two runner for the Vandals, Stephanos Phygetakis surprised his coaches and teammates this week by quitting the team.

"He (Phygetakis) decided that this wasn't the place that he was looking for. This was the first time that he'd been away from home and he didn't seem to adapt well," men's coaching assistant Marcus Dunbar said. "Another reason was that his government wanted him back because he was such a top athlete. They invited him home to train along with the rest of the Olympic hopefuls."

Phygetakis had been waiting for his high school transcripts to arrive from Greece and he had not raced so far this year.

Darren Kotsovos, another top runner for the Vandal squad and the man who has been running in the number one position with the absence of Olden, is out for at least three weeks with a stress fracture.

As for the meet this weekend, it is not exactly one that the Vandal squad will be focusing on. They are still short of experienced runners and they have their home invitational next weekend.

"This is not a meet that we're pointing for," Dunbar said. "It's not one of the focal points of our season. We're just looking forward to our home meet and our conference meet for now."

Five other teams, including Eastern Washington, Montana, Washington State, Spokane Community College and North Idaho College will be participating in the meet.

Even if the Vandals aren't trying hard this weekend, it should prove to be a great meet. Olden will definitely be one of the faster runners there, but there could be a few top names from a few of the other schools present.

Whatever the case, according to Dunbar, Olden will be one of the better and more talented runners there.

ARTS/LEISURE

Edited by Trent Young
Arts/Leisure Desk - 208/885-8924GAL WITH A GUN By Cecilia Thunes

When was the last time you laughed, jumped, screamed, cried, and cheered at a movie? Probably when you were kid. Or when you saw your last Disney film.

The movies of Walt Disney have a way of bringing the child out in all of us. Films like Bambi, Snow White and the Seven Dwarves, 101 Dalmatians, Cinderella, Pinocchio, and Dumbo were the staples of our childhood. It seems like as we grew up, Disney was "for babies."

If judging by the opening night of 101 Dalmatians at The Micro tonight, Disney is not for babies anymore. Out of an audience of perhaps 130 people, I would venture to guess that only 40 were under 15 years of age. And it didn't look like the other 90 were "just there for the kids."

And that, I believe, is the foundation for "The Wonderful World of Disney." Fifty years ago Fantasia was released. Even today, people of all ages still rush to the theatres when it is rereleased for a limited time. Given that most of the Disney films are considered classics today, I expect that there will still be throngs of people standing in line to see The Little Mermaid upon its 50th Anniversary.

The opportunity to see 101 Dalmatians is a treat for young kids to view it for the first time and older people to relive their memories. "It was a joy to watch my child's reactions; it was just like it was when I saw it for the first time," remarked Christa Carson, who brought her 6-year-old daughter, Renee, with her.

It's a shame that we don't see anymore the quality of films that the Disney corporation gave us. 101 Dalmatians opens by, first of all, proudly announcing that it was produced in TECHNICO-LOR (remember that?). Then the opening credits follow, with a personal touch for each of the designers and workers involved. For example, musical bars sound out the notes that coincide with the music playing, while credits for all of the composers read above.

The animation involved is mind-boggling when you consider the amount of time and talent that were needed to bring this whole project together. It is more spectacular than special effects produced in blockbuster movies of late, like Terminator 2 or The Abyss.

I didn't really think about this until I realized that a cartoon was making me cry. How could something drawn make me feel such compassion for a bunch of puppies? You would assume that only real human actors could make us laugh that loud or feel such anxiety.

"The opportunity to see "101 Dalmatians" is a treat for young kids to view it for the first time and older people to relive their memories."

As a kind of tribute to kiddie movies, The Micro is playing a 10-minute cartoon before 101 Dalmatians begins. The Cat Came Back tells the story of a man who is interrupted in his tuba playing to the sound of a cat at the door. Being unable to resist the "cuteness" of the kitten, he opens his home to the cat, only to find that his life and home are turned into a wreck.

What follows is a hilarious account of his trials in getting rid of the kitten, only to find that, you guessed it, the cat came back. With a childlike singsong running throughout the short cartoon, it was hard to get "The cat came back the very next day..." out of your head.

The magic of Disney is something that will probably never die. If tonight's audience didn't prove that, I'm sure that once The Micro has Fantasia in a few weeks, it will be enough of an affirmation for anybody that the universal appeal of Disney will never fade.

101 Dalmatians is playing through Saturday, October 5, 5:00 P.M., 7:15 P.M., and 9:30 P.M.

Offbeat club juggles into new semester

By LESLIE ALEXANDER
Staff Writer

Imagine yourself walking along side of the memorial gym on a late Wednesday night and things are flying through the air. Unlike U.F.O.s, some of the items are Bowling pins, bean bags and unicycles of all sizes circling around you as if you were in a circus. You are not sure what is going on, but from what you can tell, it's a close encounter of the juggling kind.

Juggling can really be so much more than party antics or some sort of peculiarity that is reserved only for mumbled mentions. Its actually a great way to meet others with the same strange fascination of watching objects fly around in a baffling manner.

The University of Idaho Juggling Club are welcoming all jugglers of all levels. The club will instruct the beginning juggler and to provide opportunities for the advanced juggler who wants to practice more sophisticated juggling patterns and routines.

President of the UI Juggling Club is Jason Dearien. Dearien has been in the club for two years. He finds the club to be relaxing and a lot of fun. Dearien owns four unicycles and calls himself the Unicycle God.

Dearin and club member Luke Emery attended the International Jugglers Association in St. Louis this summer. They learned a lot of new skills and brought back plenty of great tricks to share with the rest of the club.

Active club member Kelli Craig has been in the club for six years and finds the biggest challenge of accomplishing new tricks. Craig and some of the other members performed at this year's Latah County Fair.

So, for those of you who are tired and frustrated of juggling your checkbook, classes, dead brain cells, or anything else that is annoying; pick up a few odd pieces of fruit, or if you're real daring, pick up your steak knives and ponder the thought of joining the UI Juggling Club. But please do not attempt juggling anything that could be harmful or fatal to your health.

Anyone who is interested in learning how to juggle or learn new tricks can meet every Wednesday at 6:30 in the Kibbie Dome.

Letterman's new book provides humorous top ten

By TRENT YOUNG
Entertainment Editor

Dave, the master of late-night entertainment, has done it again.

Even after Carson picked the grotesque Dorito eating "comic" (Jay Leno) over himself as new host of the Tonight Show, David Letterman is still able and willing to mouth caustic jibes that made him famous.

In The Book of Top Ten Lists: Part 2, Dave sets his scopes on everything from microwave popcorn to government policies, and ends with great success. Only a few of those he targets are able to hobble away and lick their wounds.

I must admit I haven't watched his show in a couple of years, but this book was surprisingly funny--perhaps even good enough to be called "howlingly" funny, because it almost made me puke. Actually, I had a really bad cold and it made me almost blow snot all over Cecile. Not to say, however, that the incident affected our relationship.

The best parts of this book are either the neverending slurs against Willard Scott and the rest of the Today show cast, or the photo spread in the center of the book that has little to do with anything whatsoever.

Bound to leap to the top of the bestsellers, this new book may fizzle out a few times with jokes about Marion Berry and Liberace, but overall, the performance is worthy of anything Dave and Paul could do without a band, or with a blender. Go buy The Book of Top Ten Lists: Part 2. You can read it, then give it to someone else as a Christmas gift.

College football movie makes first down

By SEV HOINESS
Staff Writer

The recent film release Necessary Roughness is solid entertainment with only a few flaws that are small and forgivable.

This particular piece of cinema seems to be a combination of two or three previously exploited plots, but is well conceived, executed and directed. My expectations of this movie were less than optimistic; regardless, I left the theatre with a smile on my lips and a twinkle in my eye.

Right from the start, witty one-liners and impressive character development are the norm. Hector Elizondo, (Pretty Woman), portrays a former football coach, victim of a bum rap, turned sportscaster.

He's offered the new head coaching job at the now defunct Texas State University, which happens to be the former national champs. But due to major infractions against the college football rule book, they lost all their scholarships. Consequently the '91 Armadillos will consist entirely of the student body at large, and Elizondo must pick his new team from an open tryout. Elizondo is determined to run a clean program and solicits the help of a trustworthy old friend and coach, Robert Loggia.

They don't need help keeping the team on the straight and narrow because pencil-neck Dean, Phillip Alias, throws curves at them every chance he gets and becomes the soul source of evil in the film. He tries every underhanded trick in the book, but Elizondo and Loggia don't give up that easily.

Loggia seeks the arm of former high school prodigy Paul Blake, (Scott Bakula of Quantum Leap). Bakula is a 34-year-old cowhand who reluctantly grabs the reins of a putrid Armadillo squad. Along with an assortment of "individuals," to say the least, Bakula and the Armadillos embark on a disastrous season.

While the season limps along, scenes of passion, fights and snappy one-liners reveal personalities that forced me to like them and made the film believable.

A special appearance by the likes of Dick Butkis, Jack Lambert, Ed "Too Tall" Jones, Jim Kelly and more active, as well as retired, professional pig-skinners is brief. However, this works well with the Necessary Roughness theme.

Necessary Roughness had a strong playbook, followed a winning game plan, and comes highly recommended if you like to laugh. Necessary Roughness is playing at The Kentworthy Theatre nightly at 7:00 and 9:15 p.m., with 2:30 and 4:45 p.m. matinees Saturday and Sunday.

LIVING WITH MEN

Commentary
by Heidi Kenyon

I live with two men. One of them is my boyfriend/unofficial fiancee. For propriety's sake, we'll give him a false name. How about Jake. Jake's best friend is the other man I live with. Danny's a good name for him. The three of us share a two bedroom apartment about six blocks from campus.

Living with men is harder than I thought it would be. I was pretty sure I would be able to handle it because I lived with Jake all summer in my hometown. However, I am now beginning to realize that Jake and I both having jobs last summer made living together a little easier. Mostly because we rarely saw each other. I worked afternoons and nights; he worked days and afternoons. I'm coming to the conclusion living with people, when you're actually home at the same time on a regular basis, is a lot different. What a concept.

The boys and I get along pretty well. We have most of the chores worked out, and it's pretty even. Maybe I even get off on the easy side. Danny does most of the dishes and Jake does most of the cooking, and all of the sweeping and vacuuming. I pick up the rest, helping out here and there and doing all the general tidying up. I am also the resident bartender and baker, although I wish I had a kitchen timer so I wouldn't also be the resident cookie-burner.

No, it's not the household responsibilities that bother me where living with men is concerned. Hey, they even remember to put the toilet lid up and down when they go ... sometimes. It's really just the subtle things that get to me ...

This morning, Danny made breakfast. I know I said Jake does most of the cooking, but Sunday morning breakfasts are an exception. Sunday breakfasts (SMB's) are quickly becoming a tradition in our house. They are always great tasting, incredibly fattening, and usually last somewhere between one and two hours.

Today we had Swedish Pancakes with raspberry filling, Danny's mother's recipe. They're made one at a time, and eaten the same way. This way, you can never fill up all at one time, you can eat for much longer, and therefore eat much more. Apparently, the record in Danny's family is 72 pancakes at one sitting.

So, here I am at the dining room table with my coffee cup ready to break my fast, when Danny brings me a Swedish Pancake on a plate. It's only about 5 inches in diameter and very thin, like a crepe. I butter it, put raspberry filling on, roll it up with my fork, and dig in. It only takes about 4 bites, but it is delicious.

The next pancake is done by now. It's Jake's turn to eat. He brings the pancake into the dining room without assistance of a serving utensil, puts it on his plate long enough to spread some raspberry stuff on, and then rolls and folds the cake in half. He then puts the whole pancake in his mouth with his fingers and chews. I cover my eyes.

Danny eats his breakfast in the kitchen, since he's the chef and had to keep an eye on the currently cooking cake. I sit sipping my coffee and, within a minute or two, the next increment of my breakfast is delivered. I eat it in four more bites. Little enough, no wonder Danny's brother ate 72 in one sitting.

Oh! Look out. The next pancake is done and Jake repeats his performance...butter, berries, fingers, folding, full mouth and all. "My God, that's disgusting," I say as he inserts the glob. He looks at me, then deliberately takes the thing back out of his mouth, still whole, not even dripping too much. "What?" He grins innocently. I cover my whole face this time. MEN!

Collette Theatre features literary greats

By RANDI ARNOLD
Staff Writer

Literature and language are the true stars of the Collette Theatre this weekend as they present The Shadowy Waters, a dramatic poem by William Butler Yeats, and Millay, a collection of poems by Edna St. Vincent Millay.

Theatre Arts student John J. O'Hagan directs The Shadowy Waters, an Irish piece that focuses on the beauty and imagery of language. O'Hagan's directing style provides the theatre-goer with a refreshing experience which is visually appealing in its use of theatrical picturization.

The talented ensemble of actors seemed extremely comfortable with the poetic language and presented it in its fullest potential. Perhaps an actors greatest tool is his voice and O'Hagan selected a cast extremely gifted in this area.

Eric Jacobson is a perfect example of this kind of talent. Jacobson's voice and physicalization directly lend themselves to the beauty and thoughtfulness of Yeat's work.

Rachel D. Frishkorn is perfect as Queen Dectora who is searching for true happiness after the death of her King. Together Frishkorn and Jacobson give a super(natural) performance as we see their relationship in life and in death.

Along with the action of the play which includes sword-fights and surrealistic characters we are enchanted by the harp playing of Linda Chapman, who also acts as a symbolic figure in the play. The actors voices along with the poetic language and harp provide a relaxed yet thought-provoking evening.

The lighting design of Kenji Mikurube gives power to the numerous monologues which occur throughout the show and highlights the set design by Tim Johnson whose few pieces give you the feeling of a mysterious, never-ending sea.

Rose Henderson should be noted for her creative costume designs of the realistic and supernatural.

"These poems are brought to life by a very expressive group of actors."

O'Hagan is successful in his directing debut where he has toyed with the ideas of the known and the unknown.

The Shadowy Waters is a must see for anyone interested in poetry or literature as O'Hagan's production brings the written words to life.

The cast of The Shadowy Waters includes Eric Jacobson, Rachel D. Frishkorn, Phillip Eilmann, Dennis Nelson, Aaron Montoya, Virginia Belt, Christy Mundt, and Linda Chapman. Mike Johnson is the Technical Director and the Stage Manager is Tina Goff.

Also included in this weekends Collette package is Millay which is directed by UI Theatre Arts graduate student Dan Emerich. Millay is a careful selection of poems by Edna St. Vincent Millay that form a human chronology of birth or rebirth, through childhood relationships and on towards death.

These poems are brought to life by a very expressive group of actors that have the ability to bring the audience into the world of the poet.

Each actor portrays a different "character" within each of the poems that can switch from tragic to humorous within seconds. Most all of the poems in Millay are rhymed but the actors never fall into the singing trap that would lead into melodrama.

The costumes, created by Carole Bloomsburg are timeless and, like Tim Johnson's set design, do not suggest a particular place or era. Like The Shadowy Waters the focus is on the literature and its presentation.

The cast of Millay includes Kimberly Kempfert, Monica Coburn, Nichola Poesy, and Bradley W. Watson.

The Shadowy Waters and Millay provide an interesting theatrical and literary experience. One can not help but admire the actors involved for all of the hard work they put into mastering the literature.

You can see these productions back to back at the Collette Theatre in the U-Hut on the University of Idaho Campus. The Shadowy Waters and Millay will run October 3-5 at 8 p.m. and Sunday October 6, at 2 p.m. Tickets are available at Ticket Express or at the door for $3.

Gallery features student works

By CECILIA M THUNES
Staff Writer

"One of the most important that aids in the work I do comes from the realization that any building belongs to some institution of man."--Louis I. Kahn, architect.

These "institutions of man" are the basis for "In the Spirit Of..." an exhibit currently being displayed at Ridenbaugh Hall. Fourth-year architect students have this opportunity to show their studio work, each project being fashioned after well-known architects before them.

Jan Friling designed his work in the spirit of Lund and Slaatto, two Norwegian architects who were publicly-renowned in Scandanavia 20 to 30 years ago. "The cool thing about this project is...you can look around and understand many different architects' theories by seeing other students' work."

Mike Williams, an architecture graduate of May '90, explains as you study a particular architect, "you find that you would come to the same conclusions under the same circumstances."

All of the students involved have spent many hours since the beginning of the semester working on their projects. Along with the models and renderings, the seniors also had to prepare a paper as part of their project.

"In the Spirit Of..." can be seen at Ridenbaugh Hall from October 4, through 17. The hall is open 9 a.m. to 6 p.m. Monday through Wednesday, and Friday. Thursdays the display can be seen 11 a.m. to 6 p.m., and Saturdays from 12 p.m. to 5 p.m. Everyone is invited to the reception on October 4 from 4 to 7 p.m. Admission is free.

TRUTH OR SHARJN' with kim and karin

Advice by
Karin Mason and Kim Bledsoe

Dear Karin and Kim:
This may sound petty, but I'm sure that there are others out there with this same nightmarish dilemma. I live with three other girls in an apartment with only one bathroom. Every time I go in to take a shower a monster-sized hairball is blocking the drain. Therefore, I am forced to remove it, much to my disgust!

We all have luxuriously long tresses, and we each condition regularly. I don't understand the reason for this amazingly large hair loss! What are some precautionary measures we can take to avoid this mess?

Signed, Out of Drano

Dear Drano:

Quit wasting your time and money on Drano and listen to our advice.

■ Kim: Hair loss is a natural occurrence and is not something to tear out your hair over (pardon the pun). What I suggest is you gather your roommates and discuss the problem over a General Food's International coffee. Each person should be responsible for their own hair that accumulates at the bottom of the drain. After showering, each of you should take a tissue and remove the hairball with a gentle, circular motion and properly dispose of it in the trash.

■ Karin: First, brushing your hair before showering can prevent hair loss in the shower. However, don't throw those hair-balls away! There are many uses for this typically discarded material. Be creative! For instance, who wouldn't love a woven human hair rug for Christmas? Or, arrange the hairballs to form a nice wall-hanging.

■ Kim: Ugh! I think I got a sweater made out of hairballs last Christmas. Although, you could be onto something. The rug is a good idea. How about socks? You could dye the hair and color coordinate them with your clothes!

■ Karin: Yeah, I think socks are a marvelous idea. Hairball socks would really keep you warm in the winter!

Drano, this is just a start. We're sure you can come up with the right answer for you.

Dear Karin and Kim:

You lousy good-for-nothing women are causing me to be a sexist pig. I need a date for a house function next week, and I'm beginning to wonder if I'm about as attractive as gum on the bottom of a Nike.

The first girl I asked made me meet a guy she was attached at the hips to. Why didn't she just tell me no?

The second one I hardly knew, and I gambled on and called her because she seemed nice. She told me she'd call me back A.S.A.P when she decided. That was four days ago.

So now, I'm at the plate with two strikes and no balls. Where do I turn? Do I approach UI librarians?

Signed, Now What?

Dearest What:

Don't head off to the library yet. We have plenty to say.

■ Karin: I agree. I'm sure there are plenty of good-natured, fun-loving girls who would give their left big toe to go with you. And if that doesn't work, try calling 1-900-DATELESS.

■ Kim: I've tried it and I'm pleased with the results I got.

We're sure you look a whole hell of a lot better than gum on the bottom of a shoe - keep up the effort.

American Indians have been asking for advice from North-American Indians concerning the shifting of Brazilians onto their lands.

"We know that to save nine out of ten mountains, one mountain must go down", said Whitman.

Ali Moslemi, a professor at the UI Department of Forestry, spoke about his research work in South American countries. Moslemi was part of a scientific team who mixed low grade wood products with concrete to produce an efficient building material. This product could last up to 50 years in a tropical environment.

"Some of the livestock live better than the people in these countries", said Moslemi as he presented slides of natives living in squalor conditions.

Moslemi also stated due to the primitive technology in these countries, around 60-percent to 70-percent of the lumber cut is completely wasted.

Special note:

October 7, a group that focuses on increasing awareness concerning the multiple uses of Cannabis Hemp will be visiting the UI. The group will be informing students about the variety of the uses of Hemp and their purpose for fighting for its legalization.

October 10, an international organization, INFAC, will be showing a half hour video concerning General Electric and their "conflict of interest" with nuclear products.

 approached by the CIA.
 "One day," recalls James "I got a message to go to my boss' office immediately, and I thought, 'Well, there goes my career in aerospace out the window.'"

But just the opposite occurred. The CIA told James they wanted him to do just what he had in done in Athens.

"Basically, I was to travel around the world, drink with the Soviets, and find out what I could," said James.

So, although he wasn't an official member of the CIA, he corresponded with them for the good of national security. The travel expenses came out of James' own pocket. He maintained his job with Pratt-Whitney, but was given "extra vacation time." James soon was traveling all over the world, hanging out with the KGB and gaining their trust. He was given profiles of the Russians he would likely encounter, found sly ways to photograph them and continued to party with them. In hopes to get a slurring Soviet to spit out some juicy tidbits, James offered aircraft news already published in American aircraft magazines to the Soviets. Often, they were fooled into thinking the old information was new. The important part was trying to get some idea of how the Russians were thinking. "These Soviets would drink you under the table," said James. "The idea was to keep filling their glass so they'd talk... which is exactly what they were trying to do to you."

 The secret to spotting KGB agents?
 "KGB agents always wore sunglasses when it was cloudy...and about every fifth guy at these aerospace conferences was KGB."
 Among his more outstanding adventures, James was asked by the KGB to spy for them, and once went against superior command and risked personal safety to help a East German scientist defect.
 The show was accompanied by a slide show with photos taken during his escapades through the years, from photos of KGB spys in the sixties, to South American revolutionaries of the eighties. Even after his days of spying were over, he kept abreast of all that was happening in national security. One situation which he was especially aware of was the Iran-Contra affair.

 "If you want my opinion, Reagan knew everything that was going on," James said. "Oliver North was giving some of his Middle-Eastern friends a tour of the White House in the middle of the night. How could he not know?"
 James also stated although the CIA has had it's share of "bad apples," the organization as a whole is good.
 "One major threat we may face in the next few years," said James, "is a major spread of terrorism in the U.S. The Soviet empire is crumbling, and terrorists will be lobbying warheads. It is actually very easy to smuggle a nuclear warhead into this country in a suitcase."

 James also predicted Israel will "take out" Saddam Hussein in the next year. There is only a 50/50 chance either Yeltsin or Gorbachev will remain in power for long, and anarchy in the Soviet Union will not last a few months but about ten years. He also said there is a substantial time lag in what the CIA knows and what the public knows.
 "Basically everything you know now, the CIA knew three-five years ago," said James.
