Corner Club reopens doors

By MATT LAWSON

Alumni, family and friends won't be the only thing returning to Moscow for Homecoming this weekend at the University of Idaho.

After closing down August 23, the Corner Club celebrates a reunion of sorts this weekend by re-opening its doors.

The Corner Club actually re-opened October 18, but after the initial week of preparation, owner Mike Curtis is ready for the traditional Homecoming crowd that has graced its presence so many years before.

Curtis agreed to a lease-to-own option with Gene Goetz, who decided to close the bar for the first time in its 43-year history.

"I just happened to be in the right place at the right time," Curtis said of the agreement with Goetz. "I've always wanted a bar since I've managed other bars in Moscow."

Curtis moved to Moscow in 1980 and tended bar at the Eagles Lodge before managing Ratz and the Capricorn for Don Houser.

Business has gone good for Curtis since opening and he admits that expectations are high for this weekend.

"If we were going to open a bar up this fall, we knew we had to open before homecoming," Curtis said. "We've had nothing but positive feedback. Everyone is really happy and a lot of alumni have offered their services in any way to make sure we stay open."

Curtis was pleased with last

Godwin responds to Greek concerns

By ALISA STOFFEL
Staff Writer

Hal Godwin, vice-president for student affairs, spoke to the new Alpha Kappa Lambda house about joining the University and fraternity system last week.

The Greek system has been a part of UI for over 90 years. The university is proud of their relationship with the many houses on campus.

In light of the strict sanctions put on the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity recently, other houses may ask why the university is so hard on a system they are so proud of.

"We, in fact, aren't hard on the Greeks at all. It's the Greeks who are hard on themselves," said Godwin.

The fraternities and sororities on campus are a self-governing group who look to larger national organizations of alumni for guidance.

National attention from these groups and from the general public pressure Greeks into maintaining the high ideals that the system was founded on.

The Greek system was set up to provide a place where, "Men and women can gather together to share ideas too controversial for the institution they were based in," Godwin said.

Unfortunately, "Those expectations have deteriorated nationally," Godwin said.

In a worst case scenario, a fraternity or sorority becomes merely a social center for partying and recovering. Fortunately, this is more often the exception to the rule. Greeks contribute to the community by supporting local and national philanthropies. This same community leans on the Greeks in times of difficulty.

The pressure of the community forces the University to step in and guide the Greeks to the straight and narrow.

Regardless of the self-governing Greek system, the

"The Vandal Big Top" comes alive at 6:30 p.m. tonight as University homecoming activities begin with the traditional pajama parade, pep rally, fireworks display and street dance.

Homecoming theme, "Under the Vandal Big Top: Joe Vandal Takes Tony the Tiger," will be carried out in events scheduled for Idaho alumni this weekend. Judging of parade floats will occur at 3 p.m. Judges are Mrs. William Moore, Moscow; Frank Sparkman, Moscow; and Marian Featherstone, home economics professor.

A serpentine-pajama parade will begin at 6:30 p.m. for all freshmen women, ending at McClean Field where during a pep rally, Alumni President, William Campbell, Boise, will announce this year's homecoming queen, chosen from five finalists. Finalists are Ann Rutledge, Tri Delta; Tom Greshy, DG; Pat McColister, Houston; Karen Longest, Kappa; and Ruth McCull, Gamma Phi. The University Marching Band will provide music and football Coach Steve Musseau will speak. A fireworks show which includes approximately 20 individual displays, will conclude the rally.

"The Gents," a local band, will play at a street dance held after the rally at the DG, Kappa, Phi Delta, Beta Intersection at 8:45 p.m.

Gov. Robert E. Smylie, parade marshal, will lead approximately 50 entries in a parade through downtown Moscow at 9:30 a.m. Saturday. All entries are to be in line at 8 a.m. with the number assigned to them posted on each side of the float.

Several parade floats are being built by the combined efforts of campus living groups. They are Delta Kappa; Lambda Chi Theta; Hays-Willis Sweet; Tri Delta; Gamma Phi; Phi-Delta Sigma; Sigma Chi-DG; Snow-Campbell; Phi Kappa Alpha; Phi Beta Kappa; Houston-Gault; Phi Delta Alpha Hall Macklin, head of the department of music, will present a Carlton concert from 1 to 1:30 p.m.

Idaho meets the University of the Pacific at 1:30 p.m. at Neale Stadium. Pre-game activities include presentation of the six Best trophies to parade winners; presentation of hand certificates to the participating high school bands; special marching routines by the University Marching Band and Vandals; and team line-ups.

Half-time activities will feature a marching routine by the Idaho band and Vandals. President Hartung will be introduced by Dick Bush, ASUH president, who will also introduce Governor Tim Wain. Homecoming chairman, Alumni president Campbell will present the Homecoming Queen and her court and award the Club Banner to the outstanding Vandal Booster.

An open house is scheduled in all campus living groups from 4 to 6 p.m. TGIF will present a talent show from 6 to 7 p.m. at the SUB in conjunction with a Blue Jacket Buffet, "Bacon of Best," also scheduled from 6 to 7 p.m.

"Big Top Ball," is the theme of the homecoming dance set from 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. at the SUB ballroom with women's tickets at $1.50 and men's at $2.00. Tickets for the dance are on sale at $1.50 at the ASUH office and can be purchased at the door. Homecoming queen and her court will be introduced during the dance intermission.

Finalists will receive an engraved silver dish and serve as substitutes to the queen. Homecoming Queen will receive three trophies, one for her living group, an individual trophy for herself and a traveling alumni trophy. The trophies are on display in the Washington Water Power building downtown Moscow.

GRAND MARSHAL - Gov. Robert E. Smylie will lead the Homecoming parade tomorrow. Arriving today, Smylie will attend the rally and fireworks display. Tomorrow, Gov. Smylie is scheduled to attend the football game with President Ernest Hartung.

Deadline Set For Petitions

Petitions for class officers must be submitted to Dick Bush, ASUH President, before 12 noon Monday. This deadline must be met so that the registrar's office can begin certification of all candidates running, as prescribed in the ASUH Constitution.

Those wishing to run for an office must be nominated by other formal balloting of a recognized political party, or by submission of a petition bearing 75 signatures of members of the ASUH, along with a statement by the candidate of his willingness to run. All people signing the petition must be from the prospective candidate's class, as indicated by the Registrar.

Chl; Foray Hall; Gamma Phi-Sigma; Nu; Upsilon-Pi; and Alpha Gamma-TKE.

Other parade entries include Senator and Mrs. Len Jordan, Congressman Compton I. White, President and Mrs. Ernest Hartung, Mr. and Mrs. William Campbell, University Bands, several high schools bands from the surrounding area and University service honoraries.

Cafeteria Luncheon from 11 a.m. to 1 p.m. will be held at the SUB. The Young Democrats plan a "Meet Your Candidates" reception at 11:30 a.m. at the SUB. Class members of '84, '81, '83, and '81 will be honored during the luncheon at tables assembled at the SUB.

Alumni office keeps in touch

By KELLY TYNON
Staff Writer

According to Philip "Flip" Kleffner, director of Alumni Relations, "The most important aspect (of the Alumni Office) is to keep the attachment to the university alive in our alumni." With Homecoming this weekend, the Alumni office is busier than ever. Although the Alumni Office is known for being involved with alumni who return to campus for various reasons, it also has an outreach program for alumni to "take the university to them," said Kleffner. This includes the alumni section of Idaho, the Magazine and information in the At Idaho tabloid.

"We sponsor Silver and Gold Days in several communities, such as Boise and Seattle, where UI alumni can get together for things like horse races and dinners," said Kleffner. "We usually have a few of these a year."

Each year, several awards are given through the Alumni Office. Four to six alumni are inducted into the UI Hall of Fame for outstanding national service. Several alumni are also given Silver and Gold awards for outstanding service in their state or region. The Alumni Office also recognizes the top 40 senior scholars at the UI every December.

This Friday, the Alumni Office, along with the College of Letters and Science, is helping to honor Dr. Boyd A. Martin, director of the Martin Peace Institute. Martin will be receiving the Distinguished Idahoan Award, the third person to ever receive this award.

The Alumni Office is busy throughout the year with projects such as these. According to Kleffner, the office is involved with over 300 events a year.

"Not only do we do our own projects, but we also support individual colleges, clubs, and living groups with their projects," said Kleffner.

This fall, the Alumni Office has helped sponsor at least one college reunion at each football game and is supporting the ASUI with the reunions this weekend.

"About 30 to 40 people are coming for the Pep Band reunion, over 100 people from the Class of '66, and 60 to 70 from the Class of '51. We also have the Parent's Board meeting, with about 50 members," said Kleffner. "It's great to see former students come back to support the alma mater."

"We also work with students still on campus, through the ASUI and SARB (the Student/Alumni Relations Board)," said Kleffner.

Kleffner ended with, "We encourage participation in alumni activities. We're all one large extended family."

Pep band reunites for concert

By LANE GRACIANO
Staff Writer

The Pep Band promises a musical journey back in time at the University Inn this Saturday.

It all started in 1920 when seven Kappa Sigma brothers started jamming on guitars, drums and trumpets. They dubbed themselves the Pep Band. Over the course of three decades the band's all-male lineup changed to accommodate members from all walks of school life. This weekend, 40 of them will be in town for a first-ever Pep Band reunion.

Idaho lawyer Jack Furey, class of '48, was instrumental in organizing the rendezvous. With the help of Joanne McCroskey the Alumni Center's secretary and program coordinator, and Mike Davis, the associate director of alumni relations, he rounded up ex-Pep Band members across the States.

Furey was surprised to garner such an overwhelming response. "The idea developed a little more than I thought it would," he said.

In its heyday the Pep Band was an officially recognized UI campus activity. It played at university games and dances, and at some Chamber of Commerce gigs off campus. Before World War II, it toured the Northwest was broadcast over the local airwaves on one Spokane trip.

"The band was not affiliated with the UI music department," Furey said, "but it was a good spokesgroup for the university."

The musicians disbanded during the war years, but Furey revived the group in 1946. With members of the then-renowned swing band Gentlemen of Note at the nucleus of the new group, the Pep Band swung back into action.

Pep Band leaders and players ranged from musicians to M.D.'s to Marines, with one common ground among them: music. In the world beyond the UI, the band's ex-members still come from diverse walks of life.

Jack Perciful, class of '51, became a professional musician. Native to the town of Moscow, he

Minority recruiter brings racial diversity to UI

By MATT LAWSON
Editor

The struggle to attain racial diversity on the University of Idaho campus has brought several challenges and the future looks like an uphill climb.

But Ben Coronado wouldn't want it any other way.

Coronado took over as the assistant director of New Student Services at the UI in August of last year. He is responsible for minority recruiting and counseling minority students after they have enrolled at the UI.

"The North Idaho image is always going to be a battle that I will fight with students from other states," Coronado said.

Coronado, 28, is an Idaho Falls, Idaho native. His parents moved there two years before his birth from Mexico.

He attended Boise State University on a wrestling scholarship after graduating from high school. Coronado's wrestling career was much celebrated with four-straight individual conference titles and subsequent trips to the NCAA National Championships.

He never finished in the top eight at nationals to qualify for All-American status, but was ranked eighth nationally during his sophomore year. After that season, Coronado decided to take his Mormon mission to a Spanish speaking area in Oregon before returning to wrestling for his final two years of eligibility.

After graduating from Boise State University in 1988 with a degree in Criminal Justice, Coronado took a job at BSU in the education department.

Coronado's degree had an emphasis in corrections and counseling which led him to pursue his current job when it became available.

"I applied for the position because I knew it would provide the greatest challenge as far as minority affairs is concerned," Coronado said.

For Coronado, challenging might not be a strong enough adjective. He works at least 40 hours a week and has a travel schedule that might have frequent flyer miles headed his way.

In the month of October alone, Coronado has traveled to Missoula and Polson, Montana; Seattle and Tacoma, Washington; along with local trips to Lewiston, Orofino, Lapwai and McCall-Donnelly High Schools.

But before Coronado can take a breathe, he is on a trip to the Portland and Seattle College Fairs. Trips to Alaska and San Diego are also planned for November.

"My first year it was really tough," Coronado said of traveling. "I don't know if I am growing callous to the idea of traveling"

The biggest drawback in traveling said Coronado is the time he has to spend away from his family, his wife, Kathy and daughters, Brielle, 3, and Lindsey, 1.

Although Coronado finds it difficult spending time away from his family, it is the support from his wife that helps as motivation.

"I never would have made the trip this far North if I had not had the full support from my wife," Coronado said. "She has been a real force in my professional progress and my positive attitude stems from my homelife and family."

The traveling has payed off in Coronado's progress and he is the first to admit to it.

"As long as there is a minority student recruiter in the field, questions toward racial issues at the University of Idaho can be fielded by him or her," Coronado said. "I can almost always count on questions about racial issues in North Idaho."

Coronado's Mexican heritage has helped him build a comfort zone for the students he visits.

"I think I put those students at ease because they see me and realize I have a family and have made my home in Moscow," Coronado said. "They can see a place that has been labeled with such hatred and question how it can be if I am here."

Coronado's efforts may be unrecognized by the public, but recent increases in minority enrollment show evidence of success.

Minority student enrollment is up 20 percent this year, including a 40 percent increase of Hispanic students. These increases have been one of Coronado's main goals.

"I would like to see in the next four years a continual increase of no less than 10 percent per year," Coronado said. "After the increase this year the future looks good."

Programming for current UI students has also been a major concern of Coronado's through the formation of groups and counseling.

This fall, two groups have been adopted on campus and Coronado has played a major role in guiding those groups.

MECHA, a Hispanic students association, and Recognizing African-American Concerns in Education (RAACE), were both brought to the UI campus recently.

Coronado attributes the success in minority recruiting and programming to the freedom and support given to him by President Zinser along with the rest of the administration.

"I think Ben is a real contributing factor in our success in addition to the president, provosts and colleges welcoming minority students," Vice-President of Student Affairs Dr. Hal Godwin said. "He is very talented and a young professional."

"He has a good feel for minority recruiting in Idaho and repore with students," Director of Admissions Peter Brown said. "I think he is not only a hard worker, but he is sensitive to the needs of students."

In addition to spending his time at work and with his family, Coronado is finding time to pursue a Masters in counseling.

Coronado loves his job and he admits it. Although the recruitment of minority students does face several forms of adversity, he does receive positive feedback and is optimistic about the future.

But satisfying Coronado seems almost parallel to the challenge of recruiting he faces.

"I'm the worst loser in the world," Coronado said. "I'm not a poor loser, but I hate it so much it drives me to succeed. I'm pleased with the progress and it is the fear of losing that keeps me going."

From the looks of it, he may never slow down.

UI grads return to campus for Homecoming

By CHRISTIAN THOMPSON
Staff Writer

Homecoming is a time to return. For students, it is a time to build floats, decorate houses, create skits, and greet family and friends. For alumni, it is a time to come back, observe the changes, and revel in the traditions.

More than a song, it is what gives a university its flavor, distinct from all others, and here at the University of Idaho, we definitely have traditions.

The Homecoming Parade is one of our longest standing traditions, around so long no one can remember when it started. Today, each living group builds a float to be oohed and ahed by the public. A time to stand in the cold, stomp our feet, and blow hot air into our hands while enjoying the festive excitement.

The Bonfire: skits by living groups, creative songs, funny costumes, and of course - the COMBUSTIBLE, which is added to the fire and makes the flames lick higher.

And at the bonfire, our Homecoming Queen is announced! Another long standing tradition, like waving the U.S. flag and eating apple pie. What would Homecoming be like without its queen?

The University of Idaho also has a tradition of a 25 year reunion, which is very unusual. It is made possible because of our strong alumni ties, easily acquired football game tickets, and the continuation of traditions by the students.

A recent tradition is that of a 40 year class reunion, which this year is the class of 1951. Another recent addition is the reunion of certain UI groups. Last year, it was the UI Cheerleaders. This year it is the UI Pep Band, so below out our almatater.

The university is reviving an old tradition: The Homecoming dance, which has only been offered sporadically in the past years and is now making a comeback.

Traditionally, Homecoming is a time for public officials to come and be seen. They speak to the public and, especially if it is an election year, get votes. It is a gathering place for state and national dignitaries.

And of course, the Homecoming Game. Without it, there would be no Homecoming. It gives everyone a chance to cheer for the UI football team, remember other games and other crowds.

The main reason that Homecoming is such a tremendous occasion at the UI is the alumni. They keep coming back. They walk the halls they walked when they were here; they sit in the room they lived in; and they sit in the same desks they learned in. It is like coming home.

Flip Kleffner, director of the Alumni Association, believes they keep coming back because while they were here, there was a "strong living-on-campus atmosphere, and they were a definite part of the university during their four years." This is unique to the UI. We are a smaller school, isolated, giving us a private university atmosphere.

Homecoming is a tradition, based on traditions that have been forming for over a hundred years. It is not just today, or this weekend: It is yesteryear.

has since traversed the States by way of the jazz scene. Between 1957 and 1974 he played, cut albums and guested in movies with the famed Las Vegas-based Harry James Orchestra.

Presently, Perciful arranges all musical selections and plays solo piano pieces for the orchestra. His return to his hometown will also reunite him with his graduating class, which is holding a special 40-year re-meet this year.

Bass guitarist and vocalist Hal Champeness also made a career out of music. He played with the Joe Venuti dance band, which was well-known nationwide in the big band era, and has released several albums under the stage name Hal Champ.

Ex-member Bill Eimer, now a school administrator, did not only play musical instruments; he played outstanding basketball and went on to the UI Hall of Fame.

Paul Atwood, class of '27, gained fame in the business world as a management consultant who turned near-bankrupt companies into profitable enterprises. He was placed in the 1987 Alumni Hall of Fame, and endowed a graduate fellowship in business a year later. Now retired, he continues to pursue his interests in business and the UI.

Atwood, in his eighties, is the oldest Pep Band member attending the reunion. The youngest, Rodney Burton, graduated in the class of '55 and was one of the last players in the band before it was dissolved that year.

Francis Sheneberger, 91, holds the distinction of being the oldest living Pep Band ex-member. He also happens to be one of the original seven founders of the band. Sheneberger lives in Twin Falls, but will not be present at the reunion.

Saturday's jam session will feature some of the attending Pep Band members with local musicians. Anyone in the mood for an atypical post-game celebration is welcome to Charleston the evening away to the tunes of big band hits in the University Room at the Inn.

"It won't be rock and roll," Furey cautioned. "I don't want anyone to be disappointed."

But if anything, a historic event like this reunion definitely sounds memorable.

Classes reunite for nostalgic return to UI

By Wendy Deal
Staff Writer

This 1991 Homecoming year brings two class reunions to the University of Idaho. The class of 1966 and 1951 will both be having celebrations to reunite class members.

Events for the weekend will include: a campus bus tour, a no-host social hour, class photo, reunion dinner, warm-up breakfast, "Idaho's Family Football Food Festival," Homecoming Football Game, open houses at living groups, Saturday night social and dinner and a Homecoming Dance with music by Hal Logan and the Senders.

A number of prizes will be given at the reunion dinners. Categories will include alumni who have traveled the farthest, who has the most children attending the UI and many others.

Both classes will be having speakers at Saturday's dinner. Speaking to the class of '51 will be Neal Smiley. Smiley, a real estate entrepreneur of Pascoe, Washington, was president of Alpha Tau Omega Fraternity.

The Class of '66 will be listening to their former class president Robert Thiessen. Thiessen, a lawyer in San Diego was a member of Sigma Alpha Epsilon Fraternity.

A few class celebrities will be attending this weekend's events, such as Class of '51 football players Jim Talent and Wayne Anderson. Many members of '51 may remember the Boston football game that Talent and Anderson played in. Idaho came from 20 points behind to a victory over Boston College. The class of '66 also had many memorable football games. Several team members went on to become NFL players.

An extra special event that will accompany the reunion is the Pep Band. The first Pep Band was established in 1920, with only seven members. The seven original members were all of the Kappa Sigma fraternity: Lynn Hersey, Fred Marineau, Philip C. Samms, Eugene Ostrander, Francis C. Sheneberger, Vernon Walters, and Ted Holderman. According to Sheneberger, the only surviving founding member, "The original group was not affiliated with the university, but got together for the fun of it." The Pep Band played at school functions, parades, pep rallies and athletic events. The group was well received, and after the first year four additional members were added. By 1924 the band had increased in size to fourteen or fifteen members.

Many people who played in the Pep Band went on to become professional musicians. Jack Perciful, who graduated in '51, played with Harry James and his band. Any former members of the Pep Band are invited to a "Jam Session" after the football game at the University Inn's, University Room. Anyone needing additional information on the reunions may contact the Alumni Office at 885-6154.

ASUI forms tenant association

By SHARI IRETON
Staff Writer

A tenants association is forming at the University of Idaho in response to the Zephyr Apartment fire in September.

The fire, which left about 20 UI students temporarily homeless, has brought the issue of tenant rights to the attention of the university and community.

The association's first meeting will be October 29, at 7 p.m., in the UI Student Union Building. Featured will be guest speakers Maureen Laffin, director of the UI Legal Aid Clinic and Jim Bauer, UI housing director.

The tenants association, formed through the ASUI and UI Attorney General's office, focuses on housing controversies such as the continuous housing shortage and numerous tenant complaints.

One of the goals of the organization will be to educate tenants about their rights and obligations.

"Knowledge is power," said

Thomas Adams, the ASUI Attorney General, "and most students need to be informed about their rights as tenants."

The association is also planning to put together its own student rights handbook discussing subjects such as sexual harassment, free speech and landlord/tenant rights.

ants and even on-campus residents, who she says also need to be able to voice complaints.

Harold Beu, chair of the Latah County housing task force, said he welcomes the formation of a tenants association for students. However, Beu also stated the task force is primarily concerned with providing housing for the poor, and most students are not poor.

In a later interview, Beu said that what he said earlier was taken out of context.

"I understand the student's plight," he said, as he himself was once a college student. Beu said that the task force is immediately concerned with the families in the area who can't even afford food or clothing, much less decent housing.

In contrast to his first statement, financial aid figures show last year, over 2300 UI students received money from the Pell Grant program. Only students who are the "neediest of the needy" are eligible to receive these funds.

"Knowledge is power."

ASUI Senate kills grade requirement bill

By JOHN NOH
Contributing Writer

A proposed bill designed to raise the required GPA for all ASUI elected officials was the main topic discussed at the ASUI Senate's weekly meeting Wednesday night.

The bill, authored by Senator Brian Oswald, would have raised the required GPA for elected ASUI officials from the current 2.0 to 2.25. Senator Jeff McClain, a proponent of the bill argued that, "This is a learning institution, circumventing academics goes against the main reason for attending a university."

ASUI Vice-President Bill Hefner said raising the GPA would exclude over 800 people from participating in ASUI elections. He felt all students should be eligible to run for ASUI office.

Senator Oswald felt this bill was necessary.

"As student leaders, it is important that we set an example for our fellow students. It's extremely important that we maintain a high academic image."

After a lengthy debate the bill failed to receive the necessary approval of two-thirds of the Senate, on a 7-5 vote in favor of it.

In other business the Senate allocated money for Cultural Awareness Week. This ASUI sponsored event will be held during the week of November 4. Senator Amtul Mannan Sheikh encouraged all senators to inform their living groups about this event. He has hopes that many campus organizations will be involved. Senator Sheikh said, "Cultural Awareness Week is designed to promote racial diversity on campus through a wide variety of events." Some of these events include a food and crafts fair and various speakers.

ASUI President Mike Gotch spoke about the one percent property tax initiative. He asked the Senate to pass a resolution against the proposed initiative. Gotch said, "Although this measure looks very good because it greatly reduces property taxes, there is no proposal to regenerate the lost tax dollars."

Bonfire warms up Homecoming

By Wendy Deal
Staff Writer

Last night, the University of Idaho campus took part in an all-campus dinner exchange and bonfire. Greek houses had the opportunity to dine at the Wallace Complex cafeteria and resident hall members had the option of eating at Greek houses. Following the dinner exchange was the annual Homecoming bonfire. Fraternities, sororities and residence halls participated in skit and combustible competitions.

The skits were based on this year's Homecoming theme of recycling. Everyone made an effort to incorporate the five R's — reduce, reuse, remove, replace and recycle — into their skits.

Kappa Kappa Gamma had their own rendition of Saturday Night Live explaining how to put those five R's to work. Sigma Chi received a visit from "The King" and Pi Beta Phi performed a recycling rendition of the Addam's Family theme. The new fraternity on campus, Phi Beta Sigma topped the night's performances with their incredible step show.

There were many impressive combustibles, including several life-sized eagles. Campbell Hall threw a "Cream of Eagle" Campbell Soup can onto the fire. Forney Hall made a statement with their combustible by not throwing it into the fire; they decided to recycle it instead.

Living groups were scored on enthusiasm and presentation. The ranking for the men's combustible competition was Tau Kappa Epsilon, Alpha Kappa Lambda, Sigma Chi and Farm House. For the women's combustible, Campbell Hall was first, followed by Alpha Gamma Delta, French Hall and Forney Hall. Men's skits ranked Alpha Kappa Lambda, Sigma Chi, Farm House and Sigma Nu. The women's skits ranked Alpha Phi, Delta Delta Delta, Kappa Kappa Gamma and Campbell Hall. Overall for men: Fiji, Pi Kappa Alpha, Sigma Chi and Farm House. Overall for women: Gamma Phi Beta, Pi Phi, Delta Delta Delta and Kappa Kappa Gamma.

Football players Kasey Dunn, Jeff Robinson and Devon Pearce made a special appearance to rally the crowd for Saturday's game. The UI Cheerleaders also took part in the night's activities.

Homecoming royalty were crowned following the skit competition. Homecoming Queen for 1991 is Tamera Cann of Gamma Phi Beta. The two princesses that will accompany Cann are Kelly Culp of Delta Gamma and Deanna Vandyke of Delta Delta Delta. Congratulations!

UI architecture program reaccredited

By KALISTA BARCLAY
Asst. News Editor

The architecture program in the College of Art and Architecture at the University of Idaho has been re-accredited for the next three years.

The National Architectural Accrediting Board visited campus this past March to assess the changes in the architecture program since the board's last visit in 1987. The board expressed several concerns about the program in key areas such as curriculum, faculty, classroom and studio space and the scarcity of women and minorities in the program.

Some problems in these areas according to the board's report include a need to fill the gaps in the program's curriculum, to add faculty members, allocate faculty time more efficiently and add more space to classrooms and studios in the building.

These concerns need to be addressed by the College of Art and Architecture before the program will be considered for re-accreditation for a full five years. The board will be returning during the 1993-1994 school year to make a decision about re-accrediting the program for five years.

"In summary, there is substance to this program, but its philosophy and leadership needs to be defined," the report states. "A lack of a strategic plan and adequate resources is driving the program toward marginal status in many areas."

According to George Simmons, temporary dean of the College of Art and Architecture, the college is already making the changes necessary to ensure re-accreditation for a full five years. Simmons said he and Robert Baron, the new head of the architecture department, have been working with the faculty to address many of the concerns expressed by the board. He said they have begun implementing a five-year strategic plan of development to strengthen the program.

"Many things on the accredit-plished or financial commitments have been made to address them," Simmons said.

Several steps in the five-year strategic plan have been taken. For example:

- The department acquired an additional 5,000 square feet of studio space that students and faculty are currently using.

- Faculty members are re-evaluating and increasing standards for admission into the professional program as well as re-examining current advising procedures.

- The department has created two new faculty positions. A specialist in structural technology and architectural design was hired this fall. A specialist in history/theory and architectural design will be hired in the fall of 1992.

- A full-time computer technician was hired this fall to enhance the programming in computer-aided design.

- UI administrators are hoping to find a new dean for the College of Art and Architecture by July 1992. Dean Simmons was named temporary dean of the college in the fall of 1990.

Money needed for further revamping of the architecture program will come from reallocation of funds in the college and the university, according to UI provost Thomas Bell.

"I am pleased the accrediting team recognized the continued, overall quality of our architecture program," said Bell. "I am even more pleased and proud of the progress made by the new administration in the art and architecture college. Progress in areas that have been of concern to the administration here as well as the accrediting board. "We are committed as an institution to the success of this long-time member of our academic community," Bell said.

No petting allowed!

By SHARI IRETON
Staff Writer

Women at the University of Idaho don't realize exactly how good they have it these days.

Times have changed, and so have the rules on the UI campus. Dress codes, curfew hours and strict dating regulations have all been abolished with the women's liberation era.

Here are some examples of guidelines for women living in sororities or residence halls from a 1927 Argonaut:

- Girls are not permitted to have their men friends call for them in private cars. This is construed to be an effort to curb joy-riding and petting parties.

- Freshmen women are prohibited from going to the library to study in the evenings.

- Neither freshmen nor sophomore women are to be allowed to go to picture shows during week nights.

- Rooms must be sufficiently lit when men are calling.

Commitment to recycling needs consistency

Recycling. We've heard that word a lot in the past decade, in fact it is now a household word, even a "Homecoming" word. Yes, it is this year's theme.

Being a Boulderite, a resident of Boulder, Colorado, I was raised on this concept. I remember my mother separating aluminum cans from paper from plastic from glass, all in the family garage. The result? No room for the cars and we all looked like major alchis. I'm finding the same results here.

The stuff piles up!

Recycling saves our non-renewable resources, reduces energy costs and cuts down on landfill costs, but let's face it — "it ain't easy."

How many living groups have boxes overflowing with aluminum cans, newspapers set outside to get soggy in the rain, and broken glass in the trash can? Though recycling is necessary, there must be an easier way.

Through this year's theme, students are supposed to become more aware of the problem but many of us are getting frustrated instead. How many of us are willing to carry a can across campus just to put it into a recycle bin? Students can barely carry their backpacks, let alone juggle recyclables. Why aren't these containers all over campus? On every corner? In every building? On every floor? The more easily accessible they are, the more likely we are to recycle.

Recycling isn't an immediate pat on the back, there are no brownie buttons passed out for every can we recycle. It isn't even cost-effective for the everyday citizen. It's something a person must want to do, very badly in many cases, because it is so difficult to do all the time. It's hard to find a place to recycle the items, and many times people have to drive somewhere to get their recyclables processed. No wonder they all pile up. It's a big effort. So we must make it easy.

The physical plant doesn't provide pickup for every living group. Why not? They do in Boulder, every two weeks. Hey, they even provide the bins, all you have to do is fill them up and put them on your curb. It's EASY!!!

When the physical plant was asked why they weren't collecting recyclables in all the residence halls this year, they said it was due to lack of funds. Greek living groups have never even been offered this service.

If it is lack of funding on the University's side, maybe they need to re-evaluate their priorities. Recycling is obviously important to many of us at the UI. Why don't our programs reflect that?

It seems hypocritical to plan a Homecoming theme without providing ways to manage the issue every day in every way. Recycling can't be a fair-weather friend. If we do it, we must do it all the time. Not just to impress others with our "progressive themes."

—Christian Thompson

Be careful for homecoming

In the next 48 hours or so, pandemonium will strike the U of I campus as the Homecoming festivities begin. Many students will have many things on their minds such as: if the Vandals will win on Saturday and continue to win so they can make the play-offs, (I think they will), and whether our

I mean watching out for the other guy/girl who has been drinking far too much. I mean no drinking and driving. I trust that what we see happening to the SAE's and the Kappa Sig's is reminder enough to be responsible this Homecoming.

Although I believe that Scott Mondahl would be alive today if he and his colleagues were able to have a beer or two in the house, I also believe that we make our own choices. I am deeply saddened by the events of late and I hope this won't become a trend. However, as a realist, I know someday someone will forget to be responsible and others will be hurt.

I am not saying that we as students can't have a few beers this weekend. I am saying that drink-dates look handsome/beautiful, and whether we can drink more fishbowls than ever recorded in the annals of history.

With all this precious information in mind, I hope we can keep one more thing in our heads: being responsible. What do I mean by this? I mean being aware of our drinking limits.

Favorite watering hole is open again

Special, special. Seventy-five cent drafts all day, every day. "Where, oh where?" you ask. I guess that is for me to know, and for you to find out.

It shouldn't be that difficult for you. Simply look around. The answer lies just a little bit beyond your nose. Need a hint?

Question: what are you going to be doing this weekend? After all, it is Homecoming. With the football game, parade, shopping, entertaining the parents, there's so much to do, and so little time. As a Moscow tradition, the weather should be good and rainy. Perfect. You know something, if you've seen seven homecomings, you've seen 'em all. However, this year's Homecoming harbors a wee bit of a surprise.

However, let us not get ahead of ourselves. Let us travel back in time to August 23rd. Many of you may not remember the events on a day that for most was simply like any other. Picture a Friday: cold afternoon beers and a hot sun on Gambino's patio. The thought of classes and homework was still fifty some-odd hours in the future. Myself? I, along with my chauffeur Pork, were on the road trip from hell simply trying to get to Moscow. We were quite oblivious to the shell-shock we would receive on our arrival. Boy, were we in for it.

In a nutshell, August 23rd turned out to be one of the sadder days, if not the saddest, in my college life. It was the day the Corner Club poured its last pounder and played its last game of shuffleboard. There would be no more suppers of stale popcorn and cold Vitamin R's. Yes, Moscow's most infamous watering hole, and all the charm and history which went with it, closed its doors, but not forever. The Club is now open again.

What say we talk a little history here?

Did you know that way back when, they used to let horses in, with the driver still perched upon its back? Did you also know that the famous ex-pro, and ex-Idaho great, Gus Johnson once made the Club nationally known by simply touching a nail in the ceiling? The ceiling may have been twelve feet up there, but that's beside the point. Once more, that ex-Vandal football coach Dennis Erickson, now with powerhouse Miami, never missed a Wednesday night at the Club. So, as you can imagine, the Club was a sports institution. But more than that, it has been a Moscow legacy.

Tradition, historical epitaph and one of the supreme fun spots of all the world: these are understatement when describing the Corner Club and its contribution to the Moscow community.

Do not let me sit here and waste your valuable time telling you how I feel about this mecca. Go down and see for yourself. After all, it's more than a simple bar, it's the bar, and it's Homecoming. Midterms are over. Your friends are more than likely already there, holding down a table. So live a little. After all, how many other bars have you been in that have been written up in National Geographic and Sports Illustrated?

EDITOR'S NOTE

After taking over as Editor of the Argonaut a goal of mine was to gain the interest and participation from more students at the UI. The continued flow of letters and comments from the student body has been greatly appreciated and recognized. We are attempting as a student newspaper to express the views and interests of the students to the remainder of the student body along with the administration and faculty. We at the Argonaut will continue to run all letters whether positive or critical of this staff and the events that occur relating to this campus and community. Consequences come with choices

Editor;

This is a letter in response to your letter in the October 22nd edition of the Argonaut. Please consider this reply because I believe that it is a point that must be voiced.

Mr. Matt Lawson believes that it is the fault of the sanctions placed on the Kappa Sigma Fraternity and the drinking age law that led to Scott Mondahl's death on Sunday. He asks if they are at fault for this accident. Are they to blame for choosing to drink, to get into a car with someone who had been drinking, or for that driver to be driving 75 miles per hour in a 35mph speed zone? Yes, they are to blame. He is taking the blame away from adult, college students who made decisions that put their lives in danger and putting it upon rules that have been in effect for years. Are we all mindless teenagers who must drink no matter what we have to do or where we have to go to do it? They made choices. That is the point. They shouldn't have to die for those choices, but when you drink and drive, it is not "poor judgment," as Mr. Lawson puts it, but a risk taken that could be fatal, and in this case was. If I sound angry, well I am. This death was pointless. Scott Mondahl should not have died and the other two should not be in the hospital in critical condition. We are not going to honor his death by petitioning the IFC Tribunal and our lawmakers to change their policies because we all know that is not going to happen. Let us make an example of Scott's death and learn from the choices that he made and not let this happen again.

DRINK RESPONSIBLY AND DON'T LET ANYONE DRINK AND DRIVE!!

-Lisa D. Smith

Is sex unnatural?

Editor;

U.S. Supreme Court nominee Clarence Thomas' praise for the implicit use of natural law in judicial decisions gives legal standing to Catholic theological complaints about "unnatural" sex. Using the pretext of natural law, the Catholic hierarchy opposes birth control, sex hygiene items such as condoms, sex education in schools, abortion, masturbation, and homosexuality. Their real motive is to make people suffer for having sex.

They still believe virginity is best and that all sexual intercourse, even within marriage, is somehow impure and regrettable. Yet celibacy practiced by the Catholic hierarchy is just as unnatural as birth control.

In Asia 2,400 years ago, the Chinese philosopher Lao-tse objected to roads, carriages, and boats as unnatural. Clothes are contrary to nature, yet make humans healthier than the naked savage who goes without clothing. Today we support the idea of inherent human rights but these are quite different from natural law. Since Judeo-Christianity's basic cosmological model is essentially monarchial, only acquired, and more specifically, bestowed rights- which are revocable- can be found in the Bible and many rights therein are ethnic group or gender based ("Two Kinds of Rights", James Hall).

Let's not return to the Dark Ages under the rubric of natural law.

Mike Steele's opinions are factually inaccurate

Editor;
This letter is a response to the ethnocentric, inhumane and factually inaccurate opinions which were shared with us on October 1, by Mr. Mike Steele.

Mr. Steele begins by calling a woman holding views deviant from his own deranged. Name calling sure is a mature way to make a point, Mr. Steele! Next, Mr. Steele oxymoronically suggests that the woman would hit him with peace signs.

Mr. Steele points out that, "in a war, anyone in uniform is fair game." Mr. Steele, that is exactly why I, and many others are opposed to the senseless waste of life known as war. Mr. Steele called the Iraqi civilian deaths minimal. How many widowed mothers are minimal? How many homeless, orphaned children are minimal? Even the estimated 100,000 Iraqi military deaths count, Mr. Steele. Those people were human, just like you. That they were born inside of different national boundaries does not make them sub-human. They also were drafted into the Iraqi army without a choice, in most cases. Have you no sense of human compassion, Mr. Steele? You attribute the "minimal" slaughter to "smart bomb" weaponry (an oxymoron, if ever there was one!). According to the U.S. Air Force Chief of Staff, 93% of the bombs dropped on Iraq were "dumb bombs", with an estimated 25% accuracy. Washington post calculations estimate that 70% of U.S. analysts were "unable to accurately calculate Iraqi civilian deaths" (Weekly World News Digest Facts on File 1991). My educated guess is that they were not so minimal. Mr. Steele's misperceptions concerning "minimal" casualties and

"smart bomb" weaponry most likely relate to the government propaganda that the U.S. public is constantly spoon fed by our "news" media.

I agree with Mr. Steele on one point. I am glad that there were relatively few U.S. casualties.

Let's look at the root cause of the Gulf War: OIL. Do you suppose that there just might be a correlation between our fearless leader's connections to the petroleum industry and our federal government's stubborn refusal to invest in alternative energy sources? Did you know that 6% of U.S. land could produce enough biomass to supply 100% of our domestic energy needs? Biomass is renewable, whereas fossil fuel supplies are dwindling. Please educate yourself on the topic upon which you plan to speak, Mr. Steele.

Sigma Alpha Epsilon appreciates support

Editor;

I would first like to convey the thanks of the men of Sigma Alpha Epsilon to the men of Tau Kappa Epsilon for their concern and support in their Tuesday letter to the editor. We have all worked hard to exemplify a deserving and responsible house to IFC, the University, the general public and our own National office. It is most unfortunate that such a blow as this should come to us now when we have worked so hard and done so much. Many may feel that we are lucky to even still be around, and not see the changes that have become so evident in the house, but let me assure you, there is an overwhelming sense of agreement and consent in our house about it's future direction. The positive attitude and rigorous efforts of everyone in the house (especially the officers and president) has been one of a tremendous united effort to reestablish our standing here on campus and to prove to everyone that there are some ideals in Sigma Alpha Epsilon that are very redeeming and merit recognition. Our thanks also goes out to the several men and women that make up our Alumni control board headed by Jim Filcher.

The current sanctions come at a time when we least needed it and seriously dampen the spirits of a house that was on a very good return to it's original status, rough though it's been. I am very proud of the things that people in the house have given up to fulfill the sanctions originally imposed by our Nationals, the University, and IFC. There have been some very original ideas and new attitudes developed that don't

UI recycling appreciates help

Editor;

Thank you Argonaut staff for helping to recycle Argonauts! Notices reminding readers to recycle their papers have appeared in nearly every issue this semester. Also, the Arg delivery staff has been collecting old papers for recycling when the new ones are dropped off at stations all over campus. From the beginning of the semester through Oct. 16, almost 7,000 pounds of Args have been recycled this way. The effort has saved resources on the order of 59 thirty-five foot tall trees, 23,000 gallons of water and 359 gallons of fuel oil. In addition, 74% less air pollution and 35% less water pollution are produced by the manufacture of paper from recycled fibers compared to paper manufactured from wood pulp. Congratulations!

Prichard gallery appreciates help

Editor;

We want to thank you for the feature story on the University Art Galleries. We appreciate your help in making the students aware of these resources on campus and downtown. It is our hope that they will make our visual arts educational process here at the University of Idaho.

There was, we believe, one missed communication between you and your reporter about the level of attendance at the galleries, and unfortunately it was in the lead paragraph. Our annual attendance of 20,000 at the Prichard is, in our opinion, quite high, while Ridenbaugh attendance at the opening receptions (averaging 200 persons) is also quite acceptable. The concern we expressed was that these facilities are open seven and six days a week, respectively, to facilitate easy access for our students who do not seem to take as much advantage of the programs as the community does.

We are pleased that the school paper is open to actively reminding the student population of our changing exhibitions through more regular coverage. Throughout the academic year, there are fourteen different exhibits at the Ridenbaugh Gallery and twelve throughout the year at the Prichard Art Gallery. Special thanks for publishing our hours, which are far more extensive than the

Is UI rhetoric true?

Editor;

In the catalog I received as a prospective student it says: "The University recognizes that a student's total education is influenced by the nature and quality of the living environment outside the classroom and encourages the development of an environment in the living groups that will be conducive to the broad intellectual growth and greater participation in the life of the academic community."

The catalog is filled with such rhetoric to entice students to the University of Idaho. But is their rhetoric true? Do they believe what they are saying?

As a resident of the Alumni Residence Center (ARC), I think not. I have learned that we will lose our only lounge to make space for another classroom. This lounge serves as the hub of social interaction for the ARC. Not only is the lounge used for watching television, but also for studying, debating social issues, human interaction, and an occasional card game. Without this lounge, the foreign, graduate, non-traditional, and older students will be forced to retreat to the loneliness of their room. Not an environment "conducive to broad intellectual growth and greater participation in the life of the academic community," I submit.

I hope that President Zinser understands the importance of the environment for a student to survive, and recognizes that the environment of the ARC is deteriorating. Without immediate action, the residents at the ARC will lose more than just a lounge, they will lose the only opportunity for social contact outside the classroom, and the education that it in itself provides.

deserve the sentences that were recently passed. This is not condemning nor condoning the sanctions that were passed by IFC. Please understand that I realize that IFC had to follow the policies set down or total chaos would reign. I am speaking, however, from our side of the fence and find it sadly ironic that this should happen after we have been so diligent and careful to keep the requirements of IFC and our Nationals. I hope that people will continue to support us as I see in the future of this house, great things. An old proverb says that out of adversity comes prosperity and what hardship that doesn't destroy, it only makes stronger. I sincerely hope that this is not the final hardship that destroys us and ask for your help and support in the future. Once again, thank you Tau Kappa Epsilon- our spirits were raised a little by the support.

ing a keg by one's self does not prove much (although I would like to shake his hand).

There are other ways to enjoy this weekend without being a lush. Try being stone cold sober so you can laugh at the drunk people. It's quite amusing. In any event, just remember to be safe and think. You can drink (provided you're in a safe place), and you can drive (by using a designated driver perhaps) but you can't drink and drive. Have a safe Homecoming, and Go Vandals!!

weekend and said it compared to any other weekend in previous years.

His largest crowd to date was Wednesday night as it increased Curtis' optimism and excitement about a successful weekend.

"Everyone comes in to support us and to thank us for opening up," Curtis said.

"Business has been picking up through the week. It will be a lot of hard work on my part, but if this week's any indication I'm not going to have any problems."

The nostalgia and tradition that comes with the Corner Club sparked some of Curtis' interest in taking over the business.

"It's really nice to have a traditional following and the heritage of the club behind me," Curtis said.

In keeping with tradition Curtis plans on running the Club with the same relaxed attitude and he hasn't changed the prices.

The bar will be opened regularly from 8 a.m. to 1 a.m. Monday through Saturday, but Curtis has extended the hours from 7 a.m. to 2 a.m. to accommodate the Homecoming crowd.

"I think I'd lose too much business if I tried to change too many things too soon," Curtis said. "We would appreciate anyone's suggestions. I'm not a know-it-all."

Along with beer and wine coolers, Curtis will have a soup kitchen from 11 a.m. to 2 p.m. daily, and a "Peanut Night" on Wednesdays with free peanuts after 4 p.m.

"I hope everyone will come in and continue to support us," Curtis said. "Have a good weekend and support the Vandals."

university is concerned about the safety and welfare of each individual. For that reason, university officials keep a close relationship with Greek representatives.

To help this relationship thrive, a Greek Task Force has been created by Hal Godwin, Bruce Pitman, Dean of Student Affairs, and Linda Wilson, Greek Advisor. The Task Force is comprised of twelve individuals, all of whom are active participants as students or alumni here or some place else.

"This is not an investigation," Godwin said.

Rather, the Task Force strives to keep open the lines of communication between the Greek chapters and the university.

To initiate these lines, Godwin invited the members of Alpha Kappa Lambda to ask questions.

Their first concern was the Task Force's opinion on Phi Beta Sigma and the possibility of other new fraternities on campus.

Godwin said Phi Beta Sigma is a major step forward for the university. In the television coverage of their charter reception, UI had a chance to make, "public our desire for a diverse student population."

The university is also supportive of introducing new chapters into the system. Like the AKL's, Lambda Sigma Iota, a local sorority, also gained support from a national organization.

"I think fraternities will prosper," Godwin said.

Members of fraternities are often subject to generalizations and stereotyping.

"Some actions by fraternities have helped tensions grow towards them, but I don't think it's a general consensus," said John Finney, new AKL president.

Noise is the most common complaint from neighbors of fraternities which is usually a result of parties. Parties are also the center of another common problem-alcohol.

Alcohol is a serious problem all over campus, but the limiting factor for fraternities is liability. The large open parties of yesteryear are no longer possible; the risk is simply too high.

The Interfraternity Council will most likely be adopting more active policies to deal with alcohol. Live-ins (resident advisors for Greek chapters) may be an option.

Another question raised by the AKL's targeted growth of the university. Right now, about 11,000 students fill the UI campus. Housing is already difficult and class size grows each year. Ultimately, UI's growth stays at a moderate pace compared to schools like BSU, due to UI's location.

The following are excerpts from an undated document from the UI pre-feminist yesteryears:

-Women shall not have lengthy conversations in the halls with men.

-There shall absolutely be no library dates.

-Young women who attend a college function and leave before the end of it shall say good-night to the patronesses. Escorts are to be dismissed promptly at the door, and porch lights are not to be turned off until every member of the household is within.

-All women must attend church at least twice a month. -No patent leather shoes may be worn because they reflect a woman's underwear.

-If a woman is found sitting on a man's lap, there must be a pillow in between them.

In the early 1960s, the rules were still stringent:

-No slacks are allowed on campus unless the weather is 10 degrees below zero. Jeans are allowed only on Saturday mornings.

-No men are allowed on any floor in a women's living group except for first floor.

Today, women on the UI campus have complete freedom to do what ever they wish. Boyfriends are allowed to stay in dorm rooms (much to the chagrin of parents and roommates), jeans are common female attire and women are allowed to go out on dates whenever they wish and come in any time they want, morning or night. Thank God for change.

UI ready to ground the Eagles

By CHRISTOPHER GATEWOOD
Sports Editor

University of Idaho Head Coach John L. Smith knows that Saturday's Homecoming game with the Eastern Washington Eagles, slated for a 1 p.m. start, is going to be tougher than expected.

The Eagles have struggled lately, losing their last two games, 51-14, to No. 1 Nevada last week and the week before dropping a close game to Division II Portland State. EWU is 2-5 overall and 1-3 in the Big Sky Conference, but Smith still considers this team to be dangerous. The Vandals are 4-3, 2-2 and have to win the rest of their games to make the playoffs.

"For some reason this team always seems to play us tough," Smith said. "Whenever we play this team it's usually a dog fight. We're not worried about the playoffs, we just want to be 5-3."

EWU considers the Vandals their premier rival. Located within 100 miles of one another, the two schools share a lot of the same recruiting territory. EWU figures they get the short end of the stick in the matter, so beating the Vandals proves something.

But lately EWU hasn't had the Vandals number. Since joining the Big Sky Conference in 1987 the Eagles have lost four straight to Idaho. The last time EWU beat the Vandals was in the 1985 I-AA playoffs, 42-38. It was only the second Eagle win over Idaho out of the 10 game series.

"In my opinion they have the best offensive line and running attack in this conference," Smith said. "Last year it was ugly, they really pasted us on the ground."

Once again EWU is boasting a running attack that would make an option attack proud. The foot race is led by two outstanding running backs in senior Tim Mitchell and sophomore Harold Wright. Last year Wright exploded on the Big Sky scene gaining conference newcomer of the year honors as he rushed for 836 yards on 184 carries.

This year, it has been Mitchell who has been running all over opponents, gaining 662 yards on 127 carries, good for second in the BSC.

It's a good thing the Eagles rushing attack is so potent because their passing game has been anemic. The Eagles are ranked second to last in the conference in total offense, mostly because they are ranked dead last in passing, averaging just over 177 yards per game.

"I don't care how bad the passing attack is, they will make up for it with their running attack," Smith said.

Maybe, maybe not. Mitchell is doubtful for the game because of injury, so Wright will probably see the bulk of the carries.

Regardless, the injury plagued Vandal defense will have to rise to the occasion and stop the Eagle ground attack to win.

Idaho's defense has been hit with injuries lately and in some positions is not even too deep. "We're banged, as banged as we've ever been," Smith said. "We'll just have to fight through it."

Defensively the Eagles are hurting too. They are ranked fifth in the conference in total defense, but dead last in the conference against the pass, surrendering just over 250 yards per game. Things could get ugly because the Vandals, led by quarterback Doug Nussmeier, are second in the conference in passing offense, averaging over 350 yards through the air.

"We realize the problems they've had stopping passing teams, but we are going to come out and try to establish the running game," Smith said.

The Idaho offensive line that suffered injuries early on will start the same players for the third straight week. Smith feels the unit has improved every week since. This weeks game should tell how much.

Last week Idaho broke its second-half doldrums by scoring 26 points in the last two quarters. The Vandals also didn't commit any turnovers for the first time of the season. Both will be key factors for the Vandals again this week.

The two players that will have to have big games on the defensive side of the ball for EWU are linebacker Jason Marsh and cornerback Kurt Schulz.

Marsh has an interesting story. He played for the Vandals two years ago, but was unable to earn a scholarship and transferred to EWU in 1990. He sat out last year and this year leads the Eagles with 79 tackles.

Early morning sweat session

It's 5:30 a.m., the alarm in my room or cave, whatever you want to call it, goes off. I'm not real crazy about getting up at the same time that our nations military forces do. It usually takes nothing short of a fire or nuclear holocaust to get me out of bed at this time of the morning.

This morning is a little different than most; I'm up for a pretty good reason. I'm awake at this God forsaken hour to try out for the University of Idaho basketball team. For the second year in a row Head Coach Larry Eustachy has decided to have open tryouts for anybody who thinks he is worthy of wearing a Vandal uniform. The players that make the team don't get scholarships, but they get a chance to say they played on a Division I basketball team. I like the idea.

In an effort to promote athleticism (and believe me with a vertical leap of about two inches and zero in the quickness department, I truly do represent athletes everywhere) I show up at Memorial Gym at 6 a.m. sharp with cotton mouth and a thick fog filling my head. I have no idea how I'm going to get the energy to run up and down the court at this time of the morning. I have trouble getting down the court at a normal time, let alone 6 a.m.

I start warming up, taking little jumpers and I don't hit a single one. I'm hitting everything off the front iron. My arms and legs feel frozen like I can't extend them. I played the night before and that probably wasn't such a good idea since I have a body you could donate to science fiction.

I head over to the bench, wipe the crust off the corners of my eyes, and take another swig of my coffee. You know I'm tired when I drink coffee before I play; players just don't do that. Then, in walk assistant coaches Jay McMillin and Steve Barnes along with a couple of trainers in case my knees buckle or I break an ankle for the fifth time in my life. The trainers also bring in water. Gee, how polite of them to care.

Once the coaches arrive the wisecracks come fast and furious. Says Barnes: "I'm glad to see you could make it Michael Jordan." Then we play a game of mini-horse called "out" and I outshoot the old coach. "If the game were played at one spot on the floor and with stationary jump shot, then you'd be in the NBA," Barnes said.

The jokes keep coming, but I have the last laugh with a cheap shot about Barnes' wife (sorry, all in the name of male bonding) as the players in attendance roll with laughter.

Speaking of attendance only nine players showed up for the tryout, which I could have predicted. When you start talking about doing things before the rooster crows, you're going to

Buster Hickman quits the football team

By CHRISTOPHER GATEWOOD
Sports Editor

Buster Hickman, a 5-foot-7, 175 pound transfer from San Bernardino College in California quit the football team Tuesday before practice.

Hickman, who had been playing both cornerback and safety cited frustrations with both coaches and playing time as his reasons for leaving the team.

"I'm just frustrated with what's going on here," Hickman said. "I think it's best for everybody if I leave the team. I've done everything I can here."

Hickman arrived in Moscow last April to participate in spring drills and wasn't the player coaches hoped he'd be. Hickman said he hurt his own cause by reporting to spring drills in poor physical condition.

"It's partly my fault," Hickman said. "I didn't come from junior college or go to fall camp ready to play football. I gained some weight and didn't work."

Idaho Defensive Coordinator Craig Bray, who also coaches the defensive backs, agreed with Hickman's assessment.

"I think that was some of the reason for his problems," Bray said. "But there were other problems too. You always take a chance when you give a junior college player a scholarship because he may have trouble adjusting to this level. Maybe Buster came to the realization he couldn't play at this level, I don't know, he has his reasons."

Because of his lack of progress Hickman didn't start in the Vandals opening game against Sonoma State, but came in during the second quarter and made an interception. Since then his playing has decreased. He didn't see any action last week when the Vandals defeated Idaho State.

"Coach Bray and I never saw eye-to-eye on anything," Hickman said. "I thought he had a negative attitude towards me. He wouldn't let me play my game and use the techniques that would help our team."

Hickman did receive a starting assignment against Weber State when the Vandals were crushed 45-17, but according to Bray, he didn't respond well.

"We let him use some of his own techniques, but the fact of the matter was that he didn't play well," Bray said.

"I think it's best for everybody that he quit," Smith said. "We want the kind of people on this team that are concerned about the team."

Not all has gone bad for the Vandals in terms of junior college players. Transfer David Gistarb from Wenatchee Valley Junior College has played well for the Vandals.

"We didn't see much of David on films because he was hurt a lot his sophomore year," Bray said. "We took a chance with him and it has paid off. We gave Buster a scholarship because we wanted some depth. Even though we've lost some other DB's, I don't think this will hurt us because it will give other people a chance."

Ala'Ilima-Daley takes his success in stride

By CHRISTOPHER GATEWOOD
Sports Editor

It's a wonder that University of Idaho tight end Elia Ala'Ilima-Daley is as happy as he is. His life hasn't exactly been easy. Sort of like a ride in an amusement park, it's been a wild rollercoaster.

"Yeah, I guess you could say I've had sort of a hard life, but everything that's happened has been for a good reason," Daley said. "All the changes that have taken place have benefited me."

Actually, one incident precipitated many of the changes in his life: the death of his father in 1983, when Daley was in the seventh grade. Cancer, like in so many other cases was the cause of his death, and it forced Daley and his mother, Meresanini, to move from their home in Hawaii, to the mainland, where they settled in Tacoma.

"I've been lucky," Daley said. "Things have worked out for me. I do think that if my father were still alive, we would've stayed in Hawaii."

But his mother wanted her son to have a better education, and for herself, a chance to better provide for him. Once in Tacoma, Meresanini took a job at a bank, but unfortunately the hours called for her to work nights; therefore, there wasn't much time for a family life.

"It was hard because when I was leaving for school she was coming home from work and then when I came home from school she was leaving for work," Daley said.

But again, Meresanini wanted something better for her son so during Daley's junior year of high school he was sent to Leavenworth, about two hours from Tacoma, to live with his uncle. It was there, along with his aunt and his three young cousins, that he received a taste of the stable lifestyle.

"I wasn't bad in Leavenworth because my mother never missed one of my football games," Daley said. "She was with me on the weekends and it felt good knowing she was going to be there watching me."

Elia Ala'Ilima-Daley has spent countless hours in the weightroom trying to lose the role of "tweener" and become a legitimate tight-end. (JIM VOLLBRECHT PHOTO)

Is this young man for real? There isn't a trace of bitterness in his voice, rare for someone that's had that much friction in his life.

In fact, he is so thoughtful that he encouraged his mother to move to Orlando when her fiance got a better job. Is Daley as good as person as advertised? Vandal Head Coach John L. Smith says that it's indeed true.

"I absolutely can't say enough about the type of person he is," Smith said. "He does everything you ever ask of him on the football field and works his tail off doing it."

Working his tail off is how

Daley shed the role of being called a "tweener," a player that is too small to play one position and too slow to play another. For Daley it was straddling the line between playing wide receiver and tight end.

When he arrived at the University of Idaho as a transfer from Wenatchee Valley Junior College in 1990, he was a 205-pound "athlete," meaning he had a load of physical skills, but no distinct position. He had played defensive back and option quarterback at Cascade High School and did the same at Wenatchee, even throwing for 1,000 yards, but the Vandals didn't know what they were going to do with him.

"We recruited him because he was such an outstanding athlete," Smith said. "Actually we took the advice of his junior college coach Sandy Cuprider. He said we'd be making a huge mistake if we didn't take him. He's been right about other players, including (Vandal defensive back) David Gistarb, so we took the chance and signed him."

The Vandals are glad they did. Originally Smith thought Daley would probably play defensive back because of his experience at the position, that is until he saw Daley catch the ball. Smith was amazed at his hands. The hands that caught everything in sight. The hands that are so sticky Spiderman would be proud. "When we saw those hands, we knew," Smith said.

"I didn't mind the prospect of playing wide receiver, because I thought it would be fun to catch the ball," Daley said. "Actually, I just wanted to play."

Daley had plenty of fun catching the football. Against Eastern Washington last season he had the best day of his junior year catching nine passes for 108 yards, but there was just one small problem—he couldn't block. That's where the "tweener" problem came into play. He had no problem catching the ball, but from his tight end position he was pushed around by bigger, stronger players.

"That Eastern game was great for me because I made some big plays, but my blocking was horrible," Daley said.

So Daley did something about it over last year's Christmas break. He hit the feed wagon, hard and often. In fact, he gained 20 pounds during his vacation to Orlando and Leavenworth.

"I just ate and ate and didn't really lift much," Daley said. "But I really didn't get fat, I just filled out everywhere."

His lack of exercise killed him during the Vandals' brutal spring training program, as he spent the first few weeks heaving the rust from his body.

"I was one of the best at puking everywhere," Daley said.

Over the summer he hit the weights hard and reported to camp a shocking 230 pounds. No more "tweener." Daley was now a real tight end, and he could block.

"The most amazing thing about him is that he gained that weight and didn't lose an ounce of speed," Smith said.

Even the pro scouts have begun to take notice of the tight end in the wide receiver's body. The tight end that leaps defensive backs in a single bound.

"I think he could play in pros in the right situation," Smith said.

"I'm happy for Jason, I'm glad he's doing well," Smith said. "I didn't think he was going to be able to play here at the time so I released him to play somewhere else. I'm not surprised he's doing well. He's a good athlete with a lot of ability."

Schulz, must also have a big day. He has started slow this year but has come on to get three interceptions in the last three weeks, and has 47 total tackles. Schulz was all-conference as a sophomore two years ago, but spent much of his junior year injured.

The Eagles also have some extra incentive because EWU coach Dick Zornes accused the Vandals of running up the score in last year's blowout. Leading 44-28 late in the game the Vandals faced a third down and decided to pass the football. The play ended up being a touch-down and Zornes wasn't too pleased about it. Maybe it was the glare that Zornes gave Smith from across the field that gave it away.

"I wasn't trying to run the score up, I was trying to preserve a lead," Smith said. "I didn't want them to get the ball back because I really think they did still have a chance to win. I can't help it that my players scored a touchdown. The funny thing is that Zornes is going to use this as motivation to fire up his team."

have a few no shows. I quote Eustachy: "I want to see how many real men are going to show up."

Does my appearance at this event, along with eight other people that were crazy enough to show, qualify me for real man status. That question remained to be answered, but first we had to find a tenth player because it's a little tough to play full-court with only nine players.

We found our tenth in McMillin, who looked so happy about it that I thought he was about to be exorcised.

Fortunately for me he didn't shoot much, which means that I didn't have to play much defense. It didn't matter because it took me three games just to get warmed up. My body was in shell-shock. It still amazes me what four years of poor eating and too much drinking can do to a person's anatomy. My body is a temple, for what I have no idea.

But there were some good players in the gym that morning. There was Bucky Miller, a squirt of an SAE with a sweet 20-foot jump shot and lightning hands. I laughed at him when he walked in the gym with his girlfriend. If I would've wanted my girlfriend (if I had one) to see a horror show like this, then I would've sent her to the movies.

There was also Ron Vogt, who had good size and athletic ability.

I was also surprised at how well he ran the floor. He said later, "I thought I was going to puke the whole time." Funny, I had the same feeling much of the morning.

Near the end of the session Eustachy finally walked in. He looked like a zombie in sweats. I didn't really know if he was watching tryouts or looking at the inside of his eyelids.

At the end of the tryout, Eustachy spoke to the players and thanked them for coming. He thought it "showed that these were the people who really wanted to play."

He also made it a point to say that being a walk-on on the team is no fun. It's hard, thankless work and you'll probably never get a chance to play, but you'll get to be part of a Division I program. I don't think anybody truly understood this. I saw some big stars in some people's eyes.

But hey, this is a dream come true for some players. A chance to be part of something that few will ever have. I still wonder what might have been if I was five inches taller.

But for now I think I'll go find a coffin to die in.

SPORTS REPORTS

■ RECREATION — a large number of recreational facilities are available to University of Idaho students. Weight rooms, racquetball and tennis courts, a swimming pool and various others are at students' fingertips.

A new weight room in Memorial Gym was installed last year and pressure has been relieved from other weight rooms.

"Since we've opened up our new weight room it has served a major need. We had too many people trying to fit into the Kibbie Dome weight room," assistant director of Campus Recreation Judy Hammersley said. "We have more aerobic facilities here. It's geared more for the person that wants a light, daily workout."

Four buildings house most of the recreational facilities. These buildings include the ASUI Kibbie Dome, the Physical Education Building (PEB), Memorial Gym and the Swim Center.

Activities available in the Kibbie Dome are racquetball and handball courts, a weight room, a field area, locker and shower rooms, basketball and tennis courts, volleyball and badminton courts and a five lane running track.

Available activities in the PEB are large and small gyms, dance studios, a squash court, a women's sauna and locker and shower rooms for men and women.

A large gym, two racquetball courts, a combative room, a men's sauna, locker and shower rooms, a weight room and a multi-purpose room are available at Memorial Gym.

The Swim Center is open to all students at set times. It is available for rental by individuals or groups on a reservation basis.

Outdoor facilities are also available to students. These include an 18 hole golf course, paddle ball courts, an all-weather track, lighted tennis courts, horseshoe pits, fitness courses and open playfields.

■ BASKETBALL — The 3-on-3 hoops deadline for entry is Oct. 30. Play begins next Wednesday, Nov. 3, and again on Nov. 9. The play-offs start after Nov. 17.

■ FUN-RUN — The deadline for Palouse Turkey Run entry forms is Wednesday, Nov. 6. The five mile race around campus is Saturday, Nov. 9 at 9 a.m. and t-shirts are $10.

■ BADMINTON — The Badminton singles tournament is Friday, Nov. 1 at 5:30 p.m., upstairs in the large gym of the P.E. Building. The Badminton doubles tournament is Nov. 8 at 5:30 p.m., also upstairs in the PEB.

■ CROSS COUNTRY — The University of Idaho cross country team competes this weekend at the Wandermere Cross Country Invitational, held in Spokane.

The tournament will mark the end of the regular season for the Vandals and decide who will get the opportunity to attend the conference meet which will be held in Salt Lake City, Utah.

UI Volleyball takes another shot at the road

By SEV HOINESS
Staff Writer

Tuesday night on Eastern Washington's Reese Court in Cheney, the Lady Vandal netters grounded the Eagles decisively in an important victory after four games 15-7, 15-7, 9-15, and 15-13.

This win evened Idaho's record to 5-5 in league and 9-13 for the season. The Eagles dropped to 2-7 in league and 9-10 overall.

If the Vandals keep winning it could lead to a possible post-season berth in the Big Sky tournament; which they missed narrowly last season.

"Jessica Puckett was on fire at the beginning of the match and they had to change their blocking; everything she hit went down," Hilbert said.

Puckett had 16 kills and nine digs in combining defense with an impressive offensive effort.

Although Puckett had a hot hand, Heather McEwen was not to be out done and steadily compiled 21 kills to average over five a game and lead the Vandals past Eastern.

"I was ready to play and it was a big game," McEwen said.

"It was a great hitting performance, everyone hit well," Hilbert said.

Brittany VanHaverbeke put down 12 kills in 19 attempts with zero hitting errors for another potent showing which has become routine for VanHaverbeke.

Nancy Wicks would not be denied and was again in the double-digit kill category with 10.

Dee Porter recorded yet another outstanding defensive effort with 17 digs, nearly double any other Lady Vandal. Porter continues to rise to the occasion while playing on a suspect knee.

"We played a better side out game and when we do that we can beat people," Hilbert said.

Even though the Vandals have been consistent in their kills their serving has been lackluster.

"We are still missing them (serves) in critical situations. It's just like free-throws in basketball, we practice it everyday, but it just needs to be focused on more," Hilbert said.

The Vandals have been playing tough defensively and offensively, but the all important serve has been eluding them for a good part of the season.

The serve was virtually nonexistent against Eastern Washington, but did not play a major role in their relatively easy route.

The Vandals will face a stingy defense and a powerful offense lead by Angel Leath of Northern Arizona University and serves could very well be the determining factor.

"They aren't any more athletic than we are, but they do have one really good player in Angel Leath and one thing we will have to do is get her out of her game," Hilbert said.

bert said.

The last time NAU and Idaho clashed, NAU scored 18 aces with only 6 service errors in five games. Hilbert doesn't think NAU can repeat that feat, but is still concerned with his team's ability to return NAU's serves.

"We need to smooth out our service-serve," Hilbert reiterated.

The Vandals play the University of Nevada (3-5) Friday evening and the Big Sky runner-up, NAU, Saturday. Both games will be played at Memorial Gym.

"They're (Nevada) probably the easier of the two, but not easy," Hilbert said.

Hilbert doesn't want to look past Nevada, but emphasizes that if they beat NAU it would put them in a much better position to slide into the play-offs.

"We're not going to get a lot of time to prepare for NAU and that worries me, but were just gonna have to get Reno (Nevada) out of the way and go after NAU," Hilbert said.

Idaho's game plan will be straight forward and will emphasize solid fundamentals.

"We need to serve tough and generate our side-out game," McEwen said.

Focusing and playing Vandal style volleyball consists of moving the ball around to different hitters and with the help of a home crowd, ruffling their opponents feathers.

"I think we need to use the right side more and we need to be more deceptive with our sets and mix-it-up more. We need to play consistently and we'll beat both of them," said Christy Rose, Vandal setter.

This weekend's matches are pivotal and Hilbert's squad needs all the support fans can give.

So find a way to get to Memorial gym both Friday and Saturday evenings at 7:30 p.m. and help the Vandals take two more steps toward advancing into post-season play.

Businesslike attitude key to Hilbert's success

By DOUG BAUER
Staff Writer

He looks like a businessman. He talks like a businessman. He acts like a businessman. He takes care of business.

He is Tom Hilbert, the head volleyball coach of the University of Idaho Vandals, now in his third year of coaching for the Vandals, a job that he seems to enjoy.

"I don't care to be in the big-time programs," Hilbert said. "All of the coaches here are young and there is really a lot of camaraderie here. You feel good hanging out with them. There is also a real equity here between men's and women's sports. Women's sports are really treated equally here."

Hilbert knows what he is talking about when he mentions big time programs. He hails from Oklahoma where he graduated from the University of Oklahoma and began his college coaching career.

Hilbert first gained interest in volleyball as a player. Oklahoma is one of only eight states in the nation that has a men's volleyball program.

After finishing his high school volleyball career, Hilbert played on the Oklahoma volleyball club.

Pam PALMER For Moscow City Council

"My strength for city council comes from my experience in Moscow during the past 12 years."

TRANSPORTATION

As our community grows so does our need for moving people. Comprehensive transportation options should include:

- regularly scheduled bus service between Moscow and Pullman.
- cooperating with neighboring communities to create a Palouse Area Regional Transit Authority.
- improved bicycle and walking routes.

PLANNING RESPONSIBLE GROWTH

We need to ask questions now about Moscow's future. Let's plan for responsible growth by:

- Research Geologist
- Downtown Business Manager
- Community fund-raiser
- Childbirth Educator
- Mother of Three
- preserving the character of our neighborhoods.
- maintaining the vital downtown.
- seeking solutions to housing problems.

McEwen powers the Vandal attack

By DOUG BAUER
Staff Writer

It really doesn't seem like a volleyball player that comes from a town with a name like Snowflake could or would be very tough. Does it?

It may not sound like it, but University of Idaho volleyball standout Heather McEwen is a tough competitor. If given the chance, she can hit the ball so hard that maybe one day she'll tear the cover off of it, similar to Robert Redford in "The Natural."

McEwen plays outside hitter for the Vandals, a position new to her this year, but a position that she has the capability of mastering:

"Heather is really gaining control of her game," head volleyball Coach Tom Hilbert said. "We've had to do a lot of mechanical work with her, but I think that she's a big strong hitter who is very difficult to block."

McEwen has been playing volleyball for eight years. She started playing in junior high and played for Snowflake High School, in Snowflake, Arizona.

At the end of her high school career McEwen was recruited by such schools as Northern Arizona University and Brigham Young University at Hawaii, not to mention the UI and a number of junior colleges.

"I came to Idaho because I really liked the school," McEwen said. "I also really liked the coaching technique that is used here."

The coaching technique has obviously helped and worked for McEwen, as she leads her team in kills (243), and average kills per game (3.3). As a matter of fact, she not only leads the Vandals but is ranked third in kills in the entire Big Sky Conference.

"I was surprised at the end of the first week at how well I was playing," McEwen said. "I'm really kind of surprised that I've been as consistent as I have been."

Consistency is a trait that McEwen has proved so far this season. She has led her team in kills in 10 of 21 games, had 13 double figure kill matches, including eight of the last 12 games, and has only had one game that she did not play up to par in this season. At Weber State on the nineteenth of this month McEwen faltered, having her least productive game of the season as she had no kills or blocks and only one dig.

"I just was not focused or ready to play, like I usually have been this year," McEwen said.

McEwen may have not done so well at Weber State, but her play before that point should easily be able to drown out her one bad night.

"She's had her great matches, but she's also had some bad ones," Hilbert said. "She's learning to pull herself out of slumps and come through in the clutch."

Enough about McEwen's lesser moments, it's about time to mention some of her better ones. Against Loyola-Marymount this season, McEwen recorded a career high of 13 digs.

"That was lucky, I don't really remember that game and how many digs that I had," McEwen said. "I remember that I was really surprised though."

A little over a month after playing LMU, against Montana State University in front of her home crowd, McEwen amassed 28 kills, 11 digs, and eight blocks in a game she considers to be the best she has played since she's attended Idaho.

"It was just my best overall match," she said, "everything was really clicking for me."

From reading about McEwen's personal accomplishments, one might easily be led to believe that she is an individual, rather than a team player. Her personality is actually quite the contrary.

"I think that this is the best team that I've ever played on, everybody gets along and we have a lot of fun," McEwen said. "I think that we have a lot of talents are not just limited to use in the fall.

McEwen also plays post on the Lady Vandal basketball team, a position in which she should have no problem excelling in if she puts as much effort into it as she does volleyball. One tends to wonder which she enjoys more.

"I like them both a lot," she said.

Sports are not the only thing in McEwen's life. She may be majoring in physical education and she may hope to become a coach in the future, but she would also like to be a teacher someday.

What the University could have on their hands, whether they know it or not, may be a dual sport dynamo. Time can only tell how McEwen will fair on the basketball court, hopefully it will be as well as on the volleyball floor.

The miraculous thing about McEwen however, is that she is as accomplished and as talented as she is, in only her junior year of eligibility.

Maybe if she continues to improve she'll get a call from a shoe company. After all, it is safe to say: "McEwen knows volleyball." Sooner or later they may be able to add: "McEwen knows basketball."

"She's learning to pull herself out of slumps and come through in the clutch."

talent and I've been very impressed with how well we've done this year and how well everyone has worked."

McEwen is definitely a power player, at 6'2" she really has no choice. Her kill number just goes to prove how strong she is and how much of a force she is to be reckoned with. Fortunately for the Idaho athletic department her

Idaho Vandal medical list is a mile long

By TOM BITHELL
Senior Staff Writer

At the beginning of the season Idaho Coach John L. Smith was concerned with team depth particularly on defense.

Now, Smith can't afford to worry much about depth because in some areas there just isn't any. Injuries have taken care of that.

"We're banged," Smith said, "as banged as we've ever been." Indeed the list of injured players reads like a starting line-up. All over the field players are, or have been, injured.

On defense it's so bad in the secondary and on the line that some offensive players are practicing with the defense, just in case.

"Yo (Murphy) is trying to work both ways, in case something happens we can use him as a defensive back," Smith said. "Jay Lukes was going both ways until Wednesday he came out and sprained an ankle and will no longer play this week."

Murphy, a receiver, played both ways at Idaho Falls High School, and Lukes, an offensive lineman, played defensive line during high school in Colorado.

"You're gonna get some (injuries) it's the nature of the game," athletic trainer Barrie Steele said. "We've been fortunate the last couple of years where we haven't had a lot."

This year, though, Steele confirms the fortune has changed. Looking down his injury report he counted 11 injuries requiring surgery this season. Except for 1987, that's the worst he's seen in his six years at Idaho; and the season isn't over yet.

A good portion of the injuries have been knee injuries, particularly torn medial collateral ligaments.

The medial collateral is the ligament that runs on the inside of the knee. When a player plants a foot then takes a hit on the outside of the knee it's usually the medial collateral that gets torn, Steele explained.

Among the players with torn medial collaterals are defensive end Billy Simms, linebacker Brian Wamsley, defensive back Mike Noble, and defensive lineman Mat Groshong.

Simms and Wamsley will both likely miss the rest of the season while Groshong is expected to be out for four weeks.

Defensive end Gerry Keating also had a knee injury that kept him sidelined the first few weeks of the season. Keating still isn't 100 percent, and plays only part-time.

The defensive injuries don't end at the knees, though. They're all over. Free safety Jeff Jordan is out for the season at best with a ruptured Achilles' tendon. Linebacker Mark Groshong has a separated shoulder and is out for two weeks. Defensive back David Gistarb has some fractured fingers with screws in place but is still playing. Linebacker Will Saffo sprained an ankle earlier but is back. And defensive lineman Kyle Russell had a hip pointer but should play this Saturday.

All these injuries have left the defense with only 16 or 17 athletes to fill 11 positions. That's not enough for two deep at each position unless you make some red-shirts eligible, which Smith hopes he doesn't have to do.

"We don't want to do that unless it comes down to a dire emergency," Smith said. "We'll just knock on wood and hopefully we can get through this week and then maybe get a kid or two back healthy."

Although the offense has had injuries too, the situation is not as bad as on defense.

"We got hurt early a little bit," Smith said. "You get dings and things like that every year which kids come back from. That happened to us a little offensively early, and lately we've been healthy offensively. Defensively we've just gotten battered."

Among the offensive injuries were lineman Jody Schnug with a fractured ankle and some torn cartilage in the knee, running back Devon Pearce with an ankle sprain, lineman Shawen Smith with an aggravated back injury, and tight end Elia Ala'ilima—Daley with a sprained ankle and turf toe. All three are expected to play this weekend.

Going over the list of injuries Smith just shook his head.

"We've just got to overcome it," he said.

A rash of injuries have hit the Vandals this year and caused many of them to sit the bench. (JIM VOLLBRECHT PHOTO)

"It was not varsity-sponsored, but we did play some very tough competition," Hilbert said.

He went on to become an assistant coach for the Oklahoma volleyball team, after he was noticed coaching volleyball through the high school-age girls by the Oklahoma head volleyball coach.

When Hilbert is mentioned to be a businessman, maybe it is because he is, according to his degree.

"I have a degree in marketing," Hilbert said. "But I did take a lot of courses on the care and prevention of athletic injuries."

When Hilbert left his assistant job at Oklahoma, they were near the top of the ladder. They were ranked 12th in the nation, in the NCAA tournament for the second year in a row, and the only Big Eight team to beat the Nebraska Cornhuskers ever since the Big Eight became a conference.

Hilbert then came to Idaho, and the first game that he coached has become his most memorable.

"In my very first game we were behind 13-2 in the fifth game and we came back to win," Hilbert said. "That game kind of broke me in."

Not everyone understands the life that a college coach leads. Hilbert figures that he puts in 50-60 hours a week. That is not just during the season. Immediately after the Vandals' season is over he begins high school recruitment and when he is not busy recruiting, he is at summer camps or working on his program. But, when Hilbert finds time, he enjoys a few other pastimes.

"I like to play golf and go camping with my wife and my dog," he said. "We really like the Northwest."

Whatever the situation, there is no way to look around the position that his volleyball team is in right now. They are currently 5-5 in league play and are tied for fourth in the Big Sky conference. If they don't fall in the conference rankings, they will be able to attend the conference tournament for postseason play.

Also, this year marks the first time that Idaho has defeated Idaho State and Boise State since Hilbert has begun coaching here.

"I think that this team that I have right now is the most balanced that I've ever been associated with. I think that we've got a good core of a bunch of great, great young players," Hilbert said. "They work very, very hard and they are also good students."

Hilbert is not fooling around when he speaks about having a young team. The Vandals will not lose any starters to graduation this year, and only a few next year.

"I think that we're going to get even better next year and the year after in terms of court maturity," he said. "We have the opportunity to grow into a very good team in the next two seasons after this one."

Hilbert has a lot of players that he is looking toward to lead the Vandals not only this year, but in the years to come. They include Dee Porter, Nancy Wicks, Brittany VanHaverbeke, Heather McEwen and Jessica Puckett, just to mention a few.

But, according to Hilbert, there is someone else to watch.

"The one that will surprise people the most in the next few years is Mindy Rice," he said. "Once she gets comfortable on

"We have the opportunity to grow into a very good team in the next two seasons after this one."

— Tom Hilbert
Idaho Volleyball Coach

the court she is going to be able to play a lot of positions for us and she's going to become very, very potent."

However the situation goes, it is a fact that Hilbert has won 37 games since arriving at Idaho, a school that had only compiled a total of 25 wins in the five seasons before his arrival.

If Hilbert can keep the winning tradition that he has inspired going, then his career at Idaho should be a great one. And there is no reason to believe that he will not keep that tradition going.

He has been the Vandals' volleyball savior, as he attacks every obstacle as if it were made for him to climb over.

From Oklahoma to Idaho, Hilbert has kept a winning record. With his teams set the way that they are for the next few years, that record should continue to grow.

It is easy to see that whatever Hilbert does, he conducts it in a businesslike style. After all, he is a businessman.

World Series creating memories

By MATT LAWSON
Editor

Once again the World Series is upon us, along with all the fanfare and media hype that goes along with it.

But this year has been different than recent championships. Finally, the fans can enjoy a series that is worth watching. For once the American public can enjoy a series that isn't over before the couch is broken in and the final beer is empty.

After the last two years witnessed World Series sweeps by Oakland and Cincinnati, the actual word of drama has risen back to the top.

The Minnesota Twins and Atlanta Braves could have been satisfied with just winning their divisions after devastating last place finishes in 1990. They could have been even more thrilled with making it to the World Series, especially the upstart Braves who have never been to the fall classic.

Fortunately for baseball fans everywhere, the teams have put on a performance that may not soon be forgotten.

The Twins used strong pitching, the bats of Kirby Puckett and Chili Davis, along with a tremendous home crowd to jump to an early 2-0 lead in the series, and it looked like the Braves had run out of gas after a seven-game battle with Pittsburgh in the NLCS.

As the teams moved to Atlanta, the Braves found new life and the Twins realized just how important the home team's last at bat really is.

The two teams collided in a game that could go down in history as one of the most memorable World Series games of all time in game three.

With Atlanta leading 4-2 in the eighth inning and sudden superstar Steve Avery on the mound, it looked as if the Braves would win their first ever playoff game since the team moved from Milwaukee in 1966.

But Minnesota manager Tom Kelly wouldn't let his team go down without a fight. Kelly used a World Series record 23 players and used pitcher Rick Aguilera as a pinch-hitter (the first to do that since Don Drysdale in the 1965 Series)—and even planned to bring in outfielder Dan Gladden to pitch, if it weren't for a game-winning single by Mark Lemke in the bottom of the 12th inning and an Atlanta 5-4 triumph.

Lemke wasn't through as the drama continued in game four with the Braves looking to tie Minnesota and regain a new outlook on the series.

The Braves trailed 2-1 in the bottom of the seventh, but Lonnie Smith homered to set up the drama in the bottom of the ninth inning.

Lemke tripled with one out and scored one batter later on a sacrifice fly by none other than pinch hitter Jerry Willard. Willard was one of only two non-pitchers to play in game three, but he hit a fly to right field that allowed Lemke just slide past a diving tag by Minnesota catcher Brian Harper for the 3-2 win.

Realizing it would be difficult to repeat their performance against Pittsburgh of winning the last two games on the road, the Atlanta manager made a gutsy move by starting Tom Glavine on just three days' rest.

Glavine looked strong while giving up only two runs in the first six innings, but the story of the game was not his pitching; rather, it was the awakening of the Braves bats.

After only scoring nine runs in the first four games, the Braves responded by pounding out 17 hits to account for 14 runs in the 14-5 win.

It was the most runs scored in a World Series since the New York Yankees defeated the Pittsburgh Pirates in the 1960 16-3.

The loss was the 14th straight on the road for the Twins and was never really a contest.

The stars have risen to the top in the series, but it is the relatively unknown players that have made the difference.

Lemke now has eight hits including three triples and Atlanta's upstart bullpen has given up only four runs in 13 innings while striking out 12 Twins.

With his hit in game three, Minnesota second baseman Scott Knobloch set a record for hits by a rookie in post season with 12.

The 2-0 lead of the Twins is long gone, and Kelly looks to regroup his troup on the way back to Minnesota for games six and seven.

Minnesota's home field advantage looms even larger now as the home team has won 21 of its last 27 World Series games on the familiar turf.

But if this series continues to unfold like it has during games one through five, don't expect Atlanta to be celebrating their first World Series victory in the team's history.

Whatever happens by Sunday, the Braves have done more than just make history by becoming the first last place to World Series teams in history; they have played a hell of a World Series.

Hoop team gets a new club

By SEV HOINESS
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho Vandal men's basketball team has lost a mere four or five games, at home, the last two years and lost one of 14 home games last year.

Head coach Larry Eustachy wants to improve that home court advantage by inviting the students of the UI to join his new Vandal Basketball Fan Club. The club will consist solely of University of Idaho students, male or female.

The club will become an extension of the basketball team as members would get to talk to players and coaches one-on-one in special meetings held specifically for the club.

"We'd meet prior to games and I'd tell them (the club) what I need from them to help us win," Eustachy said.

In return the club would be expected to support the Vandals loyally at all the home games and possibly even raise funds to go on a road trip or two.

"Maybe just five people will show up, maybe 100," Eustachy said.

Eustachy wants to lay a foundation for a broader and more involved club in the future.

"Right now it's in the infant stage, but over the years I'd really like to see this grow. Mike Davis (the associate director of alumni activities) and I are working together to get this off the ground," Eustachy said.

Davis talks of starting a tradition that would be similar to the Blue Devils of Duke University, the Antlers of the University of Missouri or the fanatics of the University of Kansas who have been known to camp outside the arena three days before a game.

Clubs at these schools have evolved into organizations with presidents, secretaries, and treasurers.

Typically, these club members are the ones shown on TV painted head to toe going bezerk; that's exactly what Eustachy wants.

"Of course I want to stay within the framework of good taste and sportsmanship," Eustachy said.

Ideally, the club would arouse the rest of the crowd and be an imposing sixth man for Idaho.

"What we want to do is get a core group of students that will get into basketball and get the rest of the crowd into it as well," Davis said.

The name of the club is yet to be decided and will be chosen by the eventual members. Eustachy plans to furnish t-shirts that will be exclusive to the members.

The application for the club is on this page and can be turned into the basketball office at the ASUI Kibbie Dome. Also, students, see Jay McMillan at the basketball office to sign-up personally or attend the first official meeting Friday, November 8, at 6 p.m. in the southeast corner of the Kibbie Dome.

"If he plays on a team like St. Louis that uses huge tight ends then he won't play, but if he gets bigger and gets with the right club, who knows?"

Daley has 32 catches for 497 yards and that ranks him second in the Big Sky Conference, behind Alfred Pupunu of Weber State, in catches for tight ends. Pupunu has 55 receptions, but receiver and teammate Kasey Dunn says there's no comparison between the two players.

"Pupunu isn't half the athlete Elia is," Dunn said. "Sure, Pupunu will catch it if the ball is thrown right to him, but Elia goes up and gets the ball. He makes acrobatic catches you wouldn't believe."

But what of Dunn and Daley? The two are connected like Siamese twins. They have similar athletic skills, look sort of the same and even sound alike in a telephone conversation. On team flights they sit next to each other.

"I think I've supported myself beating him in card games the last couple of years," Dunn said.

Their girlfriends are even friends.

"That's why he's so nice," Dunn said "His girlfriend keeps a close rein on him."

He may be nice, but the former "tweener" is making Big Sky defensive backs shudder at the thought of covering him.

Daley is also proud of his Samoan heritage. Just ask him, he'll tell you the name of every Samoan player in the NFL.

"People have this misconception that Samoans are lazy," Daley said. "We're just a laid-back group of people."

Ganesh Himal offers treasure at a reduced price

By TRENT YOUNG
Entertainment Editor

At least three times a semester I can look forward to having Cecile come home with wide eyes, a glazed expression and hands that just manage to twitch. Some people might wonder about her health or diet at that point, but I just smile and try to hide my wallet without her seeing.

Confused? Don't worry. Things will come together just as soon as I explain that Cecile's stupor is caused by the presence of a powerful entity that scrambles her sensibilities, (she would kill for fourteen dollars) and makes her capable of saying things like, "I bought this pair of huge earrings for you."

What, you ask, is this presence that takes such control over the minds that it meets? Well, the answer is simple: Ganesh Himal.

The first time I saw Denise Attwood and her husband Rick Conner in the SUB with all the sweaters and earrings that they carry with them, I thought about Cecile and ended-up buying a really cool set of sterling silver earrings. After presenting my gift to Cecile and being covered with kisses, I was under the impression that I had done a good thing. Little did I know just how right I was.

Soon, both Cecile and I were addicted to Tibetan jewelry and clothing, with members of our family soon following in the trend. What we all discovered was that the quality is great, while the prices are more than affordable, and the style is incredible. All the rings and earrings I've bought for Cecile from Ganesh Himal have become instant conversation pieces, and the pride of her whole collection.

But there's more to Tibetan crafts than just style and affordability. With every item we buy from trading companies like Ganesh Himal, we help Tibetans forced into exile survive in a harsh world.

Perhaps unknown to most of the common population, Tibet has been illegally occupied by China since 1959. Tibetans were forced to flee their native land and settled in nearby Nepal. Even the religious leader of Tibet, the Dalai Lama, was forced to exit the area, and eventually settled in India. Under current Chinese rule, Tibetans are not allowed to openly practice their culture or religion.

"What the Chinese have done to Tibet is nothing different than what Iraq did to Kuwait," remarked Attwood, "except for the fact that Tibet got no assistance from the US: probably because little Tibet had no oil."

This is not an opinion piece, so I won't tell you what I think about the way our government has ignored the situation in Tibet. What I will tell you, though, is that the Swiss people took pity on the exiled Tibetans and assisted them in creating hand craft groups that created and sold silver goods, rugs, sweaters, and so on. It was this first push towards manufacturing that established the Spokane-based Ganesh Himal with Tibet.

Attwood and Conner travel to Nepal once a year and buy goods from various produce all their goods by hand. The two then return and sell the goods at street fairs, local shops, and about seven colleges, including U of I.

Ganesh Himal is not a means of exploiting the Tibetan people, rather, it is a means of cultural support and information transfer. The more people that learn about the struggle for survival in Nepal, the better the chance for forcing our government into action.

University Dance Theatre celebrates Homecoming with concert

By Cecilia M Thunes
Contributing Writer

Parents, alumni, and students have many options for leisure activities to pursue during Homecoming weekend. Among the bonfires, parades, breakfasts, luncheons, dinners, and The Big Game, we also have University Dance Theatre.

This is a fine opportunity for all to discover an artistic alternative at the University of Idaho. UDT will be opening tonight at 8:00 P.M. at the Ernest Hartung Theatre, a mere leap down the hill from The Kibbie Dome. Undergraduate and graduate students perform and choreographed all of the pieces involved.

For Angie Hough this is her third semester choreographing for Dance Theatre. Her solo piece, Discovery, produced the images of "a dancer finding herself." Hough explains that, "many little girls want to become ballerinas, and for most it doesn't work out. This relates that self-realization."

More enjoyable still was her Diversified Views, backed up by Jane's Addiction's "Been Caught Stealin'." This depicted the white-collar workers anxieties and taught us that we have a lot to learn from the not-so-uptight.

Tap dancing is always a crowd pleaser, and Kelli Jo Risk provided the light-hearted art with 2 Tap. Molly Hammond deserves special recognition for professionally being able to work with a troublesome prop. Risk brought us a little bit of old Vaudeville by choreographing a portion using tap-toed ballet slippers.

Elaina O'Brien related the strength of women with two pieces, Strength is Freedom and Damn Your Eyes. O'Brien explains that her solo piece, Strength, showed how she moves on her own. She noticed that her style was not only "very feminine...almost sensual, but also very strong and aggressive." With this in mind, she also presented the ensemble piece, Damn Your Eyes.

O'Brien used Lisa Lechner as the lead dancer in much of the piece, who created a sultry, yet vulnerable mood around her. O'Brien states that she likes to use Lechner because of her experience in theatre. "It's nice to have a good actress and dancer in mood pieces," explains O'Brien.

University Dance Theatre runs tonight and tomorrow at 8 p.m. with a Sunday matinee at 2 p.m. It is free to students, and tickets run from $5 to $7 others.

Looking for a bar that has everything to offer the consumer of alcoholic beverages but the kitchen sink? Tired of going out for drinks and finding yourself tired, bored, and broke?

Then go no further than 102 S. Main in Moscow, where the answer to all your problems rests with a mixed drink or a quick game of pool.

Or, if your geography isn't up to par, go to the place they call Mingles. Just remember to leave the car at home because it is just a short walk from campus or anywhere in the close vicinity of downtown.

After walking through the double doors don't be afraid or intimidated by George or "Big" Dan, two bouncer mainstays at Mingles. They will check your I.D. with a smile and send you to the bar to choose from an array of succulent drinks.

With one of the largest drink selections around, this is one bar that really has something for anyone. From beer to wine, well drinks to Black Deaths, Russian Enemas to plain-old soda pop, Mingles is more than able to equip you with a tasty treat.

If a specific bartender is what you're looking for, then I strongly suggest the man they call "T. Bell." After you find this rebellious looking fellow, I dare you to challenge him by asking for a drink he might not know. You'll be surprised at the response.

If strong drinks aren't what you're looking for just grab a beer and head in any direction that suits your needs. Games await to the left, or tables full of people eager to chat can be found to the right.

But before you do that, I suggest you order a Mingles sandwich or a plate of nachos. Their excellent food won't steer you wrong, and what better way to calm those uninvited munchies. Like pool?

If pool is getting frustrating and losing three pitchers is enough, there is always the challenge of trying to function at a video game on a steady buzz. If vids are not to your liking, try to the basketball game or even a stimulating game of darts.

Don't forget the Big Screen if you're into the sports scene, it will always be on and the management is more than willing to change the station to your favorite event.

If you like the tube, but sports isn't your thing, take a shot at Bart Beers during the Simpson's on Thursday nights.

How about a live band?

Local eatery famous for home cooked meals, quality service

By SEV HOINESS
Staff Writer

The Nobby Inn, located downtown on Main street, adjacent to the Biscuit Root, boasts a long standing tradition of quality. "All our sauces are made from scratch," commented second generation owner/manager Tom Mayburry. Ever since the restaurant opened in 1936 they've adopted a policy of cooking "from scratch."

The Nobby is having a banner year and Mayburry contributes this to his diverse menu that consists of "American cuisine" prepared by a veteran staff. Some of the Nobby's most integral personnel have been working there for a decade or more.

The bar manager himself has been a Nobby employee for 28 years.

Last month alone 9,500 people gave their patronage to the Nobby. It's not just the consistency and quality of the food that keeps people coming back. Mayburry said, "We want our people to treat customers like they would treat a guest in their own home." Mayburry said his staff is in the hospitality industry and doesn't feel demeaned by serving customers. "I enjoy the people," said two year waitress Diane Candler.

It's been said by many customers the Nobby's breakfast is one of the best in town and may be their best meal of the day. Nevertheless the Nobby's extensive lunch and dinner menus rival the best lunch and dinner restaurants. An addition to the dinner menu on Friday and Saturday nights is the Nobby's exceptional prime rib.

The Nobby also caters wedding receptions and rehearsals, Christmas parties and any other function that needs catering, in either the sit-down or major buffet format. They also sell gift certificates that are good for birthday or Christmas presents or just because.

So if you've never tried the Nobby, go and give it a whirl. They're open 18 hours a day, 7 days a week. If you have tried the Nobby, then why did you needlessly read this article when you could be enjoying a home cooked meal at your favorite restaurant and mine? BON APPETIT!

"Living With Men" by Heidi Kenyon

PART IV: CARS
(Danny and Jake and I live together, but you wouldn't know there were three of us; there's only one working vehicle in the household: mine. Strangely enough, I'm the only one who doesn't work on her car...)

It's easy to tell when one of the boys' cars is broken down. I don't have to try to drive it, or even listen to them moan about this broken fuel pump or that leaky radiator. I just look in the sink. If it's lined with grease and grime, and if the soap looks more like Valvoline than Ivory, I know. It's Mr. Fix-It time again.

Danny's truck broke down last week. He caught a ride with Jake to school, and figured he'd fix it over the weekend. I told Jake I hoped he didn't mind driving Danny to school for a little while...like, forever.

On Saturday Jake and Danny got ready to work on the truck. First they made sure there was plenty of beer in the fridge, and that the stereo in Danny's truck was still in prime working condition. It's a good thing both brews and tunes were available, otherwise I'm sure working on the truck would have been impossible.

Then the boys dressed for the task at hand. Their Mr. Fix-It wardrobes include the most ripped, torn and all-around mangled pair of Levi's they own, their rattiest, most grease-stained sweatshirts, with grime dating back to their high school years, and steel-toed boots (for dropping wrenches on).

They went outside. They took the truck apart, looked at it, fiddled with it, poked at it, frowned at it, cursed at it, and put it back together. It still didn't work.

The boys decided that they needed some gadget or other to help them figure out what was wrong with it. They went down to Sears, spent a lot of money, came back, tried the gadget thing out, and cursed some more. The truck still didn't work.

"Well," they told me that night, "we found out that it might not be what we thought it might be, but then again, it still might."

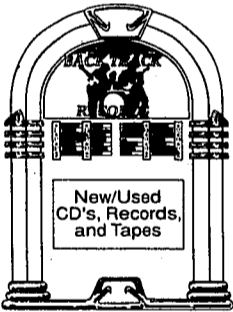

My boys sometimes have the most amusing ideas. For instance, it is quite hilarious when they come in from working on a vehicle and put their cold hands on my neck. It is the best joke in the world to leave pieces of their engines in my kitchen sink. It is unbearably funny to dirty up a whole load of laundry with their working-on-car clothes. But the very funniest think of all is when they want me to get out there and help.

This happened the other night when Danny needed someone to hold a flashlight "for a sec." The "sec" turned out to be fifteen minutes. I have also been privileged to "give it some more gas," "tell me what the gauge says now," and the old standby, "get out and push."

I don't know why, I'm sure it has nothing to do with all the time they've spent working on them, but neither Jake's nor Danny's cars are working very well right now. They drive my car to school, which is OK because I can

SHARIN' with KIM AND KARIN

Advice by Kim Bledsoe and Karin Mason

Dear Karin and Kim,
My parents are arriving tomorrow for Homecoming and will be staying at my apartment for the weekend. I love my parents, as most people do, but I don't want to have the added stress of entertaining them 24 hours a day!

Also, I feel like I have to "hide" part of my lifestyle because they are really conservative and don't approve of drinking or smoking, etc. This forces me to run around making sure none of my roommates or me have any beer cans lying around or any cigarette butts.

Finally, they always make me get up early and go to church with them and if I don't, they lay a HUGE guilt trip on me telling me my soul will go to hell so I might as well give up going to college.

What should I do? All the motels are booked and I don't have a tent.

Signed, Not So Goody-Two-Shoes

Dear Goody,
You're right, Homecoming means lots of parents as well as lots of problems. But never fear, Karin and Kim are here!

Kim: Wait just a minute. In case you have forgotten, your parents have not only had to entertain you since you were born, but have had to pay for it as well! You not only sound spoiled, but you also sound very ungrateful. Besides, there are plenty of things you can do to entertain your parents.

Karin: When my parents came up for Homecoming last year, instead of complaining and worrying about entertaining them, I included them in my plans. For example, we went out and tossed back a few drinks together. I found it to be a meaningful bonding experience. As long as you are worried about your lack of fun this weekend, you might as well take your parents with you, and then you can all sleep in!

Kim: Karin's got the right idea. Something I take pleasure in is wearing old, tattered clothing so they take me shopping. Of course, if your mom offers to give you her credit card number instead, go for that! And let's not forget that with Halloween on it's way you need to stock up on lots of goodies!

Karin: Also, you are an adult. If you still feel you need to hide beer cans and cigarettes, then I feel sorry for you. I think most parents with kids in college understand that they're growing up and need to make their own decisions. If not, discourage your parents from making the trip.

to physically pry his lips off me repeatedly. I realize that I am an attractive girl and that I turn all the boys heads, but should I have to put up with this just because I'm beautiful?

Don't get me wrong, my date was a really nice guy. But, his hormones are completely out of control! As a result of this date, I also suffered a bruised forehead and my lips were smashed against my teeth so many times they're purple! Please, tell those horny guys to treat women like the princesses we are!

Signed, Handle With Care.

Dear Handle,
Because we, too, are voluptuous women, we can relate to your problem.

Karin: Your main problem was that it was a blind date. The key word being blind because you would have to be to actually go out with this guy by choice. Next time, please view and get to know your prospective date before wasting your night.

Kim: Personally, I screen all dates beforehand by issuing a questionnaire. Photos are a requirement. This technique can save you from a horrible time and bruised lips. Aggressive guys (and girls) are tough to deal with. Forcing yourself on someone usually isn't very effective.

Karin: I agree. Tell your date next time, if you are unfortunate enough to run into someone else like this, to take a cold shower. Or, tell him you have trench mouth, that ought to do it.

Kim: Why go to such extremes? Just tell him that you are not interested, but thank you anyway. No further explanation needed.

Hey all you guys out there, listen up! We are women, hear us roar! Treat us with respect or don't ask us out!

Dear readers,

Hello! Hello! Where are you? Please write to us if you have a problem and need advice. We'd love to give a helping hand.

"Hello! Hello!
Where are you?
Please write to us
if you have a

advice."

— Kim & Karin

Kim: Furthermore, I hope that your comment about the tent was with the intention that YOU would be the one using it. As far as church goes, if you feel strongly about it, do not go. And by all means don't feel guilty about it. If your parents thought your soul was destined for hell, they wouldn't be throwing away all that money on your education!

Grow up a bit and we're sure you'll have a great time with your parents this weekend.

Dear Karin and Kim,

This last weekend I went on a blind date to a fraternity dance. To the fault of my friend, the guy turned out to be the biggest geek I've ever encountered. He wouldn't keep his hands off me and I had

Loveable pitbull springs into "Turbo" for his lady love

By ALISA STOFFEL
Staff Writer

Remember the movie "Turner and Hooch?" I saw that movie and thought to myself, "Self, you could rename this movie 'This is Your Life'." See, I had this dog who was not as big as Hooch, but was as big of a pain in the ass. Turbo, my 100 pound pitbull, initiated me to the incredible amount of destruction a dog can cause. He was my Dante, showing me the various levels of hell and punishment I was to suffer for adopting him.

One particularly memorable level was the 'anything is edible to a big dog' level.

I had taken Turbo and Skor, my other pit, to the veterinarian. It was Skor's time of the year, and she was due for a check up (I brought Turbo for good measure). The vet warned me, and warned me again, and warned me once more just to be sure, to keep the dogs as far apart from each other as possible. He then related a few anecdotes to me about other owners who failed to properly restrain their passionate puppies. To this day I remember the vet telling me he'd heard of pits jumping eight foot fences and eating through gates to get to females that smell just too good to pass up.

I knew I didn't have to worry though; I would just put Skor in the garage and leave Turbo in the house. A laundry room (complete with sliding wood door) separated the house from the garage. No problem, right?

So I go out shopping, leaving the kids (as I so fondly considered them) in their respective places. I was only gone for an hour or so, and everyone had food, water, chewsticks; the essentials in a dog's life.

Only, there was one essential I forgot: sex.

I unlock my front door, and there is Turbo's smiling face as usual. Only this time that same face full of innocence was also full of white powdery stuff.

And I think to myself, "Self, your dog has gotten into drugs. He's an addict!"

Then, of course, I realize how absurd this is, so I do the only sensible thing a human being would do. I ask the dog, "What the hell have you been doing?"

The effect of this question is immediate. The tail goes between the legs, guilty eyes are downcast, hydrolic legs lower the body six inches.

I decided to trace the dog's actions back from when he met me at the front door. This was not very difficult because the animal left more than enough tracks. I followed white paw prints through the entryway, through the livingroom, onto the kitchen table. Wait. The kitchen table? The kitchen table!!! Here I had to stop and do the only reasonable thing a human being could do.

I asked the dog "What in the flying hell have you been doing on my kitchen table?"

He didn't have much of an answer, but at least now I know where all those mysterious scratches came from.

"What in the flying HELL have you been doing on my kitchen table?"

I keep going. Through the kitchen to the laundry room door. To what used to be a laundry room door.

Splinters of wood hung from a tooth-pocked frame. Chips of paint lay spattered on a linolium floor. A brass handle dying in the corner of the room. And still the white powder lay in trails of dog prints through the desecrated doorway.

I, Sherlock Holmes, note that the chalky stuff is much thicker now. I'm worried about what I'm going to see. I can't resist. I have to know what is on the other side of the laundry room. I keep going.

And there it is. Turbo has eaten the wall beside the garage door.

He tried the door first, judging by the claw and tooth marks, but it was too solid. So he moved to the left and gnawed at the wall-paper, at the sheetrock, at the chickenwire, and at the sheetrock on the other side of wire.

The white had been my wall.

The hole was huge. You've got to give him credit though, Turbo had planned ahead. He wasn't going to squeeze through a little tiny hole. NO! Not Turbo! He was going to strut through a doggy door without crouching like a beast and appear on the other side to sweep his love off her paws.

But he hadn't quite gotten through; Skor's virtue was still intact. Of course, the wall was a different story.

The vet told me there would be days like this.

Two titles that leap off video shelves

Review by SEV HOINESS
Staff Writer

Memphis Belle and Reversal of Fortune: both are good movies to rent, depending on an individual's taste in cinema.

Memphis Belle is a true story depicting the peak of air combat war during World War II. After 25 missions a flying fortress' crew completed their tour of duty and were allowed to return home: the crew of the Memphis Belle had 24 under their belt with one more to go.

Reversal of Fortune is a book by Alan Dershowitz produced for the silver screen. This movie is much slower moving than the above mentioned, but is big on suspense and intrigue. The plot is exceptional, as would be expected from a best selling book.

Memphis Belle opens with a bunch of young men, the crew of the Memphis Belle, playing a light-hearted football game. Then the bombers begin returning and the men start betting if all will come back. The odds weren't favorable.

This true story portrays the harsh realities of war and the way it hardens or breaks a man's will.

The action in this movie is exciting and gives the viewer a realistic look of what it's like flying a mission over turbulent Europe during World War II. The cinematography inside the Memphis Belle, during its last run, is excellent and gives an ominous and foreshadowing of hopelessness to the success of that last mission.

The Memphis Belle's last mission is a historic event and Time magazine sent an overbearing reporter to catch the boys in action. The ever superstitious crew of the Memphis Belle saw this as the biggest jinx that foreshadowed certain failure.

On that last mission Murphy's Law grapples with the "Belle" for the duration of the flight. It takes all the men's lucky trinkets, from silver medallions to rubber bands, to carry them over the rough spots.

In one scene the "Belle" is in big trouble and I found myself actually grunting and twisting to help them out of it.

Memphis Belle is a great movie to rent and watch for the first time or to rent and watch again.

Reversal of Fortune is a pig of another color. It's a real mystery based on deception, murder and intrigue in the upper crust of society.

The movie makes a relatively smooth transition from text to film, but seems to have cut out parts of the plot in order to condense the novel into movie length. This doesn't take away from the cinematic value of the film, but does alter the original intent enough to lose that something extra.

The plot is a familiar theme, but does not fit the typical mold. Ron Silverman is a prominent lawyer who is solicited by a wealthy man, convicted of attempting to murdering his wife played by Glenn Close. Jeremy Irons wants Silverman to appeal his murder conviction on his behalf.

It seems to be an open and shut case, Irons is guilty.

But after Silverman and his team start dissecting the prosecutor's case against Irons its not so cut and dry.

Irons' wife (Glenn Close) isn't actually dead, simply comatosed for life.

An interesting and entertaining aspect of this film is how the movie reverts back and forth from the past to present and then to Close narrating unconscious from her hospital bed.

Silverman is an outspoken man that holds little back. His insights are uncanny, but Silverman's wit alone can't solve this complex mystery.

Silverman teams with one of

Gibson gains respect in Hamlet

By MEYLA BIANCO
Staff Writer

Wow, wow, wow is just about all that came to mind after I saw Hamlet at WSU last week. This is an absolutely great production that I am confident even Shakespeare himself would have enjoyed.

This is a film that has it all, including a talented cast which includes Glenn Close and Mel Gibson, as well as a few new and interesting faces.

With tremendously skilled actors, unnerving sword play action, treachery, deceit, ghosts and love, what else can you ask for? If you were to request a beautiful setting and still more beautiful costuming, plus the aforementioned factors, you might think it would be too much. Not so; this movie still delivers.

Although I must admit here (somewhat shamefacedly) that I have never actually read Shakespeare's Hamlet, perhaps my ignorance is beneficial in this case. I was able to follow the plot despite my obvious literary handicap. At first, you may find the language a bit difficult to comprehend. However, this will soon pass, as it does when you read difficult literature. (You see, I may not have read Hamlet, but I've read other Shakespeare, thank you.) So Hamlet was not over the heads of the average moviegoer, a potential turn off.

In my opinion, the most interesting character in the movie was undoubtedly Ophelia. She was a highly skilled actress who played the part of the beautiful young aristocrat who goes mad after the man she longs for, Hamlet kills her beloved father. Her performance can be described as nothing less than exceptional. The song she sings while climbing the stairs is one of the most superbly haunting melodies ever. She sings it in this high, high voice that is kind of squeaky around the edges and warbled. The song goes, "he's dead and gone ladies, he's dead (giggle) and gone. At his head a grass green turf, at his heels..." I love that song, it is so scarily morbid.

Mel Gibson is great, a really nice change from the simple simon American movie mentality of late as seen directly through, say, Kevin Costner. Gibson's spit-spewingly genuine performance made me respect him as an actor, capable of playing a complex role. His strikingly blue eyes weren't bad to look at, either.

I think Glenn Close is simply one of the best actresses of our time, and after Hamlet, I am a real fan, despite the fact that a groupie is something I try not to be too much of. Close is wonderful as Gertrude. She is at once classically beautiful and graceful and handles the difficult role with ease. She is an actress who is truly talented, and shows it in every part she performs. In this one, I particularly enjoyed her gurgling poison sequence, complete with spasmodic death throes and last minute understanding of the evil of her new husband.

Hamlet is great, and guess what? Yep, that movie house of all movie houses, The Micro, is featuring it beginning November 3. I'd have even paid the proverbially outrageous five or six dollars to see this one, but at WSU I paid only two dollars. If you see it at the Micro, it will be a mere $1.75! Be sure and get there early, this movie will probably be exceedingly popular, and rightfully so.

his old partners who happens to be a defunct lover. This part of the film is awkward and not expanded on greatly. Though if it would have been, it might have confused viewers even more.

The plot is masterfully constructed and each new revelation takes Silverman and his team down another road, closer and closer to the truth—or is it?

It's hard not to reveal the essentials of the plot without giving the entire story away, so I'll leave it at that.

This movie is great to watch in the privacy of the home and is highly recommended by this reviewer.

Both Memphis Belle and Reversal of Fortune are great movies for renting over and over and can be found at most any video store in Moscow.

• HOROSCOPE •

If Today is your birthday then expect a strip-o-gram when you're sitting in your 1:30 p.m. class that seats approximately 250 students. It will be a day you'll never forget; and your friends won't let you forget it either.

ARIES (March 21-April 19): You love wearing leather and now you can be appreciated. Your lusty appearance might bring the opposite sex drooling at your heels and might even suggest sexual propositions you can't refuse.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20): OK! Stop being so stubborn. You're always in control, or at least you think you are. Let your partner take control for a change.

GEMINI (May 21-June 20): Someone has been watching you for quite some time and is about to confront you with his or her infatuation with your luscious body. You might even know this person. Be flattered, if the person is good looking. You might even suggest going on a date.

CANCER (June 21-July 22): Sick and tired of waiting by the phone for that someone special to call. Well now you can call that someone special at 1-800-DATE-LESS. Just ask for Gatewood and he'll give you all the possible, available dates around the Palouse, including himself.

LEO (July 23-August 22): Watch out for Leos. You'll believe anything they say because of their hypnotizing, bedroom eyes. Leos tend to use their looks as a way to get everything they want. If you're gullible and like to fool around, you will find that Leo can be quite the joker.

VIRGO (August 23-September 22): This isn't the week to be reserved. Let it all hang out! You'll surprise your friends when you show your P.D.A.

with that certain individual who has been waiting for you to get down and dirty.

LIBRA (September 23-October 22): Just do it! You've been saving up for that perfect weekend. Now's your chance to let loose and party down. Don't worry about making an ass out of yourself, it won't be the first time.

SCORPIO (October 23-November 21): Focus on long term relationship with an individual who enforces the law. Highlights for the evening include roses and a candle light dinner. For the finale, use hand cuffs to end the night with a BANG!

SAGITARIUS (November 22-December 21): Anxiety has struck and you need to release the tension by doing what all sagitarians do best, FLIRTING! Just watch out for those horny individuals with perverted minds. They might take your flirting the wrong way.

CAPRICORN (December 22-January 19): Everyone thinks you're a God, and you know it. You're charming, sharp, and sometimes very intellectual. Don't underestimate the powers of the Capricorn, they are very convincing and can persuade you into doing almost anything, which can be fun if you're into ice cubes and motion lotion.

AQUARIUS (January 20-February 18): You have always wanted to learn how to snorkel. But since your financial situation doesn't allow you to go to the Barrier Reef, or Cabo San Lucas, try your wet suit out in a jacuzzi, swimming pool or even a bath tub. WARNING: Never, go down without a partner.

PISCES (February 19-March 20): You're always taking the initiative, now let your partner take control. Be adventurous, you might find yourself in the jungle swinging from the trees.
