Stallings comments on Duke, Thomas

By JEFF KAPOSTASY & DOUG TAYLOR News Editor & Staff Writer

Democratic Congressman Richard Stallings swung through Moscow Thursday evening to do some early campaigning for his 1992 bid for U.S. Senate. Stallings is currently the district-one Idaho congressman. During his brief visit, the Argonaut set up an informal interview to let Stallings answer some questions about current political situations and give personal insight to them.

In light of the Clarence Thomas Anita Hill hearings in which the Senators handling the questions appeared very sloppy, many Americans demanded that the terms of Senators be limited. How do you feel about this?

"I think term limitations are a mistake. They would benefit the big states more than the small tes. In the House of Representatives, it takes time to build up seniority. With term limitations, you would have people choosing committee chair positions. You'd give all the power to the five biggest states, and they'd have all the power. The quality of life in smaller states like Idaho would then be in their hands."

Continuing on Judge Thomas, he wasn't very forthcoming with his views on a variety of issues, including abortion and the death penalty. His silence on these issues reinforced the accusations of critics who would say that Judge Thomas would serve as a rubber stamp for the Republican party. Is this true in your opinion? Was Thomas elected to the court as a token minority?

"I think he (Thomas) lied to the committee. The silence and refusal to take a position showed dishonesty. Anita Hill's testimony probably wouldn't have influenced my vote, but his dishonesty did, when he told the committee that he'd never even thought about Roe v. Wade and the abortion decision. I don't think there is a woman alive that hasn't thought about it. For him to sit there and tell the committee that he'd never thought about it was pure hogwash. He should have been challenged on that. When Bush said, This is the finest jurist in the land,' that is garbage. Bush also said he didn't choose him on the basis of color. That is also hogwash. He was filling a quota. If Bush is known for anything, it will be for a mediocre court."

How do you fell about the recent Louisiana gubernatorial run-off between Edwards and Duke? Although Duke had ties to the Kn Klux Klan, Edwards had been implicated in a host of crimes. Was the election taking the less of two evils in picking Edwards?

"Yes, it was. No question about it. People finally decided that they loved Louisiana more than they hated Edward Edwards. If Duke had won, the state would have been devastated. If they would have had a racist Klansman, few people would want anything to do with Louisiana. I would show no support for a state that would elect a Nazi governor. I see David Duke as a creation of republican policies. When he university will receive $8 million in federal funds over the next three years to create a National Center for Advanced Transportation Technology in the College of Engineering.

"This will give our stu-dents the opportunity to make contributions on the national level," said Gary Maki, professor of engineering.

"This will enrich the academic environment for graduate and undergraduate students at the university in all areas," said Provost Tom Bell.

President Elisabeth Zinser and Senator Steve Symms announced Thursday in a press conference the National Center will be the only one of its kind in the United States.

"It's an honor to be the only university in the country to provide this service," said Engineering Dean Richard Jacobsen. "This is a prime opportunity for the University of Idaho to become a national leader in cutting-edge engineering research to support the design and optimization of transportation systems." Symms said that President Bush announced he will sign the transportation bill that will give the university $8 million for the center. The university will also add $2 million in private money designated to enhance engineering and physics facilities.

The center's staff will conduct research concerning advanced materials, power electronics, computing, manufacturing processes, and . hazardous waste management and transport. The goals are to develop new transportation systems that are environmentally acceptable, introduce new energyefficient forms of propulsion, identify efficient transportation systems, and cre-. ate new transportation systems that increase public safety.

or those of you who are F tired of the hassles of shopping and parking during the Christmas season, there is a solution.

The Palouse Clearwater Environmental Institute (PCEI) has teamed up with local merchants and started a bus system that will run from Moscow to Pullman stores every Saturday until Christmas. Not only will the Holi-day Shopping Bus provide a convenient way to shop, the services will be free.

"Our long-term interest is in getting a public transportation system between Pullman and Moscow," said Jeanne McHale, an associate professor of chemistry. She said the Holiday Shopping Bus would show citizens how a bus system would work. University and city officials are currently ning in the fall of 1992.

McHale said that bad driving conditions is one of the main reasons the bus will be used during the holiday season. The second reason, she said, was so that PCEI could show the community on both sides of the border how it will benefit merchants.

We wanted to demonstrate that an idea that is good for the environment is also good for the economy," said McHale.

Moscow and Pullman merchants were approached about sponsoring the bus for $250 each. The buses will stop at each store that paid for a sponsorship.

Expert to speak on Central America

By ALISA STOFFEL Staff Writer

The Coalition for Central America in Moscow is gaining another valuable member. Robert Hayes, who has been active for years in Central American issues, has recently moved to Moscow from Boise.

Hayes recently spent four weeks in Ignacio Ellacora, the Boise Coalition's sister city. He and others from CCA brought medical and school supplies to the villagers of Ignacio. The coallition actually supplied help in two ways; the medical supplies they brought (antiseptic and sterile bandages) are illegal and difficult to obtain, and the presence of Americans in the village discourages the militia from shooting at the villagers.

The last 12 years of war have destroyed families, villages and the land around them. According to Hayes, the military recognizes no limits on its killing.

"The military bombed the shit out of everything," Hayes said.

Massive amounts of people escaped into Honduras, onto a sandy flat-topped plateau. The soil was unable to support life, and a quarter of the refugees died of malnutrition and exposure.

The only option left to these people was to move back into the war zone of their own country. In 1987, the people repopulated their villages, amid the bullets, mortars, and rockets of the militia.

"I saw bullet holes in various states of mend," Hayes said.

The non-combatant communities outlawed any use of alcohol, drugs and weapons. The villagers live a communal existence where every individual has a personal plot of land to grow food. The village also has large fields around it into which each villager puts in labor hours to cultivate corn for the whole village.

However, this last year has presented more difficulties. A drought caused food shortages everywhere. Shortly after planting, the village food supply was plundered by soldiers who ate six acres of corn and trampled the rest. The villagers replanted and recovered some harvest, but still suffered a loss.

Members of the coalition give moral support to the village and its new way of life. But nothing can erase the fact, said Hayes, that America gives one million dollars a day to the South American government and U.S. Army supplies and training.

The M16s that the military use have 'U.S. Army' written right on the butt of the gun. This is an insult to every American," Hayes said.

The militia have been trained in "counter-insurgency" torture techniques by American special forces. These techniques are employed on men, women and children to try and uncover guerilla camps.

FMLN guerilla warfare attracts people for different reasons. One fighter whom Hayes spoke with explained what led him to fighting.

KUID, living groups raising money

By WENDY DEAL Staff Writer

Every year KUID sponsors a Quiet Campaign to raise money for the station. This year's fundraising was extremely successful. KUID's Quiet Campaign consists of a phon-a-thon. The phon-athon helps eliminate the station's on-air pledge days in December.

This year's phon-a-thon was held Oct. 21, 24 and 28 and Nov. 4. Three fraternities on campus volunteered to phone viewers in our area. Sigma Chi, Delta Chi and Phi Gamma Delta all raised over $2,000 each. Delta Chi raised $2484 for the station and won the station's fund-raising trophy.

"It was a great experience and great to raise money for a worthy cause. It was fun trying to convince people to give money-even though they were rude some-times," said Geoffrey Hensley of Phi Gamma Delta.

KUID would like to thank the fraternities for volunteering their time, hard work and participation in its Quiet Campaign.

Hewlett-Packard, Micron, Morrison Knudsen, and CH2M Hill in Boise, Advanced Hardware Architectures in Moscow and Boeing in Seattle was one of the factors in choosing the university. Another factor was the proximity to the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory and the DOE Hanford Reservation in Washington.

Senator Steve Symme

Zinser said the center will "enhance the contribution we give to industries" and the university should be "proud to be partnered with the private industry and government" through the center.

The success of the university's Microelectronic Research Center, including the NASA Space Engineering Research Center, was also a factor in the decision to choose the university.

The money for the center is included in a $151-billion package for highway and transportation improvements approved by Congress last week. Zinser emphasized the money for the center will not mean a reduction in the Idaho state highway funds.

The National Center for Advanced Transportation Technology will be part of a $20-million project to renovate and build additions to the College of Engineering and the Department of Physics.

The additions to the College of Engineering were already lanned and approved by the Board of Regents, but Zineer said the federal funds "will propel the plan of these facili-

All students who have received a Stafford Guaranteed Student Loan any time during college and are gradusting or leaving college at the end of fall semaster are required to attend a Stafford Guaranteed Loan Exit Interview.

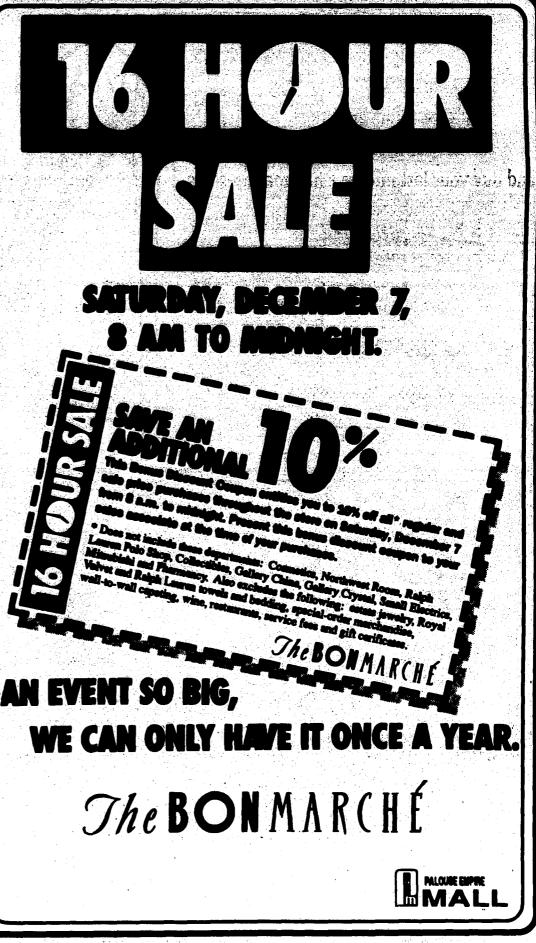

The interviews, which are required by federal law for all recipients of Stafford loans will be held Tuesday, Dec. 10 at 2 p.m. and Wednesday, Dec. 11 at 2 p.m. in the Borah Theatre in the SUB. Students can attend either session. Students will learn what happens concerning their loans after they leave college at the sessions. Information on budgeting for payments and the entire process of repaying loans will be explained and literature expanding that process will be handed out as well.

"This is an educationally positive thing," said Dan Davenport, director of the Financial Aid Office. The sessions will help students get started on the right foot when they get out and need to pay off their loans."

Devenport said that about 150 to 200 students are expected to attend the two sessions.

American women 'gag' on Bush's abortion policy

It seems that wearing a silk tie and a pair of wool pants automatically gives politicians in this country the right to make any decisions he wants.

It's seems the tighter the the tie gets, the more anal-retentive and meddling our nation's politicians become.

Such was the case a few weeks ago when George "I'll decide what's best for the women of this country" Bush finally got his way in his almighty fight against abortion.

Bush was able to implement what democrats term to be a "gag rule" that will prevent federally funded family planning centers from counseling women about abortion. Also at stake was $205 billion that goes to counseling and education for clinics such as Planned Parenthood.

The money mentioned above is what is termed as Title 10. It's money that family planning clinics need to survive. Clinics such as the North Central District Health Department in Lewiston. Fortunately, Idaho and Washington are protected from the "gag rule" by the Massachusetts Amendment. They can still use all of their available options.

Bush doesn't seem too worried about the rest of the country. Women everywhere, including the ones on this campus, should be deeply concerned because someday they might be facing the choice of whether or not to have an abortion. This veto is nothing more than blatant censorship. Bush is in effect saying that women aren't grown-up enough to hear all their options. Ladies, how the earth does Bush know what's like to be a woman? to deal with a problem that is truly unique to you? Life in his Maine summer home won't allow him to understand the lower class, let alone what it's like to be a shaken 17-yearold girl who is facing one of the biggest decisions of her life.

Bush says it's OK for women to consult with their private physicians. Unfortunately, the social problem lies with women who cannot afford private physicians; their only source of information being public services. More impoverished, abused children add to an already growing underclass.

During the 1980s, the abortion issue was like a prize fight with pro-lifers and prochoicers both landing heavy blows. Unfortunately, Bush has become the heavyweight champion with 24 straight knockouts in vetos. This latest veto is his biggest and most dangerous of them all.

It seems politicians haven't learned from their own mistakes. Before 1900, thousands of women died from illegal abortions peformed by witch doctors who promised magical results. In 1973 the Roe vs. Wade decision put potions and coat hangers in the closet forever ... or so we thought. But now we're traveling down that same bumpy road called history again. A road which could bring the abortion issue back to square one.

A TANK AFIN THOMAS IN THE FROM ST

There is something extremely wrong with our system of student advising at the University of Idaho. I've always heard the horror stories; those seniors in their last semester discovering that they cannot graduate because they are missing credits. I always thought to myself, "Gee, what idiots! Can't they count up to 128 yet?"

Well, look who's laughing now. I am a senior who thought that I was graduating in December. I have spoken with my advisor every semester and have a good working relationship with him. I am also a responsible student with a pretty decent GPA. So what happened? I waited too long to fill out my graduation application and when I finally got around to it, I realized that something was not quite right.

A semester and a summer earlier, when my whole academic life was scattered on top of my advisor's desk and we were attempting to create my final semester out of this heap of information, I was told that I needed only 11 more credits to graduate. Instead of doing the smart thing and double checking this information, I celebrated. I thought to myself, "Hey, this guy knows what he's doing. He's my advisor!" Wrong, wrong, wrong. I've learned some things since then: 1) Advisors at the U of I are not receiving any extra compensation or honors. They are expected to carry the same course load and research work as non-advisors.

2) These advisors meet periodically at retreats to discuss problems, but no real training session exists. They are not critiqued. 3) There are many more students with complaints about the quality of advising than I thought. In fact, every student them to solve the problem. I've spoken to has had some sort of gripe. (This, I agree, is a very more money on correspondence informal poll, but perhaps the courses. If this letter sounds administration might conduct its

In closing, I have some advice for any future seniors in my predicament. First, double and triple check everything. If something does go wrong, do not let the administration or your advisor tell you it is entirely your fault. I personally know 3 other students who let the administrators shake their fingers at them from across some big desk and then silently slunk away to finish their correspondence courses.

Sure, take part of the blame, but not all of it. Hold the responsible parties responsible.

Believe me, you are going to feel stupid enough, don't let them make it worse. If you are having a problem, see the head of your department. If that doesn't work, go see the dean of your school. Perhaps if we let the administration know that we are displeased, we can work with

Right to express opinion

I am writing in response to the distasteful article, University and Do Gooders Should Not Control Our Lives, written by Chris Gatewood.

Chris Gatewood states in this hypocritical article "... neither Martin nor myself are in a position to judge others", yet before this, he makes many judgements and insults towards the "Univer-sity and do gooders." He also writes in this editorial (an article in a newspaper explicitly stating opinions (Webster's)) that people who "spread their own morals and values" make him sick to his stomach. This must mean that Chris Gatewood is making himself sick.

According to Amendment 1 of the United States Constitution, Americans have freedom of speech and a right to petition. Carrie L. Martin was practicing this right when she gathered signatures on a statement of protest against a beer chugging contest. The University was practicing this right when they expressed their concern about the matter to a co-owner of Doc's.

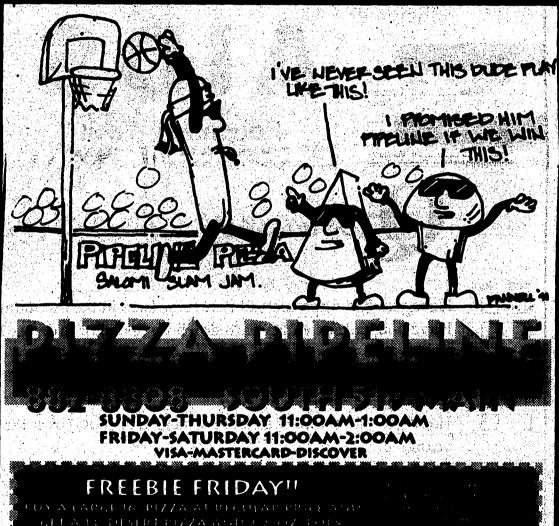

It was not the University nor the do-gooders who signed the petition that stopped the beer chugging contest. It was the owners of Doc's who stopped the contest in response to the petitions against the event. Isn't this what the first amendment is all about?

LETTERS • Editorial choices disserviced students

Editor;

I am writing to complain that your poor editorial judgment has resulted in a disservice to those you should be most keenly interested in serving: your fellow students.

Last week, in ample time for your Tuesday edition, I sent a request for you to publish an announcement about the Goldwater Scholarship. The announcement made clear the terms of eligibility: namely, sophomores or juniors in the upper quarter of their class, majoring in natural science or engineering, and planning a career in scientific research. The announcement made clear that applications were available from the Honors Center, Psychology 102.

When you chose not to run the information in the November 12 Argonaut, I sent a follow-up memorandum requesting inclusion of the information in the November 15 edition.

You published nothing until November 19, then chose only to name the scholarshop while giving the deadline for picking up applications- November 22. This scant information is worse than useless. You have, plainly and simply, failed in the basic norms of responsible journalism. When there is something vitally of interest to your readership, your responsibility is to tell who, what, where, when, and why.

Last year's editor chose to fully inform the Argonaut readership of this opportunity. After a stiff internal competition to nominate four students to compete against even more qualified national competition, the University of Idaho produced three Goldwater

Scholarship winners. We were one of only four universities in the nation to do so well. There may well be a deserving potential winner among this year's students who, thanks to your poor apply because he or she knows nothing about the Goldwater Scholarship.

Cougars beat depleted Vandals

By MATT LAWSON Editor

The outlook didn't look promising as the Idaho Vandals took on Washington State minus two key players Thursday night in Pullman.

And the outcome wasn't any better as the Cougars handed Idaho its worst defeat since 1979 in the form of 81-49 pounding before 5,375 fans.

"Now I know how General Custer felt," Idaho head coach Larry Eustachy said as his Vandals fell to 3-3. "We haven't practiced very well and listened and we weren't prepared for this."

The Washington State victory was an attempt to make up for four straight losses to the Vandals—and the Cougars appeared to do more than that.

Idaho sophomores Orlando Lighfoot and Deon Watson sat out the game after breaking team curfew last weekend in Anchorage during the Great Alaska Shootout. But it almost appeared as if it wouldn't have mattered against a swarming Cougar defense that forced 27 Idaho turnovers.

"They were no factor because we couldn't have gotten the ball in their hands anyway," Eustachy said referring to the absence of Lighfoot and Watson. "I was disappointed how our guards handled their pressure. We didn't react to their defense."

"I think it would've made a difference," Cougar head coach Kelvin Sampson said. "But the outcome wouldn't have been any different."

Not only were the Cougar guards frustrating the Vandal perimeter players, but they were also lighting up the scoreboard, especially Terrence Lewis.

Lewis finished with a gamehigh 34 points on 10-for-16 shooting in only 29 minutes of play.

"Terrence makes things look so easy because he is smooth," Sampson said. "Terrence brings a sense of calmness and security to the position. I thought Terrence was outstanding."

WSU's other four guards combined for 33 points, including 12 by reserve guard Eddie Hill.

But the key to victory kept coming back to the WSU defense as the Cougars only shot 40 percent (22-54) from the field.

"It (defense) dictates every game we play," Sampson said. "We have to depend on turnovers. If you don't get good guard play it will stand out against us."

While Idaho struggled controlling the ball, the Cougars were limited to 12 turnovers while handing out 12 assists.

"I thought our kids played unselfishly," Sampson said. "Hopefully we can shoot the ball better."

Idaho looked intimidated from the start by the defense of the Cougars as WSU jumped out to 18-7 lead midway through the first half.

"The best way to analyze the first 10 minutes was that we played scared," Eustachy said. "Our players froze."

"The pressure took us out (of the game)," Vandal forward Otis Mixon said. "We just didn't concentrate."

Idaho's only positive note came on the boards as the Vandals outrebounded WSU 36-33. Terrell Malone and Frank Waters led the way with 11 rebounds each.

"I was really impressed with Idaho's tenacity around the

It was over before it started

It's funny how games are sometimes won in ways that don't show up in the box scores. Sometimes games aren't even won at the arens.

Such was the case last night when the Idaho Vandals were crushed by a Washington State team that feasted on Idaho's famine. The final score read a gruesome 81-49, but for Orlando Lightfoot and Deon Watson the score was much more painful.

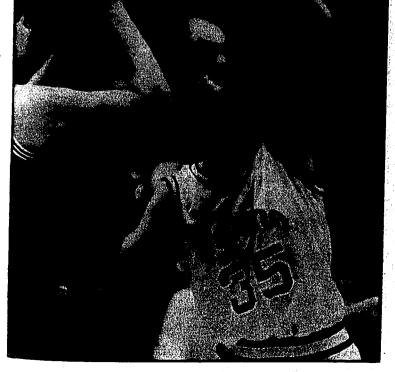

Watson and Lightfoot, the Vandals' top scorers and rebounders decided to put the needs of themselves before their team. While on the their recent road trip to Anchorage during the Great Alaska Shootout, Watson and Lightfoot decided to stay out a little past Head Coach Larry Eustachy's prescribed curfew. Actually, according to Eustachy, it was a lot past curfew. I hope their little jaunt around exciting Anchorage was worth it, because it cost them a one-game suspension. Why couldn't they have done this just before playing Lewis-Clark State College?

After seeing the game, the realization hit that it wouldn't have really mattered if Watson and Lightfoot had played oor not. The reality is WSU has a better team.

"We couldn't deal with their pressure at all," Eustachy said. "Orlando and Deon wouldn't have any difference because we couldn't get the ball past half court. We weren't ready for a game like this."

What the Vandals weren't ready for was WSU's backcourt. A murderous group of guards who full-court pressed, pestered, and pummeled the Vandals' guards for nearly the entire game. The group, which included Neil Derrick, Bennie Seltzer, Terrence Lewis, Tyrone Maxey and Eddie Hill forced the Vandals into 27 turnovers.

This group was simply bigger, quicker, stronger and more confident than the Vandals group. "They have some guards that have played a lot more games than ours have," Eusatchy said. "We have a lot of inexperience." "When Terrence (Lewis) arrived here he couldn't guard the door with a cannon," said

Kelly Moeller looks to continue in her role of a team leader as the Vandals head south for the Freedom Bowl Classic. The Vandals will face the Homed Frogs of Texas Christian University in the opening round of the tournament at 2 p.m. today in the Bren Events Center on the campus of Cal-Irvine.

The four-team tournament will also feature the California State Northridge Matadors. Depending on if the Vandals win or lose, they will play Cal-Irvine or Cal State-Northridge in either the consolation final or the championship contest that will be played Saturday at 3 p.m. following the consolations.

Idaho is 4-1 in their appearances at the Classic and similarly 4-1 in this young season. In the all-time series the Vandals have split two games with TCU in their prior match-ups, but have blanked both Cal-Irvine and Cal State-Northridge in each of their prior bouts.

The Vandals are coming off a big weekend where they won the Mark IV Safeco Classic in a dominating fashion and Idaho's big center Kelly Moeller earned MVP weekend and improve her teams record to 6-1.

TCU's center Laurie Berlinn doesn't equal Moeller with regard to statistics with only 2.5 points and 0.5 rebounds a game, but is Moeller's equal in size at six-foot-three. Moeller is averaging almost 18 points and 7.8 rebounds a game and will need all that and more to overtake the 1-1 Horned Frogs.

The Vandal guards Andi McCarthy and Brenda Kuehlthau will have their hands full with Racheal Hease who averages 11 points and eight rebounds per contest. But TCU's biggest threat is Liz Zeller, averaging 15 points and 10 rebounds a game.

Kortnie Edwards and Krista Smith will be assigned the task of keeping Zeller in check. Between the two they average over 21 points a game.

If the Vandals come away with the Classic championship, it could be one of Turner's best starts at Idaho. WSU coach Kelvin Sampson. "But we know he plays tough defense like all our guards. That's how we win games. We pressure the frontcourt so the ball doesn't get inside. We emphasize our strengths, which is guard play, to help cover our weaknesses."

27

In this night the strength was Lewis, who riddled the Vandals with 34 points. He scored every way imaginable. At times the ball seemed to be connected to the basket like a yo-yo on a string. He hit three pointers, driving, twisting lay-ups, and was 11-of-12 from the free-throw line.

SPORTS REPORTS

FOOTBALL— Idaho placed three players on the All-Big Sky Conference football teams announced earlier this week. Wide receiver Kasey Dunn, who moved into second place all-time in receptions and receiving yardage, made the first team for the second straight year. Dunn was also voted to the Kodak All-America first team for the sec-ond straight year. Defensive end Jeff Robinson also was selected to the first team for the second straight year after recording 19 sacks. Punter Tom Sugg was also a first team selection after averaging 44.7 yards a punt, good enough for third in the nation. Making the second team included Jody Schnug (offensive line) and Elia Ala'ilima-Daley (tight end). Players receiving honorable mention included Yo Murphy (wide receiver), Doug Nussmeier (quarterback), Chris Schneider (offensive line), Walter Saunders (return specialist), Will Saffo (linebacker) and John Sirmon (defensive line).

Nevada hosts Youngstown State in the quarterfinals of the I-AA Championships Saturday in Reno. Nevada defeated McNeese State last week 22-16 to move to 12-0 on the season. • VOLLEYBALL— The Vandal volleyball team had two players receive postseason awards. Brittany Vanhaverbeke was named freshman of the year while Nancy Wicks was named to the second team All-Big Sky Conference. Wicks was named freshman of the year last season.

Montana will be the Big Sky representative in the 32-team field that makes up this year's NCAA Division I Women's Volleyball Championship. Seeded sixth in the Northwest Region, Montana will travel to Stockton, Calif., to take on the University of the Pacific tonight.

boards," Sampson said.

Another bright spot for the Vandals came in a strong performance from reserve forward Fred Lovett.

Lovett came off the bench to score a team-high 15 points and pull down three rebounds in only 19 minutes of play. Lovett didn't make the trip to Alaska with the Idaho team and tried to excell in the absence of his teammates.

"I needed to redeem myself and prove to coach Eustachy that I'm hungry to play," Lovett said. "Our main goal is to go back to practice and work hard."

Idaho continued to struggle with free throw shooting while the Cougars dominated the game at the charity stripe.

Idaho finished 13-of-26 from 31-of-36 free throws.

"We played hard for 40 minutes," Eustachy said. "They all played hard. We just have a long ways to go to play quality basketball."

"Terrence sort of reminds me of (NBA guard) Walter Davis." Sampson said. "He's so smooth it seems like he's not giving 100 percent. He's a calming presence for our basketball team."

But an unnerving presence for Eustachy, who could only smile in frustration while watching his team stare humility in the face. But not all was bad for the Vandals. The effort was there. The team never quit.

Eustachy received outstanding efforts from players who got minutes they wouldn't have nor-mally. Frank Waters and Terrell Malone each pulled down 11 rebounds and Fred Lovett had 15 points.

This game will always be the line while WSU canned remembered as the game that might have been. But by suspending Lightfoot and Watson, Eustachy did the right thing. He put the needs of the team above two individuals. By not suspending the players, Eustachy would have lost both his integrity and respect from the players. He set a precedent that he does not make idle team rules. He should be supported for his decision.

"I did what I thought was best for this team," Eustachy said. "This job is my livelihood. Nobody, not the boosters, athletic director or students want to win more than me."

Watching the wince on Lightfoot's face during the game, you know he will learn from this mistake, as will Watson. The pain of this loss will subside over the course of a long season and the Vandals will get another shot at the Cougars next year.

"This is a good learning experience for us," Vandal forward Otis Mixin said. "We're going to work harder and become a better team."

Nutcracker hits Pullman

By KATE McLAUGHLIN Staff Writer

Christmas is coming, and it's time once again for the Christmas classic and the holiday tradition of "The Nutcracker" to hit the region. The Eugene Ballet will be performing on Dec. 8th at 7:30 p.m. at the Bessley Coliseum in Pullman and Dec. 9th at 7:30 p.m. at the Lewiston High School in Lewiston.

Each year the Eugene Ballet travel throughout the Northwest to bring this grand ballet to approximately 50,000 people in five weeks. The ballet company will be complimented by students from our local Festival Dance Academy, which is sponsoring the production as part of its Great Performance Series.

Tickets for the Pullman performance of "The Nutcracker" are on sale at the Beasley Coliseum and Depot in Pullman and at Cavanaugh's in Moscow. Prices are $14 and $10 for adults, $10 and $8 for students and $8 and $6 for children 12 and under, except for the first seven rows which are all $17.50.

Lewiston performance tickets are priced at $12 for adults, $10 for students and seniors, and $6 for children 12 and under. They are available at Owl Drugs at South Way and St. John's in Lewiston and at Tri-State Owl Drug in Clarkston. Phone orders at 883-3267.

Highlander sequel lacks original plot, script

By HEIDI KENYON Staff Writer

There are some movies you just don't get tired of, and many people are aware that Russell Mulcahy's Highlander (Christopher Lambert, Sean Connery) is one of these. This 1986 science fiction/fantasy film has an extremely loyal following, and with good reason. The film is well made, well acted; and deserves acclaim.

Highlander's plot centers around Connor McLoud (Lambert), who can only be killed by separating his head from his shoulders. McLoud discovers his immortality in a battle in 16th century Scotland, and learns more about it from friend and fellow immortal, Ramirez

The Holiday B a z a a r Coffee Shop November Bocember Bocember Confee Shop November Bocember Confee Shop November Bocember Confee Confee Shop December Confee Confe

(Connery).

From Ramirez, McLoud learns that it is their destiny, and that of others like them, to battle one another until only one remains, and that that one shall then be heir to an unknown Prize.

There are questions in Highlander which are never resolved, especially the issues of how this immortality came about in the first place, and there the Prize comes from. But every movie, especially those of the science fiction/fantasy genre, is based on some sort of premise which is simply accepted. The reason behind the history of McLoud, the Highlander, is not important--it is his life itself which is.

Despite this, the makers of the recently released Highlander II have seen fit to explain it anyway. Not only is such an explanation unneccessary, but in the sequel it is unbecoming and unrealistic. Fans of the original Highlander will be appalled to learn that McLoud, Ramirez, and the others, are immortal because they are aliens from the Planet Zeist.

While Highlander II gives reasons for things we don't need reasons for, at the same time it leaves other basic plot elements shadowed in mystery. Throughout the entire movie, McLoud is being hunted by a warlord from his home planet who has come to Earth to kill him. However, we never learn why the warlord wants McLoud dead in the first place.

> "Highlander II uses cheap thrills and is much more graphic than its prequel."

The film spends a considerable bit of time showing McLoud and the resurrected Ramirez breaking into a maximum security prison, only to have the object of their rescue efforts die as soon as they arrive.

Why did they try to break him out in the first place? Ask the scriptwriters.

The plot of Highlander II isn't enough on its own, so it borrows ideas to parallel with the original movie.

Highlander II also borrows from other movies of its genre. There is a swordplay scene containing a seared-off hand which is surprisingly remaniscent of something Luke and Darth did years ago. Falling, whirling blades in a sealed chamber can't help but call to mind The Temple of Doom. They couldn't even get creative with the Planet Zeist-it looks amazingly like Dune. Although the first Highlander

Although the first Highlander contains a great deal of violence and quite a few rolling heads, on the whole it was tastefully done. The swordplay is well filmed, and while the viewer is acutely aware when someone dies, we never see the actual gory instant of death.

On the other hand, Highlander II shows everything. The camera is on the neck when the head comes off. Highlander II uses cheap thrills and is much more graphic than its prequel, which had already proved that such is not necessary.

Highlander II: The Quickening (and the Quickening occupied a whole minute of this fiasco) adds absolutely nothing of worth to the original movie. It is disappointing partly in the fact that it could have been done so much better, for so much less money...with a different script and a better director, that is. Five dollars is too much to pay to see the heartbreak that Highlander II is to fans of the original.
