Beck details senate campaign agenda

Rod Beck, a Republican candidate for the U.S. Senate seat being vacated by Steve Symms, made a whistle-stop at the university Tuesday night. Beck emphasized his conservative ideals, criticism he has for front-running Democratic candidate Richard Stallings and reasons why George Bush needs to return to more conservative policies.

Beck, an Idaho state senator and businessman from Boise, is one of three Republicans vying for his party's nomination. Dirk Kempthorne, the Republican favorite, was in Moscow the same day to officially declare his bid for the Senate. Kempthorne plans to bring a more common-sense approach to the U.S. Senate, and to fight deficit spending. Boise stockbroker Milton Erhart is the third Republican running in the primary.

Beck said he favors major government deregulation of industry, a capital gains tax reduction and major tax breaks for families.

"I want the government generally off our back," Beck said.

According to Beck, he is generally pleased with what Bush told the nation in his recent State of the Union address.

"I was glad to see him attempt to re-establish his conservative philosophy. I've been extremely disappointed in his appeasing of left-wing extremists of the Democratic Party," Beck said.

Although he voiced frustration with Bush changing his mind on issues such as new taxes and the signing of a quota bill, Beck said he thinks Bush is now "rededicated to freedom and lower taxes."

Beck emphasized his support for lower taxes by saying present taxes are slowing down the machine of the private market. He stresses a hands-off policy for government as a necessity to help new businesses thrive.

Beck criticized Gov. Cecil Andrus by saying the governor had no commitment to Idaho education, and had little good to say about Democratic candidate Richard Stallings, who is currently one of Idaho's two U.S. Congressmen and a favorite for election.

"Stallings will win everything but the election," Beck said. "When there is a clear articulation of the issues and philosophy, the Republicans always win. I have a real problem with Stallings' leftist ideology. He gives vague ideas, but doesn't back them up."

Beck said he won't accept socialized medicine, that he is not an environmentalist but a conservationist, and that he is upset at the way the government is taking away our civil liberties.

Beck also said he opposed increasing the fees charged to

More than coming soon, Moscow's Xenon nightclub is scheduled to open tonight.

Xenon swinging open doors

After all the hoopla, 'Ferrari' nightclub ready to roll

By TANYA MADISON
Lifestyles Editor

The waiting is over. After almost two years of speculation and legal maneuvering, Xenon, called "the Ferrari of Nightclubs," will be opening for business tonight.

Club manager Barry Tassler is promising free beer to all opening-night customers. Tedd Jacobs, also a manager, will serve as the club's disc jockey for the festivities. Xenon boasts over $20,000 in music videos and over $50,000 in sound equipment which can produce 30,000 watts of sound.

The doors open at 8 tonight and the party will last until 2 a.m.

Controversy has surrounded the club's opening from the beginning. Tassler received criticism from the community for his renovations of the old David's Building. Former Moscow Police Chief Dave Cameron said that Tassler lied on his first application for a beer license and that Tassler had little regard for the law. Tassler claimed police and community harassment.

Lt. Dan Weaver of the Moscow Police Department said it will be "business as usual" for officers on patrol. "We will have a full crew working, the same as we would on any Friday night," he said. "It won't be anything over or less than we would normally do."

Weaver said that officers will be ticketing illegally parked cars downtown. People who violate the "no parking from 2 a.m. to 7 a.m." rule will be risking a ticket. Cars parked in front of fire hydrants run the risk of being towed and impounded.

The club itself also runs the risk of being impounded.

Xenon is still scheduled to go on the Latah County sheriff's auction block Feb. 13. In January, Second District Court Judge John Bengston ordered a summary judgment against Xenon for more than $50,000 that is owed to Hilliard Heating and Plumbing and Rima Building Supply.

Tassler and his father Benjamin Tassler went to court this week to get the judgment set aside. Barry Tassler claims that he owes money to both businesses, but not $50,000. He says he owes them each about $9,000 and that he has offered to pay them, but to no avail.

The Tasslers also claim their attorney, Boise lawyer Bill Little, did not inform them of the court action. Tassler said in an earlier interview that he was considering filing a malpractice suit against Little.

Ron Landeck, the Moscow attorney who represents Rima and Hilliard, was scheduled to call Little as a witness in the hearing. However, Little was unable to appear in court Wednesday.

A decision in the Tasslers' motion to set the verdict aside is still pending. The hearing is scheduled to resume Monday.

If Bengston does not set aside his earlier ruling, Xenon could be sold to pay the debts before the club celebrates its one week in business.

Jacobs refused to comment on Xenon's latest round of court battles. "I don't know anything about that stuff," he said.

Barry Tassler could not be reached for comment.

No charges reported for weekend charity scuffle

By KELLY TYNON

No charges have been filed yet for the Friday night fight between Vandal football players and Moscow resident Andre Fields. The incident took place at the Moose Lodge during a benefit for two high school students suffering from cancer.

"We're still interviewing witnesses and still investigating all the evidence out there," Mark Moorner, city prosecutor, said. "There were a lot of people there, with a lot of different viewpoints."

Moorner said he hopes to be done by the end of the week so he can start reviewing the evidence next week. If misdemeanor charges result, Moorner will be handling the case. The case will be turned over to County Prosecutor Craig Mosman if felony charges are filed.

Fields has been advised by his lawyer to not comment on the incident. Fields, who is black, said in an earlier interview that the fight was racially motivated because he was dancing with a white girl.

"We don't have any evidence to support that," said Lt. Dan Weaver of the Moscow Police Department. "We're still trying to sort through everything."

■ A free public lecture on recent events in Latvia will be given at 1:30 this afternoon in room 104 of the Janssen Engineering Building.

Cougar memories reduced to ashes

By BRANDY CORGATELLI
Staff Writer

The fire which scorched six businesses in downtown Pullman last Sunday evening, leaving a black skeleton of bricks and charred wood, has finally died down enough to allow fire investigators to enter the Bloomsfield Building.

Investigators hope to determine the cause of the fire before demolition of the building. Demolition is scheduled to begin today and should be finished late Saturday.

Investigators suspect that the fire originated in the basement apartment area of the building, according to a statement released by Pullman Fire Capt. Richard Drago.

The Pullman fire department would not comment on the cause of the blaze.

Over 20 firefighters fought the blaze for more than five hours Sunday evening before bringing it under control.

The fire continued to smolder, with several hot spots making it impossible for a fire crew to enter the building safely until Wednesday morning, according to the fire department release.

The century-old Bloomsfield Building housed six small businesses. The building, located on the corner of Grand Avenue and Olsen Street, made up part of the historic western border of downtown Pullman.

The building suffered such extensive damage from the fire that the owner, Ted Beasley, has no choice but to have it torn down.

Because this was the building that Beasley, owner of Beasley Realty, had owned the longest, it was a personal favorite.

"It had character, history," he said.

For students, the most popular of the destroyed businesses was the Cougar Cafe. The cafe was known as the "legendary Cougar Cafe" as far away as Seattle, according to Carol Linehan, who co-owns the cafe with her husband, Terry.

Washington State University students weren't the only ones who enjoyed the food and the atmosphere of the famous cafe.

"We took in a lot of checks from Moscow," Linehan said.

According to Linehan, she and her husband would like to re-open the cafe with the same name and the same food. However, they feel part of the nostalgia of the cafe was lost with the building.

"It (the last week) has been a state of shock for everybody," Linehan said. "It leaves us with a lot of questions. What happens tomorrow? Should we stay (in Pullman) or should we go? What happens to the ground the cafe was on?"

ACLU panel discusses civil liberties

By DEBBIE SAGE
Staff Writer

What happens when a person gets charged with a misdemeanor offense? About 100 students found out at an American Civil Liberties Union discussion held at the university Tuesday.

The presentation was hosted by Liz Merrill, president of the university chapter of the ACLU, and by Monique Willard, professor at the UI School of Law.

The panelists, which included Bill Hamlett of the second district court of Idaho, Lt. Cam Hershaw of the Latah County sheriff's department and Moscow attorney Jim Siebe, each gave a short presentation on the judicial system from their point of view.

According to the panelists, a misdemeanor offense is a small crime that can result in a fine and no more than one year in jail. Misdemeanor offenses include reckless driving, disturbing the peace, minor assaults and any alcohol-related offenses.

When do the police have a right to stop you? According to Hershaw, police are protected by the law and can stop you any time they have "reasonable suspicion of criminal activity." For example, someone entering a store late at night with a shotgun would be an example of "reasonable suspicion." The police officer must have probable cause and cannot stop you while walking down the street.

Do you have to give your name if an officer asks you? All members of the panel generally agreed that if asked, it is stupid not to. Siebe told the audience that even if you find it offensive to give the police your name, it is "more offensive to be arrested. Think in terms of consequences when reacting to the legal system."

When can you be searched? According to a case cited by Hershaw, an officer must have reasonable suspicion to search a suspect. If an officer uses the reason of feeling unsafe to search you, that officer cannot use anything other than weapons as evidence against you, he said.

However, the interior and glovebox of your car is fair game if you are pulled over. According to Hamlett's example, the exception would be things like locked briefcases, which require a warrant to be searched.

When can you be taken to the station? Hamlett said that most arrests are "attitude busts" and that "most people appear in my court because they have poor interpersonal skills."

The panelists agreed common sense is the key in not being arrested. Police are the most powerful law enforcement group in the respect that they can take away your freedom. Unless you are arrested or are under court order you cannot be forced to go to a police station.

In Idaho, the police officer decides whether or not to arrest on a misdemeanor charge. If you are stopped and receive a citation, Hamlett advises you take the ticket happily because the officer is giving you a break by not arresting you.

If you are arrested for driving under the influence, you have no legal right to refuse a breath test. The consequence of not taking one is a separate charge from the DUI. Even if you are found innocent of driving under the influence, you still lose your license for six months.

The panel agreed that not getting arrested in the first place is the best thing to do. The police have the right to arrest you for any misdemeanor offense. When you are stopped treat the officer as you would like to be treated.

The last piece of advice the panel gave was to look out for your own rights, since no one else will.

ASUI nixes tuition plan

By BRANDY CORGATELLI
Staff Writer

ASUI senators decided they like the idea of a pre-paid tuition program for future university students, but not this year.

The senate voted Wednesday night against giving support from the university for the pre-paid tuition plan, if it is introduced in the state Legislature this year. The measure has the backing of Idaho State Treasurer Lydia Justice Edwards. Edwards was in Moscow Wednesday to rally support for the plan.

The senate's action means that the lobbyist for the university will lobby against the bill if it is considered during this legislative session.

"The 1-percent tax initiative could cause significant jumps in fees," Sen. Richard Rock said.

If the 1 percent initiative passes, Edwards' current plan could not earn enough interest to compensate for the higher fees, according to Rock.

The senate resolution says the University of Idaho supports the legislation in the future, but not until the 1-percent initiative has been decided upon.

"There is probably not anyone opposed to the idea of pre-paid tuition," according to Sen. Derrick Brown.

"I think we should wait a year to make the details of the bill a lot stronger," he said.

The few voices in favor of supporting the bill this year could not convince the majority.

"Other Idaho schools have supported this for over two years," Sen. Charles D'Alessio said. "The plan is not just supported by other schools, but by other states as well. Over 30 states have some form of pre-paid tuition plan."

D'Alessio said that if they wait until next year, there is no guarantee the bill will pass then, either.

Brown emphasized that the sponsors of the bill in the state Legislature actually wanted to wait a year as well.

"Their original intention was to hold the bill back a year. It was not until Lydia Justice Edwards got a lot of support from other students that she decided to try it this year," he said.

In other senate business, Senate Vice-President Brad Moeller said he has been working on getting the Student Union Building accessible to the handicapped.

"To be accessible, every student should be able to get into every room in the SUB and they can't," he said.

Sen. Daniel Whiting said he is looking into the fees that students have to pay for many engineering and art classes.

"Students pay a $10 fee and get nothing for it," Whiting said.

Brown is negotiating with the administration to change the procedure for dropping classes, which he says is "a little bit cumbersome."

Kempthorne tosses hat into ring

By STEVE CORDA
Staff Writer

Dirk Kempthorne announced his candidacy for the U.S. Senate Tuesday morning at the University Inn.

Kempthorne, who is mayor of Boise, was considered the frontrunner in published polls for the Republican Party nomination before he had declared his candidacy.

He is one of three Republicans vying to become Idaho's junior senator. The other two candidates are also Boise men, stockbroker Milton Erhart and Idaho State Senator Rod Beck.

Kempthorne addressed a poolside audience with his common-sense, forward-looking platform.

He said that he was sick of a Congress that gave raises to itself "quietly in the night." He wanted a Congress that would hold itself accountable to future generations and be more responsible to present Americans.

He wants legislation to protect America's children, whom he calls the only group without "an army of lobbyists" in Washington, D.C.

Kempthorne also stressed the importance of stopping pollution and passing on a world of clean air and water to America's children.

Dirk Kempthorne

His plan to help the economy includes a desire to fight deficit spending. Other measures he plans to support are a tax break on savings and penalty-free individual retirement account withdrawals towards the purchase of a home. He said he feels these are some steps which will help stimulate the economy.

The Democratic hopefuls for the Senate include Matt Schaeffer and U.S. Rep. Richard Stallinga. Schaeffer is the only candidate so far who has come out as definitively pro-choice.

Current senator Steve Symms is retiring after 12 years in the U.S. Senate. He is a Republican who beat Democrat Frank Church in 1980.

Symms' latest contribution to the Senate was a health care reform proposal. The proposal will include a tax credit refunded to a health insurance policy holder. The tax savings could then be invested into an individual medical account. These investments would be free of tax, as would any money taken from these accounts to pay for deductibles, co-payments, and incidental medical costs.

Educating prisoners: good in theory, short on cash

Forcing prisoners to get an education. Not a bad idea.

The wardens of the Idaho prison system want all inmates to receive their high school diploma or equivalent before they are released from prison. Some states already have this rule, but others might want to think twice before implementing it.

The idea sounds good in theory. Lack of education is why many people end up in prison in the first place. Men and women who commit crimes often know of no other life. Not to condone a criminal, but it's pretty hard to form morals and values without some sort of education. Reading and writing alone can help somebody make a critical decision before becoming a criminal.

That's the good part, but where will the money come from to help somebody earn a diploma? Take the state of California, for example. There are over 100,000 prisoners locked away in 21 institutions. Idaho has just 2,087 prisoners. California also has a 100-percent rate of overcrowding and a recidivism rate of 63.6 percent. Idaho's rate of recidivism is about 20 percent.

Let's say one textbook is bought for each California inmate at $30 each. That's $3 million dollars. In Idaho that would cost you only $62,610. The difference is clear.

It's a shame because a state like California is where the best education system is needed. With a recidivism rate as high as California's, it would make sense. Idaho doesn't need to require a diploma because their recidivism rate is 43 percent lower. You're not dealing with the same type of criminal in Idaho as in California. Idaho inmates are in for crimes such as robbery, burglary and tax evasion. California offers more interesting criminals like murderers, rapists and drug lords.

Idaho doesn't need to require diplomas because their problems don't warrant it. Besides, forcing somebody to get an education who doesn't want one is pointless. He or she is taking space of somebody who really wants to learn.

Some prisoners might rather work. In California for every day a prisoner works, that person gets a day off sentencing. In Idaho the push is towards books. At the Idaho Maximum Security Prison near Boise they don't offer correspondence courses for inmates. Every six months, your behavior is put up for review, and if it's been good, you'll be moved to a lower security institution where those courses are offered.

In Washington they do offer correspondence courses at the maximum security institution in Walla Walla. Idaho should consider this, but not require it. Olivia West, executive director for commissions and pardons, put it best when she said that requiring diplomas shouldn't be a hard and fast rule.

The old saying goes: "You can lead a horse to water, but you can't make it drink."

Americans must respond to Japanese criticism

DENNIS
SASSE

Japanese political and business leaders believe that the American worker is lazy, lacks a work ethic and most likely can't read. Well, no need to beat a dead horse. We have all heard it before. Besides, the Japanese leaders apologized, didn't they? To paraphrase what they really meant, "the U.S. national character is slack." I agree.

We have become a land of whimpering, sniveling, lazy, uneducated couch potatoes who accept no less than instant gratification. Most of us live in a sandpsychic, fairy-tale land where everything gets done and what doesn't just doesn't matter. Unfortunately, there is no such utopian society. To be the best involves a certain amount of effort. The people of our nation expect to be the best. That is good. People are not willing to work to be the best. That is bad.

Many of us live here in college to better ourselves. I know that was a blanket statement; as a general rule I'll stand by it.

What were the qualities that made the United States great? We live in a country that in less than 200 years went from being a ragtag confederation bucking foreign rule to becoming the most powerful military and economic force on the planet. What was it about the past generations of

Love and lust in the Democratic Party

Behind every great man is a great woman; behind her is his wife.

America is a country that loves its traditions, and Democrats have traditionally been the studs of American politics.

Gary Hart had Donna Rice tucked away where Mrs. Hart wouldn't find her, but the Miami Herald would. Even "Aw Shucks" President Carter admitted to an active fantasy life and frequent cold showers, but America seemed to bounce back all right.

That's not even mentioning the pinnacle of the Democratic male libido, John Fitzgerald Kennedy. JFK probably got more tail in high school than Nixon, Ford, Reagan and Bush have gotten in their combined lifetimes. (Reagan may be the ringer in that bunch, but don't bet on it.) But that doesn't make Democrats better than Republicans. Lots of other things do. The point is that come election year, America keeps its eyes peeled to find out what Democratic presidential hopeful will replace Teddy, the baby of the Kennedys, as the tabloids' pants-down, illicitly-fluid-exchange poster boy.

Enter Gov. Bill Clinton stage right. Who cares that he looks like what might have happened if JFK had a child by Phil Donahue, and they sent the kid to William Shatner's barber; he was America's youngest governor and he's a Democratic presidential hopeful. He must be the one.

Enter Jennifer Flowers, wholesome cabaret singer with a broken heart and a story to tell, stage left. If the name doesn't ring a bell, she's the teary-eyed, bleached blonde who's "admitted" to her affair with Governor Clinton in Star magazine and at nationally televised press conferences.

She claims that she's been "protecting" Governor Clinton for the last two years. She says the only reason she's come forward is because she was paid to tell her story. CNN reported that she was paid by an Arkansas Republican.

So according to Jennifer Flowers, she was paid to tell about sleeping with Bill Clinton. In other words she is being paid for having sex with Bill Clinton. I don't know the word for that, let's see if Webster does. Webster's Dictionary definition, page 473: "one who engages in promiscuous sexual activity for pay"—in other words, a prostitute.

If she's not a prostitute she's at least taking a few liberties with the seventh, the ninth and the 10th Commandments.

Now let's look beyond the sketchy ethics of a Republican Party that will pay a Jennifer Flowers to use Star magazine as a

Rombach responds to Gatewood

Racist actions should not be tolerated

Editor:
I have finally removed myself from my easy chair to respond to an issue that is relevant to our community, lives and responsibilities as human beings: racism. In particular I am speaking of the incident involving two black men and several UI football players at a benefit dance. I'm trying to swallow the lump in my throat and calm the snakes in my stomach now that I see that this issue is being swept under a rug. I guess that I had forgotten that only 50 miles north from here an Aryan Nation compound thrives.

If this could be a racist issue, why is it not being dealt with in this manner? It is due to the fact that racism does exist here, that this is a racist issue, and once again, we are attempting to ignore it. Why wasn't Andre Fields picture taken at the police station at the time that Dave Churchill's was? Why were the football players who pushed Andre's head open left at the dance without being taken to the station to be questioned? Why did the football players take Andre out the back door into the alley? Why did the arresting officer, James Kowitz, respond by saying, "You have two options: One is to come with me and let me put these handcuffs on you, or I can let them keep choking you" when this man was bleeding profusely? Too many inconsistencies exist to ignore the possibility that some persons have made some serious infractions on civil rights and are afraid to deal with the consequences of them.

I'm tired of apathetic people and apathetic responses. Racism must not be tolerated. Let's not let this incident get swept under the rug and forgotten about like dust in the attic.

Editor:
Chris Gatewood is an idiot (you will not see me refer to him as Mr. Gatewood, as other articles edited by himself have). During the past few years Gatewood has shocked this university by showing how a complete ass, whining, egotistical, football deep cut can get his work printed in the paper. I have always refrained from writing a letter because I got more pleasure from sitting around the lunch table with 30 friends and making fun of his idiotic and second-grade-level articles.

Now to the point. In Tuesday's (although the paper was labeled Friday on the front page) article "what's wrong with Idaho"

Gatewood had to run off at the mouth on why students who want the glory days of Kermit Davis back are "idiots." (It's enjoyable always having the students' newspaper editor refer to UI students as idiots, kids, children and immature throughout the year, isn't it?)

Whoever made the sign "Bring back Kermit" spoke the hearts of nearly every Vandal fan who has been to games in the last three or four years and seen the difference in coaching styles.

Not only has Larry Rombach failed to win key games with the most explosive and potentially dominating talent in the conference (the reason all the coaches picked Idaho No.1 in the presen-son), but he continues to scream and carry on like a child during the games. Kermit not only brought winning to this campus, but he had a class and style second to none.

Respect? Obviously Larry's fans don't respect him, but wait, maybe his players do. That's why there's been a half-dozen suspensions already this year; no one listens to Larry.

However, Gatewood views it differently. According to our brilliant editor, Larry has a tougher schedule than Kermit had. Kermit got by on an easy schedule. Well, let's take a look.

Kermit led our Vandals into action against the No.1-ranked returning national champion

Kansas Jayhawks, Big Eight powerhouse Nebraska Cornhuskers (we beat them two straight years) and Washington State Cougars (we beat them two straight on ESPN). On national television (CBS) Kermit and Vandals stacked up against Louisville (with Fabian Spencer) and UNLV with Stacey Augmon, David Butler and Anderson Hunt. The University of Idaho was on NATIONAL TELEVISION (ESPN, CBS) five times in one year under Kermit. You're right Gate, Kermit had a schedule. And Gatewood compares these teams to the powerhouse Larry forum for questioning the character of a presidential hopeful. Let's look beyond that into the effects of Flowers on the Clinton campaign. It's turned into a Clarence Thomas syndrome. These allegations shouldn't hurt Clinton's campaign; nor should they help it. I'm afraid that it's turning into a national Clinton-versus-Flowers debate. The people who want to support Clinton against these accusations are doing it by supporting his campaign. They are doing it at the expense of the issues surrounding the campaign debates.

Anyway, since when do we let a prostitute and Star magazine have anything to do with who want to elect president?

The only one who's come out of this controversy looking at all qualified to be president is the Governor's wife, Hillary Clinton.

It's about time the great women stepped into the spotlight.

Americans who allowed this? They were our ancestors so it can not be solely genetic.

Can it be that in days gone by, people got involved, focused on a problem, planned out a strategy and then went to work at achieving a goal? The trend today is to ignore a problem and hope that it goes away. Could the Americans of the past have learned how to read and write well enough to be slightly more than functionally illiterate?

It is sad to me that a song about teenage apathy has propelled Nirvana to the top of the album charts. Can't the kids who want their MTV understand they are being ridiculed by the band they made No.1?

The national character has been in a freefall for almost two or three decades now. It started with the onslaught of the "me" generation. The focus became "I need."

Last year Time magazine had a cover story about what they called "busybodies and crybabies." There are no more perfect words to describe the plight of our culture.

The crybabies are the world's victims. The world doesn't give them a chance. Everyone is against them. Mostly, they complain and say, "It's not my fault." These are the type of people who don't study and then blame poor grades on the instructor. Either the instructor did not like them, the test was too hard or it was graded harshly. There is no end to their excuses. Frankly, I am sick of it.

The crybabies are the same people who blame Japan, West Germany or any country which has hustled and become successful for our social and economic decline.

Crybabies, listen to me: We cause our own problems! Stop crying and whimpering and get to work. The Japanese have put resources into research and production. They have been taking care of business. If you are disturbed by the truth, so be it. The Japanese have been buying land and investing in research; meanwhile, Americans have been buying junk bonds and South American illegal exports a few grams at a time.

The busybodies are the preachers of this world. Anyone who claims to know what is best for you is most likely a busybody. They are here to save us from ourselves. They protect us from the hard choices. People that protest beer-chugging contests or people who know that abortion is wrong for everyone, the ones who believe that school boards need to "protect" children from classic works by authors like Mark Twain, William Shakespeare or J.D. Salinger, and that are sure that prayer will cure any woe are obviously busybodies.

Crybabies, quit blaming the world for your failures and take some responsibility for your own actions. Busybodies, do those who think freely a favor—just leave the rest of us alone.

President Zinser and Gary Hunter please listen (and not to Gatewood). This school needs its SPIRIT back. We need class. We need WINNING. Remember when we shoved, packed and loaded the Kibbie Dome with 10,000 maniacs for a BASKETBALL game with Boise State? That was unheard of, but we made it happen because we were proud as hell to be Vandals and we LOVED going to games. Last game, we barely had 2,000 fans. Let's get rolling again folks. Larry has to go.

So does Gatewood.

Idaho sweeps Lumberjacks, Southern Utah

Ricks keys win with 28 points

By LOREN ROBERTS
Staff Writer

The run-and-gun Thunderbirds of Southern Utah ran into a defensive wall Tuesday night via the Idaho Vandals.

The Thunderbirds (15-6) had been averaging 93 points per game, but Idaho turned up its defense in holding Southern Utah to a season low, and won 91-70 in a non-conference match-up.

The Thunderbirds were forced into committing 11 first-half turnovers, and 25 for the game.

"We didn't play well tonight," Head Coach Neil Roberts said. "I was disappointed with both our defensive and offensive outputs in tonight's game."

The two teams played basket-for-basket for the first five minutes and were deadlocked at 10-10. The Vandals (4-4 in conference, 11-10 overall) then exploded on a 22-7 run over the next six minutes, led by Frank Waters' six points.

"Frank has just been a tremendous boost for us off the bench," reserve guard Scott Matthews said. "He's not only gotten better on catching the lob passes inside, but also the ones being tossed in on the bounce."

After Idaho took a 32-17 lead 11 minutes into the game, it was Orlando Lightfoot's turn to scorch the Thunderbirds. Lightfoot scored 10 points in eight minutes to give the Vandals a 46-32 halftime lead. He finished the half with 15 points and seven rebounds.

"I thought they shot the ball really well in the first half by getting it to the two guys that can score," Roberts said. "They only have a couple of guys that can shoot like that and they were sure to get the ball in their hands."

Also contributing to Idaho 60 percent first-half field goal shooting was guard Marvin Ricks, who shot 5-for-8 and had 11 points. Ricks finished the game with a

Nevada next for Vandals

By CHRIS GATEWOOD
Editor

Talk about connecting on all cylinders.

The last two games the Vandals have scored over 90 points in wins. Last night the victims were the Northern Arizona Lumberjacks, who fell to the Vandals 96-84, before 3,000 fans at the Kibbie Dome.

The Vandals improve to 12-10, 5-4 in the Big Sky Conference and have won three straight games. NAU dropped to 7-12, 3-7 in the BSC. The Vandals now will entertain the first place Nevada Wolfpack Saturday in the Dome.

Maybe it was the fact that the Lumberjacks lost the night before, 81-64, to Eastern Washington and were a little tired. Maybe it was just the fact that NAU had just nine players suited up for the game.

"We just didn't have the numbers to stay with this team," said NAU coach Harold Merritt. "With seven or eight guys we just get tired. We are one or two players away from being a very good team."

NAU just couldn't stay with the Vandals' staggering first-half performance. They shot 61.8 percent from the field in the first half and scored 50 points.

As usual, Orlando Lightfoot was the spark, pumping 17 first-half points on 8-of-12 shooting. Lightfoot finished the game with 35 points, scoring from just about everywhere. He popped short jumpers all around the key, connected on two 3-pointers and made the rest on easy lay-ups.

"Lightfoot is just unbelievable," Merritt said. "We don't have anyone that can defend that. He scores from everywhere and from all kinds of weird angles. Idaho will be lucky to keep him."

The Vandals also got 17 points from Andre Whitney, who is averaging only about 7.0 points per game.

"Andre is becoming a much

Recruits may be answer to Vandal comeback

After a disappointing 6-5 record during the 1991 campaign, the Idaho Vandal football program had to look for answers and go back to the drawing board.

What better way to stop the bleeding than hitting the highway to recruit players, and fill necessary needs.

Last season's problems didn't all amount from a lack of players on the team, but rather a lack of players that were healthy enough to suit up for the Vandals.

With promising hopes prior to the season, the Vandals saw their hopes of a successful campaign crumble after several devastating injuries.

A total of seven starters missed at least one game for the Vandals during the season. Idaho also suffered from discontented players, as eight Vandals that played during spring ball quit by the end of the season.

What better way to fill those holes than attack the recruiting scene and find players as good, if not better, than the players that left the team.

The Vandals only lost seven starters at the end of last season, but building depth, especially on the interior lines, is a major concern.

The Idaho coaching staff worked long and hard in the off-season to find the talent to return the Vandals back to contention in the Big Sky.

As a result, the Vandals have signed 26 players to national letters of intent. Those recruits include 18 high school, seven junior college transfers, and one Division I transfer.

After digging deep into the depth chart following numerous losses in the defensive backfield, recruiting that position had to be one of Vandal Head Coach John

Long Beach State transfer Darrick Davis may fill an immediate void at defensive back, while junior college transfers Rodney Johnson (Glendale JC) and Cedrick West (Yuba JC) will fight for playing time. The Vandals signed four other freshman defensive backs to bring the total to seven.

Defense backs won't be the only major need for the Vandals next season. Idaho will also look to the linebacker position for support in next year's class.

After losing starting linebackers Robert Monk and Damon Taggart to graduation, the Vandals filled the void by signing five new players at that position. Tom Gray from Santa Monica JC was the only junior college player to sign with the Vandals, along with four freshmen.

Idaho returns all four starters on the defensive line, which resulted in the Vandals only signing four players at that position.

Eric Wiker was the only senior lost on the offensive line, but Idaho signed five players to shore up a lack of depth. All of those players will come in as freshmen next season.

The key at skilled-position recruiting was wide receiver, as the Vandals signed four players, including JC transfer Dimitri Baptist (Mt. San Antonio JC).

Needs weren't as great at other positions, as the Vandals signed one quarterback, one tight end and no running backs.

John L. Smith apparently rates this class as a B minus, which may be one of the better classes in recent years.

Of course, these players are just on paper for now, and time will only tell if they pan out for the Vandals next season.

And for Vandal fans, they hope that things can only get better before they get worse.

Vandals continue road success with victory

By SEV HONESS
Staff Writer

Thursday the women's hoop team beat the Northern Arizona University Lumberjacks 58-53 in an unexpected nail-biter.

"We played to the level of the competition," Head Coach Laurie Turner said. "We looked a little flat."

The Vandals started off strong behind Kelly Moeller's five consecutive points, but Moeller was whistled for two quick fouls and benched.

The usually active Krista Smith only put up two shots in the first period and headed into the locker room with an uncharacteristic two points. Smith was also benched early with two fouls.

Then Idaho's offense bogged down and shot a self-destructive 27 percent for the first half.

"It was a defensive game," center Kelly Moeller said.

Defense allowed Idaho to end the first half with a 2-point lead, 22-20.

The low shooting percentage by the starters combined with the fatiguing high altitude of Flagstaff, Ariz., forced Turner to play the bench in the early going.

"We struggled with our two other starters," Turner said. "We got a little tired—this is a tough place to play."

Starters Brenda Kushithau and Jennifer Clary managed to hit only 1-of-14 from the field for the contest.

Offensive output was low, but Moeller and Smith both tallied double-digits with 17 and 12 points respectively. Kortnie Edwards came off the bench and joined Smith and Moeller in double-digits with 10 points.

"Edwards did a good job coming off the bench," Turner said.

Guard Andi McCarthy shot 3-of-4 from the field and ended with six points. McCarthy hasn't established herself as a scorer, and Turner felt that McCarthy recorded her best effort of the season.

Turner was disappointed with the offensive board production, but was pleased with the defensive effort that forced 25 turnovers.

"Offensively we needed to do a better job on the offensive boards," Turner said. "We only had nine."

Idaho has been below double-digits in only two other contests, and Turner felt that it disrupted the entire offensive attack.

Idaho gave themselves a 13-point cushion early in the second half, but with 1:35 remaining NAU closed the gap to eight and later to seven.

Kushithau fouled a Lumberjack in the process of throwing up a 3-pointer that banked off the glass and counted. After making the foul shot Idaho's lead was cut to 3 with 24 seconds remaining.

Clary pushed the ball up the court and was the recipient of an NAU desperation foul. Clary stepped to the line and nailed both to preserve the win.

"Clary made both free throws with 11 seconds left," Turner said. "So that led it."

In the past the Vandals have broken down mentally when their shots didn't go in early. Idaho showed some much-needed team maturity by pulling out the win.

"We showed a lot of heart," Moeller said. "We didn't get down when we weren't making our shots."

Idaho has won twice in a row after a three-game losing streak. Idaho plays the University of Nevada Saturday night in Reno.

■ TENNIS—The UI men's and women's tennis teams return to action today in the Kibbie Dome in the continuation of the Martin Surfacing Indoor Tournament.

Three of four Vandal men were victorious yesterday over Montana State. They included No. 4 Niren Lall, No. 5 Chris Kramer and No. 6 Brian Hart.

Play was suspended for the remaining seeds because of the basketball game. Idaho plays rival Boise State at 1 p.m. today and will make up the remaining MSU matches later in the tournament.

■ SOCCER—The UI club soccer team will be having a spring organizational meeting in the Vandal Cafe Saturday at 10 a.m. All those seriously interested in playing both this spring and/or next fall should attend. Any questions contact Mike Bly at 885-7213.

■ TRACK—The Idaho track teams divide their forces this weekend, sending both men and women north and four men to the mid-East.

The four members of the men's team travel to Lincoln, Neb., for the highly competitive and prestigious Husker Invitational. An assortment of other men and women head north to Cheney, Wash., for the Eastern Washington Open.

Eversley Linley, Calvin Harris, Steve Lewis and Darrick Davis will showcase their talents among athletes from 50 to 80 schools. The Husker is an exclusive meet that is comprised of the best teams in the nation.

■ ADMISSION—All full-time students need valid student ID for entry to athletic events. Fee receipts and driver's licenses will not be accepted starting Feb. 25.

team-high 28 points on 9-for-15 shooting from the field and 8-for-8 from the line.

"Coach told me to come out and relax," Ricks said. "I was just being patient and keeping my head in the game."

In the second half, both teams came out ice-cold by missing their first four shots. It took a 3-pointer by Ricks at the 17:13 mark to snap the slump. As Idaho showed signs of cooling down, Thunderbird forward Davor Marcelic took the game into his own hands. Marcelic scored Southern Utah's first seven points and led all scorers with 30 for the game.

"Marcelic played an excellent game," Idaho Head Coach Larry Eustachy said. "I looked at his point total and said, 'is that all?' I really thought he had scored more."

Southern Utah put together a 22-15 run over the next eight minutes to cut the lead to nine, at 71-62 with 5:13 to play.

"Towards the end of the game they (Idaho) let us get back into it with some turnovers," Roberts said. "It'll be interesting to see how we do against them down at our place in a month."

The Vandals weren't about to let the game slip out of their hands as they put together a run-and-gun 18-9 flurry to finish up the game. In that span, Idaho converted 14-of-18 free throws to lock up the win.

"That was the best we've played this year and the best team we've beaten," Eustachy said. "We're at a point where we can't fall backwards and we need to keep moving forward. This team is really coming together. The players feel it and the coaches do too."

Lightfoot ended the night with 24 points and 11 rebounds. Also playing a role in the win was Matthews with seven points, Ricky Wilson with nine and Waters with eight. Although center Deon Watson was held to five points, he played excellent defense.

"Deon wasn't as involved in the offense tonight, but he did his part at the defensive end," Eustachy said. "He played his part in this win."

Scott Matthews received praise from Eustachy as well for his performance off the bench.

"Scott had one turnover in 23 minutes of play," Eustachy said. "He played a near-perfect game for us tonight."

► NAU from page 8

better player," Vandal Head Coach Larry Eustachy said. "I'm glad to see he stepped up and tried to shoot some threes."

"I'm feeling a lot more comfortable in the offense," Whitney said. "I think the whole team is starting to adjust to their roles. It took us a very long time."

Still, as well as Idaho played in the first half, NAU was almost as good. The Lumberjacks connected on 56.7 percent of their shots and stayed in the game with a lot of hustle and determination. The Vandals led just 50-44 at the half. NAU outrebounded the Vandals 20-14 in the first half and 51-37 for the game. The Lumberjacks also got a whopping 25 offensive rebounds.

"We just got outworked," Lightfoot said. "They came out with a lot more determination than we did."

"I'm glad he said we got outworked," Eustachy said. "I asked five guys in the locker room if that would be good enough to beat Nevada and they all said no. If they truly believe that, we are coming a long way as team."

The Vandals started the second half with an 11-4 run to go up 61-48. Lightfoot hit three straight lay-ups, Whitney got a steal and lay-up, and Marvin Ricks put on the exclamation point with a dunk.

"When's the last time an Idaho guard got a dunk?" asked a laughing Eustachy.

Idaho would lead by as much 17 points and the Lumberjacks never got closer than 10 the rest of the way. The key factor in the run was full-court press that left NAU with their tongues wagging. Guard Steve Williams was forced into four turnovers during the run and had nine for the game.

Still, the Vandals know this performance will not be good enough to beat the Wolfpack, who are 7-1 in the BSC. Idaho had a few mental lapses that could cost them on Saturday.

"I keep telling the guys over and over not to worry about the other team," Eustachy said. "It's a battle with ourselves and our own concentration. We need to stay focused the entire game."

NAU will travel to Boise Saturday to face the Broncos, who lost another BSC game to Nevada, 78-74. The Broncos are now 2-7 in the conference and headed nowhere.

College-age women at risk for heart disease

By MARY SCHWANTES
Registered Dietician, Student Health Service

Do you believe women at the university have less of a risk of developing heart disease than men? If you answered yes, you are wrong. Surprisingly, heart disease is the No.1 killer of women in America. When it comes to matters of the heart, men and women may be closer than you'd think. College-age women are not too young to be willing to reduce their risk factors, which include:

• Smoking. A smoker's risk of heart attack is more than twice that of a nonsmoker, according to the American Heart Association. A smoker who has a heart attack is more likely to die from it than a nonsmoker. See the Student Health Center for help.

• High cholesterol. Your risk of heart disease increases as blood cholesterol levels increase.

The AHA classifies people with blood cholesterol concentrations above 240 mg/dl at double the risk of heart disease. More than 27 percent of the U.S. population has blood cholesterol levels high enough to be at risk for heart disease. During the month of February the SHC is offering a special cholesterol testing for $5. We will accept walk-in appointments between 8:30 a.m. and 1 p.m.

• High blood pressure. By increasing the heart's workload, high blood pressure causes the heart to enlarge and weaken. If not detected, this silent killer can lead to a stroke, heart attack, kidney failure and congestive heart failure. More than half of all women over 55 and two-thirds of all women over 65 have high blood pressure. Blood pressure checks are free on the health monitor machine at the SHC.

The real message to women who are serious about prevention is that they must be willing to reduce risk factors for heart disease.

Navy olympics begin today

By JEANNETTE STRAUCH
Staff Writer

The games of the Northwest Navy Schools annual competition will officially get underway this afternoon.

The athletic events will be held at UI and Washington State University facilities.

The games begin with a basketball tournament in the Memorial Gym at 4 p.m. and swim meet tonight in the UI swim center at 5 p.m. The weekend's competition will come to a close Saturday at 2:30 p.m. An awards banquet will be held at 6:30 Saturday evening in the Cougar Union Building at WSU. The banquet will honor all the teams that participated and release news of the final results of all competitions.

Navy ROTC schools participating in the events include the universities of Idaho, Washington and Utah, and Oregon State University. According to Edwin L. Scoggin, an ROTC student, over 300 participants are expected for the event.

Capt. John S. Boyd, program director for the chief of naval education and training, will be speaking at the awards banquet

Saturday night.

All events are open for public viewing with the exception of the pistol-and-rifle competition.

Saturday's events begin with a drill competition at 7 a.m. The physical-fitness competitions, consisting of a 3-mile run, sit-ups and pull-ups soon follow. The men's competition starts at 7:30 a.m. at the UI NROTC Building. The women's begins at 10:30 a.m. at the same location.

A basketball tournament will finish Saturday morning with the last two games scheduled for 8 p.m. and 11 p.m.

The WSU Field House will host a color guard competition Friday night at 7:30, as well as a drum and bugle corps competition Saturday morning at 11:30.

According to Anthony Icayan, OSU has been the strongest school at the event for the last few years. However, the UI-WSU NROTC teams are the defending champions for basketball. UI student Kenneth Smith is the defending individual rifle champion.

The Omaha Magic Theatre performed Body Lark while here at the NWDC.

Curtain falls on NWDC Saturday

By SAMANTHA GROOM
Staff Writer

The curtain will come down on the Northwest Drama Conference this weekend.

The conference is a combination of competitions, workshops and performances over a five-day period, covering the areas of acting, design and production.

This year the conference's location is alternating between UI and WSU, with over 500 students representing schools in Alaska, Idaho, Montana, Oregon, Washington and Wyoming.

Highlights of the Northwest Drama Conference include the Theatre Sports Tournament, the announcement of the Irene

Ryan Scholarship winner, and the various evening performances.

The Theatre Sports Tournament is an improvisational competition between drama teams. It's "sort of like Second City," says Bruce Brockman, chair of the theatre arts department.

The teams are given situations, and then act them out. The final Theatre Sports Tournament will be held after the Saturday evening performance at 10:30 p.m. in the SUB Ballroom.

Irene Ryan Scholarship finalists were announced Wednesday. None of the UI students advanced to the finals, however, Brian Boyd did make it to the semi-finals.

The scholarship winner will be announced Saturday after the performance of Arms and the Man.

One of the schools who are performing for the conference will be selected to take their show to the Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts in Washington, D.C. The winning school will be announced Saturday.

Wings, by Arthur Kopit, will be performed by Western Washington University tomorrow at 8 p.m. at the Jones Theatre at WSU.

Arms and the Man, by Bernard Shaw, will be performed by University of Alaska-Anchorage Saturday, Feb. 8, 8 in the UI Hartung Theatre. Tickets for both performances are available at the door for $4.

Get in line early for Genesee's crab feed

Eat, drink and be merry — the money you spend could help save a life.

The Genesee Fire Department is holding its annual crab feed Saturday at the Genesee fire hall. Proceeds from the event will benefit the fire department's rescue squad.

About 30 members of the fire department and 10 volunteers will cook and serve at the event. This year's menu includes crabs, ham, potato salad, cole slaw, beans, beer, soda and coffee.

The fire department orders the crab from Lewiston Seafood, who crabs off of the Washington coast. The crabs come pre-cooked but not cleaned. Feed organizer Bill Crick estimated that it will take the volunteers two to three hours to get the crabs ready for the crowds.

Crick said the department raised about $4,000 at last year's crab feed. He said the money goes a long way for the rural ambulance squad. "As far as the ambulance goes, it enables us to keep updated equipment and to send people training seminars," he said.

Crick said about 1,000 hungry seafood fans descend on Genesee annually for the crab feed. "It turns the town upside down," he said. "Quite a few people come to town for this thing."

Randy Hall, owner of Hall's Corner Bar in Genesee, agreed that the town is overrun for the feed. Hall's bar will feature the music of Nashville recording artist Rocky Rauche on Saturday. Rauche will play from 9 p.m. to midnight. There is no cover charge for the show.

The crab feed will run from 4 p.m. to 8 p.m. But Crick warned that late-comers may be left in the cold. "For the last two years we have run out of food," he said. "You have a better chance of being served, the earlier you are."

Tickets are $10 for adults and $4 for children. Tickets are available at the door or at the Genesee City Hall.

Chasers captures live music

By Jeremy Ferman
Staff Writer

At one end of town tonight, the dance club Xenon will open its doors for the first time. On the other end The University Inn's Chasers Lounge is opening its doors for the first time — with live music.

Friday marks a new era for Chasers, which for the past two years has been playing dance music.

Assistant General Manager Steve MacFarland says the change is "something that the residents of Moscow want. We like to be innovators in the (hotel) industry. Change is a good thing.

It's not something that has been brewing. It is just something that we decided to do."

There's been mixed reaction to the change. "If the live stuff isn't good, Chasers could become another John's Alley," said senior education major Pat Brennan.

"Chasers is high class," said senior Jill Robison, "and the music will be high class as well. They should have no problems."

People expecting to dance at Chasers every weekend are in for a shock. "I don't think that we will lose the core audience that we draw; I think we'll keep those

Butt wiggles improve bowling scores

We went to the bowling alley the other night with some friends, including Danny's brother Mike. By the end of the evening, my friends and I had disowned the boys twice and asked that they be kicked out three times. But we had beaten them not once.

The boys each have their own unique method of bowling. I'm sure if we had gotten points for normality, we would have skunked them. But unfortunately, points were scored by knocking down pins, even if one did so by turning around, bending upside down, and looking through one's legs to roll the ball down the alley.

Danny's brother Mike was the mildest of the three. It was probably because he hadn't been around them long enough for their true obnoxiousness to sink in. But he tried.

You have to understand that Mike is 6 feet, seven inches tall. There is a reason that the usual sports of tall people involve throwing, rather than rolling, a ball. They are just not used to coming as close to the ground as bowling requires.

Mike had the idea and he wasn't even trying to show off. It wasn't his fault that the normal letting-go-of-the-ball height for him is about a foot higher than it is for everyone else.

The bowling alley people probably would have kicked us out just for the dents he must have been making in the floor, except that nobody noticed. We were all paying attention to the outrageous break-dancing type motions he had to go through to maintain his balance after releasing the ball.

Danny had less of a problem with this — he's only 6-foot-two — but more of a problem with where the ball went after he released it.

"Gosh, Danny," I remarked after one particularly unsuccessful throw, "your balls have been spending a lot of time in the gutter lately, haven't they?"

We decided that maybe he was trying too hard, so we thought we'd give him a little help. On his next turn, just as he was about to release the ball, Jake pointed at each of us in turn and we each chirped: "Danny!" "Danny!" "Danny!" He let go of the ball midway through turning to see who had called his name. Needless to say, that one didn't knock over any pins, either.

When his ball came up again, I thought maybe we should try to relax him by giving him something pleasant to think about. So this time, just as he was swinging his arm back, we all said: "Sex!" "Sex!" "Sex!" Sure enough, he rolled a strike.

Now, I have to admit that Mike and Danny were probably not showing off. They were honestly bad at the game. Jake, on the other hand, took the stage every time it was his turn to bowl a frame.

Midway through the game he got tired of beating us, so he put his ball away and used mine, which was the lightest ball I had been able to find. Instead of start-

'Music Man' dances into Moscow

The Moscow Community Theatre is stirring up a little trouble this weekend — big trouble in River City, that is.

Moscow Community Theatre's latest production, The Music Man, opens tonight. Shows will run at 7:30 p.m. tonight and Saturday and at 2 p.m. Sunday.

Over 50 people from Moscow and Pullman have worked in front of and behind the scenes for the production. The cast and crew have worked for five weeks to bring a taste of 1912 to modern-day Moscow.

Karl Thames of Pullman and University of Idaho student Jennifer Macklin star in the show.

Tickets, which are available at the door, are $6 for adults and $5 for children and seniors.

Be-bop Juice jams in Vandal Cafe

For people who like jazz and a be-boppin' good time, catch Be-Bop Juice tonight at the Vandal Cafe in the Student Union Building Ballroom.

Be-Bop Juice, described as the brainchild of Northwest musicians Dave Hageganz and Zac Matthews, is a high-energy jazz quartet performing music firmly rooted in the jazz tradition. The other members that complete the band are Joe Covill and Anthony Taylor.

Matthews, bassist for the group, has played with some of the best — including Clarence "Big" Williams, Sunny Wilkinson and Ethel Ennis.

Hageganz, a tenor saxophonist, also has a few great names under his belt. He has worked with such people as Lew Tabackin, Marvin "Smitty" Smith, Mal Waldron and David Friesen. Hageganz is also a studio musician and has recorded film scores and commercials, and has seven compact discs out for the Arc label.

As a group, the quartet organizes a schedule of clinics, workshops, concerts and lecture recitals to offer a hand to aspiring young musicians, or to promote further interest and appreciation in jazz music for others.

The foursome has a regular show every Thursday night at Rico's in Pullman, but will take time out to come and rip it up in Moscow. Don't miss it tonight at 8 p.m. in the Vandal Cafe. Admission and coffee are free.

ing at those dotted lines, he stood way back behind the scoring table. And instead of taking two or three slow, measured steps, he took eight or 10 of the tiniest, fastest steps he could.

This routine may have been what inspired Danny to give us girls some bowling advice. One of us, in particular, was having some trouble getting all 10 pins over at the same time. She could get the first nine, but that last one just seemed superglued to the floor.

"The trick to getting that last one," Danny informed her wisely, "is just to wiggle your butt as you walk up there."

Our friend raised her eyebrows, but on her next turn gave her hips an exaggerated swing as she stepped up to the line. The throw was perfect.

"She got a strike," I said to Danny. But I don't think he heard. He was grinning.

SIA dance tonight in SUB

By PATTI CROW
Staff Writer

The Students International Association is sponsoring a dance and fashion show tonight that will feature dance, music and dress from around the world.

The free event starts at 7 p.m. in the SUB Ballroom.

"I'm so excited to see this activity," said the association's adviser Gleanne Wray from the International Programs Office. Wray feels that programs like the dance will better acquaint students with diversity.

The program is the first of several activities that the association will be working on this semester. Students in the SIA believe the fashion show and dance will provide the opportunity for people from other countries to share aspects of their own unique culture with others.

"The association was created to promote the intercultural welfare and understanding, friendliness, unity and cooperation among students from different cultures and the community," said SIA President Ahmed Fahsi.

"We want internationalization of the campus and community and aim to (strive for) a better relationship among individuals and groups. We want to make sure that the word 'international' does not refer to 'foreigners' but to all students on the campus," he said.

"We are trying to (get) American students to be involved as much as possible, because they are international and we hope to see more involvement and more cultural understanding. We need to accept others' differences, cultures and ethnic origins," he said.

and gain new people," MacFarland said. "Chasers has always been an innovator in the Palouse, and this is just another in a series of steps. We have been the leader, and will continue to be."

Most of the bands that will be performing at Chasers are from the Northwest. Tonight's band is AM/FM. The show starts at 9 p.m. There will be a $2 cover charge at the door.
