Yearbook compromise reached

By JEFF KAPOSTASY
Staff Writer

The ASUI Senate Finance Committee and the UI yearbook staff have reached a compromise on the size and budget of the Gem of the Mountains yearbook.

After almost an hour of heated debate, ASUI President Amy Anderson introduced a plan that would call for an additional $4,000 for printing costs. She offset this increase by raising expectations for yearbook sales from 800 to 1,000. This would bring the length of the yearbook to 178 pages, up from the proposed 128, and from an all black-and-white book to one with eight color photos.

In addition, there will be a new Promotions Manager who will work with the yearbook editor to draw up an aggressive marketing plan to help sell the book. When the senate returns in the fall, they will evaluate the plan and may re-evaluate the budget.

Before the compromise, tempers flared on both sides. Because of continual yearbook sales of around 800 a year, Anderson and members of the committee wanted to cut the budget of the Gem in half. According to Gem

Inconsistencies plague nightclub

By TANYA MADISON
Lifestyles Editor

In Greek, Xenon means strange or unusual. The Moscow nightclub and its owner Barry Tassler are living up to that name.

Tassler is hotly refuting charges that his G-String contest in March was fixed and that he promised one set of prizes but delivered another.

"We advertised over $1,000 in cash and prizes but we did not specify how they were going to be broken up," Tassler said.

Tassler said he never promised a round-trip for two to Hawaii as the grand prize for the G-string contest. He said "Z-FUN made a mistake on two 60-second ads. But it ran correctly for the entire rest of the week." Tassler said he didn't think people should have to bare their buns to win a trip.

Sandy Murphy, an advertising representative for KZFN, said the ads were produced in Boise. She said the ads promised a trip giveaway, but didn't specify how they could be won. Murphy said one of the on-air personalities incorrectly named the trip as the grand prize for the contest once on the air.

But what about the winners? At first, Tassler said Chad Whitcomb, a Boise State University student, and Krista Bowen, a student at Washington State University, won the trips to Hawaii. Neither school has a record of those students.

Tuesday, Tassler amended his earlier statements. "I don't know whether they are actually students or not," he said. "That's what they told me. I don't know whether they were honest or not." Tassler also said he didn't know he needed to get the addresses and phone numbers of the winners. "They are supposed to get in touch with me," he said.

But a former Xenon employee says no one will be stepping forward to claim the prizes. She says Bowen and Whitcomb are former employees of Tassler's. Bowen, she said, worked at the Xenon in Boise and Whitcomb worked at a nightclub in Salt Lake City that Tassler managed. "It's hilarious that he just didn't make up a name or something," she said.

The employee, who asked not to be identified, said Tassler chooses beforehand who he wants to win a contest. "Almost every one of his contests is rigged for his friends or for people he wants to sleep with," she said. "He destroyed his reputation in Boise and he is doing it here too."

She also said Tassler hosted a contest in Boise over two years ago, promising the winners a trip to appear on Club MTV in New York, although no one ever went.

She also said authorities have not uncovered all of the questionable activities Tassler is involved in. "I hope they do an investigation. If they would just talk to the right people they would uncover so much stuff," she said. "Barry has so many hidden things it's not even funny."

Tassler said the winners of the G-string contest would have to make their reservations and travel between September and December of this year "because it is cheaper for me."

Weekend events planned

By JEANNETTE STRAUCH
Staff Writer

Although nobody seems to know exactly how long Family Weekend has been a tradition at the university, many guess it has been around for at least 20 to 25 years.

This year, the ASUI has scheduled all sorts of family-oriented events to occupy your time.

In past years, Family Weekend was known as "Parent's Weekend," but this year the name was changed due to the changing demographics of the university.

Sean O'Connor, Family Weekend chairman, said the average age of students on this campus is now 23, which indicates there are a lot of non-traditional and married students attending UI.

The theme of this year's Family Weekend is "The Gang's all Here." O'Connor said the idea behind the theme is "Whether you're a student who is a parent or a student with parents, bring the gang to the U of I for a weekend of fun."

Through this approach, the ASUI is trying to encompass all the families on campus with this theme, he said.

In the past, the budget has not allowed any money for a big Friday event, but this year is different. The budget approved a special fund to help bring in The Chinese Golden Dragon Acrobats, a 20-person team from Taiwan. They will perform Friday at 8 p.m. in the Memorial Gym. Admission will be charged for this event simply because they were not able to cover all the costs of the event out of the funds allotted from the budget.

Several living groups will hold their annual philanthropy fundraisers this weekend as well. Beta Theta Pi fraternity's second Annual 4-Man Golf Scramble will begin Saturday at 10 a.m. Prizes will be awarded for the longest drive contest, closest to pin contest and the first place team. Admission is $13 for students and $15 for non-students. Proceeds will go to the Wishing Star Foundation.

Phi Delta Theta fraternity will hold its 75th annual Turtle Derby on Saturday from 10 a.m. to noon. The Phi Deltas will donate the money earned through t-shirt sales and donations on race day to the Stepping Stones foundation, which helps mentally retarded children.

Kappa Kappa Gamma sorority will also have its Arts and Crafts Fair in the Kibbie ASUI Dome/South Concourse from 10 a.m. to 9 p.m. Proceeds will go to Headstart.

O'Connor said he would like to see more living groups get involved with Family Weekend.

Tutoring center running low on assistance funding

By KELLY TYMON
Staff Writer

Due to an "extraordinary run" of students who need tutors this year, the Tutoring and Academic Assistance Center is running out of money only halfway through the semester. The result is that tutors are being asked to put students in groups.

"Asking tutors to put people in groups has happened before," Judith Wallens, director of the TAAC said. "However, we encourage groups starting around midterms anyway."

Wallens said the TAAC has not had a problem with the budget in two years. The annual budget of the TAAC has actually increased for the past five years. Wallens said the university administration has always given "complete support."

However, the number of students needing a tutor is on the rise this year. Wallens said they never know how many students to budget for, which causes problems during a busy semester like this one.

"I want to stress that we're not turning people away at this point," Wallens said. Students need to be aware, she said, that they might not get individual attention at this point in the semester and would probably be placed in an existing group.

"We do have three study skills specialists who can help students in this area," Wallens said. "These specialists may be able to meet with a student one-on-one. It's a little late in the semester for individual help though."

Wallens said the groups are typically three or four students that have been tutored individually or in pairs since the beginning of the semester and are now placed together according to subject or because of similar problem areas.

"It's not a problem for me," Stephanie Glarborg, biology tutor said. "I think that most people work well in groups and it helps to motivate them."

"When people sign up, there's no guarantee that they are going to get individual help," Toni Sinden, geography tutor said. "We are supposed to tutor in groups anyway."

Sinden added it can be difficult when you have people with different abilities in the same group.

One student complained she felt she learned more when she was working individually with a tutor. She said it was sometimes hard to deal with other people in the group who needed help in areas she understood. However, the student said she was glad she had an individual tutor for the first half of the semester.

"When I signed up, I thought I was signing up for a group session, so I lucked out."

Tanya McCoy tutors math for elementary education majors and is upset that her hours have been cut in half by combining her students into a group.

"This is my only source of income," McCoy said. She has had to take on other tutoring outside of the TAAC to combat her cut hours. She said it was also hard on her students.

Thanks, Families

BACCHUS would like to say thank you to the ones who can make the difference. We encourage you to let your kids know that you care about their choice... That you love them... and that you look forward to many more moments together just like this weekend.

Senate debates sexual awareness funding

By BRANDY CORGATELLI
Staff Writer

The burning issue at the ASUI Senate meeting Wednesday night was how much money, if any, to provide to the Sexual Assault Awareness Week.

Sen. Brent Carr wrote a bill to provide funding for the week. The bill originally asked for $1,000. During the meeting Carr amended the amount of the request to $540 because he didn't think the senate would go for the total amount.

Carr said he wrote this bill because he feels the event is extremely important. "They don't have a lot of funding abilities, being a new group," he said. The vote on the bill was six in favor and four against.

Senators who voted against the bill said they were not opposing the sexual awareness week. Rather, they have some technical problems with the bill, because students would end up funding the week twice.

"I'm not against the idea," Sen. Daniel Whiting said. The problem according to Whiting is the activities board, an ASUI funded board, had already provided $760 in funding for the event.

"That is what the activities board is there for," Whiting said.

Sen. Kelly Rush, who supported the bill, said it is true the ASUI had already been funded once but said, "Maybe we should have funded them more."

Sen. Allison Lindholm said this vote might set a dangerous precedent. Other groups who don't start fundraising early enough may also come to the senate at the last minute asking for money, she said.

In other senate action, Sen. Derrick Brown withdrew two controversial bills from consideration.

The bills called for two questions to be placed on the ASUI election ballot. The questions were to ask about student desire to continue funding for the UI yearbook, Gem of the Mountains and for radio station KUOI.

Brown said, "My understanding is that a full study of funding for all ASUI programs (including the yearbook and radio programs) will be done. It would be redundant for us to put these bills on the ballot."

Brown congratulated KUOI station manager Scott McLaughlin, who was present at the meeting, for his diligence at coming up with proposals to increase community awareness of the station.

Sexual awareness week will run from April 6 to April 10. On Monday, students can tie a red ribbon on campus wreaths hanging for every victim of sexual assault they know.

Tuesday, Joseph Weinberg, a well-known speaker on sexual awareness, will hold workshops all day long.

Wednesday events include discussions on sexual harassment on campus and a course on basic techniques of self-defense. Friends of victims are the subject of Thursday's talks along with a movie and discussion on homophobia and "gay bashing."

Racist note aimed at frat

Shane Zey, the only white member of the Phi Beta Sigma fraternity received a note that read, "Get out of the nigger fraternity. Beware, we can get you at any time."

"Someone's showing their ignorance," Zey said. Zey joined the traditionally black fraternity in February, becoming the only white member in the university chapter. He found the note Sunday evening on his residence hall door when he returned from softball practice.

"What business is it of theirs?" Zey asked. "If they're going to dislike me because I'm in a black fraternity, then that's their problem, because I'm not going to quit my fraternity."

Zey, however, said he wasn't too worried about the incident, because he feels the people who left the note are cowardly.

"They should be a man about it and face me," Zey said.

"I really think it's a shame," Chris Taylor, president of Phi Beta Sigma said. He is looking on the bright side. "I'm glad

Hypocrisy abounds when talking about rape

Next week is Sexual Assault Awareness Week.

The UI Women's Center has planned a full week of events including a showing of The Accused, a class in the basics of self-defense and a workshop on men and rape. These activities are worthwhile, necessary and sadly, a little hypocritical.

About six weeks ago, a 21-year-old woman from Provo, Utah, called the Pullman Police Department to report that she had been gang raped by seven men, including a student at Washington State University. Six of the men spent one night in the Whitman County Jail following their arrests for second-degree rape.

The week following the alleged attack, newspapers were filled with outraged headlines and the topic of rape was discussed over coffee mugs and company watercoolers.

That was six weeks ago. No formal charges have been filed against James B. Cozine, Christopher C. Campbell, Brian N. Wright, Matthew D. Jones, Michael M.

Manwaring, Michael P. Wilkinson and one unnamed minor. The outrage that rocked the Palouse has turned to lethargy and disinterest.

It's not only in Pullman. At least eight women this semester have gone to the UI Women's Center after being raped, attacked or sexually assaulted. Again, there were big headlines for a week. Again, officials made outraged denunciations. Again, no real action was taken.

Rape is more than a topic for a panel discussion. Rape is violent. Rape is ugly. Rape leaves scars that no one else can understand. Rape does not leave its survivors. They just find a way to carry on with their lives. Or they give up.

The suspects in the Pullman gang-rape case laughed, joked and swore under their breath at their bond hearing. It is unlikely that they will wake up in the night shaking, sweating and screaming. Even if they are innocent, and the law says that they must be presumed innocent, they certainly should have behaved with more compassion in the courtroom. Rape is not a joke. While the organizers of Sexual Assault Awareness Week, should be commended for what they are attempting to do, no one should be lulled into believing that discussions, movies and classes will stop the problem of rape.

Only rapists can do that. And if they won't, then the public should.

There is no reason for a rape investigation to take six weeks without formal charges being filed. There is no reason for rape survivors to feel ignored or cast aside by a system that strips their dignity.

Yes, talk about rape. Yes, hold seminars. Yes, encourage open dialogues.

But for God's sake, and for society's, do something about it.

Politics rule hospitals

"I can not live, I can not die, trapped in myself, body my holding cell." —Metallica.

Somewhere in a sterile Florida hospital, a baby was born. This in itself is not unusual.

The delivery was smooth. Soon the medical staff noticed the baby was not responding; no tears, no smiles, no nothing, just breath and a heartbeat. The child was quickly rushed into the intensive care unit. Plastic tubing and cold steel machines were called into action. The life support system pumped life into the small shell of a body. The doctors and nurses have whisked the mother away to protect her from the shock.

In the waiting room, the father paces, wondering why the delivery is taking so long. The doctor comes out of the intensive care unit, and says that he would like to see the man and his wife for a moment. There is a flutter in the doctor's voice as he speaks. The man knows something is wrong.

The doctor nervously begins to speak, "I am sorry that I have to be the one to have to tell you this; your child is alive, but he shows no signs of response. We think that it is severe brain damage; we don't know how long your baby will live."

Breaking into uncontrolled hysterics, the parents express the wish to be left alone. The couple knows they have some tough choices ahead. After many hours of discussion, the couple decides

Buying shorts could help UI parking

Who says the powers that be here at the University of Idaho don't do anything for you?

First of all, they are slowly but inexorably ridding fair Moscow of the scourge of out-of-state students by raising out-of-state fees. They are also taking a few illusory tips from Andre Krole by simultaneously raising the cost to live in some dormitories and slashing the budgets of student activities such as the Gem. That equals more money coming into the university kitty and less going out.

Where is all this extra revenue going? To hire more parking attendants? To buy more yellow paint so that another thirty feet of curb can be reduced to five feet of parking space and another twenty administration-only spots can be reserved in the on-campus parking lots that do exist?

Since I don't own a car and I'm a transfer student from Montana, I'm taking it in the shorts not once, but twice. It's time to buy some new shorts.

But with what money? The university is now sending out bills for next semester's tuition...er fees in June and payment will be due August 15. Do I even have to explain the problems people on financial aid experience trying to register and pay under the current system? How many people do you know whose checks were ready and waiting for them during preregistration before school?

Now, in order to pay on time, students who receive financial aid might find themselves taking out a loan during the summer to pay for school and then paying back their loan with the financial aid they receive. This doesn't account for one major factor of the money lending institution's business practices: interest. So people who needed help to pay for school in the first place now have to somehow come up with the money to pay back the loan they needed to meet the university's new payment plan as it currently stands.

Whew! I'm winded. I'm about to lose control and I think I like it.

In fact the only kind of interest I'm not sure is being taken into account is the interest of the student body.

Hal Godwin, Vice President of Student Affairs, strikes me as a highly principled, very intelligent administrator who seems to have the student's best interests at heart. That's why I almost believe him when he says the administration is not trying to ram all these fee increases and budget cuts down the student body's throats. Almost.

What else do you call all these major charges and changes coming in the same year? And how about that fee hike? Does the word "steep" come to mind?

Please see CORDA page 7

The major question still remains. Where is the revenue from these fee hikes, extra residence hall charges and slashed budgets going? I'm not accusing anyone of any wrongdoing, I'm just curious, and I think every other UI student should be too.

The point is, I've heard a lot of people complaining about the new changes and charges. No one seems to know exactly what's going to happen and what the rationale behind them is. So stop complaining and get informed. Give the UI administrators a call. Or, if you want to hear from them sooner, park in their private space.

Also, be sure to give them some credit. At this rate, we won't have to worry about parking crunch around campus. There won't be enough students left to take up all the spots. Ask them if they have their applications in at Boise State yet. Not to say that UI will be going under anytime soon, but it's nice to be prepared, just in case.

As for the rest of us, it's time to find a good outlet store where we can buy new shorts in bulk...and cheap.

their baby should be left to die, and the organs donated so that others may live.

The couple informs the doctor of their desire to let the baby go, to not let this life be a total waste. The doctor tells the couple he can not do this without administrative approval.

The doctor tells the chief administrator about the couple's wishes. The administrator replies that he can't approve this, and that the child could provide more to science alive than dead. The powers that he have spoken: the child lives.

This sounds like the plotline for an ABC Sunday night movie, but it is not. What is fact you ask? A baby was born in Florida, it had no brain, the parents wanted to let the child die so that organs could be donated, and the powers that be commanded that the baby live. I wasn't at the hospital and the above is just one of many possible scenarios that could have happened in the hospital on that day.

The parents made the right decision. It is sad that our government feels compelled to force their views on the rest of us. No one could possibly live a normal life with no brain. Imagine having a child that could never recognize it's parents. The thought that I could have a child that would be a vegetable and then be forced to keep it alive disgusts me.

Are the government and the supreme court so righteous that they can say this is life with impunity? All I know is that if that I were born without a brain, I would want my organs donated to those who could use them.

Alliance offers support for gay students

Editor:

Who are you? This is the ever so classical and philosophical question I pose to you. Well, who are you? Are you one of those college students who after, or perhaps even before, starting college realized that you were slightly different from your peers? Why do you feel different? Is it because you have or are realizing that your sexual preference is different from the societal norm? Well, it is okay to be different.

I, myself, am different. I am an University of Idaho student who happens to be a gay male. I have been in the Palouse area for three years and quite honestly, have been "out" for little over a year. I always suspected I was different but just chose to ignore it. It has been a rough year of coming to terms with the fact that I am who I am and still live in a society that thinks homosexuality is a disease, a choice a person makes when he/she has had a bad day or whatever other trivial excuse they deem proper.

Well, it's not a choice, it's a reality. There are thousands of college students nationwide every year that come to terms with their sexuality, either by themselves or through support groups. Unfortunately, when I was "coming out," there was no outlet of support or means of venting out my feelings, worries and frustrations without fearing harassment and/or bashing on campus. But times are changing, and I'm happy to inform you that the UI has a newly formed Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Alliance for students who are questioning their sexuality.

Their office hours are Mondays and Fridays from 2-5 p.m. and Wednesdays from 10-12 p.m., and they can be reached at 885-8959. They operate in complete confidentiality and are there to help us. So if you need to talk, they are there to listen.

Letters to the Editor

UI is home to many ghosts according to Finnigan

Editor:
This letter is in response to Ralph Nielsen's letter in the March 31, 1992 Argonaut. Mr. Nielsen referred to Mr. and Mrs. Ed Warren, the ghost hunters who visited the UI campus in early March, as frauds who just happened to find some ghosts on campus at the time they visited. The only evidence that Mr. Nielsen gave to prove the Warrens wrong was the fact that he had never seen one.

From that logic, Mr. Nielsen, I must conclude that you do not exist for I have been at the UI for three years, but I have not seen you anywhere.

Maybe there are ghosts on campus and maybe not, but it doesn't make you look good, Mr.

Nielsen, to call someone you have never met or seen a liar and/or gullible without any proof whatsoever. I'll bet there are more people on this campus who been a part of an "unusual experience," than those who haven't. More than one student in Gault Hall has woken up in the middle of the night smelling and hearing the sounds of a fire and seeing ghostly figures in the hallway (if you will remember, three students were killed by a fire in Gault Hall in the 1960s). More than one professor has put in a late night at Brink Hall and saw ghostly apparitions throw themselves out of third-story windows (Brink Hall was notorious for suicides back when it was a dormitory in the 1950s).

I'm sure the Kappa Sigmas would love to have you come by and call them crazy and gullible. My fraternity's cook worked for the Kappa Sigs for three years before she came to work for us. She has almost no end to the stories of "unusual experiences" that happened to her personally.

Not second-hand drunken accounts but first-hand personal experiences. And if you even think of calling her crazy or gullible, it will be to my intense pleasure to ask you to step outside.

The point is, Mr. Nielsen, if you can prove that any student who has had an "unusual experience" is a liar, crazy or gullible please do so, and I would be happy to print a full retraction. But if you can't prove yourself without calling someone else names, then shut up.

in the future. "Their incentive for doing it during Family Weekend is that it should be family-oriented, and if it's family-oriented and its during Family Weekend, then ASUI will do all they can to support the event (mostly with promotions)." Some ideas he gave for this were a dance with a big band, fun run, casino night and parade of rooms competitions (best decorated, most homey, etc.).

According to Jim Rennie, program coordinator, the size of Family Weekend has remained fairly constant over the years.

Rennie added that there seems to be four "anchor events" of the weekend. These events are The Honors Convocation, Parents Association Annual Family Breakfast, The Awards Assembly and The Blue Key Talent Show.

The Dome Show has been going on several years now. Last year it was sheer coincidence that it coincided with Family Weekend. Parents Weekend brought so much business to the Dome Show that it will now be scheduled on this weekend permanently, according to Ray Murphy of the Moscow Chamber of Commerce.

The Annual Parents Association Family Weekend Breakfast will begin at 8 a.m. Saturday in the Student Union Building Ballroom. The cost per plate is $6.50, and it is open to all families at the UI, whether they are visiting or a student family.

The Student Alumni Relations Board will be conducting their annual Family Weekend campus tours Saturday morning. If you would like to partake of one of these tours, guides will be leaving from the SUB information desk area at 10 a.m. and 2 p.m.

President Elisabeth Zinser will deliver both the Truman Scholar Award and the Theophilous Awards at the Awards Assembly Saturday afternoon in the SUB Ballroom. The Assembly will begin at 1:30 and will recognize outstanding students and faculty. The President's Reception will follow the assembly in the SUB Vandal Lounge.

The Blue Key Talent Show will be in the SUB Ballroom, starting at 8 p.m. Cash prizes will be awarded to the top student performers.

Final symposium slated for Monday

A Nobel Peace Prize winner will join three other panelists for the final installment of the 1992 Borah Symposium.

Betty Williams, who shared the 1977 Peace Prize with Mairead McGuire for their work in Northern Ireland, is part of the April 6 program that begins at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Union Building Ballroom.

The session is titled "Paths to Peaceful Solutions" and focuses on routes individuals and groups are taking to counter the use of hate. Besides Williams, Participants are:

- Andrei Codrescu, poet, essayist, commentator for National Public Radio, and professor of English at Louisiana State University. A native of Romania, he wrote "The Hole in the Flag," describing his visits to Romania during the 1989 revolution.

- Ed Chasteen, professor of sociology and anthropology at William Jewell College and founder of "Hate Busters" and the "Human Family Reunion."

- Basil Maramba, member of the Tanzanian parliament. He's a member of the Chaga ethnic group, which inhabits the area around Mount Kilimanjaro and has been directly involved with the problems of nation building in a country with 130 different languages and a multitude of ethnic groups.

Maramba has both witnessed and participated in the entire history of this unique area, in which ethnic diversity has been celebrated and ethnic intolerance and conflict have been extremely rare.

Betty Williams and Mairead McGuire began their personal quest for peace in Northern Ireland in August 1976, shortly after a car driven by a member of the Irish Republican Army (IRA) careened out of control in Belfast, striking and killing two children. The IRA soldier had been shot by English troops.

After learning of the latest incidence of violence that had wracked Northern Ireland for years, Williams and McGuire began knocking on doors, convincing the women who answered to join them in a protest march to stoop the killing of innocent people. Although both women are Catholic, Protestants and Catholics alike participated in the march.

At present, Williams continues to lecture and is writing her first novel about the struggles of her people to find peace in Northern Ireland.

The Borah Symposium was established at the UI more than 60 years ago as an ongoing dialogue on the causes of war and the solutions for peace.

It's an out-growth of the "Outlawry of War" crusade which caught popular attention in America in the early 20th century.

In March 1929, Chicago attorney Salmon Levinson, founder of the "outlawry" movement, made a $55,000 gift to the UI to establish the William Edgar Borah Foundation for the Outlawry of War.

Under the auspices of the foundation, the annual symposia have been held since 1948, with the current panelist format established in the mid-1960s.

Vandal Velo

Starts Second Season

with sixth in WSU stage race

Clockwise from top; Racers dive through a corner to start the second lap of the roadrace. A College of Idaho rider attempts a break from the pack on a climb. When Noone helped he was swallowed back by the pack on the following downhill. Two University of Oregon riders warm up in the early morning hours for Saturday's criterium. The pack hung together for most of Sunday's 54 mile road race through the rolling hills of the Palouse. Vandal Velo rider Kelsey Aldrich tries to catch his breath after the finishing climb up Kamiak Butte. Aldrich raced despite of a mild case of bronchitis.

The University of Idaho cycling team, in their second year, placed a strong sixth this past weekend at the Washington State Stage race.

Eight schools from around the Northwest competed in the two day event. Vandal Velo's sixth place is a positive accomplishment considering that the other schools had both larger B-teams and women's squads.

The WSU race consisted of three stages, a criterium, a team time trial, and a road race.

The criterium took place Saturday morning and was a technical course run on the roads around the tennis courts across from Martin Stadium.

The men's A race was 55 minutes plus two laps. UI riders Cedy Hall, Tyrone Arnold and Paul Stimac all rode strong against the other school's five man teams. Hall made an attempt at a solo bridge to a four man break away at about the halfway mark.

"I was within four seconds before they pulled away, and I wound up with a mid-pack finish," Hall said.

Vandal B Rider Phil Martin was racing in his first criterium, which was thirty minutes plus two laps, along with Ted Ito. Martin rode strong, pulling the pack for what appeared to be about 35% of the race.

"I was trying to catch the guys off the front and get the pack motivated, but ended up just pulling the pack around," Martin said.

Four riders, Two from WSU and two from U of Oregon, took a flyer off the front and lapped the pack at about the twenty minute point. In the sprint for the finish, Martin showed his strength by taking second in the pack for an impressive sixth in the B race.

In the 20k team time trial, the Vandals finished in 27:15, more than a respectable finish for the under-manned UI team.

The road race was run on Sunday on the rolling hills around Palouse, Washington. Christian Purvis, UI's sole women's rider thought the course was well laid out.

"It was a really good course out there, in fact some of the racers were forced to walk up the finish hill on Kamiak Butte," Purvis said.

For most of the road races, the three UI teams sat in the packs, taking occasional flyers off the front. The two men's races were run on a 54 mile course, and the women rode 26.

For the men Hall, Arnold, and Stimac finished 10th, 11th, and 16th respectively in the A race. Martin took 6th in the B, and Purvis took 5th in the women's.

This year's team differs from last year's in that the cyclists are working more together. The ASUI is helping out by paying for the riders entrance fees which are going to allow them to take all of the college trips to the Northwest this year.

"Last year we only did the Wazzu race, but this year we plan on going to Oregon State, the University of Montana and Portland," Hall said. "This weekend we're doing a race in Cheney and that's being put on by Eastern Washington."

it's nothing bigger than a note."
"I don't think we should focus on it too much," Taylor said. "If it happens again, I would hope the university would take action."
Vice President of Student Affairs Hal Godwin said the university would like to act on it now.
"At this point, it is not clear to me that the individual (Zey) has filed a report with the police and it is imperative he does that," Godwin said. "We want to be certain that the individual is in touch with residence hall and police authorities."
"The first amendment right to free expression does not, in my view, include specific threats against an individual," Godwin added.

Zey said there has never been a problem before with his membership in Phi Beta Sigma.
"I wanted to be in it from the get-go," Zey said. "As long as I accept them and they accept me, there's no problem."
Zey, a member of the Vandal football team, said he knew the fraternity members before he joined and felt comfortable with them.
"We don't think the color of his skin should make a difference," Taylor said. "It has never been a question."
"I like what we stand for," Zey said. "I think it's more of a true fraternity than the others on campus."

Editor Patrick Trapp, such a large cut would mean the eventual end of the Gem.
At the meeting, Ryan Patano, a candidate for Gem editor next year, passed out a sheet citing three reasons why cutting funding would be a mistake. According to the sheet:
• There was no advanced warning about the cut. The yearbook should get at least a year to operate at full budget and try creative marketing techniques.
• Even though not many people buy the Gem, it offers students who work there invaluable experience to take with them in the job market.
• A budget cut would mean the practical end of the Gem. To help alleviate the poor sales;

Trapp offered what he called an "opt-out" option. This would mean including the yearbook in the registration fees. To waive the yearbook fee, the student would have to call the Gem and tell them to take the book off. This suggestion drew objections from the committee.
"You can't force people to buy something they don't want. A survey done just four years ago showed that 65 percent of the students didn't buy the Gem just because they didn't want it," said ASUI Senator Derrick Brown. "It's not ethical."
Finance Committee Chairman Richard Rock agreed.
"I cannot justify the current amount of funding if most students flat out don't want the yearbook," Senator Dan Whiting said most of the people in the living groups he talked to would buy the yearbook regardless of the size. Others, said Whiting, could not have cared less and would rather have the funding go into other things.

But Trapp questioned whether this money would really be pushed into programs students would use more. According to Rock, it would.
"Go to any of the ASUI Coffee-house concerts, and they are packed," Rock said.
"This budget means the end of the Gem," Trapp told the Committee. "Trying to sell half the book at the same price, we'll sell even less. Students may not appreciate it now, but we are constantly getting calls from alumni about the yearbook ... and people who didn't buy one really wish they would have."
Anderson proposed the amendment after, according to one member of the committee, "we realized the arguing was going nowhere." Both the Gem staff and the committee agreed to Anderson's proposal with little debate.
In place of Trapp's opt-out, Rock proposed an amendment that would add an 'opt-in.' This would allow students to check a box at registration that would sign the person up for the yearbook.
After the compromise was in place, both sides showed satisfaction for the new budget.
"I think this went really well," Whiting said. "Both sides had wishful thinking, and this compromise was the politics and the art of compromise."
The entire ASUI Senate will vote on the budget Tuesday. The senate is also looking into doing a new survey on the yearbook.

When asked who the travel agent was, Tassler first replied "I don't have that in front of me." He later said he was working with "a few" different companies in order to get cheaper rates.

Derek Miller, a contestant in the men's contest, told the Spokesman-Review, "He didn't give away all the prizes he said he would. He held the contest simply to get people in the club."

Tassler disputes Miller's claim as well. "I've never heard of him before in my life," Tassler said. "Any business is out to make money. Some are better at it than others. I don't know who this Derek Miller was. I vaguely recall his being a contestant. He is using the fact that he didn't win to make excuses."

There are other inconsistencies between what Tassler is saying and what others are saying. Tassler said anyone launching an investigation into Xenon or the G-string contest "better be very sure of their accuracy before they go ahead with anything."

He said if charges were brought against Xenon, he would file a harassment suit against the office bringing the charges. "It would be the most amusing thing this town has ever seen. All of this would end in a harassment suit." In fact, he said that he now has two harassment suits pending against the Boise Police Department and the Ada County Sheriff's Department.

But Jim Spears, the public information officer for the Boise Police Department, said that isn't true. "There are not any lawsuits by Mr. Tassler pending against us at this time," he said. "There may have been at one time, but there aren't any now."

Susan Mimura, the chief deputy attorney in Boise, said Tassler did have a harassment suit pending against the Boise police. "He did file a harassment suit and he was forced to dismiss it," Mimura said. "The city and county had requested a summary judgment. The suit was dismissed with prejudice." That means that Tassler can not file charges again on that action.

Mimura also said Tassler has several charges filed against him in Boise. She said Tassler was charged with three battery charges. One was dismissed, Tassler was acquitted of one and he was convicted of one. Mimura said one of the charges was dismissed because the victim could not be located.

Mimura also said Tassler was convicted of an alcohol violation and faces a felony theft charge this summer. She also said a felony intimidation charge was pressed against Tassler but he was acquitted because one of the witnesses against Tassler could not be located.

But that isn't the whole story. "There are several complaints he hasn't been charged with. People either wouldn't go through with it or prosecution was declined."

Mimura also said law enforcement officials in Boise had difficulty in prosecuting Tassler because the women who entered the contests or worked in his Boise club wouldn't cooperate with investigations. "It was a real problem," she said. "Most of the gals down there would have protected him and were afraid of him."

She said Tassler was successfully prosecuted for violating Idaho State Code 23-1010A which prohibits employment or use of people who engage certain body parts including the slits of the butt in an establishment that serves alcohol. "The issue is not one of community standards," she said. "The issue is whether or not the exposure of body parts occurred. If it did, then it is a violation of the liquor license and the state can revoke the license."

That is the charge that closed down Tassler's Boise operations she said. In court, dancers that worked for Tassler admitted to simulating masturbation on stage, which violates the Idaho State Code.

Mimura said there have been other inconsistencies in Tassler's story. Tassler told the Argonaut that he is 26 years old. Mimura said Tassler has three different birthdates listed in the criminal justice files in Boise. The most-used date lists Tassler as 30.

"You have to check everything he says," Mimura said. "You will find everything is fabricated."

This is just another one of these things. He likes the limelight. He likes to be the guy about town. It's not in his nature to keep a low profile."

Tassler continues to deny any impropriety at his Moscow club or other clubs he has operated.

"It is unfortunate that the few who didn't win have to blame the facility," he said. "I've never had this sort of publicity on a contest in my life."

Not that the publicity will stop Tassler's party. He is hyping a Pajama Jam House Party for this weekend.

Zarcu enjoying new-found choices

Cristian Zarcu, the only member of the UI track team to come from Eastern Europe, is competing in the 110 meter high hurdles at WSU. Zarcu will be competing in the 110 meter high hurdles.

Jim Vollbrecht/Argonaut

By SEV HORNES
Staff Writer

In 1989 when Romania's communist government was overthrown by a tumultuous revolution, one man had a dream of getting out and starting over.

Cristian Zarcu, former Bucharest native, realized his dream, and now runs the 110-meter high hurdles for the UI men's track team at his new home, Moscow, Idaho, USA.

After a long lay-off, Zarcu is again doing what he loves.

"He hadn't run for two years because of the political and economic problems over there," Head Men's coach Mike Keller said.

The outdoor season has begun and Saturday will be Zarcu's first meet for Idaho. The indoor season for Zarcu was a disaster. Don't get me wrong, he didn't run poorly, he didn't run at all.

"He was declared eligible by the NCAA," Keller said, "but school officials declared him ineligible."

The day before the indoor championship meet, Zarcu had been told he was ineligible. Keller said, "I was told he was ineligible because he had been in the Soviet Union for two years. He was declared eligible by the NCAA, but school officials declared him ineligible."

"I was told he was ineligible because he had been in the Soviet Union for two years. He was declared eligible by the NCAA, but school officials declared him ineligible."

Zarcu had jumped out of school at the height of the revolution. He had been in the Soviet Union for two years. He was declared eligible by the NCAA, but school officials declared him ineligible.

instead of the withdrawl that should have been.

Although he was disappointed, Zarcu took the news with a grain of salt and handled the situation better than most would said Keller.

But nevertheless, the incident brought back not so happy memories from Romania.

"At that moment I thought of everything that happened to me in 1986," Zarcu said. "I just couldn't believe that this could happen in the states."

Tennis team looks to get back on track

Kristen Tellefson stabs a backhand in a recent match.

Jim Vollbrecht/Argonaut

By LORAN ROBERTS
Staff Writer

After experiencing a brief stay in Moscow, the UI women's tennis team is hitting the road for Utah.

Hopefully this road won't be as rough as the previous ones.

The women, after having a tough spring break traveling, came back to Idaho and went 1-1, with their win being a complete domination of the University of Puget Sound.

"We should have a little more confidence," Head Coach Dave Scott said. "The win definitely helps us at the No. 1 and No. 2 spots with Merlene (Forde) and Leah (Smith)."

Today the team will match up against Western Athletic Conference powerhouse University of Utah. The Utes are strong on both the men's and women's side, with each team consistently being in the top 20 of the country.

"Utah is equally as good as the University of Washington is," Scott said. "They are very, very solid and extremely competitive in the WAC."

To play this caliber of a team is what Scott was hoping for at this point in the season. With the conference tournament coming up in a month, a team like Utah is a good match to play to work out some of the glitches.

"You're never going to improve as a team unless you play better teams because you won't have anything to base your improvement on," Scott said. "This match will be for the girls to just go out and go for it because they're not expected to win."

With his young team, Scott has picked tough opponents to see where each person's game needed to be worked on.

Bobby Knight one of a kind

Bobby Knight.

A name that has been associated with college basketball for over 25 years.

Some people love him. Probably more people hate him. But everyone has to respect him.

It is hard not to respect a man whose nickname is The General. But the man does more than carry out the label he has received.

It's the nature of this coach who has won three national championships since taking over at Indiana in 1972; he demands respect.

Just ask the numerous reporters who have walked out of press conferences looking like bumbling idiots when Knight was through with them.

One such victim was a reporter covering the first round of the NCAA Tournament West Region in Boise this year. The reporter asked Knight how important the first basket was that gave Indiana a lead it would never relinquish against first-round foe Eastern Illinois. Knight responded with a serious expression on his face "Well, I guess if we played really good defense we could have won 2-0."

One touch of sarcasm from a man who is full of it.

Another reporter asked Knight a question about his players having their game faces on in their recent win over UCLA. Knight pointed out that in all his years of coaching he has never heard of a bleating game face. He then proceeded to do his best imitation of what he thought the elusive game face was, bringing numerous laughs from the audience of reporters, who were probably laughing more at their fellow reporter than at Knight.

Not too many people save their expressions of humor for this dominating portrait of intensity.

Knight has probably received more criticism than any other college coach in the history of the game to date. Whether it was his chair-throwing incident or his fist slamming on a phone during a 1987 NCAA tournament game, Knight seldom goes unnoticed.

His most recent incident has received much more publicity than it is deserving of. Knight used a bull whip in a recent practice as a supposed motivator, yet another one of his original antics. Because he struck Calbert Cheaney, who is black, on the butt, everyone has a tantrum. If it is a white player, it goes unnoticed. But that is just like Knight, right in the middle of the spotlight.

The question still remains; Why does Knight draw so much attention to himself?

The answer is almost as simple as the question. To take the attention and subsequent pressure off his players, of course.

What an ingenious tactical strategy. That must be why they call him General Bob Knight.

Track team at WSU

By SEV HONESS
Staff Writer

Idaho's men and women track athletes will face their first test of the outdoor track season at Washington State University this weekend.

For the women it will be a duel meet with WSU, but the men will take on Brigham Young University, WSU, and Eastern Washington University. Saturday field events start at 11 a.m. and running starts at 1:30 p.m.

"It's a good way to open the season," Women's head coach Scott Lorek said, "they're a real solid team."

Lorek will be concentrating on the new events that weren't a part of the indoor season.

"A big event for us will be the heptathlon," Lorek said. "I think it's going to be important when we come to the conference meet."

Sherri Marlott, Tanya Tesar, and Laura Vervaeke are the three heptathletes Lorek expects to see good efforts from. The heptathlon starts at 2 p.m. both Friday and Saturday.

Shannon Russel Shaw recently broke the school record for the discuss and Lorek is looking for her to keep improving. Javelin throwers Shawna Ostrem and Jessica Puckett will make their debuts in an event Lorek says will also be important to the women's success.

Karen McCloskey will run the 100-meter high hurdles and the 400-meter intermediates.

"For McCloskey, both these are better events for her than the 50-meter (hurdles)," Lorek said.

Men's head coach Mike Keller is expecting to have good individual efforts, but acknowledges BYU and WSU are in a class higher than Idaho.

Keller expects Wes Borgstedt to do well in the discuss and hammer throw. Borgstedt could place in the top three in both events with throws around 170 and 160-feet respectively.

Steve Lewis posted a 21.06 200-meter dash recently and Keller looks to him to place high.

Another hopeful for the men is Calvin Harris in the 400-meter dash, where Keller predicts a time in the low 47-second range.

Mark Olden will compete in the 1500-meters, where Keller feels he'll fair well in a tough field.

Back in 1986, Zarcu was a member of Romania's Junior (ages 16-19) National team that traveled to Greece, Turkey, Poland, the USSR, and Yugoslavia, just to name a few.

A World Championship for Juniors was slated for the first time in 1986 and Zarcu was supposed to attend.

At the last minute Zarcu was told by a Romanian official he would have to stay home.

"Politics had a lot to do with it," Zarcu said, "he (the official) had something against me."

For two years previous to the 1986 championships, Zarcu had taken the 110-meter high hurdles at the Combination of Communist and Capitalist Cities Championships.

"That was the very lowest point of my life and a very bad experience," Zarcu said. "I wanted to run track very badly when I was 16 or 17 and that was my passion."

Zarcu said he didn't hold a grudge with UI officials and he understood it wasn't anything personal, most of his experiences in Moscow have been positive.

"Everyone I've had to deal with has been very, very nice," Zarcu said.

Keller has high expectations of what Zarcu can accomplish in his next three years at the UI.

"He's never ran in a real race," Keller said, "but he'll be our school record holder before he leaves."

Keller said Zarcu has the potential to someday run in the high 13 second range, but Saturday he expects him to run around 14.30.

Training in Romania has afforded Zarcu the mechanics he can build upon, but he still lacks some of the essentials that only time and hard work will bring.

"We have a pretty good technique in Europe," Zarcu said, "but we lack the strength and speed the Americans have."

Zarcu is more or less a self-taught English speaker, and had to pass an English proficiency test to be able to attend the UI.

"We took English in high school, but that's not where I learned," Zarcu said.

About five years of Zarcu's own time was dedicated to becoming a proficient English speaker. But before the test he had to brush up on the finer points.

Zarcu is an aspiring business major and someday hopes to work for an American company that would help his homeland economically.

Moscow is just like a home away from home for Zarcu.

"I like the city, it reminds me of a ski resort I used to go to in the summers," Zarcu said.

The bottom line for Zarcu is that he is once again doing what he has most loved all his life.

"All I want to do is run," Zarcu said.

The NCAA Tournament is packed with pressure, and several good teams don't live up to previous expectations because of it. Look at Kansas, Ohio State, and UCLA. They all headed into the tournament as No. 1 seeds, and exited earlier than they wanted, or than they were expected to.

Of course, UCLA was the exception. They were just overwhelmed, outplayed and out-coached by a stronger team. That team being Indiana, and of course, that coaching being none other than Bobby Knight.

The Hoosiers have played relaxed, precision basketball in sweeping through the West Region in typical Indiana form.

And they have Knight to thank largely for that.

The great thing about Knight-coached teams is that he always finds a way for his team to take advantage of the other team's weakness while doing it with a lot of no-name players and All-American Cheaney.

Its the simple things that count in Knight's system of winning. The crisp passes, the hounding defense, and the never-say-die attitude.

That might not get it down in the NBA, but it thrives in college basketball.

And so has Knight.

Knight is in the top 25 all-time coaches in winning percentage (.734), victories (561) and tournament appearances (15). Oh, and don't forget those three national championships to boot.

Knight faces one of his toughest challenges to date, in defending national champion Duke, and his mentor Mike Krzyzewski tomorrow with the winner heading to the national championship game Monday night.

It looks like the Hoosiers will find a way to beat the favored Blue Devils one way or another with some untested strategy like only a Knight-coached team would do.

Leave it to The General.

With a little respect, no doubt.

"We have a tough schedule this year and I set it up that way because of our inexperience," Scott said. "This is a way for me to see our strengths and weaknesses. I really wanted to see the new girls coming who would be able to compete with the big schools in the Big Sky."

On Saturday the team heads for Ogden to compete with a more even match-up in Utah State. Initially Idaho wasn't scheduled to play the Aggies, but Scott picked the match up to get some more needed play.

"Utah State is a team we can strongly compete with," Scott said. "We should come out on top if we're healthy."

The final match on slate for the squad is a conference match-up with Weber State. The Wildcats are an excellent team, and it is an important battle for Idaho because it will weigh heavily on their seeding for the tournament.

"Weber always starts out slow in the fall, picks up a few players at semester and then play really strong in their late schedule," Scott said. "If we can beat them it will really help our seeding."

The women will have to get that much needed win without the services of freshman Emily Walpole. Walpole sprained her ankle in practice last week and will most likely be out for another week. Against Weber, this injury could be costly.

"So far they've beaten every Big Sky school this semester," Scott said. "They lost four seniors and had some injuries early in the season, but they have four freshmen really playing well."

The men will have a week off before they join the women for a trip down to Pocatello next weekend for the Conference Individual Championships. Scott is looking forward to the match, but would have liked to take the men with him on this trip.

"Financially with the women I have some outside fund raising so I can afford to pick up these extra matches," Scott said. "I would have loved to have been able to do that with the men. I know they all would have gotten up for the challenge."

Looking ahead to the Conference Championship at the end of the month, Scott feels this trip will be a good experience for the team, win or lose.

"The girls on the bottom have gone through some peaks and valleys this year and I knew I wanted to try this (tough schedule) this year," Scott said. "With those girls coming back it won't be something new for them next year."

Final Four packed with excitement once again

By CHRIS GATEWOOD
Editor

There might be nothing more intense in the sports world, than the Final Four.

Three weeks ago 64 teams entered "March Madness" to try their luck at winning the most grueling title in team sports. Saturday Michigan, Cincinnati, Duke and Indiana will go in front of 60,000 bloodthirsty fans at the Hubert H. Humphrey Metrodome in Minneapolis. There they will try to finish the three-week marathon. Some might call these four teams conquerers, but a more accurate term might be survivors.

"It's so hard to win the national championship," said Idaho Assistant Coach Steve Barnes. "The teams go through so much to get to this point. This thing is bigger than the Super Bowl. You can't tell me it's more exciting than the Final Four."

Saying the Final Four is more exciting than the Super Bowl isn't exactly going out on a limb. While the 'Bowl has tended to be a disaster, the 'Four has been a work of art ever since its inception in 1939. Expect another Mona Lisa this year.

Cincinnati could tell you a little about history. From 1959-1963 the Bearcats made yearly visits, winning titles in '61 and '62. Twenty-nine years later they're back and can become only the fourth team in NCAA history to win three National titles.

In the earlier years the stars had names like Oscar Robertson, Tom Thacker and Paul Hogue. Today's unknowns are Eric Martin, Anthony Buford, Nick Van Exel and Herb Jones. All four of these players have something in common: They're all junior college transfers. In fact, third year coach Bob Huggins has eight transfer players, something almost unheard of on a Final Four team.

They've helped enough to give the Bearcats a 29-4 record. Defending this team is tough because they have no stars, and they look to no one player to carry the load. Jones, Buford and Van Exel all average in double figures, but the Bearcats have nobody scoring over 20 points per game.

Cincinnati wins games with a trapping half-court defense, which mauls teams like a rabid pit bull. They sit back, stalk their prey and pounce at the precise moment. In the regional finals they forced Memphis State into 26 turnovers.

This style of play is quite the opposite of Michigan's youth movement. The Wolverines "Fab Five" freshmen have grown up right in front of our very eyes. Head Coach Steve Fisher has his team peaking at the right time. Chris Webber, Jalen Rose, Juwan Howard, Jimmy King and Ray Jackson are all athletic, but Webber and Rose are the most valuable. Webber, at 6-foot-9, 250 pounds of solid muscle, reminds some of a young Karl Malone.

Rose is the go-to-guy — he's answered the call for Michigan throughout the journey. This team is young, cocky and they want to run you out of the gym.

"Michigan's players are so far along physically it's amazing," Barnes said. "But there still mentally immature. If one thing goes wrong they could snap. Cincinnati won't quit and their defense will keep them in it."

Some things to keep in mind: By Arkansas, Kansas and USC losing, the Bearcats were spared playing any of the top three seeds in the Midwest Region.

Michigan appears to be the team of destiny. In their 1989 title quest they had to go through Atlanta and Lexington, KY, to win. Ditto this year, and Fisher had his team stay in the same hotels and eat at the same restaurants.

The other match-up is Duke-Indiana. This resembles more of a heavyweight fight — rest assured they'll both take their best shot. Indiana and their master strategist Bob Knight are rolling and Duke ... well, is simply Duke.

"Duke is so good it's amazing," Barnes said. "Do they have a weakness? People think the way to beat them is to try to intimidate them, but they're as tough as it comes."

Barnes says blowing up the bus might work. Indiana might want to start by stopping All-

American center Christian Laettner, the Luke Perry look-a-like who has a history of putting a knife through the heart of any team that thinks they can beat his Blue Devils. He's made more big shots over his career than some guys have made shots, period. Ask Kentucky, Laettner's latest victim. Laettner teases teams. He's like the cruel master who holds the meat in front of the dog's mouth and then pulls it away.

The Hoosiers have a chance. In beating UCLA, 106-79, in the West Regional Finals, Indiana played their best game of the season. It didn't hurt that the Bruins rolled over and died, but still Knight has his team believing. The master of crudeness has done a wonderful job of diverting the media attention to himself and letting his team quietly get to the "Big Dance."

Indiana should be able to score on a somewhat porous Blue Devil defense. Duke allowed Kentucky to score points on 11 of their last 14 trips down court.

Dome show offers a hodge-podge of fun

By Tasha Bunn
Staff Writer

This weekend's Kibbie Dome Super Sale will be a hodge-podge of events, according to Moscow's Chamber of Commerce President. Ray Murphy said the three-day event will have everything from boats and RV's to landscaping and arts and crafts.

The show, which has been around for about 15 years, is growing in participation. It originally was a car show. Last year the event boasted 83 exhibits, this year it's up to 87.

Murphy said they purposely scheduled the show the same weekend as Parent's Weekend so students can have a place to take their parents.

"Last year it was just an accident that the events fell on the same weekend," Murphy said. "It worked out well though, so this year we planned it that way. If your dad is in need of a new chainsaw it's a perfect place to take him."

Murphy said there will be plenty of entertainment, food, and displays to look through.

Northwest Value Pharmacy and Latah Home Health will have a wheelchair obstacle course set up for people to try out. Tim Cowman, from the pharmacy, said they set up a fairly easy course, and that they will time the participants.

"The person with the best time over the weekend will receive a prize," Cowman said.

Cowman said the purpose of the course is to give people a view of the everyday obstacles a person in a wheelchair faces.

Murphy said he is going to participate in the event himself. "I want to personally try it out. All of the things the handicapped negotiate takes a great deal," Murphy said.

Children can be kept entertained at the show with a variety of activities. Tumble Town USA will let parents drop off their children for free while they look around. Nicki Keohohou of Tumble Town said they will have all kinds of equipment for the children to test out.

"We'll have a balance beam, tumble mats, incline mats, and a parachute," said Keohohou. "And at our other booth for Aloha Tan and Video we'll have three Nintendo games set up for people to test out."

Smokey the Bear and Woodsy the owl be wandering around the Kibbie Dome to keep the children entertained.

The dome show will not only entertain, it will also raise money for some local charities. Kappa Kappa Gamma will raise money for Head Start, their philanthropy, by sponsoring an arts and craft show on Saturday.

Kappa Amy Anderson, who has been organizing the event for her house, said they will have 30 booths set up.

"We chose local artists," she said. "The booths will have stained glass, teddy bears, clothing, art sculptures, jewelry, toll painting, decorated hats, and wall decorations."

The show will run today through Sunday. The hours today are 4 p.m. — 9 p.m., Saturday 10 a.m. — 9 p.m., and Sunday 10 a.m. — 4 p.m.

Student director's dreams come true

By SAMANTHA GROOM
Staff Writer

Emily Petkewich must have been wishing on stars, because her theatre dreams are coming true.

Petkewich says her love for drama started when she was 11 years old at a children's theatre school in Helena, Montana. At 15, she decided she wanted to be a director.

Her dream came true in 1991 at the Rocky Mountain Theatre Association, when she wrote and directed the children's play Where For Art Thou? She wrote it "as a reaction to the NEA controversy and Jesse Helms." It's about a future without art and its effects on children and the future. She says the process of writing and working on it took about six months.

She has also worked on a number of productions at the university. Some of her projects include The Marriage of Bette and Boo, Dra- ma Aid, and The Dream. Her most recent role was playing the protective sister, Bun, in The Love Talker.

In her latest excursion, she is directing How It Hangs, which starts Thursday at the Collette Theatre. Petkewich describes the play as a battle between optimism and pessimism. She says she fell in love with the play because it speaks to everyone. The play deals with physical and mental abuse on women and children and its effects. She says the play "is both funny, and poignant and touching."

Petkewich says she thinks the Collette Theatre is a great opportunity for student directors. Not only has she had the opportunity to work with "a wonderful cast," but she also works with the design team. She has been working with the design team for about five weeks. "It's wonderful to see visions in my mind come alive on stage," she says.

In the future, Petkewich would like to run her own children's theatre.

Bikinis provide incentive for slimming down

As summer approaches, everyone tries to prepare themselves to look better in less clothing. This means slimming down, toning up, getting bikini-ready.

The boys and I are no different. At the first glimmer of Spring, we all decided to get fit and trim, and ready for the summer.

The boys encouraged me to sign up for a weight-training course. I was kind of reluctant, because I didn't know anything about lifting weights, but they were helpful and showed me around the weight room. I decided to go for it. Jake was going to lift, too, twice a week. Danny's concession to the summer fitness craze was to buy a $30 semester pass at the swim center. Jake went lifting for a few weeks, but one time he had something more important to do, and then a few days later he was just too tired, and then gradually he stopped going altogether.

All psyched up to get into shape, Danny got his new goggles together with a towel and his Speedos and went swimming... once. That was the end of the boys' workout plan.

On the other hand, I have discovered I like lifting. I've been going two or three times a week, not to mention bicycling frequently and even doing push-ups between chapters of my psychology homework.

Of course, I have a little more incentive to get into shape than the boys do. I'm taking a vacation to California next week. To this end, I went up to Spokane a couple of weeks ago and bought a bikini.

"Isn't it nice?" I said when I got home.

"How much did it cost?" Jake wanted to know.

I mumbled something.

"What?" Jake asked.

"Sixty dollars," I repeated.

Jake choked. "WHAT!?" He held up the bikini. "Sixty dollars? Doesn't that wind up to be about a thousand dollars a square yard?"

"Wait a sec," I said, taking the suit back from him. "I asked you that at the wrong time." I put it on and then asked him if he liked it, and he didn't say a word about how much it cost.

Having bought a bikini, I had to get ready to wear it, so I started getting a fake tan. Danny made fun of me. "Why would you want to go lay in a tiny box with a bunch of light bulbs and sweat like a pig for a half hour just to look like a skin-cancer patient?"

"You just wait till it's hot out, and you take off your shirt, and Adebayo spoke at a conference held in Moscow and gave presentations at the Lapwai Indian Reservation.

He earned degrees in English, chemistry, biology and industrial education from universities in England, Nigeria and the United States.

Adebayo discussed the significance for modern Baha'i members of the teachings of the religion's founder Baha'u'llah. He expounded the virtues of unity, equality and just treatment for all people. Harmony between people was an issue that Adebayo addressed during the conference.

Adebayo has resided in America for 17 years and now lives outside of Chicago with his family. Living in the U.S. has given him important insights into American society.

He said he pities America because of the racial divisions and inequality. But Adebayo said his life experiences have given him a unique perspective on those issues.

Adebayo is a critic of the American workforce and has some thoughts on why the country's auto industry is suffering. He suggested that the problems could be attributed to poor relations among workers and their supervisors.

The weekend activities were "really phenomenal, and very informative," said Peter Vaughn, a Moscow Baha'i.

Adebayo said life would be better for everyone if people followed an ancient African proverb: "If you use the right hand to wash the left, and vice-versa, both hands come out cleaner."

Ridenbaugh, Prichard galleries open new exhibits

By Karin Mason
Staff Writer

Two new exhibits featuring students' work will open tonight at the Prichard Art Gallery and Ridenbaugh Hall.

For the first time at the Prichard, the College of Art and Architecture Master's of Fine Arts Thesis Exhibit will be on display. This exhibit will include works from graduate students who will be receiving their Master's Degree this May.

Artists Julie Ann Bonasera Urh, Steve Fox, Marty Fromm,

Kellie Jo Risk and Jennifer Rod will be exhibiting paper sculptures, paintings, photographs, paintings and poetry, and paintings and furniture, respectively.

"Every student in the Master's Program in art has to do a thesis to get a Master's Degree. Part of the process of getting this degree in art is to create a body of work and exhibit it while defending their thesis," said Johanna Hays, director of the Prichard.

At Ridenbaugh Hall, about 40 pieces of undergraduate students' work will be on display. The art came from pieces judged by a jury of local artists and the Chairman of the Art Department at WSU. The pieces were submitted by any undergrad who wanted to submit work.

Receptions for both shows will be held tonight. At Ridenbaugh, it will be held from 4:30 to 7:30 p.m., and at the Prichard, the reception will be held from 5 to 7 p.m. The exhibits will be at the galleries until April 20.

"It's a social time for people to meet the artists and talk to them about their work," Hays said, "The time also permits viewers to go from one to the other."

Leppard's 'Adrenalize' lacks kick

TURN IT UP

JAY FORMAN

Adrenalize is more of a Hysteria clone than anything else.

There are ten songs on Adrenalize, and although there are some very good moments, some of it is just fluff.

The record leads off with the first single, "Let's Get Rocked," a good song that features Joe Elliot's voice more than anything else. Elliot is still a powerful singer, but his is the kind of voice that is built for harder rock. There's nothing wrong with singing for the radio, but he shouldn't sing for the radio all of the time.

The second song, "Heaven Is," one of the better songs on the record, is about a girl who makes dreams come true. These songs are all foot stompers with catchy choruses, but the members of Def Leppard have lost their edge for the first time in their career.

"Make Love Like A Man" is the third track. Again, it has a catchy chorus and radio will love it.

This record was executive produced by Robert John "Mutt" Lange. Lange produced Bryan Adams' last album, Waking Up The Neighbours. Adams' disc sounded like Hysteria, and Adrenalize sounds a lot like Waking Up The Neighbours. Lange should go on sabbatical from the music industry for a while. He polishes music for the radio, but he doesn't leave anything left but the polish.

The Def Leppard lineup is Allen on drums, Elliot on lead vocals and Phil Collen and Rick Savage on guitars. Supposedly ex-Whitesnake guitarist John Sykes planned to play on three tracks, but Sykes is not listed. Maybe he should have been.

It's not a bad thing that all of the songs were written by the members of Def Leppard and Lange. But maybe outside writers could have provided a bit of a punch that is so desperately missing from this record.

There are two ballads on Adrenalize, "Tonight" and "Have You Ever Needed Someone So Bad." Of the two, "Have You..." is better.

Def Leppard will undoubtedly release a slew of B-Side singles, and fans will be delighted. But for Def Leppard the glory days are definitely over.

The early reviews have been good for this record. If fans like a record that goes down smooth like a Fresca, buy this record.

But if they want something real and not like a teddy bear, don't believe the hype.

Driving Miss Daisy will be at Beasley Coliseum on Saturday. Tickets are available at the Beasley box office.

everybody in sight falls down blinded," I retorted. "Then you'll understand."

Now, as summer is truly making its debut, my efforts are paying off. I'm ready for shorts season. I'm ready to go to California. And the boys, realizing the error of their ways, are finally changing their tune.

Both of them have started to do push-ups in the living room floor, especially when they think I'm not looking. Jake is going running. And Danny, finally, in utter defeat at having to acknowledge that summer is indeed underway, has purchased a tanning package.

Columbus exhibit in SUB

By Jay Ferman
Staff Writer

To commemorate the 500th anniversary of the first voyage to America by Christopher Columbus, an exhibition of rare and historic maps will be featured at the Student Union Building April 1 - 12.

The exhibit is called Maps and the Columbian Encounter. It contains documents from the 13th through the 17th century.

This exhibit offers a unique perspective on the clash of cultures, ideologies and geographic concepts that followed in the wake of Columbus. Native American and European maps are used to reconstruct the world views of these societies both before and after 1492.

On Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. in the Borah Theatre, Mark Warhus, from the Office of Map history of the American Geographical Society, will give a public lecture on the maps and the story that they tell.

Admission to the lecture, as to the exhibition, is free.

This exhibition is sponsored by the National Endowment for the Humanities, the university, the Department of History, and Phi Alpha Theta.

The maps themselves chart the changing shape of the known world through medieval and modern eyes. Encounters between Old and New World Peoples are reflected in the maps. The maps are a key to understanding Columbus, who at the time was trying to deal with his contemporaries, who had no doubt in their minds that the world was flat.

Columbus was one of few that believed that the earth was round. He tried to get funding for his trip to what he believed was The West Indies. After fruitless searching for money, he got backing from Queen Isabella of Spain, who gave Columbus three ships, The Nina, The Pinta, and The Santa Maria.

Columbus sailed, and he landed on what he thought to be his destination. He was wrong.

He landed on what would become America and changed history.
