UI builds more family housing, learning center

By SHARI IRETON
Assistant News Editor

The students who walk to campus via Sweet Ave. have been assaulted with dust, buzzing chain saws and felled trees. No, it's not a college forestry experiment, it's university construction.

The area will be the future site of new family housing units and an Early Child Learning Center to be completed sometime in 1993.

According to Ray Pankopf, project architect for University of Idaho facility design, the construction is in response to the tremendous housing crunch and "woefully inadequate" family housing. He said that the private sector has been building new apartments, but there is still a lack of living space.

"The university is scrambling to take up the slack," said Pankopf.

"The idea was to see things that we didn't think of."

— Ray Pankopf
Project Architect

The construction is located adjacent to the existing family housing. The new units will expand the current housing. The new ECLC building will be located right off of Sweet Ave. and the current ECLC structures will be turned into four bedroom housing.

The project is estimated to cost the university $7.8 million, a figure Pankopf says is "extremely tight." By keeping the budget as low as possible, he hopes the university can keep the cost of rent as low as well.

Part of the budget is also to be applied to upgrading conditions at the current family housing units. Fixing water systems, repaving roads and separating the ECLC parking from resident lots are at the top of the list, said Pankopf, and saving the existing playgrounds, walkways and roads.

The site was the location of a university research nursery of pines, larch and redwoods. According to Pankopf, the research was completed and the healthy pines were relocated. Trees that had to be removed from the site were chipped for fuel.

To design the plan for the area, the university used a design/build process, where Pankopf said they came up with a document containing the goals, objectives and location of the site. The document was put out on the "street" for private sector architects and construction companies to come up with their own designs and bids.

"The idea of this was to see things that we didn't think of," said Pankopf, and the design/build process saved the university money.

One issue that concerned university officials and residents was the conservation of the existing trees on the lot.

Pankopf said, "We took a pro-active approach to try and save as many trees as we could."

Tom Eaton, a Moscow resident and board member for the Palouse Clearwater Environmental Institute, was concerned with whether the university planned on "paving over" all of the wild areas on campus.

He said that his main concern was that perhaps the construction could have been done in cooperation with what was already there.

"The trend has been to create wild corridors and leave places where the imagination can linger," and the university destroyed one microcosm that was already there, said Eaton.

Eaton travels Sweet Ave. five days a week to pick up his child-

Athletes affect alcohol awareness

By BRANDY CORGATELLI
Staff Writer

The National Collegiate Athletic Association is taking the offensive in the fight against alcohol abuse on campus.

To spread an anti-abuse message, the NCAA gave grants for its 'Choices' program to ten universities last spring, including the University of Idaho. The grant of $12,240 for the UI is helping the school run a special alcohol education campaign throughout the school year.

The NCAA is now making a greater effort to improve life for the student athlete and the general student body, according to Mary Beth Lagenaur.

"Athletic events are focal events at many campuses," Lagenaur, the 'Choices' project coordinator, said. "They are a way to get out information to a large part of the student body."

Pat Specht, the president of the UI BACCHUS group, which has a national charter to make the campus alcohol conscious, agrees. "There will already be people there (at the games) and so we hope we will get the message to more people that way," Specht said.

Using athletics is more effective than going out and finding people to talk about alcohol abuse, Specht said.

Having well-known student athletes helping to bring the message of responsible drinking will generate respect for the message, according to Specht. "We're not exactly asking people to quit drinking, we are just asking them to drink responsibly."

UI gets its program underway at the October 3 home football game, with an activities fair showcasing the many clubs and organizations on campus.

"This is the big kick-off event which is designed to dove-tail and mesh with the bands and the alcohol-free, tail-gate parties started by the boosters and the athletic department last year," Lagenaur said.

Lagenaur said she hopes students will see they can have a good time without drinking and

Sigma Alpha Epsilon reinstated

UI fraternity Sigma Alpha Epsilon has been cleared of all university sanctions and removed from probation for November 1990 and October 1991 hazing and rush violations.

UI Dean of Student Advisory Services Bruce Pitman praised the move saying he applauds the "substantial change and growth with SAE programs and leadership in the past year and a half."

Pitman said he was particularly pleased by the fraternity's decision to continue to employ a graduate student as a live-in adviser.

SAE house leadership requested the removal of the sanctions and the probation at the beginning of the semester in a letter to IFC. SAE President Bryce Powell said in the request, "We feel we have made the necessary changes to once again be a productive and responsible fraternity on this campus and in the Moscow Community."

"We have learned from our mistakes and are firmly resolved to not repeating them," Powell said.

The InterFraternity Council first imposed sanctions against the fraternity in November of 1990 after finding chapter members guilty of hazing new house members. In October 1991, chapter members pleaded guilty to charges by the IFC that they violated rush procedures involving rushees and alcohol.

UI Vice President for Student Affairs Hal Godwin said the university will continue to be, "vigorous in our response to misbehavior and violations of the rules governing the Greek system."

"By the same token," Godwin said, "when groups demonstrate responsiveness and responsibility, the university will also be flexible and reasonable."

UI student's designs take him to top

Troy Morris is starting at the top, the top of the Georgia Dome.

After spending three days in Atlanta and receiving recognition for completing the design of the Georgia Dome, Morris is at UI, starting his degree in chemical and metallurgical engineering.

Morris, from Albany, Ore., first heard about the contest to design the Georgia Dome in an architectural and engineering drafting class in West Albany High School. Heery International, the company in control of the contest, sent out unfinished drawings of the dome. Morris said, "We had to finish these drawings." However, Morris said that his teacher did not want his students to be involved in the project. "By the time he let us work on it, we had only four weeks left, instead of six. It also became an individual project, and the interested students had to do the research on their own. And talk about individual. It was like top secret. Nobody would tell anybody what they were doing," said Morris.

Morris said that the Georgia Dome is known for having the largest free-standing roof on a dome, and it's the largest oval coliseum. Morris said "Most domes use posts to hold up the roof. This cuts efficiency in seating because the posts block the view in some areas. The Georgia Dome is cable-supported and can hold more people."

Morris said Heery International, who designed the IBM building and the Coca-Cola building in Atlanta, needed final designing on the cable connectors in the Georgia Dome. Morris used the AutoCAD 10 program to do his designing. He then created a slide show and presented his work to a panel of international architects and engineers. Morris said "There were two judges from Europe, three from Canada, and the Dean from the University of Oregon was there." Morris said the panel critiqued his design and questioned him on his problem-solving techniques.

Morris was notified that his design had won, and he received a plaque and a certificate in Albany. Then he was flown to Atlanta for a week and a half. Morris said, "He (Ted Turner) brought a plane for me because I had to leave early." Morris said he stayed only three days because he did not want to miss any school.

In Atlanta, Morris toured Heery, CNN, and the Georgia Dome. Morris said he also got to watch the christening of the dome—the Philly/Atlanta game.

Morris received support from both family and friends. Morris said "I have more of an emotional family, if you want to do good you just do good. I don't always expect a lot of praise."

Morris has his future mapped out. "My dad always said I drew with a straight edge rather than cartoon figures." Now he's interested in becoming a nuclear engineer.

Weekly crime stats: students caught with pants down

By TANYA MADISON
Editor-in-Chief

Alcohol violations and bike thefts remained high last week on campus.

There were six bikes stolen on campus for the period of Aug. 26 — Sept. 2. Campus police liason Dan Bruce said half of the bikes taken were left unlocked. The other half were locked with cables or chains that were cut. "Somebody is running around with boltcutters and sipping cables," Bruce said. "I definitely suspect we have someone working the area and dealing in stolen bikes. The bike thefts are starting high at a time of the year when those numbers are traditionally low. I am really concerned about the bikes."

Bruce recommends that students invest in "U" style locks to protect their bikes. he also cautioned students to only lock their bikes at bikes racks, not to trees, buildings, railings, etc.

Alcohol violations are also high. Police issued 15 minor in possession citations on campus over the weekend. Four students were cited for urinating in public, three were cited for open container violations and one was arrested on campus for driving while intoxicated. Off campus, three students were arrested for driving while intoxicated and one was charged with using a fake ID.

Bruce said students are usually surprised when they are cited for alcohol violations. "They usually ask 'Aren't you just get to let me off with a warning?'" Bruce said. "But we have found that isn't very effective. We rarely just give warnings anymore."

In other news from the police beat:

Two people were injured in the last 10 days when they were hit in crosswalks. Bruce said the law requires all drivers to yield to pedestrians in crosswalks. "If a pedestrian and a car arrive to a crosswalk area at the same time, the pedestrian has to wait for the car to pass before stepping into the crosswalk," he said. "We have been and will continue to write a lot of tickets for not yielding to pedestrians in crosswalks."

Bruce also said there have numerous complaints about bicyclists not abiding by traffic laws. "I've received four or five complaints about that today alone," he said. Bruce said police will probably start stepping up patrols and citing cyclists who don't follow the rules of the road.

No matter how smart Rover may be, he doesn't belong at a university, Bruce said. All dogs on the university campus must be on a leash. Pooches found teathered to buildings, bike racks, etc. are considered "dogs at large," Bruce said. All dogs that aren't on a leash and accompanied by their owners will be sent to puppy prison, he said. All dogs are also required by law to be registered with the city. Registration can be done at the Moscow Police Department and costs $8.

Kempthorne takes a stand on political issues

By TANYA MADISON
Editor-in-Chief

Boise mayor Dirk Kempthorne is challenging Representative Richard Stallings for the U.S. Senate seat that is being vacated this fall by Steve Symms.

Kempthorne, a University of Idaho graduate and former ASUI president, took some time out from campaigning Saturday to discuss the issues he thinks are relevant this election year. This is what he had to say:

Madison: One of the issues I noticed you didn't discuss tonight in your debate was the issue of abortion. I was wondering where you stand on that issue.

Kempthorne: I don't think there are very many issues more complex or emotional than abortion. And therefore I think it is very, very unfortunate that we have reduced the abortion debate to bumper stickers, "pro-life" and "pro-choice." When you look at the terms life and choice, they are not even opposite terms. So my position is that I do not support unrestricted abortions. I think in the case of rape, incest, life of the mother or severe fetal deformity, I think those are exceptions that can be considered. But the history of the issue in the U.S. Senate has been funding. And so as your senator I would not vote to spend your federal tax dollars to be used for abortion. Now I am asked this question a lot in high schools. What I have said to the young people is, I have challenged them to be able to discuss this with one another. You have to be able to respect one another's views. But they should be able to discuss it because it has become so polarized that some people are no longer able to discuss it.

Madison: How do you feel about the issues of parental or spousal notification?

Kempthorne: I believe they should be part of it.

Madison: Completely? Or are there exceptions.

Kempthorne: Let me just say that generally I am for parental notification. You could construct some situation, so I would have to look at what sort of language is used in the exception. In the case where there may be incest, you could construct it so that we would have to look at the language used.

Madison: And you feel the same way about spousal notification as well?

Kempthorne: Yes.

Madison: A lot of college students are concerned about the way education in this country is going. What kind of educational programs or reforms do you support?

Kempthorne: We need student loan programs. We need to make sure that they are doing a good job and that they are actually getting to the students so that we are not mired down in bureaucracy in trying to administer student loans. We also need to make sure that those who have had the good opportunity to have access to those student loans do indeed pay them back. Because that has been a problem and they are denying somebody else an education when they have had the opportunity. That's not right. Student loans are like all programs. We need to find areas where we can hold the line because we need to get the deficit under control. The last thing a bright talented graduate needs is to have the federal deficit escalating such that your future is absolutely mortgaged. So we have to deal with that.

Madison: How do you plan to reduce the federal deficit?

Kempthorne: We need to freeze federal spending. If you hold the increase in federal spending to three percent a year, then in five years it is estimated by economists that you will have a balanced budget. Also I would freeze federal hiring. I would isolate the social security program so that we don't use the trust fund for deficit reduction because that is a contract that you make with your government. You pay your money in, you should get your money out. We need to have the line-item veto. We need to have the balanced budget amendment.

Madison: Another issue you touched on is the issue of the environment. It is especially important in north Idaho with the spotted owl debate, the salmon debate, and logging. What are your feelings on how we are doing in regards to the environment?

Kempthorne: We need to continually strive for balance because the quality of life and economic vitality are not mutually exclusive. You have to have both. Because you can live in a beautiful setting but if you are unemployed, and can't make ends meet and feed your kids, you don't have quality of life. Or you can have a job that pays you a wonderful salary but if you live in a foul area then you don't have

Why do natural disasters always hit our pocketbooks?

Money, money, money.

It can buy food, drink and fast European automobiles. It can also buy votes.

The destruction caused by Hurricane Andrew a few days ago as it ripped through Florida and Louisiana boggles the mind. Final tallies include 36 deaths and up to 250,000 people blown out of their homes. In the Sunshine State alone 85,000 houses were pounded into kindling.

Things were beginning to look grim for Floridians when in rode George Bush astride the fiery-eyed stallion of the U.S. Treasury.

On Tuesday night, Bush went on national television to tell Americans he would spare no cost when it came to providing aid to help the hurricane victims.

Bush has whipped out his federal checkbook, written a blank check and handed it to the residents of the region. He has committed the United States government to providing all the funds necessary to rebuild each and every bridge, road, hospital and school that was demolished in the hurricane.

The president's actions are admirable and not without precedent. The federal government has developed the habit of footing the entire bill when it comes to cleaning up after natural disasters.

However, considering that the total cost will probably be in the neighborhood of $3 billion, or twice what it cost to rebuild South Carolina after Hurricane Hugo, it seems like a thinly-veiled attempt by Bush to win the affections of voters in a key state.

The president also promised to invest up to $500 million to rebuild Homestead Air Force Base in south Florida, despite claims that the base is of no military or strategic importance.

Of course, since highways and schools need to be rebuilt, much of the federal money will go into creating jobs. Who needs a federal employment program when there are occasional hurricanes peppering the American landscape with little opportunities for economic growth?

Bush's pledge was a strange thing to hear from a fiscal conservative who has spent most of his political career tilting at the windmill of big budgets. But then again, this is an election year and a lot of strange words are being said.

The role of natural disasters in politics should not be downplayed. Bush has turned this meteorological mishap to his favor. So far, Bill Clinton has been silent concerning the president's proposal. Clinton knows that he has run smack into the strength of an incumbent running for re-election: the power over dishing out federal funds.

If Clinton decried Bush's loose use of taxpayer money, he would risk alienating voters. And if the roles of incumbent and challenger were reversed, Clinton would be just as freewheeling as Bush.

What's good news for the citizens of south Florida is bad for taxpayers everywhere else. It is a shame more natural disasters can't find their way to North Idaho.

Think of what it would do for our economy.

I didn't know what to do as they dragged him out to the squad car.

His head was bowed, but I couldn't tell whether it was from the shame of being caught or the shame of what he had been forced to do. He walked slowly, speeding up when the policeman holding his arm and collar pushed him forward. They didn't push him to be brutal, they did it out of fear.

Even with his head down, shoulders slumped and hands bound, the prisoner looked big enough to club both of the officers unconscious, if he had any pride left. Instead he was being led around like a child.

He probably wasn't the smoothest operator to ever cross the automatic doorway into the store where I was bagging groceries. I noticed him the minute he walked in. I'm 6' 1" and the closest I could have come to standing face to face with him would have

Time for a second look at AIDS

The news from Amsterdam wasn't good.

During the Eighth International AIDS Conference, researchers admitted that their progress against the disease has been frustratingly unsuccessful.

A few researchers wringing their hands wouldn't have made much of an impact. Eleven thousand of the world's elite AIDS researchers shrugging their collective shoulders makes a bit more of a statement.

Crossing the Atlantic will not bring any relief from the bad news.

Despite large-scale financial help from the private sector and the federal government, scientists, social workers and others have come up against a monstrosity known as "family values."

Almost scarier than the disease itself, this political jargon has flitted across American TV screens like an unwelcome midnight intruder.

Look! There is family-values expert Dan Quayle taking a shot at unwed mothers, such as Candice Bergen's character in the show Murphy Brown. Look over there! Why, it's that domestic economics guru George Bush speaking of family values at the Republican National Convention in Houston. And the crowd loves it.

COMMENTARY

Behind Bush's starry-eyed supporters stood people like Cydelle Berlin at Mount Sinai Medical Center in New York City.

Berlin, who coordinates the adolescent AIDS-prevention program at this large hospital, spoke candidly to Newsweek magazine about a school board decision banning a state-approved video and a city-produced pamphlet.

"This is a disaster for us," Berlin said. "We're talking life and death. We can't submit our work to the sex police."

Why was this AIDS literature banned? Because the video and pamphlet didn't preach sexual abstinence as the primary means of preventing AIDS. Oh, how simple-minded of me!

If one thinks the situation is laughable in New York, stop and consider that New York has one of the most exemplary AIDS prevention programs in the nation. Yes, this is a state that actually hands out condoms to high school students in the hope that they will think twice before engaging in risky sexual behaviors.

New York could certainly commend itself for trying to think in terms of long-term ramifications

Learning the lessons of the lanes

PETE GOMBEN
Associate Editor

COMMENTARY

All I really needed to know about how to live and what to do and how to be I learned at the bowling alley.

That is the God-honest truth, as sure as I've never picked up a 7-10 split.

My memory is still filled with visions of gravelly-voiced women chain-smoking themselves into early graves and complaining about their husbands.

Somewhere, five or 10 miles away, a group of construction workers or ditch diggers were probably taking a break, smoking filterless Camels and moaning about their old ladies. Such was life in my hometown.

When I was in grade school, my mom bowled in a Friday morning league. During vacations she would take me to the local lanes instead of shelling out five bucks for a sitter.

It was there, in a slice of Americana that seems to be rapidly rotting in the back of the refrigerator, that I learned two of the most important lessons of my life.

Some things are obvious to me now, even though at the time my pre-teen eyes were still clouded with youth.

For example, I learned the lesson of green jelly beans.

One morning a friend of mine brought in a cellophane bag stuffed with jelly beans. When he dropped the bag on a table, a dozen sweaty prepubescent hands ripped it open and grabbed for the sugary treats.

First the cherry jelly beans were snapped up. Orange and lemon beans were devoured next, followed by vanilla and licorice.

Finally, all that remained were the poor, ugly lime jelly beans, looking like the forlorn orphans of the candy world.

Their loneliness touched my heart, those little green victims of confectionary segregation, those little candy olives in search of the perfect martini.

Could they help it if nobody liked the way they looked or tasted?

As my comrades moved on to conquer the air hockey tables and make faces at the preschoolers in the nursery, I stayed behind. An idea was slowly forming in my young and impressionable mind. "You know," I thought, "if I could get to like green jelly beans, I'd never go hungry. I'd never go without some form of culinary gratification.

"I might never be sad again." Popping a green jelly bean into my mouth and closing my eyes, I squished it between my teeth. It didn't taste half bad, so I stuffed the bag in my pocket for safe keeping. I discovered happiness and contentment can be found wherever you take the time to look.

Once in awhile, the pack of kids I ran with would mercilessly harangue a bowling mother until she bought us an hour of open bowling. We would strap on our slick-soled shoes, find the heaviest bowling ball we could carry without dropping it on our toes and recklessly roll the ball at the distant forest of pins.

While engaged in this mindless frolic, I learned the lesson of equality. For a brief moment, I caught a glimpse behind the social facade that at times divided the group of young bowlers into separate cliques.

One bowler would approach the line with the all grace of a swan in flight and roll a strike. Another would hop around erratically, almost spasmodically, before serving up a gutterball.

Yet despite the success or failure of the bowlers, despite the smoothness of the approach and the skill of the release, our hands would all get covered by the nasty filth that always seems to coat the bowling ball and the lanes.

In the end, I learned we were all equal. And nothing has happened since to make me change my mind.

Credit union serves all

Editor;

Regrettably, the Argonaut again failed to mention the other financial institution option available to students, as well as others who work or live in Latah County, Latah Federal Credit Union.

The credit union is located at 912 South Washington, a short jaunt from campus. I am Member Service Representative at the credit union and a UI student. I wanted to take this opportunity to tell you about the accounts at the only not-for-profit financial institution in town committed to service. In order to have a share draft-checking account, you must open a savings account with a $100 minimum balance. The share draft checking account has a $2 service fee per month, which will be waived if you keep your account balance above $300. You pay for your own drafts-checks. You can clear up to 35 drafts per month free. After that, the cost is 10 cents per check. You need to consider the long term costs of all the checking accounts in the area prior to making such an important decision.

For information call the credit union at 882-0232, from 9:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. weekdays.

There is much more to marriage than just love

Editor;

In his August 28 commentary, Pete Gomben asked the question "What's love got to do with it?" in reference to marriage. From there he went on to say that in a sense love cannot be measured or defined, and that "Marriage, on the other hand can turn into a washboard road overnight." I agree that love cannot be measured, and that marriage isn't easy, but I don't think marriage should be confused with the marriage ceremony.

Wouldn't it be awful if over your morning cup of coffee your spouse turned to you and said, "Honey, I didn't get my RDL (Recommended Dosage of Love) yesterday. How about two extra kisses and one extra hug this morning to make up for it?" Gosh, that could make a person late for work! I believe that love and commitment cements the marriage partners together. The kind of love that forgives, accepts, shares, encourages and blossoms through the years of mutual commitment.

Marriage doesn't turn into a "washboard road" — it is a "washboard road," but I wouldn't have it any other way. Just as a child's weak, wobbly legs turt into strong, sure legs with use, so does marriage grow stronger when the couple walk down the bumpy road together.

Let's not confuse marriage with the marriage ceremony. The marriage ceremony can last anywhere from 10 minutes or until the money runs out, but the marriage can last, hopefully, a lifetime. The ceremony is a ritual, but so are many things in our society. Did you brush your teeth this morning? Some might call that a ritual. Parents of small children will tell you that they follow a ritual of getting a child into bed at night. There is also the ritual of washing dishes. (Now there's one that needs to be done away with!)

To those of you out there who are thinking of getting married, please remember that the marriage ceremony is just one of the many rituals you'll go through in your life. You can make it your special memory by being honest with each other and deciding together what you want. If you decide to elope or have a big "fluffy" wedding, do it with peace of mind, and don't worry about appearances. It's your day. Enjoy!

of this disease. But New York is one state in this country.

As many other states sit idly by and preach the gospel of abstinence and loving two-parent families, the disease greedily chops away at new and diverse categories of race, economic class and gender.

According to Time magazine, the number of people with AIDS in the U.S. is estimated at 272,000 for 1992.

Imagine all of Spokane (plus throw in a few outlying communities) having AIDS in order to put this number into perspective. Sorry, but individuals with AIDS are not the whole picture.

For the complete story, there sits a statistic stating that 10 to 12 million people worldwide are infected with HIV (Human Immunodeficiency Virus). To visualize this, start with the city of New York, sprinkle in a Los Angeles and then start counting as fast as possible.

Bush and other visionaries in the Republican party can crow all they want about family values. What is happening is that people in this country are dying of a terrible disease. Children, women, rock stars, professional basketball players and yes, even wholesome mid-western farm girls are being afflicted with a virus that doesn't screen its victims beforehand.

An article in Newsweek told the story of one such farm girl. Krista Blake, from tiny Columbiana, Ohio, had dreams of going to Youngstown State University. She also had a boyfriend with whom she had sexual intercourse.

When she went to her doctor complaining of a backache, Blake thought nothing about AIDS. However, when her doctor broke the news, Blake realized her "basic, white-bread America" life was a harsh mirage.

In addition to being from a rural area, Blake's HIV infection is representative of two of the fastest-growing U.S. populations segments afflicted with HIV: women and those Americans between the ages of 15 and 24.

Time reported that the infection rate of women will pass that of men by the year 2000. Newsweek stated that AIDS is now the sixth leading cause of death among 15- to 24-year olds.

It doesn't appear as if the White House cares or is even listening to the cries of help from some of its constituents.

The National Institutes of Health recently requested $1.2 billion in AIDS-related research funds. Bush balked at this number and slashed it to $873 million. Congress is expected to cut this further once it gets involved. It is probably comforting to those people stricken with HIV that the U.S. government cares so deeply.

It isn't just the government who is thumbing their nose at the problem. Even families with sons or daughters who have AIDS often turn their backs on them. One pathetic example from Newsweek showed how bad this has become.

AIDS support volunteer Sue Beardsley recalls an incident in which she rushed to the bedside of a 16-year-old boy with AIDS. He ended up dying in her arms. A later call to his mother brought little sympathy from her. "My son David doesn't exist," the mother said. "He died a year ago."

Has this country become a place where its "outcast" citizens die in miserable hospital beds? Please do something America.

been more like nose to sternum. The second thing I noticed about him was the fact that he wore a bulky hunting jacket. His eyes looked in every direction but the one he was going.

My short sleeve cotton work shirt was plastered to my back by the August sun on the one windless day in Great Falls, so I knew that he had to be boiling. His dishwasher blond hair was probably slicked down against his ears when he combed it, but even his mustache was wet almost to the point of dripping.

I lost track of him as the customer's groceries started to pile up at the end of the checkstand. I eventually forgot all about him as the blur of "paper or plastic?" sent me into my boxboy trance.

I thought it was strange that one of the assistant managers had been called over the intercom three times, but still hadn't come up front to help check. I was too busy to let it get past my subconscious. I didn't put the two together until the manager of the store pulled me from my groceries.

"Stand back here and watch the doors," he said. "We might need your help."

"What's going on?"
"Just hang loose, and keep your eyes open." He hurried over to the meat department where I could see two other managers talking to the giant. He was in the middle of producing fifteen small objects from his jacket. The type of jacket the shoplifter wore came equipped with a lined pocket that went around the entire back and bottom. The pocket design provided enough room for a hunter to pack birds from where he bagged them to his vehicle. His pocket was visibly stuffed. The managers had caught him in the act.

Other boxboys threw me dirty looks as they came back in from hauling one load only to find another load backed up and an impatient customer waiting. I might have cared if I hadn't been so fired up.

My breath shortened and I bounced on the balls of my feet as an adrenaline surge hit me. The only things that huge character could see standing between him and freedom were two average sized, thirtysomething guys who probably hadn't been in a fight since high school.

When he made his inevitable break for it, I would be waiting for him. I'd hit him like a train wreck. Maybe there would be a fight, maybe not, but I was seventeen and invincible. I was at my sexual and athletic peak.

This was the kind of situation a teenage guy fantasized about when he lifted weights or jogged. By committing a crime, the shoplifter had made a violent confrontation socially acceptable. Just by confronting him, win or lose, I would become a hero.

But there was no question in my mind about who would do the pummeling. This was the kind of thing that ended up on

My gaze never left the managers and the shoplifter. I watched him pull some steaks from the jacket's endless pocket. I clenched and unclenched my hands in an expectant rage. He took out some more of the strange little items I hadn't been able to see clearly the first time. This time, however, I was focused enough to make out the familiar shape of the little glass jars with the equally familiar blue label.

He was stealing baby food. The realization ran through me like a bolt of lightning. It entered near my head, left through my toes and sucked all my energy out with it. I drifted aimlessly for a while, then attempted to be cool as I very awkwardly stepped back to the checkstand.

I was bagging groceries when the police arrived. As they hauled him out, I wanted to say something in his defense. I wanted to tell them that he was just stealing food to feed his family. Instead, I just kept bagging groceries.

It wasn't my problem.

I think about that every time I hear an incumbent administration say they believe in traditional family values. What they must mean is their own family. This administration used billions of dollars in federal funds to bail out a high level criminal who happened to be the president's son.

But if you can't feed your family, that's your problem, not theirs.

Vandal games
need fans

LOREN
ROBERTS
Sports Editor

COMMENTARY

"Hey Loren, are we going to be good, or is it going to be another year like last year?"

I can't count how many times I've been asked that in the past three weeks. Most of it is probably just plain football fan curiosity, but I also think my reaction plays as a partial determinant on whether or not those inquisitors intend on going to games this year or not. UI football has had a strong winning tradition, with the most recent stretch beginning with the Erickson-era of the early 80's, so it's not overly surprising that last year's good-enough-for-Idaho State season would bring a bit of fan analysis.

Since I've been to practices, interviewed players and coaches, and reviewed the teams that UI plays this year, I have a pretty good idea about what the '92 football team is going to show their fans this fall. So in all honesty, the only answer I can find for the question is:

GO SEE FOR YOURSELF!

Tomorrow evening the Idaho Vandal football team kicks-off the first of six home games. Last season, despite going 3-4 at home, Idaho set a single season record by drawing 85,000 fans. Games against Nevada (14,500), Eastern Washington (14,800), and Boise State (15,000) are in the top 20 overall in attendance. Of those top 20 games, Idaho is 15-4-1 which is self-explanatory of their performance in front of strong home crowds.

The downside of last year's attendance mark was the average per game. Even with BSU, University of Montana, Nevada, and Northern Iowa, Idaho only managed to average 12,200 at home, which ranks sixth overall. It was, however, an improvement of god-like proportions over the dismal '90 season which drew 9,340 a game, making that year the worst season ever in the dome's 17-year existence.

Undoubtedly, the strength of schedule the Vandals have plays a role in what kind of turn-out they can expect each year. This year the conference pre-season bottom three come to Moscow in Idaho State, Northern Arizona, and Montana State. Couple that with Division II St. Cloud State over Labor Day weekend, along with independent Cal State Northridge in October, and the season looks pretty bleak in attracting warm bodies to fill the warm dome. Only Weber State is a team that I has a shot at the title, and 21 is

Vandals take on St. Cloud in opener

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

The Idaho Vandals welcome the Huskies of St. Cloud, Minnesota to the Kibbie Dome tomorrow at 6:05 p.m. in both team's season opener.

A Division II team out of the North Central Conference, the Huskies finished the '91 season 6-3, tying for fourth in league play. But that placing didn't necessarily represent the quality of team that Head Coach Noel Martin felt he had last year.

"We lost two games in the second half that we should have won," Martin said in a telephone interview. "Also, the suspended game was a possible win that would have put us in the playoffs."

That suspended game was the Huskies eighth of the season, and was scheduled to be at South Dakota State. NCC Commissioner Noel Olson was forced to cancel the entire conference's games that week because a blizzard dumped about three feet of snow throughout the Upper Midwest area, thus costing the Huskies a chance at post-season

This year, St. Cloud is without 18 letterwinners from last season, and that is a big concern for the 10-year head coach. One player in particular was first-team all-NCC running back Chad Mortenson. Last season Mortenson rushed for 880 yards, five touchdowns, and 93.4 yds. per game to place him second all-time at St. Cloud with 2,207 yards in four seasons.

"We lost some of our outstanding players," Martin said. "Our biggest problem is our depth. We just don't have the depth that a team like Idaho has."

For preparation in playing the school's first ever opponent west of Colorado, Martin is aware that Idaho, and the rest of the Big Sky, are pass oriented. The Vandals will look to expose any weaknesses they may find in the Huskies secondary behind the arm of junior quarterback Doug Nussmeier, and the hands of senior wide receiver Yo Murphy.

"There's no question they spread you (the defense) out and do a lot of things," Martin said. "They've got a good quarterback in Doug, and some athletic receivers. We have to stop the pass. We know that."

If the Vandal's passing offense is held at bay, it will be a good game for the Vandies to try out their much talented running game. Leading the way in UI's backfield will be sophomore Sherriden May, who was moved to running back after playing strong safety last season. May will be backed up by sophomore Wind Henderson, and redshirt freshman Lavoni Kidd, who could both see considerable action tomorrow. Ronnie White has been moved over to tight end, and will continue to challenge Paul Burke for the starting nod.

When the Huskies do have the ball in their own hands, they'll have those hands full trying to contain the D-line trio of Jeff Robinson, John Sirmon, and Billy Sims who will look to dominate the Huskies offensive line, and chase QB Jim Mauer out of the pocket. Robinson, last year's Big Sky Most Valuable Player, will be lined up against freshman tackle Dave Dahlstrom who'll be playing in his first college game.

"We have to stop him on the pass rush," Martin said of Robinson. "He's an outstanding player, and we have some caliber players who are going to try to slow him down."

Offensively, the Huskies will show a little bit of option along with some I-formation in their running game. However, with their top three receivers returning from last season, the Huskies could be looking to improve on a mediocre passing output from a year ago. Mauer, a senior from St. Paul, MN., threw for 1,162 yards as a junior, while nailing only five TD's to seven picks. This season his chief target will be senior receiver Cuddy Harris.

The 6-foot-2 Harris caught 29 passes for 437 yards last season, and one td. Kenny Pierce, also a senior receiver, could pose as a long threat to Idaho's shorter secondary at 6-foot-3. Pierce grabbed two td's last year while averging 17.7 yards per catch.

"They have two receivers that could play in this league," Idaho Head Coach John L. Smith said.

On the defensive side the Huskies return four players who saw considerable time on the front line. Junior lineman Marco

Howe still struggling with drug problem

By Doug Taylor

Professional baseball's Steve Howe had no excuses for his mistakes with cocaine.

He simply blamed himself. Suspended seven times from major league baseball because of his drug problems, the New York Yankee relief pitcher spoke candidly about his drug problem to members of Pi Kappa Alpha fraternity on Monday night.

Although currently out of baseball commissioner Faye Vincent, Howe hasn't let that deter him from getting his message to young people.

"I'm 100 percent chemically dependent," said Howe. "If one person leaves here tonight with a smile on his face about what I said, then I know I have accomplished something."

Howe unabashedly told how drugs had destroyed his dreams, and those of his family and friends.

Drugs had destroyed his esteem faster than anything," said Howe.

Drugs certainly brought a meteoric crash for Howe's dreams.

After a prolific college career at the University of Michigan, the two-time all-American was picked by the Los Angeles Dodgers in the first round of the 1979 draft.

UI's Lorek is ready to race into new year

By Doug Taylor
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho women's track and cross country coach Scott Lorek surprised a few people last year.

His cross country team was expected to finish no higher than seventh in last year's Big Sky Conference, but instead they ended up in third.

Lorek had another ace up his sleeve up with the women's track team: Despite predictions of a poor season, the team finished fourth at the outdoor championships.

So it is no surprise that Lorek's hopes are set high for this year's team. With notables like Jackie Ross, Tanya Tesar and Karen McCloskey returning for the track team, and cross country stand-outs Robyn Slate and Kerry Huss coming back, Lorek's hopes may be realized.

"We'll be a real solid group, but what we do depends on how well this year's group moves up," said Lorek.

Lorek couldn't be more correct as experience seems to stand out on both the cross country and track squads. For right now, though, he will have to content himself with watching the cross country team practice.

The cross country team should be strong despite the loss of last year's top two runners, Kari Krebsback and Diane Knudson.

Junior Robyn Slate from nearby Colfax, Washington will be the top returner for Lorek. Slate placed 27th at last year's conference championship, and that should only improve said Lorek.

Vandal women's track coach Scott Lorek has high hopes for both his cross country and track squads. (Jason Munroe PHOTO)

Teammates of Slate will include sophomore Kerry Huss, who is projected as the team's number two runner, Moscow's Angie Falk, junior Laura Moore and Tara Hamilton (formerly Tara Edwards).

Huss' can't rest easy in her number two position, though. Lorek said the gap between the top two runners and the rest of the runners is not nearly as great as it was last year.

Lorek also lauded two quality freshmen in Lauren Jefferson and Dawn Horvath.

"Lauren was really interested in our wildlife program, and so we didn't have to do much persuading," said Lorek. "Dawn ended up being the state's top senior last year in both the 800 and the mile, and so we got a real steal in her."

Up until now, the Vandals have escaped any serious injuries. Lorek said that Huss has had to sit out a few days because of a sore foot, but otherwise, the team is completely healthy. Lorek said everyone is ready for the first meet, the Whitman Invitational in Walla Walla on Sept. 12.

Right on the heels of cross country is this year's track team. Lorek has the good fortune of fielding one of his most seasoned and talented teams in recent memory.

Heading the team will be St. Vincent native Ross, who might be the finest woman track athlete ever to compete at Idaho.

Ross holds the school and Big Sky Conference indoor and outdoor records in the triple jump as well as holding the St. Vincent record in the triple jump. Additionally, Ross has twice been an NCAA triple jump finalist. Want more? Ross also holds the school record in the long jump with a leap of 19 feet-7 1/2 inches, and ranks on UI's top ten lists in both the shot put and the heptathlon.

The only problem is that Ross isn't doing much running these days. In fact, walking might be quite a task for her.

Ross recently went in for surgery to clear debris near one of her patellar tendons, and she is hobbling around on crutches. And while Lorek stressed that the injury was simply "wear and tear," one can still sense some anxiety when he talks about her.

"I don't think the heptathlon is going to be in the picture for her this year," said Lorek. "Triple jump and long jump are probably going to be her big events."

Besides Ross, the junior Tesar will be strong in many of the events that Ross has conquered.

Tesar holds the school record in the heptathlon with 4,966 points, and she also ranks second behind Ross in school records for both the triple jump and long jump.

Continuing the list of stand-outs is senior hurdler McCloskey. McCloskey has shattered school records with times of 8.19 in the 55-meter hurdles and 14.16 in the 100-meter hurdles. McCloskey was also the 1990 Big Sky champion in both the 100- and 400-meter hurdles.

Entering last year's Big Sky Championships, McCloskey was the top-seeded 400-meter hurdler, but she tripped over the eighth hurdle in a preliminary race and failed to qualify for the finals. Lorek said this should give her more than enough motivation for this year.

Lorek is hoping McCloskey can take newcomer Tara Gehrke under her wing in the same manner that former track sensation Anne Scott showed McCloskey the ropes.

"Gehrke was a two-time Montana state champion both the 100- and 300-meter hurdles, and we have high hopes for her," said Lorek. "Hopefully, Karen can be an inspiration for Tara like Anne Scott was for Karen."

Continuing Idaho's impressive list of returners is junior Shannon Russell-Shaw who holds the school record in the discus with a heave of 154 feet-9 inches. She also ranks third on Idaho's all-time shotput list with a throw of 43 feet-3 and 3/4 inches.

Newcomer Jill Wimer from Grangeville should strengthen the Vandals at discus as well. At one point, Wimer was ranked nationally in the top ten as a discus thrower, and she finished her high school career with one state championship and one state runner-up crown.

"The hurdles, discus and triple jump are events that we have depth and experience in," said Lorek. "There is no reason why we couldn't have a conference champion in one of these events."

Other top returners for the Vandal track team include sprinter Kristi Becker, high jumper Cindy Smith, and long-distance runners Falk and Slate.

playing here. In fact, during weak scheduled years, only one is in the top eight for attendance

This year needs to be different.

For anyone who hasn't been keeping up on the pre-season picks, your school is the favorite to win the Big Sky. To make matters that more dramatic, some see the conference title coming down to that calendar-marked Nov. 21 finale in Boise. If that is to happen, Idaho cannot afford to lose a Big Sky game, much less one at home. This year the Vandals need a twelfth man at every home game.

Ideally, more like 14,000 of them.

If this year's team can draw 14,300 a game, they'll break the old total record, and improve their total from a previous season for the first time since 1983. That's quite a long-shot considering they have one less home game this year than last, but realistically it can be done. There are enough students at UI that can begin "rallying" earlier that morning, and still get to the dome by 1 p.m. It doesn't make any difference whether or not you know the players, their number, or the plays they run. It's just important that as many fans as possible go to give the Vandals a definite home-field advantage.

The best time of year has finally arrived, so get everyone you can muster up and attend the games. And if for no other reason, go because Dinzeo will be a key player up front as he posted 30 tackles last season, four of them for lost yardage. The linebacker position is another strong point for the team as they return 6-foot-4 senior Shawn O'Brien who collected 44 tackles to go with five sacks. In the secondary will be the Huskies leading tackler from '91 in Jesse Akeman. Akeman, a senior free-safety, wrapped-up the opposition 71 times, snared three passes, and blanketed a fumble to top off an all-NCC first team performance.

When first talking with Martin, he joked that the team may charter their plane right over Moscow and head for Hawaii. But in reality, the coach is looking forward to the challenge.

"I think it will be a fun trip for us," Martin said. "It'll be exciting for us to play, and have a challenge. There's a lot of players on our team who could play for some 1-AA teams. We just hope we can come out there and do a good job."

The coaches comments were comparable to those made by Coach Smith.

"I think they're going to play tough," Smith said. "They've got guys who are going to fly around all over the place, and get after us. It's a game that we'll be expected to win, but they're not going to just lay on the ground and give it to us. They'll compete, I just hope they don't have the skill to keep up with us."

This will be the first meeting between the two teams, but Idaho has tangled with other members of the NCC conference. Idaho defeated Mankato State 46-7 in '85, and 31-17 in '87.

to being in and out of drug centers, but he said he couldn't quit. It took a moment in a January 1989 Alcoholics Anonymous meeting for Howe to realize that he had to change.

Howe said the meeting concerned blackouts and alcoholics who could remember where they hid their "stashes" for months afterward.

"It suddenly hit me that it was me they were talking about because I could remember where my stash was," said Howe. "I went home and in front of my wife, I flushed it down the toilet."

Pike member Troy Allen, who was plunked with a Howe sinker in a throw-around before his speech, said that he got the message.

"Yeah, it was an unforgettable experience to play catch with a pro baseball player, but it was the fact that he didn't make any excuses for himself that impressed me the most," said Allen.

PKA President Rob Everett said before the meeting that Howe seemed intent on getting his message out to members of his house.

"I think it's going to drive the message home with him talking about his own personal problems," said Everett. "People just have to listen to him because everyone has their mistakes."

Howe left his audience with something to mull over. "I admit to making many mistakes that have cost me dearly, but I never quit," said Howe. "I always believed in myself, and I still do."

UI Kokondo self-defense offered

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

Beginning September 8 self-defense classes will be offered on the UI campus.

Instructor Amber Thiemens says the class is designed so people will walk away with something they can use. Thiemens notes that Kokondo does not involve competitive fighting, and this class emphasizes safety for partners and perfection of technique.

"The only way to perfect what you do is to start slowly and gradually get faster," Thiemens said. "People don't have to trash each other."

The classes will focus on body dynamics, utilizing strong stance, and powerful upper body techniques. Thiemens has taught self-defense for 11 years, and is the chief instructor of this region for the International Kokono Association.

"I don't teach beginners 1,000 techniques," Thiemens said. "I want people to remember what I show them."

The class will be held Monday and Wednesday, 6-7:30 p.m. in the PEB. To register, students need to contact the Enrichment Program at 885-6486. People are encouraged to watch a demonstration before signing up.

ren and says he will miss the patch of trees. "I actually got pretty angry when I went by (the construction site) the last couple of days," he said. Easton also commented that it is pleasant to have places where man doesn't control what goes on, places where "we have no hold over."

However, as bad as the area may look, Pankopf says the university went round and round to save as much as possible. He also said that they are planning to plant many more trees around the housing and ECLC after they are built.

The area will consist of 108 new two- and three-bedroom family housing units, a 10,000 square foot ECLC and two four-bedroom units. Pankopf said the area is designed in a "european fashion" with open grass courtyards in the center of housing clusters and large walkways connecting the units.

Pankopf said that the ECLC should be completed by April 1993, the family housing units by July 1993 and the old ECLC will be converted by September 1993.

Across the street is another messy site, where workers from Remediation Technologies of Seattle are cleaning up contaminated rubble on the PureGro land. Latah County Sanitation has refused to accept the concrete, of which 10 percent is contaminated with cancer-causing pesticides. The soil, concrete and water used to clean it may have to be hauled to a hazardous waste dump, with PureGro footing the bill. The cost of removing the materials and testing groundwater could cost them over $500,000.

If the university purchases the land, it may be the future site for administration and academic buildings, but also be used as a site for university students and faculty to study hazardous waste clean-up.

will then get involved in some of the various UI clubs.

Lagenaur said she has a ream of research showing an active student has more moderate drinking habits and leads a healthier lifestyle than an uninvolved student.

Lagenaur said this alcohol education program will stretch through the football, volleyball, and men's and women's basketball seasons.

A living group skit contest on alcohol abuse will be one of the featured attractions. The winning ditty will be presented at half-time of a volleyball game and then winning presentors can go enjoy a free night at a game room.

The highlighted event during the women's basketball season will be the "impairment relays" where participants get dizzy and then attempt to perform different tasks. Lagenaur said these events give a lively presentation of how being impaired affects performance.

Sports cards of the women athletes will be handed out at some home games. These will carry an anti-abuse message and are popular with the children of students, faculty and staff who go to the games, according to Lagenaur. Finally, a men's basketball game later in the year will feature a banner contest.

Lagenaur said she still sees a need for alcohol education in this area, because 17 people died on the Palouse in alcohol-related deaths between April of 1990 and April of 1991.

Student groups interested in displaying their activities need to call 885-6757 to reserve their booth space.

quality of life. I believe that the economic impact needs to be included in the Endangered Species Act, so that we can determine what is the total cost of trying to accomplish these very worthy goals. I have not met one Idahoan as I have travelled the state who has said we should not try to save the salmon. We want to save the salmon. But before we try some of these wide-ranging efforts...I think we need to be very creative and innovative with science so that we can come up with a solution.

Madison: There has been a real push to register 18- to 25-year-olds for this upcoming election. What can you offer that age group?

Kempthorne: I'd go at it a couple of ways. One aspect is I would point to what I have done in Boise with the youth. The young people in Boise have found that they are in fact welcome at city hall. I take time to meet with young people and they know that. And when I go out on a Saturday night down on Main Street many of the young people come up and want to talk because we have had a good relationship.

I'm also offering through this campaign less federal government. I want to attack the deficit. I will not vote to raise the debt limit because every time the debt limit has been raised the young people of America absolutely are losing ground. It takes more and more of your hard earned money to pay the interest on that debt. So I want to attack that so that young people won't have their futures mortgaged and so that we can make real strides so that your kids can have greater economic freedom. I also am for less government, less regulations and mandates because I have a real belief in young people. I want you to have more personal freedom to express and get involved in your communities and make a difference.

I would encourage young people to be registered (to vote). That is there right and they should exercise that right. They've reached the age when the rules of government will impact their lives, so they ought to be impacted the way they want to see it.

A cappella catching on: Lotus 'riding the crest of the wave'

By JACKIE WOODS
Staff Writer

The a cappella group Lotus looks to continue the success they've found in Moscow as they move onto the regional music scene.

The three women, Kelly Teague, Dana Chapman and Sherrie Lutsch, took the first step when they performed at the Northwest Folklife Festival in Seattle over the Memorial Day Weekend.

"We didn't know if we were just the 'sweethearts of Moscow' or more," said Teague.

Lutsch agrees, "We were wondering whether we were going to be able to make that step. But we went out and they loved us and we had the third highest tape sells of anyone at the whole festival," said Lutsch.

The group's first tape, entitled 'the dance goes on', came out just in time for the Folklife Festival.

"We picked our tapes up at Seattle. They didn't even have time to ship them to us, they were hot off the press. We had to stick them together ourselves that night before the festival," said Teague.

"After Folklife, I think that's when it became apparent in our minds that we needed an agent," said Chapman. The group is currently in the process of signing with AERY Productions out of Montana.

The agent has arranged for the band to sing in Portland at a booking conference later this fall. The conference is attended by college representatives, who then book the group for a tour.

"It was an interesting transition for us to let other people in and not feel that we were losing control," said Teague. "But we saturated the market here in Moscow and so it was time to move out in farther circles."

The group also has a business manager, Karen Friend, who they meet with once a week.

"The bigger we get, the more business there is to deal with. She can take some of that responsibility so we can do what we do best, which is sing," explained Teague.

This is all pretty amazing for a group, who according to Chapman, initially had no plans to perform, but just wanted to sing for themselves when they first formed in February 1991.

"We joked those first couple meetings like 'Oh, we should have some kind of name,' or 'When the first album comes out.' But, I can't tell where that switch happened, where we thought we could really sing, that we could perform," said Chapman.

"It just kind of fell into place. Every time we had to make a decision a door would open," said Lutsch.

"The timing is right because I guess a cappella is really catching on and women's groups are big...and here we are, riding

TANYA MADISON

A public menace is plaguing the University of Idaho campus. The people involved are ruthless, dangerous and without regard for human life.

Yes, I am talking about psychotic cyclists.

These people learned to ride a bike at age five or six, and their cycling mentality has remained at that same level. Their attitude is "Get out of my waaaaaaay." But they don't even shout that as they hurdle over the injured, gasping bodies of their fellow students.

On any given day you can walk into a classroom and spy at least two students with tire tracks running up their backs, more victims of the psychotic cyclists.

They strike quickly and quietly. One minute you are standing in the middle of campus chatting amiably about the plight of lemmings in 20th century America, when all of a sudden Ken Kamikaze comes screaming over the hill, wiping out three sorority girls and a few dormies in a single fell swoop.

Now, I am all for population control and environmentally friendly transportation. Because of the cyclists on campus, I have

A few have a Rambo-Rider complex. These demented souls think it is fun to ride straight into oncoming traffic. After hurtling toward an aging Pinto at light speed, they giggle sadistically as the Pinto driver jumps a curb and plows into the university's few remaining, undiseased trees.

When will it all stop?

How many Tri-Delts have to be wiped out by the library before someone puts a stop to this madness? How many drivers have to choose between winning a cyclists "Chicken" match or having affordable insurance rates? How many pairs of Keds will I go through this semester before I can wear a pair sans treadmarks?

I can only take a few brief stabs into the tires, er... I mean minds of these twisted, tortured souls. Maybe they are looking for new, inventive ways to meet rich, doctor-types. While Psycho Cyclist is being stitched up the emergency room, he or she could be trying out lines like, "Would you like to see my scar from when I crushed a little old lady coming home from the grocery store?"

Maybe these bikers want to live out their own private "Road Warrior" fantasy. Maybe they like doing impressions of 18-wheelers out of control on mountain passes. Maybe they want to end up like Rocky Roadkill.

Local band Big Time Adam making it big Working on record deal with Pacific Inland Records

By Jay Forman
Staff Writer

The Big Time Adam scene on the Palouse is getting bigger. Big Time Adam is a local band whose music, as described by guitarist/singer Nathan Alford is "undescribable," and "a combination of a lot of cool things." Cool things which have been gearing up for the "big time" this past summer, and are definitely in a groove.

"We spent a lot of the summer in Spokane and Seattle," Alford said. The band, composed of Alford, John Eriko on trumpet, Josh Woods on bass, Mike Neary on drums, Jeff Ferrada on sax, and Darren Calhoun on guitar, will be playing at the Palouse dealing with Pacific Inland Records for a record contract, and Alford said, "We just want to keep playing." During the summer Alford said, "We didn't have jobs, we just played and practiced," Alford said. "We've been working our asses off to write new material, but it's hard sometimes because we play each weekend. We just want to keep playing."

They might get their chance, because currently they are working on a record deal with Pacific Inland Records, which houses Black Happy, another local favorite. Big Time Adam has been getting noticed, as this summer they opened for The Crazy 8's at the the bands in Spokane with the purse being $1000. Having 23 bands in competition with the band, Alford said, "I couldn't believe that we won that. That was very big for us."

Being a band that started playing on college campuses, Big Time Adam is continuing that trend this fall with various gigs at Eastern Washington University, Washington State University, University of Washington, and The University of Idaho. "In two weeks we are playing in Portland," Alford said, once again opening for the Crazy 8's.

By the beginning of October, Big Time Adam is playing the Environmentally Conscious Architecture exhibit begins tonight.

Ridenbaugh Hall exhibits open tonight

By Karin Mason
Staff Writer

The Ridenbaugh Hall campus art gallery has double the pleasure starting tonight.

Both Kenjiro Nomura's "An Artist's View of the Japanese American Internment" and the Environmentally Conscious Architecture, feature exhibits at the opening reception tonight.

Nomura is a Japanese-American who primarily self-taught himself to paint in 1921. He started as an apprentice sign painter so he could mix his work with his love for art. He started painting neighborhood scenes in Seattle which led to gradual recognition for Nomura. His works eventually made it to exhibits in the Seattle Art Museum, the Henry Gallery in Seattle, the Northwest Annual Exhibition, the Oakland Art Gallery and the California Palace of the Legion of Honor in San Francisco.

Through the years, Nomura tried several business ventures with his wife, some failures and some successes. He kept up with his paintings and in 1932 won the Katherine B. Baker Award for his oil painting "Street."

During World War II, Nomura was forced to leave everything behind with other Japanese-Americans and was interned in Puyallup, Washington. In the detention camp, his assigned job was painting signs, so he still managed to sketch and paint. He sketched scenes of his internment using whatever tools he could find in his workshop. Nomura died in 1956 after trying many more jobs to make a living as an artist.

These works of Nomura's internment have been stored for 40 years, but with the help of a generous grant from the BORAH Foundation to the University Gallery Program, Ridenbaugh Hall and the College of Art and Architecture, this exhibit was made possible.

"Environmentally Conscious Architecture" will also open tonight. This exhibit is a product of the world's increasing awareness of the environment. The American Institute of Architects established the Committee on the Environment to promote the role of architects in preserving our planet.

The AIA/ACSA Council on Architectural Research, working on behalf of the Committee on The Environment, established this exhibit. The exhibit is made up of structures that demonstrate leadership on environmental awareness by using certain criteria. The criteria are: site, energy, resource management and building materials.

The exhibit consists of 13 projects selected by a four-person jury. It is the first in a series of exhibits on environmentally conscious architecture. Generous support for this exhibit was provided by the Evergreen Foundation.

The opening reception will be held tonight at Ridenbaugh Hall from 4 to 7 p.m. on the UI campus. The exhibit will run until Sept. 29.

Festival of Dance kicks off its season

By KIM BLEDSOE
Staff Writer

The Great Performance Series is one of the only fully professional performing arts series in this area.

The Festival Dance Academy is kicking off a new season featuring extraordinary entertainment, variety, and artistry in the expansion of the "Great Performances Series."

"We have gone from five to six productions this year in order to have two outstanding cultural diversity events- Brenda Wong Aoki, performance artist-storyteller, and the American Indian Dance Theatre performance of dances and music of 16 different tribes," explained Executive Director Joann Muneta.

Also on the series are Russian ballets stars Kiev and Tbilisi, dancers from the Bolshoi Ballet, the Broadway musical "Peter Pan" scheduled for Oct. 26, the Eugene Ballet production of the "Nutcracker" on Oct. 28, and the season opener "Momix," a dance-illusion show scheduled for Sept. 29.

"We work very hard to bring in world class events such as the Russian Ballet and still keep the prices affordable," said Muneta.

According to Muneta, the Academy is sponsored by local businesses which are "a great help in making the series successful."

Tickets may be ordered by phone or mail until Sept. 20, and brochures are available at the Beasley Coliseum and Depot in Pullman, Ticket Express at the SUB and at the Lewiston Arts and History Center. Performances will be held at Beasley Coliseum or Bryan Hall in Pullman and at the Lewiston High School.

In another area, the Festival Dance Academy will offer dance classes for everyone ages four through adult. For more information, contact Joann Muneta at 883-3267. Classes began Aug. 31, but registration will continue through September.

Playwright Micki Panttaja finding her success

By KIM BLEDSOE
Staff Writer

Micki Panttaja does not suffer from split personality disorder, although she leads three completely different lives. The local resident is a mother, entrepreneur, and a successful playwright.

Raised in southern California, Panttaja has spent the last six years in Moscow with her husband, Dean, who is a professor for the University's theater arts department, and their two children Brayden and Shelby.

Starting out as a science major at Humboldt State, where she met her husband, Panttaja later decided to follow her heart and switched majors to theater arts.

"I didn't think writing would be practical, but the bug got me," Panttaja said. "I got involved in all aspects of the theater. It was a long process, but I knew in my heart that's what I wanted to do all along."

Panttaja went on to be a graduate student in playwriting from Humboldt, and has since seen great success.

"My friends in New York and L.A. who write always say 'I can't believe you get all that work living in Idaho!'" Panttaja says rolling her eyes and laughing.

Panttaja was commissioned by the Idaho Theater for Youth to do three plays in this last year alone. The first play, "Snapshots," was performed last spring and opening Sept. 21 is "Moss Gown," an adaptation from a children's book. "Moss Gown" has also been chosen to be the entertainment for the annual Governor's Award banquet. Panttaja's third commissioned play, "Rabbit Pie: The Life and Tales of Beatrix Potter," will open in Boise later this year.

In addition, the Idaho Repertory Theater commissioned Panttaja's play "Shadowland" which was performed here last spring, and her play "Conversations of my Mothers" has been professionally produced and performed in Moscow and Illinois.

Where does Panttaja find the time and all the ideas to write her plays between being a full-time mother and a business person? Well, the next time you're having an intimate conversation over dinner it may end up as the plot for one of Panttaja's plays.

In fact, cavedropping is one of her primary sources for new play ideas.

"I tend to hear dialogue in people's conversations, and if it strikes me as odd or interesting, I remember it," Panttaja explained.

While putting away the dishes or changing diapers, Panttaja thinks about writing so when she sits down for her daily two-hour writing stint she's ready to roll.

Panttaja also attributes her success to a husband who's a "good sport," and a caring mother who comes to help out for three weeks at a time.

"I've had to make the process fit my life," Panttaja said.

In her spare time, Panttaja creates and designs leather masks, barrettes, bolos and pins and sells them at local stores, some of which will be featured in upcoming plays.

"I cannot be happy any other way, so now I'm ruined for 'real life' like a nine-to-five job."

New instructor for Festival Dance Academy

By ARIEL PLYWASKI
Staff Writer

Former Boston Ballet soloist Shana Bereska has been selected as head ballet instructor of the Festival Dance Academy of Moscow and Pullman.

Bereska, who began her teaching and directing duties Aug. 31, danced with the Boston Ballet and was principal teacher and head of teaching faculty at the Boston Ballet School from 1962-1982. After leaving Boston she served as artistic director of the New Mexico Metropolitan Ballet School and then directed Ballet Lubbock in Texas. Most recently she taught and directed for the Asian American Ballet of Los Angeles.

"We were pleased to find someone who had danced in a leading professional ballet company and who also had extensive teaching and directing experience," said Joann Muneta, executive director of Festival Dance and Performing Arts.

Muneta said she was impressed by Bereska's interest in working in a smaller community. "I would rather teach in a smaller place and be able to give quality instruction than work for quantity and not be able to teach each individual," said Bereska.

Bereska's duties will include teaching ballet classes in Pullman and Moscow, and directing the Festival Concert Ballet student company. Bereska replaces Jaye Petrick, founder of the Festival Dance Academy. Petrick will be working for the Peace Corps in Poland for two years.

the crest of the wave," said Lutsch.

Whatever the reasons behind their success, the three women are ready to make the commitment to see where the group takes them.

"Now we are stepping off the cliff in terms of being supported by our music," said Lutsch. "But we don't just want to be famous for famous sake."

Chapman agrees, "Lotus is about that integrity of self, it is something we choose for ourselves individually."

This semester, the group performs locally on Sept. 16 at the Combine in Pullman, Sept. 20 at the Latah County Fair, Oct. 10 at the Farmer's Market and Dec. 4 at the ASUI Vandal Cafe.

Lotus tapes can be purchased in Pullman at Pterodactyl, the Old Mole and the Combine. In Moscow, tapes are available at the Food Co-op, Paradise Ridge, Inner Vision, Bookpeople, RPM (formerly Backtrack Records) or can be purchased directly from the group. The group says compact discs of 'the dance goes on' will be available the middle of September.

lode, and saxophonist Jeff Terrada said; "That should be pretty cool."

For the curious, various Big Time Adam shirts have been spotted on campus, most notably being a shirt from UI's Kappa Kappa Gamma's "Spring Fling," which happened at the end of last semester. The shirt itself is "the running man" as Alford described it, a black outline of a man originally conceived by an artist in Lewiston.

"The dance went well," Alford said. "It was actually a good time playing to a sober crowd."

Speaking of sober crowds, Alford said, "We'd like to play a few more over/under dances. I get bummed when my friends want to come see us play and they don't because they can't get in." Alford also said that Big Time Adam would be interested in a "big function" at the dorms if such an event existed.

Although Alford said that "he would play for free," the way things are going for Big Time Adam, that won't be for long.

Until something is done about this menace, I suggest that the non-cyclers or the safe cyclers start chewing massive amounts of Hubba Bubba and strategically lobbing the gum grenades at the cyclists as the whizz by.

Either that or make their roadkill dreams come true.

In the meantime, I am staying safely tucked away in my office. It's hard for even the most psychotic to ride up three flights of stairs.

Outdoor Program enjoying 20 years

By ELIZABETH POWELL
Contributing Writer

Everything from backpacking to skiing to kayaking is available at the University of Idaho through the ASUI Outdoor Program. The Outdoor Program, an organization that provides resources for individuals who enjoy the outdoors, offers many services and activities for the more adventurous student.

"We are one of 350 individual activities on campus," said Outdoor Program Director Mike Beiser. "We offer a one-on-one opportunity for people who like to seek out and participate in outdoor activities. We try to provide outdoor learning experiences that are safe, efficient, and as cheap as possible."

The Outdoor Program, enjoying 20 years of service, was started in response to the growing demand college students had for programmed outdoor activities. "For the most part, our activities stem from interest in several areas such as backpacking, kayaking, rockclimbing, skiing, and canoeing," Beiser said. "Our core activities focus on skill training. We teach students these basic technical skills so they can start early and continue learning and enjoying outdoor activities life long. Our classes begin at an introductory level and steadily progress to more advanced levels. One of our main attractions is our rental shop that gives people the resources and quality equipment they need to design their own trips."

The Outdoor Program has played a key role in the construction of the Adventure Education

Facility, located in the Memorial Gym. The facility was created to give students an opportunity to learn and train for new or out of season activities. "The University has created a facility that we can use to incorporate adventure activities on campus," said Beiser. "It includes a climbing wall, where students learn to climb or they can expand their skills. It also has an 'adventure challenge ropes course' which is designed to help people find personal and group growth in elemental situations."

For Bill Accola, a student at the UI, the Outdoor Program helps him find out about rock climbing and kayaking trips offered through the program. "It provides an opportunity for people to do stuff at a decent price. A sea kayaking trip with a guide would cost at least a $1000. To do it through the Outdoor Program it would only cost $200 or $300. People can start here as a beginner and eventually work up to a point where they can go out by themselves."

The Outdoor Program is planning many trips throughout the year. This weekend a backpacking trip to Eagle Camp Wilderness has been planned for Sept. 5-7, Labor Day Weekend. A paddle raft trip to the Lower Salmon River has also been planned for Sept. 5-6. Students interested in learning more about the Outdoor Program, can stop in at their office on the bottom floor of the SUB.
