Roundtable discusses topics

CHRIS MILLER
Contributing Writer

Once a month the University Roundtable will present topics for discussion in an informal luncheon series designed to promote a sharing of teaching, research, and ideas with University of Idaho faculty and the public.

"As a kick-off year, we thought we would deal with things in Idaho," said Dr. Carlos Schwantes, chair of the roundtable committee.

Schwantes said that in each lunch-hour session a contemporary issue will be presented briefly by the "lecturer" and the podium will be thrown away and all attending will be free to become part of the discussion.

Dr. Ray Dacey, a UI business professor, stressed that the series is intended to share information and is "not so much as a lecture, as an informal discussion."

Dacey will present the first luncheon, "The Economic Future of Idaho" Sept. 16, in the SUB Dipper Room. Anticipated discussion topics include present trends and potential shocks to Idaho's economy.

"We all have a tendency to remain in our own disciplines, and the ideal university shares information," said Schwantes.

"We want to make it (each topic) accessible to those who aren't experts in the field."

As insurance to keep things lively, a moderator will be present to act as a probe if discussion slows down. "We're really not sure what's going to happen," said Schwantes.

College of Letters and Science Dean Olsson and Vice President of University Relations and Development Harry Peterson are credited with creating the University Roundtable over dinner.

Library construction continues; students study despite noise

The library is quiet. Students are bent over books and seem somewhat surprised by the silence. What's wrong?

Enter a jackhammer rattling the walls followed by the angry shouts of a construction worker followed by the steady drone of some unseen mechanical contraption.

The UI library is back to normal.

Although the library construction is causing headaches for staff and students alike, administrators are smitten about the progress of the library.

"Everybody is tickled to death about what's going on down here," said library Associate Dean Monte Steiger. "We're going to have a great library."

According to Steiger, the library construction is right on schedule in regard to both project completion and the $10.1 million budget. Currently, the various contractors are at different stages of completing the addition on the north end.

Plans are to begin moving into the new addition around October 1. The first two floors will be moved into the addition, and then undergo a complete renovation. Renovation of the third and fourth floor will follow. Steiger expects the addition to be available for student use around December 1, at which time the current front doors will be closed and the new ones opened.

University turns hotel rooms into graduate student housing

By BETSY CARVER
Staff Writer

It's been a fast paced and high profile project that is finally nearing completion. Cavanaugh's, a Moscow motel, purchased by UI in April 1992, is now housing graduate students in its 45 newly remodeled studio apartments. Six of which are created to cater to handicapped students.

A second set of completed rooms will open October 19. Of those there are 10 rooms currently available to rent, including two accessible to the disabled, for any interested graduate or Law students.

The studios are all furnished using the furniture that was included with the Cavanaugh purchase. The apartments are rented out per semester at $295 a month. This rent includes all utilities, telephone, water, and basic cable.

The steps taken in purchasing and renovating the large building at 645 West Pullman Road were begun and completed within the course of eight months from January '92 to August 16, 92 when the first of the residents moved in. Negotiations began in January and the building was purchased in April for $1.1 million dollars. Director of Housing Stuart Davis said the price was "Cheaper than we could have started from scratch." Hazen & Clark, Inc., general contractors, were on the site the 23rd of June and 45 rooms were livable before school began.

"For the quality and timeliness (purchasing Cavanaugh's) was a good deal," Davis said.

The Spokane based construction company began turning hotel rooms into livable apartments by updating bathrooms, adding kitchenettes, turning laundry rooms into studio apartments, and splitting suites in half to create two units. Each unit is 360 square feet in size.

The large lobby is now being used as storage space, but the university plans on making that space rentable to a university related entity some time in the future.

The cost of the remodeling was $2.4 million dollars. Roger Nelson, superintendent for the Spokane Company, described the building as a typical remodeling job, and added "Everyone seems to be happy with the finished project."

Having to keep up the construction while school is in session slows down the workers a little. Instead of beginning work around 6 o'clock, construction starts

Students need more fruits and veggies

By ARIEL PLYWASKI
Staff Writer

Eating out of boxes may be convenient, but it may not be the healthiest, most nutritious way to eat.

Mary Schwantes, nutritionist at the UI Health Center, said that the problem with convenience foods like macaroni and cheese and ramen is that they are high in fat and salt and low in fiber. "We tend to think of eating as a chore when we don't have a lot of time," Schwantes said. The question is, how can you fix healthy food in a short amount of time? "Kids who live in the dorms have it easy. I feel sorry for the kids in apartments," Schwantes said.

Bob Sanders, an accounting student who lives in an apartment, said he buys mostly soups, vegetables, and fruits. Sanders said it's not too hard to fix a balanced meal because he trades off making meals with his wife, who also goes to school.

Michelle Hallen, a marketing student who also lives in an apartment, said she doesn't find it too difficult to cook for herself. "If you don't count this morning, I usually eat pretty well," Hallen said. Usually, Hallen has toast, juice, and fruit for breakfast, a cheese sandwich for lunch, and pasta for dinner. "This morning I had a donut and cold pizza," Hallen said.

Having an occasional donut, however, is not so bad, according to Schwantes. "If you add variety to your diet, you're almost sure to get a balanced diet," she said.

She said college students usually eat a lot of breads, cereals, and meat, but miss out on fruits, vegetables and milk. "People don't realize that the real convenience foods are fruits and vegetables." Most fruits and vegetables can be eaten raw, and Schwantes pointed out that a tossed green salad is only one way to eat vegetables.

Hallen said she's mostly vegetarian, although she has chicken sometimes. Schwantes said that contrary to popular belief, vegetarians should not have a problem getting enough protein. "Most vegetables have a little protein, so as long as they keep variety in their diets and drink plenty of milk, they should not have a problem with protein."

Schwantes said the keys to good nutrition are keeping a regular eating schedule, eating a variety of foods, and filling up on fruits and vegetables instead of breads and pasta. "When you stick to the outer isies," Schwantes said.

Zinser defines UI's role: balancing research, teaching

By TANYA MADISON
Editor-in-Chief

When University of Idaho President Elisabeth Zinser made her inaugural address in 1990 she set a 10-point agenda for the university.

More than two years later, Zinser feels she is well on her way to meeting those goals. While her methods have come under fire, even her sharpest critics agree she can get the job done.

One of Zinser's goals for the university was "to be an innovator in applying the land-grant experiment." In her speech in 1990, she said "We shall sustain our leadership in agriculture, forestry and mining by continuing to be innovative in research and by serving the people and the industries of Idaho to the reaches of every border."

Today, Zinser said she feels UI continues to lead the pack in those fields. "We are becoming more and more engaged in education and research and delivery to meet the needs of the rural communities," she said.

The condition of Idaho's rural communities and UI's role in improving them is one of Zinser's focal points. She believes that it is the university's responsibility to strengthen and preserve Idaho's small towns.

"As they move away from mining, as Wallace has, and gradually introduce tourism, the University of Idaho can help these areas to cultivate business and governmental strength in rural Idaho," she said. "The life that people can live can be productive and worthwhile in rural communities. If we can make it possible for people to live and work and thrive in smaller communities, our state won't end up with three or four metropolitan areas with weak or nonexistent smaller area."

Zinser said that Idaho, as a land-grant university, must service the entire state and not just focus on the major cities. She said the university should work to maintain a high quality of life for the state's residents, while exploring technological advances. "There are more and more people looking for nice

"BSU is focused on Boise and the Ada County area. Our role is to be statewide, to be everywhere."

UI President

places to live and a good quality of life," Zinser said. "Our principle focus, as opposed to BSU, is to reach that goal through education and research and to give people a good livelihood. BSU is focused on Boise and the Ada County area. Our role is to be statewide, to be everywhere."

Her main goal for the Moscow campus is to repair and enhance the university's infrastructure. "In Moscow, the number one priority is facilities," she said.

Zinser said that since her administration began there have been more than $73.2 million in repairs started at UI.

One of the biggest projects is the library addition which is scheduled to be finished this year. Zinser said the $12.7 million in funding UI received for that project was the largest ever funded on a university campus in this state.

But in facilities, as in other priorities, engineering comes first. "Engineering is number one on my list and will be for quite some time," she said. Zinser said the engineering department is one of UI's "key areas of state leadership." Because of that, she is focusing time, energy and money to improving facilities and recruiting more students. Zinser said there are more than 1400 students on the Moscow campus, 54 on the Idaho Falls branch campus and 113 at the Boise branch campus. In addition, Zinser said 300 students from Boise State University plan to transfer to UI's Boise branch next year for the engineering program.

Zinser said it is important to keep UI's name prominent in Boise, because it helps to funnel funds to the Moscow campus. "We're helping folks here realize that until we focus on Boise, we can't get funding to fix things in Moscow. Our engineering presences and services need to be enhanced. If we don't do that, we are liable to lose our statewide mission."

Captain America comes to the rescue one more time

Break out the tin badge and billy club ladies and gents. It's time for the U.S. to act as the world's policeman again.

In the wake of the political mud-slinging, Hurricane Andrew and the newest fall television offerings, the American people have missed an important tidbit of news. No, it's not that The Golden Girls switched networks and will be on CBS. It's something a little more rancid than that.

The U.S. and its allies have set up a "no fly" zone in Iraqi airspace and are defying Saddam Hussein to cross the imaginary line in the sky. The Associated Press reports that the U.S. and Britain are flying more than 100 missions daily to prevent Iraqi aircraft from flying below the 32nd parallel. Why?

Why is the government wasting valuable time, money and possibly lives to make sure that Saddam is playing nice in his sandbox? Who died and left George Bush playground monitor?

Bush had his shot at Saddam Hussein and decided not to finish the job. But it is election time again, which means that the president is willing to spend millions to get this Iraqi burr out of his trailing-in-the-polls-behind.

United Nations inspectors have said Iraq's nuclear and chemical arsenals are nonexistent. While no one with any political savvy believes this, it is safe to assume Saddam and his friends won't be spraying New York City with the human equivalent of Raid.

So why does the government give a flying fig newton what the Iraqis do in their own airspace? Politics. Plain and simple.

Bush's strong suit has always been foreign affairs. But now that Hussein is occasionally lighting up CNN with international raspberries for the president, Bush has to combat his well-fabled "wimp factor" once again.

Bush cannot argue that he has been the education president, the social reform president, the civil rights president or the environmental president. The fact that Hussein is still annoying people 'round the globe means that Bush also cannot claim to be the winner of pseudo-wars president either.

So now the American taxpayers are left to foot the bill for Operation Southern Watch, another pseudo-international crisis in a long line from recent presidential administrations. The Pentagon has released no cost assessment for the mission, but Americans can bet their bottom inflation-eaten dollars that playing kindergarten cop in the Middle East is not cheap.

Anyone who thinks this sudden muscle-flexing in the Gulf has nothing to do with Nov. 3 has the political savvy of a lentil. The president is the incumbent and very much wants to stay that way. He knows that Americans will rally round the flag, Mom and apple pie if threatened. He knows that voters won't want to change leadership in the midst of an "international conflict."

Hopefully, this fall's TV line-up will bring something new to viewers. It doesn't look like the elections will.

The seduction of the radio

COMMENTARY
BY
HEIDI KENYON

- 1) Cry.
- 2) Lie down on the floor, pound your fists and kick your feet. Tear at your hair if necessary.
- 3) Scream loudly and gut-wrenchingly, but remember you're not trying to get evicted.
- 4) Throw whatever you can lay your hands on violently across the room. Throw things at the radio, if it is not yours. Otherwise, be sensible.
- 5) Change the station. Better yet, play a CD.

The above are alternatives for people who are troubled by the annoying habit of several local radio stations, that is, playing a song 80 or 90 times a day, i.e., until you can sing it backwards in pig latin.

The reasons for such tactics are questionable. (Question 1: Are there reasons?) Is the radio station trying to get me to buy the album? This is a silly question. Why should I buy the album when I can hear the song practically every time I turn on the radio?

Is the radio station trying to get me to like a song better by cramming it up, down and sideways into my ears? Maybe there is something wrong with me for not wanting to hear a woman's voice asking, "Do you want me to seduce you?" 10 times a day, but I don't think so.

A lesson learned in a laundromat

On a dusty eastern Oregon afternoon this summer, on a day when the sun was hot enough to brew coffee and even the shade of a cottonwood tree didn't provide comfort, I washed clothes in a small town laundromat.

As I sat, awaiting the final buzz of the drier, I watched two women who were also doing their laundry.

One was a senior citizen who incessantly swatted flies with a back issue of The Globe as her load of delicate whites thumped their way through the spin cycle.

Between swats, she would dab the sweat from her forehead with a dirty paper towel, carefully refolding it before returning it to her pocket.

The other woman looked to be about 20, pregnant and with a toddler in tow. Every five minutes she would step out of the laundromat to light up a cigarette, puffing it mechanically while she watched her son play in the dirt.

Once, when the kid captured and dismembered a grasshopper, she paddled him on his bottom. He ran crying into the building and hid behind a row of washing machines. Her voice was filled with anger as she called out his name. When the kid remained silent behind the Maytag, she shrugged and returned to her cigarette.

which only they could see.

Perhaps they had come to accept the fact that life was nothing more than the repetition of a handful of dull routines. Wake up. Make breakfast. Wash clothes. Make lunch. Talk with the neighbors over the back fence. Make dinner. Watch television. Go to bed.

Or perhaps they still allowed themselves the luxury of dreams, always hoping for a bright tomorrow to make up for today's dim reality.

To outsiders, their lives probably had all the excitement and spontaneity of a computer program stuck in an infinite loop.

Yet these women were neither victims to be pitied nor villains to be despised. They were mere products of their surrounding.

With graduation from high school comes the great schism in the social life of many rural towns. Students who have the

Letters to the Editor

Writer looking for pen pals

Editor;

I am writing in hopes that you might publish this letter in your school newspaper. I am seeking pen pals and would enjoy hearing from anyone who may have the time to write. I am in prison in Ohio, and will be here for at least two more years. I know the feeling of having to be away from family and I realize at times we all need to have a friend outside of our everyday life.

I am presently attending college, working toward a B.A. in psychology. I am in my sixth term of school, and will complete a four year degree in about a year. I plan to continue my education for as long as I must be here. Once I have completed the B.A. program, I will have enough time before being released to complete a two-year degree in business management.

Upon my release I would like to enroll in a masters program and work to make changes in the sections of life of our society that need help coping with everyday problems. Prison is a very hard thing for anyone to overcome, but I find myself each day being very fortunate to have been able to see and experience the side of life that not many people in our society understand, and in many cases, elect not to understand.

I am a person who cares about people, and one who looks at the world through eyes that have seen many changes. I know what I want to do in life, and I hope this letter will reach out and let people know that even in prison, we can make a difference in the world.

Again, I would enjoy hearing from anyone. I look forward to answering every letter. My address is: Gary Smith #216149, P.O. Box 120 W.C.I., Lebanon, Ohio 45036.

Flood of federal money not all bad

Editor;

Pete Gomben's editorial in last Friday's Argonaut was interesting, and I'm not talking about the bowling article. Gomben claims that President Bush has handed southern Florida a blank check to rebuild from the effects of Hurricane Andrew. Fascinating. He claims this is a "thinly-veiled" effort for Bush to gain voters in Florida. Possibly. Gomben also says that with hurricanes "peppering" the landscape, why do we need a federal employment program with all the government rebuilding that would have to be done. Amazing, that bit of sarcasm. Finally, Gomben says it is a shame that more natural disasters don't hit Idaho so that we can get more taxpayers' money from the Feds. What a concept! In short, Gomben is grumbling because tax money is going to pay for southern Florida's rebuilding effort.

Mr. Gomben, would you prefer we dump more federal money into the hundreds of stupid government programs we already have? How about if we put more money into, for example, the insane savings and loan bailout?

There are already many programs the government invests in that are a seeming waste of money and resources, and too many worthwhile efforts (like maybe an improved education system) that year after year are neglected.

However, the catastrophe that slammed into southern Florida and Louisiana is not some idiotic disaster created by man, it was an unavoidable, inescapable force of nature. I personally have no problems with my tax dollars going to help my fellow Americans. One of the things I believe the government should be there for is to help in natural disasters. The people in southern Florida did nothing to bring this hurricane on themselves except to live in the wrong place at the wrong time.

I think Gomben had better re-examine his beliefs on what this country really is. It is not 50 separate states that become one country for convenience, but rather is one nation made up of 50 mutually supporting states.

Hurricane Andrew did not hit the south end of Florida, Hurricane Andrew hit the United States, and I'll never have a problem with the government spending my few tax dollars to help my fellow American citizens anywhere.

necessary intelligence or money go to college and eventually forswear rural lifestyles for the comfort of the suburbs or the bustle of a city.

Many who don't have brains or money face immediate pressure from families and friends to get married and start families of their own.

Women, like the young mother in the laundromat, start churning out children before they turn 20. Men get jobs as manual laborers in mills. It is a pattern that replicates itself generation after generation.

Reams have been written about the plight of the inner city poor, and how families get stuck in a cycle of economic poverty that seems inescapable.

But the tentacles of poverty and despondency don't end at the city limits. They can reach far into landscapes that have never felt the fists of race riots nor smelled the scent of a crack pipe.

There are millions of people scattered across the rural reaches of America who face a similar fate as those in southcentral Los Angeles. That fact is often overlooked by white, chi-chi progressives who think hard times are limited solely to minorities in the inner city.

Watching the two women made me think about life, and society, and economics.

It would be great to live in a country in which every person who wanted a job could get one, and in which no one ever went to bed hungry or cold. No one should be damned to an existence of squalor and filth and poverty.

But money alone is meaningless in fighting poverty, in either its rural or urban forms. The constant harping by some politicians on the plight of the poor in America is misdirected.

Too often, economic well-being is paraded around like a remedy for despair. Economic comfort is of secondary importance to an elusive, overall comfort that finds its basis more in personal good feelings and joy than on material well-being.

"Money can't buy happiness" is a cliché, but it is also a simple truth. There is just as much angst, anger and distrust in the minds of middle and upper class Americans as there is in the minds of the lower class.

Give every poverty-stricken American a check for $100,000 and their problems won't disappear, they will just mutate.

Doors that were once locked to prevent someone from entering and violating a person's self respect and dignity would now be locked to prevent the theft of VCRs and wide screen televisions.

Sooner or later, politicians and social prophets will realize that the uncertainties gnawing at the guts of the poor are the same things that eat away at us all, rich or poor, white or black. Then maybe someone will be able to develop a lasting, fool-proof cure for poverty and despair.

When my clothes had dried, I left the laundromat. The two women hadn't paid attention to me while I was in the building, and as I walked out they averted their gazes to avoid eye contact. The little boy stayed hidden.

Even though I can't remember what they looked like, I know I won't forget them.

Let's put it this way. If you went out and bought a tape or CD, would you take it straight home and play it more than 10 times in a row? Would you play it more than 10 times in a row every day of the week?

Just because I like a song doesn't mean that I want to hear it with my breakfast, lunch and dinner, not to mention my morning Snickers bar, afternoon Pepsi, evening espresso shots and late-night chocolate chip cookie run.

In fact, hearing it that often can really turn me off. Say it's released and the station plays it a couple of times. And I like it. And they play it. And I think it's okay. And they play it. And I start to get sick of it. Pretty soon I think of the porcelain goddess every time I hear the song and I wonder what I ever saw in it.

And what if I don't like the song? What if it absolutely sets my teeth on edge, sends shivers up and down my spine as if someone had run their fingernails down a blackboard and makes my toenails curl up in my shoes?

If I were to listen to certain radio stations, I guess I might wind up in dire need of an orthodontist, a chiropractor and an extremely talented manicurist.

The logical question, then, is: "So why do you keep listening to these radio stations?" The answer, in a word, is static.

Static makes me feel like I am in an airplane in the middle of Hurricane Andrew. It makes me think about low-funded TV stations at 3 a.m., after they play the national anthem. It makes me think of the sound my walkie-talkie made when I was 10 years old after my little brother said: "Do you read me? I've got your Barbie and I'm going to pull her head off. Over and out."

I don't like static. And since it's pretty much the only other option — excepting country music, which I will not take up this space slamming (that's another column) — I get to listen to "This Used to Be My Playground" every other hour.

Silence is golden.

around eight. There have been a few complaints by students, but both Davis and Nelson explained that students were notified before they moved in of the continuing work in and around the apartments. Some occupied apartments are still waiting on light fixtures and bathroom mirrors plus some touch up work on the doors. Davis said the students seemed happy with it.

It was a whirl wind project that has turned out to be a winner in a town where finding a livable, affordable apartment is almost as difficult as finding a penny on a highway.

"This sort of thing has been done at other universities throughout the U.S.," said Pam Farmer of University Relations. "They (Olsson and Peterson) saw a need for something like it here."

The College of Letters and Science is responsible for this year's fall and spring semester roundtable topics. The master plan is that for the next nine years, a different college within the university will have to organize the lectures each year.

Each luncheon will begin at 12:30 p.m. and end at 1:20 p.m.

Everybody is welcome and should bring a lunch to snack on. However, beverages will be available for purchase.

"Native American Issues in Idaho" will be presented by UI College of Law professor Dr. Dennis Colson Oct. 14 in the SUB Silver and Gold Galena Room. Indian legal rights, reservation casino gambling, and water rights will be discussed.

UI College of Engineering's Dr. Charles Brockway will present "Idaho Water Resource Issues" Nov. 18 in the SUB Silver and Gold Galena Room. Drought issues as they relate to irrigation and municipal water systems, nutrient pollution and Snake River water quality degradation, and the impact of the Endangered Species Act on hydrology systems will all be covered.

Schwantes emphasized that "we don't want people to feel intimidated." The public is welcome and encouraged to bring any topical information they have.

The computer catalogues are also being upgraded.

Despite the eventual benefits of a sparkling new library, librarians admit the constant clamor is causing some problems. Dennis Baird, a Social Science librarian says several activities have definitely been disrupted.

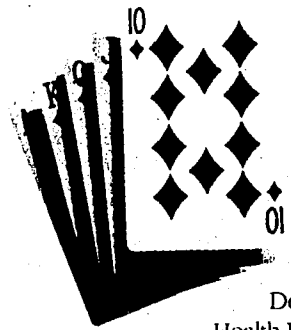

"The noise has been the worst aspect (of the construction)," Baird says. "It's terrible trying to teach a computer class above all the noise." Baird added that all the dust floating around has caused several computer failures,

But the worst may be yet to come. Around the first of the year, construction crews will begin demolishing what is now the central stairway.

"That should be real interesting," Baird says.

Despite the inconveniences, Steiger says the library will continue to provide as many services as possible. The entire project should be done around August 1.

Computers ease registration headaches at UI

By TIM HELMKE
Staff Writer

The computer craze that has been sweeping the country has hit the University of Idaho campus.

The two registration processes available to the students at UI are both run by computer and are student accessible. Everything in the registration process is done by computer in some way.

The on-line registration system that is used today has been in place since fall 1989. Registrar M. E. Telin reported that the University of Idaho and the University of Iowa were the first two colleges nationwide to open up this sort of system to the students. At other schools that offer the on-line system, the secretaries and faculty members are the ones that are able to use the systems for the students. Telin said that "the students here at the U of I are smart enough to use the computers on their own and can be trusted."

The voice-response registration system is also run by computer via telephone lines. The voice-response system was added to the system for the Fall of 1991 and was to be the new and only system used here. Telin said that the response about the on-line system was favorable. The voice-response system was easy to install because it is compatible with the on-line system.

Microseconds are all that are needed by the computer to see if a person is eligible to register after the person types in their student I.D. number and their P.I.N. The computer can tell if that person is eligible to register or drop/add by reading files in a very short response time. Deno Tufares, Jr., a Student Records Analyst, said that student records can be checked so quickly and efficiently that only a few mistakes have ever been made by the computer.

There are 112 registration lines that are available to the students from hundreds of computers on campus. Ninety lines are available on the on-line system, 16 lines are available on the voice-response system, and six lines by phone modem with access to the Main Frame. Telin reported that the system has never "reached full capacity and hit the 112 mark."

"There have been no apparent problems with too many people trying to access the system at one time to this point," said Tufares.

The on-line and voice-response registration systems can both be used for the drop/add process until Sept. 8. The on-line system can be used to update student addresses as well. Telin said that students can not only use the system for registration but "for other important tasks as well." Telin is very pleased with the use of both systems at UI and hopes that other colleges nationwide will catch on to the uses.

"Computers have gotten rid of the old registration system of standing in line at the Kibbie Dome and improved it by leaps and bounds into the future," said Telin. Telin said that the students that have been through both processes prefer the computer option by far. Telin can recall that the old process was like a "circus" with lines, financial aid, student organizations, and concession stands. Telin views the addition of computers as "getting rid of the social event of the year and jumping into the future and not through hoops."

Zinser said she believes that once the engineering, agriculture and mining programs are made the strongest in the region, then she can turn her attention to other programs where UI does not corner the academic market.

"Humanities education and business are not unique to UI," Zinser said. "They are very important, but our development of those areas has to be thought of a little differently. We want to have the best of both worlds. We want a small liberal arts college atmosphere at a land grant university."

Part of achieving that mix is finding the balance between teaching and research. While maintaining she has "a strong commitment to liberal arts" she said UI is "definitely a research university." Her philosophy is that teachers become better instructors when they do research in their field. She cited examples of instructors like Mary DuPree who went around Idaho to learn the history of bands in different regions of the state.

"What she did is the epitome of taking a scholar, having knowledge and translating it into something interesting."

Zinser said she is confident that the future will be bright for UI. "This is an institution of integrity," she said. "We are going to be what the state needs to step ahead in the economy. The stability and stature of the university will go up and the enrollment will follow."

Computers help keep business on track

By MARY SAVAGE
Contributing Writer

What began as a recreational hobby for two couples has evolved into a business, a business that is one of its kind on the Palouse.

Palouse Country Sports and Recreation, a full line Yamaha dealership, showcases all-terrain vehicles, snowmobiles, motorcycles, and the waverunner, a cousin to the snowmobile, but designed for water use.

Gordon and Margaret Strong and Mike and Kris Fredrickson, natives of Troy, committed themselves to the partnership about six months ago because they felt there was a need for this type of shop. "The closest competition is in Lewiston, otherwise you'd have to go to either Couer d'Alene or Spokane," Gordon said. "It's the only Yamaha franchise in the Moscow and Pullman area."

In addition to the recreation vehicles, the shop offers accessories which include helmets, gloves, wetsuits, and snowsuits. The store also provides parts and services.

"The start-up inventory will have over 700 parts on a basis of what the customer needs," Gordon said. "Jimmy Gilder is the parts man and doubles as the sales representative."

The service department, run by Ken Darby, is designed to handle a full spectrum of mechanical needs. Strong said once the business is underway, they will be equipped to handle all makes and models of all-terrain vehicles.

Palouse Country Sports and Recreation has two showrooms and among the merchandise offered, will feature six all-terrain models and dirtbikes suited for every member of the family.

The partners said they are hoping to officially open today. However, this is a pending date as incoming shipments move slowly and stock is expected to be limited at first.

"Our parts department is on a computerized system, and it we don't have the part they want we can order it," Gordon said.

The store is located in the old Moscow Implements building at 218 N. Main across from Rathaus Pizza. Normal business hours will be Tuesday through Saturday from 9 a.m. to 5:30 p.m.

Students can update addresses via computer

On-line preregistration has a new feature, allowing students to change their addresses on-line.

Students access the registration system via DIAL PREREG and enter their student and personal identification numbers. The cursor then moves to the bottom of the screen.

If updating an address, enter an X. The new address information (local and permanent) is typed on the update lines, and entered. An E is entered to exit.

Students who wish to restrict access to any of their addresses should submit a written request to the Registrar's Office.

The address update system is available throughout the year. To comply with the Student Records Policy, addresses are to be updated or changed by students, not departments or colleges. Please help spread the word about the availability of this new feature. Questions should be directed to the Registrar's Office.

Long lines plague campus lab users

By JACKIE WOODS
Staff Writer

Have you been putting off writing that English or term paper to the last minute? Well, good luck finding an open computer on campus.

Although there are 449 total computers on campus available to students, Mark Coen, a computer lab monitor in the Administration Building Room 221, says waiting to the last minute to use the machines is a mistake.

"During mid-terms and finals every machine we have is usually full," explained Coen. "People wait to the last minute and try to get everything done at one time and then get really frustrated because they don't have a computer they can work on."

Coen suggests that students try to get their papers done before the computer labs are packed.

"Don't put everything off until the last two weeks of school, or the week before Thanksgiving break or mid-terms because that's when we really get bottled up," said Coen.

Gordon Thomas, Director of the English Computer Writing Labs, says that students need to be aware that English 103 and 104 papers are often due on the same day. He said there are currently 940 students enrolled in English 103 and 843 students enrolled in English 104.

"We only have 56 computers, so the night before the papers are due, or the morning before, is usually a busy time," said Thomas.

The English Writing Lab is available to any student who is currently taking, or has taken, an English course at the university, said Thomas.

"This lab is different than other computer labs on campus," said Thomas. "Other labs are multipurpose labs, while here it's just one thing, for writing papers. So this is the best place for them to come to write their English papers."

New this year to the English computer lab is a laser printer. Thomas said there is a fee for printing on the laser printer, but that the dot matrix printers are still available to students at no charge.

Laser printers are also available in the Admin. Room 221 computer lab, said Coen. He again warns students not to wait to the last minute to do their printing.

"Many people will do their paper and think 'Well, I am busy so I'll come back 10 minutes before class and run it off on the laser printer', and then they'll come in here and there's a line 20 minutes long," said Coen.

Each one of the lab computers has its own printer if the student does not need a laser printer, emphasized Coen.

CS chariman enjoys helping students

By PATTI CROW
Contributing Writer

For Computer Science Chairman John Dickinson, "watching students be successful" is the most satisfying aspect of his work at the university, which has spanned almost 20 years.

While the growing department is still relatively young, Dickinson said that he has enjoyed helping students while they are here and seeing graduates move into advantageous careers.

Dickinson's position involves a "combination of lots of things," he said.

His job gives him the chance to talk with many current and perspective UI students along with their families who are seeking advice.

Many of their questions are about employment in the computer science area.

Dickinson said that job opportunities are good, and that there are varied ways in which people can get into the field.

Along with these activities, Dickinson also teaches and handles administrative duties.

He added that in spite of a small budget, the department has developed well, although more funding for improvements would be helpful.

Part of Idaho's present technology includes computer networks on the campus which among other things can connect someone in Moscow, Idaho to another person anywhere in the world as long as they're on the network system.

Dickinson said that this kind of advance has a lot of possibilities. One example would be giving students studying German a chance to converse with someone in Berlin right on the computer screen.

Students from all majors are informed about this kind of technology along with issues that surround computer science in the 100-level course.

Dickinson said that one of the goals of the introductory class is to have students under-

Students receive discount on Macs

By Jay Forman
Staff Writer

Need a computer? Now is the time to buy one, because through Oct. 15, The Computer Store (located in The Administration building) is selling Apple Macintoshes at low prices.

Computer Store Manager Max Nelson said, "It's safe to say that you can buy a Macintosh cheaper here than you can buy one anywhere else in the world."

The Computer Store is the only one in the area that sells Macintoshes. Because the store deals directly with the Apple factory, the Computer Store is selling the computers cheaper. As a bonus, service and maintenance comes with the package.

Why are University of Idaho students getting the computers at a discount? "Apple is doing this for students only," Nelson said. "The reason for this is that we don't want to step on the toes of other dealers. For example, we wouldn't want to have people from Spokane coming down to buy these computers cheaper than they could buy them in Spokane."

Only full-time students can take advantage of this deal, and Nelson punches the buyer's student ID card into the computer just to make sure that everything is legitimate.

Available for sale from the Computer Store is the Mac Classic, The LC II, The IIfx and The IIsi.

The Powerbook is also available, along with various printers. These prices are good through the middle of October, and since the UI is "low" on Apple's list, students who are serious should act soon.

The Computer Store offers computers only, but software for the Mac is available at the bookstore.

The Computer Store is a non-profit organization and Nelson said that he will get no commissions. "We're just here to make the computers available to the students. That's my job."

stand why they are taking it.

"Computers are not a fad," and the class shows students how they can be helpful to people, he said.

And Dickinson's students find him helpful as well.

Tamme Bowen, a 1992 CS graduate said that her major advisor is "a genuine person (who) makes himself available to students," and shows a lot of concern for their progress.

"He is a very good instructor," Bowen said, also adding that Dickinson asks students about how they think the CS program could be improved so that UI graduates can be more marketable.

Faulk on way to Heisman

LOREN
ROBERTS
Sports Editor

COMMENTARY

This year the Heisman trophy is going to rush into sunny southern California for the first time since USC's Marcus Allen took the award back in 1982.

For anyone who missed Saturday's opening day of college football, you missed an incredible performance by arguably the best running back in the country, San Diego State's Marshall Faulk. Faulk, a sophomore, rushed for a solid 220 yards on 27 carries, and scored three touchdowns in the Aztecs 31-31 tie with USC. He also caught three passes for 22 yards. One touchdown went for a high-stepping 59 yards, to help insure his seventh straight 100-yard game. An impressive day to spectators, but relatively average for a Faulk performance.

Last season as a freshman the native of New Orleans rushed the ball 201 times for 1,429 yards in 10 games after missing the first three. His best performance last year came against Pacific when he set a NCAA record for rushing as a freshman (386 yards) on 37 carries, and another record for seven touchdowns that day. Since then the total yard record has been outdone, but not the touchdowns.

For last year's performance Faulk was named to just a few top lists in college football. He was the Western Athletic Conference's Newcomer of the Year, first team all-WAC, and a first team all-American. This year will be no different for him as he adds a Heisman to his bag of awards.

The only thing that will deter Faulk's chances will be the fact that he is a sophomore, and there are two quarterbacks, a flanker, and another running back who are also favorites to win the award. These include Gino Torretta, QB, Miami; Rick Mirer, QB, Notre Dame; Qadry Ismail, FL, Syracuse; and Jerome Bettis, FB, Notre Dame. Players like running back Russell White of Cal, and quarterback Shane Mathews of Florida could also emerge as ones to watch as the season progresses.

People, especially in this area, are also talking about the outside chances of Drew Bledsoe at Washington State. The junior threw for some impressive numbers this past weekend against Montana: 413 yards, three touchdowns, and broke four school records. Bledsoe also attempted 66 passes, but in the process, was Normally, when a football team wins a game by 33 points, there is no room for second-guessing.

On Saturday, Vandal defensive standout Jeff Robinson felt differently.

The Vandals had just routed St. Cloud State 42-9, and Robinson stood outside the Vandal locker room summarizing the events of a game that was never really in doubt.

"Nothing against their guys, but there is no way they should have moved up and down the field like they did," said Robinson.

He was right as the NCAA Division II Huskies gave the bigger Vandals fits on the ground in rolling up 191 yards. However, Robinson may have been a little too critical of the Vandal effort. Witness the effort of the defensive backs.

Last year, the Vandal secondary frequently saw the backs of football jerseys as opponents threw for an average of 400 yards a game. Saturday, though, was a time for redemption as the Vandals gave up only 85 yards through the air.

In addition, the Vandals intercepted 4 SCSU passes after picking off only 10 all of last year. Sophomore linebacker Brian Wamsley provided the highlight interception after he stepped in front of an SCSU receiver on the left flat, picked off the pass and then raced 31 yards for the score.

UI cornerback David Gistarb, who also had an interception, was cautiously pleased with the effort of the secondary and the Vandals in general.

"We were a little rusty, but we started making things happen," said Gistarb. "We just need to avoid a repeat of last year where we didn't put people away after halftime."

Despite the reservations of the defensive players, the Vandal offense seemed to be in its usual high-octane state.

The Vandals piled up 428 yards in total offense, but the surprise was that quarterback Doug Nussmeier didn't have to air it out for the team to win.

The running game was the big factor in UI's win as the Vandals rushed for 183 yards and four of the six overall touchdowns. Nussmeier himself had the highest rushing totals after piling up 89 yards on only seven carries in addition to scoring on runs of 4, 5 and 28 yards.

Vandal head coach John L. Smith was excited about the options that Nussmeier's running had provided for the offense.

"Nussmeier running the ball like he did will open up all kinds of options for us," said Smith.

"When we can get Nuss out on the corner, that's extra pressure on the defense."

Noel Martin, the nine-year coach of the Huskies, was also impressed with Nussmeier.

"Sure he made some mistakes out there today, but it was the first game," said Martin. "He controls the ball well, and he will probably be an all-American."

Nonetheless, Martin had to be pleased with the way his team played against the Vandals. The Huskies hung tough with the Vandals, and after fullback Jim Holasek scored on a one-yard plunge with 13:23 left in the third quarter, the Huskies only trailed 21-9.

Perhaps this was the jumpstart that the Vandals needed. The Vandals used almost perfect offensive execution to score three touchdowns in its next four possessions. The Vandal scoring surge was capped by senior receiver Yo Muphy's 44-yard touchdown reception from Nussmeier.

Murphy led all Vandals with 154 yards on seven receptions, but he saw Nussmeier's running as the biggest plus for the Vandals.

"Nuss's running was the key to our win today," said Murphy. "When he runs like that, it makes us a more potent offensive threat," said Murphy.

Saturday's game, which was witnessed before only 7,750 fans, opened with immediate UI offensive fireworks. Nussmeier started the game's scoring at the 8:04 mark of the first quarter with a nifty 4-yard bootleg.

The fans had barely settled back into their seats before Wamsley broke on Jim Mauer's sideline pass and raced untouched with an interception that gave the Vandals a 14-0 lead with 6:32 left in the second quarter.

St. Cloud did manage a field goal, but that was all as the Vandals led 21-3 at halftime, thanks to a Wind Henderson 1-yard plunge with 2:02 left in the second quarter.

Almost everyone on the Vandals used words such as "rusty" and "lackluster" to describe the performance. However, a win is a win, and it will certainly give the Vandals some momentum heading into next week's game with Colorado State in Fort Collins.

Coach Smith admitted to looking at some CSU films over the summer, and he said there were some similarities on offense with St. Cloud. However, Smith said that CSU's opponent on Sept. 5, the Colorado Buffaloes, had used a new spread offense that compares favorably with what Idaho uses.

"I think we have a good chance against Colorado St. if we can execute our offense," said Smith. "Obviously, Colorado had some success against them (a 37-17 Colorado win)."

Volleyball team goes undefeated

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

It was home sweep home for the Idaho volleyball team last week. On Thursday the setters killed the likes of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, and Friday they blocked-off Lewis Clark State for the eleventh straight time.

In Thursday's match, Idaho (2-0, first place in BSC) took advantage of a much smaller and less aggressive Panther team, winning 15-0, 15-2, and 15-1. In the game 1, the tone was set early as Idaho began their scoring with a commanding kill by junior Jessica Puckett. It was just one of many kills to come as UI outspiked UWM, 32-4. However, despite the decisive victory over the independent squad, Head Coach Tom Hilbert still felt that his team lacked some of the play he's seen of late in practice.

"We need to pass better than we did," Hilbert said. "I've seen us play better in team practice matches, and one thing we need to work on is passing the ball."

The team play of UI was well-balanced throughout the night, with each player contributing at their respected position. Amie Hanks had a team-high 10 sets, and Dee Porter and Heather McEwen led the way attacking-wise with 13 kills each. McEwen said she was happy with the win, but agrees with Hilbert that there is some work to do before stronger competition begins.

"We need some work, but we're about where we should be right now," the senior outside hitter said. "There's always those first game nerves, but it was fun getting everyone in to see how they could do."

For the Panthers, though, it didn't matter what UI player was in or who wasn't. Idaho had a 48 percent team-attack percentage against UWM's minus 24 percent. UI also out-set UWM 23-7, ment for Idaho.

"I tell you, in the past four years that team (LCSC) has gotten better and better," Hilbert said. "They have really got a good program growing down there."

As with the UWM match, the first point of game one against LCSC was a preview of what was in store. Middle-blocker Brittany Van Haverbeke blocked a LCSC spike to begin an 11-0 run by Idaho. Last season's Big Sky Freshman of the Year finished the match with four solo blocks, and another nine assisted. To better her performance from a year ago, Van Haverbeke is sticking with what she knows.

"(This season) I'm concentrating more, and doing my best not to swing my arms down when I block. As far as changing anything this year I haven't. I'm just continuing to improve and learn more."

Came two began just as game one did, with a block for a point by Van Haverbeke. But LCSC put their game together, and played tough to post leads of 5-2, and 7-4. The Warriors got their offense going, and Idaho was suddenly on the defensive.

"They got some offense going, and controlled the ball in transition," Hilbert said. "They did a good job in the second game of picking it up when we slowed down. We broke down passing, but they also served well."

as well as posting a 23-14 advantage in digs.

On Friday, LCSC came up to the Palouse only to be sent back down the Lewiston Grade without a win over UI, which last occurred for the NAIA team back in 1983. Although UI won in straight sets 15-2, 15-10, and 15-3, LCSC was a much better oppo-

Idaho didn't fold as they tied the score at 10-10 to force LCSC to call time-out. After the time-out, UI poured it on, scoring the next five points to take the second game of the match. From then on the home team shifted into high-gear to take the third game with no worries.

"The third game was blocking and defense," Hilbert said. "Tonight we blocked the ball very, very well."

Idaho out-blocked the Warriors 23-7.

Along with the strong play of the team was the strong support of two vocal crowds at last week's matches. Thursday's attendance was 625, and 712 were counted on Friday. Hilbert was impressed with the show of fans, and is hoping the numbers will increase as the season progresses.

"I was real happy with the crowds," Hilbert said. "It was great to have people support us, and that's a real positive. I hope they will come out like this for conference."

Fans will have their chance to show support for Hilbert and his squad again this Friday and Saturday at the Safeco Volleyball Classic. Friday Idaho takes on Utah State (1-4) at 7:30 p.m., and then Simon Fraser (0-0) at noon before facing Cal Poly State University at 7:30. All matches are on campus at Memorial Gym.

O'Brien gets world record

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

Former University of Idaho student Dan O'Brien broke the decathlon world record Saturday in Talence, France.

The 26-year-old, who graduated from UI in 1989, accumulated 8,891 points in the ten stage event, beating the old mark of 8,847 set by Daley Thompson in the '84 Olympics. O'Brien was the favorite to win the event at the Olympics this summer in Barcelona before he no-heighted in the pole vault at the trials in New Orleans, eliminating his chances of competing.

"Before I used to say the world's greatest athlete was Daley Thompson," O'Brien said in a wire report. "Now I have to say myself at this point. Finally."

Remembered by many for his role in the infamous "Dan or Dave: To be settled in Barcelona" commercials with Dave Johnson, O'Brien set four personal bests, and beat Olympic gold medalist Robert Zmelik of Czechoslovakia by 547 points.

The only scare in the meet occurred when O'Brien failed to clear 15-1 in the pole vault on the first try. On his second try he cleared the height with ease.

"New Orleans was on my mind entirely," O'Brien said. "But I knew I could make the opening height. And once I made the opening height I knew I had a shot at the record."

Student wins free tuition

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

A University of Idaho student was at the right place at the right time last Friday night.

The place was Memorial Gym, and the time was during the Idaho-LCSC volleyball game. The student, Susannah Hole, and her friends were enjoying the match when her name was announced over the loudspeaker between matches. The announcer said that if Hole could get to the scorer's table in two minutes or less she'd win free tuition next semester compliments of Taco Time.

"My name isn't one that sounds familiar to me so I when I first heard him call it out it sounded real foreign to me," Hole said. "Then my friends started shaking me saying 'that's you', and I guess my eyes got as big as silver dollars."

To be specific, more like 648 silver dollars.

The sophomore from Orofino, ID made it to the table in plenty of time to claim her prize of in-state tuition. Taco Time has been sponsoring the "Taco Time Tuition" for two years, and this was their first winner in that span.

"It's the first game I'd been to this season, but I did go to a few of them last year."

Hole, a forestry major, said the money will be icing on the cake to help pay for her education next semester.

"I got a pell grant this year, so this is just going to help out even more."

intercepted four times, and fumbled the ball twice. With such a strong field for the Heisman, the lack of national exposure could hurt Bledsoe, along with his turnover to touchdown ratio. It was the first game, however, and he'll recover to throw for 3,500 yards, and 25 touchdowns.

But when a Gino Torretta throws for 443 yards against a nationally ranked team on national television, the Bledsoe's of the country will have a tough time competing for the award given to college's best player.

But, regardless of where they play, who they play for, and who they play against, no one is going to beat out Faulk.

The UI ice hockey club will be holding an informational meeting Monday, Sept. 14 at 7:00 p.m. in the Appaloosa room in the Student Union Building. Any students interested in trying out must attend to register.

Organizer Scott Squires said that numerous people are already interested in playing.

"We had about 30 kids call at the end of last year, and another 10 or 15 this year," Squires said.

The club will be competing on the weekends in Spokane since Moscow lacks a rink. Some of the competition will include Gonzaga, WSU, University of Washington, a few club teams in Seattle, and a junior hockey team in Spokane called the Outlaws.

Murdoc's reopens under new manager

By JACKIE WOODS
Contributing Writer

Doc's is dead, but Murdoc's is alive and ready to rock and roll. Murdoc's, a bar located on main street next to the fire station, changed more than its name this summer, according to manager Robert Welsh.

The former rap club now features live rock and roll music, and allows in only persons 21 years of age or older, said Welsh. Last year, 18-year-olds and older were allowed into the bar.

A local band, Twist of Fate, will be playing contemporary blues and original material on Thursday nights for "Blues Night." Welsh said he enjoys giving local bands a chance to show their stuff.

"I am willing to give bands exposure if they've never been heard, but I want to hear them first," said Welsh. "I will only put quality musicians up there. I don't want somebody whose been playing a guitar for two weeks to jump up on stage."

Sunday and Tuesday nights are now "Jam Nights" at Murdoc's, where members of various bands come to jam on stage.

"There are a lot of local musicians that have been wanting a place to play, and they are good bands," said Welsh. "One jam night we had members of eight different bands from this area here playing."

Welsh said there's been a lot of interest in a Reggae Night. "If people will come in and support a live Reggae band on a weekly basis, I would do it," said Welsh. "People have to come down and talk to me. I've got to hear what people want and I am willing to work with anybody, as long as it's reasonable."

Besides scheduling bands, Welsh is busy creating fancy drinks and magical maneuvers behind the bar.

"My drink making is getting me bookings at fraternity parties right now," said Welsh. "I have shooters that taste like bubble gum, I can do pinstripe drinks, and I can throw the bottles, or do the 'Tom Cruise thing' as they call it."

But don't look to come away with any secrets after trying one of Welsh's drinks, as he will not reveal any of his original recipes.

Murdoc's has many drink specials throughout the week, but Welsh said people need to come in because they have something different going on all the time.

"I really allow my bartenders to wheel and deal, so they might run hourly specials instead of a nightly special," explained Welsh.

"I am not promoting people coming in to get bombed," emphasized Welsh. "I want everyone to have a good time, but I want them to be responsible about it."

He said the bar also serves a full line of non-alcoholic drinks that are fairly unique.

In addition to the new music format, the bar now has pool tables and a big screen TV.

"Monday nights, you can shoot pool and watch football at the same time," said Welsh.

Ray Newton, the new owner, would like the bar to be more like the old Murdoc's that was located on 6th Street next to Taco Time. The former owner changed the name to Doc's and the music to rap when the bar moved to its current location two years ago.

"I thought it was like Pizza Hut with black lights and bad music," said Dianna Braginton-Smith, a junior in Graphic Design and Visual Communication at the UI, when describing Doc's. "I haven't been to the new place, but I heard they have pool which is good."

The time is right to check out Murdoc's since the bar has a full line of bands scheduled for this week, said Welsh. Wednesday night the bar is featuring the local band Sleepy Handful and Thursday night Twist of Fate is playing. Friday and Saturday night the band Evil Chuck from Pullman will be playing classical and contemporary rock.

Alice in Chains' performance brings a "mosh" to UI.

Alice in Chains shackles crowd with grunge

By STEVE CORDA
Staff Writer

The scene is about confrontation, and Alice in Chains lead singer, Layne Staley made that clear when he reassured himself he was in "Moscow, Idaho not Moscow, Russia, right?" and suggested that someone tell that to the "pistol-packin' redneck" cop in charge of crowd control at the UI SUB Friday night.

Staley tried to smooth things out by later defending, "Officer Friendly, just doing his job...Prick!" And he took law enforcement into his own hands by telling the crowd gathered on non-smoking University property, "I just got word, it's o.k. to smoke."

Too many people have been talking about the grunge music scene and calling Seattle the music capital of the world, but the truth is that a great new sound grew up there and now has the world taking notice. It's a sound fueled by anger, distrust, and the need to be something that is both different and true. It could have come from anywhere there was a disaffected youth movement, but it didn't, it came from Seattle. And one of the pioneers was Alice In Chains.

Grunge succeeded in bringing alternative music to the mainstream by plugging into the anger of a generation that's fed up. They're fed up with the feeling that their future has been mortgaged. They're fed up with facades and restraint. They're fed up with society values that rob them of their individuality and at the same time take away their hope. They fight back by rejecting that society, and they are finding a growing voice in America.

As proof of both the success and idea of the Seattle scene, Alice in Chains returned to the Northwest for a small venue tour. It's a shrewd move on their part: playing smaller towns gives them a chance to iron out the bugs in the live performance of songs from their new album, "Dirt," and at the same time keeps them in touch with loyal fans who could have been alienated by their move to a larger scale tour.

The Palouse crowd certainly appreciated it. They eagerly welcomed the opening act, Gruntruck, and warmed up the mosh pit by passing the band's lead singer around.

Gruntruck has learned the lessons of the Grunge scene well. They displayed a competent mixture of pretty boy strut, heavy metal riffs, and pounding drums, but the night belonged to Alice in Chains.

There was some murmuring before the show from people afraid that they had wasted money on tickets for a show that Alice would only blow off and walk through. But when the band took the stage to a lake (the SUB's not big enough to hold a sea) of waving arms and pumping fists, most people forgot their doubts. When Layne Staley sidled up to the microphone with his spooky leather clad stage presence that's a cross between a praying mantis and Hermie, the elf who didn't want to make toys, and launched into the band's crisis of faith anthem, Man in the Box, everyone knew they were going to get their money's worth.

What followed was a tight set that never lost energy, and kept the audience in a frenzy. (Three security guards contained a fight that broke out in the lull between Gruntruck and Alice in Chains, and escorted the two participants out. This temporarily left the stagefront security crew short-handed. The ban on stage diving lasted less than two songs.) The band unveiled new material from Dirt and a new level of musical accomplishment.

The basic elements were still

Palouse Parachute Club Phase II teaches virgin sky-divers

By CHRIS MILLER
Contributing Writer

As I let go of the plane, gravity ceased to be something that merely held my feet on the ground. It grabbed hold of my insides in an intimate hug that made my stomach leap up into my throat and blow up like a balloon before it exploded in an out-rush of air that screamed, "Holeee Shiittt!"

That's what happens to virgin sky-divers...a wild rush that culminates into total sensory overload.

"It was beautiful! It was awesome! I can't even think right now!" said University of Idaho student Teresa Nesel after her first jump.

Palouse Parachute Club Phase II (PPC) offered first-jump parachuting classes last weekend for the first time in four years, and in less than two weeks over 11 virgin divers took their first leap into 4000 feet of empty air.

"Boy that's a rush - going out of the plane!" said Kevin Spence of Moscow. "What a trip!"

Before a virgin diver actually takes the plunge, he must first complete an intensive on-the-ground training course that lasts about four hours. The student jumper will learn about proper jump form, canopy deployment, how to land, and what to do in case of emergencies.

"Hey, we've never lost anyone yet," said Joel "Sky-God" Anderson, founder of Palouse Parachute Club Phase II. Anderson has jumped over 1500 times—and he still loves the sport.

The club was first formed in 1968, but interest waned and the club died out in 1988. Anderson and other "aviation junkies" saw the area gain interest in sky-diving, and decided to give the club another shot. "Palouse Parachute Club is a non-profit organization," Anderson said. "Essentially we just want the place to support itself."

Kelly Moore, co-founder of PPC, said that the club is here "to promote sky-diving and general aviation. We just want to get a lot of people into aviation as cheaply as possible."

That's why it costs just $150 for the first jump course and only $40 or less for each jump thereafter. If looked at from the perspective of the pocket-book, jumpers can get two dives for what would be the price of one at other first-jump schools, the nearest of which is in Spokane.

The club is situated in an ideal location, right between the University of Idaho and Washington State University. "We mostly get students in the 18-24 year-old range group," said Anderson.

"But once we had a 55-year-old grandmother take two dives."

Kevin Owen, "a sky-diving reprobate" and jump-master of PPC, said that most people try to compare parachuting to bungee-jumping, and that those who have tried both never go back to bungee-jumping. "There's nothing that will compare to freefall—or your first jump," Owen said.

In fact, when it comes to recruiting new students, the club's motto is "Better than bungee." Owen said that in one bungee-jump "you've seen all that the sport has to offer," but that in sky-diving you learn more and open new doors with every jump. Brent Pimienta, a criminal justice student at the UI, said that he was more scared bungi-jumping than parachuting, despite the 4000 feet difference. "They (bungi-jumping outfits) don't tell you nothing. They just put you in line," he said.

The PPC takes special care to make sure students are prepared both mentally and physically for the jump. After four hours of training, most students feel reasonably comfortable with the idea, but a little fear is always expected to hide in the back of the mind. "The biggest problem is fear. If I don't think you're ready though, you won't jump," Anderson said.

All new jumps are off a "static line." From the plane, the jumpmaster will hold a pilot chute that acts as an anchor that will pull open the main canopy. Once the student steps off the plane, he will reach a speed of about 85 mph in the 3-4 seconds it will take for his canopy to "automatically" open. Anderson said that the reserve chute is rarely used, but the students are rigorously trained to deal with malfunctions despite the long odds of main canopy failure. "Just like motorists take along a spare tire, parachutists take an extra chute. And it usually gets us back to town," he said.

Hang-time with the square canopies the club uses lasts anywhere from four to ten minutes, depending on the weight of the jumper and weather conditions. The canopies are steerable and super easy to maneuver. Radio contact is also maintained with each student from the moment he leaves the plane to the instant he touches the ground. Through reassuring radio instructions, most students actually hit the intended drop zone safely.

Like a nasty street drug, (but a whole lot safer) sky-diving hooked nearly all the students.

Students who think they want to try parachuting, but aren't positive yet, can feel free to "drop" in at the club and watch how everything works. The PPC jumps most afternoons and is based at the east-end of the Pullman-Moscow Airport along with the Palouse Soaring Society (which also offers sail-plane flights for those with tame appetites). The base of operations is in a white trailer that can't be missed from the airport highway. Their number is 883-1133. Leave a message if nobody answers, they're probably in free fall.

intact. Micheal Starr's crunching bass line, Sean Kinney's simultaneously frenzied and hypnotic drum work, and Jerry Cantrell's guitar riffs that ranged from droning metal takes to melodic groundwork provide a springboard for Staley's vocals to alternately soar above or plumb the depths of Alice's often insightful lyrics.

What's changed is the band's ability to change gears more consistently. The new songs show a deeper understanding of dynamics and rythm as the band finds the whisper to complement their powerful scream and the syncopation that speaks more strongly than a swagger.

Some die hard fans would have liked to hear more of the band's older stuff. But when the show ended with a highly polished, surprisingly sensitive, version of Would?, it was obvious that Alice in Chains had reinvented themselves ever so slightly and part of the excitement of the show was the way they brought the audience with them.

UI Grad Opens Biking Business

By KARIN MASON
Staff Writer

Toby Feuling has it made. At only 22 years of age, he has a college degree and his own business. And as if that's not enough, he's a river guide in the summer and a ski bum in the winter.

Feuling, a 1992 public relations graduate from the University of Idaho, and his dad, Jim, have opened up Alpine Designs, their own line of mountain bikes.

"We had the idea that there's got to be a way to sell a high-quality mountain bike for a lower price than the retail stores," Toby said.

Toby being an avid mountain biker and a former college student also said, "We looked at the college markets and thought that it was a prime target because so many students use mountain bikes. It seems like they would be willing to try a new product and recognize a good deal when they saw one."

The Feulings got Alpine Designs started when they visited Taiwan last spring and attended the Taipei International Bicycle show, which was being held at the world trade center there. All major bike manufacturers from America to Europe were at the convention. So this gave the Feulings a chance to check out all the new designs and products for the next season. The Feulings were able to search for a company to make their bikes and settled on the company which also makes bikes for Specialized, Fischer and other well-known brands.

The trip to Taiwan was an eye-opener for Toby in realizing what kind of efforts it will take to have his own company.

"Taiwan was a great learning experience because I got to wheel and deal with all kinds of different business people and learn a lot more about the inner workings of the bike business," Toby said.

The Feulings did business in Taiwan from 6 a.m. to 10 p.m. each day, but Toby said they still found time to have some fun. "Snake Alley was one of the great sights we saw," Toby said. "They sell everything from freshly squeezed snake blood to goats' heads."

Toby has definitely put his degree in public relations to work in Taiwan, as well as with his new business.

"I've gone around getting ads, dealing with cross-cultural and lingual barriers in Taiwan and finding effective means to get publicity. Generally, I use my p.r. skills dealing with people and setting up a communication campaign for the company," he said. Right now, Alpine Designs has a warehouse set up in Sandpoint where the Feulings are from. The bikes are stored and assembled there, and can be found in a retail outlet called Bruce's Place.

"The bikes have been selling well since August. In the future, we hope to make some more buying trips to Taiwan and increase our model line and inventory. And eventually set up some small retail outlets in the Northwest," Toby said.

Alpine Designs will be in Moscow this weekend to see how the bikes do here. The sale will be held at the Latah County Grain Growers Association auditorium which is across from Gambino's on 6th Street. It will start Friday from 5 - 9 p.m., Saturday from 9 a.m. to 8 p.m. and Sunday from 9 a.m. to 1 p.m.

Toby's advice for budding entrepreneurs, "If you're gonna dream, dream big, pursue it and put it into reality."

For Toby's own future plans, "I'm gonna run the bike business until the snow flies and then my bike business will be competing with my time at Schweitzer and skiing the backcountry."
