Where's the party? College Conservatives

By BRANDY CORGATELLI
Staff Writer

The College Republicans meet together to generate support for their candidates but feel the group has an even greater mission on campus, according to College Republican President Richard Rock.

"Certainly the ultimate goal (for the group) is to get Republicans elected," Rock said.

However, the group sponsors candidate visits and helps register voters so people will vote and will have good information when they vote, regardless of their political choice, Rock said.

Carmen Mendez, a UI junior who has been involved with Republican groups since high school, said helping inform voters is a crucial concern.

"Students need to go out and find out what the issues are and what (and who) they really want," Mendez said. She said the job of the College Republicans is "to educate the community as to the philosophies that Republican candidates hold and hopefully that is what the constituents will want."

College Republicans feel they have a reason for optimism this year. "The Republican Party has some of the best candidates I've seen for years," Rock said. "This should be a good year for Republicans in the state of Idaho."

"I think Dirk Kempthorne has an excellent chance against Richard Stallings," Micheal Blower, a senior marketing major who joined the College Republicans two years ago, said.

Issues that College Republicans generally rally around include tax breaks, controlling the federal deficit by freezing federal spending, limiting congressional terms, and protecting private property rights among others, according to Mendez.

Mendez said if there is one major issue where some College Republicans might break with the national party stand, it's on abortion. She was quick to say this isn't just a Republican party problem, though.

"Abortion is a very emotional, spiritual, and individualistic issue,"

Democrats downtown

By BETSY CARVER
Staff Writer

The Democratic party headquarters is ready and waiting in downtown Moscow to answer questions about all up coming elections and their parties candidate in each.

The very spacious store front room on Main Street has been in operation since the August 29 grand opening where Democratic candidate for US Senate, Richard Stallings, cut the red ribbon. Lynn Henegen, Democratic Headquarters Chairperson and now North Idaho Campaign Coordinator and Regional Director, said the headquarters will remain open until the November third election day to service anyone who wants more information on the candidates, how to register to vote, or yard signs.

The headquarters is run primarily by volunteers. "I walked in the door and said I wanted to volunteer," said Sue Westervelt from behind the main headquarters desk. Anyone who is interested in volunteering for the Democratic booth at the Latah County Fair should do the same.

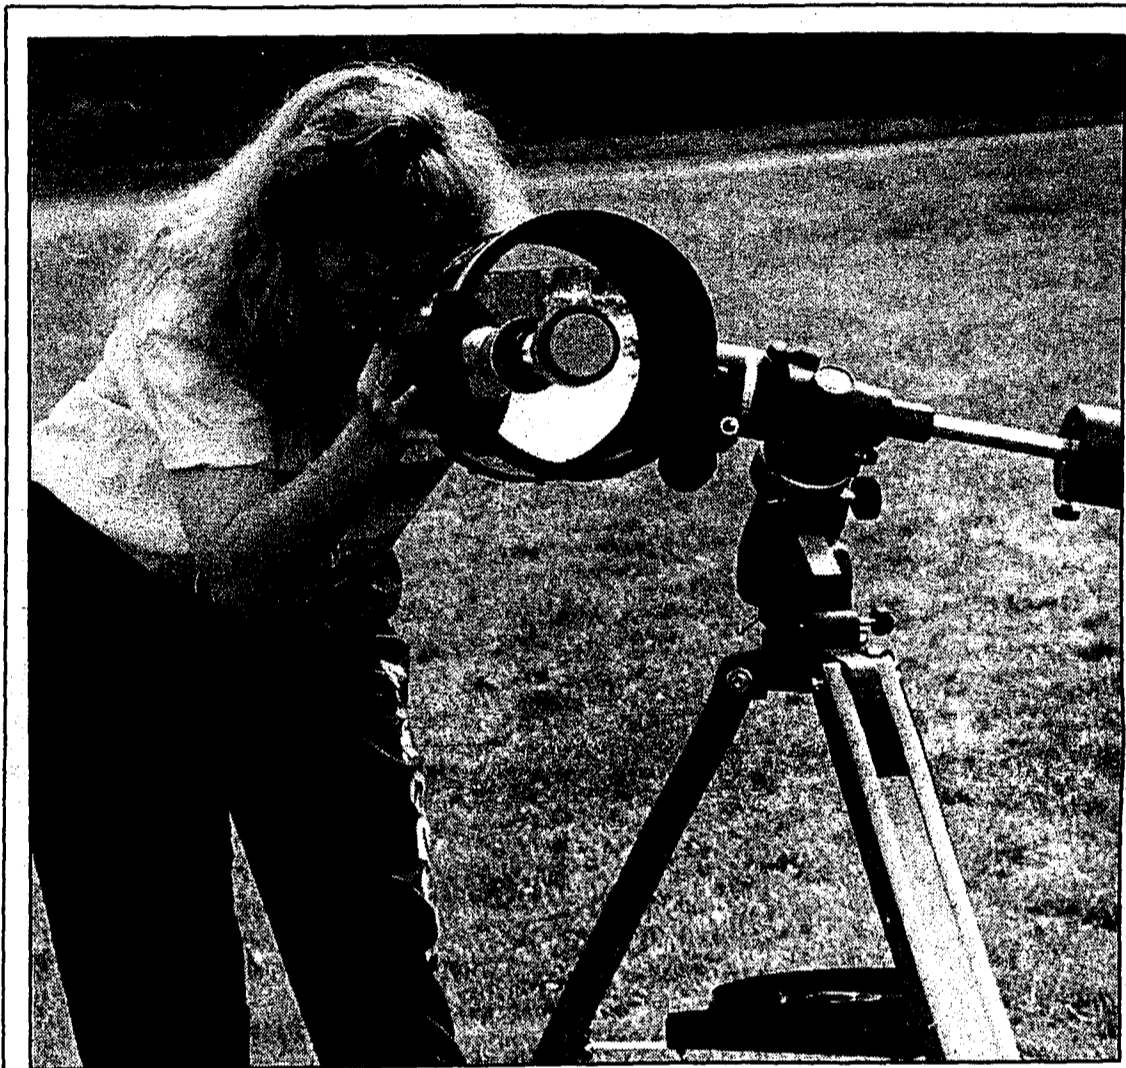

The purpose of the fair booth is to give candidates even more exposure to the public prior to the ballot box. "It benefits those who are not as well known. We are showcasing all of the candidates," volunteer Paul Brown said. Brown is a Moscow Lawyer, as well as working on the Stallings campaign and co-chair for the committee to elect Louise Regelin to the Idaho State House of Representatives.

There are seven local and state races and three national races focused on by the headquarters, which is open Monday through Friday from 11 am to 7 pm, and Saturdays from 9 to noon.

"We are trying to get Hilary Clinton to come speak," said UI student Adam Cochran, who is doing a 200 hour Political Science internship for the Democratic Party.

Goals of the Latah County Democratic Headquarters are:
■ To encourage as many people as possible to register and vote.

Animal rights or wrongs? The ALF

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

One of the current ethical issues in the scientific community concerns the use of animals in research facilities.

While animal rights groups object to what they feel are unjustified experiments on animals, scientists respond by saying that animal research is critical to understanding unknown biological processes.

As a result, a lecture series concerned with ethical questions in animal research is now under way at the University of Idaho.

The series opened in the UI College of Law courtroom on Sept. 8. Mark Frankel, who is director of the scientific freedom, responsibility and law program for the American Association for the Advancement of Science, gave the keynote speech.

Frankel's speech gave a basic framework concerning ethics and research. Although he didn't focus specifically on animal research, one of the program coordinators, Roger Wallins, said it was a good beginning.

"Mark's talk was a good place for this to begin," said Wallins.

"As the lecture series progresses, the theme of animal rights in research will start to emerge."

Wallins, associate dean of graduate studies and a UI English professor, said that the aim of the series is to give an objective look at the concerns of both animal rights activists and researchers.

"There are strong feelings on both sides of this issue, and so the goal for this series is education instead of confrontation."

— Roger Wallins
Associate Dean, Graduate Studies

"There are strong feelings on both sides of this issue, and so the goal for this series is education instead of confrontation," said Wallins.

In recent years, animal rights groups have popped up in the media, but most of the publicity is negative as a result of violent acts by extremist factions like the Animal Liberation Front (ALF).

The local research community hasn't been unaffected by violence from animal rights groups.

Last summer, the ALF raided research facilities at Washington State University, and kidnapped several coyotes, mink, and mice. They also destroyed lab equipment and vandalized the buildings.

WSU Detective Sergeant Don Maupin said that the crimes are being investigated on both a campus and a federal level since the lab equipment was provided by the United States Department of Agriculture.

"These are serious charges, and on the state level, they could be charged with burglary and trespassing," said Maupin. "In addition, they could be charged under a new state code that makes it a felony to enter and damage research facilities."

Researchers are aware of the problems imposed by their work with animals, but one UI profes-

UI professor receives research grant

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

A University of Idaho professor is aiming to not only increase understanding of plants, but ominous diseases like cancer and AIDS as well.

Dr. Nancy Federspiel, a UI biochemistry teacher, has received a $205,000 three year grant from the National Science Foundation to study gene regulation in cyano bacteria.

Federspiel said her laboratory is studying cyano (formerly called blue-green algae) bacteria because this organism has unique light receptors, which can change its pigments under different levels of sunlight. In turn, this absorbed sunlight is harvested by the bacteria to maximize its food intake in the process known as photosynthesis.

It is the aim of Federspiel's group to go beyond understanding the bacteria's pigments, and how they work with light conditions. What interests this group is how DNA regulation is affected by these receptors.

LuAnn Scott, who is one of Federspiel's lab technicians, summarized the intent for this project.

"Our aim here is to break down the individual components of the photoreceptors, and see how they work in changing the DNA of the bacteria," said Scott.

Federspiel said that this project is part of a growing scientific interest in the idea of signal transduction, which is the catch word for any outside force or signal that enters a cell and causes a change in the cell's genetic structure.

"Our work on signal transduction in cyano bacteria is part of the growing interest in signal transduction," said Federspiel. "Understanding how genetic processes work in simple cells could really pay off one day for mankind."

The ramifications of this project could be used to understand the complex diversity of acquired immune deficiency syndrome (AIDS) or cancer genes. Federspiel said that the scientific world has been stymied by these two diseases largely because outside forces seem to have a profound effect on how they operate. According to Federspiel, if scientists could understand how the genetic material changes in say a cancer cell, a cure might be attained more quickly.

Federspiel also said that this kind of experiment might have profound effects on the agricultural

Police put the 'brakes' on bicyclists

By SHARI IRETON
Assistant News Editor

On their way to classes at the University of Idaho, many students have found themselves dodging what seems to be a runaway bicyclist. These riders who kindle fear, however, may find themselves skidding to a sudden halt when someone starts handing out tickets.

Police have stated that they will start cracking down on the violators of bicycle laws due to complaints.

"We've recieved a constant barrage about bicycles," said Moscow Police Lt. Jake Kershnik, patrol division commander. He said that the police have been giving verbal warnings the first few weeks of school, but that they are going to come down harder. "The warnings have done their job with those who have heeded them," said Kershnik.

Officers that patrol campus on their bicycles will be watching out for offenders and stopping them. Kershnik said that he doesn't think too many people will be trying to outrun the police. "It's always in a person's best interest not to evade us...those who try, run the risk of receiving a citation."

• Any person operating a bicycle at less than the normal speed of traffic must ride as close as possible to the right hand curb of roadway.

• Any person operating a bicycle along a sidewalk or across a crosswalk, must yield the right of way to any pedestrian, and must give an audibal signal before overtaking them.

• Every bicycle in use one half hour before sunset until one half hour after sunrise must be operated with a light visible from a distance of a least five hundred feet to the front and with a reflector clearly visible from the back.

Paul Stimac, president of the UI Cycling Club, feels that the laws are pretty fair. His only complaint about riding a bicycle is the lack of space for bike parking on campus.

For Dave Peckham, Palouse Clearwater Environmental Institute's transportation program coordinator, the bicycle issue is an environmental and educational one.

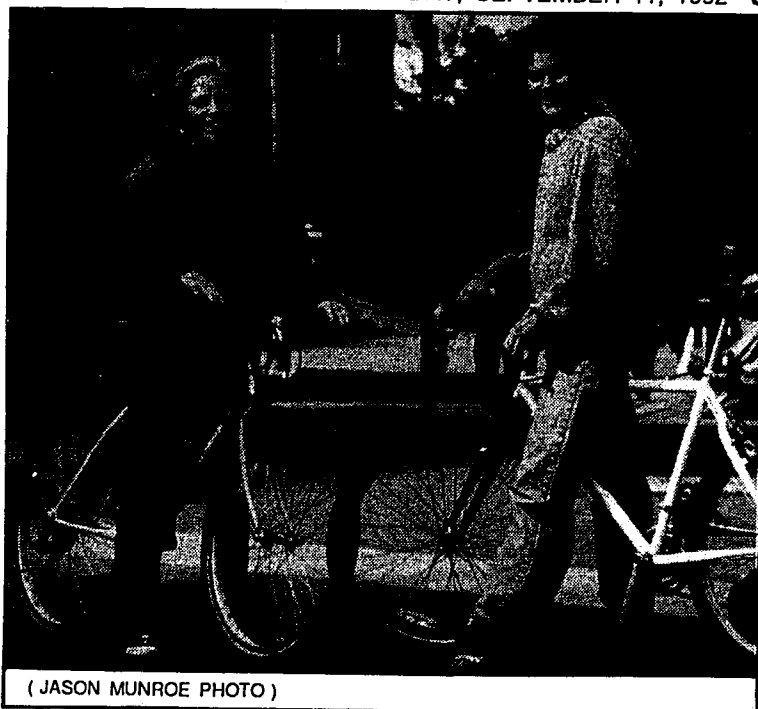

According to him, there are three kinds of bicyclists. Ones who will always ride their bikes and are not intimidated by traffic, ones who want some separation from traffic and bicycles and ones who want complete separation, such as children. Peckham said he would like to see more people become comfortable with riding bikes in traffic and using them as a main source of transportation.

"I want to work to encourage people to use bikes," he said.

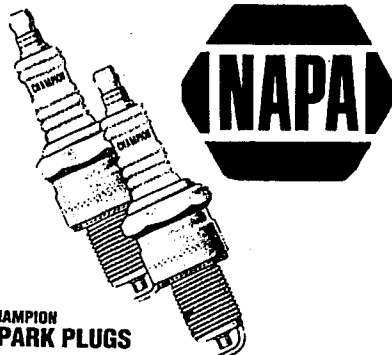

Peckham said the main problem bicyclists face is dealing with motorists.

"Bicyclists are generally the safest when they are out in traffic," he said, "but motor vehicle operators need to have more respect for (them)." Bicyclists should not have to

Fischer is a few pawns short, no matter what he thinks

Bobby Fischer thinks he is the world's best chess player. Bobby Fischer thinks he can get away with just about anything, since he is a legend in the chess world. Bobby Fischer thinks he should be able to bully the media and his opponents without getting bullied back.

Bobby Fischer thinks a lot. Unfortunately he really doesn't know much at all.

Fischer, the world chess champion from 1972 to 1975, is involved in a rematch with Boris Spassky in the Yugoslavian resort town of Sveti Stefan. Fischer defeated Spassky to win the world championship 20 years ago.

The prize for which the men are playing? A cool $5 million. Not bad for moving a bunch of white and black figurines around a checkerboard.

At one time — maybe — Fischer was a sane individual, capable of thinking logically about things other than his beloved chess. However, after he defeated Spassky in 1972, his ego went ballistic.

Perhaps, during the past 20 years, he spent too many days pondering his own importance. Or perhaps he thought that since he ruled over his own private empire for two decades, he now has the ability to be emperor of us all. His tactics have shown him to be a megalomaniac and an ugly human being.

Fischer maintains that he is still the best chess player in the world, while Spassky is currently tied for 96th in the world chess rankings. When he was asked why the match is tied 1-1 if he is in fact still the top dog, Fischer replied: "I think I'm doing quite well, considering I've been blacklisted for the last 20 years by world Jewry."

You just can't trust those dirty Jews to let little Bobby be his own man, now can you?

But Jews aren't the only demons haunting his mind. Fischer sued Time-Warner for defamation of character and breach of contract. After a United States District Court threw out his suit as groundless, Fischer countered by saying he believes "the U.S. government and Time-Warner entered into a criminal conspiracy to cheat me out of hundreds of millions of dollars." Horrors!

That is the reason why he has not filed or paid federal or California income tax in 15 years.

At an earlier news conference, Fischer spat on a letter from the U.S. government that warned him of a possible fine of $250,000 and imprisonment of up to 10 years for violating United Nations sanctions against Yugoslavia.

Fischer spat on the letter because, frankly, death and destruction don't mean much to a person hypnotized by his own grandeur. Fischer has not been struck by the fearful symmetry of thousands of Bosnians dying less than a hundred miles away while he sits before a chess board with $5 million on the line.

Win, lose or draw, it would be a compassionate gesture for Fischer to donate some of his winnings, if he does win, to a Bosnian relief organization.

Of course he won't, so the next best thing he can do is disappear back into anonymity once the final checkmate is called.

In pursuit of the Emperor

I saw Boutros Ghali on CNN last night, and I was worried.

But then I'm sure we've all spent desparate Moscow winter nights wondering: "What will happen to us if Boutros Ghali suddenly dies?"

Then I remembered something that made me calm again. I settled back into my mysterious blonde female companion's futon and told her.

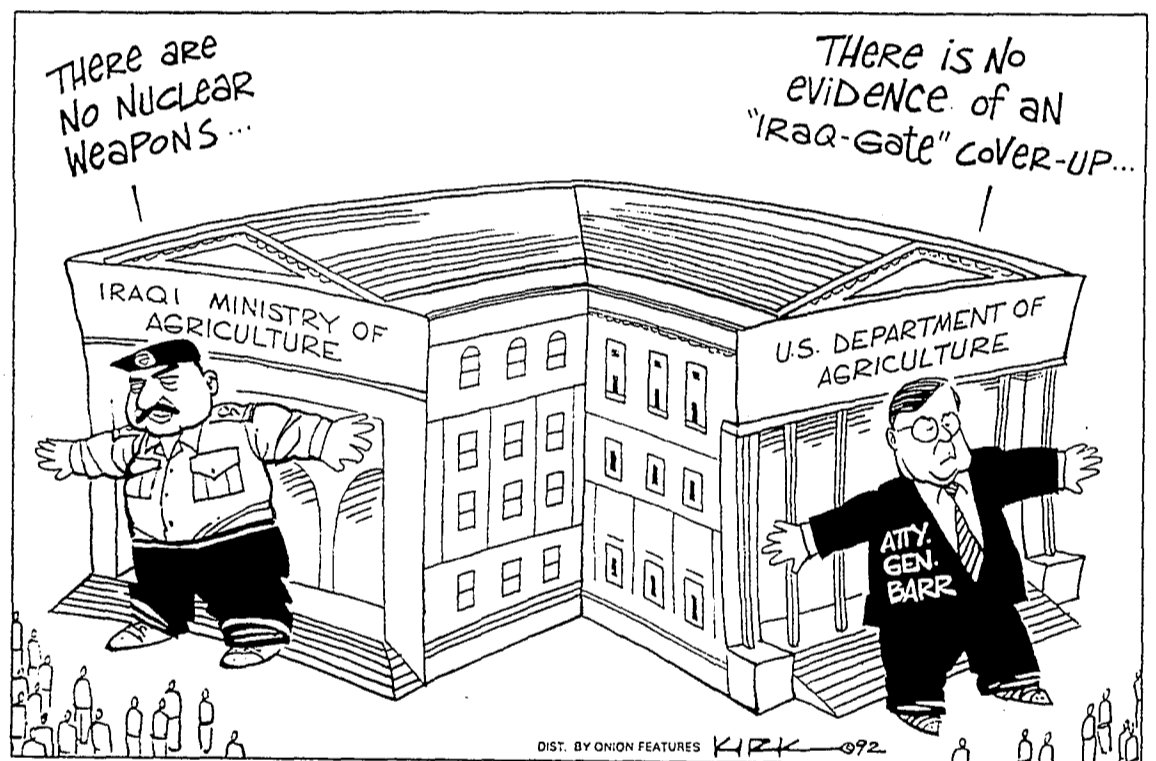

"We'll be all right. After all we live in the Palouse Empire. No matter what happens, the Emperor will take care of us. He'll probably even take over if anything happens to Boutros, don't you think?"

"Yeah sure, of course he will," she said and went on ignoring me.

(If you don't know about or remember last year's sordid Boutros Ghali vs. Mark Rypien controversy, you can either bring yourself up to speed or not worry about it. It doesn't really matter to anyone but me, and it doesn't matter to me all that much.)

I had never before truly realized all the possibilities of living in an empire. Not any old empire either, but one that encompasses

Where there's smoke, there's furor

As I approached the front doors of the library, I was unaware of the heated drama unfolding before me.

A woman about 10 long paces ahead of me shot a glance towards an older man. Normally, she probably wouldn't have given this man the time of day, but he had mistakenly chosen to partake of the evil hedonistic pleasure known as smoking.

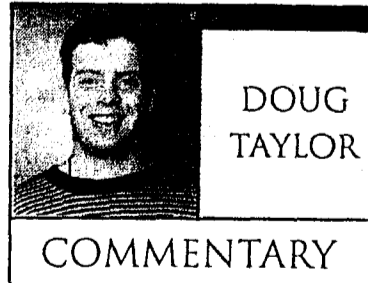

With a facial appearance of quiet serenity, the man took a drag off the cigarette and blew out the smoke. No big deal here, but his smoke cloud had drifted partly into the path of the oncoming woman.

The lady stopped dead in her tracks and clenched her right fist. I had a premonition that this confrontation would be good, so I scrambled to get a better view.

The lady fired the first cannon. "Your smoke puff is in the path where I was going to enter the library," the lady sputtered. "I don't want to catch lung cancer from your filthy habit."

Wow, I thought to myself. Pretty good opening shot. How is this guy going to rebound from something like that?

He simply smiled and blew smoke in her face.

Incredible. An even better volley. This was shaping up like one of those five-hour Ivan Lendl tennis matches where people's heads are continually swiveling back and forth as they follow the action.

My daydreaming was costing me some witty dialogue.

"...and further more, I will bill you for any lung ailments," said the woman.

I rotated my head in the direction of the man, and he smiled again. He proceeded to give the woman the fickle finger of fate before dropping the cigarette butt at her foot. He then walked off.

The crowd dissipated, and I resumed my path into the library. Sitting down, I realized that smokers are quickly becoming modern-day lepers, but I was curious as to why.

Is it because of the fear of lung cancer and other ailments associated with smoking? Is it because they are forced outside to smoke where they huddle together like lost puppies? Is it because smoking gives you that not-so-fresh breath?

I decided to follow my nose and locate one of these demented deviants.

I found my victims sitting comfortably outside the art and architecture building. They didn't appear to stand out any

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

On the contrary, the Palouse is not a radio wasteland

Editor:

Regarding Heidi Kenyon's commentary on the state of radio on the Palouse, it is obviously clear that her corporately-raised mind is completely unaware of all the options available to her outside of what gatekeeping ogres force feed her. Even more amazing was her ignorant oversight of what lies right down the 3rd floor hall from the Argonaut. That's right, KUOI-FM, a student-owned and operated station, by and for the students and the community, which you are supporting with your student fees. With your support this fall, 64 DJs are presenting music from genres which include folk, jazz, country, classical, opera, reggae, gospel, metal, hip hop, disco, funk, blues and experimental, as well as all styles of rock and music from all corners of the globe culled from the more than 200 new releases added each month and a record library containing nearly 40,000 titles. We also feature more than 10 hours of national and local news a week (via the Pacifica report and our own news staff), and a talk show on Thursday evenings which will include appearances by candidates running for office this year.

Is that enough variety for ya? Or are we not legitimate because we're a non-commercial, free-form station located way over to the left side of your dial? If so, why do record company reps receive congratulatory telegrams from their bosses when one of the records that they are promoting does well at KUOI? I dunno. Not to imply that our mission is to ponder — it's essentially to educate — but maybe even the corporate ogre thinks we're legit.

Heidi, take a look at our fall program guide (available soon) and tune into 89.3 FM (93.3 FM from your local cable company) at varying times and you might be pleasantly surprised. If you find that nothing on KUOI appeals to your non-static needs, may I suggest an investment in some white noise technology.

more than other students — they were each wearing shorts and enjoying the nice weather.

As I drew closer to them, their conversation abruptly stopped and they both fixed inquisitive looks upon me. After some awkward introductions, I found out I was speaking with third-year architecture students, Steve Thomas and J.J. Rumpeltes.

When asked why they smoked where they did, they both shrugged their shoulders and said it was the polite thing to do.

"I haven't ever been bothered because I try to clean up after myself," said Rumpeltes. "It's just something I try to do out of courtesy."

I asked if anyone ever kicked them out of a public place because of their smoking.

They both said they hadn't experienced this phenomenon.

Well, what would you do if anyone ever gave you a hard time about smoking?

"I would tell them to eat me," said Rumpeltes in all seriousness.

I told him that this would probably get the point across.

As I walked away, I began to appreciate Rumpeltes' attitude about nonsmokers. He had never had a confrontation because he was as polite as possible with his habit. He wasn't ostentatious about his smoking; he was doing something he enjoyed while watching out for the welfare of others. The same couldn't be said for some of the hard-core anti-smoking zealots I have come across (and no I don't smoke).

Prompted by a cigarette fire that torched some areas of the state capitol in Boise, Gov. Cecil Andrus banned smoking in all state buildings, including buildings here at the University of Idaho.

Smokers were then forced out of buildings to enjoy their favorite brand. However, now that they're at the entrance of buildings, they are at the mercy of everyone entering or exiting the building. This means that they can be insulted, spat upon or toilet-papered.

Rumpeltes' response to any verbal abuse he might encounter probably would just fuel an argument. The question is, why must this confrontation be started in the first place? After all, this hostility isn't being directed at an inferior grade of people. People of all races and socioeconomic status smoke.

Anger towards smokers is probably largely due to the health concerns about second-hand smoke. Proportionally, though, this can't be any more dangerous than farm pesticides in our drinking water or big industries poisoning bottom-dwelling crabs and shrimp with their wastes. Every person is probably exposed to several cancer-causing agent during the course of just one day.

With as little sense as there is in this issue, it is little wonder that smokers get defensive about their habit.

Or blow smoke in our faces.

both Harvard and Princeton. Now that I realize what that means, I want to become a more active citizen of my empire. Not only that, I want to fully experience the rights and privileges that my empire citizenship entitles me to. I need to find the Palouse Emperor, right away. My search began in the Hagadone phone book. I was stunned that so many businesses in the area catered specifically to the Palouse Emperor and his subjects. I was disappointed in myself for not being observant enough to notice it before, but seven local businesses call themselves the Palouse Empire something or other. There's Palouse Empire Realty for when the Emperor wants to buy the land for his palatial summer estate. There's the Palouse Empire Utility Coordinating Council to coordinate the utilities that are the blood and bone of the Grand Empire of the Palouse. There's even Palouse Empire Gymnastics for when the Emperor wants to do a few somersaults.

But where is he? Well, I know where he isn't. The lady at Palouse Empire Rentals said he hadn't rented an apartment from her company in the last 20 years, but she'd heard that he did rent one long ago when he was just a young buck emperor striking out on his own. He could be out of the country with the man in charge of Palouse Empire Marketing. When asked what kind of special marketing needs the Palouse Emperor has, the lady on the phone answered, "Hell if I know."

Palouse Empire Incorporated was mum as to whether or not they handled the Emperor's heating and air conditioning needs. But the lady on the phone said she was glad we were not a part of the Inland Empire anymore because, "Palouse is more descriptive than Inland. Where's Inland?" Enough of this switchback trail of whispers and half truths! The only way to beat a bureaucracy is to follow bureaucracy procedures. This cagey Emperor does not want to be found. At last not by the likes of me. Calls to the Chamber of Commerce were fruitless, but I think I broke past the iceberg's tip when I reached Moscow Mayor Paul Agidius at his law office. He denied any knowledge of the legendary poker game where the young and penniless Palouse Emperor (known then as Andy Drogenous) drew three twos, the one-eyed jack and the suicide king, both of which were wild, to beat the arrogant and powerful Inland Emperor's straight flush to the 10. This one hand simultaneously awarded the Palouse portion of the Inland Empire and title of Palouse Emperor to Andy, while it made the Inland Empire look silly because they aren't really inland of anything. The mayor did claim that while he doesn't cowtow to any emperor, he certainly doesn't consider himself one. I have exhausted my sources. My quest is through. I am not worthy and the Emperor will remain as elusive as the yeti until a braver soul than I decides it's time he faced the daylight.

Until then the Empire will probably continue to run smoothly. In the words of one Palouse Empire businessperson: "I like living here, even if I don't know who he is or what he does."

Here's some late breaking University of Idaho Parking Citation news. I hold in my hand a $15 ticket issued to one of my buddies when he was parked in the Lionel Hampton Music Building lot. He has a red parking permit. He was parked in the red section of the parking lot. So what's the problem? He'd displayed his permit on the passenger side of his windshield. According to a parking officer whose name, as close as I can tell by his handwriting, is Imp, that is a no-no. A $15 no-no. Apparently my buddy violated regulation D72 which according to Officer Imp states: "permit must be affixed to driver side window." In other words, my buddy bought a permit, but this wad with entirely too much power is going to fine him 15 bones because he had to look across an entire windshield to see his permit. All I can say to Officer Imp is: Affix this!

IRONICALLY, THE TIME TO START SAVING FOR RETIREMENT IS WHEN IT LOOKS LIKE YOU CAN LEAST AFFORD IT.

Can't afford to save for retirement? The truth is, you can't afford not to. Not when you realize that your retirement can last 20 to 30 years or more. You'll want to live at least as comfortably then as you do now. And that takes planning. By starting to save now, you can take advantage of tax-deferral and give your money time to compound and grow. Consider this: set aside just $100 each month beginning at age 30 and you can accumulate over $192,539* by the time you reach age 65. But wait ten years and you'll have to budget $227 each month to reach the same goal.

Even if you're not counting the years to retirement, you can count on TIAA-CREF to help you build the future you deserve—with flexible retirement and tax-deferred annuity plans, a diverse portfolio of investment choices, and a record of personal service that spans 75 years. Over a million people in education and research put TIAA-CREF at the top of their list for retirement planning. Why not join them? Mendez said. "It divides people in both parties."
 Rock said that despite the differing opinion on abortion, the party is still united. "Those people (the ones in favor of abortion) realize they are in the minority right now and are putting the issue aside for the good of the party and the country."
 The College Republicans have a core group of about 15 individuals but had 30 people show up for the first meeting this fall. They meet on the first and third Tuesdays of each month at 7:00 pm in the Student Union Building.
 "This is my first time around in a presidential campaign year," Rock said. "The group is only going to get bigger as the election heats up."
 Blower is extremely excited about this upcoming semester. "In my opinion, I think the election years are a lot more fun."
 College Republicans are split on what the general political leaning of the student body is. Rock and Blower said they feel the campus identifies slightly more with the Republican party while Mendez said it probably leans slightly more to the Democrats side.
 "I haven't done any big studies," Rock said. "But since most students are from Idaho and Idaho is mostly a Republican state, I would suggest that there are more Republicans than Democrats."
 Mendez said, "Reluctantly, I would have to say that this is a more liberal college. But, if people look into our (party) ideals they might change their mind."
 Mendez said about one-quarter of the members of college Republicans are women. She said the party should begin to get more support from the "career women of the 90's."
 "If women earn their own money they should be able to keep it," she said. Mendez also said families and morals have always played an important role in the Republican Party.
 Rock said he has no personal rivalry with the young Democrats and said he gets along with the group leaders well. "I know I can't discuss things with them and bring them around to my point-of-view if I don't have any contact with them. Also, it is good to understand where my opponents are coming from."

- To assist candidates in preparing financial reports.
- To maintain a central calendar of events until the election.

Heneggen hopes to have fundraisers held at the headquarters as well as have the candidates use it for their meetings, and soon it will serve as the central location for the Get Out The Vote (GOTV) campaign. She also plans to have more yard signs and posters available at the fair booth to those who are interested. There is a sign up sheet at the headquarters for anyone willing to help at the fair or promote the candidate of their choice with a yard sign.

 Of the upcoming presidential election, Brown said he felt Clinton/Gore have the attitude that they can win in Idaho and have hired a full-time campaign coordinator for the state, something unique for a Democratic candidate to do because Idaho is known for being a conservative state.
 Since the opening, volunteers have felt a positive response from the community and hope for the enthusiasm to pick up now that it is less than two months away from election day.

ride in traffic if it endangers them or forces a car to go too close by them, said Peckham.
 On the other hand, bicyclists need more accountability, he said. One of the most complained about problems with bicyclists on UI campus is the lack of yielding to pedestrians. According to the law, bicyclists "shall yield the right-of-way to any pedestrian and shall give audibal signal before overtaking and passing a pedestrian or another bicyclist."

 Stimac, a senior majoring in secondary education, agrees saying that "people are getting a bad attitude towards the bad bike riders." He feels that bicyclists are getting a bad reputation because of the few careless riders.
 Peckham said that this problem stems from "bicyclists behaving unpredictably."
 The answer is "more education on the rules of the road" according to Peckham for bicyclists and motorists alike.

Vandals will collide with Colorado State

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

After watching the Buffalo Bills blow-out their opponent last Sunday, it might be too bad the Idaho Vandals aren't travelling to Anaheim for a game with the Los Angeles Rams tomorrow.

Well, they are up against another competitive Ram.

The No. 9 ranked Vandals (1-0), will lock horns with the unranked Division I Rams of Colorado State (0-1) tomorrow in Fort Collins, CO. Kick-off is set for 11:00 a.m., and can be heard on 1400am KRPL with 37-year Vandal voice Bob Curtis. Pre-game begins at 10:35.

The Vandals are coming off a dominating 42-9 victory over Division II St. Cloud State, but now must take a huge step up the competitive ladder to play a higher level school. CSU, out of the Western Athletic Conference, plays WAC teams such as Brigham Young, San Diego State, and Air Force every year. They also tend to play some big name schools in non-conference play, examples being the 71-14 thrashing they took from Nebraska a year ago, and their game last week, a 37-17 defeat to No. 12 Colorado.

That defeat to the national powerhouse Buffalos takes very little away from CSU because it wasn't figured to be that close. By losing in Boulder, it'll fuel the Ram's fire, and they will be determined to not be beaten at home, much less by a 1-AA school.

"They're (CSU) going to say 'these are those little guys from 1-AA', so they're going to try and run right over us," Idaho Head Coach John L. Smith. "We're going to have to go in and play well on both sides of the ball, and if we do that it's a game that's not out of our reach."

"Out of reach" is a good phrase to describe the Vandal's two recent engagements with Div. I schools. In 1989 against Washington State, UI jumped out to a 7-0 lead, but didn't score again as the Cougars beat them 41-7 in both schools season opener. Then the following season it was another Pac-10 opponent in the Oregon Ducks who shot down Idaho, 55-23. Ironically, CSU defeated the Ducks in the Freedom Bowl that year, 32-31, to finish 9-4.

But this won't be a Div. I game that John L.'s squad will just play as hard as they can, and be satisfied win or lose. Last season the Rams were a mere 3-8, and carry a six game losing streak dating back to last October 19. After the recent loss to CU, Head Coach Earl Bruce was solemn about his team's performance.

"A coach is never satisfied with a loss, but I saw some facets of our game that I liked," the fourth year coach said. "We played well at times, but we gave up too many big plays, and that killed us."

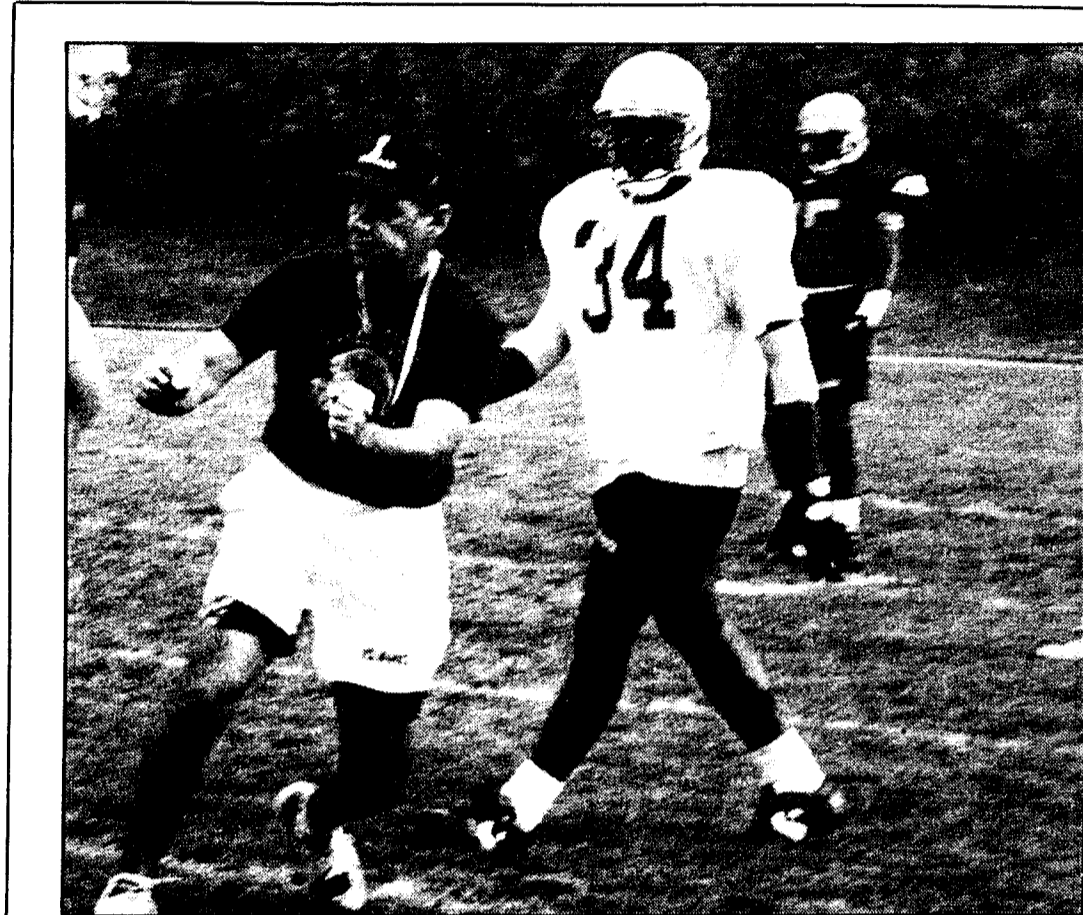

Most of those big plays came via the arm of CU sophomore quarterback Kordell Stewart, who threw four touchdowns, and 409 yards against the Rams. To be successful against Idaho, Bruce is aware that those kind of air yards can't be given up.

"They (UI) obviously pass the ball a lot, and do a good job of it," Bruce said. "They have a good concept with the one-back offense. I know Doug (Nussmeier) likes to throw the ball, as does Coach Smith. And (Yo) Murphy is a good receiver, so we'll be looking to stop their pass."

Like always, the Vandals will be looking for points through the air, and with an inexperienced CSU secondary, UI could capitalize on that. The Ram's backfield will be led by their lone returning starter, senior Sylvester Mabry. The three-year letterman started all 11 games last year, and led the team with two of their five interceptions. But other than Mabry, the only experienced defensive back play CSU has is nine college games by sophomore cornerback Andre Strode, and sophomore Vincent Booker who'll be at strong safety after spending last season as a reserve DB and a special team player.

"Their DB's are good, but they aren't anything spectacular," Smith said. "We'll look to pass the ball, but we also have the running ability of Nuss to go to."

Nussmeier's running ability was the main attraction at the "Dome Show" this past Saturday. The agile junior rushed for 89 yards, and three touchdowns to lead the Vandals in both categories. Offensively this will help UI to run more naked boot-legs, as well as option plays.

"That's part of our package," Smith said with a smile. "We have two QB's (along with freshman Eric Hisaw) that can run the ball, so we're able to do more with them than in the past with John (Friesz). We have to use their strengths, and we do since they have the option to run or throw."

Another factor in the Vandal's running success will be weighed on the return of Sherriden May. The sophomore running back endured a quad contusion in the first half of the St. Cloud game, and is questionable for the trip. Second-stringer Wind Henderson rushed for 39 yards, and one touchdown, but also lost 18 yards behind the line of scrimmage.

The Vandals will match up more evenly when they're on the defensive side of the ball. CSU's a running team, which is fairly unfamiliar to a squad in the pass-oriented Big Sky. The running game of the Rams is something Idaho will have to halt, which they didn't master against SCSU who piled up 191 yards on the ground. The Rams lost their leading rusher last season in Brian Copeland who chalked up 1,028 yards, and five TD's. This season it'll be senior John Ivlow as the focus in the backfield. Ivlow, who battled injuries last year, rushed for only 341 yards, but had 152 yards on eight carries against CU.

"I think we're a running football team," Bruce said. "But we have a quarterback who can throw the ball."

Last season the Rams had a relatively productive QB, but this year that assumption is questionable. Kevin Verdugo led the CSU offense last year by throwing for 2,138 yards, 17 TD's, and 11 Int's. This season the Rams start the inexperienced sophomore Anthony Hill who attempted only 23 passes last year. Hill is a scrambler, however, and rushed for 184 yards on 40 carries.

"Defensively we have to hold their running game down," Smith said. "I think we match up better with them when we're on defense."

If UI's defense can stop the run, and CSU is forced to air play, the ball will most likely be heading in the direction of first-team all-WAC wide receiver Greg Primus. The 5-11 senior had 67 receptions last season for 1,081 yards, and eight TD's while on his way to being named an honorable mention All-American. Over the past three years, Primus has accumulated 133 receptions for 2,256 yards, including a school record game last year when he caught 10 passes for 256 yards, and two TD's against Hawaii.

It appears that after their play against St. Cloud, Idaho's secondary will be well-prepared if CSU wants to improve their passing game. UI recorded four interceptions against SCSU, two by the linebackers, and two by the secondary.

Vandal defensive backs making a sudden impact in '92

By Doug Taylor
Staff Writer

Nineteen-ninety one could be called a disaster for the Idaho Vandal secondary as many players could recall all of the training room equipment by memory. All the injuries showed as the secondary was lit up for 24 touchdowns and 276.4 passing yards a game.

The doubt around this year's secondary was quickly put to rest on Saturday against St. Cloud State University.

In the Vandals 42-9 win over the Division II Huskies, Husky quarterbacks Jim Mauer and Scott Larsen completed only 8 of 25 passes for 85 yards. Between the two, they threw no touchdown passes and were picked off four times by the Vandals. One interception in particular showcased the defensive improvement.

At 6:32 of the first period, sophomore linebacker Brian Wamsley broke nicely on a sideline pass, picked the ball off and raced 31 yards for a touchdown.

However, it was the play of the defensive backs that had to impress the coaches the most. Cornerbacks David Gistarb and Jeff Jordan both intercepted a pass, and they allowed SCSU wide receivers only five catches for 56 yards.

Safeties Darrick Davis and Miregi Huma also played a critical role in the defensive scheme as they recorded four tackles apiece and denied a long pass from being completed.

It was a game that left first-year secondary coach Ron Lee optimistic.

"Half of the credit has to go to the front seven because they put a lot of pressure on their quarterbacks," said Lee. "The aspect I liked was the way we flew to the ball."

Coach John Smith was also pleased about the play of the secondary.

"I liked what I saw because everyone in the secondary came to the ball well," said Smith.

One of the players that the coaches held their breaths on was Jordan. In the fourth game of the 1991 season, Jordan suffered a torn achilles tendon that put him out for the year. As a result, the status on Jordan was hazy heading into this year.

Smith, for one, didn't ever doubt Jordan's ability.

"He just needed to have some game time in order to get his feet under him again," said Smith.

Despite the success of the secondary, Smith and Lee both mentioned poor tackling as something that needs to be addressed.

"We missed some tackles against St. Cloud that we shouldn't have," said Lee. "This is something that needs immediate attention."

Tackling will have to improve if the Vandals are to win this Saturday's game against Colorado State University in Fort Collins.

The Rams finished a disappointing 3-8 last year, and matters didn't improve when the team lost their starting quarterback, Kevin Verdugo, to graduation. Leading the team at quarterback this year will be sophomore Anthony Hill, and regardless of Hill's inexperience, he still has a formidable target to throw to — senior wide receiver Greg Primus.

Primus, caught 67 passes for 1,081 yards and eight touchdowns last year. Not only is he fourth on the all-time CSU reception list with 133, he is also the NCAA's third-leading returning receiver in yards per reception at 16.1 yards per catch. Heading into 1992, Primus has caught 2,256 worth of passes, and some publications have listed him as a potential all-American candidate.

Coach Earle Bruce, who formerly coached at Ohio State, also said that Primus is one of the finest blocking receivers that he has ever coached.

Primus' impressive statistics are merely numbers on paper, though, and the Vandal secondary probably won't be looking at any CSU record books during the game.

More than likely, it will be business as usual for Jordan and company in the secondary.

Setters face competition in tourney

By Doug Taylor
Staff Writer

Now that the appetizers have been finished, the entrees are ready to be served.

After dismantling each of their first two opponents in three straight games, the University of Idaho volleyball team will face some stiffer competition in this weekend's Safeco Classic.

The second-annual tournament will be held in Memorial Gym on Friday and Saturday night. Besides Idaho, the tournament will feature teams from Utah State, Simon Fraser and Cal Poly-San Louis Obispo.

The Vandals prepared for the tournament with two home matches against the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee and Lewis-Clark State.

UWM was the first victim to fall as the Vandals prevailed 15-0, 15-2, 15-1. The Vandals made quick work of their opponent as they made good on 32 out of 54 kills. They finished the match with a team-record .481 hitting percentage versus UWM. Individually, Heather McEwen led the Vandals with eight kills while Dee Porter and Nancy Wicks had six kills apiece.

Next up for the Vandals were the Lewis-Clark State Warriors from Lewiston. The Vandals also won this match easily with a 15-2, 15-10, 15-3 victory.

As a record 762 people looked on (This broke the previous attendance record of 650 that was set against the University of Washington), the Vandals won their 12th consecutive match over the Warriors. Sophomore middle blocker Brittany Van Haverbeke played a significant role in the win with four solo blocks and nine assisted blocks.

After two matches, senior setter Amy Hanks is once again directing the Vandals offense with precision. Hanks lead the Vandals with 32 assists, which averages out to 6.4 assists a game. Other Vandal standouts include Porter and McEwen who have 12 kills apiece.

However, statistics don't always tell the whole story. The play of 17-year-old Tzvetelina Yanchulova has been a pleasant surprise for coach Tom Hilbert and his staff.

Yanchulova, who hails from Sofia, Bulgaria and has seen action on the Bulgarian National Team, has played extremely well from her outside hitting position. In the two matches so far, Yanchulova is fourth on the team in digs with 10 and is tied for fourth in kills with seven.

As far as the Safeco Classic tournament, the Vandals shouldn't have any problem gearing up for their opponents. Two of the tournament teams, Utah St. and Simon Fraser, are squads that the Vandals have seen before.

The Vandals last met the Aggies of Utah State in 1989 and were defeated 15-13, 11-15, 15-8, 13-15, 15-9. However, the Aggies lost six players from last year's squad that went 2-29 while the Vandals only lost one player from last year's team.

The Aggies also have a new face on the bench as Marlon Sano assumed the head coaching position for the 1992 campaign.

Simon Fraser is also a team that the Vandals have squared off against. The Vandals have an overall record of 2-3 against the Clan of Simon Fraser, and in their last meeting, the Vandals defeated Simon Fraser 15-6, 15-11, 15-2 in the 1986 Idaho Classic.

The Clan should provide the Vandals with a stiff test as they return six players from a 1991 squad that went 16-16.

Cal Poly-San Louis Obispo is the unknown element of this tournament for the Vandals. The Mustangs have never met the Vandals, but the Mustangs figure to be a tough opponent as they return eight players from a team that finished 17-16 last year.

The tournament in Memorial Gym starts on Friday, Sept. 11 as Cal Poly-SLO plays

Simon Fraser in a match that starts at 5:30. Idaho plays in the second match against Utah State. Action is set to begin at 7:30 p.m.

On Saturday, Idaho will play Simon Fraser at noon and the Vandals follow that match with a 7:30 p.m. encounter against Cal Poly-SLO.

Sports in state featured

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

A new magazine that is dedicated solely to Idaho's high school and college sports unveiled its first issue today.

Ben Coronado, publisher of Idaho Sports Magazine, created the publication to give sports fans in the state a better insight to "what makes our athletes tick."

Matt Lawson, a 1992 University of Idaho Journalism graduate, is Marketing Director and a writer for the magazine. Lawson says the objective of the magazine will be to narrow in on sports that occur in the state's borders.

"The purpose is to solidify the high school and college coverage in the state in one condensed form."

A quarterly, ISM will cover different sports as their season arrives. Lawson noted that one of the strong factors in the developing the magazine was due mostly to a lack of coverage at the high school level.

"We thought the amount of coverage that high school sports was getting throughout the state was inadequate, and we wanted to change that."

The first 30,000 issues were scheduled for release today, and after it's first year of publication, ISM could become a monthly depending on the public's reaction. However, Lawson says that the people behind the magazine are taking it one step at a time.

"I think we'll go through some growing pains at the beginning, but we're happy with the issue."

The cover story for the first issue features former Coeur d'Alene High School and University of Idaho quarterback John Friesz, who is currently with the San Diego Chargers of the NFL. Along with stories of noteworthy athletes, ISM will also feature those not-so-familiar athletes.

"Every high school from A-1 to Eight-Man, and every college in the state will be featured in the first issue in football and volleyball," Lawson said.

Even though the publication has to deal with younger players around the state, Lawson said they will be trying to attract all age groups.

"We're targeted towards all types of sports fans, but we want to target it to youths as much as adults."

One of the promotions ISM is featuring is they are giving teams across the state a chance to earn money for their programs. A team is paid 75 cents for each magazine they sell, $2 for a year subscription and $4 for two-year subscriptions. The total price is $2.50, $10 and $20, respectively.

"We realize high school funding is a problem for groups and athletic teams, and we want students to have a chance to earn money for their school group or athletic team," Lawson said.

Scholarships of $1,000 each will be awarded to an individual from each division who sells the most subscriptions.

For more information call Ben Coronado at 882-7481.

"I am real pleased with those guys (the secondary)," Smith said. "We probably could have had six interceptions, but at least we were in position to bat the ball down."

Going into this game Smith said he is now ready to see where his team is really at. If there's a position that's a possible question mark it'd be at linebacker solely because there isn't much depth there. If the starters stay healthy, however, Smith won't be worried.

One backer who did get injured Saturday, sophomore Josh Fetter, was back at practice this week after suffering a sprained ankle in the first quarter of Saturday's game. Smith says Fetter is day-to-day, but appears ready to play again.

"He's a tough kid," Smith said. "Hopefully we can take him along."

Back-up Jason Shelt came in for Fetter, and led Idaho with 11 tackles along with an interception.

Up front the defensive line must stop the Ram's running game, and force Hill to hurry his passes if he goes to the sky. Defensive End Jeff Robinson will meet probably his toughest match-up of the season in 6-6, 291 pound three-year letterman Jason Basso. However, Smith feels that the experienced D-line will be ready to play much better this week than last.

"The defensive line was a little inconsistent," Smith said. "That's what we have to work on, the inconsistencies. They'll be getting in there on plays."

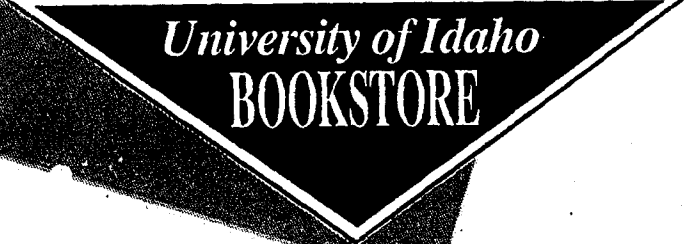

IDAHO INFO.--- CSU leads the series 3-1, with the Rams winning the last meeting 31-14 at Fort Collins back in 1976.... An estimated crowd of 25,000 is expected to be on hand for the Ram's home opener, which coach Bruce is 3-0 in at CSU.... Two other Big Sky teams are ranked in the top 20 of the pre-season 1-AA poll; No. 11 Weber State and No. 18 Montana. The first regular season poll will be released Monday, September 14.

Fee date explained

By JODY DECKER
 Contributing Writer

As if school doesn't start early enough, this year students had to pay their fees over a week before classes began.

Matthew E. Telin the UI registrar, said the university has switched to the new program to find out who is actually coming back to school. If a student does not pay their fees the university will assume they are not coming and will erase their classes. This allows other students the opportunity to sign up for those classes.

Telin said students have brought the early fee payment upon themselves by not notifying the registrars office if they were not returning. "The faculty was concerned about ghosts," Telin said.

Ghosts are students who register but don't show up and last year there were 450 of them. Telin said the system isn't set up to penalize students but to find out who is actually in attendance.

Ronald E. Smith, the assistant controller, does admit some changes have to be made. In the future he would like to get the bills out earlier. He would also like to make changes in the computer system so checks and registration forms would not have to be manually matched up.

The main benefit he sees with the new system is increased enrollment management. "The university now has a better idea of who's where," Smith said.

The new system also simplifies financial aid and scholarship checks. Before students were given separate checks for scholarships, financial aid, grants and loans. Now they receive one check for the whole lump sum with their fees deducted.

One problem with the system, according to Smith, is that it is labor intensive. Before, the payment of fees was taken care of in three days, while this year it took three weeks.

Improvements will be made as the computer system is updated and students grow accustomed to it.

world. She said that by tinkering with a plant's DNA, scientists might be able to raise plants that can grow well with hardly any sunlight.

Dr. Federspiel is a realist, however, and she knows that any breakthroughs like the kind described above are a long way down the road.

"The breakthroughs in disease research and agricultural advances are years down the road, but we have to start somewhere," said Federspiel. "What better way to start than with something simple like cyano bacteria."

Federspiel readily concedes that progress has been slow, but her group has made some small strides. Most notably, Federspiel said they have identified some of the protein factors that change the genetic structure of the cyano bacteria.

Both Scott and Federspiel said they expect big results from their research in the next two years.

sor addressed the paradox of the ALF's activities.

Victor Eroschenko, a UI anatomy professor who uses mice in his research, believes that many of the extremist groups are working out of ignorance.

"Their actions are pure and unadulterated terrorism," said Eroschenko. "I wonder if they realize that the animals they capture and release into the wild are not capable of surviving. They are totally domesticated and as a result, these people are doing more harm to the animals than they are good."

Eroschenko indicated that the more moderate animal rights groups, like People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals, have done a commendable job in making researchers more aware of humane animal treatment.

"Some groups have to be commended because they have forced animal rights legislation, which has made us more responsible in our work with animals," said Eroschenko.

Wallins said it's his hope that both sides can become better educated through the lecture series. He said that all lectures will be held in the UI law courtroom, and that the starting time will be 7 p.m.

Further lectures are scheduled for Sept. 15 and 22 in addition to two lectures on Oct. 13 and 27. For further information, call the college of graduate studies at 885-6243.

Etheridge brings maturity to Spokane Opera House

By TRACIE BRUNO
Lifestyles Editor

Melissa Etheridge has entered into a new stage of maturity in her career. With three albums under her wing, the 30-year-old Kansas native has seen her dreams become reality.

Her third album, Never Enough, reflects this new maturity. The album displays a full range of dynamics in every song. The new maturity is also clear in her collaboration with bassist Kevin McCormick, who co-produced the album with Etheridge, as he did the first two, and with drummer Fritz Lewak, another charter member of the band.

But the maturity's depth is most profound in Etheridge's songwriting. Etheridge said after three years of constant touring, she took a year off the road to pull back and take a fresh look at the world and herself.

The songs on Never Enough go far beyond the heartache that has been her primary realm, reflecting a mix of light and dark, a balance of hope and despair, but never giving in or giving up. Many of the songs have undercurrents rooted in the uncertainties that face our world between now and 2001.

Etheridge said she knows that the style of Never Enough may at first shock long-time fans, and that the wider range of her emotional palette may also take some getting used to. But it's a risk she feels is not just worth it, but necessary.

Etheridge and her band will be performing this Saturday night at the Spokane Opera house beginning at 8 p.m. Tickets can be purchased through G & B Select-A-Seat.

Melissa Etheridge will play at the Opera House on Saturday.

Opening tonight, J. Barry Zeiger's "Devolving Worlds." Please see page 15 for story.

Former Bob Dylan opener will play at John's Alley

The rock band Renegade Saints are making their Moscow debut this weekend at John's Alley.

The band, who has opened for Bob Dylan and Little Women since playing their first gig in January, will be playing Friday and Saturday night at the local bar.

Bass player Dave Coey likes to describe the Saint sound as a "Bohemian boogie grind."

"A Saint show will expose somebody to a bunch of different types of rock and roll," explained Coey.

Naming Eric Clapton, Santana, Little Feat and the Allman Brothers as influences, Coey said the group is largely reminiscent of the 70's rock & roll music sound.

The members, Coey, Mike Walker, Alan Toribio, John Shipe, and Matt Reynolds, got their feet wet playing for two other bands before forming the Renegade Saints.

"We're progressing very quickly because of the experience the members got in previous bands," said Coey. "On this second time around, in this new band, we kind of know some shortcuts."

The experience has paid off, as the band is currently rehearsing for the fall recording of their first cassette. The tape should be for sale by the middle of October, said Coey.

The members of this Eugene, Oregon band originally came together on the University of Oregon campus.

"We all met as just flakey musical strangers around the campus music scene," said Coey.

Playing in Moscow was no accidental booking, according to Coey. The band heard good things about the area from some University of Idaho law students at a gig in Eugene this summer, so Coey contacted John's Alley and booked a show.

For those interested rock and rollers, the band will begin playing at 9 p.m. both nights. Donations will be taken at the door.

Robinson park amphitheater

By KIM BLEDSOE
Staff Writer

Running out of new things to do on Friday night in Moscow? Well, Latah County Parks and Recreation may have the alternative. A new amphitheater at Robinson Park has been created, and it promises to provide free entertainment under the stars throughout the fall.

Built last spring, the Robinson Park Amphitheater is located on a hillside on the southwestern edge of the park. It consists of a small stage and log benches that can seat up to 50 people.

Latah County Parks director, Danny Markus, seeks out local talent to perform at the theater and has been the "brains" behind the project. This summer alone, Markus set up 11 performances ranging from singing groups to slide shows which were "a big success."

The Robinson Park Amphitheater fall program is as follows:

Cage, Parker & Caan gamble with Elvis & humor in Vegas

Review by Jay Forman
Staff Writer

Feel like laughing a lot? Go see Honeymoon in Vegas. This movie is above all else, a comedy.

It stars Nicholas Cage, Sarah Jessica Parker, and James Caan. Cage portrays Jack Springer, a man who's promised his mother on her deathbed that he would never get married. From this predicament, Jack becomes a sleazy detective who follows around other people's wives for money.

Although he's promised his mother that he wouldn't marry, he has fallen in love with Betsy, played by Parker. Betsy is a sexy, blonde, schoolteacher who loves Jack but wants to get married. This sets up the main conflict of the movie: Jack has to find a way to get married without actually getting married.

"Let's get married or forget the whole thing."

Jack relents, and the stage is set for the movie to roll, because if you're going to get married, do it in Las Vegas. So Jack and Betsy go to Las Vegas, but in the middle of an Elvis impersonators convention. Thus there's an Elvis everywhere they turn.

In Las Vegas, con man extraordinaire Tommie Korman (played by Caan) decides that he must have Betsy to be his bride. Korman devises a poker game to lure the naive Jack away from his bride to be and succeeds in parting the two lovers.

In an hilarious scene at the movie's end, Korman (played by Caan) makes a last-minute change of plans. He offers Jack a deal: if Jack marries Betsy, Korman will give him $1 million. Jack, who is desperate for money, agrees. Korman then tells Jack that he has to marry Betsy before the convention ends. Jack, who is now a con man himself, agrees to the deal.

Facing debt for the rest of his life, Jack is desperate. Korman decides that he's going to give Jack a break, and decides to waive the debt on one condition: That he have Betsy for the weekend.

Jack concedes, as does Betsy, although against her will.

Korman sees his opening, and decides to take Betsy to Hawaii. Once in Hawaii, Korman thinks Betsy will be easy prey to be wooed away from Jack.

The movie takes off from there. Cage is great in this movie because he's subtle. People that have seen Cage in movies like Downstruck and The Vampire's Kiss probably can't picture Cage being subtle, yet he portrays this beautifully. Cage's Jack is very human in this movie, as in the scene when he asks Betsy to marry him. Jack says, "Are you sure?" Betsy replies, "I'm sure."

must be, because my legs are paralyzed."

Having just given away his fiancée to a con man, Cage is a bit anxious, and the viewer can identify with the frustration that he's going through. Cage is in rare form here, because he doesn't have to go over the edge to make his point. If Cage has perfected this, his movies in the future might have more audience appeal.

Parker has come a long way since Square Pegs. As far as attractiveness goes, she has one of the most finely shaped bodies in the business, and the cameras further this by putting her in the tightest outfits this side of Hawaii. Parker was last seen in I A Star is Born, a copy clothes store, and you can't get a character here. Parker's Betsy is a beautiful, sexy, blonde, schoolteacher who loves Jack but wants to get married. This sets up the main conflict of the movie: Jack has to find a way to get married without actually getting married.

movie "Caan" could be related to "con." He plays Parker like a rhythm section. Once in Hawaii, everyone is in on the con, and Caan pushes Parker to the edge. But will Parker choose Caan over Cage?

In another scene, Cage is trying to find his fiancée in Hawaii but gets sidetracked by Karate Kid alumni Pat Morita, who's funny in his limited role as a cab driver.

The focus of this movie is Cage, and he displays leading man status here. The commercial shows "The Flying Elvises" who are a band of skydivers, and it's a sight gag that's well done.

Elvis seems to be everywhere in this movie, including the commercial. Other big name stars in the movie are Billy Jack and James Caan. James Caan is playing a con man who is trying to get Betsy away from Jack. Caan's Korman is a sleazy con man who is trying to get Betsy away from Jack. Caan's Korman is a sleazy con man who is trying to get Betsy away from Jack.

Art exhibit... not so hot

Review by Jay Forman
Staff Writer

Art lovers rejoice. There is a brand new art exhibit at Ridenbaugh Hall and boy is it exciting. With stunning artwork by Kenjiro Nomura (who by the way has been dead since 1956) this great new exhibit portrays the life of the Japanese-Americans in the 1940's.

Not. I don't really know why these paintings were commissioned to be on display, and though they might have some historical significance, the fact is this art exhibit isn't all that good. Why? For one thing, all of the paintings but one were done with watercolors on white paper. What does this mean? For those students out there that haven't had a childhood, watercolors are somewhat limiting when one is trying to convey specific details, and thus, specific details (for the most part) are nowhere to be found in these paintings.

Don't get me wrong, I do like art. But some of the paintings in this exhibit were so blasé that anyone could have painted them. Take "Rainstorm" for example. The picture basically is clouds and rain over a field. I had to run home after I saw this painting to make sure it wasn't one that my little sister did in third grade.

The story behind these lovely paintings is rather simple. In 1942, Nomura was stationed at a detention center in Puyallup, Washington to paint signs. In his spare time, Nomura painted twenty one different pictures. Fifty years later here they are. Of the 21 paintings in this exhibit, four stood out.

"Military Post" is a dark picture depicting a building. Dark clouds hover ominously in the sky with sunlight poking through. This effect makes the painting stand out.

"Barbershop," "Barracks" and "Gymnasium" are also standouts because of their detail. Each painting has a unique style, and thus they are worth a glance or two.

Art lovers out there are probably infuriated, but just because someone paints and the paintings are discovered fifty years later doesn't take my breath away.

Understand that Nomura was in captivity during the time in which these paintings were done, and it is safe to assume that times were tough for Nomura, but again a question arises. Are these paintings the best that this period has to offer?

Somehow I doubt it.

On the other hand, the "Environmentally Conscious Architecture" was a little bit better. This exhibit is drawings and photos of buildings of the future. It's nice to see that artists are sitting up and taking notice of the environment.

BUMBERSHOOT '92

The Seattle Arts Festival

By KIM BLEDSOE
Staff Writer

Labor Day weekend gave University of Idaho students the opportunity to flee Moscow one last time before delving deep into academics. Many students made their flight to Seattle where Bumbershoot (yes, it's bumper with a 'b', not bumper) was held.

What's Bumbershoot one may ask? While there is no official meaning for the name, it's the title of The Seattle Arts Festival, and the 250,000 people who attended the four-day event are commonly called "bumbershooters."

Blasting off its 22nd year of excellent entertainment, with a showcase of talent gathered from far and wide, the 1992 Labor Day weekend celebration was marked by a stellar international showcase which featured artists from Zimbabwe, Ghana, Brazil, Cuba, England, Jamaica, and India.

In addition, there were more than 50 high-profile American headliners like the Crazy 8's, Spin Doctors, Dub Squad, They Might Be Giants, Queen Latifah, Michelle Shocked, Toots and the Maytals, and Little Feat, just to name a few.

Besides a wide variety of music, Bumbershooters were able to enjoy art exhibits, theater, dance, visual arts, literary arts, comedy, and everything you could possibly want in the line of food.

New festival programs and stages were also a great asset to this year's festival. Two new stages were added- the Kodalux Rhythm Stage and the Maxell Interview Stage. The Kodalux Rhythm Stage presented "roots, rhythm, and lively ethnic music" daily and was located right under the Space Needle. Located on the Bagley Wright lawn was the Maxell Interview Stage which provided an informal "drop-in" space for record signing by various Festival artists, and also a place to just hang out and people watch.

Four days of sunshine, fifteen stages, and over four-hundred artists made Bumbershoot the perfect getaway for Labor Day weekend. Remarkably, it's not even that expensive (minus traveling and lodging expenses). A day pass to all the concerts, exhibits, and entertainment was only $7 at Seattle Center or $6 if purchased in advance.

The amphitheater was designed by University of Idaho architecture student Keith Scott, who helped Markus and some friends build it. Markus is a graduate student from the College of Forestry at UI and has been the Latah County Parks director for the last two years.

Markus extends an invitation for students to come and enjoy the new addition to the park and suggests bringing along a blanket or wearing warm clothing due to the possibility of chilly weather.

"Bring the family, bring a friend. It's the perfect way to spend a Friday night," Markus said.

All programs at the Robinson Park Amphitheater are free, and are followed by a campfire complete with warm cider and a marshmallow roast.

Coffeehouse presents singer Eric Engerbretson

By KARIN MASON
Staff Writer

ASUI Productions Coffeehouse will present its first show of the semester tonight in the Student Union Building.

Eric Engerbretson, a singer and acoustic guitarist, will play everything from his original tunes to any Top 40 songs from the past 50 years. His style is as flexible as his music with a broad range of songs.

Engerbretson is originally from the Palouse, but after touring through more than 15 countries, he is now back in the States and lives in Spokane.

Jan Proctor, Coffeehouse Chair, describes a Coffeehouse performance as compared to a concert.

"It's very mellow. At a concert, like one in the SUB Ballroom, everyone feels like getting up and dancing. This performance is in a smaller place, a more intimate setting. The audience also gets a chance to visit with the artist afterwards, and this crowd usually likes to do that," she said.

Coffeehouse performances are usually made up of folk, blues or jazz, not rock and grunge, Proctor said. That is probably the reason why these performances draw a more mellow crowd.

The performance will be tonight in the SUB in the Vandal Cafe. It starts at 8 p.m. with free coffee and free admission.

UI & BSU grads exhibit art at Prichard

Two exhibits will open tonight on each floor of the Prichard Art Gallery.

Kevan Smith and his "Constructs of Civil Inertia" is on the main floor and J. Barry Zeiger and "Devolving Worlds" is on the balcony.

Smith is a 1985 MFA of the University of Idaho and now lives in Boise. His works consist of paintings, sculptures and constructions. He uses many techniques including combinations of symbols and messages of a newspaper page including copy and advertising.

His inventive use of materials and diverse range of the images present a concerned statement about our times.

Smith works for a design firm in Boise and sometimes teaches drawing and design at Boise State University. He was chosen as the Idaho artist for the Absolute Statehood advertising campaign, and also did a piece satirizing political commentary which drew the disapproval of Carillon Importers and finally appeared in USA Today. Both of these works will be in the exhibit and Smith will also be present at the reception to talk to viewers.

Zeiger is presently an associate professor of art at San Juan College in Farmington, New Mexico. He holds an MFA from Claremont Graduate School in Claremont, Calif., but has been in New Mexico for the past 20 years.

His work combines objects from New Mexico intertwined with local images and figures from wherever the exhibit is being shown. His work has been shown nationwide.

This exhibit begins a new project from Zeiger's experience at the Encounters project at John Hopkins University where he researched texts, art and architecture about people of the Americas in 1492 to 1650. Zeiger will also be present to discuss his work.

The opening reception for the exhibits will be held at the Prichard Gallery located at 414 Main Street. It runs from 5 to 8 p.m. with a talk in the Prichard Conference Room by the artists.
