Recycling center takes on the university's trash

By SHARI IRETON
Assistant News Editor

Recycle, reduce and reuse. These three words seem to fall from everyone's lips these days, but for Jerry Martin, University of Idaho Recycling Program coordinator, these words are his life.

Not only does Martin recycle as a career, but applies it at home as well. In his former state of residence, Maine, Martin says that garbage had to be hauled across state lines, hiking the price of waste removal up. He said that they also had mandatory recycling. Martin said that one of the reasons that mandatory recycling is not as common in the west is because of the larger areas of open space.

"You don't see it in this country because you can stand on a hill and see forever," he said.

But here at UI, recycling is becoming a bigger issue each year. In fact, this year the recycling center has purchased an industrialized sized paper shredder. The machine shreds paper that can't be recycled, like magazines, and burns it with wood chips at the Physical Plant. Martin says that while some consider this use of the paper not recycling, he points out that it is an effective method of reusing.

"We are recovering energy from that paper," he said.

The program also has four vehicles, seven full time personnel, a couple of part time workers and two work study students.

Rebecca Rod, UI Recycling Program assistant, says that the center would like to increase the amount of material that it is picking up, but can't fit it into the budget and lack the manpower.

"While the recycling has cut down the waste stream 15 to 20 percent, it could be cut down a lot more," she said, adding that the center has received a growing response to recycling, but that they'd like to see more. Martin and Rod said that the greek houses have approached them about starting a program, even though their trash isn't managed by the university.

The recycling team is even going to hold a class for faculty and staff to educate more university departments.

"Our goal is to try to explain to people the nuts and bolts of recycling," said Martin. The class will be Oct. 7 in the Student Union Gold Room from 9-11 a.m. He said he hopes to include students in the classes in the future, if the response from this one is positive.

A major problem that recyclers face today is the lack of monetary reward for reducing waste said Rod and Martin. "Recycling is going through a lot of tough times," said Martin, as well as the economy. He said that the real incentive behind recycling is that "it is the right thing to do."

Change of night security for residence halls

By BRANDY CORGATELLI
Staff Writer

Security for the residence halls has undergone changes this semester, leaving the housing office and residents hopeful for improved safety but also with some lingering concerns.

The biggest question for women living in Theophilus Tower surrounds the move of Nighttime Assistance, formerly called "Nightwatch," from the lobby of the tower to the basement of Gault Hall, a men's hall.

"I really don't like it," said Jennifer Baker, the president of Hayes Hall, which is located on the sixth and seventh floors of the tower. "That could be because I'm used to having someone down there, though. Most of the ones in the tower don't like it, either."

Jim Bauer, director of the Housing Office, agreed there are some disadvantages to the relocation.

"For one thing, it changes the way the people in the tower perceive the (Nighttime Assistance) program," Bauer said.

Bauer said the housing office is trying for now to focus on the positives of the move.

Part of the job of Nighttime Assistance is to make regular walks around all the residence halls on campus during the late night and early morning hours. By changing location, they can step-up this surveillance, according to Bauer.

"We definitely have more people out more of the time on campus," Bauer said, referring to the fact that not as many on-duty people will be distracted from their work as they were in the tower.

"It was our perception that it was often a powsy-wowsy type of get-together down there (in the lobby)," Bauer said. "We felt like people would hang-out and distract them from business."

"I feel we are getting more done in the area of security than ever before," Bauer said. "We are getting better logs, more rounds, and more information about what they are seeing on their rounds."

Bauer said the Housing Office wants to continue meeting with Tower residents to address all their concerns about the move.

One of the biggest concerns Baker has about safety is the way the bathrooms were designed in the towers. "I think they need to put doors on the bathrooms because they are totally open to everyone and anyone," Baker said.

With Nighttime Assistance no longer based in the tower, Tower residents will have to be more careful about who they let in after the doors are locked for the night, according to Tricia Clarke, president of McCoy Hall, located on the top two floors of the tower.

Young Democrats gear up for '92 election

By TIM HELMKE
Staff Writer

The Young Democrats here at the University of Idaho are busy planning many activities that are aimed at getting students involved in upcoming primaries and general elections.

The Young Democrat group is headed by John Goettsche this year and he is really "psyched" about the upcoming elections that will be forming the local, state, and national political scenes. Goettsche said that the students here at the University of Idaho need to "get involved and make a difference in both Idaho and the United States." Goettsche said that this is the year for the "voices of youth and of change to be heard," and encourages students to get involved in the election.

The Young Democrats meet every Wednesday night at 9 p.m. at the Latah County Democratic Headquarters on Main downtown. The meetings are a place for students to listen to candidates running for state and local offices and to discuss issues that face the Democratic party. Candidates such as Richard Stallings, Diamond Western, and Louise Regelin have been at these meetings to hear the concerns of the students and as well as to let the students hear them.

Mike Gotch, a member of the Young Democrats, is the campus coordinator for the Bill Clinton and Al Gore campaign and is busy trying to get people interested in this Democratic ticket before the election in November. Gotch has Clinton pamphlets, signs, buttons, and stickers that people can use to learn about Clinton and Gore as well as show their support for the ticket. Gotch said that he is enjoying "being a part of the campaign process and helping to coordinate a campus campaign."

The Young Democrats are busy planning activities to get students involved in the election by setting up booths in the SUB, organizing voter registration drives and posting signs. These activities are targeted at the college age students that make up one of the largest voters percentages nationwide. The campus activities are being used as ways of getting the University of Idaho students involved in the political

Skipping class costs big bucks

By BETSY CARVER
Staff Writer

It is easier sometimes to skip a class than to attend it. There are huge lecture halls where the professor can barely tell what color shirt his students are wearing, let alone know anyone's name. The temptation is to blow past the UCC & head for Mingles to play a game of pool, take an extra long lunch at Mikey's, or just sleep in.

The consequences may be greater in the long run than many students realize.

To consider the actual cost of skipping class there are a lot of numbers to be dealt with. First, there is the topic of fees. When a student registers, they equally pay for the right to attend class. A full-time, in-state student pays $648.00 per semester. Taking 5 three-credit courses a semester would be 192 lecture classes available to attend. Dividing $648 by 192 comes up with the number 3.38. That $3.38 is how much an in-state student taking 15 credits pays for every individual lecture class.

The cost of lunch at Subway seems cheap compared to the freedom of skipping physics to each lunch at Subway, except there is another angle.

If a student weren't attending school, she would most likely enter the 'real world' and find a job. The average person working full-time for McDonald's or Zip's and receiving the minimum wage, $4.25 per hour, and working 40 hour weeks would earn $2890 in the four months it takes a UI student to receive 15 credits.

Anyone who has taken an Economics class will remember something called the 'opportunity cost,' or the cost of the next best alternative. The next best alternative here being the $2890 received while working instead of going to school. Divide this cost by the 192 classes available for a 15 credit carrying student to attend which equals $15.05. This is an additional cost of attending college. Adding this opportunity cost of $15.05 to the previous $3.38 yields a total cost of $18.43 per class.

$18.43 for every class skipped is quite a bit of money, especially to the poor macaroni-and-cheese-eating-college student. A full day of skipping class could cost as much as $55.29.

Even though Idaho has a low University fee compared to many other schools, the numbers add up. Who can afford the $18.43 to go spend an additional $4.00 at Games, Etc...? And is it really worth it?

Crush those butts and have fresh breath, too

Commentary by Mary Schwantes, Nutritionist
Just when I thought I knew all the reasons for quitting cigarette smoking another headline hits the media "Kids More Troublesome if Mom Smokes."

It seems that women who smoke at least a pack a day have children with twice the rate of extreme behavior problems--such as anxiety, disobedience or conflict with others compared with nonsmokers. The research was done at the University of Rochester School of Medicine in New York state led by Dr. Michael Weitzman, associate chair of pediatrics at that institution.

Surprisingly to me, smoke exposure rivals other major stresses on children such as very low birth weight, poverty, chronic illness, parent's divorce, that are being linked with elevated rates of serious behavior problems. According to one of the researchers, Dr. Lorraine Stern, cigarette smoking contains thousands of toxins, any one of which could affect behavior in children.

Now that's a super reason for quitting smoking: To maintain peace and tranquility among siblings. Actually I would add that there are many, many more benefits from quitting:

- To add years to your life.
- Help avoid lung cancer, emphysema, bronchitis, and heart attacks.
- Give your heart and circulatory system a break.
- Lose your smoker's hack.
- Feel more vigorous in sports and walking campus.
- Improve stamina.
- Stop smoke-related head and stomach aches.
- Get fresh start on sense of smell.

- End cigarette breath.
- Have smoke-free rooms and clothes.
- Have a lot more spending money.
- Say goodbye to stained yellow teeth and fingers.

- Stop burning holes in clothes and furniture.

- No more messy ashtrays, or tobacco crumbs in rugs.

- Enjoy tasting foods again.

This past spring the Centers for Disease Control reported smoking in the U.S. reached its lowest level in 37 years because of health concerns, the increasing cost of cigarettes and public smoking restrictions. The lowest incidence of smoking is among college graduates and the elderly over 75 years old. That says to me that the more you know about the dangers of second-hand smoke, the more willing you are to quit smoking.

The Student Health Service staff supports your concern to quit and will help you achieve this goal. Currently the physicians and nutritionist will work with you one-on-one to bring an end to smoking. The staff will soon begin a group "Smoking Cessation" program. Please leave your name and phone number at the Student Health Service (885-6693) if you are interested in learning more about the group program.

Let's all do our part to help meet the National Health objective for the year of 2000 to have less than 15 percent of our population smokers. Let's not continue to line the R.J. Reynolds Nabisco executives' pockets with our cigarette money.

Former NEA chairman to speak

CHRIS MILLER
Staff Writer

John Frohnmayer, former chairman of the National Endowment for the Arts who was fired by President Bush in February, will deliver the William O. Douglas Lecture and speak on first amendment rights in his "Giving Offense" speech at Gonzaga University Oct. 2, at 7:30 p.m. in the GU Student Union Building.

"This lecture addresses first amendment issues and this (Frohnmayer's speech) is right on point with what the William O. Douglas Lecture is all about," said Sarah Moore, head of the William O. Douglas Lecture Committee. "We're terribly excited to have him."

For the last few years the National Endowment for the Arts (NEA) has been walking a tightrope between obscenity and censorship in the arts. Frohnmayer became the newest casualty in the war between conservatives and the art community after he passed funding for controversial "obscene" artwork that outraged much of the public. The most infamous piece, "Piss Christ" by artist Andres Serrano, directly led to his firing. The photo depicts a spray of urine splashed on a crucifix bearing the figure of Christ.

Moore said that Frohnmayer publicly resigned under pressure from the Bush administration. This occurred after Pat Buchanan's presidential primary election campaign committee played a commercial that showed homoerotic and "obscene" artwork that had been funded by the NEA and that the commercial said, "This is where your tax dollars are going." Bush later admitted that he actually fired Frohnmayer, Moore said.

Frohnmayer is an advocate of freedom of expression, and since leaving his NEA post, he has lectured all over the United States on first amendment issues, leadership and citizen responsibility, and education in a democratic society. He recently received the Annual First Amendment Award from People for the American Way.

The lecture is sponsored by Gonzaga University School of Law. For more information contact David Newman at (208) 667-6020, or Cindy Runger at (509) 328-3865, both are GU law students and members of the William O. Douglas Lecture Committee.

Craig deserves kudos for supporting free speech on campus

Score one for Senator Larry Craig. The Senate Labor and Human Resources Committee is holding hearings on Craig's bill that would penalize colleges that disallow the use of constitutionally restricted speech.

Craig's bill would prohibit universities from receiving federal funds if the university acts against individuals who use offensive speech. Craig said the bill is aimed at safeguarding constitutionally protected speech, according to Associated Press reports.

On Thursday, students on both sides of the issue testified before the committee. One Indiana University student told committee members that when he acknowledged he was gay, he was subjected to hate mail, verbal abuse and "stares of hate and disgust." The student also testified that he favored restricting otherwise protected speech on campuses.

While the trauma that student endured is shameful, it does not justify limiting First Amendment rights.

Constitutional rights are a lot like prime farm soil. Once the top layer is eroded, the rest quickly follows. One of the central purposes of a college education is to foster the free exchange of ideas. Some ideas are not pretty. Many are not nice. But students have the right to express their ideas, no matter how distasteful.

A nationwide gag rule against distasteful speech on campuses will not end racism, sexism, gay-bashing or hate in general. If anything, putting a lid on free speech will cause the pots of hatred to boil over and violence to explode at universities around the country.

Name-calling isn't the only speech that would be restricted. Vassar College student Jonathan Karl said he was threatened with disciplinary action after he criticized a student government official in the newspaper.

"No student should be forced to endure the trauma of an impending disciplinary hearing solely for expressing his opinions," Karl said.
Amen.

Students should question, probe, argue and criticize. Students should explore distasteful ideas and conflicting viewpoints. Students should be exposed to as many ideas as possible in college. It can only help them deal with the ugliness that exists when they enter the real world. If you know your enemy, you know how to defeat him.

"Protecting" students from offensive speech isn't protection at all. It is simply disarming them of their right to free expression and the ability to make up their own minds. Every individual has his own definition of what is offensive. It need not be regulated in speech or thought.

Restricting free speech and closing down the free market of ideas will not end hatred. Education will.

Education can't exist in a vacuum, only ignorance can. And isn't that what students are fighting to begin with?

Bush should sign leave bill

COMMENTARY
BY HEIDI KENYON

Somewhere on the desk of George Bush, awaiting the presidential signature, is a bill which would allow American workers unpaid time off work to care for sick family members.

The bill is a litmus test, a way for the president to show his true colors on the issue of family values. It seems logical that if the president means what he has been saying about the importance of family life, he will sign the bill, thus allowing Mom to stay home and made a cup of Campbell's chicken noodle soup when little Johnny has a runny nose.

However, White House officials deem it unlikely that Bush will support the bill. He vetoed similar legislation proposed in the last Congressional session.

For this reason, many GOP members have said the Democrats aren't playing fairly by promoting this issue right before the election. Sort of like, "How dare you ask us to prove that we mean it!"

But this Republican protestation is just the pot calling the kettle black. GOP members don't want the Dems to bring up something that might affect the election. But then isn't that what the whole family values issue is in the first place?

When else in his career has Bush made "family values" an important item on his agenda?

Anxiety gallops through Campaign '92

Concerned and disillusioned citizen searching for ideal presidential candidate. Must be honest, trustworthy and have appeal to the masses. Must understand that most of the federal budget comes directly out of the voters' pockets, as long as the voters can afford pants. Reply to Forlorn.

We asked for it. And we got it. This is not a presidential election. It is an open invitation to put on an oversized pair of Pampers, stock up on a year's supply of strained carrots and find a nice warm crib to curl up in.

And what we see on the news every night is not the noble battle between two men to occupy the highest office in democracy, but a televised contest to see which presidential ticket can flog the populace with the longest chain of tired cliches.

"We must put our people back to work," drawls Bill Clinton in one sound bite on CBS.

"We must make America competitive once again," counters George Bush on CNN.

"Oh yeah? We must have compassion for the poor and homeless," chirps Al Gore from a whistlestop in Memphis.

"With whose money? And besides, your mama wears clogs, you media-political elitist," sneers Dan Quayle.

"Enough already," says the typical voter, reaching for the remote control.

COMMENTARY

There are some people who can look at Bush and Clinton and see the difference between night and day, or the gradations between rich, middle class and poor.

I can see only the difference between Yale and Harvard. And let me tell you, it ain't much.

Delegates at the political conventions this summer were absolutely convinced that their man was the messiah who would ride into town on an ass and save us from the unwashed heathen.

Convention-goers in Houston and New York were more than happy to tell roving T.V. reporters that, come November, Americans would choose their man because of his stand on abortion, or family values, or defense, or equal rights for house pets.

Meanwhile, millions of Americans were going to bed early or flocking to video stores in pursuit of a cure for the creeping boredom of Campaign '92.

Rabid partisans think they can hear more than a subtle variation between Clinton's speeches and Bush's replies. It's all a matter of who has the better grasp of the issues, we are told by the party faithful, as if an issue was something tangible that could fill an empty stomach.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Humane Society needs helpers

Editor;

Owning a pet is one of the few joys in life that is ours for the asking. Certainly, companion animal ownership is one of the greatest satisfactions we can depend on in our uncertain world.

With the beginning of the new academic year thousands of students, faculty and staff are arriving in Pullman and Moscow. During this time animal shelters, pounds and private parties adopt out many unwanted kittens and puppies.

To make pet ownership a success you need to consider a number of factors. If you have a large fenced yard, it is likely a good home for a large breed. For a smaller home, without a fenced exercise area, near a busy street, a small breed would do better. Cats do well in any size house and are kept indoors by knowledgeable owners. This prevents losing your cat to injury by other animals or traffic accidents.

The main cause of death of dogs and cats in our country is the average uninformed pet owner. Owners will go through several pets which will be kept for one to two years, after which the companion animal will be dumped into the already flooded pet market. Pet stores, backyard breeders and puppy mills are major contributors to the throwaway pet problems. Unwanted animals face neither an easy life nor an easy death, and it is only with the help of people like yourself that their suffering can be eased. A big step toward solving this pet tragedy would be to teach people to consider the responsibility involved in animal companion ownership before adopting or buying a pet.

Pet overpopulation is enormous. In the United States alone in 1990 as many as 9.1 million unwanted dogs and 9.7 million unwanted cats were killed by shelters and pounds. To help slow down this tragic destruction of unfortunate animals, we strongly urge pet population explosion control by neutering and spaying rather than killing.

Anyone who has adopted pets from the Pullman Animal Control Center or the Humane Society of Whitman County since the summer of 1991 and is interested in our Society's program of neutering and spaying as well as anyone wishing to volunteer in one of several important ongoing projects, or would like to become a member of our Society may contact me at (509) 332-3086. Volunteers are urgently needed.

Maybe as far as Kuwaiti families are involved, but American home life has been out of his league these last three years.

Yet now, in an election year, Bush has created an issue of how we exist as parents, children, husbands, wives, siblings and lovers. For some reason, telling the American public how to live its lives is supposed to make him more popular — George Herbert Walker Bush, who doesn't know a supermarket scanner from the blinking lights of SDI.

Okay, fine, it could be Bush has suddenly acquired a real desire to be the Great White Father of the 1990s. So why is the Republican party up in arms because they have been asked to prove what they've been saying? Trust is not something politicians are usually given, at least not by sane individuals. We want to see some action.

Instead of action, Bush wants to put his money where his mouth is. Only it's not his money, it's another chunk of the federal budget which he has been sprinkling around so liberally these days.

As an alternative to Bush's signing the emergency family leave bill, the White House has hinted he would rather offer a tax cut to small employers, as a carrot to lead them toward giving workers emergency leave.

But the tax incentives would only be offered to employers with 500 or less employees. That leaves a hell of a lot of people out, folks, including auto workers, teachers, all government workers and yes, everyone here who puts in a few hours on the University time clock.

But it is a way for Bush to say he's supporting family values, and that's what counts when November 3 rolls around, right?

In fact, so much of politics is centered around the next election that it's a wonder we even use the term "election-year politics." Why don't we just go under that assumption in the first place?

And anyway, who cares? Why does it matter whether or not the timing of the emergency-leave bill is focused on the '92 presidential race? We can't wait until the election is over to push through any bit of legislation which remotely affects the campaign. If we were to do that, we might as well let Congress skip its session this year.

The people whom this bill is designed to help don't care whether it's election year politics or not. They care whether or not they're going to get fired from their jobs for staying home with their sick babies.

The bill on Bush's desk isn't there because Democrats are trying to make liars of Republicans. It isn't there because one party is looking for that extra little edge over the other. Legislation gets written to make changes, and the leave bill is up for approval because of the people it will help.

It's not election-year politics, it's people-year politics, the way it should be every year. Maybe the GOP needs to get back to that concept.

Truth is, there aren't many issues to discuss. Both candidates are basically mainstreamers who at times try to portray themselves as exact opposites. The two are separated by style much more than substance, and any differences they may have now will fade after the election.

George Bush is not as conservative as he acts, and Bill Clinton is not as liberal as he tries to be. They will do and say whatever they think is necessary to be president for the next four years, promising to deliver the moon to our front door while conveniently forgetting to tell us the package will come postage due.

The candidates are burning up the airwaves talking about the economy and foreign affairs like honeymooners burn up bed-sheets. At least newlyweds kiss each other in the morning.

If there is nothing much to separate the two on actual, plausible policy differences, just how can we choose between a Connecticut Yankee and a Southern Man?

■ Running mates

Four years ago, Bush shocked the world by selecting Dan Quayle to be his vice presidential candidate. Quayle, a U.S. Senator from Indiana, was considered a political neophyte and didn't seem to add much to the ticket. Bush won anyway.

This year Clinton, a 45-year-old, southern-bred, Ivy League, Jimmy Carter/JFK political love-child with a blond, strong-willed wife garnered the Democratic nomination for president.

To balance the ticket, Clinton chose as his running mate Tennessee Senator Al Gore, a man who has the same Congressional experience as Quayle, and a man whose father was also a Tennessee Congressman and Senator.

Interestingly, Gore is a 44-year-old, southern-bred, Ivy League, Carter/Kennedy lovechild with a blond, strong-willed wife. Quite a ticket if you like wearing Italian suits and eating grits.

Who's picking the banjo here? A little geographical balance sure would have been swell.

For the most part, Quayle and Gore are both stuffed shirts, but at least Quayle is entertaining. Think of all the laughs he has given us the past four years, not to mention providing Murphy Brown with enough material for a half dozen episodes.

Gore, on the other hand, looks like a side of beef with a $50 haircut.

■ Recreation

Possibly more important than a president's selection of his second-in-command is what he chooses to do in his spare time. Bush unwinds by throwing horseshoes or going fishing. He has also been known to nibble a pork rind or two.

For a good time, Clinton hangs around with blonde bimbos whose biographies can be found by looking in the Dewey Decimal System under 38DD. He smokes marijuana, but doesn't inhale.

Americans are divided on Clinton's use of drugs. Is he a hero for refusing to get high, or a fool for wasting good weed?

■ Military records, the draft and Vietnam

Bush served in the military during World War II, although it should be pointed out that at the time anyone who didn't go to war when called upon was viewed with suspicion and hatred.

Although he may never fess up to it, Clinton wormed his way out of serving in Vietnam, just like Quayle. Sooner or later, his evasiveness on the issue of dodging the draft will come back to haunt him.

Gore, on the other hand, went to Vietnam in uniform. However, he went as an Army reporter, probably seeing his heaviest action in the back room of a Saigon nightclub. Maybe the fact that his father was a U.S. Senator at the time had something to do with him avoiding combat, maybe not.

If any of the three had the guts to go to Canada or to jail to protest U.S. involvement in southeast Asia, they might not get votes, but they would at least have the respect of their fellow Americans.

What they did smacks of elitism. To them, dying in foreign lands has always been something better suited to the sons and daughters of steelworkers and farmers.

Don't get me wrong, I'm no warmonger myself. If I had been caught in the breeze when the draft started blowing, I would have done everything possible to avoid toting an M-16 across a rice paddy. But I sure wouldn't sit in front of the American voters on Face the Nation and make little white lies about it.

This year, voters are beginning to realize that the differences between Democrats and Republicans are cosmetic. Maybe it is time for us to stop naively electing men who kiss our babies, shake our hands, wrap themselves in the American flag and then do whatever they want after they take office. Maybe we should not be so eager to believe men with impeccably coiffed hair and buffed nails.

Don't kid yourself, America. Both sides are dripping from a swim in the cesspool of good, old-fashioned, pig trough politics. We can only hope for a miracle.

processes. Goettsche said that "students need to get out and vote" and it doesn't matter who they vote for, just that they vote.

The Young Democrats have been on campus for several years and have been involved in many ways on campus and in the community. Several of the group have gone on to work in Boise or Washington, DC after helping in campaigns of the candidates that were elected. "If someone is looking for a job in the Democratic field of politics, getting involved in the Young Democrats is the best way to find that future," said Goettsche.

Students that are interested in joining the Young Democrats are encouraged to attend the Wednesday night meetings downtown and to let their voices be heard. "We hope to get a lot of students involved in this election as it holds so many possibilities for the future," said Goettsche.

"The university has funded us for the sole sake of recycling," said Martin, not for monetary reasons. He also said that without government funds, it would be impossible to run the services they do today.

Martin also pointed out, though, that if more people recycled, in the end it actually can save money for business and home use. "If more people recycled, it would be more cost effective," he said.

Martin and Rod said that they hope to see the center fully operational, funded and employed, meaning that they could recycle up to 90 percent of the waste from the university, instead of the 20 percent they do now. While that figure sounds relatively small, the recyclers saved 34 tons of material from being sent to the landfill. Rod said that they have made plans, though, to have 50 percent recycling capabilities by this time next year.

Martin said that he'd like to see a lot more volunteers, especially from the residence halls. He said that although the halls have already been setting out boxes for recycling, they do not have the manpower to pick it up.

If anyone would like more information on recycling, they can call 885-6222.

"One of the most important messages we want to get out is that girls shouldn't let guys in that they do not know after 11 pm," Clarke said.

Kevin Bartz, president of the Residence Housing Association, agreed with Clarke that Tower residents need to better look out for themselves. "The people in the tower should realize that it is their community. They need to be responsible for their community."

The women in the Willey wing, the six floors of women halls in Wallace Complex, have been policing their own hallways for years, according to Bartz.

"They will go up to a guy wandering the hallway and say, 'You don't belong her, leave,'" Bartz said.

Nighttime Assistance was also move to Gault Hall so they could join forces with a student-operated escort service, according to Bartz.

Bartz, who does double duty as both the Resident Housing Association president and the escort program coordinator, said the isolated location at Gault Hall increases personal protection for users of the escort service.

"There will be no people standing around like in the tower lobby so a caller won't have to worry that their name or number is going to be heard by anyone," Bartz said.

Bauer said RHA came to Nighttime Assistance with the idea of linking forces and "We thought it was a really good idea." We want to be involved in anything where people are getting involved with helping other people, Bauer said.

The escort service isn't operational yet this semester because all of the escort positions haven't been filled, according to Bartz. Bartz said it should be operational within the next two weeks. The number to call for both Nighttime Assistance and the escort service is 885-8609.

Long-range changes to security are also in the works for the residence halls. Plans include making the locks on the front doors and also the elevators in women's halls operational by student ID cards.

"Cards would be better than keys because unlike a key, students can report a card missing and it could be deactivated," Bartz said.

Bartz doesn't believe this is a futuristic, sometime next century type of project, either.

"It shouldn't take long to get it set-up and going," he said.

Pride of Vandals was up against the wall

LOREN ROBERTS

COMMENTARY

The secret to understanding football is a fairly obvious one, that being to follow along with how each aspect of the game is measured. To see how far the ball went, the distance is measured in yards. If a team scores, it is measured as points. Quite a simple process of measurement that allows everyone, young and old, to follow the greatest game ever invented.

But so, so often there are times in this wild sport, as well as others, when that one intangible factor that can't be measured will play its biggest role.

It is, in a word, pride.

The biggest show of determination in Idaho football history took place in the city of Fort Collins just three days ago when the Vandals came down from 28-0 to beat Colorado State, 37-34. As the days become weeks, the weeks become months, and the months become years, time won't make a difference to those players involved, or any individual who was also a part. This is a perfect example that the greatest function of the human body is its ability to remember. The last 20 minutes of Saturday's game will be a part of those people for as long as they live.

It all began with 4:39 left in the third period when Sherriden May caught a 37-yard touchdown pass from Doug Nussmeier, and it all ended with 0:42 left in the fourth quarter on a 29-yard field goal by Mike Hollis. It was a 27-0 Vandal scoring streak that set up a victory that was never supposed to happen.

So how can anyone explain what was witnessed by the 18,000-plus on hand at the game, or to the people across the Northwest who were gathered around radios with their stomachs in their throat for the entire fourth quarter? How could Idaho do to CSU what Nevada did to Weber State last year when the Wolfpack stormed back, and beat the Wildcats 55-49? What is Idaho thinking by beating a Division I-A school, who has as many athletes on football

Wham, bam, thank you Rams!

Vandals never say die in miraculous comeback

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

University of Idaho kicker Mike Hollis split the uprights with 0:42 left to play to give Idaho its greatest comeback victory in recent history over Colorado State, 37-34 on Saturday.

The freshman kicker, out of Central Valley High School in Spokane, went 3-for-3 with the boot, making three-pointers from 39, 22, and the game winner, from 29 yards out. Idaho took a five-yard delay of game penalty on third down before the final kick. Hollis said he was about as nervous as he could be.

"I was pacing the side-lines a lot because I didn't know what we were going to do," Hollis said. "Then coach walked up to me, and said 'go in there and get the easy three.' But there wasn't anything easy about that."

As the game began, however, it appeared Idaho (2-0) would never even get their offense on the field, much less down to the seven yard line to win the game. Idaho began the game by booting the opening kick-off out of the CSU's endzone, and the Rams began their drive from their 20 yard line. CSU (0-2) needed only six plays to march 80 yards in three minutes, 17 seconds to score on a 16-yard touchdown run by John Ivlow. On the ensuing kick-off, freshman Ahmani Johnson fumbled the ball, giving CSU possession on the UI 27. Two plays later Ivlow plunged in from a yard out to give the Rams their second score in 28 seconds.

As the old saying goes, when it rains, it pours.

CSU kicked off again, and this time it was Darrick Davis who lost the handle on the ball, and the Rams jumped on it on the UI 28-yard line. It was déjà vu for UI as Ivlow plowed in from one yard out five plays later to score his third touchdown five minutes.

"It's kind of scary coming in and playing a Division I school, but after they started scoring it was a matter of trying to keep everyone up on the side-lines," Idaho Quarterback Doug Nussmeier said. "We knew we could play with them, but it was already 21-0 and we hadn't gotten the offense on the field."

When the offense finally took the field for the first possession, it wasn't productive. Two incomplete passes, and a three-yard run by Nussmeier brought Tom Sugg into the game to punt the ball away. After booting a 52-yard punt, CSU again marched over the hapless Vandals, covering 67 yards in only five plays. The drive was sealed with a 25-yard pass from quarterback Anthony Hill to Greg Primus.

Now down 28-0, it appeared that the tone was set for the game, and it was CSU who was doing all the setting. But the Vandals held onto the third kick-off, and began a drive at their own 32-yard line. UI mixed up the pass with some rush, and were helped out by a CSU penalty for 17 yards on a roughing the passer call. After 11 plays UI got on the board as Sherriden May plowed up the middle from three yards out to make it 28-7 at the end of the first quarter.

At the beginning of the second quarter it appeared that the Rams were going to pile more points on the board. CSU started on their own 28-yard line, and moved the ball quickly down to the Idaho 17-yard line. On fourth-and-nine, CSU attempted a 34-yard field goal, but it was wide to the right. Idaho took over on downs, and used 4:57 off the clock in an impressive 11 play drive resulting in a 39-yard field goal by Mike Hollis.

But CSU marched right back.

With Hill at the helm, the sophomore began their next drive with a 20-yard to Primus. After runs by Leonice Brownand, and a couple more catches by Hill, CSU had first-and-goal on the UI 9-yard line. But the defense held them at the two-yard line, and after calling a time-out, the Rams settled with a field goal to go up at halftime, 31-10.

While in the locker room, it was time for John L. to begin motivate his team like he had never done before.

"We came in at halftime, and I told them to not take the field in the second half just to play," Smith said. "I said we spotted them 28 points, but if we went back out there, and didn't give anything away we'll win."

Nussmeier said John L. was doing quite a bit of inspiring.

"Coach came in at halftime fired up," Nussmeier said. "He, and us both knew that the score should have been 10-10, without us giving them 21 points."

In the first half, Nussmeier said CSU's defense was changing their look after Idaho would line up. Due to this the junior would be forced to audibize at the line

Vandals take second in Safeco Classic

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

After Saturday's Safeco Classic championship match with Cal Poly-San Luis Obispo, Vandal volleyball coach Tom Hilbert leaned back in a bleacher seat and spoke about a "wake-up call."

The Vandals had just experienced their first defeat of the season to the highly-regarded Mustangs, 15-1, 5-15, 12-15, 12-15, and Hilbert was reflecting on the Vandals' play throughout the tournament.

"So far, everything has come fairly easy for us," said Hilbert. "When we ran up against Cal-Poly, I just don't think we were mentally prepared."

The Vandals certainly looked prepared as they opened their match with Cal Poly. Making only one hitting error in the game, the Vandals hit a sizzling .478. Senior middle blocker Nancy Wicks and junior outside hitter Jessica Puckett were the individual standouts as they combined for 12 service points.

As game two opened, the Mustangs looked to be in trouble. A loud Memorial Gym crowd roared their approval whenever the Vandals did something right, and the Vandals appeared to have all the momentum from their game one rout.

However, with the game tied at two apiece, the Mustangs began playing outstanding defense to build a 10-4 lead. Led by tournament MVP Lael Perslrom, the Mustangs eventually wore the Vandals down.

It was the Mustangs' defense and blocking that most impressed coach Hilbert.

"They were very sound defensively, and their blocking began to hurt our offense in the second game," said Hilbert.

Following an eight-minute break before game three, Idaho appeared to have regained its momentum. Senior Heather McEwen opened the game with eight service points and the Vandals upped that to 9-0 a short time later with Puckett serving. Then the bottom fell out.

Cal-Poly methodically chipped away at the Idaho lead and with setter Carrie Bartkoski serving, the Mustangs regained the lead at 11-10. As their lead decreased, frustration could be seen among all the starters, and Puckett was eventually issued a yellow card for misconduct.

The Vandals never recovered from the game three setback as Mustang outside hitter Eileen Bermundo's five service points in game four put the match away.

Mustang coach Craig Cummings, whose team is now 9-0, was impressed by the intensity that the Vandals displayed in the match.

"We have had a long road stretch, and among the teams that we've played, the Vandals have been the best team by far," said Cummings. "They have nothing to hang their heads about."

One of the factors that may have contributed to the Vandal loss was fatigue as Heather Cross-Schroeder and freshman Tzvetelina Yanchulova were the only reserves to see action during the title game.

Hilbert, however, said that he noticed more mental fatigue than physical fatigue, and that it was his intention to give his starters a large dose of playing time. He said he did this not only to test the composure of his starters, but also to get them ready for forthcoming Big Sky conference scholarships as Idaho would if the UI athletic department also gave helmets to men's and women's basketball, and the tennis team? What did Idaho find in themselves at half-time that makes them so special to come back, and win a game that was almost too embarrassing to listen to?

It is, in two words, Vandal Pride.

At the west end of the Vandals locker room there hangs a sign above the doorway that the team comes out of before home games. The sign reads "Vandal Pride," and each player slaps the sign before taking the field. When Idaho travelled to Fort Collins, they brought their most valuable commodity with them - that sign.

"When we go on the road we make it our home locker room, so we brought Vandal Pride with us," Head Coach John L. Smith said following the game. "And today we painted this stadium black and gold!"

After the last snap was taken, the Vandals had done that indeed. But Vandal Pride isn't just something that solely deals with this football team. It's about students who go to school here, students who still have spirit to do what they can for other people, and make this the most fulfilling place to go to college. Anyone can have Vandal Pride, and it's in each individual on how they want to show it. The football team worked their share of it into 20 memorable minutes on Saturday.

Now the team must focus on the nine remaining games they have left, and not just be satisfied with a game that they'll tell their kids about. The season isn't going to get any easier, but that sign on the wall will keep reminding them that nothing is impossible.

So in trying to figure out why this unbelievable event took place, the answer is it was a block of wood that sits in a doorway of the dome? No, it's more than that. Much, much more than that. It's not just a piece of wood, or even just a sign for that matter. It's a sign in Vandals everywhere who say "to hell with you, I'm not giving up." It's a sign in people who go out of their way to help others who need it. And it's also a sign you'll see shining deep in the eyes of the Idaho football players when they talk about this past weekend. It's a sign of pride.

Idaho student attends the U.S. Open

GUEST COMMENTARY BY AMY GRANGER

I spent my Labor Day weekend in New York City with John McEnroe. Well, not WITH him, but he was there at the U.S. Open, and I was there watching. For a die-hard fan, it's close enough.

New York City is a strange place. I have a theory; There is a lack of oxygen in the air. It consists of exhaust fumes from cabs, grime off people's bodies, and microfragments of trash floating in the air. No oxygen gets to the brain. It has to be more addictive than alcohol or cigarettes. Why else would millions of people live stacked on top of each other, purposely avoid each other, and always be mad about something? New York is crazy, loud, and fast. What better place is there to hold the U.S. Open?

Getting on the plane in Spokane, and landing in La Guardia International Airport at 2 a.m. all by myself, was to put it mildly, a culture shock. The airlines lost my bag, I got accosted by a drunk who wanted me to get in his taxi, and I got asked "why are you so happy" all within 5 minutes.

Being the paranoid westerner that I am, I decided to memorize the cab driver's name and ID number just in case he tried anything funny. That way, if he did try to kill me, I'd have his ID number and boy would he be sorry. My first cab driver, Ahkiem Odjagun, #88823475, was actually a hysterically funny man who was from Jamaica. He had degrees in Biology, Chemistry, Pharmacy, and was studying Computer Interpretation. He drove a cab for the fun of it.

On to the tennis: We rode the subway to the National Tennis Center in Flushing Meadows. Not all of N.Y.C. was disgusting, the Tennis Center was a great place to spend the day.

On Labor Day (people actually celebrate this holiday in N.Y.C. with a parade), McEnroe was scheduled to play Jim Courier, the No. 1 player in the world at 11 a.m. on the Stadium court. It was the only day my mom and I didn't have tickets for, but we did have nifty looking U.S.T.A. badges on that got us inside the Tennis Center. To make an agonizingly long story short, we ended up with courtside seats.

That's right, by a fluke of nature, I was sitting courtside watching Jon McEnroe. As in, first row, important looking, and within spitting distance from the line judges (not that I would ever do that).

I had been instructed to cheer for McEnroe for about 5 of my friends. It was 6-2, 6-2, 3-3 (McEnroe was down), and I said, "This one's for Jeff," and Mac hit a high backhand volley cross court winner. It only got better (and worse). Even though Mac ended up losing the third set in a tie breaker and the match, he threw his racquet, yelled at a photographer (who was kicked off the court for rewinding his film), and yelled at NBC announcer, Leslie Visser, to "get the hell off the court." I was in heaven. He was a true entertainer.

While at the Open, I watched MaliVai Washington vs. Henri Leconte, Pete Sampras vs. Guy Forget, and Andre Agassi vs. Carlos Costas, and none had the drama and heartache of McEnroe vs. Courier. I'll concede that I didn't get to see other exciting tennis players like Jimmy Connors, Martina Navratilova, and Jennifer Capriati because they were out before I ever arrived.

I don't want to belittle the No. 1 ranked Jim Courier, he played brilliant tennis, but on the basis of sheer excitement, Mac is where it's at. He has been battling for fifteen years, won eight U.S. Open titles, eight Wimbledon titles (the latest was this year in doubles), as well as continued Davis Cup support. As of Aug. 1, he was ranked eighteenth.

As long as John McEnroe is out there throwing his racquet, yelling at line judges, and playing incredible tennis, then all of the near death experiences in cabs, the and grime of New York City is worth it.

If interested, please contact Will Simons, the Intern Coordinator, at the Office of the Governor, State Capitol, Boise, Idaho, 83720, or at (208) 334-2100. Interviews will be arranged on your campus after October 1, 1992, and final selections will be announced by Governor Andrus by November 20, 1992.

to avoid giving up a major mistake.

"They were giving us way too many looks on the line that were confussing me," Nussmeier said. "When we were in the locker room we just decided to let them change their plays, but we would stick with our game plan."

That game plan would be crucial if Idaho wanted to get back into the game. After CSU forced the Vandals to punt, the Rams put another three on the board with a 21-yard field goal by Peter Rantzau, his second of the game. Now down 34-10, it appeared that the ball was just not going to bounce the Vandals way.

Enter the "Doug Nussmeier Show."

The kick-off from CSU went through the endzone, and Nussmeier came in to begin the greatest comeback in school history. The southpaw hit wide-receiver Yo Murphy for a quick 26-yard gain, and then a pass to tight-end Ronnie White for 16. After running-back Sherriden May picked up one yard, Nussmeier hit him on a passing play for a 37-yard touchdown on a drive that took only 1:18 to score on.

"I think right then we were on our way," Nussmeier said. "We knew we could play with them, and all we needed to do was chip away at them."

Just as the offense was getting points on the board, the defense began firing things up as well.

The black and gold "D" halted CSU's next drive in six plays, and forced them to punt from their own 41. Idaho began their next drive on their 26, and Nussmeier came out with a loaded gun. He hit Murphy for 26, then Walter Saunders for 11, and then another to Murphy for 29 yards down to the one yard line. On the next play Wind Henderson busted up the gut for the score, and it was now 34-24.

"We all knew that if we could get within 10 (points) we'd have a shot at winning the game," Nussmeier said. "When our offense began going I don't know what could have stopped us."

On CSU's next possession the defense came through again. Facing a third-and-24 from their own 37, Hill tried to complete a pass, but Idaho linebacker Jason Shelt picked it off, and now the Vandals were on the Ram's 45-yard line. Idaho maneuvered down to the five-yard line, where they faced a major decision on fourth-and-one. But there was plenty of time on the clock (8:46), so Hollis stepped up to kick an easy 22-yard field goal. But easy it wasn't, as the ball hit the upright, and bounced through the posts.

"I've always had bad luck with posts," Hollis said. "The win was swirling, and it wasn't pretty, but it went in."

In it went indeed, and the Vandals were back in the game, 34-27. CSU moved the ball quickly downfield, and were at the Idaho 32 with first-and-ten, and looking to put the game out of reach. But Jeff Robinson forced Brown to fumble, and Shelt pounced on the ball to get his second turnover, and give the Vandals the ball with 4:57 to go. Again it was Nussmeier who proved that this offense can do almost anything it pleases when it wants too. Nussmeier hit Saunders for 11 yards, Burke for 12, and White for 17 to get to the CSU 31-yard line. On the next play he found an open May who took the ball into the endzone, making the score 34-33 with 3:57 to play. The Vandals were now in a position to go for the two-point conversion, and go ahead for the first time. But Smith knew how well the defense was playing, and with that much time left, elected to have Hollis go in, and punch the PAT through.

Once again, the defense came through. CSU managed only 11 yards in six plays, and it forced in their punting unit. Punter Gianni Marcantonio booted a 36-yard punt to the Idaho 33, but Walter Saunders made an incredible run-back for 40 yards to the CSU 27. On Idaho's first possession, May ran for 10 yards to get another first. On second down, Nussmeier dropped back to pass, but scrambled for eight yards to the CSU nine. After May ran for a yard, Idaho had fourth-and-one from the CSU eight. The Vandals took a five-yard delay of game penalty that set up the heroics by Hollis.

Nussmeier was named Big Sky Player of the Week (22-33, 390 yards) in leading Idaho up to No. 6 in the nation in 1-AA.

games.

"I wanted to test them to see how they would respond to a big game because I guarantee that they will see this caliber of opponent in Big Sky play," said Hilbert.

The Vandals prepared for Saturday's title game by dismantling teams from Utah State and Simon Fraser in the opening rounds of the second-annual tournament.

Friday's game with Utah State was a testimony to Idaho's power as the Vandals recorded 45 aces in their 15-3, 15-5, 15-5 victory. Puckett and Wicks combined for 22 kills between them as the Vandals hitting percentage was a lofty .439.

Defensively, the Vandals also shined as they limited the Aggies to a .027 hitting percentage. Wicks was also a leader in the defensive department as she recorded eight digs and three blocks.

The Vandals moved their record to 3-0 with this win and made it 4-0 on Saturday after defeating Simon Fraser 15-0, 15-7, 15-6.

Puckett led the Vandal surge with a .875 hitting percentage and seven kills. Sophomore Britany Van Haverbeke was right behind with a torrid .833 hitting percentage after recording ten kills with no errors in 12 attempts. Senior setter Amie Hanks directed the attack with 20 assists.

Hilbert was pleased with what he saw.

"Simon Fraser gave us some good competition, and I was pleased with how our kids hit the ball," said Hilbert.

Hanks agreed. "We hit everything, and more importantly, our hitting seemed to always be controlled," said Hanks.

After all was said and done, the Vandals had emerged from the tournament with a 4-1 record and a knowledge of what needed improvement.

"This tournament gave us a chance to test ourselves against some really good competition," said Hilbert. "Coming out of this tournament, we need to work on getting the ball to our middle hitters before the Big Sky games begin."

The outstanding play of the Vandals was also evident to tournament officials who named two players, Hanks and Wicks, to the all-tournament team.

"It is disappointing to lose, but we seem to be coming together," said Wicks. "We matched up well against Cal Poly, and they are a strong team."

The Vandals will take their 4-1 record into a series of road games that start tonight with Oral Roberts. Tomorrow night, the team will tangle with Missouri Southern and this weekend, the Vandals will be part of the Sooner Invitational in Norman, Oklahoma.

UI engineers head south

By BRANDY CORGATELLI
Staff Writer

Many UI students finish up their degrees and head south—all the way to southeastern Idaho that is.

UI graduates take positions as attorneys, business people and engineers in Idaho Falls, according to Linda Hoffman, a 1967 UI graduate in education.

However, Joe Mitchell, a 1987 graduate from the UI, doesn't personally know any UI graduates in Idaho Falls who are in law, business, or any other occupation for that matter, except one. The reason for the large numbers of UI alumni in the city is because of the engineers, according to Mitchell.

"The only people I know (in Idaho Falls) from the UI work at the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory," Mitchell said.

Mitchell is one of many engineers who start out in northern Idaho pursuing a college degree and end up employed at the completely opposite end of Idaho at the INEL.

Mitchell estimated that of the 11,000 people currently working at the engineering site in Idaho Falls, around 400 are UI graduates.

Many of these INEL workers from UI are also married to UI graduates. Add to these the other UI graduates who live in Idaho Falls and are employed in other fields than engineering and the number of alumni in this one city becomes a significantly large one. Idaho Falls contends with Moscow, Lewiston and Boise, cities much closer to the UI, for the highest number of UI graduates.

Yet, there are many other jobs in engineering throughout the country so why live in Idaho Falls?

Mitchell's answer was, "I just wanted to stay in Idaho." Mitchell grew up in northern Idaho and attended this university in northern Idaho. When it came time to look for a job, he looked first in Idaho.

The transition from the northern part of the state to the south wasn't difficult for Mitchell. "There are greater temperature extremes," Mitchell said. On the positive side for Mitchell, who is an avid backpacker, "There are bigger mountains down here (in southern Idaho)."

Hoffman's reasons for living in Idaho Falls were different. She is not an engineer and isn't even married to an engineer. Her choice of Idaho Falls was not work-related.

For Hoffman, living in Idaho Falls was more like a homecoming. "We sort of started out in the area," she said.

Hoffman lived in Idaho Falls before coming to get a degree at the UI twenty-five years ago. Her husband was from Blackfoot, a city 25 miles south of Idaho Falls.

Catholic church to celebrate 25 years

St. Augustine's Catholic Center on the University of Idaho Campus will celebrate its 25th anniversary September 18 - 20. The church was dedicated on May 7, 1967 with Father Andrew Schumacher as its first chaplain. Prior to the building of this church, the religious needs of Catholic students on campus were met through a student organization known as the Newman Club.

As the student population grew rapidly after World War II, it became imperative that a student church and parish be built on or near campus. The Moscow Council of Knights of Columbus had over the years shown a high concern for the spiritual welfare of these students but it wasn't until 1958 that the State Council of Knights of Columbus took on the fund raising as a state project. Two persons stand out as the catalyst for this movement.

One was Father Urban Schmidt who came to Moscow in 1948 as the Pastor of St. Mary's Parish. He took an early interest in the Catholic students at Idaho through his tireless efforts in the Newman Club and could clearly see that what was needed was a student parish such as St. Augustine's parish. The other pioneer in the building of this church was Thomas R. Walenta, a professor of law at the University of Idaho. Working with and through the Moscow Council and the state organization he pushed through the proposal to make the fund drive a Knights of Columbus state project. Walenta served as the fund drive chairman and he and Father Schmidt spent much time visiting various areas of the state to accomplish this purpose.

The first step in the building process was the purchase of three houses directly across the street from the Student Union Building. Father Andrew Schumacher, the first pastor, arrived in Moscow on July 23, 1963 to assume the campus ministry. One of the houses was selected to be the Newman Center where meetings, masses, and business was held while Father Schumacher took residence in the other. Sunday masses were held in the Borah Theater of the Student Union Building until the church was completed in 1967.

A building committee composed of students, faculty members, and other members of St. Mary's parish was organized. They chose Ted Prichard and Paul Blanton to be the architects. Dick Owen, an architecture student and member of the committee created the round church design and had one a student contest with it. During the building of the church Father Schumacher lived in a house on College Avenue nearby.

'Very spiritual feel' to artist Michael Bedard

By ELIZABETH POWELL
Contributing Writer

Oil on canvas. Graphite. Oil on linen. These are the mediums of Michael Bedard, a local artist from Pullman. Bedard, who received his B.F.A. from Brigham Young University and his M.F.A. from Washington State University, is exhibiting his work at The Inner Vision Bookstore throughout the month of September.

"Art is something I've been doing since I can remember. It has always been a part of me," said Bedard.

Bedard has been involved in many art showings, exhibiting his work in several states. He has been heavily involved in community activities as well, including last summer's "Palouse Invitational" at the Prichard Art Gallery.

"Art is like a book. I appreciate each piece like a different chapter. Individual pieces have different qualities that attract many interests. For many painters, art is like a journey. Art isn't intended to be a finished thing. I'm trying to make a more moral statement. For me, that's pretty important," said Bedard.

"Michael is very professional in the way he approaches his work," said Nancy Ging, owner of the Inner Vision Bookstore. "There's movement in his works. I like the way he's not afraid to work with really strong contrasts. He does it well."

Kirsten Taylor, a freshman at UI who attended the showing also enjoyed his art. "His art definitely had a very spiritual feel to it. The pieces were very exciting. They were mysterious in a way, and I really had to think about what he was trying to say to me, the critic."

Bedard hopes to have another exhibit next year at WSU or the UI.

"I need to get my art out...it's important. I want people to contemplate my work...think about my art."

The Inner Vision Bookstore promotes local talent by having monthly exhibitions. Pottery by Rebecca Rod, scratchboard by Keith Powell and paintings by Debra Lockett are only a few of the many showings the Inner Vision Bookstore sponsors.

Etheridge's sound captivates crowd

Review by TRACIE BRUNO
Lifestyles Editor

She's been compared to Janis Joplin, Joni Mitchell, Bruce Springsteen, and John Mellencamp, but on Saturday night Melissa Etheridge walked alone.

The 30 year-old singer/songwriter brought to the Spokane Opera House a musical drive so emotionally intense that it left the audience breathless. Etheridge came back for two encores, before the crowd, which kept screaming "never enough," was finally satisfied.

In front of a crowded house, Etheridge grinded out more than 19 songs, choosing from her three albums Never Enough, Brave and Crazy and her self-titled debut.

Wearing a new blond hairstyle and makeup, the tough-minded artist opened her show singing,

"I'm feelin' kinda loose, I'm feelin' kinda mean, I've been feelin' kinda wild since I turned 17..." a song entitled "Ain't it Heavy" from her latest album Never Enough. The song, which was an all-out rocker, continued with lyrics, "There's a hole in my jeans I only wanted to fade, I've been ripping out seams, somebody else made tonight."

And yes, she was clad in old faded Levi's with holes.

Her voice was as passionate as ever, and I was somewhat dumbfounded by her raspy, throaty and powerful voice. Her albums give her no justice, as they cut off the highs and lows of her vocal range. Her live performance, however, was a different story. She has quite a range.

This range can also be seen in Etheridge's vast adherents. The audience consisted of a number of lesbians. Etheridge has this strong following reportedly because of her decidedly feminist perspective on relationships. The audience also consisted of some country fans, folksy fans, the thirtysomething group, and a few people in their 20s.

However, Etheridge managed to keep all happy with her forthright and painfully honest songs that seemed to touch a cord in everyone there. Her songs "The Angels" and "Keep it Precious" were two examples of this. At one point Etheridge asked the audience why they were so quiet. It was simple, she had caught them in awe.

The first time I saw Etheridge her stage performance was

MosCon XIV was intergalactical

By PETE GOMBEN
Associate Editor

There was a wide variety of intergalactic flotsam and jetsam in attendance at MosCon, the annual convention sponsored by the Palouse Empire Science Fiction Association.

"The convention was a success," said Bea Taylor, one of the organizers of the event. "There were a few glitches, but overall things went well. People who attended really enjoyed themselves."

The weekend was highlighted by art shows, readings, panel discussions and seminars of both serious and slightly humorous nature.

We had a strong science track this year. Taylor said, noting that the presentation on forest ecology was topical and informative.

Mike Finkbiner, vice chairman of MosCon XIV, agreed with Taylor, saying that the convention

ing panel discussions."

Now in its 14th year, the event drew people from every state in the Northwest, as well as many Canadian provinces. According to Finkbiner, roughly 250 people attended the three-day affair.

"Sometimes it is nice to get kicked in the head with a new idea. Science fiction can give people new perspectives."

—Mike Finkbiner

After lunch at MosCon, one of the panel discussions has been held by Finkbiner and other attendees. The panelists discussed the importance of science fiction in our lives.

Turn the radio dial to HOF 101 and the Breakfast Flakes. Manda Culbertson and Grayson Thagard may make breakfast worthwhile. The comedy team for HOF 101 start the morning night hosting a talk show that includes everything from hard news to comedy to musical contests.

"We start the day at 6 a.m. and the show runs until 10 a.m. Monday through Friday," said Thagard. "Our show features wacky type information, comedy, sports information, song blimp contests, news twice an hour on the hour, a police log report with the ever-popular Dragnet music, and we never forget our reality check."

"I've always wanted to do it radio, and well, frankly, I enjoy getting up early and going to work. It's great fun," said Culbertson.

The most part of work, said Thagard, when we give away the prizes. I love the surprise. It is a positive way to start everyone's day.

Every Wednesday the Breakfast Flakes have the "Big Show," a talk show with special guests on the air.

Last year we had Brent Spinner of Star Trek fame, and we've had quite a few great people on the show. I said Thagard. Some of the center of the show is the comedy of Edna Pres that we do every night. It's a fun show. We do a lot of comedy, and we do a lot of news.

The Renegade Saints bring heavenly sounds to John's Alley

Review by JACKIE WOODS
Contributing

The music and beer flowed Friday night at John's Alley as The Renegade Saints rocked an enthusiastic crowd.

Leading off with an impressive rendition of Up On Cripple Creek by The Band, the Eugene, Oregon group prepared the audience for what was to be a spectacular musical experience.

"This is our first time here in Moscow," said lead guitarist and singer John Shipe. "You guys have that look on your face like 'Who the ---- are these guys?'"

By the evenings end, the audience had no doubt that these five musicians had come to rock'n'roll.

chance to experience the perfect blending of voices and instruments this band could produce. The original composition reminded one of the early 70's style rock of Carlos Santana.

However, trying to keyhole this group into a category only leads to frustration. Their next song, Southway, was closer to the sounds found down in the Louisiana Bayou, a hillbilly rock influenced tune.

By this time, the music fever had brought five people to the dance floor. The mostly younger crowd, splattered with some older rock'n'roller's, showed their enthusiasm with wolf calls and cheers when the band ended the first set with their version of Blue Sky by the Allman Brothers.

With the front door open for ventilation, the hot, smokey little bar held a capacity crowd.

Hhan Olsen, a senior Geology student at the University of Idaho, tried to describe the Saint's music saying, "It sounds like real rock'n'roll, close to the (Grateful) Dead and Clapton...that same kinda beat."

After the break, the band started the second set with a blues influenced rendition of Stevie Wonder's Superstitious, which drew a crowd out onto the dance floor.

The dancers did not pair off, but rather faced the stage in a "concert like" fashion to individually rock to the music. To the crowds delight, the Saint's instruments flowed without stopping into an Eric Clapton tune. From the Clapton classic to the driving guitars of an original composition, the band did not let up for almost 20 minutes straight.

Million Dollar Smile, an original song with a raw and gritty sound, produced a rocking and soulful mix of Shipe's and Toribio's voices that brought more cat calls from the crowd. After the tune, Shipe informed the audience the song would be on their first tape.

By the end of the evening, the crowd was won over by the magic of this group. The dancers overflowed the dance floor, moving between tables and chairs to the music.

Dana Chapman, of the local group Lotus, said she wanted to try and return again Saturday night to hear this band.

"I thought they were terrific, excellent," said Chapman. "A friend of mine, who is also from Eugene, said they've only been together about 10 months. I think that's pretty amazing."

The Renegade Saints, which formed in January, opened for Bob Dylan and Little Women this past spring. Things are progressing quickly for the group, who begin work on their first tape later this month.

Shipe told the Friday night crowd, "We'll have a tape next time we come around." This is one debut tape no rock'n'roll fan should pass up.

Stay home this weekend and miss the chance to experience The Renegade Saints original sound? Well, according to Coey, Moscow may get a second opportunity as the band would like to return on Oct. 23, but have no definite plans set.

Sharing the stage were Shipe, Dave Coey on bass and lead vocals, Mike Walker on keyboards, Alan Toribio on lead guitar and vocals, and Matt Reynolds on drums. The Saint's three powerful lead singers (Shipe, Coey and Toribio) added versatility to the band's repertoire which included many original tunes.

simple, so I was surprised at her new up-scale stage persona. Besides her new looks, she was much more confident, much more ballsy and much more fiery. Etheridge said her latest album is about maturity and this was apparent in her performance. Her song "Brave and Crazy" took on some modifications as the band quickened its pace and got a little crazy. "No Souvenirs," "Similar Features" and "Chrome Plated Heart" also sounded somewhat refined.

During "Chrome Plated Heart" charter member Kevin McCormick and Etheridge sat down on front stage for an acoustic and bass guitar duet. It wasn't until this number, that the crowd, which had been a bit mellow, started to rock. The song started a crescendo from each song she played thereafter. Playing "Let Me Go," "Bring Me Some Water" and "Must be Crazy for Me" only added fuel to the fire she was creating.

"2001," a song about the uncertainties that face our world between now and 2001, was her first encore. The song itself was as frisky as the lyrics are fearful taunting "I saw my sister, saw the ones who twist her, a social suicide. If looks could kill, each and every cheap thrill, could be a homicide. Wake me up when we hit 2001." By this time the entire crowd was on its feet, while the sounds of oppression and fear echoed through the Opera House.

Etheridge brought the audience back to 1992 by closing her show and her second encore with "The Letting Go," which was a soft piano ballad about saying goodbye to a former lover. Etheridge sang, "I can say goodbye now that the passion's died, still it comes slow, the letting go." And with that she stood up from the piano bench, said "thank you Spokane" and turned off the lights.

Opening for Etheridge was Jeffrey Gains. Gains played a tinny yet powerful one man acoustic guitar performance. He played songs from his self titled debut album which included, "The Hero in Me" and a rendition of Peter Gabriel's "In Your Eyes." Gains received a warm welcoming from the crowd, as they gave him a standing ovation after his performance.

"When we first started MosCon, there were only three conventions like it the Pacific Northwest," he said. "Now there are 20."

To combat the perception that science fiction conventions are for Trekkies only, Finkbinder said he would like to expose more people in the Palouse to what happens at MosCon and similar gatherings.

After they find out what MosCon is all about, people will be "interested in going to conventions because interesting things are discussed," he said.

"Science fiction fans tend to be more open to new ideas," Finkbinder said, stressing the educational aspects of the panel discussions held at MosCon.

"Sometimes it is nice to get kicked in the head with a new idea. Science fiction can give people new perspectives," he said.

There were two author guests of honor at MosCon this year.

M.J. Engh, best known for her novel, Arslan, and V.E. Mitchell, who has authored two Star Trek novels, were the honorees.

Plans are already underway to hold MosCon XV next Sept. 10, 11 and 12 at the University Inn/Best Western. The author guest of honor will be science fiction writer Barbara Hambly, the artist guest of honor is slated to be David A. Martin, whose artwork is "outstanding" according to Taylor. The fan guest of honor will be Steve Fahnstalk, who was one of the founders of the original MosCon 14 years ago.

The scientist guest of honor will be announced at a later date.

People interested in next year's activities, or who would like to attend the informal Thursday night meetings of the PESFA, can get more information by writing to MosCon XV, P.O. Box 8521, Moscow, ID 83843, or by calling 882-3672.
