Conservative voice screams for university attention

By TIM HELMKE
Staff Writer

A different approach to ideas in politics and issues will be the focus of a new publication that will be distributed on the University of Idaho and Washington State University campuses in late October for the first time.

A group called the Conservative Voice Coalition is working on a publication called the Vanguard. Vanguard is defined in Webster's New World Dictionary as "the leading position or persons in a movement." Will Hart, Director of Publication for UI for the Vanguard, said that the group chose the name because their ideas "are a leading element of a force."

The group of UI and WSU students putting the magazine-style publication together are doing it to get conservative ideas across. The students and people may be influenced by one of the "liberal oriented" publications, such as the Argonaut or the Evergreen, according to Hart.

"There is a need for the conservative views on the campuses as there is a definite liberal influx present," said Dan Whiting, Advertising Manager of the Vanguard.

The Vanguard is being done on a volunteer basis. No one is being paid for any of the work going into the publication. The budget for the Vanguard does not allow for a paid staff as of now, but Hart hopes in the future there will be paid positions.

"There is a need for the conservative views on the campuses as there is a definite liberal influx present."

— Dan Whiting
The Vanguard

The Vanguard is targeting the people on the campuses that are either borderline conservative/liberal, and anyone that needs to have their views made stronger according to Whiting. Hart and Whiting both said one of the main goals of the Vanguard is to offer education to people who may only hear one side of an issue from the campus and community papers, and professors in classes.

Another goal of the Vanguard is to show the issues in not such a "biased manner" as is the case with other publications, said Hart. They said they are going to strive for integrity in what they write and in the messages they send out, according to Hart.

With little journalistic experience and a tremendous amount of determination and drive, the staff of the Vanguard are preparing for their first issue. The Vanguard will be a monthly publication if all goes well for the group with their first issue. There will be 3000 copies of the publication printed with 1750 on the WSU campus and 1250 on the UI campus. These figures were based on the student populations of both universities.

Subscriptions to the publication are being offered "for anyone that wants one and not just for students" said Hart. The subscription would allow a person to be guaranteed a copy. Otherwise, the copies are handed out in a first-come, first-serve basis.

The first issue is expected to run between 16 and 20 pages and cover a whole spectrum of issues and ideas. It is coming out in the latter part of October with a strong emphasis on the elections.

Radioactive research

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

As public concern over radioactive waste mounts, University of Idaho scientists are proving that dangerous material like this can be utilized and disposed of safely.

Although radioactive material poses a threat to human health, it is an extremely effective tool in the lab where it is used extensively in DNA research among other applications.

Fred Hutchison, a safety officer for the UI environmental health and safety office, said the use of radiation in research settings is critical.

"Radioactive materials are very valuable in research settings, since they provide a system by which you can easily detect the biological or molecular particle of interest," said Hutchison.

Frequently, researchers will attach a radioactive element on to something known as a probe, which can then be used to highlight a specific piece of DNA they are seeking. Also, researchers can attach them to antibodies, so that foreign agents can be identified.

On a clinical medicine level, radiation is a useful method to treat cancer patients.

However, it must be used with caution because a radioactive element can emit harmful energy particles as its nucleus breaks down. In addition, many radioactive materials can take hundreds of years to break down before they won't pose a threat to humans. It is with this thought in mind that governs the use of radioactive materials in labs such as that of Don Crawford.

Crawford, a UI bacteriology professor, uses radioactive material in some of his lab projects, and he said its use is carefully governed.

"There are strict protocols for handling radioactive wastes within the lab setting," said Crawford.

Crawford said the waste in his lab is classified as solid or liquid, and each requires a different procedure for disposal.

As far as solid waste, Crawford said it's placed in a container marked solid waste. He said that liquid radioactive waste can take two forms.

"It can be your typical liquid waste, or we could have a gas like carbon dioxide that is labeled with a radioactive substance," said Crawford. "In this case, we use a material like sodium hydroxide that will trap the radio-labeled carbon dioxide and convert it into liquid form."

Hutchison, whose office oversees the use of all radioactive materials here on campus, said the waste is then disposed of in two distinctly different ways.

According to Hutchison, solid or liquid waste is carefully packaged and shipped to the Hanford, Wa., nuclear facility if it has a long half-life (the time it takes for half of the nucleus to

Everyone invited to a private party

By SHARI IRETON
Assistant News Editor

"All the Founding Fathers of the nation wanted was to be left alone," said Purdue University student Brad Klopstein, is just one of the philosophies the Libertarian Party is based on.

Klopstein was conducting a poll here as part of his internship for the party. The results of the poll, out of 116 students, was that 40.5 percent of the students were moderate, their responses don't form a consistent pattern. 23.3 percent were liberal, 17.2 percent were Libertarian, 11.2 percent were authoritarian and almost eight percent were conservative.

Klopstein stated some of the party's platforms that their presidential candidates Andre Morrou and Nancy Lord stand for.

The major issue the Libertarian party is concerned with is the Fully Informed Jury Amendment. If the amendment passes, a jury in court would be informed of a person's crime before the trial by the judge. If the jury feels that the law that the accused broke was senseless, they can override it.

"This gives the jurors an opportunity to give their opinion," said Klopstein who also stated that this idea had already been implemented into his home state of Indiana's government.

Things used to be getting better generation by generation, but lately, times are getting worse, he said. The party believes this is partially due to lack of incentives and the fact that the government controls too much. Klopstein believes that they need to change things that are publicly controlled and give them to private industry.

"If people had tax money back in their pocket, it gives them more chance to contribute," said Klopstein, "...if somebody thinks that education is important, they'll give money to it."

The party's stance on the environment, an issue that would greatly effect the Inland Northwest, is the idea of private industry cleaning up their own mess.

"As long as you can keep the pollution on your own yard it's fine," said Klopstein.

The spotted owl issue in Oregon was, he said, "a way for people to get hysterical without thinking it through."

Another local issue he discusses concerned native americans and their rights. Klopstein said that government programs "are incentives to do the worst."

Idaho counties affected by initiative

CHRIS MILLER
Staff Writer

Idaho county governments cannot "grow out" of the effects of property tax reductions resulting from the One Percent Initiative, according to two UI economists reporting to the Idaho Association of Counties last Thursday.

Stephen C. Cooke and Neil Meyer, UI College of Agriculture faculty members, said their findings disagreed with arguments made by initiative supporters. Supporters say local tax revenues will be ample because the tax base will grow faster than local government expenditures.

"Our study concludes that county government cannot 'grow out' of the effects of the One Percent Initiative. It is more likely that the property tax reductions will increase through time for the typical Idaho county," they reported.

The study is based on county government expenditure and tax base data from 1986 to 1991. In its analysis of the impact of the initiative, the Idaho State Tax Commission estimated that had the initiative been in force in 1991, there would have been $114 million decline in tax revenues.

"If the recent past is an indication of the future, then the State Tax Commission's assessment of the impact of the One Percent Initiative on county government is approximately correct for 1993 and, if anything, will underestimate the reduction in county governments' revenues," Cooke and Meyer reported.

Sponsors of the initiative, the Idaho State Property Owners Association (ISPOA), contested in the Secretary of State's Voter Pamphlet on the One Percent Initiative that the Tax Commission had purposely refused to factor in two years of growth and that the tax base is increasing by many times the rate of inflation. "The bottom line is, the increased tax base will reduce drastically, if not eliminate, any revenue loss as a result of the one percent initiative," Ron Rankin, President of the ISPOA, said in the pamphlet.

Cooke said the loss of revenue (about 20 per cent for all tax districts) could be seen in a variety of ways; bridges and roads would not be built, schools would cut jobs and programs, and response time for fires and police would go up. "There would just be a degradation of services," Cooke said.

"If citizens wanted to retain the services they currently receive, other sources of income would have to be found," Cooke and Meyer reported.

ASUI senate takes stand on initiative

By BRANDY CORGATELLI
Staff Writer

The ASUI Senate has taken a strikingly common stance on the One Percent Initiative. They oppose it.

"This is not just a tax reform issue, but an education issue," Senator Richard Rock said at the senate meeting last week. "It's important as a senate to send a strong message."

That they did, as all 13 senators voted in favor of a resolution opposing the One Percent Initiative.

Senator Dan Whiting said he hasn't decided for himself about the issue but voted with the majority anyway. "I don't know about the One Percent personally, but I'm voting for it (the resolution against the One Percent) because my living groups wanted me to."

The senate joined the UI faculty council, the alumni association, and several student groups including the Inter Fraternity Council, Panhellenic Council, and the Residence Housing Association who have recently voted to oppose the initiative.

If passed, the initiative would cut property taxes by half on the average around the state. This tax money is used to fund education and other city and county services. UI could lose over 10 million dollars, according to university estimates.

Vice-president Brad Moeller urged senators and the student body to talk to their relatives about the initiative and have them vote on it.

In other business, Moeller said he has been calling living groups to see if senators have been scheduling meetings and it's not looking good.

"We're looking at less than 50 percent visitation here," he said.

Moeller said the job of speaking to living groups about ASUI business and listening to them about how they feel about voting issues is the single most important job of a senator. It is not getting done, he said.

Moeller said he will continue the spot checks and if senators don't contact their living groups then he will, "have to take some serious action and write a bill for your impeachment."

decay and lose its radioactivity). Otherwise, Hutchison said they will package it in the environmental health and safety building, let it decay enough to where it's not radioactive and then dispose of it as regular waste.

In order to comply with the United States Nuclear Regulatory Commission, his office runs annual inspections of all labs that use radioactive materials. Not only do they check the work area, but they also check notebooks to see if radioactive materials have been inventoried.

"This office could lose its license if there are repeated violations, and if this happens, no researcher will be able to use radioactive materials on campus," said Hutchison.

One percent initiative will be taxing to state education

The political hot potato in the state of Idaho this year is not abortion, race relations or drawdowns. This election's major issue is the One Percent Initiative.

This initiative would put a cap on property taxes so the taxes would not exceed one percent of the fair market value. While most Idahoans favor low property taxes, passage of this initiative would be disastrous for state residents.

According to the State Tax Commission, local governments would lose at least $113 million if the initiative passes. Local governments are already hard-pressed to meet the needs of their communities. Police, ambulance and fire departments are hopelessly understaffed and underfunded. At a time when these groups need community support, this initiative wants to cut back their budgets. If this initiative passes, schools could be closed, emergency services could be slower and basic city services like water, sewer and trash could be sliced.

The one area that will be most severely damaged is education. If the One Percent Initiative passes, funding for education will be slashed.

That doesn't sound serious until voters consider the implications. University students already bitch about overcrowded classes. If this initiative receives the nod from the voters, classes will be more crowded, some sections will be eliminated and qualified instructors will be lost to other schools who can pay them.

This means students who need a particular class to graduate may not get it. As it is, many students must delay graduation because a class is offered once a year. If the initiative passes, that class may be offered once every two years.

Crumbling buildings will not get repaired. Additions to the library's collections would be delayed. Student fees and tuition will rocket into the stratosphere faster than the space shuttle. Funding could be cut for groups like the Argonaut, the Women's Center, the Idaho Repertory Theatre and intramural recreation. Money will be diverted to putting out major fires and the quality of student life here at the University of Idaho will plummet.

Students tend to be the worst offenders when it comes to voter apathy. People in the 18-25 year old age group tend to be more caught up in the MTV music awards than the race for the presidency. But this is an issue that will directly affect students' pocketbooks, opportunities and education.

The ASUI passed a resolution in opposition to the One Percent Initiative. ASUI senators and President Amy Anderson believe the initiative could be the final blow to a state educational system already flirting with disaster.

Students need to stand up and be heard in November. They need to say no to the One Percent and yes to their futures.

If they don't, they have no one to blame but themselves when they receive a cut-rate education for an exorbitant price.

Drinking and parking don't mix

COMMENTARY BY SHARI IRETON

Thank goodness American society has MADD, SADD and even DADD. Too bad they didn't know they would not only have to fight drunk driving, but Moscow parking regulations as well.

Students who are of legal drinking age, and even those who are not, know that it is illegal to park in downtown Moscow from 2 a.m. to 7 a.m. They also know that if they are going to any of Moscow's downtown bars, they have to park in these regulated spaces.

Let me tell you about a scenario that probably takes place every night.

It is 40 degrees outside and Bob and his friend Joe decide to go to Mingle's to play a little pool and drink a little beer. They could walk, but they are not going risk sterility just to have a beer, so they get in Bob's car and head downtown.

Bob and Joe have had the immorality of drunk driving pounded into their brains since they were 12 years old (and besides, a DUI ticket can cost mucho bucks and mean a three-night stay in the local Jail Cell Hotel), so they swear on their grandmothers' graves they'll drive home sober.

Too bad Joe and Bob didn't know that Buffy, that cute redhead, would be there decked out in Lycra. Too bad that after two

Ranking sex, brains and niceness

Continuing a long tradition of schmaltz journalism, US magazine has published its collection of "The Desirables," a special portfolio of the men and women who have it, whatever "it" is.

The photo essay begins with this disclaimer: "The most appealing people, like those on the following pages, are smart enough to feel comfortable in their own skins, they do not have to possess cleavage as deep as the blue sea, or stomachs you can bounce a quarter off — the truly sexy have confidence."

Having said that, the following pages are filled with ... well, cleavage. There is the delectable Sharon Stone with her shirt unbuttoned, Sarah Jessica Parker lying in bed with the straps of her dress down around her shoulders, the tempting Vanessa Williams grinning from behind a towel (only a towel) and Rebecca DeMornay leaning against a wall with her bulging womanhood getting ready to pop out of the top of her dress.

But don't fret, there are men too. There is Grant Show dressed in denim and a t-shirt, Chris Noth trying to look seductive (I guess) with a loosened tie and tousled hair, Dylan McDermott leering with stubble on his face and Dwight Yoakam peering from beneath the outspread legs of...

Enough! We get the idea that these people are incredibly attractive, but they are also smart — or at least smart enough to feel comfortable in their own skins — because that is what the disclaimer said, right?

So let's see how The Desirables responded to the question: "A man/woman is sexy when he/she..."

Ladies first. Stone says a man is sexy when he "listens, understands and accepts you for who you really are." We know how you feel, Sharon.

Parker believes a man who makes her laugh is sexy, while DeMornay feels that a man who "surrenders to the unexpected" is desirable.

What do the guys think? Show says a woman is sexy when she "does that thing they do. You know — that thing." Interestingly, Show plays a "brooding construction worker" on the television show Melrose Place. Go figure.

McDermott feels a woman is sexy when she "trembles at the unexpected sight of her beloved." Noth says a woman's sexiness "never has, never will be accurately described with words, words, words." Really, really, really?

Anyone who hasn't noticed a difference between the responses of the women and the men beers and a drool session over Buffy, they would decide to skip their 8:30 classes the next morning. Too bad Bob had to run to West One at 11 p.m. to get more money and buy the next six rounds of drinks. Too bad that at 1:49 a.m., Buffy leaves after last call and Bob and Joe decide to crawl home on their lips.

"But wait," slurs Bob, "I can't leave my car here or I'll get a (hic) ticket, man."

"Thassokay Bob, I'm hokay to drive," says Joe.

After 15 minutes of fumbling around with a flashlight to find the ignition only to forget where they put the keys, they start the car and drunkenly weave off into the night.

The moral of this little story, which every Joe, Bob and Sally over 21 years old has had to deal with in one way or another, is that in a state of complete obliteration, a person will do anything to avoid a $10 parking ticket.

Even if it means they may be pulled over by one of Moscow's finest, getting a DUI, injuring themselves, killing someone else or just making a big mistake.

Are these situations caused because of a severe lack of communication between bar patrons and the city? Is it income insurance for the police? Whatever the reason is, there should be no excuse for encouraging drunk driving.

While "encouraging" may be a strong word for this situation, I wonder if the city really understands intoxication. When a student who makes less than $2,000 a year is sloshed and faced with having to pay $10 for a lousy ticket, there is no such thing as "rational." The thought of the consequences of driving drunk simply does not exist.

The police used to argue that anyone who is too intoxicated to drive themselves home can leave a note on their car or call the department before 2 a.m. But now the graveyard shift at the station does not go under that policy, they simply give you the ticket. To contest the ticket you must go to the police station, get a contest form, fill it out, take it to the prosecuting attorney and wait two to three weeks for the results.

This still doesn't resolve the problem of people leaving the downtown area drunk. The city must understand that intoxication does not lead to intelligent and responsible thinking.

And some students who have done the responsible thing and registered their cars still ended up with tickets. When questioned, the police told them that if they knew they would be drinking to excess, they should have found another way downtown. Those who didn't intend to drink too much, but did, well ... that's too bad, police said.

Also, this little bit of information is not posted anywhere in the downtown area, and if the public is not informed, how are they supposed to follow the rules?

The problem is not with the fact that the city has to clean its streets, which is only done once every three weeks, so they need the cars to be out of the way.

The problem lies with the fact that our wonderful tax dollars can not go to informing the public of their rights. While spending time and money planting trees and surveying streets, the city can't bother to take a few hours and little money to post this information along with the existing parking signs.

There is no excuse for driving drunk. But the fault may not always lie solely with the driver, as in this case. It's not that the city needs to hang around babysitting college students who get wasted.

It's that they need to inform their public, which consists not only of college students, but innocent taxpaying citizens as well.

 should compare the answers to complete the thought: "Sexy is..."
 Stone answered "a great big sense of humor." Show answered "Well, let's see ... no, actually ... hmm ... nah, I'd have to show you."
 No thanks, Grant, we'll pass.
 This is just what American needs to provide a healthy diversion from the humdrum political madness that normally fills the headlines, right?

Right. But let's not take the US photo essay for more than the vain exhibition of sexuality and glamour it is.
 For every Vanessa Williams there are 10,000 women who don't have the perfect figure, the million dollar smile and the sweet singing voice. For every Grant Show there are 10,000 real construction workers who don't have the time to be brooding and pouty, and who can't afford to philosophize about "that thing" a woman does to make her sexy.

It would be great to put together a list of people who are memorable not because they have chiseled chins or big breasts, but because they are flat out nice to be around.
 The problem with such a list is that most of the people I have run across who are nice, and who have made my day in one way or another, are people whose names I do not know.
 For example, there is a man who walks along Highway 8 near the Moscow Mall every morning.

He gives a friendly wave to each car that passes by. Some people wave back, others are probably so caught up in thinking about the coming day that they are oblivious to all but themselves.
 I always wave back, and I always end up feeling a little better about myself and about everyone else because of him.
 And there is Irma, who works as a grocery clerk at Safeway. Once, when I was a few pennies short, I told her I'd run out to my truck and grab some change. She gave a casual wave of her hand and said she'd make up the difference. Covering for ill-prepared customers probably isn't in her job description, but she did it anyway. Thanks.

Who else can I mention? How about the janitorial crew at the SUB? They are always quick to ask about how things are going and chat about the weather, or school, or whatever is happening in the world.
 If Sarah Jessica Parker or Dylan McDermott were walking down the streets of Moscow, I doubt if they'd wave to a complete stranger for the hell of it, and I doubt if they'd stop for a few minutes of chitchat.
 Unlike US, I believe the most appealing people are smart enough to realize that they can make their lives better by being friendly and helpful just for the heck of it.
 They are the true Desirables.

Spikers take critical conference pair at home

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

Idaho's home volleyball victory over the University of Montana Friday night is quite comparable to Boise State winning a football game on the road.

It doesn't happen that often, but when it does, its gotta feel good.

Idaho (11-2, 2-0) received strong play from their outside hitters, and Amie Hanks had another stellar performance at setter notching 56 of the team's 57 assists. In winning 15-11, 13-15, 15-5, 15-11 Idaho snapped a 12-game losing streak to the Grizzlies.

"This was a great win for this program," Head Coach Tom Hilbert said. "Anytime your kids can get this kind of confidence it's great."

Idaho's confidence was spread throughout the whole team. Jessica Puckett led the team with 19 kills, followed by Nancy Wicks' 15, and Heather McEwen's 12. Dee Porter also did her part in registering a game-high 18 digs.

"We sided-out well enough to stay in this thing," Hilbert said. "Jessica played tremendous, and Amie's serving was great. It was a team effort, especially on defense."

Defensively Idaho out-blocked Montana 12-10, had four more digs, and held the Griz to a .168 attack percentage. Idaho also contained Montana's main threat, junior Trish Lake.

"We made Trish think a lot about what she had to do," Hilbert said.

After splitting the first couple games, Idaho used their momentum from the end of game 2, in game 3. Hanks began the scoring with a block, which set the tone for the remainder of the match.

"Game three was a turning point," Hilbert said. "It was big getting momentum at the end of the second game."

Idaho led 5-2 early, and scored their next point on a block that Montana Head Coach Dick Scott thought should have been a side-out. The enraged coach stormed onto the court screaming at the referee, and was issued a yellow card that brought most of the vocal 691 in attendance to their feet. From that point Idaho out-scored Montana 9-3 to take the game.

"They (Montana) won the second game, but we stayed with it," Hilbert said. "This team wants to make a statement that they're one of the best teams in the conference."

Leading 2-games-to-1, Idaho started out slow in game four, falling behind early 4-1 on three unforced errors. But the Vandals re-grouped, and went on a 9-4 run before a Montana time-out. Idaho was on a roll, though, and finished the match on a Brittany Van Haverbeke kill.

Hilbert said after the match the team must stay focussed through conference play.

"We need to not look back, but look forward...we need to beat everyone at home."

The Vandal's filled that need

Family plays key role for Ramsey's on and off field success

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

Ask Noah Ramsey who's his biggest football fan, and he'll most likely say it in one word.

Mom.

But when Ramsey was growing up in the racial-tensioned area of Baton Rouge, Louisiana, having a family was much more important than thinking about a career in football. Raised solely by his mother until the age of 14, the senior defensive back remembers back to what it was like growing up with a father figure that wasn't his father.

"My parents were divorced in 1970 before I was born, but my mom's family is real close down there, so I had a lot of cousins to look after me: My mom's brother, Vernon, and I used to do a lot of things together, so in a way it was like he was my father."

When his parents divorced, Noah Sr. moved up to Seattle, and Noah Jr. visited him a few times while growing up, but still remained attached to the life he had with his mother. Then in 1984, Noah Sr.'s father died, and he travelled down to Baton Rouge for the funeral, which was attended by both sides of the family. At that time 14 years of separation came to an end.

"It went about that my grandfather died, and my father flew down for it. While he was there he and my mom worked it out, and decided to get back together."

The plan was followed through with, and Neoma, Noah, and his four-year old brother left the south to begin a life as a nuclear family in Seattle. Although he was happy for his parents, Ramsey was apprehensive about the cross-country move at first.

"I kind of didn't want to move because I was leaving a lot of friends. It was a big difference from the south, and I really just tried to adjust to it."

Known for having many different types of races living in a tight knit area, Ramsey said Seattle wasn't a tough place to make friends. He attended a racially mixed school for the first time his ninth grade year, but was too late to play football, and made the effort to join the following year.

"I started playing my eighth grade year in Louisiana because they have teams in junior high down there. One of my cousins that I was real close to played, so I thought it was something that I'd like to do."

While in high school, Ramsey played sparingly as a sophomore, but saw quite a bit of time his junior and senior year. He earned first-team all-Metro League as a cornerback, as well as starting at wide receiver. The 5-9, 175 pounder was also named a "White Chipper" in '88, which signifies being one of the top 100 recruits in the state of Washington. As the decision of where to attend college grew closer, Ramsey said he was cautious about attending Idaho for the same reason he was for walking the streets of Baton Rouge.

"Terry (ex-Idaho defensive back Terry Green) and I would see these (White Wupremacist) rallies going on over here, and he'd call me and say 'I'm not going' and I'd say 'well if you're not going, I'm not going'. But we both decided to visit the campus because we wanted to play here."

When he arrived, Ramsey said he was impressed with the environment. Being raised in two large cities, he enjoyed the small size of the town.

"When I came up, it (the team) gave me a real sense of family away from home. I used to get letters all the time, but I never thought that I'd be going to the University of Idaho. I wanted to play here because Idaho had a winning tradition, and the town has a nice atmosphere. It kind of helps to get away from the city."

As is the case with many freshmen, the student-athlete soon became aware that he was not only without his father this time around, both his mother as well.

"It's a big jump because

Please see NOAH page 8>

you don't have anyone on your back telling you what to do. It really makes you grow up, and redshirting helped."

Ramsey sat out his freshman year before suiting up in '89 as a reserve DB to help Idaho to a Big Sky Conference title. The following year as a sophomore he had 10 tackles, and two interceptions, and made greater improvements last season in recording 31 tackles, and three pass deflections. Because of thin depth in the secondary last season, Ramsey did all that he could to help the team succeed.

"Basically I just tried to play up to my potential, and do what I could to help the team win."

As a senior, Ramsey is looking for a big year on the field as well as a big day in May when he graduates with a degree in Industrial Technology. After he leaves, Ramsey would like to go back to Seattle, and get a good paying job with his degree.

But the most important reason why he wants to move back to the Emerald City is a simple one: "I want to be near my mom."

A fan who definitely deserves to be with her favorite player.

the next night as they downed Montana State University in three games, 15-11, 15-8, 15-9 in front of 736 fans. Game 1 was a rocky start for Idaho as they mustered only an 8-8 tie halfway through it. MSU, due to their height disadvantage, tipped the ball over for most of their points rather than trying to kill them. This caused Idaho some problems early on.

"They're (Idaho) not used to that," Hilbert said. "They'd (MSU) set it high in the middle, and tip it in. We just had to start getting to them (the balls)."

In this match, Idaho once again got a team effort. Hanks had a game-high 45 assists, Puckett pounded 13 kills, and McEwen added 11 of her own in just two games. McEwen was replaced by Mindy Rice due to a sore shoulder.

"It was too much pressure to put her (Rice) in game 2," Hilbert said. "She came in, and did a great job."

Rice recorded five kills, and one dig in the third game. McEwen's soreness isn't serious, and Hilbert said he was resting her for last night's match at Gonzaga.

Idaho hits the road again, and won't play at home again until an October 16 battle with Idaho State. Aside from Gonzaga, Idaho will have road conference match-ups with Eastern Washington, Weber State, and conference favorite Northern Arizona on Oct. 10.

Shenandoah and the Iroquois culture

By ARIEL PLYWASKI
Contributing Writer

Joanne Shenandoah's Friday night performance was a taste of Iroquois culture. She sang songs and told Native American stories wearing a long, white buckskin dress.

The concert was not just a nostalgic glance at the past, however. This was a performance by and about Native Americans today who number about 1.5 million across the United States. "You've seen us in feathers, you've seen us in the movies, but you don't always see every day Native Americans," said Diane Allen, coordinator for minority student services.

Shenandoah said that the Iroquois have six nations on the East Coast, and have a very different culture from the West Coast Native Americans. Shenandoah also said that the Iroquois Nations do not pay taxes and have their own passports. They follow a matriarchal system, which means that the grandmothers of the tribe decide who gets the power. "I think that's pretty neat...especially since women are in charge anyway, we just acknowledge that fact," said Shenandoah.

Shenandoah grew up in the "outside world," or off the reservation in a boarding school. She said her parents instilled great pride in her about being Native American by telling her stories.

Shenandoah told one story to the audience about a cornhusk doll the Creator made to look after and entertain the children. The doll had a beautiful face and started to get very vain and snobby, telling the children she couldn't play with them because they weren't pretty enough. The Creator warned her not to be so vain around the children who admired her so or a great tragedy would befall her. The doll continued to be vain and the Creator took away her face. Shenandoah ended her story by warning the audience not to be vain or this could happen to them, as well.

Shenandoah said that after 10 years as a computer specialist she decided she wanted more from her life and went home to live on the reservation. She said she wanted to start a singing career and live a more traditional life.

Shenandoah said that Native Elders are greatly respected in the Iroquois culture. They are looked upon as the keepers of the language, the stories, and the traditions. Shenandoah's own mother is a Clan Mother, which means she keeps track of everyone in her tribe.

Shenandoah did not just tell stories on Friday night, she sang as well. Among the songs she sang were "Mother Earth Speaks," "I'm Going Home," "Fry Bread Time Again," and "Skywalker," which is dedicated to her uncle who was beaten to death by the police in the confusion of a fight.

Shenandoah has put out two albums so far, and is on top of the charts in Germany. "I'd like to hear her on the radio more," said Chuck Mathison, a member of the audience.

Shenandoah ended her performance with an instrumental piece on the flute, which is considered a blessing in the Native American tradition.

Here he comes... Mr. Greek

By KIM BLEDSOE
Staff Writer

Kathie Lee Gifford and Regis Philbin weren't the hosts, and there wasn't a swimming suit competition, yet the Alpha Gamma Delta sorority managed to raise $402 for diabetic research at the third annual "Mr. Greek" competition.

Eighteen men representing different fraternities at the University of Idaho competed for the coveted title of Mr. Greek last Wednesday night in the SUB Ballroom. Judging the competitors on appearance, how well they answered questions concerning the Greek system, talent, and dancing ability, were the Alpha Gamma Delta house-mother, Hazel Boyce, UI Greek Advisor, Linda Wilson, Dean of Students, Bruce Pittman, and the Associate Director for Alumni Relations, Mike Davis.

Each of the contestants had the chance to parade in front of the judges in their best attire, then were asked thought-provoking questions concerning the greek system. Questions like, "What are the benefits of a dry rush?" and "What can the Greek system do to better relations with the residence halls?" were posed to the Mr. Greek wanna-be's.

The talent competition included everything from western swinging to the unusual talent of making tennis balls sing. Lambda Chi Alpha contestant, John Liche, sat on stage with a tennis ball in each hand. Squeezing the tennis balls, which were dressed up like Willie Nelson and Waylon Jennings, Liche made the tennis balls lip-sync "Mamas Don't Let Your Babies Grow Up to be Cowboys."

Among the unusual talents, Todd Poyer of the Delta Tau Delta fraternity performed the Village People's greatest hit "Y.M.C.A." with a few of his pledge brothers dressed in disco garb. And Brian Bock, from Theta Chi, sang a childhood favorite, "Who are the People in Your Neighborhood?"

Wrapping up the competition, and giving the judges a chance to make their decision for who the next Mr. Greek would be, all of the contestants donned their greek letters to perform a delightfully choreographed dance to Sawyer Brown's "Some Guys Have All the Luck."

Judges crowned John Atkins of the Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity as Mr. Greek, and first runner-up went to Pete Mundt of Farmhouse. There was a tie for second runner-up between Tim Heimke of Alpha Kappa Lambda and Jason Hull of Phi Gamma Delta. As the reigning Mr. Greek, Atkins received a bouquet of flowers, a plaque, a $5 gift certificate from J.C. Penney, and two free sandwiches from Hardee's.

This is the third year Alpha Gamma Delta has put on the Mr. Greek competition in order to raise money for the Alpha Gamma Delta Foundation, which supports diabetes research.

"We're really happy with what we've done so far," Diane Carlson, the philanthropy chairperson said. "We had alot more sponsors this year, as well as help and support."

Despite setbacks Def Leppard still will rock

By TANYA MADISON
Editor-in-Chief

Def Leppard is hoping to pump a little adrenaline into the Palouse.

The band will be at Washington State University's Beasley Performing Arts Coliseum Wednesday night at 8 p.m. The band is touring to promote their latest release, "Adrenalize."

The album has been three years in the making. The death of guitarist Steve Clark in 1991 shook band members. Clark died of accidental overdose of alcohol, anti-depressants and painkillers he was taking after cracking three ribs.

The band went back to work in March of 1991 and released

"Adrenalize" in March of this year. Guitarist Phil Collen was chosen to fill Clark's shoes. "We demo'ed some songs in Holland a couple of years ago and I learned Steve's guitar parts from there," Collen said. "It was sad and weird listening to him play: it was almost as if his ghost was teaching me the songs."

"Adrenalize" is only the band's third album since 1983. "Pyromania," which was released in 1983, sold more than eight million copies. The follow-up album, "Hysteria" nearly doubled that, selling more than 15 million copies.

Def Leppard fans were anxiously awaiting the follow-up to "Hysteria" but band members decided to take their time. "We never rush anything out," said bassist Rick Savage. "We have to be 100 percent happy with the way a record sounds. And when the album is so successful like the last one, the tour has to go on for 15 months, as more dates are added. All of a sudden you think, 'I'm 31, where's my life gone?' That's happened a few times with this record, but then I think, 'Well, what else do you want to do?'" he said.

Tickets for the show are still available. Tickets are $20 and are available at the Beasley Coliseum box office.

Editor's Note: The review of the Def Leppard concert will run in Friday's paper.

Open Mic Night draws large and talented crowd

By CHRISTINE ERMEY
Contributing Writer

Songs by Neil Young, Jimmy Buffet, Jimi Hendrix, Led Zepplin and various other artists could be heard coming from the SUB Vandal Cafe Friday night.

Over 100 people crowded into the cafe for Open Mic Night, hosted by Jim LaFortune and presented by ASUI Productions Coffeehouse.

"We had a great turn-out," said LaFortune. "We had some great talent from local and non-local musicians. I was impressed with the size of the audience. It's nice to know that acoustic music is still alive and well and appreciated."

Armed with a guitar and harmonica, Ryan Rammimg opened the show with a Neil Young tune, "Heart of Gold." He then performed songs by Led Zepplin and Jimi Hendrix before ending with another Neil Young tune.

Next on stage was guitarist Julian Cunningham, performing songs by T.R. Ritchie, "White Bark," and Jimmy Buffet, "Great Filling Station Hold Up." Cunningham also played a mellow tune entitled "Wild Flowers in a Mason Jar." He was then joined by LaFortune on the mandolin to perform "Cold North Wind."

LaFortune then strapped on a guitar and took center stage for a song called, "Dig a Hole. LaFortune then sang a song about the birth of his daughter called, "Hot Tubbing in Momma's Womb."

Next on stage was John McCuchin who sang a song, he called a political satire dedicated to J. Danforth Quayle, entitled, "The Oval Office Wall."

Making their debut, the Blues Imposters, consisting of Wade Alonzo, Matt Herringer, and Henry the Minor Diety, gave their rendition of "Johnny Be Good," using harmonicas and a keyboard.

Organizer of the event, Jan Proctor said, "I thought the show was great. The students seemed to really like it. I think we'll have to start doing this more than once a year."

then change yourself to enhance your strengths and work your weaknesses."

Abercrombie said that the origins of astrology begin with pre-history, when man first noticed the stars, moon and the rhythms of the passing days. "They noticed how all this fit together and the cycles it produced. Astrology has been an evolutionary thing. It is at a level now where there's more of a correlation with scientific data."

Many different astrological studies can be identified throughout the world we live in. Esoteric astrology tends toward a more spiritual aspect of metaphysics. Horary astrology closely relates events with time. Synastry astrology deals with two people and composition charts. Western astrology, which Abercrombie teaches, deals with signs, houses and aspects. Western is the most common astrology practiced.

Abercrombie said she wants to take people past the perception that astrology is magical fluff. "Astrology is not a catch-all or be all. It is simply one more tool that humans can use to understand the human condition. We don't use it to get all the answers, but it can be used to exercise our intuition as well as our need for facts. It can't be worshiped and it can't be trivialized."

Abercrombie said astrology can be a useful tool in healing, understanding, and opening the mind to alternative thinking. "I believe that everybody needs to believe their own thing. I'm not out to convince everyone that yes, astrology works. It's worked in my life and it's worked for other people. If you live up to your own integrity, you can't go wrong."

The astrology classes will be held on Thursday, Oct. 1, 8, 15, and 22 from 7-9 p.m. The cost of the course is $60, and topics to be studied include the zodiac, houses, planets, and aspects.

Astrology, a metaphysical science, can be a tool in the search for answers in a person's life. "I like exploring all the different permutations of human beings," said Julie Abercrombie.

Abercrombie will be teaching astrology classes at Moscow's Inner Vision Bookstore for the novice and expert astrologer this fall. "The more you study astrology, the more you understand how others are different. It helps you understand yourself as well as others. Using astrology can help you find a much clearer picture of your motivations. You can Christopher Columbus wrote, "I am a most unworthy sinner, but I have cried out to the Lord for grace and mercy, and they have covered me completely. I have found the sweetest consolation since I made it my whole purpose to enjoy His marvelous presence. For the execution of the journey to the Indies, I did not make use of intelligence, mathematics or maps. It is simply the fulfillment of what Isaiah had prophesied..."
