UI receives $state bucks for Boise engineering program

By SHARI IRETON
Assistant News Editor

Despite Governor Cecil Andrus' confusion concerning the accreditation of the University of Idaho's engineering program at Boise State University, he has officially stated that he will endorse the project after all.

If the university receives the requested funding, the UI engineering program at BSU will be able to have five full-time faculty members. This will lead to possible accreditation by professional engineers from around the country to "give their stamp of approval" to the Boise program, said UI Associate Engineering Dean Weldon Tovey.

Tovey said that Joe Parkinson, the CEO and chairman of Boise's computer chip company Micron, suggested the accreditation. The UI has a program that allows students to graduate from BSU with a UI engineering degree, and if the program was accredited, it would benefit Parkinson's hiring of graduates from the program at BSU.

Part of the problem UI faced before was the lack of funds to support the necessary faculty for accreditation.

"We've been struggling to get faculty to be an accreditable program," said Bob Rinker, the director of UI Engineering in Boise, "The enrollment has been stronger than expected...The resources have not kept pace with enrollment."

The accreditation does face some problems, however. There is rumor that some from UI do not like the idea because it will make the program at BSU more prestigious. They feel this move will continue to move the UI programs to the south.

Rinker disagrees.

"There are some concerns about that, but I don't see that at all," said Rinker. "We are all serving the state." He said having the programs down in Boise gives the university a chance to serve the large population.

"We cooperate very well with BSU, it's not a rivalry issue," said

Atlanta Olympics have nothing on GDI Week

By TIM HELMKE
Staff Writer

A week full of competitions ranging from keg tossing to air band competitions is what GDI Week is all about.

GDI Week is the time when residence halls compete against each other in competitions to find out which of the male and female halls will reign supreme over the others.

The GDI Week competitions, which started Sept. 26, began with "Spike Off" which was a banner and attendance competition held at the UI-Montana State volleyball game on Saturday night. Points were awarded for the winning banner and also for the number of people in attendance.

The GDI Week Fun Run was Sunday morning. This allowed for points to be awarded to the top runners as well as for participation.

One of the philanthropic competitions that began over the weekend was the Scavenger Hunt. In this event, the halls have a list of items they gather, most of these being food. The food that they gathered will be donated to the Moscow Food Bank. Jenaura Lee, Vice-President of French Hall and a Residential Hall Association GDI Board member, said that this competition allows for the residence halls to "help the community and to have fun at the same time."

The other philanthropic competition was the "Penny Wars." In this event, residence halls set out a jar for two hours each day to gather pennies to add to their dollar amount. Silver coins and dollar bills are added to other halls' jars to take their amounts down. The hall that has the most pennies minus the money amount of bills and silver coins wins.

Monday night was the most popular event of the whole week, the skit and air band competitions. Gail Hazen, French Hall president said that these events are "biggest competitions and the most attended ones as well."

The air band portion of the evening had a variety of performances. Campbell Hall did their rendition of Sawyer Brown's "Fishing in the Dark" and the nightclub hit of "Copacabana" by Barry Manilow from French Hall.

The winners in the air band competition were:

■ First place finishers in the men's division was Borah Hall.

■ Second place went to Graham Hall.

■ Third place to the men of Shoup Hall.

■ First place position went to Campbell Hall in the women's division.

■ Second place went to French Hall.

■ Third place went to

McCoy Hall

The skit competitions brought more variety and a range of performances. The highlights of the evening included an "In Living Color" type of skit about rednecks put on by Borah Hall and an aerobics lesson from the women of French Hall.

The winners in the skit portion of the events were:

■ First place went to

McCoy Hall in the women's division

■ Second place tie was between Neely and Forney Halls.

■ Third place was awarded to the women of French Hall.

■ First place of the men's division went to Lindley Hall.

■ Second place to Borah Hall.

■ Third place to Chrisman Hall.

The Frisbee Golf Tournament was held on Tuesday afternoon. Two members of each hall took their turn on the campus course. Points in this portion were awarded to the top finishers and those who participated.

Wednesday evening was the Tube Races held in the Swim Center. This year's competition allowed for no use of the arms in maneuvering the tubes, so legs were the only source of power allowed.

The GDI Games, the largest group of competitions, were held Thursday. The events that made up this event were: keg tossing, tug-of-war, toilet paper relays, an obstacle course, and a football throw. This was the night that was worth many points.

Gideons hand out bestseller to students

By BRANDY CORGATELLI
Staff Writer

Every year a group of men spend a morning handing out little green Bibles to students on the UI and WSU campuses.

The nearly 100-year-old organization, called Gideons International, came to the UI last Wednesday.

The Gideons are most well-known for placing Bibles in hotel rooms. They also send Bibles to foreign countries and place them or give them away at a dozen different locations including doctor's offices, hospitals, airlines, and universities.

The Gideons only give green Bibles on college campuses, according to Fred Kohl, a retired worker from the UI Agriculture Department who helped in the UI give-away.

"This helps us identify where they got their testament from," Kohl said.

"If someone mentions later that they read one of our green Bibles, we know they got it at a college campus," Kohl said. "If they mention a red Bible, we know they got it at a different place."

Kohl said about 5,000 Bibles are given away each year at the two Palouse universities. He said certainly not every student accepts a Bible, but almost half do.

Kristina Erwin, a senior marketing major at UI, said she thinks the number accepting Bibles is much lower than that.

"I kind of felt sorry for them because I didn't see hardly anyone stop," she said. "Maybe 10 percent gave them the time of day."

Erwin said she didn't accept a Bible, either. "I told all six of them I already had one," she said. Erwin said their giveaways were probably pointless because anyone who wanted a Bible would probably already own one.

Gail Newbry, a UI junior in landscape horticulture, felt differently about the Bible handouts.

"I think it's a good idea for people who don't already have a Bible," she said. "They are giving people an opportunity (to get a Bible) if they are interested. They are not forcing it down people's throats."

The Gideon's give away Bibles because they believe its words can impact peoples lives, according to Kohl.

UI drops out of ISL

By BRANDY CORGATELLI
Staff Writer

The ASUI senate tackled the question of how to best lobby the Idaho legislature for the interests of UI students at their meeting last Wednesday.

Most senators said it would be better to lobby on our own as a school than to lobby alongside other universities. Therefore, the senate failed a resolution which would have expressed continued support for the Idaho Student Lobby.

"When push comes to shove, the University of Idaho should be pushing for its interests," senator Will Hart said. There is a lot of competition out there between universities, he said.

The ISL is made up of representatives from most of the public colleges and universities in the state. Each school belonging to the ISL pays dues of around 20 cents for every full-time student. These dues pay for a professional lobbyist to take ISL's position on bills before the Idaho congress. UI's dues have been around $2,000 a year.

Senator Richard Rock said these costs are compounded by other hidden costs. The high costs of travel, FAXes and telephone calls make the cost for UI to participate in the ISL well over $2,000, according to Rock.

Rock said the school is not getting much benefit for the amount it is paying.

Allison Lindholm, a former

ISL delegate and current assistant director of ISL, expressed her support for the organization. She said there have been problems with the ISL in the past, but "it can work and it has a good chance to work this year."

Lindholm said it is important for the universities to work together because it shows strength and consolidation among the state's college students. Lindholm said the ISL has been successful in some areas. They have lobbied the state legislature to put a student onto the state board of education, even though Governor Andrus eventually vetoed the bill. They have also lobbied against the 1 Percent Initiative and are coming up with new ideas to lobby on. Senator Derrick Brown, who just resigned his position as UI's ISL delegate, said under the ISL system, the ASUI gives up its right to use its money effectively.

The ISL currently needs the support of all five schools involved to lobby for or against a bill. When one other school opposes a UI stance, the ISL cannot lobby the UI position.

Senator Kelly Rush said she liked the idea of students from the different schools meeting together to discuss issues.

She said the schools need to keep meeting together to talk on education issues but maybe the ISL isn't the best way to do it.

Moscow hosts Sister City exchange

By BETSY CARVER
Staff Writer

Moscow hosted two particularly special guests this last week. Arturo Bojorge Jarquin and Jose Inocente Castro traveled from the small town of Villa Carlos Fonseca in Nicaragua, Moscow's sister city. They each hold the titles of mayor and council member (former mayor) respectively.

Among the activities they participated in were visiting the Nez Perce State Fair, local high schools, hospitals, and farms. They were also guests of President Zinser, Mayor Paula Agidias, council members, as well as the many Moscow residents who hosted them for meals. A slide show presentation and reception at the Moscow Community Center was also held.

A bilingual interview was held with the two men at KUOI to be broadcast today at 5:30. Interviewer Lee Rebardis and translator Begona Garcia-Pardo talked with Bojorge and Inocente about the effects the Sister City program has had on their community.

Villa Carlos Fonseca is a beach town with an urban population of 5,000 and a rural population of 33,000. The main crops grown there are sorghum, rice, beans, sugar, and also cattle. Bojorge described the townspeople as friendly and eager to accept visitors.

Since the beginning of the Sister City Program, founded by Mardi Baron in 1986, there has been a great deal of communication between the two communities. Inocente, who began the program in Villa Carlos Fonseca, said at first it was hard to receive items into his town. But finally in 1988 a much needed ambulance was sent to Villa Carlos Fonseca. Inocente said the ambulance was good because the government was busy fighting a war and could not afford such things. Again in 1989 another shipment came from Moscow. It was a 4 x 4 truck full of medical and educational supplies. Bojorge felt the medical supplies were important because of an outbreak of cholera in their community. Much of the needed medical supplies are not available in Nicaragua. In 1992 the last shipment was educational supplies like desks for schools.

Nicaragua is now in transition to becoming a fully democratic nation. Although Bojorge and Inocente are of different political parties, they are most concerned with teaching their people to work together to improve the country. Both men wanted to emphasize the fact that they were in Moscow to talk on a personal basis, not to discuss politics.

Both men wished to extend their gratitude toward the community for the hospitality they have received and the work that has been done for Villa Carlos Fonseca. Bojorge said the opportunity to meet the many people working for his town was good, and everyone is invited to Villa Carlos. Inocente felt this visit brought relationships closer between the two towns and allowed for the opportunity to exchange ideas. He also wanted to congratulate UI students in the organization of all the activities. He explained that this kind of organization does not go on in Nicaragua.

The Sister Cities Organization wishes to have more people visit the two towns to keep up relations for years to come.

Rinker, "it's a resource issue, and that's where we have the problem." He added that the rivalry between UI and BSU belongs in the football games, not in something as serious as education.

Tovey said he feels there is no problem with the accreditation either.

"We have worked with BSU since the inception of the program (three and a half years ago) and we've had very good results," he said.

In Boise, there are some feelings that UI is not committed to the program, but Rinker says it's not a matter of commitment, but resources.

Rinker also said he was a little worried about the One Percent Initiative and how it might affect the program, although he added that he wasn't sure what effect it would have.

"I honestly don't know how it will effect us...Legislature will have to figure out how to reallocate the money for the program," he said.

Intramurals full of fun and games

By CHRIS MILLER
Staff Writer

Flag football, soccer, ultimate frisbee, tennis, golf, volleyball, badminton, running, wrestling, bowling, raquetball, table tennis, wallyball, power lifting, frisbee golf, skiing, rifle target shooting, and academic College Bowl are competitive sports offered to students and faculty through UI's intramural sports program.

Idaho intramurals are one of the few places any student can participate in competitive sports regardless of ability. There are no try outs, a desire to play and meeting an entry deadline are the only requirements.

However, intramural sports are not for weenies, fierce battles and intense play sometimes confuse spectators into believing that there are thousands of dollars in prize money and endorsements waiting for the winner, instead of peer recognition and T-shirts.

"They're awesome, and it's a great way to meet new people," said Cindy Smith, quarterback of the UI women's track intramural flag football team. "It's really serious out there, tooth and nail sometimes, but still a lot of fun."

It's easy to get involved.

"At anytime anyone can come into the campus recreation office and pick up a program," said Judy Hammersley, Director of Intramural Sports.

The office is located in Memorial Gym 204 and there is a stand filled with entry forms for all upcoming events. The only stipulations are participants must be UI students or faculty (spouses may also participate in selected Co-rec events) and UI varsity athletes may not participate in their sport. For example, a UI football player cannot participate in intramural flag football, but can in basketball or any other non-football event.

The biggest problem with getting involved is that students tend to "underestimate the importance of the deadline," said Hammersley. "We try to keep it as simple and easy as we can, but we do have to have rules and regulations to make it all work."

For those who have bodies that react unexpectedly when balls are thrown their way, mental gymnastics are also available.

In conjunction with the TAAC, intramurals have provided a workout for the brain: College Bowl. A team of three to five players field a variety of questions covering everything from biology to mathematics to "Cliff Clavin" trivia.

Fraternities, Sororities, and Residence Halls field teams in all sports to compete for an overall championship. Intramurals award points to the living group teams as they win events. At the end of the year, the overall top living group wins a championship social and plaque.

"There's a lot of houses in the running this year," said Phi Gamma Delta member Scott Graff. "Delta Sig's and SAE's are usually in the top, but it will be tight run. Nobody's way ahead yet."

If a student is unable to find a team on which to play, Intramural sports offers a free agent sign up sheet. Needy teams can "draft" free agents, or agents can form their own team.

Kempthorne rallies at Gamma Phi Beta

By TANYA MADISON
Editor-in-Chief

More than 100 supporters of senatorial candidate Dirk Kempthorne gathered at the Gamma Phi Beta house Thursday evening for a brief political rally.

Kempthorne and his wife Patricia, a former president of Gamma Phi Beta, gave a 10-minute talk about the upcoming election. Kempthorne is currently ahead of rival Richard Stallings by 12 points in some polls.

Kempthorne told the students that they can affect the outcome of the election. "You people can make a difference in this campaign," he said. "I fully intend to win Latah County. You can make it happen."

ASUI Senator Will Hart attended the rally. He said he admires Kempthorne's platform of change. "I believe that between the two candidates who are running Dirk Kempthorne has more integrity and he won't be satisfied with the status quo," Hart said. "Mr. Kempthorne will change how things are done."

The stop at Gamma Phi Beta was one of three scheduled in Moscow for Thursday. Kempthorne started the day in Grangeville and planned a dozen stops before calling it a day.

Kempthorne will be back in Moscow to campaign during homecoming weekend.

IRONICALLY, THE TIME TO START SAVING FOR RETIREMENT IS WHEN IT LOOKS LIKE YOU CAN LEAST AFFORD IT.

Can't afford to save for retirement? The truth is, you can't afford not to. Not when you realize that your retirement can last 20 to 30 years or more. You'll want to live at least as comfortably then as you do now. And that takes planning.

By starting to save now, you can take advantage of tax-deferral and give your money time to compound and grow. Consider this: set aside just $100 each month beginning at age 30 and you can accumulate over $192,539* by the time you reach age 65. But wait ten years and you'll have to budget $227 each month to reach the same goal.

Even if you're not counting the years to retirement, you can count on TIAA-CREF to help you build the future you deserve—with flexible retirement and tax-deferred annuity plans, a diverse portfolio of investment choices, and a record of personal service that spans 75 years.

Over a million people in education and research put TIAA-CREF at the top of their list for retirement planning. Why not join them?

Human chain to link Palouse

By TANYA MADISON
Editor-in-Chief

Various right-to-life organizations on the Palouse will gather this weekend to form a Pullman-Moscow Life Chain.

The event will be Sunday from 2 p.m. to 3 p.m. along Grand Ave. in Pullman. Interested persons should meet at One Way Books on Main St. in Pullman by 1:45 p.m. The event is being co-sponsored by Pullman Human Life, Moscow Right-To-Life and WSU Students For Life.

Pullman resident Denise Ortiz, one of the organizers of the event, said the Pullman demonstration is part of a National Life Chain. Pro-lifers in cities in more than 40 states will be participating, she said.

Last year in Pullman organizers pulled their first-ever event together in less than a week. More than 100 people participated in the "life chain." In Texas in 1987 a "life chain" stretched 70 miles from Austin to San Antonio.

Ortiz said she has been involved in pro-life organizations for a couple of years. "I am a true liberal because I believe in human rights for everybody, not just for the elite few," she said. "We are hoping to raise awareness and hopefully have a few people thinking twice about abortion."

Fellow organizer Darren Crisp emphasized the "life chain" is "a non-violent, silent-witness demonstration. We just want to get our point across peacefully," he said.

"I believe in human rights for everybody."

Alumni take stand against initiative

By DEANN NORTHAM
Contributing Writer

Last weekend, the Board of Directors for the University of Idaho Alumni Association unanimously adopted a statement against passage of Idaho's 1 Percent Initiative.

The board met in Moscow, and approved a resolution expressing concern over the devastation the initiative could cause to the quality of Idaho's education. The statement read:

"We, the University of Idaho Alumni Association Board of Directors, are concerned that the passage of the pending 1 Percent Initiative will have a devastating effect on the quality of higher education and public school education throughout the state of Idaho. Therefore, we oppose the 1 Percent Initiative and recommend its rejection by voters of the state of Idaho."

Flip Kleffner, member of the 24 member board and the Director of Alumni Relations at UI, said the state receives $132 million a year in property taxes. UI gets 14% of the state budget. If the initiative is passed, this means the university could lose up to $10 million in funding.

Kleffner said that the main problem with this is not the fact that UI would lose money, but the fact that there is no way to make it back up, for either university or public education. "If we wanted to do a tax override (to raise money), say to raise two million to do an addition to the junior high, you need 75% of the district's approval," he said.

However, Kleffner said the voting districts rarely have much more than 50% voter turn-out, making the passage of overrides impossible. The UI, he added, is not a taxing unit, and cannot ask for tax overrides at all.

"Sales tax, property tax, and income tax is where the state's money comes from," said Kleffner. "This is called the 'three-legged-stool' in taxing." He said there would be greater pressure for sales and income taxes to increase if the initiative passes.

Kleffner said the economy in Idaho could also suffer if the initiative passes. "One of the first questions new businesses will ask the chamber of commerce is what the quality of education is here...if the education is poor, they might move to a different area," said Kleffner.

Kleffner said the board took action against the initiative as a board, and their action was not based on all the opinions of the 62,000 alumni members worldwide, and 26,000 in Idaho. However, Mike Davis, the Assistant Director of Alumni Relations at UI said the resolution is an accurate representation of all alumni's feelings "with respect to what the initiative will do to education."

Davis said the Alumni Association was "formed to provide coordinated support of Alumni and friends of the UI for the purpose of strengthening academic research, service, and leadership building programs of the institution." He feels the Alumni Association is fulfilling its purpose by passing this resolution.

Kleffner said he hopes the resolution will "solidify some people's opinions on 1 Percent." He hopes people will view the initiative as to how it will effect the whole state, and not just base their opinion on the tax breaks.

"I would say 1 Percent is ahead," Kleffner said on where the state was leaning. However, he said in the end people will be saying they do not want to cut back, and will not want other taxes raised.

Students for Stallings

By ELIZABETH POWELL
Contributing Writer

Students for Stallings, a group of approximately 70 UI students, has formed to help promote Democrat Richard Stallings candidacy for the U.S. Senate.

"Richard Stallings is the clear choice as the next U.S. Senator for the Idahoan concerned about education," said Steve Stroschein, the group spokesperson.

Stroschein, a sophomore in Agri-Business at UI said that while Stallings has worked for student issues in the past, Idaho's senior Congressman has great plans for the state.

"One of the reasons I became interested in Richard Stallings was because of his commitment to students," said Stroschein. "Stallings wants to make student loan programs more accessible to students who are putting themselves through college. Richard Stallings, who is a former college professor, has proven his commitment to education through his outstanding pro-education record in Congress. When Congress passed itself a pay raise, which Stallings voted against, he put money from his part of the congressional pay raise to work for Idaho by creating college scholarships for students in need."

Stallings and Students for Stallings do not support the 1 Percent tax cut because of the longterm drawbacks the tax cut could bring. Programs such as ambulance, library, sewage, water and hospital services could suffer if the 1 Percent passes. Stallings and his supporters are also worried about the detrimental effects the 1 Percent may have at the UI and other Idaho schools throughout the state.

"UI could loose up to 10 million dollars and 2900 students could be cut from the university at admission time if this 1 Percent passes," said Stroschein. "It's just bad legislation. Students need to get out and vote it down. Even if you're registered to vote in another state, you can vote here, but you can only vote in one place."

The goals Students for Stallings strive for are to keep the public informed about political issues that affect the people of Idaho. They want to help raise voter awareness and voter registration as well. Students for Stallings meets Wednesday evenings, 9pm at the Latah County Democratic Headquarters.

UI needs a voice in Boise, but ISL should be silenced

The ASUI is well on the way to severing its ties with the Idaho Student Lobby, an organization Sen. Daniel Whiting has characterized as an "ineffective, bureaucratic mess."

By a vote of 11 to 2, the ASUI senate wisely snuffed a resolution that would have continued university membership in the student lobbying organization. The ISL is made up of representatives from most of the public colleges and universities in the state.

Nobody is complaining that the purpose of the ISL is not a noble one. The ISL was founded in order to provide students with a voice that would be heard by Idaho lawmakers.

Creating a student lobby was an idea that was long overdue. These days having a lobbyist concerned with the needs of students is more than a luxury, it is a necessity.

However, according to Sen. Richard Rock, the UI is not getting a fair return on its investment. And what an investment it is.

In order to pay for a professional lobbyist, the ASUI must give the ISL 20 cents for every full time student on the Moscow campus. The lobbyist then takes the ISL's position on bills brought up for debate before the state legislature.

But there are hidden costs as well. Add up all the nickels and dimes spent on FAXes, travel, telephone calls and other miscellaneous expenses and we're talking real money.

Many of the problems with the ISL stem from the way it is constructed. All member schools must support efforts to lobby for or against a bill. Therefore, when just one other school does not support a stance taken by the students of the UI, the ISL is unable to lobby for the UI position.

So all the money invested by the university in the ISL to lobby for the concerns of UI students can go for naught if, for example, Boise State University is in opposition.

And let's not forget how Charles D'Alessio, the lobby's last executive director, got involved in monetary hanky panky with ISL funds.

"When push comes to shove," says Sen. Will Hart, "the University of Idaho should be pushing for its own interests."

The ISL is not without its supporters. Sen. Allison Lindholm, a former ISL delegate, pointed to the success of the ISL in getting a student on the state board of education. She noted that although there have been problems with the lobby in the past, "it can work and it has a good chance to work this year."

Maybe so. Suggestions have also been made to require a two-thirds vote of member schools to determine the lobby's agenda, as opposed to the prior veto power held by one school.

Just like any other group in the state of Idaho, students deserve a voice in the legislative process. They need someone who will carry their plates when it comes time to slice up the monetary pie.

It's just that the Idaho Student Lobby is not what they need.

Last year I was fired up. I was fired up about Boutros Ghali. I was fired up about the Nobel Peace Prize winner kept prisoner in Myanmar. I was fired up about Easter and that nobody listens to anybody anymore. I thought things could change and that I could be a positive force for part of that change.

But look what happened. I got a year older, my liver got three years older, but nothing really changed. The machine kept rolling and in eight months I'm going to be part of it.

Remember when you thought that the way things were was the way they were supposed to be? People grow up thinking that their parents always knew what they were going to do for a living, always knew where they would live, and always knew who they would marry. If your parents were divorced, deep down inside you knew, or thought you knew, that they would get back together because they were your Mom and Dad and things were supposed to be that way.

But that's the kind of belief people grow out of. Now we're at the age our parents always talked about as being a tough time, only we never quite understood. Just

Mike Keller's family won't starve

Pity poor Mike Keller.

Exactly two weeks ago, an Associated Press story chronicled Keller's unhappiness with the University of Idaho for deciding to dock his track coaching salary when he is on leave.

That doesn't sound overly fair. On the surface he sounds perfectly justified in being upset with UI officials. After all, the men's track and cross country coach takes home $33,764 a year. While not paltry by any means, pay cuts can hurt anyone.

Except this salary isn't the only money he is bringing home.

Keller also has the enviable job of coaching world-class decathlete and former Vandal track standout Dan O'Brien. So in addition to his Idaho salary, Keller is also hauling in money from Reebok, which is a major sponsor of O'Brien's.

In case you have been locked in your house for the last year, O'Brien has become a little bit of a celebrity. Barely missing the cut for the 1992 Olympics at the U.S. Olympic trials in New Orleans, O'Brien shook off this disappointment and set a new world record in the decathlon at a recent meet in Talence, France.

DOUG

COMMENTARY

O'Brien hasn't exactly been hurting as a result of his on-field success. Reebok started a whole commercial campaign involving him and fellow decathlete Dave Johnson. While the commercial questioned whether Dan or Dave was the world's greatest athlete, Keller had to be smiling off-camera. As coach, he would certainly figure in some of the endorsement money that Reebok gave O'Brien.

The flipside of this is that while O'Brien is traveling the world to go to meets, Keller accompanies him as coach. This means he is gone from Moscow quite a bit during the year. Translated simply, this means that he won't always be giving strategy talks with his track teams before they take their mark at a meet.

Idaho's acting athletic director Wayne Anderson said that Keller has a set amount of annual vacation days in his 10-month contract. So if Keller happens to miss any time past these allotted days, the university will dock his pay. This also seems more than fair. What is the problem then?

The answer could be seen in a rather colorful quote that Keller gave in the AP story.

"He (O'Brien) brings them $10 like they tried but couldn't quite remember exactly what growing up was like. When some of those illusions our lives were based on disappeared, our view of the world changed, too.

Things that seemed really important start to lose their shine. Time becomes really important, organization becomes important, and direction becomes important. We started shaking our heads at what we see 16-year-olds doing and forget how much that age sucked. We forget some of the things we did to get by at sixteen.

One day we woke up and we were in college. The next day we woke up and we were 22 and graduating in eight months. Every minute of missed fun becomes deeply regretted and every action takes on a new importance as the realization sets in that there are no do-overs. This is for real.

National affairs aren't going to mean anything when we're taking on more than a million other of America's best and brightest, not to mention the millions of best and brightest from previous years that haven't been able to find a job yet, and butting heads with baby boomers firmly entrenched in their positions and passing legislation that makes sure they stay that way.

Political organizations are trying to mobilize our generation for the first time. Whether it will make a difference or not remains to be seen. But after the hopeful siss-boom-bah three ring circus atmosphere of the primaries we ended up with the candidates everyone said we would anyway.

I get fired up about the election, until I stop to think about how much effect my one absentee ballot will have on who gets Montana's single digit electoral votes and how much those single digit electoral votes will swing the total outcome.

Oh well. The system wasn't designed to help us. It was designed to perpetuate the will of those already in power. And look around, I don't think they really care what they leave behind when they are gone.

The machine keeps rolling. The gears that stop to wonder why get their teeth scraped off.

The trick must be to remember what was important to us before we step onto the neverending career hamster wheel. Maybe that could serve as a reminder of when we were naive enough to ask why work was more important than family and honestly expected an answer.

Here's a list of some things I hope I never forget:

Coach. I hope I never forget what the word coach meant to me back when I was playing on my first football team. That word used to mean a combination of the best parts of the words "dad" and "god," before personal politics became a part of the equation and all the games were slugged out between the 45 yard lines.

Schoolhouse Rock. The crazy motherscratchers who made these things fooled all of us. They made us learn about conjunctions and how a bill becomes a law, and they made us like it.

Traction. In grade school, the hot topic of most debates was shoe traction: who had it, who wanted it and how could you get more. Whoever had the most traction ruled because, of course, they had the best grip on the Earth and were the least likely to stumble or fall down when it really mattered.

Maybe that's all it takes; a leader you can believe in, people who aren't afraid to send a message and sure footing when life gets a little slippery.

million in publicity," Keller said. "It's just typical of Idaho.... At every alumni function, they want me to bring Dan along. I told him the next time he wears a University of Idaho T-shirt on TV, we'll send 'em the damn bill."

Well, that doesn't sound very gracious.

Neither does it seem fathomable when one considers the amount of loot that Keller hauls in annually. Although Keller's university salary is a matter of public record, his pay from Reebok and O'Brien is not. However, it is hard to conceive that Keller will be huddling in a soup line anytime soon.

When one probes a little deeper at the comment, more than just a trace of ego can be detected. When the whistle and COACH tee shirt are peeled away, Keller is a mere mortal, believe it or not. It is completely irrelevant whether his moonlighting project with O'Brien has a marketing value that could single-handedly finance this university. He has only so many vacation days on his UI contract, and when he uses them up, his pay will be docked. Like it should be.

So it's laughable that Keller would feel the need to run to the press to tell his legacy of abuse and neglect at the hands of the UI. He probably feels that he is entitled to just a little more respect than other campus employees based on his important stature.

Subsequent kudos go to the UI and Anderson for patting Keller on the head and politely telling him that he is subject to the same rules as everyone else.

Every employee from the Kibbie Dome maintenance workers on up to President Zinser has a set number of vacation days. When any of these people go beyond this limit, their pay is rightly docked. It is not only fair but credible because everyone in the same house has the same set of rules.

Keller's tantrum seems to indicate that VIP's are entitled to a little slack from the same scrutiny that governs the rest of us. Sorry, Mike, you have a coaching job here in Moscow, and oddly enough, UI officials want you to be here to carry out that job.

It is true that Keller should get the kind of respect and recognition that comes with coaching a famous athlete. It is also true that Keller has helped parlay O'Brien's talent into world fame.

It's even true that he has put little ol' Moscow on the sports map.

What isn't true is Keller getting or deserving any more special favors than the rest of the world.

Keller does deserve one special favor here in Moscow — a comfortable office chair to sit in that reads "UI men's track."

LETTER POLICY

The Argonaut will accept letters to the editor until noon on the day prior to publication. They must be limited to two double spaced typed pages in length. For subjects requiring greater exposition, arrangements must be made with the editor.

Letters must be signed in ink and include the name, address, student identification number or driver's license number, and phone number of the writer. For multiple-authored letters, the above information will be required for each writer. Proof of identity will be needed at time of submission. Letters received by mail will not be run unless confirmation of authorship is made. Names of writers will not be withheld.

Letters may be edited for length, mechanical errors and spelling errors. The Argonaut reserves the right to refuse to publish any letter.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Clear cuts deserve a second look

Editor;

While flipping through the pages of the September 22 issue of the Argonaut, I came across a column written by Pete Gomben that was truly disturbing. Gomben was writing on the topic of the spotted owl vs. logging in the Pacific Northwest.

Gomben's article was way off base and completely out of question. For instance, when Gomben says: "People who lose their jobs because of harvest restrictions enacted to save the spotted owl, or any other species, should suck up their guts, move their families and stop trying to sound like martyrs." That comment has got to be the most crass and out of line statement I have ever heard. Just pick up and move? Sounds easy doesn't it? Be realistic, Gomben. If those timber restrictions are implicated, 30,000 jobs will be effected directly in Oregon alone. How about having those people suck it up and move next door to you? Then after the 30,000 people directly, think about the mill workers, the secondary wood manufacturers like cabinet makers, home builders, paper mill workers, etc. Then the total would be significantly more. Prices would skyrocket. If you think the economy is bad now, think about it if this should happen.

However, I too believe there are better ways of managing our forests and protecting the spotted owl, but there has got to be a middle ground, we can't just have it one way or the other.

Fortunately Mr. Gomben, you came close on one point. If Weyerhaeuser Corporation and other companies would stop selling raw log exports overseas, then there would be plenty of timber to mill and use in the United States. The answers don't lie in placing blame to all of our national agencies, or loggers themselves, it lies in raw timber exports. If you want to make a difference Mr. Gomben, don't pick on people who need the forest to feed their families, pick on Weyerhaeuser Corporation as they are the biggest log exporter in the U.S. (or any other log exporting company).

And yes, I will "chortle" that our forests are a renewable resource. And of course not every forest is managed perfectly, but most of the ones I have been to recently look healthy and alive. When you look at a clear cut, it may not look aesthetically pleasing to you, but you have no interest in seeing a new forest grow? You have no interest in seeing more wildlife move into the clear cut because the sun can now reach the forest floor and grow more nutrient enriched plants and forbs? Then you haven't looked at a clear cut close enough Mr. Gomben.

Once again I would like to restate that I do believe there should be land saved for the spotted owl and other endangered wildlife. However, if the states of Oregon, Washington and Idaho were to ban logging, there would be untold problems that would effect us all. The problem lies in log exports, not loggers Mr. Gomben.

Biblical prophecies are only hollow promises

Editor;

Regarding the letter "Answers provided to modern biblical questions" in the September 18 Argonaut:

1) God promised Abraham that he would give his descendants all of the land between the River Nile and the River Euphrates (Genesis 15:18). But today, almost 3,500 years later, Israel has not conquered Egypt, Jordan, Kuwait and Iraq, and doesn't even intend to. Some promise!

2) Jesus was supposed to come back down to earth from heaven (1 Thessalonians 4:15-17). He was supposed to come very soon, too, while some of those whom Paul was addressing were still alive. This prophecy was written in the year 50 A.D. By the end of the first century it would be unlikely that any of them would still be living. So the prophecy of the Second Coming of Christ was proven false almost 1,900 years ago.

3) Elijah went up to heaven in a whirlwind (2 Kings 2:1,11). If this is true, then he was the only person in the entire Old Testament who went to heaven. (Enoch might have too. See Genesis 5:24.) Note that Elijah ascended bodily, while he was still alive, because in the Old Testament religion there was no life after death. The earth was flat and had four corners. Heaven was a physical place just above the clouds, the sun, the moon and the stars. God lived up there with his sons (Genesis 6:2,4; Job 1:6; 2:1). Humans once tried to build a tower up to heaven, but God foiled their plan (Genesis 11:4-9). Today we know that the universe is much greater in extent. It takes satellites years even to travel to outer planets of our solar system, which is but a minor one on the edge of the Milky Way, which in turn is just one of countless galaxies which stretch out for many billions of light-years across the vastness of outer space. So the Bible tales of men rising up through the clouds to heaven are nothing but childish legends of a superstitious prescientific people.

So what kind of "answers" did we get from Roy W. Hunt's letter about the Bible? Two false prophecies and a fairy tale.

—Ralph Nielsen

Cartoons draw anger

Editor;

Regarding the cartoon by Kirk showing clergymen advocating Scripture as the ideological basis for slavery, segregation, sexism and homophobia, I wonder if you would publish a cartoon portraying blacks, women or gays in such an offensive manner. I think your ignorance is showing.

—Del Richardson

Campus police are too efficient

Editor;

I hope you can publish this letter to the editor in the Argonaut. The University of Idaho has unquestionably the most efficient campus police in America. On two consecutive years I received a ticket on the first day I returned to campus from the summer, and on my first trip to campus while I was in the Administration Building getting a new parking permit.

On September 11, I got my new parking permit and parked where I'd been parking all the previous year, in the lot adjoining Steele House. Evidently the police had changed their minds as to where the line between silver and gold was drawn, and I received a ticket for $15. This I am refusing to pay.

Efficiency is a great thing, but too much efficiency can lead to harassment.

God bless you all.

—Boyd A. Martin

Letter quoting biblical sources is 'pathetic blather'

Editor;

I have just read the pathetic blather offered as "editorial material" by one Ray Hunt, presumably an Ohio resident, in the September 18 issue of the Argonaut.

A suggestion: ban all intra-religious squabbling from the pages of your paper. As philosopher Ninian Smart has noted, appeals to texts rarely settle arguments. Vigorous debate about genuinely important issues is healthy; resorting to incoherent imported material is merely sad. I'm sure our community can do better.

—Bruce Wollenberg

Idaho law requires reporting of positive AIDS tests

Editor;

The recent article on AIDS testing and strict confidentiality at the University Health Center was very informative, but the writer, Tim Helmke, left out one very important detail that anyone contemplating an AIDS test should be aware of. Idaho law requires any facility that tests for venereal diseases to report a positive result to the state. AIDS falls into this reportable category. Some states surrounding Idaho do not have this reporting requirement.

Magic acts

"I blame myself for this. I blame you, too. I blame everybody who has told him how good he looks and how well he's playing and how he should go back and pick up his basketball career right where he left off."
-Ron Rapoport, Los Angeles Daily News, 9/30/92

When I first learned of the return of Magic Johnson to the world of basketball I've never felt so ecstatic for a person who believes that true happiness can only be achieved by doing what they love.

Unfortunately not everyone, including Mr. Rapoport, understands this.

Last November 7 Earvin "Magic" Johnson announced at a press conference in Los Angeles that he was HIV positive. Not only sports fans, but the public in general, can probably remember where they were, or what they were doing when they heard the news that an invincible athlete such as Magic had contracted the virus that infects over 195,000 people in the U.S. alone. It was at this time that Magic decided to hang up his Converse, and begin his quest to learn, as well as educate, more people about the HIV virus.

When appointed by George Bush to the President's Commission on AIDS, Magic began his work trying to teach young people that anyone, any color, anywhere can contract the virus. Magic was a role model who could use his public status and dashing charisma to get his message across to anyone who listened.

Unfortunately for Magic, and this country, the one person who needed to listen the most didn't.

After wasting his breath trying to get more federal funding from Bush, Magic did the right thing in resigning from the commission, and has since stated he may re-join it if democratic candidate Bill Clinton is elected president. With a Democrat as president, it is foreseen that more funding will be given to AIDS research in hope of a cure by the turn of the century.

But until that time Magic wants to play ball, and I think it's incredible.

Tuesday's announcement by Magic that he'll be heading to Honolulu this weekend for the Lakers training camp represents the determination he has to play the game he loves. Rapoport, however, believes that the public, media, his Olympic teammates, and his family could all be "contribut-

Idaho looks to avoid repeat of '91

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

When the Idaho Vandals square-off against Cal State Northridge tomorrow, the non-conference match-up will be significant in a couple of aspects.

Idaho (3-0, 1-0) will be looking to go 4-0 for the first time since 1924 when they competed in the Pacific Coast Conference. During that season Idaho went 4-0-1 before a loss, and the year before they were 5-0-1 before losing. No Idaho team has ever gone 6-0.

All along, though, this team is taking it one game at a time. Last season's squad also began 3-0 before losing three straight, and the '92 Vandals are showing no signs of cockiness in just the fourth week of the season.

Tomorrow will be business as usual for Idaho after having a bye week as they face a Matador team (2-2) that competes in the Western Football Conference. Cal State relies on a strong running game, but have fallen on hard times lately as they've been struck by the injury bug early this year.

"We're not a passing team, so offensively we're going to stick with what we do, and that is run the ball." Cal State Head Coach Bob Burt said. "We've been going to a lot of one-back sets because, with the injuries, we just can't put anyone else back there."

Their most notable injury, as well as the most costly, is the loss of tailback Jamal Farmer. The Western Athletic Conference Freshman of the Year at Hawaii in 1989, Farmer tore cartilage in his knee on the opening kick-off against Cal State Fullerton and hasn't played since. He's expected to make the trip, but will see little playing time.

"He's making the trip, but if he plays it will be very minimal," Burt said. "We'd like to run him 25-30 times a game, but if we get half-a-dozen from him Saturday I'll be happy."

Farmer, a 5-11, 225 pound senior, was recruited out of high school by UCLA, Arizona, Oregon State, and Eastern Tennessee before choosing Hawaii. In his first year at Hawaii he set an NCAA freshman record for rushing touchdowns with 18, and finished the season with 986 yards. He also set a school record for rushing yards in a game by a freshman with 242 against Air Force. His back-up, junior Robert Trice, rushed for two consecutive 100-yard games, but is plagued by a bad hamstring and won't make the trip.

"We kept him (Farmer) out of practice until yesterday," Burt said. "He had surgery on it (knee), so we'd like to run him in a few plays so he can get his confidence back up."

Confidence is what Idaho has on their side even with the bye week. The Vandals not only got to spend the week enjoying their 52-24 drubbing of Weber St. two weeks ago, but the break was a good time to get three of four injured players healthy.

Offensively, wide receiver Alan Allen, who's last reception was the game winning touchdown against Boise State last year, returns after sitting out the first three games with a broken collarbone. The junior could be back starting along with teammates Yo Murphy and Walter Saunders.

On defense, sophomore linebacker Josh Fetter is back after a sprained ankle took him out in the first quarter against St. Cloud, and defensive back Jeff Jordan will be in the backfield wearing a cast to protect a fractured thumb. Defensive end Billy Sims is still out, and will be replaced by freshman Ahmani Johnson who leads

McEwen kills both athletics and academics

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

Two-time All-Academic American Heather McEwen is nonchalantly looking for a Big Sky title. (JEFF CURTIS)

Another Vandal volleyball practice has ended, and the tall lanky brunette tiredly hops onto the stage that resides in Memorial Gym.

It is about this time that a member of the University of Idaho athletic department drops by to give this 6-2 senior outside hitter a bit of good news.

"Did you know that you are now ninth on the all-time school kill list," asks the lady. "Only 63 more and you will be in eighth place."

The recipient of the compliment, Heather McEwen, leans back on her hands and feigns interest.

"Oh, really? I didn't know that," says McEwen sincerely.

When told about the amount needed to pass the number eight all-time Vandal kill leader, former standout Stacey Asplund, she laughs and jokingly asks "Is that all?"

Vandal coach Tom Hilbert knows all about her naivete when it comes to individual glory. In fact, Hilbert considers it a character strength that McEwen could care less about her statistics.

"It's absolutely meaningless to her," said Hilbert. "It is something that other players can look up to."

Hilbert explained that last year, the team tendency was to get momentum or pull ahead, and then lose the advantage down the stretch when the games got tough. He said a large reason for the Vandal's 11-2 start this year has been the quiet, unassuming leadership of McEwen.

"It's neat to watch her in a big game where other people look to her for leadership," said Hilbert. "She won't scream and yell. Instead, she gets this look of confidence on her face that lets the other players know that everything is going to be alright."

"My leadership is more of a technical thing," said McEwen. "I don't feel like I have to yell to get the point across."

However, don't assume that quiet leadership is all that Hilbert gets out of McEwen.

After this particular practice, there was a contraption set up near the stage that tested the vertical jumping ability of anyone wanting to try it. Consisting of a metal pole with small parallel metal bars, a player runs up to the device, jumps and then takes a swipe at one of the bars. Any bars that are hit will swing around to the other side of the pole to let players know how high they have jumped.

Several Vandals gave it a shot, and after outside hitter Dee Porter's last attempt, Hilbert strolled over to the bench and was talking with a couple of team members. Evidently, nobody else was going to try.

University of Idaho volleyball coach Tom Hilbert and his team are rowing through some uncharted waters right now.

On Tuesday night, the team picked up its fourth straight win with a 15-6, 6-15, 15-8, 15-4 victory over the Gonzaga Bulldogs. The non-conference win pushed the Vandals to 11-2 for the season, which is the best start in the history of the program.

Led by the outstanding serving of Jessica Puckett and the hitting of Nancy Wicks, the Vandals assumed control of the match after a second game that Hilbert said was handed to the Bulldogs.

"We gave the second game to them," said Hilbert.

Hilbert said hitting was one of the team's weaker aspects in the match, but he seemed to be a little happier about the team's serving.

"We served better in this match than we ever have since I've been here," said Hilbert.

The Vandals will now travel to Cheney to face an Eastern Washington team that has struggled at times, but still comes into tonight's match with a 1-1 Big Sky Conference record and a 4-8 record overall.

Hilbert is certainly not overlooking the Eagles.

"They're an extremely well-coached team where the coach gets the most out of her players," said Hilbert. "Eastern always gets fired up for Idaho, and they have some pretty obnoxious crowds up there which always helps the home team."

It was just three years ago that EWU won the conference title, and one of the veteran players who was a part of that championship team is senior outside hitter Angela Grant.

Already Eastern's all-time dig leader, Grant has collected 1,337 digs so far in her career and needs just 14 more to become the all-time BSC dig leader.

Other players to watch will be freshman middle blocker Kellie Glaus and junior outside hitter Andrea Pochman.

Glaus, a true freshman from Vancouver, Wash., was Eastern's candidate for BSC player of the week after last Friday's 24-kill performance against Montana State. Also in the MSU match, Pochman enjoyed her third 27-kill effort of the year.

Eagle coach Pamela Parks said all three of these players will play a key role in tonight's match, but she said matching up against Idaho's experience and athleticism will be problem areas.

"This is still a young team, and we've been experimenting with different line-ups ever since Lee Anne Muir went down with a season-ending ankle injury," said Parks. "Idaho has so much talent and depth that we have to focus on keeping the ball in play until they make a mistake."

ing to a death that could have been postponed."

First of all, Magic's playing time will be limited to 50-60 games in the '92-'93 season so the 33-year old can get needed rest. Secondly, he'll be constantly evaluated by doctors, team physicians, and will continue to take the drug AZT in hopes to slow down the virus in causing AIDS. Third, he's a natural-born athlete that doesn't want to just "do a great deal in the fight against AIDS."

When Magic called it quits it wasn't a Larry Bird scenario where he was more-or-less forced to retire due to pain. He retired because he wanted to evaluate where he stood emotionally, mentally, and physically. After watching him this past summer on the U.S. Olympic basketball team I'd have to say all three facets are holding up just fine. Not only did I notice it, but I'm sure the teams that the "Dream Team" trounced can verify it as well.

When I read Rapoport's article I could understand his concern for Magic, and how, in all reality, he should just kick back and take it easy for the rest of his life. Magic has numerous businesses which he could turn his enthusiasm towards, and also has a new family to spend time with.

But that isn't Magic's game. I remember watching him hit a game-winning hook shot down in L.A. three years ago, and while he ran off the court, he clutched his fist and flashed his infamous smile. That game and every game means too much to him to just lie down and never give it, or himself, another chance.

Rapoport finished his article by stating: "Because of us, I'm afraid. Because we didn't tell him—didn't insist—that he had done enough and now he should be thinking of himself and only himself."

Well Ron, he is. Believe me, he is.

the team with three sacks.

"I think this group is real solid," Head Coach John L. Smith said. "I think the players are a little sick of having the coaches yelling at them for the past week, so we're looking forward to getting out and playing a football game."

As was the case against Weber, Idaho will continue to look for success on the ground. The Vandals know they can pass the ball behind the arm of junior quarterback Doug Nussmeier, but will want to improve on their running game since they have the horses to do so.

"I feel we can move the ball (against Northridge)," Smith said. "We're going to establish the run, and pass the ball like we always do. I think we can do both."

Defensively for Cal State they'll be seeing a different style offense from what's seen in the WFC. Burt said this will not change his teams philosophy.

IDAHO INFO-- Ex-Idaho players Penn Bushong and Troy Strange return to Moscow for their reunion with the Vandals. Bushong, a junior linebacker, left Idaho during spring drills to go back to California. Strange, a starting senior wide receiver, played with the Vandals primarily on special teams back in 1990...Idaho is averaging more than 183 yards rushing per game which is 40 more than the sub-par year of '91, and is just two yards behind league-leading Idaho State...The "Doug Nussmeier pick-patrol" has still been unsuccessful. "Nuss" has thrown 21 touchdowns, and 114 consecutive pass attempts without an interception, and one in his last 252...Nussmeier needs 151 completions to move into third place ahead of his position coach Scott Lineham...Wide receiver Yo Murphy is on pace to register 1,500 yards receiving this year. The senior from Idaho Falls is currently 9th in the nation in yards per catch (6.0), and has 391 total yards and two TD's through three games.

McEwen and fellow senior Amie Hanks then approached the object and after waiting a moment for Hilbert to come over and resume his position behind the contraption, McEwen finally cleared her throat to signal Hilbert.

This didn't do the trick, and McEwen let Hilbert know about it.

"Coach, I'm ready," said McEwen impatiently as Hilbert came trotting over to stand near the object.

McEwen fared about as well as Porter did, and after several attempts, she told Hilbert that she was done. Hilbert could only laugh.

"I have little 'committees' on this team that help me with small decisions about uniforms and so on," said Hilbert. "Heather is in charge of many of these."

She learned about leadership at an early age while attending school in Snowflake, Ariz. McEwen said she didn't participate in organized sports until junior high in the small town, but she said she managed to get involved in all kinds of pick-up basketball games.

"I had to fight to get the ball sometimes, but I think I held my own," said McEwen.

After being named to the all-state volleyball team in both her junior and senior years, she began to get calls from Hilbert.

"One of her club coaches from Phoenix gave me a call and told me about this girl," said Hilbert. "Things happened quickly after that."

Attracted by Moscow's small size, McEwen said the transition has been easy from high school to Idaho's campus.

It is one of the reasons why McEwen has fared so well in school. Coming into this season, McEwen is a two-time Big Sky Conference selection on the all-academic team. It is something that lends her an air of authority when talking about academics.

"I want everybody to know that college athletes can exceed at both academics and athletics," said McEwen.

SPORTS BRIEFS

Rugby The UI women's rugby team came from behind to tie the Eastern Washington Eagles on Saturday, 5-5. The Black Widows moved their record up with the tie to 0-1-1, and scrim-off with Gonzaga University this Saturday at Guy Wicks field at 1 p.m.

Cross Country At a meet last Saturday in Missoula, the men finished 14th out of 14 teams, and the women were only slightly better as they were 11th of 14. This weekend the men are at the Sundodger Invitational in Seattle, and the women the Portland Invitational in Black Butte, Oregon.

Tennis The men's tennis team disposed of the University of Portland 6-1, and Gonzaga 6-0 last Saturday.

Def Leppard injects the Palouse with Adrenalin

PHOTOS

Bottom Left:
Lead Singer Joe Elliot takes a bow.

Def Leppard wanted to adrenalize fans on the Palouse Wednesday night and the band did just that.

The veteran rockers from Great Britain played for nearly two and a half hours, promoting their long-awaited release, "Adrenalize."

"Adrenalize" is only the band's third album since 1983. "Pyromania" sold eight million copies in 1983. The band took four years to record the follow-up, "Hysteria," but fans obviously found the album worth the wait. More than 15 million copies of "Hysteria" have sold to date.

Lead singer Joe Elliott discussed what the band had been up to since releasing "Hysteria." "I know this will sound like some two-bit rocker bullshit, but it's great to be back here," he said. "We spent an age, basically a hell of a long time, making 'Hysteria' and we swore we would never do that again. So what did we do? We took four years to piece together another album.

"One of the biggest things on the last tour was the return of Mr. Rick Allen. After what turned out to be a rather minor setback (the loss of his arm in an automobile accident) he reclaimed his throne as, as far as we are concerned, the best drummer in the world," Elliott continued. "But once again fate stepped in and we were thrown a bit of a loop. We lost a friend who was a very near and dear friend (guitarist Steve Clark)....I think if there is any aspect of this band that has gotten better and better, it is our ability to get on with it."

Clark died in January of 1991 of an accidental overdose of alcohol, anti-depressants and painkillers he was taking after cracking three ribs. Elliott said the band finished "Adrenalize" as a four-piece "as a mark of respect for Steve."

The band then went through a series of try-outs in Los Angeles before selecting Vivian Campbell to fill the void left by Clark. "We made ourselves a brand-new friend," Elliott told the crowd. "As it happens he is more than that. He has been in the band for eight months now which makes him one of the family. We think, and I hope you agree, he fits in quite nicely. In the blue corner, weighing in at about 160 pounds, all the way from Belfast, Ireland, Mr. Vivian Campbell."

The new and improved Def Leppard has been mellowed somewhat by the tragedies the members have endured. The band was not as rambunctious or flashy as it was on the "Hysteria" tour. But what Wednesday's show lacked in hype was more than compensated for by hard-driving rock'n'roll.

Once again guitarist Phil Collin dazzled the audience with his expert playing. Collin looked more like a gleeful 12-year old just out to have fun than a veteran, road-weary rocker. Elliott and Collin strutted, preened and tried (unnecessarily) to further amp the crowd. Every guitar lick and every note uttered by Elliott's smoked-a-few-too-many, gravelly voice elicited collective shouts of ecstasy from the crowd. "It's getting out there," Elliott said. "It's good to know in the 1990s people still want to have a little fun." Later in the show, Elliott commented again on the decibel levels of the 7,000 plus fans at Beasley. "Pullman, Washington, You guys make a lot of noise, I'll tell you that much," he said.

The show featured a healthy mix of new cuts and classic Def Leppard. "Hysteria" fans weren't disappointed as the band ripped into jarring versions of "Rocket," "Pour Some Sugar On Me," "Hysteria," "Gods of War," "Animal," "Women" and "Love Bites."

The band also threw in a few cuts from "Pyromania" including "Rock of Ages" and a spirited version of "Photograph" as the final song of the night.

Although the band was promoting "Adrenalize," it only played a few cuts off of the 1992 release including, "Make Love Like A Man," "Have You Ever Needed Someone So Bad?" and "Let's Get Rocked."

Fans at the show agreed that Wednesday night's show was a pared down version of the "Hysteria" tour, but still a phenomenal rock concert. Ann Wick, 23, of Spokane said she saw the band on the "Hysteria" tour in Spokane. "It's a pretty good show," she said. "There aren't as many lasers as last time and they have calmed down a little. But I guess that's bound to happen after everything they've been through. You've gotta slow down sometime. But they sound great. And the sound here is a lot better than in Spokane."

Dating tips for morons

Gather 'round fellas. Especially the clueless ones (which should account for most of you.) I'm going to take you on a 50-cent tour of the Wonderful World of Women.

Some of these helpful tips are taken directly from "The Women's Handbook." Obviously, not many men have bothered to peruse this manual so I am producing the Cliff's notes version.

Those who question my expertise can put their doubts to rest. This column is the result of an extremely informal survey of five female newspaper editors who occasionally get together to discuss how painful Exacto knives can be to certain areas of the male anatomy.

Read on, if you dare.
Ways To Ensure That You Will Get A Date About the Same Time There Are Snowball Fights In Hell.

■ Grope women you don't know. It is a major turn-on, I assure you. There is nothing more exquisite than to be sitting with a group of friends and have Buzz walk up and decide your body is Silly-Putty and he is the master sculptor.

■ Wearing colorful bikini underwear. Sorry fellas, but Speedos are a privilege, not a right. Boxers were the undergarment of choice by 100 percent of our survey respondents.

■ Displaying your wide array of bodily functions. Women don't care for armpit seranades or belching contests. Men nicknamed Booger are also a definite No-No.

■ Deciding to play divide and conquer with a group of women at a bar, restaurant, Bible study, etc. If a group of guys (also known as a pack of lust-stricken jackals) want to meet a group of women, they should ask first. If the women respond in a fashion such as, "You've got to be kidding me," "I'm sorry but I decided when I saw you walk in to renew my vow of celibacy," or "Are we on Candid Camera?" just forget it. The only scoring you'll be doing will be in an intense game of urinal hockey.

■ Discussing major surgery or accidents you've had. One of our editors actually had a guy tell her about brain surgery he underwent. Another tried to wow her by regaling her with tales of how he used his nose as keg tap. Prince Charming should be shaking in his boots.

The trouble with men of the collegiate variety these days is that they have no idea how to deal with women. The days of moonlight and roses have been replaced with evenings of Budweiser and jokes involving body functions sound effects. Cary Grant has been replaced by "Carry me over to the bushes so my brothers won't see me yak, babe." None of the survey respondents indicated they are holding out for Mr. Right. Until five of them show up, our survey respondents have voted to get a dog.

'America's Funniest People' at the mall

Put on a happy face. "America's Funniest People" are coming to Moscow to hold open auditions on Oct. 2 from 3-8 p.m. at The Palouse Empire Mall. Jokes, impressions, stupid pet/human tricks are encouraged.

The ABC-TV show will be videotaping, and all of the tapes will be sent to Los Angeles to be judged. If a segment from the Moscow taping is selected and is considered to be a nightly winner, first prize will be $10,000, second prize will be $3,000, and third place will be $2,000.

The show itself is a series of comedic vignettes spliced together, taken from various tapings around the country. The family oriented show likes its comedy clean cut, and the jokes should be toned and trimmed down to about 30 to 45 seconds.

If contestants have something already filmed, they can give a copy of it to the show and they will take it back to LA with them.

Paula Davis, who is the Publicity Assistant at America's Funniest People said that "All of the footage is viewed by our screeners and rated on a scale from one to 10. The fives and above are viewed by our producers and video directors and categorized into their proper slot. From there, it's simply pick and choose."

Just go climb a wall!

By MIA STIVERS
 Contributing Writer

A climbing wall, a ropes course, and trained supervisors are some undertakings found at the new University of Idaho Adventure Facility.

What is it?
 It's a new room that used to be part of the racquetball courts located in the north side of the Memorial Gym.

The man with the plans for the new facility is Jaff Kuhl, who is the new Campus Recreational Special Events and Facility Coordinator. Kuhl is in charge of the facility which is hoping to open mid to late October.

The room includes a climbing wall as well as several rope courses. The facility will be open to students, faculty and staff.

Specialized trainers will be on hand to assist in the area of mountain climbing.

The only requirement for participating in the facility is a training class prior to its use. "Chuck Hammersley and another person were originally going to build this room on their own," said Kuhl, "but the physical plant had decided to build the facility."

Kuhl said he has two main goals for the facility this year. He said he would first like to make the recreation facilities have more of a "universal appeal through creative programming and open recreation." Kuhl said secondly he would like to work towards being a more financially independent program.

Renaissance to commission mural celebrating 20 years

By Jay Forman
Staff Writer

Moscow is getting its first mural.

The Moscow Renaissance Fair is creating a mural to celebrate the fair's 20th anniversary with a cash prize of $200 for the design winner, and $1000 worth of materials for the person who actually paints the mural itself.

Lisa Cochran-Kane, who is the fair board president said, "We are proud to celebrate our 20 years of local involvement and support by commissioning the painting of Moscow's first community mural. We wish to incorporate, in this gift to the community, the spirit of goodwill and celebration which has seen the Moscow Renaissance Fair evolve from a small local event to one of the premiere family events of the Northwest."

The mural will be painted on the blank brick wall on the south side of the Third Street Market in Moscow. The mural will face the north side of the post office and the federal way building on Fourth Street in downtown Moscow.

Artists interested in submitting designs for the mural or are interested in receiving the commission to paint the mural may pick up an application upstairs at the Moscow Food Co-op which is located at 310 W. Third St. in Moscow.

While there take a glance at the posters from the first 19 Moscow Renaissance Fairs that are one display.

Also present upstairs at the Co-op will be a blank notebook which will be open to anyone who wishes to jot down an idea about what the theme for the mural might be.

"We hope that anyone with ideas about the mural will let us know by leaving the message in the notebook," Cochran-Kane said. "This also will be a chance for anyone to take another look at our collection of framed posters from every past fair."

The deadline for picking up applications for the mural is Oct. 10. Artists wishing to enter the competition should enclose some of their past work along with the application. Designers should enclose a full color poster of any size. Submissions may be left with Laura Church or Ellyn Kerr at the food co-op any day of the week. If any artists have a question, they should call Church or Kerr at 882-8537.

"We are proud to celebrate our 20 years of local involvement and support by commissioning the painting of Moscow's first community mural."

— Lisa Cochran-Kane
Renaissance Fair Board President

The 1993 fair will occur the first weekend in May at Moscow's East City Park. The fair itself features a weekend of free on-stage entertainment with approximately 140 crafts and food booths selling hand-crafted wares.

The design and scope of the mural should contain the spirit and history of the fair, including such themes as springtime, color, gaiety, music, dance, etc.

The winning design could possibly be used for the 1993 poster and the 1993 tee shirt.

Church, who is the vice president of the board, said, "I think (the mural) will be a fun thing to watch. It will brighten up the street a little bit, and it should be good for the businesses. They can say "Oh, we're on the other side of the mural," and most of all it will be good for the fair."

Wondering if there are still any opportunities for young, hard-working entrepreneurs to launch a business on the Palouse? Just ask Jeff Williams.

The owner of Digital Audio Mobile Music, Williams began his business six years ago as a freshman at Washington State University.

"The resident hall I was living in had a Halloween dance they needed music for, so we assembled a collection of home systems and put on a dance," said Williams.

Looking at the mobile music companies at that time, Williams thought they were "charging exorbitant amounts of money for entertainment that really wasn't that top notch." So he decided to take the opportunity and start his own business.

From that first small, home compiled music system, Williams' business has grown to include two state-of-the-art systems that produce the sound and light shows for his clients. His success may have a lot to do with his dedication to service.

"I think the main thing is making our clients realize they are more than just a name of a living group or whatever," explained Williams. "We really try to give the most individual attention we possibly can and work with them."

Williams said one thing he does to achieve this personal contact is sit down and type a thank-you letter to each and every client after every single event.

Besides running Digital Audio, Williams keeps busy attending classes at WSU and working as a disc jockey at the Hot 104/KHTR radio station.

"I guess you could call me a workaholic. My body doesn't like it, but my pocket book does," said Williams.

Digital Audio now employs five people, leaving Williams more time to "be an active manager and trainer of my employees."

"I don't hire anybody that doesn't have experience doing dances," said Williams. "There is a real performance aspect to doing a dance. You have to really be able to read your audience, to react, you can't just sit there and play music."

Adam Bauer, who works for Digital Audio, agrees, "At a dance, you can see what is going to go over good or what isn't. Musical tastes can be so different."

Williams said they can usually tell within the first half hour what is going to happen by how the crowd reacts to the different songs. Another thing he teaches his employees is to keep the disc jockey banter to a minimum.

"I don't want them to talk a whole lot. On the radio it's entertaining, but at a dance it's not. The whole point is to be dancing, not listening," explained Williams. "My old quote used to be 'You can't dance to the beat of my voice.'"

Williams said it's a fun job because the employees get to attend "all the best parties and get paid for it."

Bauer, who previously worked for other mobile music companies in Spokane, said putting on a good show is their number one priority.

"I like being able to play music, to make people happy. It's just fun work," said Bauer.

People interested in booking Digital Audio for a show can contact Williams at 332-8660.

Humorist brings his musical satire to Spokane

By TANYA MADISON
Editor-in-Chief

Many people find humor in politics.

Political satirist Mark Russell makes a living but pointing out the faux pas and foibles of the American political system.

Russell is nationally-known for his PBS specials that mix musical spoofs with sardonic observations. For example, Russell asks, "Is burying the American flag legal? Unfortunately, probably. You can also set fire to the Constitution, but first you should read it to find out how to defend yourself."

Russell has been poking fun at politicians for more than 17 years in his PBS specials. No cow is too sacred to Russell's rapier-like wit. Some examples include:

- In El Salvador, the far right has gained power in a large, honest, fair and democratic voter turnout. Washington doesn't like the looks of it.

- We can already see the beginnings of George Bush's kinder, gentler America. Yesterday in New York City a teenager held the door open for an old lady —

"I look forward to an election year the same reason a department store owner looks forward to Christmas week. It's my busiest season for jokes."

Nov. 1, 1992 will mark the 17th anniversary premiere of the "Mark Russell Comedy Specials" which are performed live and produced in Buffalo, NY, six times a year for PBS.

Russell has been criticized occasionally for his zinging, stinging social commentary. Not that he minds, "As long as someone gets offended, whether it's a politician or a fan of the politician, it means adrenalin is flowing and we're not walking along lock-step babbling inanities," he said.

This fall will be a busy one for Russell. "I look forward to an election year the same reason a department store owner looks forward to Christmas week. It's my busiest season for jokes."

Russell will be performing at the Spokane Opera House Saturday night at 8 p.m. Tickets are available at the Opera House box office.

UI to hold writers workshop

By KIM BLEDSOE
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho will be sponsoring a Fiction Writing Workshop during the month of October, which will be conducted by distinguished visiting writer, David Foster Wallace.

A nationally prominent writer from back East, Wallace is the author of the novel, The Broom of the System, and a short story collection called, Girl With Curious Hair.

Wallace is considered to be one of the most talented new writers on the literary scene today. Ron McFarland, director of creative writing for UI, describes him as "one of the hot younger writers coming up on the circuit."

Fiction manuscripts were submitted Monday by those wishing to participate in the workshop. The manuscripts will be screened and those with enough imagination, creativity, and writing skills will have the opportunity to enhance their fiction writing abilities through Wallace's workshop.

"Screening is necessary because we want to make sure that they are students who are ready to meet and work with this type of writer," McFarland said. "It's important that they are all on the same level."

The workshop will begin Monday, Oct. 12, and will run Mondays, Tuesdays, and Thursdays from 7:00 to 9:30 p.m. for two weeks. Wallace will give a public reading of his current work at the UI Law School Library Wednesday, October 14 at 7:30 p.m.

Pawn shops trade off bad image for good

By TRACIE BRUNO
Lifestyles Editor

It's the sleazy joint that has bars across the windows, a man behind the counter smoking a cigar, wearing a bookie's hat and holding hundreds of hot items just burning to be sold.

That's how Marc Cramer, owner of Main Street Pawn, describes the stereotypical image people have of pawn shops.

"People walk by, especially mothers, and say 'I'm not going in there,'" Cramer said. He said some of the people that are wary of pawn shops have been influenced by old black and white movies where pawn shops are just that, sleazy.

"Some people won't come in the door, like there's a plague," said Jerry Johnson, owner of the Moscow Pawn Shop. "It's true that stuff happens, some (pawn shops) are reputable, some aren't."

Both Cramer and Johnson said they try to avoid a negative image by sifting through the merchandise that's brought to them to ensure that it's not stolen.

Johnson said he has occasionally had stolen items brought into his store. "If I'm suspicious, I'll call the police department while the person is in the store," Johnson said. "A sixth sense gives you the indication that something is wrong." In the six months that Johnson's store has been open he's had only one stolen item pass through his inspection and make it onto the shelves.

Cramer, who has owned his shop for six years, has not been so lucky. He said about every three months he'll get stolen merchandise that he is unaware of.

"Sometimes it's obvious that the merchandise is stolen. For example someone brought in some class rings with initials that didn't fit his own," Cramer said. "I also knew this guy a few years ago who showed up with a brand new table top grill, and he wasn't the type to barbecue. I told him to take it back to the yard he stole it from."

To help ensure that he doesn't receive stolen property, Cramer receives a list from the Latah County Sheriff's office and from the Orofino and Pullman police departments. However, he said he doesn't receive a list from the Moscow Police Department.

"Moscow is one of the few law enforcement agencies that do not send me notice of stolen items," Cramer said.

Neil Odenborg, sergeant for the Moscow Police Department, said he was unaware that such a thing was done, but said he would like to look into the matter. "I would like to look into it because I think it would be beneficial for both of us," Odenborg said.

In Moscow there's a city ordinance that requires pawn shops to keep a record of the merchandise that they purchase. Each week the pawn shops are required to turn this list into the police. This list includes the date of the transaction, description of the item: which includes model number, serial number and color (if necessary). It also includes the sellers name, telephone number, address, date of birth, sex, race, age, height, weight, and ID number.

"At first I didn't like the idea of submitting that data to the police department once a week, but now I think it's an excellent idea," Johnson said. "It's a lot of paperwork, but I think it keeps the stolen merchandise out of the store."

If a stolen item is found in a pawn shop the police may seize the property for evidence. Odenborg said that the court may order restitution to the pawn shop, but that it's not set in stone.

"Sometimes they (the court) do and sometimes they don't order restitution. Getting restitution for the pawn shop can be like getting blood from a turnip," Odenborg said.

While it may seem that all the pawn shops do is deal with the police, this is rarely the case. They also deal with their customers.

They make deals, that is. Pawn shops are renowned for their wheeling and dealing. Both Cramer and Johnson said they are ready to deal. "Rarely does someone come in and pay the sticker price," Cramer said.

"You've got to be ready to deal in this business or you're dead," Johnson said jokingly.

The Moscow pawn shops have an advantage because there are no shops in Pullman. Both men said the taxes and strict laws in Washington could be the reason for this.

"I have WSU students come over to sell items. That's 20 miles round trip because there isn't a shop in Pullman," Johnson said.
