Debate discusses environmental issues

By SHARI IRETON
Assistant News Editor

Conservation is a big issue this election year, even right here at home. Last Friday, two candidates from Moscow running for the State House seat, held a debate concerning environmental issues.

Doc Lucas, the Republican candidate, said he feels he has done a good job in representing environmental ideas in government already.

"I think that in the legislature I've made a great contribution...at times I've been the only one," said Lucas.

Democratic candidate Louise Regelin said she has been concerned with the environment all of her life. She said she hopes to support bills coming through the legislature that are environmentally oriented.

"I can't think of very many bills that will not deal with conservation," said Regelin. Issues from water resources to solid waste management are all conservation issues she said, and must be dealt with in an environmentally sound way.

Regelin said she feels that the main problem with conservation issues today is "failure of two way communication" between the government and the public. She said that government regulations can be a "federal monkeywrench" that can be a problem with the management of lands. Regelin said that the United States needs something like a Bureau of Natural Resources.

"We do need plans, we need to set priority and goals...we are at a crisis point," she said.

Lucas' goals for conservation, if he is reelected to the seat, deal with issues such as logging, farming and the salmon problem. "I think I'm as qualified as anyone to answer about conservation," he said.

Lucas is also concerned with the role tourism plays in the state economy and natural resources. He said he feels Idaho will see a sharp increase in the number of people who visit the state.

"People are going to pour in here," said Lucas, "Tourism is coming. I hope that we're ready."

Police search for Peeping Tom seen on fourth floor of Tower

By SHARI IRETON
Assistant News Editor

Lately, the women on French Hall are starting to feel as if their on the set of Psycho.

A Peeping Tom has been spotted twice lurking in the women's showers on the fourth floor of Theophilus Towers.

Moscow Police are looking for a man about 5-foot-9 with a medium build, black hair and a very flat, round face.

The Peeping Tom first appeared in the Hall's showers last Friday at 9:30 a.m. and again Sunday at noon.

According to Campus Liaison Officer Dan Bruce, there have been no more incidents.

"We have had several people come up with names, but we've found nothing so far," said Bruce.

The police have no reason to believe that it will continue to happen, but they are still searching for the suspect. "We would just like to get him identified to put a stop to it," he said, "so he doesn't do it again."

Bruce says that there are no reasons to believe he's dangerous, because he didn't try to touch any of the women and didn't give any threats.

For residents of the fourth hall, however, the Peeping Tom has caused some anxiety. Sandra Wright from the hall says that feelings are "pretty mixed."

"Some people are really upset about it," said Wright, "a lot of us are sticking together." She said when some of the women bathe, they have their friends sit outside the showers doing homework and reading books just to feel safe.

Police composite of suspect in Peeping Tom incident seen on the fourth floor of Theophilus Tower.

Due to this and other incidents, the Tower will be under a 24 hour lockdown starting today. Other residence halls are locked from 11 p.m. until 7 a.m., but president's of other halls have requested that their doors be locked 24 hours as well. Plans have been made to lockdown Olsen Hall and the Wiley Wing of the Wallace Complex phones are installed outside.

Director of Residence Life, Jim Bauer, said that people are concerned about safety, so the lockdown is necessary to make women feel more comfortable in the residence halls.

"A little bit of inconvenience far outweighs the possibility of the building not being secured," he said.

Wright said that while she's not against the lockdown because it keeps unknown people out of the building, she thinks it will cause some complaint.

"Some people are really upset because action doesn't seem to have been taken," she said.

Watching out for people who shouldn't be in the halls is one of Bauer's concerns, he said. He said he hopes people are discussing the security factor in the halls and talking about "safety dos and don'ts."

Bauer said that there is an escort service again for women who worry about walking home alone. "The escort service seems to be doing real well," he said, "They said that they have been doing a lot more service."

Anyone who has information about the Peeping Tom, they can call Bruce at 885-7074.

UI student charged with homicide of infant son

By TANYA MADISON
Editor-in-Chief

A 19-year-old University of Idaho student has been arrested and charged with killing her infant child in her residence hall room at Theophilus Towers.

Police responded Monday at 1:11 p.m. to a call from maintenance workers at the university who had found a bloody package in a trash container outside the Tower. The package contained the body of a full-term, infant male.

Police investigated and found spots of blood leading from the garbage chute on the eleventh floor of the dormitory to the room of Megan Heber.

According to Moscow Police Chief William F. Brown, Jr., Heber admitted to giving birth alone in her room around 1 p.m. on Sunday after six hours of labor. She said the baby died shortly after birth and that she dumped the remains down the garbage chute.

Heber later admitted to applying pressure to the baby's neck and chest. An autopsy was conducted on Tuesday. "Forensic autopsy preliminary results indicate the death was a homicide," Brown said. "Asphyxial death is what it was determined to be.

That is all we can really say at this time." The autopsy was performed by Latah County Coroner Dan Schmidt.

In his probable cause statement that was filed with the court, Brown wrote, "She said she didn't do it intentionally. But in retrospect she can see how she could have caused him to die. She said she hated the baby and that hate took over."

Heber was in Latah County court on Tuesday where she was arraigned on a charge of second-degree murder. She is being represented by Moscow attorney Allen V. Bowles. In court, Magistrate Bill Hamlett read the charge that Heber, "did feloniously and with malice a forethought, kill and murder her unnamed infant son, a human being, by pushing on his throat, and pressing on his chest, from which he died."

Hamlett ordered that Heber be held on a $25,000 property bond or a $7,500 cash bond. If Heber is released on the cash bond, Hamlett has ordered her not to leave the state of Idaho. Heber's preliminary hearing has been scheduled for Oct. 16.

Latah County Sheriff Ken Buxton said Heber was still in custody on Wednesday and undergoing medical treatment at Grit-man Medical Center.

A nurse at Gritman Medical Center said on Wednesday that no information was available on Heber's condition.

Heber's family, who live in Eureka, Calif., said they did not know Heber was pregnant and had not seen her since April. The family was informed of the tragedy by a reporter from The Moscow-Pullman Daily News.

Heber's father, Dwayne Heber, talked with the Argonaut briefly Wednesday afternoon. "I don't really have a comment right now," he said. "I am sure you can probably understand. We are going through a very distressed situation right now. We are just trying to get this thing sorted out."

Dean of Student Advisory Services Bruce Pitman said help is available on campus for students who need to talk about the incident. "We strongly encourage students to contact the Student Counseling Center, Student Advisory Services or their residence life staff," he said. "We will make sure that the appropriate and necessary counseling arrangements are made."

Vice President in charge of Student Affairs Hal Godwin said university officials have been trying to deal with the aftermath of the tragedy. "Right after we became aware of the situation we brought psychologists from the Counseling Center to the scene to begin offering support first to the custodial staff who were unfortunate enough to make the discovery and then to the students of McCoy Hall," he said.

Monday night a meeting with Dr. Jim Morris, the director of Student Counseling Services, Pitman from Student Advisor Services and Director of Housing Jim Bauer was held with the residents of the Tower. "It was for the purpose of first informing them of what happened and to reduce rumors," Godwin said. "It was also letting them (the students) have a chance to react and share feelings and begin to process their own reactions."

Godwin said the RAs in all of the residence halls were immediately informed of the situation "so that they could also contribute to reducing rumors." Housing staff has posted the names and numbers of people students can call at the counseling center for help. "The RAs have also been asked to keep their ears and eyes open for students who have might have been affected," Godwin said.

Morris said some students have already sought counseling. "We've been dealing with individuals who have concerns to address on an individual basis," he said. "We are trying to make ourselves available to address this as immediately and as quickly as we can. We may be working with the RAs and people in housing in the future to do more as needed. But right now we are waiting to see what needs develop and what we need to do to respond."

Morris said most of the students he has talked with have expressed shock and concern, for Heber, for the baby and for themselves. "This one tears at your heart with the tragedy of it all," he said.

Godwin said part of the tragedy is that Heber hid her pregnancy so well that no one knew to offer assistance. "This case is one in which the individual did not want anyone to know she was pregnant and she was very successful in that," he said. "When we asked the residents of the hall if they knew about the pregnancy, very few knew. But pregnancy is a medical condition and as in any medical condition we know of, we will urge students to seek help for it."

Dust off the rifle hunters, deer season opens tomorrow

By SHARI IRETON
Assistant News Editor

Tomorrow, men and women all over the Palouse will strap on their rifles and head to the hills. Let deer season begin.

Greg Losinski, Information Officer for the Fish and Game Lewiston office, said this season will be as good as last year due to the mild winters.

Losinski said that the Moscow/Lewiston area has two types of deer, which is very rare for most of the state. This area is the cross-over for mule deer and white tail deer, which can lead to split seasons. While the season opens Saturday, from Nov. 10-Dec. 1, only white tail will be in season. Losinski warns hunters to check the sex and species of game before they shoot anything.

"They need to be aware what they are shooting," he said, "which isn't always easy in the woods. Just make sure it's rack and not branches."

If hunters does make a mistake in what they shoot or if they shoot out of season, Losinski said they should turn themselves in.

"It's much better if they contact us on their own...they'll only receive a fine," he said, adding that sometimes the fines are reduced. If hunters do not report the incident to the Fish and Game and are reported, it will be considered a criminal act.

Losinski said that because their officers cover literally thousands of square miles, it is difficult for them to catch offenders. "It's mostly their buddies turn who turn each other in," he said.

While this may sound sneaky, Losinski encourages this. "We really need people's help," he said. The Fish and Game even has an anonymous number (1-800-632-5999) to call to report poaching and calls are confidential.

The Fish and Game will have game check stations this season in the woods to check hunters and ask them questions to collect data. "This helps us because our biologists go over these numbers and to estimate about many animals can be taken," he said. A white tail deer research station will be located at the bottom of the Lewiston Grade.

Losinski said they have to the stations to be able to collect any data at all because of the size of the area they need to cover. "It's tough. We just can't physically get out there."

The department will also have law enforcement stations where they stop every vehicle to ask questions, but these will be in more secluded areas, said Losinski.

Losinski's major concern is that hunter orange is not required in the state of Idaho, but Fish and Game strongly suggest everyone wear it.

"You're putting your own life in danger," he said, adding that there are hunters with very high powered rifles and can hit targets from far distances. Losinski said that while Idaho has very few hunting accidents from shooting, they would like to see all hunters wearing orange.

The other concern the Fish and Game has during game season is poaching. The department just had a big sting in Orofino for people selling poached elk, moose, deer and steelhead trout. Losinski said that poaching is so popular because commercial companies pay alot of money for game meat and wild fish.

Another form of poaching which is very common, but few people think of it as being against the law, is "party hunting."

According Losinski, a family will all buy hunting tags, but only the father will hunt, enabling him to shoot more than one deer each season.

There is a new law that is in effect this season, said Losinski, that concerns trespassing. If areas were cultivated or had "no trespassing" signs, hunters were not allowed on the land. If there are posts sprayed with florescent orange paint marking off sections of land, those are now legally considered to mark no trespassing zones also. Losinski stresses that these are not only for hunters, but hikers, birdwatchers and other recreationsists as well.

While some may argue that hunting is inhumane, Losinski points out that because of the large fields of grain, the game population has boomed. "If they were not managed, the winter kill would be enourmous," he said, "It's just a spin off of man's interaction with nature...they have to get their veggies somewhere."

Andy Hutchison, a UI student and avid hunter, agrees. "I think that hunting really slims down the herds for healthier animals."

Hutchison says part of the reason he hunts is for the meat, which he uses all of. Another reason he said he hunts is to get away. "I like it because we get to get out into the woods and get away from school for a while."

Hutchison would settle for a deer, but is hoping to get an elk, too.

The seasons for big game in region two, unit eight:

- Oct. 10-Nov. 9 for antlered and antlerless deer, white tail and mule deer.
- For antlered elk, the season runs Oct. 10-Nov. 3.
- Black Bear take season runs Sept. 1-Oct. 31.
- Sept. 15-Jan. 31 is the season for hunting mountain lions.

"Be vewy, vewy quiet," says Chris Miller to Chad Lewis, both UI students and hunters. Decked out in hunting apparel and equipped with rifles, Lewis and Miller impatiently await deer and elk season, which opens tomorrow. ( SHARI IRETON PHOTO )

Idaho magazine axed

By BRANDY CORGATELLI
Staff Writer

The next issue of the UI alumni magazine will be in the mail this month with a new name and a less-polished look.

"This is a change in stride, but we are not going to miss a beat (getting the magazine out to readers)," Terry Maurer, Director of University Communications said.

The new quarterly publication will be called The University of Idaho Magazine. It will be printed on mostly black-and-white newsprint rather than the glossy paper of the former alumni magazine, according to Maurer.

The final issue of the former alumni magazine Idaho, The University was mailed in August. Some people are unhappy with the demise of the nine-year-old publication.

Stephen Lyons, the former editor of the magazine, said he has received personal letters from alums from Boise to Sandpoint in support of the former magazine.

"I know it has ticked-off a lot of alums," Lyons said.

An international writers group, PEN, also asked the UI administration to reconsider its decision.

The administration cited rising expenses as the reason for the demise of Idaho, The University. "We decided last spring that we simply could not afford a slick-style magazine mailed to 63,000 people," Maurer said.

The mailing list includes alumni, seniors and parents of seniors.

Maurer said printing and other costs were climbing uncontrollably. He said the administration considered other alternatives before deciding to change the name and format of the magazine.

The options were to either print poorer quality written material or mail the magazine out fewer times a year. "Neither of these were acceptable," Maurer said.

Lyons told a different story. He said expenses probably weren't the only consideration.

Costs weren't rising all that much, according to Lyons. The budget for Idaho, The University the past year was $106,000. For the six years prior to last year, the budget for the magazine was $86,000.

Lyons said the decision to drop the magazine came after he wrote two pieces for national education journals on the tension between using university publications for good writing or using them for fund raising.

One of the comments Lyons made in his first journal piece for The Chronicle of Higher Education was, "They (readers of university magazines) enjoy being treated as a thoughtful, discerning public, not pieces of donor meat."

Lyons said of the first article, "For some reason that bothered everyone." It was a matter of days after his second journal article was printed that he found out his contract was not being renewed and the magazine was being cancelled, according to Lyons.

The UI Vice President for Relations and Development Harry Peterson said the decision had nothing to do with the journal articles, according to an August Moscow-Pullman Daily News story. Peterson said the change was made solely for monetary reasons and would save the UI about $50,000 a year.

The new magazine won't be that different from the former one, Maurer said. "We are making it perhaps a little more newsy than its predecessor. But we will be sure the intellectual quality of the past is still here."

The upcoming issue will include a long piece on the creative process, an essay on "The Myth of the Four-Year Degree," a feature story on Dan O'Brien, and lots of news, according to Maurer.

"There will be something for every reader," Maurer said.

Lyons said changing to black-and-white newsprint was a bad move and will hurt the magazine's credibility. "I don't think it will be as well-read in a tabloid format," Lyons said.

"The alumni felt like they cared enough about them to put it in a classy format. It was one of those special things and now its gone."

Lyons remembers fondly his five years working on the magazine. "We were able to feature a lot of diverse voices and covered timely and controversial articles," he said. "We worked with wonderful alumni throughout the country."

Crime stats released for this week

By TANYA MADISON
Editor-in-Chief

This column is a roundup of the weekly crime statistics that involve UI students. All crimes listed in this column were those reported to the campus police or the Moscow Police Department.

Offenses at all ends of the spectrum showed up in this week's campus crime statistics.

The reported homicide occurred at the Theophilus Tower on Sunday. Megan Heber, 19, admitted to police that she applied pressure to the neck and chest of her newborn baby and threw the remains down the eleventh floor trash chute of the Tower.

Heber has been charged with second-degree murder, a charge that carries a penalty of 10 years to life in prison. A preliminary hearing is set for Oct. 16.

A peeping Tom has also been lurking through the Tower. Two women reported seeing a white male in his earlier twenties in the fourth floor women's showers. Campus police liason Dan Bruce is requesting information from anyone who knows anything about the shower voyuer. "We believe both incidents

Two students were charged with possession of marijuana and possession of drug paraphernalia. "These violations seem to pop up from time to time," Bruce said. "We just kind of bump into them every once in a while. Of course, it is out there all of the time. But sometimes we find it and sometimes we don't."

Two bicyclists were cited for racing. The cyclists were clocked doing 34 m.p.h. in a 25 m.p.h. zone. Last week 13 citations were issued to cyclists. "We are hoping to get the point across that we are issuing tickets," Bruce said. "Maybe if the cyclists know, they will stay within the law."

Two batteries occurred in the last week. In both cases a single male was assaulted by a group of two or more. The two incidents were unrelated.

Forestry publication wins top honors

By PETE GOMBEN
Associate Editor

Although it may not be easy, success is definitely nothing new to the Idaho Forester.

The magazine, which is published by the students of the College of Forestry, Wildlife and Range Sciences, won top honors in the annual Society of American Foresters student publication competition for 1992.

"We have entered the SAF publication contest 13 of the 14 years it has been in existence," said Joe Ulliman, head of the forest resources department and faculty advisor to the Forester. "We've won top honors seven times, including this year. We've finished second twice and third once."

Notification of the honor came earlier this semester, he said. The official presentation of the award will be later this month at the annual SAF convention in Richmond, Virginia.

The Forester is published once a year, in the late spring, and submitted to a national panel of SAF judges, where it competes with student magazines from across the United States and Canada.

There are four criteria for judging the publications, Ulliman said. SAF officials look for the quality of the magazine as an historical record, the quality of the artwork and layout, the quality of the written material and the overall interest of the magazine to the reader.

Ulliman highlighted some of the changes that have taken place throughout the history of the magazine. "The technology of putting the magazine together has changed quite a bit over the years," Ulliman said. "The most recent issue was assembled on computer using Pagemaker software, which is quite a change from the print blocks that were used earlier this century."

But graphics and layout procedures aren't all that have changed. "The articles in past Foresters were good, but we've gotten more variety recently. More emphasis has been placed on all natural resources. "We've switched orientation from what used to be strictly forestry" to encompass fields such as wildlife and range science, he said.

Work has already begun on the 1993 Forester, which will examine future trends in natural resources, said Marge Lienhard, editor of this year's magazine.

"This year's Forester will focus on how changes in natural resource management have forced changes in the curriculum of the college," she said.

According to business manager Cory Inouye, natural resource management is rapidly evolving from the policies of the past to a more ecology-based outlook.

"Even in the private sector everything is going 'ecological,'" he said. "Environmentally-safe practices are really becoming popular."

Anyone can submit manuscripts with a natural resource theme to the magazine by sending them to Ulliman at the College of FWR.

Inouye said the staff is looking for articles from all sides of the environmental debate. "We'd like to get environmentalists and the timber industry talking about problems in resource management, and hopefully offer some solutions to those problems."

Despite what Ulliman calls a disappointing drop in sales of the magazine to alumni, both he and Lienhard said they believe the future of the Idaho Forester is bright.

"We have a small but enthusiastic staff, representing all departments in the college," Lienhard said. "It is wonderful to see people who want to get involved."

Ulliman agreed. "This year's staff has a lot of good ideas about what they'd like to do with the magazine," he said.

Gibb teaching students

By DEANN NORTHAM
Contributing Writer

Students are the life of former UI president Richard Gibb.

That's why, after 12 years of administration he has returned to teaching. "That's my life. It's not work to me — it takes an enormous amount of time, but they say it's not work unless you're looking for something else." He's not.

Gibb began his career in Illinois. He received a Bachelor's degree in vocational agriculture, and a Master's degree in education. After doing his doctorate work at Michigan State he took a job as a faculty member at Western Illinois University.

Gibb taught agricultural economics here for six years, then took on an administrative position as executive assistant.

Then, Gibb moved to South Dakota and worked for the Commission of Higher Education. In this job he described himself as a "chancellor." He said he was involved with every aspect of education. Gibb said, "In effect, I was the president of the system." The presidents of universities from around the state reported to him and kept him updated.

Gibb took a similar position for a while in Indiana, then decided he wanted something else. "I wanted to get back to working full-time on campus, out west, and at a land grant institution." Gibb said the only other university he could describe like this besides UI would be in Wyoming.

"It's (Idaho) is a unique institution," said Gibb. For example, "the University of South Dakota has their law school, while South Dakota State has the agriculture and engineering schools. The variety of programs here interested me."

Gibb said UI is also what is called a "Constitutional" university. "Most institutions are created by the legislature. We were in the original Constitution." UI was established in 1889, a year before Idaho became a state. Because of this, Gibb said if the state wants to change the function of the university, they must go to the people.

Gibb was the president of UI for 12 years. "I enjoyed it a great deal," he said. "However, the time comes when a president should leave, some stay too long." Gibb said he would have left even a year earlier, but he was in the middle of centennial fundraising, and stayed to help with this. "I was not ready to retire, and wanted to get back into teaching," he said.

This was three years ago. Gibb has been teaching a variety of courses since then. Right now he is teaching higher education administration for grad students, micro and macro economics, intro to ag economics and a contemporary issues course. He is called an adjunct professor, or one who is full-time faculty for one department, but titled in another. Gibb teaches in three different colleges on campus.

Gibb doesn't plan on leaving any time soon. "I have a great fondness for the university and the area," he said. "I haven't thought about moving. However, he doesn't plan on teaching full-time. "I want to do some traveling now."

Gibb said he learned several lessons working as president at UI. "No one can make anyone happy. The moment a decision is made someone is unhappy."

►DEBATE from page 1

Regelin feels Idaho's economy will diversify as small businesses expand and industries make the change with the shrinking economy. "I don't think it's a given. I think there will be transition," she said. She encourages research and development to increase "light" industry.

One of Regelin's goals would be to localize industry, such as having a wood products factory near timber production.

Lucas said the U.S. has poisoned the environment and it will take more than mother nature to heal to itself. People who use natural resources will have to change their ideas about conservation, he said.

The debate was the first of four environmental forums to be held, sponsored by the Idaho Conservation League, Palouse Clearwater Environmental Institute, Sierra Club and Clearwater Forest Watch.

Homecoming events continue with bonfire, royalty

By TIM HELMKE
Staff Writer

Fall has arrived at the University of Idaho and with it comes the annual Homecoming game and all of the activities associated.

Living groups all over campus have been working hard to get everything prepared for the floats, skits, and banners as well as the other competitions. Homecoming 1992 offers the theme "Faces of Idaho--A Focus on Cultural Diversity Week." The living groups then must base their themes for competitions on that theme or "Beat the Bengals."

The competitions for 1992 Homecoming began when living groups nominated men and women for Homecoming King and Queen. The two titles are very similar but the choosing of them are totally different.

The King candidates were nominated by their living groups and were then all compiled into one resume pack. The resume packs were then distributed to the living groups and the living groups then voted for the top three choices. This voting counted for fifty-percent of the kings points and the other half came from skit competitions.

The Queen candidates were nominated by the living groups and were then compiled into similar resume packs that were also distributed to the living groups. The living groups rated their top three choices and the votes were tabulated and eight finalists were chosen. The eight finalists were:

- Kalista Barclay— Gamma Phi Beta
- Kiley Nichols— Delta Delta Delta
- Robin Betz— Gamma Phi Beta
- Katie Hellhake— Kappa Kappa Gamma
- Lisa Jolley— Alpha Gamma Delta
- Allison Lindholm— Campbell Hall
- Amoreena Roberts— For-

ney Hall
■ Marcy Trost— Steel House

The eight finalists were then put through an interview process by a panel of judges. The girls were then rated and given points. Then the Homecoming Queen and her court were chosen. Results were not announced until the Bonfire on Thursday night at Guy Wicks Field.

Wednesday marked the beginning of a new living group competition with the Scavenger Hunt. The first part of the scavenger hunt items were due in at the SUB Thursday evening and a new list was handed out.

This second list for the scavenger hunt was not an item list but a University of Idaho trivia list. This item is due in by noon today and is where living groups earn participation points and the group with the highest percentage of items turned in receive bonus points. This new competition is in place to offer something fun and exciting as well as educating with the Idaho trivia.

The annual skit competition was basically the same idea this year with a few variations. The skits that involved the Homecoming King candidates were prejudged on Thursday afternoon at Guy Wicks Field and the top four were then presented at the Bonfire. Mike Sweetland, the chairman for this event, said that this was created to get away from the lengthy bonfires from days past. The top four skits were then given bonus points more than participation.

Living groups were also awarded points for percentage of group in attendance. Each living group had a packet of tickets that were equivalent to the number of people in their living group. The tickets with the living group names on them were then compiled and attendance points were awarded.

The annual bonfire this year began with the Vandal Marching Band marching in and playing the Vandal fight song. UI President Elizabeth Zinser then welcomed the crowd to the bonfire and wished everyone the best in the Homecoming activities.

Highlights of the bonfire included the cheerleaders leading the crowd in cheers, and the presentation of the top four skits. The band also lead the crowd in their beer song. Coach John L. Smith also gave an inspirational speech to the crowd and then went on to lead the crowd in an "I-D-A-H-O" cheer that echoed forever.

The royalty was announced by Elizabeth Zinser with the first ever King court being first. The first ever UI Homecoming King is Rob Finch of Alpha Kappa Lambda, his first attendant is Keith Taylor of FarmHouse, and his second attendant is Tom Sheffield of Delta Chi. Lisa Jolley of Alpha Gamma Delta was chosen as the Homecoming Queen with Kiley Nichols of Delta Delta Delta as her first attendant and Kalista Barclay as her second attendant.

The annual banner competition is being held again this year with them being hung in the Kibbie Dome for the football game.

Another new event is beginning this year with the Sand Volleyball Tournament being held at the Wallace Center Courts. This event is a best two out of three game set, single elimination tournament.

Opportunists should refrain from commenting on fatality

A modern American tragedy is being played out before our eyes. One life is over; another may be ruined forever.

On Monday afternoon, maintenance workers discovered the body of a newborn baby boy in a trash container outside Theophilus Tower. Tracing a trail of blood that led from the 11th floor garbage chute to a dorm room, police were able to locate the mother of the infant.

An autopsy showed that the infant died of asphyxiation. On Tuesday, the mother was charged with second-degree murder after she told police she had killed the newborn by pushing on his throat. If she is found guilty, she could spend 10 years to life in prison.

These things aren't supposed to happen in our community. They are supposed to happen to nameless strangers who live hundreds of miles away, in the teeming hives of New York or Los Angeles.

Sadly, this is a tragedy that may know no bounds. Like a pebble tossed in a pond, its effects will ripple outward until everyone is touched, mostly for the worst.

Already some newspapers have sensationalized the story, turning over every stone to get a scoop. A quick glance at any local newspaper will tell us that the mother's parents weren't aware she was pregnant, and that residents of Theophilus Tower are outraged, saddened, confused, shamed and frightened.

Journalists aren't the only sharks that home in on the scent of blood. Before long, political opportunists will rework the story to fit their own ends. Some will probably decide to use the incident as a rallying point for a given political viewpoint.

We will be told that this unfortunate occurrence is the result of our government's tightening of restrictions on abortion. If the child was unwanted, people will say, wouldn't it have been better to end his life before birth?

Maybe. But if the baby was completely unwanted, he wouldn't have been brought to term at all. Local media have done a poor job of advertising other options for reluctant mothers.

Throughout campus, students have been overheard voicing their belief that the mother is a sick, disgusting person for handling the situation the way she did. Such gossip and speculation are not only self-serving, they are evil.

We all should resist the temptation to transform the infant into a martyr for a political cause, or as a catalyst to support whatever is the stylish mindset of the day.

Although nameless, he should be mourned as any other victim of an untimely or unfortunate death should be mourned. No one should make him out to be anything more or less than what he was: a human being, just as we all are.

As for the mother, she was obviously confused and frightened herself, but it is the job of the courts — not the media nor any group of political activists — to decide her innocence or guilt. Debating her possible motives and her mental condition will only breed hatred.

The King is dead, long live the King.

If I were a betting man, and I am, I'd put all my tuition (this year's tuition, not next year's $18,000 bill) on Bill Clinton to win the election.

Why not? The Democrats have. The Vegas oddsmakers have. And most importantly, the media has. The same people that crowned King George, set Ross Perot on his white horse, then knocked him off, then accepted him back the same way a family accepts its goofy uncle, now bring you ... Bill Clinton?

Isn't this the same guy that spent the early half of the Democratic primary looking like the sweaty, pudgy son of William Shatner and Phil Donahue? He absorbed the combined floggings of the other Democratic nominees, the Republicans, the draft board, Jennifer Flowers and anyone who had inhaled with the exception of Jerry Brown.

Suddenly he's become Earnest Elvis Clinton, the single-handed, squared-jaw savior of democracy. He has been imbued with the honesty of Harry Truman and the soul of the King. He may not have the answers, but goddamn it, he's gonna try!

A drunken drive down memory lane

She had eyes like tiny time bombs waiting to explode.

"You think this party is something, you should have seen the parties we used to have in high school," she confided to me with a wink, downing another beer.

It was getting late and I was tired of listening to tales about the lost glory of youth. We all had fun back in high school — well, most of us did — but why dredge up the past as if it were something more tangible than memories of back seats and senior proms? Why not learn to deal with wrinkles and responsibilities of what lies beyond graduation?

Still, she was right. I had been to better parties. As long as she was the one drinking and driving down memory lane, I decided I'd go along for the ride.

"I remember once my boyfriend — he was my boyfriend at the time, but we broke up two months later, after I found out he was sleeping with a cheerleader — he and me and a bunch of our friends got about six cases of beer and headed to an old cabin out in the woods," she told me.

"It was great. My friend Sheila drank so much she puked at least five times that night. But she kept coming back for more."

COMMENTARY

She said this with obvious pride, as if her friend was a woman to be admired. As I watched her eyes loll around in their sockets and her knees wobble in her tight jeans, I felt something much less than admiration. I felt pity.

"Then, I don't know, about 2 a.m. or so, someone pulls a big joke and lights the cabin on fire while we're in it!

"We managed to put the fire out. God! Imagine a bunch of drunken kids running around trying to start a bucket brigade!"

Hysterical laughter. It was the laughter of a vain woman who couldn't accept the face she saw in the mirror every morning.

"And then there was the time me and Danny — Danny was my boyfriend for six months — drove over to Nevada during one spring break.

"Danny's older brother in Reno bought us some booze, and we got so blasted! We started drinking at 10 in the morning on Monday and didn't stop till it was time to go back Friday..."

She gave a sharp yelp and jumped, as if she had been zapped in the backside with 40 volts.

"Rick," she said, slapping the man with the intoxicated, dull eyes standing behind her, "if you do that one more time I'm gonna kick your ass."

★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ YEAR OF THE WOMAN ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★ ★
PRO CON

An idea that's overdue, or a way to waste time and money?

The media have proclaimed 1992 "The Year of the Woman." I only have one question: What took so long?

Ok, I lied. I have another question: Why limit it to just one year?

This election year is the one where women are supposed to flex their political and social muscle to make the world a better place. Like housewives vacuum the living room, women in politics are supposed to clean up the system. It's about damn time.

For years, "women's issues" have been placed on the back burner of politics in favor of "real issues." What can be more real than reproductive freedom, family leave bills, civil rights, equal pay and the right to participate in combat? Those don't seem like ideas pulled out of a Grimm fairy tale.

It's time for women to get it together and take the reins for a while. For centuries, women have been the life-givers, the care-givers, the ones who take the boo-boos and make them better and the ones who keep the homes running smoothly.

If a woman can run a house, why shouldn't women run the House? Let women turn their expertise in making everything better to the national agenda. They certainly can't do any worse than the men have been doing.

Think of the many fine things brought to us by men in this century: World War I, World War II, the Korean War, the Vietnam War, Desert Storm, the S&L crisis, Watergate, Iran-contra, Jimmy Swaggart, Randall Terry, The 700 Club, Charles Manson, Joseph McCarthy and the anti-christ himself, Ronald Reagan.

Men have run the show since the beginning of time and what do we have to show for it? Bombs that can wipe out the world, chemical dumping, raging inflation, famine worldwide, a depleted ozone layer, chemical weapons, a substandard educational system and children blowing each other away over a pair of Air Jordans.

The men of the Republican Party have been screaming family values from rooftops and campaign stops from sea to polluted sea. If the country wants family values, let's put those in charge of child-bearing in office. Do you know what would happen?

Educational reform. Health care reform. Improved and strengthened civil liberties. Care for the elderly. A cleaner earth. Flexible work days.

And we would all be under a federal mandate to wear clean underwear before leaving the house.

The men who have been in power have focused more on building bigger bombs than building better people. Their idea of compassion is bombing a nation to set it free and to deprive people of an education to teach them the value of one.

The speeches by Pat Schroeder and Barbara Jordan at the Democratic National Convention were a sign of what is to come: women taking charge and cleaning up the mess that men left behind. That means mending fences, cleaning up the environment, sweeping the crooks out of office, shopping for a better economic plan, ironing out the rough spots in government and cooking up a real social agenda.

Even Mr. Driscoll would have to list mending, cleaning, sweeping, shopping, ironing and cooking among the desirable qualities in a woman.

The Year of the Woman. Let it reign for a lifetime.

Feminist lunatics are taking over the asylum.

The agenda underlying the women's movement in this, the year of the woman, is controlled by a powerful handful of militant feminist wackos who don't care about right or wrong, good or bad, but only who holds power.

The feminist agenda includes absolute abortion rights funded by you, lesbian rights, sexual integration of the Boy Scouts, Girl Scouts and 4-H clubs, politically correct nonsexist language, women in combat, women in the locker room and women in four-wheel drive GMCs with gun racks, mud flaps and hairy legs just to prove their equality to men.

Women constitute half the population in the land of the bra burning and home of the aborted. Appointing liberal feminists as the spokesmen (politically incorrect) for all women is unfair.

Under the liberal guise of compassion, women are running for office in record numbers. Their two-faced kindness constitutes spending your money on social programs to prove their compassion.

Rabid feminist foot soldiers, armed with footage of Anita Hill's Senate hearings and Murphy Brown's season opener, are storming the fruited plain. Like a jackhammer, the American conscience is inundated with the message: America is in a state of crisis, our nation is evil and sick, and momma is the cure.

Feminist leaders pander to the American conscience, whining women are not like men because sexist male oppression has denied them the opportunity to be, for all intents and purposes, men. They overlook the obvious, that women are not like men simply because they are not men.

Women should not seek to usurp men in politics or any other area of life. Such division is destructive and divorces men and women unnecessarily.

Men and women were created to rule in a partnership. The strengths and weaknesses of each gender are designed to force them to work together for maximum efficiency. Women and men are both gifted. Some of the gifts are different, some are the same, but all are valuable.

Lady Astor, the first woman elected to the British House of Commons, was keenly aware of the role of women in politics. In 1922 she said: "I can conceive of nothing worse than a man-governed world except a woman-governed world — but I can see the combination of the two going forward and making civilization more worthy of the name of civilization based on Christianity, not force. A civilization based on justice and mercy. I feel men have a greater sense of justice and we of mercy. They must borrow our mercy and we must use their justice."

If a qualified woman is elected, then the public is served by the appointment of the best candidate. To assume, however, that women are inherently more qualified than men is sexist.

Such reverse discrimination is common in the current political climate. If anyone disagrees with feminism they are sexist. If a woman is a pro-life conservative we must assume she is either stupid, brainwashed or beaten into submission by her husband with a copy of the Republican Party platform.

With the year of the woman has come a host of "women's issues" such as abortion, children and discrimination of all types.

One percent initiative means trouble for UI

COMMENTARY

Would you like to pay $1,200 more next year to attend the University of Idaho? I don't think many of us would.

November 3 is election day and the One Percent Initiative will be on the ballot. The initiative would have a devastating impact on the university (a loss of around $10.7 million) as well as harming public education, hospitals, police, libraries, fire protection and other public services.

The initiative would limit Idaho property taxes to one percent of the property's actual market value and require that two-thirds of all those registered to vote approve special levies. The current law requires approval by only two-thirds of those voting. As a result it would be extremely difficult to pass special levies, especially in Moscow, where students register to vote then move away.

The loss of funding for the UI could have the following impact: telling 2,900 students not to come back next year unless they want to face fee increases of 96 percent; elimination of 250 jobs or a 12 percent of all staff positions or a 24 percent salary decrease for existing employees. If the initiative passes and the UI loses $10.7 million, it would have to come from somewhere. The loss in funds would have an effect on us all.

Don't forget to get registered by October 23 and vote on November 3. When you vote, remember all the devastating impacts the One Percent Initiative would have.

Amy Anderson is the ASUI president.

LETTER POLICY

The Argonaut will accept letters to the editor until noon on the day prior to publication. They must be limited to two double spaced typed pages in length. For subjects requiring greater exposition, arrangements must be made with the editor.

Letters must be signed in ink and include the name, address, student identification number or driver's license number, and phone number of the writer. For multiple-authored letters, the above information will be required for each writer. Proof of identity will be needed at time of submission. Letters received by mail will not be run unless confirmation of authorship is made. Names of writers will not be withheld.

Letters may be edited for length, mechanical errors and spelling errors. The Argonaut reserves the right to refuse to publish any letter.

Prodigal brother will come home

COMMENTARY
BY BRANDY
CORGATELLI

He's an 18-year-old high school drop-out.

He's jobless and homeless. Sometimes a car seat is the softest place he can find to lay his head at night.

The story is a sad one, even if you don't know the guy. My heart aches because he's my kid brother Jed.

I grew-up with Jed. I laughed at his strange sense of humor. It was so subtle that our brother Blake often couldn't fathom the depths of Jed's humor.

I cried often with Jed. He suffered more from cruel childhood teasing than most. He talked to himself and stayed inside of himself so he was a big target for abuse.

As he got older, some slight sparks of misbehavior flickered in his personality. No one foresaw the flames of trouble those small sparks would ignite.

Not turning in homework led to skipping classes, then eventually to quitting school altogether. At home, talking back to Mom led to an occasional physical confrontation with her. He finally left home entirely.

After spending months at a time away, he's come back home to live twice. Each time he returns home, we celebrate. Each time he leaves we grieve, pray and mostly hope.

Jed may not represent all the homeless people on our streets, but I know there must be some like him. Homeless who have families with the resources to take care of them. Those families are waiting, just like my family is waiting. We want Jed to return like the prodigal son.

The prodigal son came back repentant. He recognized both his mistakes and the misery caused by squandering his money on loose living. He decided he'd had enough of those mistakes and the misery. He returned to his family a new man; a man willing to shed the skin of wrong behavior and work at improving his life.

Jed is suffering now like the prodigal son suffered. The prodigal son longed to eat the pods he was feeding to the pigs. Jed is now eating almost equally as poorly and rarely.

Seeing Jed suffer stinks. I know it's even harder on my mom than on me. I shiver every time I think of him and what he's going through. It hurts knowing he is living like this.

Yet my family continues to have hope. I constantly have to remind myself how the story of the prodigal ends. Suffering forced him to recognize his wrong lifestyle and decide to come home. Maybe this could happen to Jed if he suffers enough.

It is necessary for Jed to momentarily suffer. If Jed doesn't lose the things that are

LETTER TO THE EDITOR

Keller and O'Brien deserve respect

Editor;

To the uninformed, Doug Taylor's commentary on the "controversy" surrounding Idaho track coach Mike Keller having his pay docked while away with decathlon world champion and world-record holder Dan O'Brien, appears reasonable. However, to those who have even the slightest grasp of the facts, Taylor's article reads as little more than a concoction of speculation and bias.

It seems in a sense that Taylor failed before he began. What kind of journalist does not contact the subject of his article in order to let them present their case? A bad one, particularly when he chooses second-hand information and speculation as the basis of his attack. To deal with specifics: Keller does spend time away with O'Brien during his 10 month contract. This however, is more than made up for by the unpaid hours he spends at his desk working during the summer months and overtime. Moreover, much of the time Keller is away, the UI is directly benefitting in terms of public relations and recruiting power. Taylor's sarcastic remarks about the money Keller is "hauling in" from Reebok bear little resemblance to reality. The exact figure he receives is paltry in comparison to his wages as a coach.

If the proof of the pudding is in the eating, then Keller's record as coach places his commitment to the University beyond reproach. Last year, with less scholarships available to him than most of his Big Sky Conference rivals, Keller's teams finished second in indoor conference, and would have matched this position outdoors were it not for a relay disqualification.

Furthermore, I wonder if Taylor appreciates the repercussions of O'Brien's success? Away from the insularity of the Palouse not many have heard of Idaho, and those who have tend to associate the state with potatoes and racists. In Dan O'Brien Idaho has a player on the world sporting stage who dispels these negative myths. He is of mixed race, charismatic and personable — a perfect antidote to outsiders' ignorance. In fact, the University, Moscow and Idaho itself could hardly ask for more in terms of positive publicity. Therefore it seems unfortunate that Taylor chooses to allow his own narrow-minded bias cloud his perception of a situation which he failed to investigate thoroughly.

—Mark Olden

important to him; a home, time with family, a car and so on, he would continue his lack of effort indefinitely.

So far, it hasn't gotten bad enough or been long enough for Jed to decide to change. It's hard waiting. But I am willing to wait 10 more years if necessary. We won't ask him to come home because lasting change will come only by a decision of his own.

It is hard to say, but I want Jed to experience this hardship. I don't like it, but hardship seems necessary to motivate a change.

What I'm asking from the rest of the world is that no one make life easy for Jed. I don't want a relative to take him in and let him live the easy life, with no effort on his own part to hold a job or finish school. I certainly hope the government doesn't make it easy for him, either. Handouts from them won't encourage him to change or better himself.

Besides, my family is ready to help him anytime he asks. We'll accept him back as many times as he comes. We'll believe him when he says he'll stick to school or his job.

If it doesn't work out, we won't hold it against him. We'll welcome him back each time believing him sincere, until he is sincere. The immediate family is where help from Jed should come from anyway.

So all you government people out there, if you see Jed or someone like him suffering on the streets then have pity on him, but don't make life easier on him because he's about to come home.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Tax initiative does have merit

Editor;

I hope this letter might relax the tightened nerves of those critics who believe that passing the One Percent Initiative only spells disaster for this university and the many state services funded by the property tax. This letter is especially in response to Tanya Madison's editorial in the September 29 Argonaut.

Madison fears that graduation might become difficult because of an unavailability of classes. The tax cut (fortunately) is not going to be met with an equal cut in spending — the well will be lowered but the same amount of water will be consumed — only it will be filled from other sources. Namely, students might see an increase in tuition (Madison claims our tuition "will rocket into the stratosphere faster than the space shuttle.") to help rectify the missing income tax revenue. But most likely the state government will turn other springs to meet the education and service requirements of the state.

Why should a student opt for a law that might increase tuition? The answer is simple. If we look to the many rapidly growing tourist towns in our state (i.e., Ketcham and McCall) property values are increasing at a rate that is far exceeding an increase in income. With property increasing in value at over 30 percent (McCall), homeowners are struggling to pay exorbitant taxes. In other words, the only people that are becoming capable to live in these places are from out of state, i.e. California, where the salaries are proportional to their cost of living, not ours. This forces local residents — residents who have spent their lives raising families in these once rural areas — to pack up and move.

Examples can be seen in Colorado. Elderly couples have been forced from Vail because they were unable to meet the rising property taxes. Examples can be seen in Ketcham. People have been bought out and now live in neighboring areas. Because the discovery of our state can't be fought, the only way to help local residents is to lower the cost of owning homes in their hometowns. Few facts can build strong opinions and unfortunately, people have only been hearing about a possible tuition increase — I thought it was time to tell the other side.

—David Kirk

Criticism of Quayle is unwarranted

Editor;

Recently there seems to be more criticism of Dan Quayle than usual. From the press, from the media, every time one turns around there seems to be someone mocking Quayle on television or in the newspaper. Okay, okay, so sometimes he seems to ask for it. He stuck his foot in his mouth over the potato thing and then of course there is the Murphy Brown incident that produced such a media circus.

The thing is, Dan Quayle is our vice president, he isn't supposed to make lots of noise, especially in a campaign year. Like a good little V.P. he is supposed to sit in the background and be content to study the president in hopes of aspiring to the same position four years down the road. Or so most people think.

Quayle, however, seems to have different ideas. He's out there stirring things up. He almost single-handedly made family values a campaign issue. He taught America that it is still a free country and you can spell potato anyway you want to. Alright, maybe that's stretching it. The point is, he's out there and he says what he believes is right. Though he may not be the most graceful public official in front of the cameras, he is one of the most candid, and somehow you know he isn't lying to you when he does speak up (at least from his viewpoint). You don't have to like everything he says, but you got to respect the guy for saying what he thinks on the issues, the media be damned. Truth is, I'd be wary of any politician where I agree with them on even half the issues, much less on all the issues.

It is very refreshing to have a politician not suck up to the media for brownie points. Hell, he might even make a good president one day! He is pretty good with furthering American foreign policy (in case you haven't checked his off-camera record), and at least you can be pretty sure where he stands on the issues.

—Hank E. Smith

Typical men respond to 'dating tips'

Editor;

Gather around folks. I am now going to give you a free tour of how men responded to Tanya Madison's column in the October 2 Argonaut; taken from "The Woman's Handbook."

Those who question my expertise can put their doubts to rest. This letter is the result of an informal survey of five men on my hall. Men that you would meet on the street, or in the park, not newspaper editors that we would never meet in our lives in the first place.

Read on, if you care.

Ways to ensure that women will continue to piss men off:

- Complain about your PMS cycle. Then, to make an even bigger statement, attempt to belittle the male point of view by adding that "men just would never understand the hell women have to go through." I'm sorry ladies, but in case you haven't noticed, men have something called "testicles." When you reach the average male height, table corners become your worst nightmares. I am quite sure that this everyday situation men deal with quite balances the 28 day cycle you have to deal with.

- Assume that men wear bikini underwear only for females. It probably never occurred to women that some men just can't deal with that "hanging feeling." If the case is that men would wear that type of thing merely for the purpose of attracting a female, then by the same token I must then state: sorry ladies, Spandex is a privilege, not a right.

- Answer a male's question of "would you like to dance?" with a totally unjustified retort of "I'm sorry, but I decided when I say you walk in to renew my vow of celibacy." Men just love these sorts of insults to their existence, and it furthers their belief that somewhere out there, there exists a woman that is merely humane.

- Show up to a male's room totally smashed, and proceed to throw up all over his couch. Men just love cleaning up a woman's lunch ... yesterday's, that is. Oh, throwing up all over the drapes is a big plus also.

I find this whole thing very humorous. I do not play "urinal hockey," I do not give "armpit serenades," nor do I play "divide and conquer" at a bar. In fact, I believe myself to be politically-liberal-heterosexual-romantic-literate-well-mannered-sweet-funny, etc. etc. etc. I also believe that the fact that you seem to run into these people more than I do should tell you that maybe, just maybe, you are looking in the wrong areas for the type of guy you are looking for. If you are looking to get your teeth cleaned, you don't go to the gynecologist.

I also find it fitting that the five women surveyed proposed to purchase a bitch in place of a man. Birds of a feather, I guess.

MORE LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

It's time for a change

Editor;

I quit voting two elections ago, because I was disgusted about the lack of worthwhile candidates to vote for. While it may be true that the current selection of candidates leaves a lot to be desired, I've had a change of heart about voting. The motivating force behind this decision is the importance of voting for the opponent of the self-avowed education, environmental, no-new-taxes, but in fact the anything-but-the-truth president.

If the lies propagated from the Oval Office weren't enough to reignite my desire to vote, then perhaps living under the leadership of a president who prefers oil wars to wars on poverty would. Of course, there's always the asinine comments of the single-mother-bashing vice president to mandate my trip to the polls.

It would be a refreshing change to have leaders who would invest their energy in the economic crisis at home rather than investing it in concern over Tanya Tucker's marital status, or the Simpson's lack of family values. With the middle class sagging toward poverty, and an increasing number of people being devoured by the self-perpetuating welfare machine, the creation and implementation of an effective domestic policy must become first on the national priority list. For these reasons, this single mother plans to vote against Bush on election day.

Sadly, I can only hope the next president will be better. Nevertheless, I know this one couldn't have been worse.

—Chareen Huff

More reaction to 'tips'

Editor;

In response to Tanya Madison's column "Dating tips for morons" in the October 2 Argonaut, I'm going to step out of my persona as "Mr. Politically-liberal-heterosexual...." To speak like a moron, it sounds like you and the five females you "interviewed" are bitches. Perhaps you attract morons as a result.

Wake up and smell the roses. Learn what it means to be human, instead of simply female, before you attempt to analyze your relational woes. Perhaps then you will receive some real roses to smell.

—Dave McLean

Avoid hasty judgment of mother

Editor;

When I read the article about the dead baby found in a dumpster at a UI residence hall, I felt the same horror most people must have felt.

This was not as a completely isolated event as many people might think. I seem to remember a similar event on the Palouse several years ago, as well as actually knowing a woman who gave birth herself in a bathroom, without anyone realizing she had even been pregnant.

Before dismissing the woman as a psycho murderess, perhaps people should ask themselves why this young woman felt compelled to discard and/or destroy her baby.

She must have had serious emotional problems, i.e., a deep shame and denial of her sexuality, as well as a terrible fear of rejection and humiliation that prevented her from seeking help.

Before you judge her, ask yourself if you are not one of the same moralists who condemn a woman for being pregnant out of wedlock, and that trying to understand the reasons why is the best way to avoid tragedies like this in the future.

—Heidi Holbrook

Religious issues do have significance

Editor;

I have just read, in the October 2 Argonaut, a very sad excuse for a rebuttal of Roy Hunt's letter (Argonaut, Sept. 18). Bruce Wollenberg, can I ask a simple question? Where and when did you talk to the philosopher Ninian Smart? Or did you actually — perish the thought — read that quote? It couldn't have come from a text, could it? Certainly not a text that wasn't written in your living room so as not to be imported.

As for your "intra-religious squabbling," you may be enlightened to discover that all your "genuinely important issues" are fundamentally related to religion. Without a supreme being to set the rules there would be no right and wrong. There would be no questions asked about abortion, homosexuality or draft evasion. Your "important issues" would be reduced to your favorite expression, "pathetic blather." Why? Because you would look to yourself for answers. Man would evolve into a form that resists AIDS. You wouldn't particularly care what others thought. In order to survive, one must always look after numero uno.

Where would debate be if there was only one side, that of: "Who gives a big rip?" However, your opinion is understandable. Since you don't hold with religion, you must believe in the only alternative: evolution (which is, by the way, a religion in itself).

Therefore, you are a product of chance, which means that your brain is also a product of chance. So your thoughts are long, complicated strings of chances with fantastically remote odds, with an occasional mutation thrown in for good measure. If this is the case, we should be glad our community is doing as well as it is.

Rick grinned and groped for her butt again. He was drunker than she, so she had no problem fending him off. She gave him a playful poke in the groin. When he laughed, part of his beer sloshed onto the floor. He wobbled in the general direction of the bathroom.

She watched Rick disappear, then turned to me and continued her story. "On the way back, Danny got pulled over for speeding by a Nevada cop — you know, one of those guys with the mirrored shades and the caterpillar moustache. The cop knew Danny was buzzing, and he could probably smell the liquor on his breath, but we had dumped all the empties out the window about an hour before, so we figured we were safe.

"The cop kept looking in the back seat, but Danny talked his way through all the questions. His license and registration were all okay — it was his parents' car, anyway — so the cop just wrote out a ticket, handed it to Danny and walked away.

"When we took off again and the cop was out of sight, Danny looked at the ticket, then looked at me, then looked back at the ticket and threw it out the window. The great part is I don't think his parents ever found out."

She took another long sip of beer. "He was so cool, you know?"

We slept together a lot, but we had fun other ways too."

She looked around at the other partiers in various stages of inebriation, then started talking about how hot and stuffy it was inside the house, and how it would be great to go for a walk in the cool evening air.

Then, through tired eyes camouflaged by makeup, she gave me a look — that look. I shifted uncomfortably in my Reeboks and dropped my gaze to the floor.

She said she needed another beer. I smiled and told her I'd be anxiously awaiting her return. When she left I snuck through the crowd of revellers and out to my truck. In a few seconds, the smell of smoke and warm beer had disappeared like a nightmare that dissipates at first morning light.

Sobriety, I decided, can have its benefits.

We are told men have no business meddling in these arenas. What, then, are men's issues? How about business, athletics and the military? Conversely, is it reasonable to expect women to sit down and shut up when these issues arise? Certainly not.

While women's studies professors are dumbfounded at the prospect, the year of the woman has alienated intelligent and active conservative women. Conservative women want a greater voice in politics to protect family values and the unborn.

Many women are happily married and pride themselves in being good mothers and wives.

Though not politicians, they are transforming the nation by anchoring their families in an increasingly hostile world. It is tragic we devote a year to high profile women in the limelight while neglecting the woman in the trenches doing thankless jobs for the forgotten institution of family.

Homemakers are pressured by friends and feminist ideals to send their kids to day care and get a job. They have a tremendously difficult job without breaks, time off or respect in our dual income world.

Indeed these women are more deserving of the political and media hype. They understand a welfare check is not a father and day care is not a mother. They, unlike their illegitimate feminist sisters, are part of the solution. In their honor, a year should be devoted to mothers and wives.

Mark Driscoll is the opinions editor of the Washington State University Evergreen.

>DEWEY from page 8

The Associated Press sent out a story about how hopeless the election is for Bush. Rolling Stone put Clinton on its cover and ran the contents of a round table discussion between Clinton, P.J. O'Rourke, William Greider, and Doctor/Man of the Cloth Hunter S. Thompson, in which the interviewers did everything short of giving the governor of Arkansas the oath of office. Any television newscaster would give away their World Series tickets in an even swap for a one day ride on the Democrats Magic Bus. And we thought Ted Kennedy knew how to party.

So far he's done everything right. Probably his biggest asset in this political "year of the woman" is Hilary Clinton, the one we all secretly wish could run. She's smarter than her husband, and a better strategist.

While the Republicans and their family values were watching too much TV, she bit the bullet in front of the entire nation and stood by her husband. Bill Clinton started out on second base while the other four Democrats were arguing about who was on deck. Besides, she's sort of attractive, in a disappointed schoolmarm kind of way.

The pre-planned spontaneity of his bus trips has left the vicious Republican Machine sputtering in first gear. He deflects all their attacks beautifully. It used to be that George Bush would call his opponent a Dick. The news media would get hold of it and say "this just in: George Bush's opponent is a Dick." Joe Average American would hear that, and because it was on the news think it was true.

But now Clinton's people find out what Bush said before it goes out over the airwaves. Clinton goes out and says: "My opponent may call me a Dick, but it's not true. I'm a Bill and I'm an American. And Americans are sick of Bush telling them who they are and aren't and what they can and can't do. We're not taking it anymore."

Then he curls his lip, swivels his pelvis and leaves the stage with a vaguely familiar: "Thank you very much."

The news media gets hold of it and say "this just in: Bush accuses Clinton of not being an American." Joe Average American hears this and wonders who that SOB Bush thinks he is.

Bill Clinton is easily the front runner going into Sunday's debates, but I've got three things to say to anyone in the Bill-Clinton-Is-Already-President club: Dan O'Brien, the '69 Baltimore Orioles and Thomas Dewey.

Everyone knows how Moscow resident Dan O'Brien, easily the world's best decathlete, was already Olympic champion ... until he failed to qualify. The Baltimore Orioles were already the 1969 World Series Champs ... until they played the Miracle Mets.

That leaves Thomas Dewey. In a year where both parties are trying to lay claim to the ghost of Harry Truman, everyone seems to have forgotten the 1948 presidential election and what made Thomas Dewey famous.

He was President once ... until the votes were counted.

It looks like the time has come to defend the Detroit Lions in print. These guys are rebounding from three crushing tragedies that would have leveled most people. All their losses have been close.

You can believe that a team with Coach Wayne Fontes, who's on the field every time a player is injured, the sheer ability of Barry Sanders, the determination of Rodney Peete, and the courage of Chris Spielman is going to turn the corner soon.

UI HOMECOMING PAST AND PRESENT, A LOOK BACK

By KIM BLEDSOE
Staff Writer

Since its beginning in 1921, Homecoming at the University of Idaho has seen many traditions come and go. Looking back at the past 71 years of Homecoming celebrations, it's easy to see the changes that have helped to create the traditions at the UI today. Here are just a few Homecoming facts and points of interest compiled from previous Argonaut issues:

Traditionally, the highlight of Homecoming has been the big football game. In 1921, 6,000 football fans attended the first Homecoming game in which Washington State College, what we now fondly know as WSU, defeated UI by 20-3. At that time, there was not a Kibbie Dome and games were played at the outdoor McLean Stadium.

Homecoming activities included a women's "serpentine" through all the men's living groups, a pajama parade through the town and around campus, and a rally followed by the bonfire.

It wasn't until 1925 that Homecoming became a major function for the UI campus. Living groups and other campus buildings were decorated using the Homecoming theme, and awards were given out to the group with the best decorations.

Homecoming hasn't always been full of warm, sunny days. Back in 1938, probably the coldest Homecoming game took place when the Vandals played the Cougars on a field covered with several inches of snow. This didn't deter the game, although it most likely aided in the Vandals' defeat.

One of UI's favorite traditions, the bonfire, was outlawed in 1935 when a large group of male freshmen constructed a 50-foot stack of "rubbish," at least that's what most people thought it was, and set it on fire. Apparently, UI officials weren't too pleased to discover that six trucks had been "confiscated to make a bonfire to end all bonfires." This resulted in a large expense for the UI and consequently, the end of the Homecoming bonfire—at least for awhile. Fireworks at the McLean Stadium replaced the tradition.

During the war years, Homecoming was put on the back burner. House decorations and fireworks were eliminated after the last pre-war Homecoming in 1941, and activities were cut to a minimum. In 1943 and 1944, Homecoming itself was altogether discontinued when there was no football team because of World War II. However, by 1945 the football team was revitalized by the influx of war veterans enrolled at UI.

It wasn't until 1946 that the Homecoming parade was born, and it has since become a major part of Homecoming.

Post-war attendance has broken all records for Idaho Homecoming games. In 1947, 23,500 fans attended the Idaho/WSU game becoming the largest crowd ever to gather in the state of Idaho before that time.

Welcome back to the class of 1952, who will be celebrating their 40-year reunion, and the class of 1967 who will be celebrating their 25-year reunion.

The first Homecoming game played at the Kibbie Dome was in 1976.

A record of wins and losses in UI Homecoming games since 1921 shows that the Vandals have won 30, lost 35 and have tied twice. Hopefully we'll be able to put another mark in the "win" column after this weekend.

Good luck Vandals, and welcome back alumni!

Floats, Festivities And Fanfare

Students, town people, and alumni lined the streets of Moscow and packed Neale Stadium Saturday to watch the annual Homecoming parade and the battle of the Palouse. Even rain failed to dampen the Idaho spirit, and the 1951 Homecoming goes on record as one of the most successful in years.

Some 60 entries from the University and Moscow participated in the giant parade, thrilling the spectators with beauty and novelty. During the half-time intermission winning floats were displayed before the 14,000 game spectators. Shown above (top photo) from left to right are three of the prize winning floats: Men's first place winner, the Fiji cake; men's second place winner, "The Little Train That Could" by the Delts; and the women's first place winner, a Kangaroo, entered by Delta Gamma. Second place winner in the women's division was the Kappa State of Idaho Map.

1966 Homecoming Queen Pat McCollister, Houston, being escorted by University Alumni President William Campbell.

SIX TRUCKS HAUL RUBBISH TO FRESHMAN BONFIRE

The following article is an excerpt from the 1935 Homecoming edition.

Freshmen were putting finishing touches on the towering bonfire heap, as the Argonaut went to press today. Six heavy trucks have zoomed steadily to and from the bonfire site west of the cavalry barns since 3:30 p.m. yesterday.

Receiving its annual "freshman cleanup," Moscow and its surrounding territory has presented Kenneth Anderson, the bonfire chairman, and his cohorts with enough rubbish to build a string from here to Pullman, the home of the Cougar; but still the frosh have had to delve into every gully in the Palouse country, ransack every chicken-coup in the Inland Empire in order to pry out enough "junk" to pile up a huge oil-drenched, kerosene-coaked heap.

Over 50 feet in height, this year's bonfire concoction stands nearly 20 feet higher than the fine accomplishment of the class of '38. A sophomore "Tarzan," who climbed last year to the top of the center pole in the bonfire framework and hooked the lifting pulley, tried to shinny up this year's big stack but despaired of the task long before he reached the top and scuttled down again-fatigued.

Around the bonfire the freshman will station their fiercest sentinels armed with lighted torches to prevent the over anxious rooters from setting the mass on fire until after all the ralliers have reached the scene from the Torchlight-Noise parade.

Not definitely decided, the notable who lights the fire will probably be President M. C. Neale or a distinguished guest of the University.

Can the Cougar scent the smoke?

"You Can't Take It With You" opens next Thursday.

World's free of inhibitions in Grandpa's abode

"Life's pretty simple if you just let it come to ya," declares Grandpa from the theatre production "You Can't Take It With You."

However, life in Grandpa's household is anything but simple. Beginning Oct. 15, the University of Idaho Theatre Arts Department intends to show people just how un-simple life is in Grandpa Martin Vanderhof's home.

To walk into the Vanderhof's abode is to walk into a world free of inhibitions. Where else can one find a mother writing plays while her husband blows up firecrackers in the basement and her daughter dances around like a ballerina? Add to this a musical background by the son-in-law on the xylophone, a daughter who is going nuts from it all, and we see a comical tale which has made "You Can't Take It With You" an American classic.

Not all is fun and games however. When Tony Kirby, son of a rich millionaire, falls in love with Alice--the "orthodox" daughter, a different sort of family enters the scene. The Kirbys are rich, pompous... and dull. When Tony "accidentally" brings his parents to the Vanderhof home on the wrong night, some rather surprising developments result.

And what is Grandpa doing through all of this? Avoiding the income tax collector.

Directed by Fred Chapman of the UI Theatre Department, "You Can't Take It With You" reveals the hilarious yet moving portrayal of life with its accompanying joys and woes-- a tale not to be missed.

Showtime for "You Can't Take It With You" is 8 p.m. Oct. 15-17 and Oct. 22-24 in the UI Hartung Theatre. Additional matinee performances run Oct. 18 and 25 at 2 p.m. Tickets are now available at Ticket Express in the UI SUB for $8- adults, $7- seniors and $5- students.

Platform: music on the rise

Review by Tracie Bruno, Lifestyles Editor

Jelly's Last Jam stars Gregory Hines and is based on the life of the self-proclaimed innovator of jazz Jelly Roll Morton.

Almost a decade in the making, Jelly's Last Jam proved to be well worth the wait garnering unanimous rare reviews from New York theater critics. Within weeks of opening on Broadway last spring, it had already been honored with six Drama Desk Awards and the most Tony Award nominations - 11 - winning three including Best Actor in a Musical for Gregory Hines and Featured Actress in a Musical for Tonya Pinkins.

Lisa Cortes, Vice President, A&R for Mercury, knew the day after it opened she wanted to do the cast recording, even though she said there was a risk involved. "It's an atypical, black Broadway musical. The hero is an anti-hero. A lot of people didn't know how this was going to go over because this is not the usual fodder that people who patronize Broadway are accustomed to."

Cortes said the hardest part was condensing a musical over two hours long into 73 minutes to give the listener the essence of the show by retaining examples of all the musical styles covered. "We're talking 40 years of all these different forms that raised their heads and developed, an incredible evolution of music. Before Jelly, the only indigenous sort of black music was the field chants and spirituals. This is the growth of a totally non-religious based music, the growth of a more popular music. It demonstrates the expansion and fertility of African-American music in just the 20th century."

The 22 pieces of music and dialogue on the original Broadway cast recording range from the cocky "In My Day" to the prim and proper "The Creole Way" and the bawdy blues of "Michigan Water." "Something More" recounts the good-natured, pool hustling, picaresque life Jelly led with his buddy Jack after the Morton family banished him from hanging out with "Negroes" and musicians.

A music lesson about the new style is even included in "That's How You Jazz." The ingredients for "Sweet Papa Jelly's Jazz?" A "low down foundation, some synca syncopation and a bluesy variation." Stir in some "creole curleyques, add some street rag razz-a-matazz, and that's how we jazz."

The geographical impact on music is dramatized as Jelly moves from Chicago to New York and discovers bebop is the new sensation. By the time his musical odyssey comes to an end in L.A., back home in New Orleans, swing is already being ushered in with "It's Too Late, Daddy."

"It deals with African-American issues and doesn't find us happy and dancing all of the time," Gregory Hines said.

King Brothers home for Homecoming

The King Brothers are back. Despite their farewell show held at the end of August, the brothers are getting back together tonight at the Beanery to do some jamming.

"We thought we'd get together for Homecoming and do a gig for old time's sake," Gregg said. The acoustic guitar duo is made up of brothers Brent and Gregg King. The reason for the breakup in August was because Brent graduated from law school at the University of Idaho, and moved to Boise to seek employment.

Gregg said Brent passed the bar exam, and is now looking for work, making now the perfect chance to come to Moscow and hold a reunion concert.

Gregg has continued with his career as an accountant with the Community Action Center in Pullman.

The brothers have been playing together since high school. Gregg said his family is extremely unmusical, so Brent took guitar lessons while Gregg watched and learned from him.

Since then, the King Brothers have played at almost every bar in Moscow including M.J. Barleyhoppers, Mingle's, The Beanery, John's Alley and even at Pete's and the Hilltop in Pullman. They've also played everything from the Renaissance Fair to Friendship Square for Farmer's Market in Moscow. They've also made appearances in Boise at Grainey's and Pengully's.

Gregg plays guitar and banjo, and Brent plays acoustic and electric if the song calls for it. Both of the brothers do vocals.

Since Brent has been gone, Gregg has continued playing around Moscow with some other people. He has played with Jim LaFortune at the Coffeehouse open-mike night presentation, and also at the Beanery.

"I've been doing some more folk, using more banjo and learning the blues," Gregg said.

The King Brothers music ranges all the way from their own original tunes to sounds from Tesla, America, the Eagles and even George Jones.

At the concert tonight, the King Brothers may have accompaniment from Jim LaFortune and Jeff Holman from Lewiston. Some other artists have also been invited to show up on stage.

The show will be held tonight at the Beanery on Main and 6th Streets. It will begin at 7 p.m. and last until 9 or 9:30 p.m. The admission is free.

General receives award

By CHRIS MILLER
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho Alumni Association will present Brigadier General John O. Gray with the University Award during the luncheon prior to the UI-Idaho State football game as part of Homecoming Weekend.

Retired from active duty, General Gray graduated from UI in 1941 and has served three times as executive director of the 200,000 member International Air Force Association. He was twice called back from retirement to the top post.

Philip Kleffner, Director of Alumni Relations, said General Gray has done a lot of alumni service in the nation's capital. "The University Award is given by the university to outstanding citizens in recognition of their accomplishments. This year it's a china plate with the university seal," Kleffner said.

Gray's honors include the U.S. Air Force Exceptional Service Award, the Gen. Jimmy Doolittle fellowship, Legion of Merit, Bronze Star and the Army Commendation Medal.

Gen. Gray spoke Thursday to Chrisman Battalion ROTC students. Gen. Gray warned students not to "sit back and rest on our laurels and think everything is beautiful, because it really isn't." He then cited a principle of Russian Military philosophy which says the military will continue to research and develop new weapons despite a crumbling economy. Future wars will be fought primarily with conventional weapons, but will not rule out limited use of nuclear warheads. He also mentioned the Gulf War as an example of regional conflicts. However, he said that the potential for global conflict was fairly remote.

Gray also spoke of the importance of leadership. "In an age of computers, you still can't program leadership... but you can develop it. A leader is best when people barely know he exists," he said.

Chrisman Battalion presented Gen. Gray with a battalion T-shirt for when he goes "jogging along the Potomac."

Local artist discovers inspiration for her art work at pow-wows

By ELIZABETH POWELL
Contributing Writer

Images of ceremonial art fill the rear room of the Inner Vision Bookstore, where the paintings by Deborah Lockett are being exhibited throughout the month of October.

Lockett has lived in Washington state for seven years and recently graduated from WSU with a B.A. in fine arts.

"I was raised in Arizona which attributes to the fact that I use a lot of Southwestern influence in my art. I've painted for years, since I was eight, and I started showing my work about a year before I went to WSU," Lockett said. "When I began to get recognition for my work, I started to think that maybe I could paint."

Lockett's paintings center around the Native American myth and tradition. "I hope when people view my work that they will see the different spirit forces in each piece. Most of my work deals with the spirit force of the elements. Each painting has a unique force--rain, wind, sky," Lockett said. She said each force in turn has a different spirit that she tries to capture. "For me, it's not necessarily what you see in a painting, but what you feel that is important," Lockett contends.

About her future plans, Lockett said she was going to try to get into as many shows as she can. "My next paint project will focus around the Native American dancers," Lockett said she likes to go to the pow-wows because that's where she gets her inspiration--from the dance.

"The thing that strikes me about her paintings is the energy and vividness of her art. The images are electric," said Nancy Gung, hostess of the exhibit.

Lockett's art may be seen Tuesday through Saturday 10 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. at the Inner Vision Bookstore. "I want people to feel a different level of awareness when viewing my art. It speaks of spiritual mysteries which I hope to capture in art."

Inner Vision Bookstore is located at 118 East Third Street in Moscow.

Why women are waiting...

TANYA MADISON

"We need more female architects," said the dignified gray-haired lady in the black cashmere coat. "Then this wouldn't be a problem."

The problem was a line that snaked out the door of the ladies room at the Spokane Opera House and halfway around the building.

"I think it is some kind of plot," said another lady, while hopping from foot to foot. "This is just another example of how women aren't equal in this society."

I stopped and thought about the conversation I had just overheard. I had plenty of time to stop and think because I aged a decade before I was able to use the necessary facilities. I decided those women were right.

But of course, I knew I would need some hard evidence before I could bring my case to the reading public. Cries of sexism in the potty aren't likely to be taken seriously without some cold, hard, porcelain statistics to back me up.

So I asked my friend of the male persuasion how many human waste receptacles were located in the men's room. "Well," he said looking at me as if I were a few toilet paper rolls short of a dozen, "there were 10 urinals and five stalls."

I knew it. I knew it. In the ladies room there were seven stalls. That means there was a 2-to-1 advantage for men who needed to relieve themselves.

But wait, this had to be an isolated incident of gender insensitivity. This can't be the rule. So I asked one of the male editors up here to take me on the tour of the men's restroom facilities on the third floor. Lo and behold, I discovered two urinals and two stalls. The ladies room only has two stalls. Once again the 2-to-1 ratio rule reared its ugly head. (Not only that but the men's room has a window. The ladies room does not. But I think that is another column entirely.)

Think about it. At every sporting event, rock concert, bar, mall, movie theatre, lecture series and circus, there was always a line for the ladies room. There is never a line for the men's room!

What's going on here? Why is this blatant sexism being allowed to exist unchallenged? Why don't we women stand up, or rather squat, for our rights to tinkle?

I was raging about this injustice recently to a male friend who attends LCSC. He likes to think of himself as a 90s kind of guy, but he adopted a rather Stone Age attitude on this one.

"Well think about it," he said. "Urinals are smaller. They take less space. You can fit more of them in. Plus they are probably cheaper to make. So cost wise, equal amounts of money are probably spent."

I went in search of another "sensitive" male who might agree that potty power should not be limited to those with Y chromosomes. It would have been easier to locate an albino in a Coppertone Tan contest.

"If you want 10 urinals, then so be it. But I don't think you (ladies) would use them," said Enlightened Male #2. "You guys spend too much time in there anyway. We don't do our make-up at the urinal. We whizz and get out of the way. If you can learn to do the same, then have urinals put in."

"If anything you should be complaining that men don't get as many stalls as women. But then again you all have that privacy hang-up anyway," he huffed.

I have a couple of counterarguments for the above speaker.

1. I have never done my make-up while sitting on the pot. That is an odd thing to do.

2. If there were more places for women to use the bathroom, we wouldn't take so long. Saturday Night Live did a skit a few years back on why women take so long in the powder room. Lewis Grizzard wrote, "When My Love Returns From The Ladies Room, Will I Be Too Old To Care?" Well, Lewis, if your love could find a place to do her business, you would probably still be using your own teeth to chew when she returned to the table.

Obviously, justice for the squatters will be slow in coming. While the pointers make up the clutural elite, lines to the ladies room will continue to resemble the bread lines in the Soviet Union.

All I know is after I make my first million, I'm establishing a scholarship fund for female architects majoring in bathroom design. I know it won't be money flushed down the toilet.

Ridenbaugh features new show

Ridenbaugh Hall has something new for future architects. From Oct. 2 through Oct. 14, The architecture department is presenting "In the Spirit Of..." This is a showcase of 4th year architecture students and their work.

The "spirit" here is "architecture students design buildings in the mold of a famous architect," said Joanna Hayes, director of the Prichard Art Gallery in Moscow.

"There are about 30 exhibits," Hayes said. "Every year since I've been here (Hayes has been in the area for seven years) this has gone on."

The exhibit itself takes up both of Ridenbaugh Hall's showcase rooms, and consists of scale models, and drawings of potential buildings.

The plans that are on display are detailed; usually in each exhibit the fantasy building has about three floors, and each floor is detailed with everything from stairwells to windows.

So intricate are the drawings that Robbie Matthews' "Discovering a New Gaudi" is portrayed in full color. This piece especially has detail in the drawing. With measurements to the foot, it sheds a new light on architecture.

One exhibit is presented entirely on plexiglass, while Tom Ewer's work is designed with bricks.

Half of the exhibits don't have names on them, and this curious practice is taken to the extreme on one exhibit, where the only identification of the artist is his student ID number.

Ridenbaugh Hall is located across from Steel House and next to the tennis courts at the Administration Building. If there are any questions about the exhibit, the number of the Ridenbaugh Hall is 885-6043.

Garth's new album isn't ropin' the wind

By DAVID JACKSON
Contributing Writer

Most people haven't heard, but the new Garth Brooks album has slipped quietly onto record store shelves.

Despite Brooks' relatively short musical career, The Chase is his fifth album to emerge. It's selling well around the country, but so far hasn't lived up to the record sales set by his third album Ropin' the Wind. People lined up to buy his third album the second it hit the shelves last year.

However, The Chase is still taking some people by surprise. "Sales have been pretty good," said Troy Ferber, the manager of Musicland in the Palouse Empire Mall. "It's not number one yet but it's in the top 10. I don't know the exact numbers yet, but we've sold lots of them."

Brooks' record label, Liberty, echoed the statistics offered by Ferber. Liberty said advanced orders for the album exceeded the three million mark, but said no national figures for sales of The Chase are available yet.

Last year, Ropin' the Wind set a record for consecutive weeks at the number one position on the record charts. It stayed number one for 17 weeks and sold over seven million copies.

While eventually The Chase may approach the same statistics, some record buyers offered their opinion for the slow start. "I think it's a combination of the recession and the fact that there are so many new artists out there," said Phil Anselmo, a junior at the University of Idaho. "I'm buying the new one today because I knew it was coming out, but it seems like this one wasn't as hyped as the last one was."

"I didn't even know it was out yet," said Dan Lavigne, a senior at the UI. "I'll probably wait and listen to it before I get it."

Despite the poor start of The Chase, it's still selling well compared to other artists. "We're selling tons of them," said Ferber. "It may not be selling as fast as some of his others, but these are moving."

UI actors garner 16 nominations in Tinseltown

By JACKIE WOODS
Staff Writer

Hollywood has shown an interest in two University of Idaho acting students who attended the National Acting Competition Awards Monday night.

Charles 'Chas' Allan and John O'Hagan performed for approximately 125 film and television agents at an actor showcase in Beverly Hills, California.

Their director, Theatre Arts Professor Forrest Sears, who accompanied the actors down, was pleased with the results of the awards. After the 18 performance scenes were presented, agents listed their choice for best actor and best scene.

"Our two actors got 16 best actor nominations which was easily the runner up," said Sears. "It has certainly opened the doors, and they will continue to send out their resumes to all of these people, so it's just a tremendous networking opportunity."

O'Hagan agrees, "If I had spent four days down there alone, with no showcase or anything, I would have blown a heck of a lot of money and made absolutely no contacts what-so-ever."

After the show, the agents also listed the actors that they were interested in seeing, and both Allan and O'Hagan received calls on Tuesday from impressed industry people.

"I had one guy call me and actually want me to sign with them Tuesday," said O'Hagan. J.L.O. West, a smaller agency, wanted to represent O'Hagan for the television pilot season beginning in January.

"For a person in my position, a smaller agency is where I want to be because I am not being put aside by a bigger agency for someone who has a bigger name," explained O'Hagan.

Although the offer was "very tempting," O'Hagan said he will wait to return to California until after he graduates in May. In the next couple weeks, O'Hagan plans to write thank you letters to the people who showed an interest in his career, and keep them informed of his plans.

O'Hagan said he was surprised by the industry people.

"I had expected all of them to be the gold chain, open shirt, shark kind of people just looking for beautiful women and beautiful guys," said O'Hagan. "But it was not as violent an experience as I thought it was going to be. I was not insulted or cruelly rebuffed by anyone. Even when they were telling me 'I am not really interested in you,' they were very gracious about it."

John O'Hagan

Sears said they had "an incredible number of industry people" show up for the showcase, remarking that most events of this type only get about a dozen agents. O'Hagan felt the agents might have showed up out of curiosity.

"It's a very brand new idea for Hollywood to bring this much out of town talent together at the same place at one time. I think it really intrigued the industry," said O'Hagan.

The trio had an opportunity to see the industry in action while attending a taping of the comedy series Coach on Friday night. Bill Fagerbakke, who performs the role of Dober on the ABC series, and who is a former student of Sears, rolled out the red carpet for the three visitors.

"We got the VIP treatment all the way, reserved seats and our own private guard who escorted us to the sound stage," said O'Hagan.

Fagerbakke also spent time talking to them after the shoot.

"He was a very gracious, down-to-earth guy," said O'Hagan. "He gave us a lot of good advice on how to deal with the business, on how to meet and talk to people."

O'Hagan said it was a good way to see how the television industry worked on the performance side.

Sears thought watching the taping was good preparation for Allan and O'Hagan, who had to practice camera technique instead of stage technique for their Monday night performance.

"They had a kind of crash course of what these industry people were looking for in camera acting," said Sears.

He said the pair of actors tried to give the agents what they wanted by pulling back a little from their usual stage performance. Acting for the camera is often the "technique of concealing technique," said Sears.

"I was just thrilled at how responsive John and Chas were at learning that lesson so quickly. They really gave the best performance of the show that I think they've ever done," said Sears.

Summing up the opportunity, O'Hagan said both actors are now more prepared to make intelligent decisions when moving into professional acting.

"We got to experience L.A. before we had to suffer through L.A.," observed O'Hagan. "We were able to go down there for four days and find out how this industry works."

Vandals welcome ISU and globe of death

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

Tomorrow at 1:05 p.m. the No. 4 Idaho Vandals (4-0, 1-0) will lock horns with the unranked Idaho State Bengals (3-2, 1-0) in Idaho's 68th Homecoming game. Idaho leads the series 20-10, and has won four straight over the Bengals.

This year, however, ISU has a new coach, a new look, and a new philosophy on football—win games. In week two, after defeating Mesa State in their season opener 52-7, the Bengals pulled off their biggest win since their 1987 win over Idaho by beating Boise State, 24-20.

"I really think their philosophy is suited to the talent they have right now," Head Idaho Coach John L. Smith said. "He's (new ISU Head Coach Brian McNeely) got his team flying around on defense, and they believe they have a chance to win games this year."

Winning games is something that ISU couldn't do under Head Coach Garth Hall. Hall finished his three year stint at ISU 6-26-1 before the athletic department was ready for a change. Not only did ISU change their coach, but the university called the University of Miami to design their helmets in a similar fashion as the Hurricanes.

Offensively, the Bengals are led by running back Sylvester Jones. Jones was a wide receiver last season, but has been moved to the backfield for his senior year. This season, Jones is averaging 104.6 yards in five games, and has four touchdowns. With the success of Jones, Smith is anticipating ISU to stick with their running game.

"I think they're going to want to hang onto the football, and do that with their running game," Smith said. "We're going to have to step up and stop the option, and make them pass the ball."

ISU's passing game will be led by Quarterback Paul Putnam. The junior college transfer from Ricks College in Rexburg, ID has completed 24-of-57 passes for 353 yards, four touchdowns, and four interceptions. With low passing numbers for a Big Sky quarterback, Idaho's defense will look to apply pressure on Putnam all day. On their defensive line, Idaho will see the return of Defensive End Billy Sims, who has been out since the first game with a groin injury.

"Defensively we're going to try to get Billy in for some plays," Smith said. "Other than that we're healthy."

So far this year, that has been Idaho's savior. When the Vandals beat ISU last year 46-21, the win was only helpful in snapping a three-game losing streak, and help in saving a winning season. Sims is the last of four players to heal (three on defense), and is looking forward to get back on the field to contribute.

"I've just been working back into things, and I hope to be a factor. I think everybody is looking forward to the game, and taking it with that one-game-at-a-time mentality."

Offensively the Vandals have found a fine running back of their own in Sherriden May. The sophomore has rushed for 202 and 121 yards in Idaho's last two games, and is second in the Big Sky behind Jones with a 100.5 yards per game average.

"With Sherriden running the way he is, we're going to stick with him moving the ball for us on the ground," Smith said.

Quarterback Doug Nussmeier will be back at the helm for Idaho as he looks to improve on an already successful junior year. Nussmeier currently ranks 8th in the nation in passing efficiency, and third in total offense. Nussmeier's main receiver has traditionally been Yo Murphy, but he's been increasing his number of completions to Walter Saunders and Curtis Richardson. The return of Alan Allen has also given Nussmeier another target to go to. Allen played sparingly last week in Idaho's 30-7 victory over Cal State Northridge.

was also Idaho's Homecoming opponent in 1990, and Idaho won 41-20... Sports Illustrated has notified ISU concerning the Bengals new "globe of death", which is when a group of Bengals gather in a circle after receiving a kickoff, and the run in different directions leaving it up to the defense to figure out who has the ball... A crowd of 12,000-13,000 is expected for the game... Idaho will look to go 5-0 for the first time since 1905 with a win.

IDAHO INFO-- Idaho State

Family inspires Van Haverbeke

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

Joe Van Haverbeke would like to thank Tom Hilbert and the rest of the University of Idaho volleyball staff for taking good care of his daughter.

"Any dad worries about his daughter going off to college," Van Haverbeke said in a phone interview on Wednesday. "Then I realized what kind of town that Moscow is, and I knew she was going from her family here in Portland to a family in Moscow."

He is referring of course to his youngest daughter, Brittany, who is said to be one of the rising stars in the Big Sky Conference at her middle blocker position. Rising star is an understatement considering her .307 hitting percentage going into last night's match with Weber State. This number was good enough for second in the conference.

Van Haverbeke and junior middle blocker Nancy Wicks together may form the conference's most potent blocking tandem. The two are a major reason why Idaho took a 12-2 record into last night's match with Weber.

Usually freshman college athletes must go through a sort of due process for accolades to start rolling in. After all, the upperclassmen ahead of these freshman have put their time in the trenches and are well-deserving of a pat on the back. So much for the status quo.

Van Haverbeke entered Idaho as a true freshman from Lake Oswego's LakeRidge High School in 1991 and proceeded to earn a spot in the starting lineup. She finished the year as the team's leader in blocks with 124, and her average of 1.17 blocks per game placed her fifth in the conference. Her 37 service aces were second on the team and placed her sixth in the conference.

For her efforts, Van Haverbeke was named as the 1991 BSC freshman of the year, which marked the second year in a row that the award went to a Vandal freshman (Wicks was the recipient of the award in 1990).

Vandal head coach Tom Hilbert said the decision to play Van Haverbeke as a freshman wasn't that arduous of a process.

"I saw enough of her in tapes and training camp before her freshman year that I knew she would make an immediate impact," said Hilbert. "There was an instinct in her from the very beginning that no coach could teach her. She was also one of the most competitive players I've ever coached."

One of the ways in which Van Haverbeke showcased her intense competitiveness last year was a habit of pointing her fingers at opposing players after making an important kill or block. The practice infuriated a couple of coaches in the conference, who said it was blatant showboating and arrogance. Some used it as a motivational tool to fire their respective teams up for Idaho.

Van Haverbeke seemed genuinely puzzled as to why this practice would offend anyone. She said it started in her days of club ball in Portland, where she gestured towards opponents during the course of a big game or in a moment of high emotion. She conceded that it has taken a backseat this year, but she said it was a simple means by which to motivate herself and her team.

Hilbert shook his head in exasperation when reminded of the story, and said it was due to the high level of competition seen in her club ball years. He said the finger-pointing is a sign of celebration rather than taunting.

"If I have a freshman showing that kind of intensity and competitiveness, I'm not going to hold it back," said Hilbert. "I don't know of any coach that would."

Part of the fire that drives Van Haverbeke has to stem from a series of events that occurred during her sophomore year at Central High School.

Attaining a driver's license is generally a highlight for most teenagers. Although there is a

Gilbertson's return to UW highlights college football

Big conference match-ups as well as some competitive non-conference games makes week six of the college football season almost as attractive as week five was.

Starting at the top, the No. 1 Washington Huskies escaped with a win last weekend over No. 20 USC, 17-10. With a minute and a half left in the game, USC's third-string quarterback, Kyle Wachholtz, threw an interception in the endzone to end the Trojans drive, as well as their hopes of beating the Huskies for the first time in three years. This week the Huskies stay home in the rainy city to play the No. 24 California Golden Bears, who are led by a familiar face to Idaho fans.

Keith Gilbertson, who coached the Idaho Vandals from 1986-'88, and won two Big Sky titles in that span, is now the head coach for the Bears after serving as UW's offensive coordinator for three years. With Heisman trophy candidate Russell White in his backfield, Gilby will be looking to run away an eleven game Cal losing streak to the Dawgs. It won't happen as the Dawgs win their 19th in a row, 28-20.

As if last weeks No. 2-No. 3 clash in Miami between the Hurricanes and Florida State Seminoles wasn't enough excitement for the 'Canes, this week they travel up to University Park, Pennsylvania to face the No. 7 Nittany Lions of Penn State. The Lions have lost eight of 11 games at home against teams who finish in the top 10 under Head Coach Joe Paterno, and the 'Canes will be looking to continue the nation's longest winning streak of 22 games. They'll get No. 23 as they upend Paterno in another thriller, 22-20.

In another Pac-10 clash, the No. 11 Stanford Cardinal, who are coming off a 33-16 come from behind victory over the Notre Dame Fighting Irish in South Bend last week, are up against the UCLA Bruins in Los Angeles. The No. 19 Bruins, who barely avoided their first shut-out since 1971 in a 23-3 loss to Arizona last week, could be without receiver Sean LaChapelle. Regardless, Stanford is off to a 4-1 start (best since 1986) and they'll go 5-1 with a 24-14 victory.

Keeping the pace...

Grandfather's spirit pushes Slate the extra mile

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

In an age when more athletes are competing solely for personal gratification, there will always remain those few who compete because they truly love what they do.

Case in point, Robyn Slate. The junior cross-country runner at Idaho began her running career at the age of 10, and has experienced as many ups and downs in her life as the courses she's run. While growing up in Colfax, Washington, Slate was more interested in volleyball and basketball than running. As fate would have it, a birthday present from her brother made probably the second biggest impact on her life.

"My brother talked me into running my first road race when I was in the fifth grade. Running was always something he was interested in, so the summer after my sophomore year in high school he bought me a week pass to a running camp. I loved it so much I dropped out of volleyball and basketball."

Slate didn't run her first cross-country race for Colfax High until her junior year, which was the year after the camp. Getting a late start on the rest of the runners throughout the region, Slate's coach made the effort for her to gain the exposure she'd need to earn a college scholarship.

"It was good for me, especially my junior year, to attend a small high school because I needed to win races and get my confidence. During my senior year, my coach was really good about entering me in the big meets. So I actually had the best of the two in going to a small school so I could compete, but running against bigger ones."

Even with Washington State and Idaho right next door, Slate had her sights set quite a bit higher on where she'd attend college. Her brother, Kienan was attending the University of Kansas as a freshman, and coming from a tight-knit family, Slate wanted to stay close to her only sibling.

"I went to KU for a visit because my brother was going there. After I visited, I really thought I wanted to go there, but on a trip to the University of Montana following Kansas trip, I got the flu, so I decided I needed to be a close drive from home and my mom," she said with a smile.

Slate kept Idaho in the back of her mind, but more or less didn't want to attend school in Moscow. Idaho Head Coach Scott Lorek made the difference for her, though.

"When I first came to Idaho for a visit, I honestly didn't want to go. But Scott stayed with me, and wasn't pressuring me into making a decision. He just said he'd work with me to make me the best that I could be."

Lorek hasn't disappointed anyone as Slate has made an impact on the Idaho record books in just two years as a Vandal. Slate has the third best Idaho time in the indoor mile, and is the first runner to crack the top 10 in the 1,500 meters since 1988 at No. 9. This season as Idaho's No. 2 runner, Slate is constantly pushing herself for self-improvement.

"This past summer was the first summer that I really trained hard. But in my first few meets this fall I was really confused because my times were way down. Usually I peak at the beginning of the season, and then drop down a little later on. This season has been difficult because my meet times have started out slow, but my practices are getting better. At this point I feel I'm a little bit behind everybody, but I can see myself getting better."

Getting better is something that Slate didn't know she could do when faced with some physical and emotional problems not too long ago. Things got so bad that there was a point when she felt it might be time to give up running.

"I was having some physical problems last year, and I thought I was going to quit. It became more of an emotional down, and with the help of a lot of friends, and a lot of prayers I got through it."

Now back at 100-percent, Slate is enjoying her running more than ever. A nutrition major carrying a 3.54 GPA and going into dietetics, Slate has a tough time finding any free-time. When she does get a break from studying or pounding the pavement, Slate takes time to either write poetry or strum her six-string.

"When I take a break I like to get my guitar out and play a little. I can't sing worth a darn, but I sure try."

As far as having a particular goal for her success on the team, Slate is hoping to place in the top 20 women competing at the conference finals in November. Her outlook on the team is that she believes that if everyone runs well on that day, they can finish as a top-three team in the Big Sky. But after fighting through last year's experience, Slate is taking everything in stride.

"I think running is very important, but I think the times I remember the most here are the times I've spent laughing or crying with my good friends. It's so easy to get caught up in yourself running a good race, that you lose track of more important things, like seeing that last place person cut a minute off their time. At times I think I may have taken my running too seriously, and I didn't think about my friends enough. I've found out that if I spend time with my family and friends, the running will be fine."

Slate found her confidence in the family member who has made the biggest impact on her running career, her grandfather, Howard Pierce. A graduate of Abilene Christian University in Abilene, Texas, Pierce was a 400-meter runner who pushed both of his grandchildren to compete their hardest, win or lose.

"He was such an inspiration, and after every good race I'd call him up and say 'hey, guess what I did today'."

In December, though, Mr. Pierce passed away, and not only was Slate left without a loving grandfather, but a motivational coach as well. Although he was gone physically, Slate didn't let his spirit leave her.

"I p.r.'d (set a personal record) in the 1,500 in Minnesota this past spring and I wanted so bad to call him up and tell him how I did. Instead I had to say, 'this one's for you'. He was a fighter, so whenever I get down I'll always have him there with me."

A fighting, family spirit that definitely didn't skip her generation.

>GILBY from page 24

USC Quarterback Rob Johnson was asked after the UW game if he thought the Huskies were worthy of their No. 1 ranking, and he replied "Yeah, but if they're No. 1 we're in the top 10." The boys from Troy didn't move up into the top 10, but did hold onto their No. 20 ranking with a 1-1-1 record. After road games at UW, Oklahoma, and San Diego State, the Trojans play their first home game of the year against a mediocre Oregon Duck team. Look for the Trojans to even their Pac-10 mark with a 28-10 win over the quakers.

In the Big Sky, aside from tomorrow's Idaho game, the only match-up that has title implications this week is Boise State at Northern Arizona. The Broncos ducked a major bullet last week by beating Montana to avoid going 0-2 in the Big Sky, and knocking themselves out of the race. NAU fans must think it's basketball season in Flagstaff as the Lumberjacks are 2-0 in conference, and share the lead with Idaho. However, BSU has won 17 of the team's 21 meetings, and starting NAU Quarterback John Bonds is gone for the season with torn ligaments in his throwing hand. BSU keeps their slim hopes alive for their first conference title since 1980 with a 24-10 victory.

Team faces road trip

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho volleyball team appears ready to bury some ghosts that have been haunting them for a few years.

After traveling to Ogden, Utah for an Oct. 8 match with Weber State, Hilbert and his 12-2 team will then travel to Flagstaff, Ariz., to do battle with the Lumberjacks of Northern Arizona University. Both matches were a source of worry for Hilbert.

"Weber may be harder to prepare for than Northern Arizona, even though NAU may have the best athlete in the conference in Angel Leath," said Hilbert. "We have gone done to Ogden and gotten upset the last couple of years, so I think our team is really pumped for this match."

He acknowledged, though, that his first-place team is doing an excellent job of staying focused on each game instead of looking ahead. He also said his team is playing about as well as it can right now, but that areas such as passing still need to be addressed.

Hilbert said that one of his players should have no problem getting motivated for the NAU match — senior outside hitter Heather McEwen. He said that when McEwen was a senior, she was recruited by NAU but a scholarship was never offered to her. It turns out that the scholarship happened to be filled by Leath. "She has never really said anything about it, but since I've been here, she has never had a bad game against NAU," said Hilbert.

The Vandals will take a team hitting percentage of .280 into the two matches, which ranks 22nd in the nation. Individually, junior middle blocker Nancy Wicks is ranked 15th in the nation right now with a hitting percentage of .394, which also gives her the benefit of being first in the conference. Teammate Brittany Van Haverbeke ranks second in the conference with a .307 hitting percentage.

Hilbert said he takes a pretty healthy team into the two matches. He indicated that Jessica Puckett and some of the other Vandal outside hitters have fatigued hitting shoulders, but this isn't anything to worry about. Only Heather McEwen's sore shoulder is providing a source of concern for Hilbert.

"Heather's hitting shoulder is a concern because she starts experiencing a lot of pain after too many swings," said Hilbert. "We're trying to limit the amount of swings she has so that it's not a problem."

The road trip will be the last one before two important conference matches next week with Idaho State and Boise State. The Vandals face ISU on Oct. 16 and entertain BSU the following night. Both matches will be held in Memorial Gym and start at 7:30 p.m.

written test to take, many pass with flying colors on the first try. Parents nervously acknowledge this by handing their kids the keys to whatever used car sits in the family garage. So it was a matter of concern to Van Haverbeke's parents when Brittany repeatedly failed the test. Shortly thereafter, she was diagnosed as having a reading disability.

She recalls being more mad about the condition than ashamed or embarrassed.

"I remember being mad when I found out because I was paying all this money to go to a good school like Central, and they weren't able to diagnose this," she noted.

Her problem consisted primarily of trouble with reading comprehension. This difficulty in grasping written material made test-taking seem like a personal exercise in mountaineering. However, her parents were extremely helpful in finding a high school program that would address the problems she was encountering.

After some searching, Brittany and her parents decided on LakeRidge High in time for her junior year. Every morning, she would rise and make the commute to Lake Oswego. Reflecting back on the decision, she said it was the best choice she has ever made.

"It was the single best choice I've made in my life," said Van Haverbeke. "LakeRidge had a program that helps the learning disabled in such areas as study skills and test accommodations. I found out that I could learn to live with my disability and still be very successful."

By Joe Van Haverbeke's estimates, some 40 schools began to pursue his daughter during the latter part of her junior and senior years in high school. The elder Van Haverbeke remembers some long talks with his daughter about the kind of school that she should enroll in. Both parties agreed that a school with a strong learning disabled program was of primary importance.

Out of these conversations, the choices were narrowed down to the University of New Mexico, San Jose State, and Idaho. It just so happened that Idaho was her first college visit as well as her last.

While visiting the campus, she had the opportunity to view Idaho's federally-funded Student Support Services (SSS) office. From what she saw there and in talks with Idaho's coaching staff, her decision to commit to Idaho quickly became finalized.

When she arrived back in Portland, she informed her dad that any other college visits would be unnecessary because she had decided to accept Idaho's offer of a volleyball scholarship.

The decision registered as a kind of a shock to her father, but he said her choice made him proud.

"When I found out how flexible Tom and his coaching staff were willing to be with her reading problem, I was just so proud of her decision," he said.

Brittany said the transition from her friends and family in Portland to the Palouse has been an easy one because of the help she receives from the various

"Almost all teachers are more than willing to let students with learning disabilities come to our office to take tests and so on," said Goodwin.

Hilbert seems relieved to have someone like Goodwin working on the team's behalf.

"I'm sure if one of the coaching staff approached a teacher instead of Meredyth, there would be some resistance," said Hilbert.

He quickly added, though, that Brittany doesn't merit kid glove treatment nor would she want that. Hilbert chuckled and said that Van Haverbeke would be "ticked" if he did this.

academic monitors on the team.

She conceded that reading is still difficult for her, but the support she receives from Hilbert's wife Leslie and team academic monitor Robin James has been invaluable for her. In addition to helping her with difficulties she encounters while reading, they also work closely with Meredyth Goodwin, the advancement officer of student support services.

Goodwin helps Van Haverbeke by acting as a student advocate for her, which means that she approaches professors and explains her reading dilemmas. As a result, Van Haverbeke is able to take tests at her own pace in the stress-free environment of the SSS office. Additionally, Van Haverbeke said Goodwin has been helpful in getting auditory versions of textbooks so that she can listen to them with a Walkman.

By acting as an advocate, Goodwin said she and her staff have been able to avoid resistance from teachers that might normally balk at the idea of granting an athlete any special considerations.

Now well into her sophomore year, Van Haverbeke is firmly entrenched in school, but she smiled when asked about the role of volleyball. She didn't hesitate when saying that volleyball is her main outlet for forgetting about school pressures.

"Without volleyball, I would probably go crazy," said Van Haverbeke. "It's a good way to relieve frustrations."

Knowing that this problem is something she will endure forever, Van Haverbeke said the key is to learn ways in which to skirt around it. She expressed complete confidence that she could overcome the disability and do whatever she wants in life.

And who did she want to thank most for her victory over the reading problem? Her parents and her sisters, one of whom played volleyball at the University of San Diego.

"Without my sisters and my parents, I wouldn't be the person I am today," said Van Haverbeke. "My mom drives all the way from Portland to watch me play, and my dad makes it to most of the games."

Wicks thrives in Moscow's cozy confines

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

Just how many people with the surname of Wicks live in Kamiah, Idaho? The question was posed to Idaho's standout middle blocker Nancy Wicks.

"Well, there is my brother Craig, and a couple of cousins up there," she said. "Oh, there are also my cousins Denise and Dustin, who are still in high school. I also have grandparents and an aunt and uncle in Kamiah that come to almost all of my home games."

Left off this initial list was the grandparents who live in Moscow and try to attend all her games. It is no wonder that her coach, Tom Hilbert, said of all the players on his team, Nancy had the easiest transition from high school to college.

"It is like she has a big fan club at all the home games," said Hilbert.

The cheersquad must have a lot to clap about because Wicks has emerged as one of the conference's premier middle blockers. She preceded fellow teammate Brittany Van Haverbeke as the Big Sky Conference's freshman of the year in 1990, and last year, she was a second-team all-conference pick.

Currently, she is ranked 15th nationally in hitting percentage at .394, which is good for first place in the conference. Her 117 kills gives her the second-highest total on the team right behind Jessica Puckett's 124.

Although Wicks' athletic ability had a few schools interested in her while she was in high school, she said Idaho was the logical choice because of the proximity to home and the quality coaching staff. Her decision to enroll at Idaho, however, wasn't initially due to the sport of volleyball.

Wicks said that during her senior year, she came to see the campus on a basketball recruiting trip. She came away impressed with the small-town atmosphere of Moscow, saying it compared favorably to what she grew up with in Kamiah.

About this time, Hilbert was sending letters to various high school coaches asking them if they had any players meriting attention. Wick's volleyball coach immediately got in contact with Hilbert and told him about a certain 6-foot middle blocker.

Hilbert started correspondence with Wicks, and soon Wicks was sending off a demo tape of herself playing volleyball. The rest as they say was history.

"I was interested in track and basketball because I thought they were my best sports," said Wicks. "I just decided to give college volleyball a try because I didn't know that much about it. It was a game I wanted to improve in."

Wicks admitted that leaving the friendly confines of Kamiah was difficult at first because of the support that the townspeople gave to high school athletics.

She said one incident in particular impressed her. It happened during a year in which her high school volleyball team had finished second at the state tournament. Wicks gave the impression that being the bridesmaid wasn't much fun, and that an undercurrent of disappointment loomed on the bus ride home to Kamiah.

As the bus slowly pulled into town, the team was taken by surprise — it seemed the whole town had come out to greet them. Wicks said the team bus was escorted to the high school by several fire trucks and police cars, which had lights and horns blaring.

"I can't believe they did that for us because we had finished second at state" said Wicks. "That really meant a lot to the team, and I'll certainly never forget it."

It was as a result of such experiences that Wicks doesn't envy players like Van Haverbeke who attended larger schools. She said that although a college scout or two may not have found out about her, she said Kamiah was the best place for her to grow up.

"I didn't feel any envy for those players who attended big high schools and had scouts looking at them all the time," said Wicks. "A few scouts might have missed me, but it doesn't matter because I'm going to the school I wanted to go to."

Once Wicks arrived in Moscow, she knew it would be an easy transition because of the extended family that the volleyball team seemed to offer her. Hilbert said the volleyball part was easy for Wicks because of the way she self-taught herself many parts of the game.

Hilbert also complimented Wicks on her cooperativeness, and he even went so far as to say that Wicks was one of the most coachable athletes he has ever had in his program. He remembers a phone call that he had with Wicks' track coach nearly three years ago.

"In that phone conversation, her coach said I would never have a problem with her because of her overall personality and work ethic," said Hilbert. "He was absolutely right. I have never had any sort of problem with her."

Her coach said Wicks is one of the team's many quiet leaders, and that if a big side-out is needed, the team can look to her for the play.

"When this team needs a side-out in an important match, I know that Amie (Hanks, the Vandals senior setter) can look to Nancy for the kill," said Hilbert.

Wicks hesitated when asked about her leadership ability and then laughed.

"I guess my leadership is the kind that helps the team get an important point, but with the talent on this team, I have to play well or else I will be sitting on the bench," said Wicks.

Johnson combines love for football with love for kids

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

For the next four years, Ahmani Johnson has big plans as an Idaho football player.

When those years are over, he also has big plans to have a number of players of his own.

"I plan on having a lot of kids. I'm either going to have two, or I'm going to have a lot. If I go over two, it's going to be a large number."

Johnson didn't specify the exact number, but when the numbers six, seven, and eight were floated across to him, he showed no signs of setting a limit. It's just as well, because regardless of the number, the young freshman sensation will have no problems finding someone to share his family goals with.

At 6-foot-2 and 245 pounds, Johnson is not only a prototype defensive end, but a future family-man that not too many women could pass. The personable, talkative, kid-loving athlete was raised in Seattle, but was born in Folkstone, England after his father had served two years in the Vietnam War.

"My parents spent a year travelling throughout Europe, got married before I was born, and then stayed another year afterwards."

Johnson's father, who is black and part Swahili (a culture on the east coast of Africa), and his mother, Gloria, who is white, moved back to the states to raise the first of their three children. It was in his grade school years when Johnson first began to get interested in football, but, to his distress, was not allowed to play.

"My mom didn't want me to play, and all my friends had been playing since the fifth grade. Through persistence, my parents eventually let me play my eighth grade year, and that year we won the city championship."

Coached in different sports by his father, Oby, Johnson's sole interest wasn't football. He was also competitive in basketball, and his favorite sport until recently, baseball. However, it was the strong level of competitiveness in football that held his attention.

"I played baseball up to my junior year in high school, and one of the reasons I got out of it was that you have to play it all summer, and it takes up so much time. I like football more because it takes everything you've got. Even if you lose, the more tired you are, the better you played."

Since Johnson's arrival to Idaho's starting line-up, the Vandals haven't had the chance to test his own theory on him. Playing for the injured Billy Sims since the Vandals opening game against St. Cloud State, Johnson and the rest of the defensive line have helped Idaho to a perfect 4-0 start. The Vandals will be looking to go 5-0 for the first time since 1905 with a Homecoming win tomorrow. Johnson has been a big part of that undefeated record, recording 13 tackles, and a team high four sacks. He attributes his early success to two other talents that join him on the d-line each Saturday.

"I think it's (his success) because of the practice habits I've picked up. I've done a lot better by watching guys like (left defensive end) Jeff Robinson and (strong tackle) John Sirmon. When I first came in last year, I had terrible practice habits, and even though I've made progress, I still have a long way to go."

Out of high school, going to Idaho wasn't high on Johnson's list of potential teams to play for. As a first-team all-conference player out of Mariner High School in Seattle, the senior was notified that the University of Washington was recruiting him. After UW's Rose Bowl victory season of 1990, however, he was asked in January of '91 to walk-on. By not receiving a scholarship, that quickly narrowed his decision to Idaho or Washington State. What convinced Johnson was the sense of a team that is more like a family at Idaho.

"I liked the coaches and players here at Idaho. When I visited WSU, it didn't have that family atmosphere that I felt at Idaho."

Family atmosphere is something that Johnson has been projecting for the past four summers in his hometown. As an assistant little league coach for his father, who coaches both baseball and basketball, his love for kids isn't measured by their success in the win-lose column, but the teaching he gets to do for the six-to-10 year-old youngsters.

"I think the best part of coaching them is being able to make a difference. When I go back each summer, I try to make it to all the games my father coaches, and I love to jump right into it. Even if they lose it's fun seeing how the kids play. It's not so much the physical parts of the game, but the mental. It's like taking a raw athlete and forming them into a player."

As a coach, Johnson said he can get a feel for what the coaches at Idaho are saying to him while he's still learning day-to-day how to play at the college level.

"Sometimes the kids don't listen to me because my father's the coach, and there's that sense of respect for him that's not there when I'm trying to get them to do something. It's sort of like he's their father figure out there on the field, and I'm not the same motivator that he is. So when I see that, I know that if they (Idaho coaches) yell at me, it's just to get me better."

A better player is exactly what Johnson has turned himself into. When Sims returns, there'll likely be two talented athletes competing for one starting slot. If you'd have told Johnson that after he'd played his first college down, however, he wouldn't have believed it.

"It (his first snap) was just chaos for me. My emotions were just going crazy, but it broke the ice."

Next season, Robinson, Sirmon, and Sims will be gone, and there will be some definite holes to fill on the line. Johnson realizes that, and feels that there is potential to keep the d-line one of the strongest forces on the Idaho team.

"Those guys leaving the line next year will leave some big shoes to fill. I think the guys that came in last year, and the ones who came in this year are really good classes. There'll be a lot of us playing."

Looking ahead to his future, Johnson is concentrating on doing more of what he can for this year's team, as well as those teams in the future. After he graduates, Johnson plans on taking his degree in advertising back to Seattle, but has plans on continuing his winning attitude back to those who matter the most to him...the kids.

"I've coached teams that have had only one win, and teams that have won it all. At the end of the season there's a big banquet for the kids, and you get to keep all the memories even if you don't win a game. I'll always be coaching; it's a lot of fun."

An athlete that's always willing to kid around.

Moscow's new police chief focuses on crime

By TANYA MADISON
Editor-in-Chief

After nearly a month on the job as Moscow's newest police chief, William F. Brown, Jr., says he likes what he sees.

"I'm enjoying it very much," he said. "It is a great experience."

Brown, who served on the Inglewood, Calif., police force before coming to Moscow, said the last three weeks have been both busy and educational.

"The pace hasn't been much different for these first couple of weeks," he said, grinning. "It is a different type of pace and a different type of environment. There is plenty here to keep me busy. There are lots of challenges and lots of things to keep life interesting. But there are also the opportunity to do a lot more proactively than just reactively."

For example, Brown said officers in the Inglewood Police Department spent most of their time answering radio calls and going out on emergencies. He thinks Moscow's more relaxed pace will allow him time to focus on crime prevention programs.

However, the 1 Percent Initiative that is on the ballot for the Nov. 3 election could change his plans. The initiative would limit the amount of taxes property owners pay to one percent of the property's value.

If the initiative receives voter approval, the city of Moscow could lose more than $300,000. If the city loses that kind of income, the police department will have to tighten its belt as well.

"I think it (the initiative) will be very detrimental to government in general and the police department in particular," he said. "We don't have any cushion really now in terms of the resources that we have and this will just be an additional burden placed on us. From what I've seen in California where this kind of thing has passed (Proposition 13), it has had a tremendous impact on the type of service that can be provided to the public."

"Things get to the point where a crime is committed and we respond to that. That's the reactive stage I was talking about," he said. "But when the reactive stage gets to be all that you can deal with...you can not put your energy into any type of prevention whatsoever. So what happens is you aren't stopping the flow upstream and you are just trying to block it further and further downstream."

Brown said that when the funding isn't available to let the police department run at full capacity, officers are forced to decide what kinds of calls they can go out on. Non-emergency calls, for example, may be put on the back burner or not responded to at all, simply because there isn't enough staff or resources.

"Nobody likes paying any more taxes than they have to," he said. "But people have to realize that nothing is for free in this world. They have to be willing and responsible enough to know you get what you pay for."

Budget permitting, Brown said he would like to focus on crime prevention in a few major areas including drug use, child abuse and traffic safety.

"It is a different kind of place and a different type of environment. There is plenty to keep me busy."

— William F. Brown
Moscow Police Chief

"Right now I am really doing an assessment of the department just to see what resources we have and how they are being used," he said. "I want to see what demands for service we have. I want to see how we are doing with what we've got and what we can spare to start other programs."

Brown said he hasn't seen evidence of major drug problems on the Palouse yet, but he wants to step up prevention and education programs. "There is no major drug problem at the moment," he said. "We are pretty much keeping a handle on that." Brown said most of the drug-related activity in Moscow centers around alcohol and marijuana, but cocaine, LSD and amphetamines surface occasionally.

Alcohol use, and misuse, especially by students is another area Brown wants to take proactive steps. "Students need to learn to drink responsibly and not drink and drive," he said.

Generally Brown thinks Moscow residents need to adopt an attitude of awareness without paranoia when it comes to crime.

"One of the things I've noticed here is that victims of auto burglaries tell officers when they are asked if they locked the car, 'Why would I lock my car? This is Moscow, Idaho,'" he said. "Taking preventative measures in important. But in a way that absence of the fear of crime is a very important thing. I think when you have a tremendous fear of crime, you also have a lot of the contributing problems."

"When there are bars on all the windows and nobody walking around at night, it is almost like a Pygmalion thing. You set the stage for crime to occur."

Communities with tremendous fear are areas where crime flourishes, he said. But communities where citizens are active and involved, tend to have lower crime rates.

The sense of community in Moscow is part of what attracted Brown to the area. "I wanted a nicer environment for my kids to have the opportunity to grow up in and they are enjoying it very much."

Power outages

Now that the conduits, transformers and other hardware for the University of Idaho's new power distribution system is in place, it's time to plug in.

But that will entail a systematic schedule of power outages over the next two months, according to Ray Pankopf, an architect in UI Facility Design.

The buildings will be shut off systematically, building by building.

Pankopf noted the only buildings on campus that will not be affected by the power outages are Life Science North and South, Hartung Theatre, Family Housing, Park Village Apartments, Graduate Residence Center, the buildings on Poultry Hill, the west farm buildings, agricultural engineering and ag engineering offices and the safety offices.

Wherever possible, the outages have been scheduled for before and after working hours, on weekends and during the Thanksgiving recess. Some buildings, however, at the end of certain lines will be without power several different times as other buildings are reconnected to the new loop system.

"We definitely want to avoid taking down academic buildings during the week," Pankopf said.

Pankopf said the first outages will begin Oct. 16. The complete proposed schedule for October and November is an insert in Friday's University Register. Regular notices of future outages will be published in the Register as well as posted in campus buildings.

More information about the project or the outage schedule is available at 885-6246.

Learning labs give students hands-on training

By BETSY CARVER
Staff Writer

"With all of the bad news in the papers these days, not very often do you see a headline that reads, '80 people gather in the Black Hills of South Dakota to learn, and share, and have a good time,'" said Bill Henderson, District 4-H Specialist at Ohio State University.

Henderson was speaking at the closing ceremony of the Black Hills Recreational Leaders Laboratory held in the Black Hills of South Dakota the week of September 20-26.

Those who attended the 'Rec Lab' felt the same way. BHRLL and others like it are little known secrets nestled into Mountain Camps or big Hotel Convention Centers. These labs act as job training programs, job rejuvenation programs, and summer camp all within one week. Leaders labs are good places to make important professional and personal contacts.

Began as early as the 1930's, leaders labs are a unique learning experience, not only for those in the field of recreation or those with an excess amount of recreation time, but for everyone from age 16 to 160. Those in attendance range from accountants to recreation professors to occupational therapists. The 27 locations of those labs spread all the way from the California Redwoods to Ontario Canada.

Important aspects of learning labs is all the knowledge packed into one short week and retained to take home and share with others, and a re-creation of the whole person.

These labs allow hands-on training in numerous activities including self development in leadership, environmental education, dance, song and game leadership, program planning, and canoeing. The many workshop choices create a retreat from daily routine.

The nearest lab from Moscow is held next to Lake Coeur d'Alene. Camp Roger Larson is right outside of Worley, Idaho where the Chatcolab Leadership Laboratory will be held the first week of June, 1993.

For any interested UI students, one credit is available through the Brigham Young University Recreation Department for attending a lab. CEU's (Continuing Education Units) are also available from the University of Wyoming at no cost. Scholarships are given out to defray the cost and there are automatic fee reductions for fulltime students and Senior Citizens.

For more information on the 1993 Chatcolab write to Toni Gwin at 3284 NE Lancaster #3, Corvallis, Oregon 97330, 503-737-1605.

They're in jail for a good cause

By TRACIE BRUNO
Lifestyles Editor

They arrest you, book you, take your photo and then let you sit in a jail cell.

This jail is different than most though, it allows jailbirds to make as many phone calls as they want, or need.

Sound like Latah County jail, or paradise for the phone hungry teenager? No, it was the American Cancer Society's Annual Jail-n-Bail, and they're on a fundraising mission.

Arrested college and community members spent part of the past two days in a mock jail cell at the Palouse Empire Mall. The jailbirds were arrested by "deputy" Keith Gunther, who went to their home or work and brought them back to the cell. As soon as the "deputy" arrived with his prisoners, they were locked up and persuaded into having their picture taken. Once bail was set the jailbirds started calling friends to help them raise money to get out.

Reed Mahan, University of Idaho's InterFraternity Council president, was arrested, and yesterday he spent two hours calling friends, family and anyone else he could think of to help bail him out of jail. He even called the poorly funded Argonaut! Although his bail was only set at $100, at the time of the call Mahan had raised $115. He said the AGDs had given his name to the "deputy" to send out a warrant for his arrest.

In charge of the event was president of the Latah unit of the American Cancer Society, Shirley Gunther. Thus far, Gunther said they had raised about $4,000. She said last year they raised $5,200 and that this year they expect to meet or beat last year's mark.

At the time of the call over 20 people had been arrested. Duane Letourneau, secretary of faculty at the UI, raised over $400 for his bail. UI faculty members Harry Peterson and John Hendee were also captured for the fundraiser. The Jail-n-Bail fundraiser also came fully equipped with a work release program. People who didn't want to spend time in jail were allowed to go out and raise bail and avoid being arrested.

"It's a fun event for a serious cause," Gunther said.

People who didn't donate money at the Jail-n-Bail fundraiser, can still send their donations to the American Cancer Society. Donations can be mailed to Shirley Gunther at 903 E. 6th St. in Moscow, ID, or to Jeanette Beloit 1221 Joseph, Moscow, ID.

'Freshman women especially vulnerable to acquaintance rape'

GUEST COMMENTARY
BY CATHY HANSON,
NURSE PRACTITIONER

Last year, only two rapes were reported on the University of Idaho campus. But as many as nine out of 10 rapes go unreported.

Many people still believe rapists jump out of the bushes, but the fact is that a woman is more likely to be sexually assaulted by someone she knows; a friend, a relative, a date or an employer. These rapes usually occur in a dorm room on campus, in a car or at an apartment.

- Acquaintance rape occurs most frequently to women ages 15 to 24.

- In a national survey of college students, one out of every six women reported having been a victim of rape or attempted rape in the preceding year.

- Freshman women are especially vulnerable to acquaintance rape. They tend to feel insecure and may drink and party more because they're away from strict supervision for the first time.

- Ninety percent of rape victims know their assailant.

- In one study, 55 percent of men who acknowledged committing sexual assault were under the influence of alcohol.

- In the same study, 53 percent of the sexual assault victims were intoxicated.

Acquaintance rape can be confusing to both men and women. Our culture encourages adversarial dating practices. Men are often expected to initiate sexual activity while women are expected to be passive and resist advances. Television and movies often create and perpetuate the myths of men and women's sex roles. Sexual violence, insensitivity and assault are condoned to promote sales.

Although few rape victims are physically injured, the mental health impact is severe. Rape victims are 13 times more likely to attempt suicide than non-victims. Major depressions and post-traumatic stress disorder occurs with such symptoms as sleeplessness, poor concentration, overeating or appetite loss, nightmares and fear.

Individuals who have been assaulted by someone they know may also feel guilty, betrayed and have difficulty trusting people. Recovery from an assault may be assisted by contact with trained personnel who are sensitive and understand the needs of sexual assault victims. Resources at the UI are the Counseling Services, 885-6716; the Women's Center, 885-6616; or the Health Services, 885-6693.

If you have been raped:

- Tell someone that you've been raped. This account could help your testimony if you decide to report the rape and prosecute.

- Call a crisis center; 883-HELP or 332-HELP. Counselors are specifically trained to help survivors, and to offer support and information about legal, medical, and mental health resources.

- Get medical attention. You should be examined by a doctor as soon as possible to document and collect physical evidence, and to discuss the risk of sexually transmitted diseases and pregnancy. Men and women can take action to reduce the chances of acquaintance rape.

For Men:

- Never force a woman to have sex, even if you think she has led you on.

- Stay sober.

- Don't buy into the myth that a drunk woman is "fair game" for sex.

- Ask a woman directly if she wants sex. "No means no!"
- Communicate with women. Know them as people, not as sex objects.

- Communicate with men. Let them know hostile and abusive attitudes toward women are unacceptable.

For Women:

- Set sexual limits and communicate those limits.

- Be assertive. When you say "No" be sure you mean it.

- Stay sober.

- Find out about a new date. Listen to rumors. Men who rape often develop a reputation on campus.

- Meet in public places or double date.

- Trust your feelings. If you have a bad feeling, leave the situation.

Remember-- Consenting sex requires sober, verbal communication without intimidation or threats.
