Native American gambling discussed at roundtable

By BRANDY CORGATELLI
Staff Writer

Two hot topics involving Indians in Idaho, casino gambling and ownership of the Couer d' Alene Lake, were addressed by UI Law professor Dennis Colson Wednesday afternoon.

The discussion was the second in the monthly university roundtable series on "Native American Issues in Idaho." Colson described the complicated legal history behind the lake and gambling issues for the nearly 100 people attending.

On the gambling question, "The discussion probably starts best in 1988 when Congress passed the Indian Regulatory Gaming Act," Colson said.

The act establishes three different classes of games. The first two classes include traditional tribal games, bingo and card games. Class three is the catch-all, left-over class and includes any games not in class one or two. These games are to be regulated through a joint state and tribal effort.

Last spring, several tribes told the state they wanted to start some forms of casino gambling on tribal land. The Idaho officials said they would let the voters make the decision and put the gambling issue on the November 3 ballot.

"Unlike any other (Indian) issues...this is directly in the hands of voters," Colson said.

However, Colson said, voters always show a wide degree of variance on an issue depending upon how a question is asked. In this case, the gambling question is not being asked correctly to the voters, according to Colson.

The question on the Idaho ballot is whether voters want to clarify current state gambling laws and outlaw casino-type gambling. It says nothing of the real reason for the voter initiative, which is that some tribes want casino gaming strictly on their own land, according to Colson.

"As an Idaho voter, there is reason for offense (at the way this has been worded)," Colson said. This initiative masks the real issue that Indian sovereignty on their own land is being challenged, Colson said.

Colson discussed the claim of the Nez Pierce tribe to the Couer d' Alene Lake in the context of general treatment to tribal claims.

There have been two approaches in the past and present for dealing with tribes in legal matters. One is Indian self-determination, which recognizes tribes as sovereigns who have the same weight at the negotiating table as the government does. The other is called termination.

"This is denying and contesting any claims to tribal sovereignty," Colson said.

Colson said the U.S. government has pursued a policy of self-determination for the last 20 years. Presidents from different political parties, including Johnson and Nixon, have made statements supporting Indian sovereignty. What's the state of Idaho's current policy?

"The answer to that, I think, is both," Colson said. These two latest issues show a leaning toward the policy by the state of not accepting Indian sovereignty. But there also have been numerous negotiation successes in the state of Idaho in the 1980s, according to Colson.

In Idaho, peyote for religious ceremonial use has been decriminalized and tax laws on Indian land have been ratified. The most significant accomplishment has been on the Fort Hall Indian reservation claims to Snake River water in Southern Idaho.

"An agreement has been worked out which is satisfactory to both parties (the state and the tribe) and has been ratified by Congress," Colson said.

The Couer d' Alene tribe is still struggling to get through legal procedure barriers and hasn't even got to the substance of their claims, Colson said.

Sheriff uses teamwork as an effective tool

By TANYA MADISON
Editor-in-Chief

Latah County Sheriff Ken Buxton is hoping that his experience and knowledge of the community will pay off in November's general election.

Buxton, who has been the sheriff for eight years, said the experience makes him the better candidate "I have a proven track record. I am experienced. I believe in this community and I care about people," he said.

Buxton believes the biggest issue facing the department this year is the 1 Percent Initiative. If the initiative is passed, the sheriff's department would lose 20 percent of its total revenue, Buxton said. "It would mean a significant re-education in the services we are able to provide to the community," he said.

"We gear our operation now to service on demand," he said. "But if the initiative is passed, non-threatening services would have to be adapted to our available resources." Buxton said he fears the initiative would make the sheriff's office switch from a proactive or preventive stance to a strictly reactive one.

The sheriff's office could lose eight deputy positions, one youth probation officer, one deputy prosecutor and two deputy clerk-auditor positions.

"We have experienced a reduction in crime by 25 percent in the last five years," he said. "There are highs and lows in reporting and we are in the middle of a high activity period. It is tough enough now to find the funding and the time to take care of everything."

He said that his office's proactive approach applies not only to crime prevention, drug education and human rights programs.

Buxton said that if re-elected he wants to do more work with human rights. "We need to bring this issue to the forefront," he said. "It is important because Latah County is a special place to live, and I would hope that everyone would receive as warm a welcome as I did when I moved here."

Buxton's opponent, Republican candidate Joe Overstreet, questioned Buxton's judgement in supporting a deputies' union. But Buxton thinks that the fears regarding the union are unfounded. "Participatory management is a very effective tool," Buxton said. "People should have input on how the agency is run. I don't have a corner on all of the ideas...I encourage teamwork. We are able to respond to the situations we do because of teamwork."

"No authority has been taken away. No responsibility has been transferred. All the union means is more input, and I don't think input is a bad thing," he said.

Buxton said the bottom line in the election should be the issue of experience. Buxton served six years as a deputy before being elected sheriff eight years ago. While in office he has attended training sessions held by the FBI, management training, jail management training, incident command and has participated in two sheriff's academies.

Buxton said his law enforcement experience and knowledge of the community give him an edge over Overstreet. "My job has put me in contact with a wide range of people. I know this community and the people of Latah County," he said. "I hope that makes the difference."

'Doo-dads' invented for disabled

By BETSY CARVER
Staff Writer

There are approximately 30,000 people in Idaho who have disabilities. These people are often in need of assisted technology that is hard to acquire to help them function on a daily basis.

UI Assistant Professor of Counseling and Special Education, Bryce Fifield, and Professor of Counseling and Special Education, Lee Parks, are director and co-director respectively of a federally funded project working to increase the availability of this technology throughout the state of Idaho.

Fifield stated that the goal of this project is to make assisted technology more readily available for those who need it. "Most people that have disabilities are not aware of these technological devices," he said.

The devices he talks about can be anything from "grooming and self-care doo-dads," such as button hooks helping people dress and undress, to "elaborate gadgets" like Augmentative Communication Devices that program a vocabulary and synthesize a voice for someone without one. The more expensive technology can cost up to ten thousand dollars and can be as expensive as yearly car maintenance.

Fifield hopes the project will help people receive the technology, and then learn how to use and maintain it. He also said the program will identify what people want and need, and work to find ways to make it affordable to them through insurance and health care.

The grant for the Assisted Technology Project receives half a million dollars a year in government funding over a three year period.

This money has been divided into two projects. Half the money goes to the Assistive Technical Resource Centers throughout the state. This will keep information available in different locations for interested people to receive resources and find out who to contact for specific needs.

The other quarter of a million dollars in grant money each year will stay at the University of Idaho for Fifield and his staff to use for developing information, promotional materials, and to work with health care and welfare organizations find-

Police say watch your wallets

By TANYA MADISON
Editor-in-Chief

Students should hold on to their wallets a little tighter than usual.

Campus police liason Dan Bruce said that four students reported their wallets stolen in the past week. He said police suspect that the thefts at UI may be connected with a rash of wallet thefts at Washington State University.

The WSU wallet thief steals wallets and purses in broad daylight, according to WSU police. The thief has been entering offices and going through jackets in an effort to find money. He has been disposing of checks and leaving credit cards behind.

The suspect is described as a white male in his 50s, 5-foot-11, with a medium build, glasses and gray hair. He was last spotted wearing a grey tweed jacket, white shirt, red tie and dark

Persons with any information regarding the wallet thefts are asked to contact Bruce.

In other crime news:

■ Students at UI are apparently finding new ways to study for midterms. Police responded to a call at the library early in the evening Oct. 12. Kelvin L. Falen, age 23, was found locked in one of the library study rooms alone and naked.

"It was a very weird incident," Bruce said. "He wasn't trying to harm anyone or flash anyone. He apparently was just studying naked."

Falen was charged with one count of indecent exposure, Bruce said.

Man shot in the face on campus

By TANYA MADISON
Editor-in-Chief

Two University of Idaho students have been charged with shooting another student in the face with a CO2 BB gun.

Timothy Scalzitti, 18, and Jason Wissmiller, 18, were charged with shooting Sean Stiller with a BB gun as he walked in front of Wallace Complex on Sept. 24, said Campus Police Liaison Dan Bruce.

Bruce said Stiller was shot on the right side of the face along his jawline. "The BB broke the skin, but did not enter the jaw," Bruce said. "Mr. Stiller was treated and released in the UI infirmary on the same day but he told me that his face stung for about six hours after the incident."

Scalzitti was charged with two misdemeanors, discharge of firearms aimed at another and battery. Wissmiller was charged with aiding in the commission of a battery.

Bruce said he does not think Stiller was the first student Scalzitti and Wissmiller shot at. "Other people were shot at or hit, but none were injured as badly as Mr. Stiller," he said. "No one else has stepped forward to press charges either."

Scalzitti and Wissmiller will appear in magistrate court Oct. 19.

Student falls 45 feet from SUB

By CHRIS MILLER
Staff Writer

A University of Idaho student fell from the top of the Student Union Building early Saturday morning.

Police say Kelly Reed, a senior physical education major, fell an estimated 45 feet from the top of the third floor and landed on the first floor roof of the SUB.

Dan Bruce, UI Campus Liaison Officer, said somebody heard cries for help and moaning from the first floor roof. That person called 911 at 4:48 a.m. Saturday. His officers arrived on the scene at 4:50 a.m.

"We contacted a person that was on the lower portion of the roof. He fell from the top of the third floor and was pretty badly injured," Bruce said. "We called an ambulance and that was pretty much our role in it. We don't consider it a criminal matter."

Reed broke his pelvis, four ribs, two vertebrae and bruised a kidney and his liver. He is now recovering at Gritman Medical Center. "Yeah, I'm doing alright," Reed said from his hospital room Thursday morning.

A member of Delta Tau Delta and friend of Reed said, "He's not doing so well. I think he'll be better off just left alone."

Students study in jolly ol' England

By ELIZABETH POWELL
Contributing Writer

For the culturally curious, the University of Idaho Enrichment Program is offering "The Art and Theatre of London" tour this Dec. 26 through Jan. 3.

The tour, which will allow students and community members a chance to spend 12 days in London, England, will offer courses in business, drama, English, health care, music, psychology and theatre. In addition, the credits earned from these courses will count as college credits at the UI.

The Cooperative Center for Study in Britain, which has members throughout the country, will be sponsoring the tour. The CCSB sponsors short term programs in London, Ireland, and Scotland throughout the year.

Students at the UI are able to participate in study abroad programs due to the International Student Exchange Program that is available. Bob Neunschwander, the study abroad advisor, is enthusiastic about the international programs that UI students can participate in. "Studying abroad allows students a chance to get an education in a foreign country. They can see and experience new things other countries have to offer, and they can bring this knowledge back with them."

The Enrichment Program offers students a chance to visit just about anywhere in the world. "The programs are each geared to help students at their own level of ability regarding language," said Neunschwander. ISEP is offered in forty different countries at 100 different institutions.

The University Studies Abroad Consortium (USAC) was designed for students with different levels of language abilities.

Programs are offered in non-traditional countries such as Russia, Vietnam, and Indonesia as well. "If students have a specific geographic area in mind they can find it through one of our programs," said Neunschwander.

Oksana Melnikova, a Junior majoring in Hydrology and Environmental Engineering is an exchange student from Russia who is here with the ISEP Program.

"It's a great experience. I've never lived in dorms before. In St. Petersburg where I went to college, I lived with my parents, so this is very new to me. I've never been to America before this time, and it's wonderful that I have this opportunity."

UI students find themselves Beyond Hope

Beyond Hope.

That's where 27 UI international students and four college of business faculty members found themselves in late September. Beyond Hope, Idaho was the location for the third annual International Business Club Retreat.

The retreat, presented by The UI College of Business and Economics, focused on intercultural communication and appreciation of diverse value systems. It featured several activities to build cultural awareness.

Dorothy Sermol of Portland State University spoke on adjusting to life in a foreign country. Many times exchange students enter the country on a natural "high," according to Sermol. Soon they plummet into a state of depression, wondering if they are the only people feeling frustrated and alone. A student needs to understand it's a common adjustment cycle and they aren't going crazy, according to Sermol. International businessman Max Tekchand came to the retreat for the second straight year. He conducted a simulated international business meeting. The "American" sales team quickly learned, there are some definite "do's" and "don'ts" when conducting international business.

UI Finance Professor Mario Reyes, a Philippine native, spoke about Philippine culture and surprised the group Saturday night by playing guitar along with Flamenco artist Hap Sermol.

Pay more attention to the message, less to the messenger

If nothing else, Admiral James Stockdale will at least have his name in the history books.

Stockdale, who is Ross Perot's running mate, was overshadowed by Al Gore and Dan Quayle during the vice presidential debate this week. At times he looked lost, often sounding as if he was frightened to be standing in front of millions of Americans.

He seemed to be more of a spectator than a participant as he watched Gore and Quayle roll up their sleeves and start slugging.

His responses weren't clear. When he did put some thought into an answer, he rambled, taking viewers on verbal odysseys that wound up nowhere.

And then there was the comment about his hearing aid.

But what should we have expected? He isn't a politician.

Al Gore and Dan Quayle, on the other hand, are politicians. That much was clear.

They are slick, practiced, polished men who have spent their entire lives in pursuit of political success. They know the right words to say to draw applause, and which lies will be swallowed whole by the voters. Like conditioned laboratory rats, they know which buttons to press to get rewards, and which buttons to stay away from to avoid getting zapped.

During the debate Gore was part high school civics teacher, part preacher and entirely too sanctimonious. He spent a fair amount of time questioning the foreign policy tactics of the Bush Administration.

Yet how many Americans are aware that during debate over the Persian Gulf War, Gore sat down with the leaders from both parties and said he would support whichever side gave him the most time to make speeches on the Senate floor. Republican Bob Dole offered more time than Democrat George Mitchell, so Gore sided with the president.

Does that mean Al Gore is a man whose support is for sale? Is this the kind of man we want to have perched just a heartbeat away from the presidency?

Quayle was more self-assured and aggressive during this debate than when he faced off against Lloyd Bentsen in 1988. Still, he came off as being just as coached as Gore. Quayle's and Gore's aides pumped them full of facts and statistics, then turned them lose.

And if you've had practice making stump speeches every day, you can occasionally slip into neutral during a debate and regurgitate something that sounds like an intelligent answer.

If, however, you are a newcomer to politics it is harder to give coherent, short answers.

Maybe we shouldn't be so hasty to judge Stockdale on the basis of his performance in the vice presidential debate. For all we know, he may be more in tune with the majority of Americans than are his counterparts.

Stockdale deserves to have his views made known to the public. More emphasis should be placed on the message and less attention should be placed on the messenger.

Cable monopoly should be unplugged

The decision by the 102nd Congress was seen as yet another blow to the rapidly sinking campaign of President Bush. However, it went way beyond such a trivial notion because it was also a major breakthrough for consumers.

On Oct. 5, the perfect veto record of Bush went up in smoke as the Senate voted 74-25 to override the President's 36th veto during his four-year term. The House of Representatives quickly followed with a 308-114 vote. In both houses, the two-thirds majority vote needed to negate the Presidential veto was easily garnered.

The topic of the bill was cable television.

Citing consumer concerns about cable TV rates, Congress voted to limit basic cable rates, make it easier for competitors to establish a market in an area with pre-existing cable service, and require cable operators to observe customer service standards.

President Bush squawked about the measure, saying it would merely drive prices high-

We need to be good communicators

The poignant, humorous and somewhat touching episode that follows is a true story.

One day, many years ago, an aunt of mine and her new daughter-in-law were cleaning the old woman's kitchen.

As they went about the job, rags and dirty sponges littering the Montgomery Ward linoleum like wounded soldiers on a battlefield of grime, my aunt turned to her son's new wife and said in a thick ethnic accent: "Go to the basement and get me some sauce."

Perhaps a bit resentful of being a servant to my aunt, the young woman nevertheless went to the basement but could find nothing remotely resembling "sauce."

She returned to tell this to the old woman, who reiterated the fact that there obviously was sauce in the basement, that she should go GET IT NOW, and sheesh! how could her son marry such a careless girl anyway?

A second trip down the stairs was as fruitless as the first. After a thorough search, the young woman returned empty-handed.

My aunt, throwing her well-worn immigrant hands over her head in exasperation, trundled down the stairs muttering under her breath.

She returned a few moments later with a box of S.O.S. brand scrub pads. "Sauce," she said, waving the box under the young woman's nose, "sauce, Sauce, SAUCE!"

Communication, whether written or spoken, is probably the most important ability humans have. Without it we'd fumble through life hungry, cold and generally getting on each other's nerves.

Taking a thought from one's own mind and putting it into words that can accurately convey the idea to someone else who speaks the same language is not always easy. Trying to communicate with people of other cultures can be downright disastrous.

A few years ago, someone put together a collection of bad English translations gleaned from tourist attractions around the world. For example, in a Bangkok temple a sign read: "It is forbidden to enter a woman even a foreigner if dressed as a man."

Visitors to a certain bar in Tokyo were greeted with a sign that informed: "Special cocktails for the ladies with nuts."

Tourists who stayed at a Parisian hotel were confronted with this sign in the elevator: "Please leave your values at the front desk."

Knowing what kind of people the French are, it is unclear whether this was a miscommunication or an invitation for a little naughtiness.

Please see TALK page 5>

Guests who read the following sign in a Yugoslavian hotel were in for a little treat: "The flattening of underwear with pleasure is the job of the chambermaid."

But even people who speak the same language aren't immune to confusion. The Washington Department of Welfare published a list of letters received from public aid recipients. This is what happens when a good thought goes bad:

■ "My husband got his project cut off two weeks ago, and I haven't had any relief since."

■ "I am glad to report that my husband who was missing is dead."

■ "In accordance with your instructions, I have given birth to twins in the enclosed envelope."

■ "I want money as quickly as I can get it. I have been in bed with the same doctor for two weeks, and he doesn't do any good. If things don't improve I will have to get another doctor to help him."

■ "Mrs. Jones has had no clothes for a year and has been visited regularly by the preacher."

■ "I am forwarding my marriage certificate and three children, one of which is a mistake as you can see."

Obviously, the woman who gave birth to twins in an envelope had a specific thought in mind. It just got lost somewhere between her brain and the pen in her hand.

Not every missed attempt at communication is as cute as those listed above. Although communicating across language and cultural barriers is difficult, trying to bridge the gap between professions is even more frustrating. These days misunderstandings are big problems, especially as specialization in the workplace becomes more common.

Every occupation has its own lingo. Chemists can't communicate with bankers; doctors can't communicate with teachers. And no one can understand lawyers.

Recently I asked a graduate student to tell me about her project. She hemmed and hawed, finally spewing a stream of jargon to describe what she was working on. I smiled, nodded and went about my business.

I have no idea what she said. Professors can be just as guilty. Is there anyone who hasn't taken a course in which the professor, at one time or another, had the students so completely baffled that they felt like passing a number two pencil in their right ears and out their left?

Everyone invests time and effort refining a message until they think they've developed something that is foolproof. Then they try communicating the message to someone else and are confounded when their attempt is met by a blank stare.

There is a lesson to be learned from the examples of miscommunication mentioned above. No matter how clear one's message may seem, there is always a chance for misinterpretation. Don't assume people are illiterate morons just because they don't understand something that seems obvious to you. Understand?

Communicators, don't you think, is something we can all better try to be?

er. Really, George, how is competition going to raise prices?

Although it might be months before the Federal Communications Commission has enough money to enforce the measures, there should be wild celebration that Congress actually voted for its constituents. On a deeper level, the vote could almost be summoned to a real deregulation of the cable industry.

Deregulation of the cable industry occurred five years ago, and since that time, there should have also been a rise in competition for cable services. While it's true that there's nothing preventing cable competition within an area, nearly all American communities are still controlled by one cable company. This situation creates a monopoly effect that enables a cable company to raise rates at will.

"There has always been room for competition among cable companies, even on the local level," said Jerry Giedt, manager of TCI of Idaho cable services in Lewiston.

Okay, so there is competition and rates should go down as a direct result. However, according to an Oct. 6 article in The Spokesman Review, cable rates have gone up three times as fast as inflation, despite deregulation.

What would explain this statistic? Again, a lack of competition for cable services exists in most communities.

Let's look at the local situation here in Moscow with Cablevision.

Last year, Cablevision was able to sign a franchise contract with the city of Moscow, according to city councilman Nick Crookston. This doesn't mean that they are granted exclusive rights, but Crookston said there is a stipulation in the contract that calls for renegotiations if there is a new FCC mandate.

"If there are any provisions in our contract that may need change according to change at the federal level, then we have the contract clause allowing for renegotiation," said Crookston. "This is done to protect both sides represented in the contract."

As Giedt stated earlier, competition has never been inhibited, and this contract is no different. Nonetheless, there is still no cable competition within this area.

The key provision in the cable vote stated that in areas where there is no effective cable competition, the FCC can set cable rates. In addition, equipment rental and installation fees would also be regulated. The third part of this provision is that consumers could actually get a refund if cable companies overcharge for higher levels of service.

Giedt was absolutely correct when he said that "the FCC doesn't have the staffing or the funds to enforce such a measure as of yet."

Here's hoping they will.

Clinton's Idaho elf gives local face to national issues

By TANYA MADISON
Editor-in-Chief

While the presidential debates are raging across the airwaves, the candidates can't afford to stop their stumping for votes.

Like Santa employs elves at Christmastime, political candidates hire staffers to help take the message to the people. Johnathan Foster is Democratic candidate Bill Clinton's state director for Idaho. Foster was in Moscow recently discussing life on the campaign trail.

While Idaho was a pro-Bush state in the last election, that tide may be turning. Foster said the latest poll done by the NBC affiliate in Boise has Clinton leading Bush by two percentage points in the polls. Foster said that the folks at the Clinton headquarters weren't worried about the narrow margin. "The last competitive race in Idaho was in 1964, so the people are excited about this race," Foster said.

Foster said his job would be easier if Clinton, like Santa Claus, had the potential to be everywhere at once. But since he can't, Clinton relies on "elves" like Foster.

"I think when people see him, they like him," Foster said. "The toughest part of my job is trying to get the word out about him without him being here. Particularly with the race this close."

Foster said while Idaho's economy is healthy compared to other parts of the nation, residents are still concerned with the economy and the budget deficit. "The biggest issue that seems to be affecting people here is the budget deficit. People are really beginning to realize that a $4 trillion budget deficit is something to worry about. They are really frustrated with George Bush's lack of leadership and though he pays lip service to balancing the budget, every year he submits a budget that is more out of balance than the year before," Foster said.

An issue of particular issue on campuses is Clinton's education plan, Foster said. "He wants to do away with the old system of loans which are getting harder and harder to come by number one. Number two they are costing the government a lot of money," he said.

Instead, Clinton has a plan where students could borrow the money to go to college or receive another form of professional training. But instead of paying back a student loan until the borrower is middle-aged, the student could do a few years' worth of community service or pay it back as a percentage of their income.

"That way, services that the community needs, like doctors, lawyers, policeman or social workers would be filled with young and energetic people," Foster said. "Or if they decided to pay it back as a percentage of their income, but lost their job and had some other problem, the student would not default on the loan. Students would just pay a percentage of their earnings. If you aren't earning anything, you wouldn't have to pay until you were. If you are earning a lot of money, you can pay it back quicker."

Foster said the main problem with promoting Clinton's education plan is that "it has the broadest appeal to those who aren't in college yet and don't vote." But he said the plan has met with the approval of many of the Idaho residents that he has met.

A Consumer Advisory Group made up of people who are actually using the technology has also begun. "They have a key role in designing the project," Fifield said.

Since the grant money is designed to be used over a three year period, Fifield said of the future of the project, "Our intent is to get it into making long term changes. It addresses what we feel is important to people."

Slurp & Burp: good fun, food & pool

Review by Betsy Carver

"Slurp and Burp" stands out on the sign like an invitation for all beer chugging, anti-Miss Manners bar hoppers to come in and do just that—slurp and burp. The numerous pick-up trucks parked outside at all hours of the day and night may even seem a warning to those prone to fights with pick-up truck drivers, but this bar is more lovable than intimidating. Once inside, the sound of the latest sporting event booms from the TV set in the corner, four pool tables fill any excess space available, and painted saw blades fill the pale pink cement walls.

Schierman's Slurp and Burp

(the official name) opened in 1969 under the ownership of Larry Schierman and is now managed by his brother Pat. This remote, country road bar keeps a continuous clientele even though advertising is minimal and the phone number can't be found.

Surprisingly, Slurp and Burp is not only for farmer's on their four o'clock break, college kids frequent the bar to play cheap pool while drinking cheap beer and eating greasy hamburgers and big baskets of salty curly fries.

The five bartenders are also students at UI. Ron Clarke, who has been bartending for the Schierman's on and off for a year, said the bar has had no problems such as fights or over-rowdiness. Last Friday night, which was Homecoming, was the busiest he's seen the bar with students bringing their parents in.

A Slurp and Burp regular said he keeps coming back for the friendly atmosphere, both in the staff and the customers. He also enjoys the Slurp and Burp for its televised sporting events.

It's hard to label the Slurp and Burp as a dive even though the name warrants it. It seems more quaint than sleazy, and more rustic than dumpty. And most importantly they serve cheap beer, and where else is "French Fried" Popcorn available out of a big machine in the corner.

Mingles mixes Moscow's most magnificent Monday margaritas

Review by Pete Gomben

A blue ribbon panel of local scientists and theologians has chosen the recipient of the first annual Best Monday Night Margarita in Moscow award.

The winner, on points, is Mingles.

Margaritas mixed at Mingles scored well in most every category, edging out Johnnie's Las Hadas and outdistancing The Garden.

For achieving the proper ratio of alcohol to mixer, Mingles scored nine of a possible 10. Johnnie's scored 8.5 while The Garden scored a mediocre five. Margaritas from The Garden tasted too watery to four of the five judges, with one judge noting that the drinks were "lacking something" in alcohol content.

However, it should be noted that Garden margaritas taste exquisite when mixed with freshly-baked chocolate chip cookies. Such a combination has a curious exotic/domestic appeal, like a large pizza with sausage and pineapple.

Unfortunately, The Garden portion of the competition was marred by an incident of sexism. The female judges who ordered strawberry margaritas were treated to a dab of whipped cream atop their drinks. The men's drinks were served creamless.

However, no legal action is pending.

When creating the best margarita, bartenders should remember to balance the sweetness and the tartness so as not to upset the delicate constitutions of many drinkers. At this task all three establishments were adept. The Garden received a score of 7.5, Johnnie's was awarded an eight and Mingles came through with a well-deserved nine.

There is more to a margarita than the flavorful slush that swishes around the bottom of a glass. The presentation of the drink to the customer and the general attitude of the server are important as well. Although points were deducted from Johnnie's for using a margarita mix, it still walked away with the highest rating in the presentation category.

Johnnie's was the only one of the three participants to actually mix the drinks in front of the customers. The drinks, which were presented with a certain south-of-the-border charm, included paper and toothpick Mexican flags. It was a nice, authentic touch that impressed all the judges. Accordingly, Johnnie's received a nine.

Not far behind was the server at Mingles, who earned an 8.5 on the strength of taking drink orders almost immediately after the judges entered the bar. The service at The Garden merited a score of four — the lowest in any category for any bar — due to the long wait even though the bar was uncrowded. The waitress herself scored a solid 9.6 from the male judges.

Whoo-ee!

The final category was value for the dollar, which took into account price as well as quality. Despite the concern of some judges, The Garden was awarded a respectable 7.5. Mingles and Johnnie's both garnered eights.

Congratulations are in order for Mingles, this year's bottom's up winner of the Best Monday Night Margarita in Moscow.

Wilson works well with pizza

By DEANN NORTHAM
Contributing Writer

"There's no worst part - it's all good," said Dennis Wilson about Moscow's Pizza Perfection.

Wilson bought out the last owner of the pizza place and took over ownership last April. Ever since then he's been having fun.

"We've made some changes," said Wilson. They changed the "two-for-one carryout special" from a once in a while deal to an everyday special. What this means is a customer can come into the shop and buy two pizzas for the price of one - anytime.

Wilson has also designed new boxes for the shop, and has brought in some new pizzas. "People were asking for them," he said, about the new taco, barbecue, bacon cheeseburger, and meat market pizzas. "They are going over really good, quicker than I thought they would."

Wilson said he does not pay attention to competitor's advertisements which say their pizzas are bigger. "I don't worry about advertisements. I pay attention to my customers and try to keep them happy." However, he

Pizza plunderers pick a perfect pepperoni pie

Review by Chris Miller

Pizza has something no other meal or beverage has — it's own place in the Yellow Pages.

Hamburgers don't, steaks don't, lobsters don't and even beer can't lay claim to that prestigious honor. After all, what do most college students order when they miss dinner or are too lazy to cook? (The answer is self-explanatory.)

In the on-going quest for great pie, this reporter and two assistants, UI students Cindy Smith and Teresa Batt, compiled data from six businesses. The pizzas tested were small pepperoni pizzas submitted by each business.

Important Qualification: This testing procedure is not intended to compete with Consumer Reports or a robot. This test is designed to provide a look at pizza possibilities.

Pizza Pipeline, 882-8808:

■ Pepperoni Count: 24, flavor-packed.

■ Diameter and Thickness: 11.9 inches, 0.5 inches, respectively.

■ Wow! Factor: Nothing to get excited about unless you haven't seen food for three days.

■ Flavor: Best sauce, cheese, pepperoni "pep" combination (tied with Rathaus).

■ Crust: All-around average, nothing spectacular, but it doesn't detract.

■ Morning After: Winner by far. Flavor and texture retention will bring you back for another midnight affair.

■ Cost and Deals: Regular one-topping small — $7.00. Specials everyday (call for details). A large two-topper with two free pops is their best deal for $8.00. Lunch phenomena is 50-cent slices from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. every day.

■ Verdict: Tough to beat. Dominos, 883-1555:

■ Pepperoni Count: 4 per slice, 24 total.

■ Diameter and Thickness: 10.0 inches, 0.75 inches.

■ Wow! Factor: "Very appealing. The pepperonis are strategically placed on each piece."—Smith.

■ Flavor: doesn't jump out and bite your tongue, but the sauce has a "subliminal flavor."

■ Crust: dominant crust, but "There's too much. I fill up on crust too quick."—Batt.

■ Morning After: Crust gets chewy. Flavor retention is passable until 8:00 a.m.

■ Cost and Deals: Regular one-topping small—$5.00, every Tuesday larges go for the price of a small, every Thursday a medium pepperoni with double cheese is $5.00.

■ Verdict: Well-rounded pizza.

Pizza Hut, 882-0444:

Note: The judging is based only on the pan pizza.

■ Diameter and Thickness: 9.0 inches and 1.0 inch average (smallest pizza tested).

■ Flavor: Slightly bland, crust detracted from flavor.

■ Wow! factor: Hut pizza has its own snazzy look.

■ Crust: Super-supreme crust, crunch, taste, texture — they're all there.

■ Morning After: Looks like hell, definitely one-night stand material and slip out the back door.

■ Cost and Deals: Test pizza — $7.44. Everyday order any pizza and get a second of equal or lesser value at half-price. Few super college-student-cheap deals, but they show up every now and then in some papers, also accepts coupons from other national chains like Godfather's and Dominos. Most expensive pizza tested.

■ Verdict: Outstanding dine-in; falls short on delivery. Branegan's, 883-3333:

■ Pepperoni Count: 30, placed neatly in concentric circles, pleasant and relaxing in appearance.

■ Diameter and Thickness: 12.0 inches and 0.75 inches ave.

■ Wow! Factor: "It looks like a pizza out of a cartoon."—Batt. "Like a ninja-turtle pizza—Cowabunga Dude!"—Smith

■ Flavor: Less filling, but tastes great, (tied with Dominos).

■ Crust: "Card-boardy" but lands nicely on the taste buds (#1 crust flavor).

■ Morning After: Decent flavor retention, definitely deserves another date.

■ Cost and Deals: Test pizza—$7.28. Two free pops with delivery, free pop and bag of chips with sandwich delivery. Most popular deal is Wednesday all-you-can-eat for $4.19 from 5 to 9 p.m.

■ Verdict: Great place for on-location chowing.

Rathaus, 882-4633:

■ Pepperoni Count: A whopping 81!

■ Diameter and Thickness: 12.0 inches and 0.5 inches.

■ Wow! Factor: Ugg. Low wow factor—large amount of pepperoni makes it look like something out of a horror movie.

■ Flavor: Surprisingly excellent taste, spicy and different. "It has lots of oregano...for the spicier appetite."—Batt. "Ooh, I think the sauce is good!"—Smith.

■ Crust: Burnt slightly along one edge. Sauce and pepperoni overpowered crust.

■ Morning After: Good flavor retention, but looks totally unappealing

■ Cost and Deals: Test pizza — $5.62. Will take coupons from any store. Wednesday all-you-can-eat pizza, spaghetti, salad, and garlic bread for $3.95.

■ Verdict: Packed with flavor.

Pizza Perfection, 882-1111.

■ Pepperoni Count: Impossible to count without defacing pizza

■ Diameter and Thickness: 12.5 inches, 1.0 inches, overall largest small pizza tested.

■ Wow! Factor: Ear-blasting applause, "It's humongous!"—Smith great color, size, and perfect random pepperoni placement.

■ Flavor: a tad tame, but lots of cheese. "A lot of cheddar taste."—Batt.

■ Crust: Thick crust, but dominated by pepperoni and cheese.

■ Morning After: poor flavor retention, not a good one to kiss at 5 a.m.

■ Cost and Deals: $7.80 for a small one-item. Buy one get one free, everyday carryout special, coupons galore, two free pops on delivery and carryout.

■ Verdict: Largest pizza for least price.

Thai Pavillion: a winner

Review by Shari Ireton

One of my best friend's mother is Thai and I love her cooking. My father takes me to some of the best Thai restaurants in Washington D.C., but thus far I have been disappointed by the local oriental restaurants.

My boyfriend and I even drove to Spokane to eat Thai food. The only one we found had cheap pink vinyl upholstery and a Karaoke contest going on. So, when we first dined at the Thai Pavillion in Pullman, we didn't really know what to expect.

But famous for its authentic Thai cooking, the Thai Pavillion in Pullman is definitely worth a visit. Open for four years, the restaurant is tucked away on Paradise Street. And while the outside may not look oriental, the cuisine certainly is.

"I'd say we're probably comparable to the other oriental restaurants," said manager Stacey Rockey, who graduated from Washington State University in hotel and restaurant management.

The Thai Pavillion prides itself on preparing all fresh vegetables, having no monosodium glutamate in their cooking and using fresh chicken. Rockey said that most oriental restaurants use the flavorless pre-deep-fat-fried chicken and just reheat it for their dishes.

The Thai Pavillion has one Thai cook, another who is trained in Thai cooking and both owners are Thai.

Many people think of Thai food as being a bit unusual, and it is. The Thai Pavillion won't disappoint the curious customer. According to Rockey, the two most unusual dishes are the three flavor fish, which is cooked and served whole, and the stir fry bean thread.

Walking into the Thai Pavillion we passed a couple who was leaving the restaurant and asked them how the food was.

"It's great," the woman replied, "we come here every week because they have the best vegetarian dishes." Rockey said that they "do a lot of vegetarian dishes" and most items on the menu can have tofu substituted for the meat.

Once in the restaurant we noticed there weren't any other clients, but figured we could brave anything. I ordered spring rolls for an appetizer, something that is a must when I eat Thai food. The spring roll was a delicious vegetable mix stuffed in a delicate and crispy wrapper. It was served with a spicy, but delectable dipping sauce.

For the main dish, we ordered the ginger chicken, which Rockey says is popular. Jasmine rice is served along with all main dishes at the Thai Pavillion. Along with our dinner we had Thai beer, Siam Ale and Singha, which I recommend highly.

Our dinner totaled only about $20 and was worth every penny. My biggest impression of the Thai Pavillion was that the cuisine was authentic. Rocky said that the owner, Tara Silpakit, works hard to keep the recipes like his mother's, who was a native of Thailand.

It may be hard to find good oriental food on the Palouse, but if Asian cuisine lovers look in the right places they may be surprised. The Thai Pavillion takes reservations and will do parties of up to 20 people.

Review by Pete Gomben

At the Smoke House bar in Troy, beer is 75 cents a mug during happy hour and a game of pool costs only a quarter.

Interesting conversation is always free.

Visitors to the Smoke House should be ready to discuss any one of a number of stimulating topics, including the presidential race, social philosophy and The Story of O.

One patron was recently overheard bragging about breaking a coffee table over someone's head. "It was a felony," he said, referring to the deed. "I could get six months if the lies work." No elaboration was given as to whether the lies were his own or someone else's.

The Smoke House, along with the Troy Tavern just a few doors down, are the first — or last, depending on which way you go — stops on the infamous Bovill Run. Both establishments offer a pleasant escape from the phony, urban "wannabe" environment of a few Moscow bars.

Although both bars offer an atmosphere above and beyond the haze of burning Marlboros, and although both have elk and deer antlers lining the walls like coat racks, the overall decor of the two bars is remarkably different.

The Smoke House has a full-length mirror behind the bar, just like a saloon is supposed to. Patrons can look into their own bloodshot eyes to see when they've had enough.

It also has a dozen or so posters of tanned, sweat-soaked, buxom women, some straddling motorcycles, some reclining on the hoods of cars and some just standing proudly, with only a few threads separating them from total nakedness.

The Troy Tavern, on the other hand, has a black velvet painting of Willie Nelson.

Few people may realize this, but the Tavern is also the home of the biggest mountain fresh Rainier beer ever captured, and they have the bottle cap mounted on the wall like a trophy elk to prove it. According to the plaque, the critter was seven feet, two inches tall and measured 94 gallons.

The Tavern also has video games, including one called "Cherry Master." Every time a player wins at Cherry Master, a video woman sheds another layer of clothes and assumes different positions until she is ... well, use your imagination.

According to the large orange and black sticker on the front of the game, it is to be used "for amusement only." Judging from the grins on the faces of some men playing the game, it can be quite amusing.

Although there are no dress codes for entering either bar, wearing a plaid flannel shirt, herbicide hat and facial hair — men only — is a good idea. Chewing tobacco is not mandatory, but it is suggested.

Neither the Tavern nor the Smoke House have expansive dance floors and mirrored disco balls that twirl to the sound of Billboard's Top 40. Both have only juke boxes chock full of country and Western hits. That is part of their magnetism.

believes his 28 inch monster pizza is the largest one around.

Wilson said the best part of his job is seeing the customers come in for their pizzas. He likes to see them happy. "I also enjoy the dinner rush, when people are flying and running around. That's when it's fun, when it gets busy," he said.

One of his employees, Corey Sinclair, speaks highly of Pizza Perfection. "I always liked the pizza. I used to work for another pizza place in town, but I always ordered pizza from here." Sinclair said this was part of the reason he switched jobs.

Sinclair said he enjoys working for Wilson. "He's a lot of fun to work for - fair and credible." Sinclair has been working at Pizza Perfection for close to three months. His favorite part of the job is meeting new people. The worst is cutting onions. "They make your eyes water and your hands stink," he said. "They're great on pizza, but hell to cut."

Deja vu:
*it's a classic
fall classic*

COMMENTARY

The 1992 World Series has arrived, and the fall classic begins this Saturday at Fulton County Stadium in Atlanta, Georgia.

The two teams, the NL West champion Atlanta Braves and the AL East, will meet for the first time as the World Series boasts its first ever Canadian team. The Blue Jays made it to the big dance by beating the Oakland Athletics in six games, and the Braves did it in dramatic fashion by beating the Pittsburgh Pirates in the bottom of the ninth in Game 7.

It's a World Series that has all the potential to match last year's Minnesota-Atlanta seven game thriller, so here's an inside look at this year's two teams:

Last year the Atlanta Braves lost a heartbreaker to the Minnesota Twins in game seven of the World Series when Kirby Puckett raked a double to the centerfield wall to bring in the game winning run in the bottom of the ninth. This year anything less than a World Series Championship by the Braves would be considered a failure to the "Tomahawk-Chop" faithful.

In the NLCS, the Braves faced the Pirates for the second straight year, and once again the two battled to a game seven. Behind 3-games-to-1 to the Braves, the Pirates won game five at home, and game six 13-4 in Atlanta to force a game seven. Going into the bottom of the ninth with a 2-0 lead, the series was there for Pittsburgh's taking. The Pirates, though, played "vintage game-seven-Pirate-baseball," and once again choked away their series hopes. It's now three years in a row the Bucs have won the NL East, and three years now they've not made it to the series.

Starting with pitching, this series should be one of the most well-pitched in recent history. Atlanta starters John Smoltz, Tom Glavine, Charlie Leibrandt and Steve Avery are the best in the National league. Smoltz went 2-0 against Pittsburgh's Doug Drabek in game's one and four, and although he didn't get the win in game seven, his pitching was spectacular throughout nonetheless. Atlanta also has reliever Jeff Reardon, who got his 300th save this year with the Boston Red Sox, coming in to finish up in the late innings.

Eagles on Idaho's endangered list

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

As is the case with tax returns in April, Idaho is looking for a little pay-back of their own in October.

Tomorrow afternoon the No. 3 ranked 5-0 Vandals will face the No. 16 ranked 4-1 Eagles of Eastern Washington in a highly anticipated Big Sky Conference match-up. Game time is set for 1:05 p.m. at EWU's sold-out Woodward Stadium.

Whoever wins the game will hold their own destiny for the Big Sky title with an undefeated league record. Idaho's 2-0 conference record puts them in second place, while the Eagles are perched at the top of the BSC with a 3-0 record.

"It's championship week," Idaho defensive tackle John Simon said after Tuesday's practice. "The attitude on this team is serious."

Not only is the conference title most likely on the line (i.e. two of last three championship seasons have boasted a team that went undefeated in league play with Idaho in '89, and Nevada in '91), but a revenge factor as well. Last year EWU came to Moscow with a 2-5 record, and spoiled Idaho's homecoming game with a 34-31 win in double overtime.

That loss hasn't been forgotten. "We've been thinking about it (last year's loss) for a year," Idaho head coach John L. Smith said. "I'm sure it's eating at our kids, and I know it's eating at our coaches. That's the good thing about football—you can wipe away a loss the next year."

Of Idaho's five losses in '91, four of those opponents are on this year's schedule. Idaho already wiped the Weber State slate clean with a home win over WSU four weeks ago, and with the exception of Nevada, the Vandals get rematches with EWU, Northern Iowa, and the University of Montana. But this week the focus is completely on EWU.

"Idaho State (last week's opponent) was over the minute we walked off the field," Smith said. "It was a good win, and a nice win because it was homecoming, but immediately in the locker room the attention was on Eastern."

Attention is something that EWU quarterback Mark Tenneson has been getting plenty of. While being looked at by NFL scouts this season, the senior has thrown for 1,314 yards, and 12 touchdowns in five games. Tenneson currently ranks 10th in the country in passing efficiency, and is eighth in total offense. Idaho, however, ranks first in the conference in pass efficiency defense allowing just four touchdowns through the air, while grabbing nine interceptions. In contrast, EWU places second in the BSC only behind Idaho in averaging 444.6 passing yards per game. EWU is also first just ahead of Idaho in passing offense averaging 315.3 ypg.

"Anytime he (Tenneson) gets a hot hand he has a chance to win the ball game," Smith said.

Hot is an accurate description of the EWU rushing defense as they'll look to keep Idaho's running game luke warm. The Eagles are not only first in the conference in rushing defense, but also first in I-AA. EWU gives up only 52.2 yards on the ground per game, while Idaho's offense generates a league best 201.6 yards of rushing.

"They have a good, sound, solid defense," Smith said. "Their two defensive ends are real active, and they've got some good linebackers and defensive backs as well."

Idaho will continue to go with their mix of the run and the pass which has proved successful in their first five games. Quarterback Doug Nussmeier had another fine performance against ISU last week as he completed 28-42 passes for 350 yards, and tied a school record by throwing six touchdowns. This season the junior has thrown a league best 14 touchdowns, and is second with 1,413 passing yards. His main target against ISU was again Yo Murphy who pulled down a career high nine receptions for 171 yards and four of Nussmeier's touchdowns. In '92 Murphy has a league best 621 yards, and is second in the BSC with six total touchdowns. In Idaho's ground game, running back Sherriden May has 482 yards on

Vandals tackle southern Idaho teams

After not having a home match in nearly a month, the University of Idaho volleyball team looks forward to home-sweet-home this weekend as it entertains Idaho State and Boise State in Big Sky play.

Tonight the Vandals host the Bengals of ISU at 7:30 p.m. Despite being 1-4 in conference and 4-13 overall, Hilbert stressed against overlooking such this team.

"Idaho St. is a very physical team that is strong in blocking and hitting," said Hilbert. "Individually, we are going to try to key on (senior outside hitter) Chantelle Sharp, (senior outside hitter) Kristi Parrish, and (senior middle blocker) Julie Barner."

Jessica Puckett, who leads the Vandals in kills with 149, is more inclined to look at the Bengals as a whole rather than at any individual players.

"We have to focus on our game plan, and so when we go out there, we try to look at the whole team rather than one individual," said Puckett.

Following Friday night's match with ISU, Boise St. rolls into town for a key Saturday match-up that also starts at 7:30 p.m. in Memorial Gym.

The Broncos' conference record is at 3-2, which is only one game behind Idaho's third-place mark of 4-1.

Hilbert said the Broncos offer a much different look than the Bengals in that they are an excellent defensive and transition team. He said Boise standouts include junior middle blocker Kristen Dutto, who shared 1990's conference freshman of the year award with Idaho's Nancy Wicks, and senior outside hitter Tina Harris.

The Vandals, who are 13-3 overall following last weekend's split with Northern Arizona and Weber St., worked hard on conditioning in practice this week, according to Puckett.

"At least myself, personally, I thought I was a little out of shape last weekend," said Puckett. "Coach really conditioned us hard this week to prepare for these matches. I think we are confident and ready to play."

At the plate, the Braves have their share of power hitters, as well as contact hitters. Leftfielder Ron Gant, a powerful inside-pitch hitter, started the NLCS on fire (which included a grand slam), but cooled down as Pirate's pitching threw away from him. Most Valuable Player candidate Terry Pendleton, right-fielder Dave Justice, and first baseman Sid Bream will have to continue to pull their weight for the Braves to stand a chance.

The "Pittsburgh Pirates of the American League." That's the title that could be attributed to the Toronto Blue Jays before their 9-2 victory over the A's to win their first ALCS. In 1985 the Jays choked away a 3-1 lead to the Kansas City Royals, in '89 they lost to the A's, and last year they fell to the champion Twins. This season the Jays were in perfect position to oust the rival A's.

On the mound the Jays have some fine pitching of their own. Jack Morris, who came to Toronto from last year's champion Twins team, will lead the Jay's attack. Juan Guzman pitched a gem in game six against the A's by throwing eight strikeouts, and allowing one run. Also in the rotation will be Jimmy Key, and the newly acquired David Cone from the Mets.

With the stick, Toronto has a plethora of power hitting. Dave Winfield, Devon White, Joe Carter, John Olerud, and the ALCS MVP, Roberto Alomar, can all put the ball out in a hurry.

This match-up should go seven games, and with the emotional high the Braves are riding, the "Chop" won't fail again as the Braves win their first ever World Series.

the season, and leads the league in scoring with 10 touchdowns, which ranks fourth in the nation.

Idaho's offensive scheme parody's that of EWU's, which unseats Smith.

"The thing that worries me about this team (EWU) is their balanced attack," Smith said. "Most teams we've seen so far we could say 'okay, we'll take away either the run or the pass, and take our chances with the other.' With this team we can't do that."

Leading EWU's ground game will be freshman running back David Lewis. Lewis is currently third behind May with 76.6 running ypg, and four touchdowns. Tenneson's main receiver will be Tony Brooks. The senior has caught a league best seven touchdowns, and is third with 507 receiving yards.

With a possible No. 1-No. 2 match-up next week against Northern Iowa looming in the distance, Smith made no hints that his team is looking beyond this week's task at hand.

"Whoever wins this game will definitely be in the drivers seat," Smith said. "I think our players are tuned in, and have to be tuned in, for Eastern Washington."

Cross country hosts invitational

The mens and womens track team will host the Idaho Invitational at the UI golf course this Saturday. The women will run at 10:30 a.m., and the men at 11:00 a.m.

The men will run an 8,000 meter run, while the women will do a 5,000 meter. Women's head coach Scott Lorek said the 8th annual event will be challenging for his team because they're missing three of their top five runners.

"Lauren Jefferson and Laura Moore won't run, and Angie Falk might not run," Lorek said. "Lauren and Angie are out with illness, and Laura's back is bothering her so she's taking this meet off."

Due to his lack of depth this week, Lorek will be looking for more improvement from his middle runners.

"We're really looking at this meet as an individual improvement meet," Lorek said. "It's an important race in only that we're getting to the stepping stones of the season. We also haven't picked our top seven for Salt Lake City (district championships) yet, so these last two meets will decide who'll be going," Lorek said.

Lorek said that although the team will be in dire straits without three of their best, their absence won't threaten their top positions.

"Fortunately for the people not running, their slots have basically been nailed down, so those people aren't in the questionable area," Lorek said.

Idaho will be looking for different leaders this week against the likes of Washington State and Eastern Washington. Lorek feels that he's been getting good performances from his three, four, and five runners, but the team needs to produce something out of their one and two slots.

"Robin Betz has been coming along real well, Tara Edwards is on the verge of being a dominant person in our top five, and we need Robyn Slate to keep running the way she has been," Lorek said. "Kerry Huss ran her first race last week in Pullman, and she's just now getting back so these next two races will be

This will be Idaho's fifth meet of the season, and the only one that will be held in Moscow. With a chance to run in front of some home support, Lorek is looking forward to this weekend's race from a fan's point of view.

"We're going to get a lot of benefits (this weekend), but team scores isn't one of them," Lorek said. "Our home meet is important to us so the students, and community can come see us compete. We usually get a good turn-out, and I think it'll be the toughest course we run this year."

Also competing in the race will be Central Washington University, Gonzaga University, North Idaho College, University of Portland, Moscow USA on the men's side, and an Idaho alumni team in the women's race.

Lorek stated that with an inexperienced squad, the only way for improvement is to continue running.

"We're just real young so this season will be a year long project," Lorek said.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

IF YOU THOUGHT COLLEGE WAS EXPENSIVE, TRY PUTTING YOURSELF THROUGH RETIREMENT.

Think about supporting yourself for twenty-five, thirty years or longer in retirement. It might be the greatest financial test you'll ever face. Fortunately, you have one valuable asset in your favor. Time.

Time to take advantage of tax-deferral. Time for your money to grow.

But starting early is key. Consider this: if you begin saving just $100 a month at age thirty, you can accumulate $192,539* by the time you reach age sixty-five. Wait ten years and you'd need to set aside $227 a month to reach the same goal.

At TIAA-CREF, we not only understand the value of starting early, we can help make it possible—with flexible retirement and tax-deferred annuity plans, a diverse portfolio of investment choices, and a record of personal service that spans 75 years.

Over a million people in education and research are already enrolled in America's largest retirement system. Find out how easy it is to join them. Call today and learn how simple it is to put yourself through retirement when you have time and TIAA-CREF on your side.

UI fraternity keeps "road trip" tradition alive

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

It started with a bet in 1938, and continued through rain or shine for nearly 40 years.

In the fall of '38, Argonaut sports editor William McGowan perceived a hint of arrogance among the sports figures of rival Washington State College (now Washington St. University). He then sat down and wrote a column that challenged Evergreen sports editor, Lloyd Salt, to a friendly wager.

If the Cougars happened to lose to their Northwest Conference rivals, Salt would have to make the 9-mile hike over to Moscow on the old Pullman highway. If the Cougars happened to win, McGowan would make the same walk. McGowan further sweetened the pot by stating that the loser would shine the shoes of the winning football coach and his team.

Then there was the beard aspect of the wager.

The final part of the wager claimed that McGowan or Salt would have to grow a beard until Christmas vacation, which would give the beard a good month of growth. McGowan added that in those days, a gentleman who wasn't clean-shaven was likened to a tramp or a bum.

"I knew that with a beard, there was no way my girlfriend would want to marry me," McGowan said. "But of course, we still ended up getting married later on."

Game day dawned cloudy and wet, and during the game at Idaho's old Neal Stadium, snow started coming down in flurries. McGowan remembers the game was largely played in a driving snowstorm, and the players were literally trudging through snow that was ankle- or knee-deep.

It was not to be for the Vandals and McGowan as the Cougars beat Idaho 12-0, and so on the following Wednesday, McGowan and fellow Argonaut sports writer Norman Larkin trudged through snow to meet Cougar football coach Babe Hollingberry, an exuberant Salt and hundreds of Cougar supporters. After all was said and done, McGowan had a nice beard and was something of an expert at polishing shoes.

The "Loser's Walk" continued for many years, and in 1954, Life magazine immortalized the event by giving it a three-page photo spread. In that particular year, Idaho happened to beat Washington St., and the magazine story chronicled the walk to Moscow by several of the Cougar faithful.

The event sadly came to a close in 1978 as Idaho was no longer a match for Washington St, which had moved to the Pac-10 Conference. After the 28-0 loss to the Cougs, nobody from Moscow made the trip. "There just isn't the competition between the teams like there once was," said then-Vandal football coach Jerry Davitch.

In 1989, as Idaho celebrated its centennial, the Cougars and Vandals just happened to be meeting for a football game. McGowan recalls being asked by a member of the Idaho alumni office member if he would like to walk to the Idaho-Washington border with newly-hired university president Elisabeth Zinser and some Idaho students.

McGowan accepted the request and after walking to the border with his Idaho entourage, WSU President Sam Smith joined them to participate in a tree-planting ceremony. Festivities also included a drive around Martin Stadium in an antique car.

"It was sort of the 50th anniversary of the 'Loser's walk' that we took," he remembers fondly. "I still have good friends write me and give me a hard time, saying I am to blame for them walking to Pullman every year."

Now it's time for a new tradition.

Since joining the Big Sky Conference in 1987, Eastern Washington University has become one of UI's bigger rivals, and last year may have intensified matters when EWU beat Idaho 34-31 in double overtime. To add injury to insult, the Eagles' victory occurred on Idaho's homecoming weekend.

Before last year's game even started, members of EWU's Beta Theta Pi fraternity had gathered pledges for the first-annual Roadwarrior Football Run and were lugging a football to the Beta house in Moscow. It was part of the house's philanthropic effort to raise money for the Wishing Star Foundation.

The current president of Eastern's Beta house, Shane Couch, remembers the conditions as being wet last year.

"Yeah, we had nine or 10 guys who ran all the way to Moscow," said Couch. "It was pretty wet the whole way down, but it was worth it because of the good cause."

Strait on the road to Beasley Coliseum

By PETE GOMBEN
Associate Editor

George Strait, a country and Western superstar who has recently taken his good looks to the silver screen, will be on the Palouse Sunday evening to deal out music with his Ace in the Hole Band.

Strait, the 1989 and 1990 Country Music Association Entertainer of the Year, will perform at the Beasley Coliseum.

He first hit the charts in 1981 with the song "Unwound" and has been a fixture ever since. Strait has 22 number one singles to his credit, in addition to 10 gold and four platinum albums. Ocean Front Property, released in 1987, created chart history by being the first album to debut at number one on the billboard country album chart.

Some of his better-known hits include "Nobody in His Right Mind Would Have Left Her," "Let's Fall to Pieces Together" and "All My Ex's Live in Texas."

Strait has two recent album releases, Holdin' My Own and Pure Country, the soundtrack from the movie with the same name.

Success didn't come easy for Strait. During a stint in the Army he taught himself how to play the guitar. He then returned to his native Texas to attend Southwest Texas State University, earning a degree in agricultural education.

By 1979 Strait was managing a ranch and tending to more than 1,000 head of cattle. In the evenings, after a long day's work, he and his band played at honky tonks and dance halls throughout southwest Texas. At the time, his unique blend of Western swing, traditional honky tonk and love ballads were considered to be out of style by some.

When he was unable to break into the music business, he accepted a job with a company that designed cattle pens. He wound up reconsidering his decision and gave the pursuit of a career in music one more year.

It was this decision that would send him on his way "strait" to the top. He eventually signed a recording contract with MCA.

From his first release, Strait has been instrumental in returning country music to its roots, as well as providing opportunities for new talent to get a foothold in the industry. He has parlayed his success as a singer into the leading role in Pure Country, a movie about a country singer co-starring Lesley Ann Warren and newcomer Isabel Glasser.

According to one reviewer, although the movie probably won't make most film critics' top 10, it contains effective acting and provides a glimpse at the way things were before commercialization struck the entertainment industry.

Strait is philosophical when recalling the time he almost gave up on country music. "Sometimes I think about what I'd be doing today if I hadn't had the opportunity to sign with MCA," he says.

"I might have been doing something in agriculture. Hopefully, it would have been, because I love to work with horses and cattle and to be outside."

With a decade of stardom already tucked under his rodeo belt buckle, Strait is looking forward to the next 10 years.

"I'm still having a great time, still fired up about the country music business and about singing. I never want to get away from country music."

Singer/songwriter Lionel Cartwright will open the show at Beasley 7:30 p.m. Sunday. Reserved tickets are $18.50 and can be purchased at the Beasley Coliseum box office and at all G&B Select-a-Seat outlets. Tickets can also be purchased by phone by calling 1-800-325-SEAT.

Hartung offers hilarious look at unusual family

Review by Jackie Woods

The performers shine in the University of Idaho theatre production of "You Can't Take It With You," which is currently playing at the Hartung.

The comedy takes the audience into the home of Martin 'Grandpa' Vanderhof for a hilarious glimpse at his unusual family. The entire cast did an extraordinary job, but there were three standout performances that deserve mentioning.

Don Horton, who plays Grandpa Vanderhof, is a pleasure to watch. He portrays the family matriarch with a unique comedy timing, making his lines come alive. In the final act, Horton gives his 'you can't take it with you' money speech with a depth of emotion that illuminates this main message. Perfectly cast for the role, Horton uses a multitude of expressions to engage the audience in laughter. And laugh they did. Horton could break up the audience with as little as a glance and a wink skyward to God after he resolved a sticky situation.

A second strong performance came from Tyson Stoianoff as Donald. Stoianoff has tremendous stage charisma that added to the evening fun. Playing the maid's boyfriend, Stoianoff made the most of his comedy-filled lines. Relaxed and natural, Stoianoff has also perfected the use of expressions to bring life to his character. A well placed smile by Stoianoff is all it took to fill the theatre with laughter. Hopefully, we will see more of Stoianoff in future productions at the UI.

My favorite performance of the evening, however, came from Eric Jacobson, who played the Russian Dance Instructor Boris Kolenkov. Jacobson's body language and expressions enveloped the character. Chest out, head up proudly, feet poised, Jacobson for a time became Russian. Most impressive was his professional imitation of a Russian accent. In a low, booming voice, Jacobson rolled his 'R's to perfection.

Loud applause during his curtain call proved this theatre student to be an audience favorite.

Behind the scenes, the set and costume designers for the production should take a well deserved bow for reproducing a 1930's feeling for the play. Light blue walls were adorned with old black and white photos from the 1900s. A center stage trap door for the 'basement firework experiments' was set up perfectly for the occasional emission of billowing puffs of smoke. The costumes, especially the gorgeous gold and lace evening gown of the Russian duchess, added to the nostalgic mood.

Another round of applause should go to the director, Fred Chapman, for his staging of the comedy. When the J-Men (Justice Dept) appear, there is a spectacular, frantic scene with fire flashing, and actors moving all over the stage that is visually engaging. In the 'game' scene, the actors sit center stage and face the audience, bringing them into their imaginary world.

The play, full of talented actors and special effects, continues tonight, Oct. 17, 22, 23 and 24 at 8:00 p.m. Matinee performances are Oct. 18 and 25 at 2:00 p.m.

Pullman bar struck by music of North Carolina's Blind Melon

Review by Doug Taylor

The route to this particular watering hole isn't normal. The neon sign beckoning outside the front entrance is normal enough, but beyond this, things get a little hazy. An unilluminated staircase meanders downward, and the only familiar sensory item is the blaring music emerging from an unknown source.

You are now in The Cavern in Pullman.

Normal also doesn't describe the live music because this bar has long been a magnet for "alternative" (please no groans) bands, and the Oct. 14 bill featuring Chapter 12, The Deflowers and Blind Melon was no exception.

The anticipation for this concert was greater than most according to the gurus who haunt the place. They indicated that Blind Melon was about to go big.

Coming from such diverse areas as Indiana and Mississippi, the band ended up meshing in the rough terrain of L.A. in 1990.

A demo tape found its way into the paws of a record industry wolf, and soon the band was inundated with record offers. Eventually settling on Capitol Records, the band bailed to Durham, North Carolina to make its first record after tiring of L.A.'s stuffiness.

The album, Blind Melon, has been making a lot of noise in the country. MTV has been giving airplay to "Dear Ol' Dad," and Rolling Stone did a large write-up on the band in the Oct. 1 issue. Enough compliments — there were two other bands to see.

Pullman/Seattle band Chapter 12 opened the show. The band's 45-minute set was fairly inspired, but vocalist Peter Nohle's travel arrangements are the real story.

While the other three members of Chapter 12 go to school in Pullman, Nohle attends the University of Washington. It creates some interesting practice times.

"Peter is kind of a freak of nature," drummer David Little said. "He carries a full load of classes in Seattle, has a 4.0 GPA, and then comes over here for two weeks of practice."

Currently on Jerden Records, the band seemed to be in complete agreement that if a serious record deal ever came along, school would be ancient history.

Seattle's The Deflowers rolled onto the stage immediately after Chapter 12 and launched into a set some people whispered was the highlight of the evening.

Before their set, vocalist Chris Martin described the band as power pop, which left doubt in the mind of at least one audience member.

Any doubts were laid aside once the band hit the stage. They roared through their 30-minute set with a precision and tone sounding more like vintage material from The Clash than power pop.

As a result, there were some audience grumbles when the band was told by a sound system dude that it had eight more minutes to play after being on stage for only 20 minutes.

Madison's madness

It's midterm time here at the university and several loyal Argonaut readers have taken it upon themselves to give my tenure as editor their midterm evaluations.

So far this semester I have been called a right-wing conservative and a flaming liberal. I have been named as a man-basher and a blatant sexist. I have been dubbed a dangerous feminist and a person with no regard for women's rights. I have been heralded as a bitch and an angel. I have been classified as a Democrat, a Republican, an Independent and a druid.

I have been told that this newspaper has never looked better. I have been told that this newspaper has never looked worse. I've been told that we have too much political coverage. I've been told we have too little political coverage.

Several male students and my grandmother have expressed displeasure with this column. Several other men and my female friends have said this column is a laugh-riot and they now wear Depends before reading it.

There are a few things that I feel need to be cleared up before we launch into the last half of the semester:

■ I do not, I repeat do not, hate men. Most men I know are wonderful, warm, caring individuals who truly make life a not-to-be-missed experience. I work with some of the greatest, sweetest, funniest men in the world and I would do almost anything for them. While in Moscow I've met some of the most charming, amusing and sensitive men that I know walk the planet Earth.

The men I have referred to in previous columns were specific examples of male behavior that I find undesirable. As a whole though, I think the male gender is just skippy.

■ My columns are an attempt at HUMOR. Some find it funny. Some do not. I don't want to change anyone's mind, beliefs or dietary habits. My columns are an attempt to look at the world with sarcastic vision in the hopes that people will get a giggle or two. Laughter is the best medicine but now many of you can see why I'm not applying to medical school.

■ Contrary to what several irate letter-writers seem to believe, I am not a cranky bitch who sits at home or trolls in bars waiting to encounter my knight on a white stallion. My social and personal lives are active, complete and happy, but thanks for your concern.

I find two things about all of this ironic. The first is that we have run several columns and editorials on abortion, politics, the environment and other social ills. These columns have received little if any response. I, however, write a few columns that are supposed to be funny and all of a sudden our mailman is getting a hernia and my office phone line is jammed. The other column writers are starting to feel unloved and downright ignored.

The second thing I find humorous is that anyone cares enough about my opinion on men, bathrooms, sex, Dan Quayle or anything else to get worked up about it. If you think I am an idiot (and many apparently do), why does my opinion matter?

My midterm evaluation from the readers has taught me two things. People are reading the Argonaut. And people are thinking about and responding to what they read, whether they agree or disagree.

It sounds like I am doing my job to me.

Keep those cards and letters coming folks. We're always happy to hear from you.

Chamber Music Series begins

The Chamber Music Series starts off this year with Sanford Sylvan, a baritone, Stephanie Friedman, a mezzo-soprano, and pianist David Breitman.

The trio will perform "The Spanish Songbook" by Hugo Wolf. The music portrays the different stages of love men and women experience throughout their lives.

Sylvan, who grew up in Long Island, N.Y., studied at Julliard Prep and the Manhattan School of Music. Sylvan was nominated for a 1990 Grammy for his recording of "The Wound Dresser."

Friedman has performed music ranging from Baroque to contemporary music, and is known best for her performances with "Pocket Opera," which is a performance group out of San Francisco.

Breitman, a native of Montreal, has appeared at the Aston Magna festival in New England, playing both classical and contemporary pieces.

This will be the sixth season of the Auditorium Chamber Music Series. Tickets are $9 for adults, $8 for senior citizens and $6 for students. The group appears Oct. 16 at 8 p.m. in the University Auditorium. Tickets may be purchased at Ticket Express (5-7212) or at the door.

McIntosh singin' 'Grizzlies Walking Upright'

By KARIN MASON
Staff Writer

ASUI Productions Coffeehouse presents Beth McIntosh tonight in the Student Union Building.

McIntosh plays the guitar and composes lyrics. She has her own unique songwriting style that tackles contemporary issues and speaks to both the mind and heart.

"Grand mountain peaks. Boiling fumerols. Grizzly bears. Our shrinking planet, the soul and the prayer of the species. Love, loss and laughter. Culture, mythology, personal struggle," is her music as described by a press release.

McIntosh spent 10 years of life in the wilderness intertwined with broad urban and rural exposure. She became a traveling songwriter to create the thoughtful messages she portrays through music. She gives out a strong positive message about recreating a mythology appropriate for our world.

After perfecting guitar at the Berklee College of Music in Boston, Mass., McIntosh appeared as the feature performer at colleges, folk societies and environmental gatherings all over the nation. She has performed with such big names as Emmylou Harris, Karla Bonoff, Rory Block, Leo Kottke, David Bromberg and Tom Rush.

The musician has received rave reviews of her performances all the way from Wellesley College in Massachusetts to Pacific University in Oregon.

McIntosh is based in Jackson, Wyo., and has won the Wyoming Performing Arts Fellowship three times. She has just finished her third album and second compact disc entitled, "Grizzlies Walking Upright."

The performer not only sings and plays the guitar, but she also relays her loving and environmentally conscious messages through lectures. Some of her topics include: "Women in Music," "Ethnomusicology," "Songwriting," and "Music and the Global Environmental Crisis."

Coffeehouse Chair Jan Proctor said the Coffeehouse presentations have definitely been successful so far this semester.

"There's more people there than just in the area (of the cafe). We have people sitting outside the walls of the cafe too. We seldom have a problem with turnout," she said.

Up next for the Coffeehouse presentations is another open-mike night. Proctor said it was so popular last time that it will be repeated on Halloween.

McIntosh will appear tonight in the Vandal Cafe at the Student Union Building. It will start at 8 p.m. with free admission and coffee.

Finally, it was time for Blind Melon to do battle. The three-deep row of moshers crowding the stage didn't come away disappointed as vocalist Shannon Hoon played all the band's material from grinders like "Paper Snatcher" to clangy ballads like "No Rain."

Roon worked the crowd effortlessly, and a good example was the wild cheers that erupted when he said, "So who says you can't have fun on a school night?"

One man who did a breathtaking nosedive from the front of the stage might have disagreed, but otherwise, there appeared to be more smiles than fatalities.

The gurus were right — Blind Melon will be big, but it wasn't the only band on Wednesday's venue that was capable of doing so.

This year when the Vandals travel to Cheney to settle the score from 1991, members of the UI Beta house will also return the favor when they lug a football up to Cheney. UI Beta Dan Holsclaw, who is the organizer of this year's run, said the name for the 1992 version of the run will still be deemed the Roadwarrior Football Run. Again, all proceeds go to the Wishing Star Program.

"We are trying to make an annual tradition of this thing so that the two Beta chapters take turns running it back and forth," said Holsclaw. "It's for a good cause, and it would be a shame for this to end."

According to Holsclaw, the Idaho Betas will be taking off early this morning and try to arrive in Cheney late tonight, so that they can present the ball to prominent members of EWU, including the school's athletic director.

Holsclaw said that if any individuals or organizations would like to show support and give a donation, simply mail it to the Beta Theta Pi fraternity in Moscow. The address is 727 Elm Street. Holsclaw said phone donations are also acceptable, and the house phone number is 885-6251.
