Convicted murderer still at large after local jail break

By SHARI IRETON
Assistant News Editor

A twice-convicted murderer escaped from the Latah County Jail Friday afternoon and is still at large.

Regular radio reports concerning the escape of William Andrew Davison, 33, kept Palouse residents informed on the escape Friday night, while police blocked off the main highways to and from the Moscow area.

Davison, of Plummer, Idaho, escaped from the jail's exercise yard at 3:50 p.m. according to Latah County Deputy Prosecutor Douglas Whitney. He told the Spokesman Review Davison was under "periodic visual contact, the last time being about five minutes before he was noticed missing."

Apparently, Davison escaped through a one-foot hole in the fence of the inner gate leading from the exercise yard to an outside walkway. When he reached the walkway, Davison then climbed over the outer gate that leads to Sixth and Adams streets.

Latah County Sheriff Ken Buxton said a witness made contact with them on Sunday and said he/she observed Davison leaving the jail by climbing over the gate from the exercise yard. The witness said there was a silver or gold Pontiac Sunbird with a man and women, both with long hair, sitting in the apartment parking lot across the street from the jail. Davison approached the vehicle, said the witness, and Buxton said "we are assuming that he did get in the vehicle." This information has led to a new approach in how the investigation will be run, he said.

Although police have made door to door searches in Moscow, they had another witness say that he was sighted in the Plummer/Worley area. They checked four separate residences in those towns and found nothing, said Buxton, but he suspects Davison might still be in the area.

Buxton said that they had the Bureau of Indian Affairs, US Marshall, Benewah County Sheriff, Latah County Sheriff, Clearwater County Sheriff and service personnel involved in the search. "The jurisdictional authority cooperation has been excellent today," said Buxton yesterday afternoon.

Davison was convicted Sept. 24 by a federal jury of murdering Victor Pierre on the Couer d'Alene Indian Reservation last November. The body of the 68-year-old Worley man was discovered in a trailer with several bullets in his head.

This incident was not Davison's first escape from authorities. Last May, Davison ran from an officer who was checking on a disabled vehicle. When the officer made contact with him, Davison ran. He was apprehended eight hours later and arrested for failing to appear in the Walla Walla County District Court on a fourth-degree murder charge.

When he was 14, Davison was convicted of robbing and beating to death 81-year-old Emma Johnson, also of Worley. He was tried as an adult and received 12 years in prison.

Davison, a Couer d'Alene Indian, is 5 feet 4 inches with collar length black hair and brown eyes. He weighs around 140 pounds and was last seen wearing blue overalls from the Latah County Jail.

MLCEDC takes stand against initiative

By TIM HELMKE
Staff Writer

The One Percent Initiative received another negative endorsement last week, this time from the Moscow-Latah County Economic Development Council.

The MLCEDC is a group of public and private entities which are working together to encourage economic growth in the Moscow-Latah County area. The MLCEDC also has a Board of Directors which works together for this growth. The Board of Directors is made up of 15 seats with private and public officials representing all of Latah County.

The board last Monday signed a resolution against the One Percent Initiative. The group's resolution cites several reasons for which they are against this initiative.

The board feels that the passage of the One Percent Initiative would negatively impact the University of Idaho, Latah County, and the cities of Latah County.

They feel that the passage would also hurt the school, cemetery, fire, library, recreation, road and highway, and sewer districts in Latah County.

The sources for the board's resolution predict that the negative impact would total over $7 million per year to the University of Idaho and over $2 million or nearly 16 percent of the total property tax budgets of the other districts.

B.J. Swanson, President of the MLCEDCB of Directors, said that they are working to "bring new businesses into the area and to keep the existing ones here." Swanson fears that the passage of the initiative would hurt the area and would work against the board.

The resolution states that the MLCEDC endorses that "the provision of basic infrastructure: water, wastewater treatment, streets, bridges and highways is absolutely essential to support commerce and economic development." Swanson backed up this by saying that if there is a decrease in quality of these districts, there will be less economic development in the state.

The resolution is also in favor of quality education in the state of Idaho. The resolution states "providing quality education to our citizens is imperative in order for the United States and the State of Idaho to compete in a global economy." With the passing of the initiative, the education level is predicted by the group to decrease.

The resolution concludes by encouraging voters to vote against the One Percent Initiative to ensure that the economic growth that is important to the Moscow-Latah County area as well as the State of Idaho. Swanson said that the opinions expressed through the Moscow-Latah County Economic Development Council are not necessarily the opinions of the businesses represented on the Board.

ALEX eases job hunt

By BRANDY CORGATELLI
Staff Writer

Job-seeking UI students don't have to go any further than the Student Union Building to find one.

The Idaho Department of Employment has stationed 15 Automated Labor EXchange machines throughout the state. The ALEX in the SUB furnishes up-to-date information on state and national job openings and has been operational for about one month.

On Friday, 13,857 jobs available in Idaho and around the nation were listed. Filled positions are removed from the ALEX listing daily and new jobs are added.

Ron Flathers, office manager of the Moscow branch of the Idaho Department of Employment, explained how the SUB became a member of the 15 select state-wide locations for ALEX.

Flathers considered the UI library and the Palouse Empire Mall, in addition to the Student Union Building, as possible locations for ALEX.

"The library wasn't even remotely interested because they are doing all that remodeling," Flathers said.

"The Student Union Building seems to get a lot of student traffic," Flathers said. "Since we have such a large student population in the community it made sense to put it there."

"I think the main advantage of ALEX is its location (in the SUB)," said Daniel Blanco, director of UI Career Services Center. "Some students for some reason or another won't go down to the local Job Service."

When Blanco first heard about ALEX, he walked over to the SUB and tried it out. "I found it really very interesting and easy to use," he said. ALEX is operated through a touch screen, where users can search for jobs based on a certain salary, location in the U.S., or length of job.

"We've had some feedback from people who have used it and liked it. There have only been a few minor problems with software," Flathers said.

Having ALEX means employment office staff will spend less time looking through job listings with clients, according to Flathers. Clients can search for jobs on their own through ALEX. Yet, ALEX cannot make a connection with the employer about a job. Flathers is expecting more staff work contacting employers after people have found a potential job through ALEX.

"If we can place more people (into jobs), that's what we are here for," Flathers said.

On Thursday, October 22, the same day Governor Cecil Andrus will help celebrate the new ALEX system in a Nampa mall, Flathers and others will be doing some demonstrations of the system at the SUB.

"We hope to have a few people present," Flathers said. "I think the important thing in the end is to get the information out that it (ALEX) is here so people can use it."

Flathers complimented the state for pursuing the $341,120 Department of Labor Employment Services automation grant to begin the ALEX program.

"Idaho has for a long-time been a front runner in automation," Flathers said. "Some states are still dealing in filling out manual paper forms (for job listings)."

L & S hosts job search seminar

By TANYA MADISON
Editor-in-Chief

Students at the University of Idaho can get a jump on the Great American Job Search through a program offered by the College of Letters and Science.

The college is hosting "Seminar Five: A Coffee Break," Friday, Oct. 30 at 10:30 a.m.

Five different seminars are being offered free of charge to university students. The seminars include: "Science and the Health Care Industry," "Law and Public Service," "Arts Management and Performance," "Corporate Leadership" and "Marketing and Government Relations."

Seminar speakers are members of the L&S advisory council. "We based the seminars on the current professions of the members of our advisory council," said Liz Madison, Director of Development for L&S.

Madison said there are 28 members of the council. "They review issues that face the college and submit reports for the dean's consideration," she said. "One of the areas of greatest concern is the office of career services."

Alumni speakers include retired Senator James McClure, Skip Oppenheimer, President of Oppenheimer Development Corp., and Kit Kimball, Director of Governmental Affairs for AMAX, Inc.

"This series of seminars will give students a great chance to ask alumni how they achieved success and how today's college graduate can start a career," said Gretchen Kelley, President of the Student Alumni Relations Board. "This is a terrific way to start at network with well-established leaders who care about UI graduates."

Madison said the seminar is an opportunity for students to learn about the careers that interest them from people in the field. "The speakers will talk about business trends today, how someone gets into that field and challenges and career opportunities as they exist in 1992-93."

Space for each seminar is limited. Maximum space available varies from 15 to 45 participants, depending on the seminar. Students interested in participating are asked to preregister in the dean's office in room 112 of the Administration Building. Student can also register by calling the dean's office at 885-6426. Seminar locations vary. Further information is available at the L&S office.

The seminar is being co-sponsored by L&S, the Office of Career Services and SARb.

UI internship opportunities in Boise

By BETSY CARVER
Staff Writer

Students worn out by the classroom scene and immune to professor's lectures have options, and lots of them, through the UI Cooperative Education program.

One program, Government Internships in Boise, is now being rejuvenated by new Associate Professor of Politics, Landon Curry.

"Dr. Curry is looking for new opportunities for students," said acting Director of Cooperative Education, Alice Pope Barbut.

"The positions have been there, but it has been difficult to get people from here to go," Curry said, after having just returned from a trip to Boise. Curry said he feels Idaho politics are accessible and open for students.

To help create more opportunities for all UI majors, as well as educate students on jobs available for university credits, there will be an informational meeting tonight in the Ee-da-ho Room of the SUB. Internships in the Office of the Governor, Idaho State Legislative Council, Legislative Budget office, and Attorney General's office will be discussed.

Other departments Curry is working with to get more internships are the Department of Lands and Forestry, Department of Education, Department of Health and Welfare, Commerce and Industry. He is also working with lobbyists for Union Pacific Railroad.

Fee waivers, a UI stipend of $600, credits available for internships and paid opportunities in specific offices will also be discussed.

Curry looks at his job as a wake up call informing students that this program is out there and there are plenty options available. "Having University of Idaho students in Boise is a good sign. The visibility of university interns creates good public relations and service. One internship goes a long way," he said. He also said he feels it will benefit the UI by having more students in Boise.

Curry's eagerness to get more students involved in Government Internships has broadened the program. "We want you to go to Boise and work."

State board to decide budget

The State Board of Education will decide on its fiscal year 1994 budget Wednesday in the Student Union Building of Idaho State University.

Superintendent of Public Instruction, Jerry L. Evans, said a coalition representing school trustees, administrators, teachers, parents and a statewide committee proposing a school reform program will present a recommendation to the board.

Evans said coalition members are concerned with how public schools cope with enrollment increases, how to meet state and federal requirements and how to implement reform at the local level.

Traditionally, year-to-year enrollment increases have ranged between 1,500 and 2,500 students. However, for the past three years, enrollments have increased by about 5,000 students.

Register to vote, don't lose your voice in government

Now that the presidential debates are over and the dust of political fallout is settling, voters are left to decide who will lead this nation for the next four, possibly eight years.

College-age voters are notorious for their low turnout in the polls. Students skip elections with less thought than they use when skipping aerobics class. The problem is that by skipping aerobics, students hurt themselves. By skipping the election, the students hurt everyone.

Students claim they have no voice in the government and that no one on Capitol Hill cares what they have to say. But if students took the 15 minutes necessary to cast their ballot, they would have a say in how this country is run.

In local bars and restaurants this week, students have been discussing the presidential and vice presidential debates. Students are remarkably well-informed about the candidates and the issues. They have formed solid, well-thought-out opinions and feel passionately about their views.

So why the hell aren't they voting?

There are as many answers as there are students who don't vote. Apathy, laziness, time constraints, not liking any of the candidates are just a few of the reasons cited. While it is undeniable that many presidential elections are picking the lesser of two — in this case three — evils, that is no reason not to vote.

Voting is not only a privilege, it is a responsibility. A vote is an investment in the future. The decision made in the voting booth now will determine the economy, the civil rights, the entitlements, the justice system and the health care of this nation when students are punching time clocks and raising families.

To not express an opinion at all is to say: "I don't give a damn what the future is like. I'll just go along with what everyone else decides."

Well, everyone else is not going to be looking out for the interest of the twenty-something generation. Everyone else will be looking out for their own interests.

And it is incredible that the same people who will spend 95 cents a minute to vote on whether Garth Brooks or Snap has a better video on MTV, won't take the time to vote for who will take this country into the next century.

If students want a better economy, a better educational system, world peace, etc., they need to elect the man or woman they think can do the job. To waste a chance at voting is to waste the future. No one can afford to do that.

This is the last week to register to vote. The clock strikes midnight on registration Friday evening. Don't miss the deadline or the boat.

Vote. Vote. Vote.

A plea to return to safe hunting practices

COMMENTARY

Last Monday morning, on the third day of elk season, Kenneth Howry was roaming through the woods, rifle in hand, when he spotted an elk.

Howry took one shot at the animal with his .308 Winchester, but he failed to notice one strange thing. This elk was wearing a hunter orange hat and red and black plaid flannel shirt.

Not only was this elk dressed funny, it wasn't even an elk. It was Charles McGuire.

Howry claims he was aiming at a moving elk and accidentally shot McGuire in the shoulder. However, McGuire's hunting buddy Randy Senne says there were no elk in the area. McGuire, of Sagle, Idaho, died after being transported to a hospital.

It doesn't really matter who is telling the truth. The moral of this story is: when hunting, please shoot big game with four legs. While Howry may say that it was simply a matter of bad aim, how on earth could anyone miss two hunters wearing orange hats? Or

Let's have fewer kids, more hobbies

This past weekend, as I was hanging around the Palouse Empire Mall waiting for my What-a-burger, I overheard a conversation between a husband and wife. As a swarm of kids buzzed gnatlike around her knees, the woman looked at the man with that special feminine twinkle in her eyes.

"We should have had one more," she said. I felt sick.

What, having enough kids to start a small army isn't too much? Were they planning some type of paramilitary action against the government as soon as their youngest was old enough to tote an M-16?

But it gets worse. Last summer a number of newspapers carried the sad but true saga of an Oregon family. The man had been thrown out of work. He, his wife and their 11 kids — ranging in age from 18 years to 12 months — were facing a tough future as they looked for a place to live.

The father was desperately seeking employment. The family had been evicted a number of times from rental housing because they lied about their size. And yet the husband and wife remained unrepentant about the size of their brood.

COMMENTARY

Their reason for such reproductive flamboyance? Well, both the man and the woman came from large families. Using some bizarre, twisted logic known only to themselves they decided to procreate with extreme prejudice.

I almost retched after reading their story.

Unfortunately it is easy to feel compassion for such people. No one wants to put themselves in the position of being anti-family, especially this year when "family values" are of paramount importance to many voters.

But I can't help myself. In a world with dwindling natural resources and exploding populations, it seems sensible that any man and woman who have more than a few offspring are showing a remarkable lack of responsibility toward themselves, toward their children and toward the five billion other humans who share the planet.

It is no longer a matter of a man and a woman being able to afford a big family. It is a matter of the planet itself not being able to afford big families.

Twenty years ago someone should have advised the Oregon couple to either use contraceptives or keep their clothes on when they hit the sack.

Maybe they should have found a hobby. Ping pong is nice, or maybe even parcheesi. Anything to keep them from doing the Ser-red and black plaid flannel shirts, for that matter?

According to the Idaho Department of Fish and Game, hunters shouldn't be shooting at anything they can't clearly see.

Let's say you see what seems to be the body of an elk, but you can't see the head. So, you blast away, and lo and behold, you've just shot a cow elk. This is considered poaching, boys and girls. You can either leave the hulking mass to rot and pretend like nothing happened, or you can report it and pay hundreds of dollars in fines.

While I highly respect the people who actually have the guts to report accidental shootings, I don't get the chance to respect many of them because they are a disappearing species.

Here's another scenario. You've tossed back a few brews (something that a hunter should be immediately executed for) and you and your buddy stumble off into the woods together. Something rustles in the bushes ahead and, in your drunken excitement, without even waiting to see what it is you take a shot. You run to the other side of the bushes to see what your trophy is.

Is it a horse? Could it be a wolf (an animal on the endangered species list and a big no-no to kill)? Maybe you've just shot a small child who lives nearby. Or maybe you lucked out and got yourself a nice five-point buck. It's a Wheel of Fortune game that I would not be willing to play.

My family always had one main guideline for hunting. Don't shoot anything until you can clearly see all of what you are shooting. "I see the legs, great. It's an animal! I see the body, great. It's a white tail deer! I see the head, great. It's a buck!" That's the basic idea of an intelligent hunter's thought process.

I never thought this was a difficult rule to follow, but there are always those who need things spelled out for them.

All we ever read about is the guy who says: "I see a brown patch that certainly looks like fur, but it could be bark, hair, fabric ... aw hell ... BLAM!" Next thing you know, you're watching the trial and poor Elmer Fudd is in prison.

Well, Fudd and Howry don't have to worry too much. Fudd is a cartoon character, so he will be hunting bunny wabbits forever.

While Howry may be flesh and blood, his punishment will be about as light. If he is found guilty of involuntary manslaughter, he will face a maximum sentence of 10 years in prison and $10,000 fine.

They are going to fine him for shooting another man? I'm sorry, but that is not something a little cold cash will help.

"Hey judge, I'm really sorry that I shot that guy. Here's $10,000 to make up for it."

That's very comforting to know that in a hunting accident, your life, or lack of, is suddenly thought of in monetary terms.

And 10 years isn't that long. Especially with the court system today, Howry will be out in four years for good behavior. Four years after his eyesight has increasingly failed, he will once again pick up the rifle and head to the hills.

Fifty years ago, the only danger in hunting was breaking your leg or accidentally shooting your buddy. Now, with the population boom and more people combing the woods for game, hunting is a scary sport.

Why can't hunters actually hunt animals, instead of killing each other? Isn't that why it's called a sport? I guess one could say that going into the woods to go hunting and spending the entire time worrying about getting your ass shot off may be sporty, but it's not something I find very recreational.

It's these careless hunters, like Howry, who are giving the rest of the population a bad reputation. While I have friends that are very safe hunters, I unfortunately know a few that I wouldn't even arm with a rubber band. It's these few that are making hunting dangerous.

ta tango. However, the man and the woman aren't entirely to blame. Responsibility should be shared by in-laws, friends and relatives who put pressure on a husband and wife to have children.

A couple of friends of mine have been married for a few years and are now considering having a kid or two. Why? They aren't that crazy about the idea, and it may not be the wisest thing for them to do from an economical standpoint. But her parents have been bugging them about "how nice it would be to have a grandkid."

Phooey. Stop encouraging people to reproduce just to satisfy other people's selfishness. There is an old saying that children are a blessing. Maybe it's true, maybe it's a lie. I do know of a few parents who, when looking at the fruit of their loins, wish they had exercised a bit more restraint when their hormones took to raging.

After four or five kids, even if I loved the little buggers, I'd think it was time to develop other interests, and pretty damn fast, too.

There are some pathetically optimistic individuals who predict that "science and technology" will always stay one step ahead of the population curve, insuring comfort for the masses.

Just because some affluent societies send most of their members to bed with full bellies shouldn't detract from the fact that there are hundreds of millions of starving people around the world.

And there are more on the way.

Will technology succeed in making everyone fat and happy? Perhaps. But what kind of world will it be when every acre of arable land has felt the bite of the plow? Or when every square foot of habitable land is covered with condominiums, gas stations and mini-malls?

More people means more pollution, more crowding, more energy wasted, more crime and more hunger.

More people makes no sense.

TKEs still scarin' folks after 17 years

By KARIN MASON
Staff Writer

Don't be alarmed if you hear chainsaws, power drills and see Jason in his hockey mask running through the Tau Kappa Epsilon house on Halloween. It's not a greek house execution, but the TKEs annual haunted house.

For the 17th year in a row, the fraternity has held the haunted house and donated all proceeds to the Special Olympics. Last year, the house made around $200, and in the past the average has usually been around $200 to $250.

The members rig certain rooms of the house using a theme. Among the chainsaw and power drill rooms set up in the house, "Crypt of the Lost Souls" will be created on the sleeping porch. This is a maze the viewers are forced to find their way through.

Last year, there was a torture chamber room with executioners and a victim.

"(Last year) We did different things for the little kids and the older people. For the older ones, we added a 'hazing room' to the torture chamber room since there is a big thing about fraternity hazing, we don't really haze though, and for the little kids we just did the normal torture chamber," said Jerry Johnson, a sophomore who participated in the haunted house last year. "It was a lot of fun," he said, and added he will participate again this year.

Barry Finnigan, assistant public relations chair who ran the show last year and is an assistant this year, said that the highlight of their haunted house is the spooky fog.

"The whole house is filled with a hazy fog. It's kind of our trademark because as far as I know, no one else around does this. We've been doing it for at least the past 10 years," Finnigan said.

Finnigan said that the haunted house is never the same one twice.

"Last year, we even had people jumping out of the rafters on the sleeping porch. It's always different, there's no telling what will happen this year," Finnigan said.

All of the 40 house members will participate in the haunted house whether it's dressing up as Jason or taking tickets at the door. The Teke little sisters will dress up and act as tour guides through the haunted house and make sure the little kids are alright and take care of them. The haunted house takes about 10 or 15 minutes to go through.

It will be held October 31 from 8 p.m. to 12 a.m. at the Tau Kappa Epsilon house located on upper Greek row. The admission cost is $1.

Vandals censor Eagle's greatest hits

Win gives UI best start ever

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

In Idaho's most physical game of the season, the Vandals used a balanced offense, and a strong second half defensively to beat Eastern Washington Saturday, 38-21 in Cheney.

Now ranked No. 2 in I-AA, Idaho (6-0, 3-0) rolled up 554 yards of total offense in preparation for their showdown with No. 1 Northern Iowa this Saturday in Cedar Falls, IA. With the win over EWU, Idaho now has the inside track to win their fourth Big Sky Conference title in six years. Both EWU (4-2, 3-1), and Boise State have one conference loss, and in the BSC, one loss may mean only a play-off berth.

"They're by far the best team we've seen this year," EWU head coach Dick Zornes said. "I think they've got a chance to go all the way (to the national championship). If I had to compare them I'd say they're better than Nevada's team last year. Hell, they've got a chance against some of the bigger schools in the country."

Against EWU the Vandals were again led offensively by quarterback Doug Nussmeier. The junior finished the day 19-of-31 for 317 yards while throwing one touchdown, and running for another. On Idaho's opening series, Nussmeier guided the Vandals 80 yards on 10 plays to begin the scoring. Wide receiver Yo Murphy was Nussmeier's main mark as he pulled down two receptions of 10 yards each, one for nine, and a 33-yard floater that set up a Sherriden May touchdown. May finished the game with 123 yards on 30 carries against an EWU defense that was giving up just 52.2 yards a game on the ground.

"They (EWU's defense) were having trouble stopping the run," Nussmeier said. "We thought that was their heart (of the defense), so if we could go right after their heart at the beginning it'd be the key in the game."

On the Eagle's ensuing drive, Idaho went to man coverage in the secondary, and Eagle quarterback Mark Tenneson looked to expose that. On EWU's fourth play from scrimmage, Tenneson went deep down the sideline for wide receiver Jason Anderson. Idaho defensive back Jeff Jordan played the ball well, and as the two were falling backwards, he slapped the ball, but it landed on Anderson's chest as he hit the ground for a 45-yard gain.

"I read the play right, and was just trying to knock it down," Jordan said. "There's no way you can plan something like that to happen. It was just luck."

The Idaho defense then got fired up as EWU had first-and-10 on the Vandal 22. On third down defensive end Brian Strandley batted down a Tenneson pass, which brought on the EWU kicking team. Alex Lacson's 35-yard attempt went wide left, though, and Idaho took over on downs on their own 20.

When asked about Lacson's two missed field goals on the day, Zornes was solemn.

"I don't want to talk about that," Zornes said. "It's tough."

Both teams had trouble offensively their next few series. For Idaho, Nussmeier threw his third interception in the last two games, and Tom Sugg punted another possession away. After the Sugg punt EWU began moving the ball.

Tenneson started EWU's 70-yard drive with a 17-yard scramble, and finished it with a hand-off to running back Harold Wright for an eight yard touchdown to tie the game 7-7 to end the first quarter. After seeing an Idaho defense begin the game with intensity, it now looked like they were allowing EWU to move the ball with more confidence.

"I don't know what was going on in the first half," Idaho defensive end Jeff Robinson said. "We (the defense) just weren't doing what we were capable of doing."

On the contrary, Idaho's offense was. Reserve running back Wind Henderson introduced himself to the record crowd of 6,879 with three consecutive rushes for six, 11, and six yards, respectively. On first-and-ten from the Idaho 48, Nussmeier rolled right, scrambled back to the left, and then hit receiver Walter Saunders down the left sideline for a 49-yard completion. On the next play May plunged into the endzone to give Idaho a 14-7 lead.

"His scrambling broke us down," Zornes said of Nussmeier. "The thing with him is that if you blitz you have to do it real late because he waits 'til the last second to get the play off."

On their next possession the Eagles went for the long ball against Jordan for the second time. On second down EWU receiver Tony Brooks went down the right sideline, but Jordan got a paw on the ball to get the second of his three pass deflections on the day, despite wearing a cast right arm due to a fractured thumb.

"The inside receiver is the easiest one to throw to because he's right there on the end of the line, so I think that's why they were throwing my way a lot," Jordan said. "Also, probably because of my hand."

On the next play, Tenneson again attacked Jordan by trying to hit Brooks. Jordan broke the play up, but was flagged with pass interference for a 15-yard penalty. Six plays later Jordan got his pay-back as he tipped a ball in the endzone that was heading right for Brooks on third-and-12. Lacson came in on fourth down, and proceeded to miss his second field goal attempt, this time from 37 yards out.

"We (the defense) feel we can do what we want to out there," Jordan said. "Last year it was the defense depending on the offense to make things happen. This year we're going out and making things happen ourselves."

Idaho's offense couldn't capitalize on the defense's stop, however, which culminated in Sugg's 12-yard punt. Two plays later EWU was in the endzone, and had tied the game 14-14 in just 13 seconds.

Vandals earn two more conference wins

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho volleyball team employed both the easy way and the difficult way in defeating conference foes Idaho State and Boise State this last weekend.

After disposing of the Bengals in three games on Friday night, the team then found itself in a war with rival Boise St. on Saturday night. The Vandals found themselves in a 2-1 deficit after the first three games, but rallied to take a 15-5, 14-16, 1-15, 17-15, 15-9 victory.

Now 6-1 in conference and 15-3 overall, the Vandals used the passing of Amie Hanks to defeat the Bengals. Hanks finished with 37 assists, five digs and three blocks as the team seemed to pick up momentum both offensively and defensively in beating the Bengals 15-13, 15-8, 15-1.

The direct beneficiaries of Hanks' passing were outside hitter Dee Porter and middle blocker Nancy Wicks. Both finished with nine kills, and the two combined for 13 digs.

That brought up Saturday's contest with the Broncos.

Coming in with a 4-2 conference record, BSU figured to be a stiff test for the Vandals. The Broncos lived up to this behind the outstanding efforts of Tina Harris and Kristen Dutto.

The 6-1 Dutto was every bit the match for Idaho middle blockers Brittany Van Haverbeke and Wicks. She finished with 23 kills, 19 digs and four blocks while teammate Harris finished with 23 kills, 22 digs and four blocks.

The Vandals came out strong in the first game and handily defeated the Broncos 15-5. However, the Broncos came roaring back as they took a close second game before walloping Idaho 15-1 in the third game.

This appeared to be a wake-up call for the Vandals as they won a hard-fought fourth game before closing the match with a 15-9 win in the fifth game.

Outside hitter Jessica Puckett led the Vandal rally as she finished with 33 kills, 18 digs and five blocks. The 33 kills tied a school record that had been set by former Vandal Karen Thompson. Hanks pitched in with 78 assists, 17 digs and six kills.

According to outside hitter Heather McEwen, the rally seemed to provide a strong dose of confidence for the team.

"It was good to know that we could be down 2-1 in a match and still come back to win," said McEwen. "That was a problem last year."

The weekend play proved to be a bonanza for several Vandal players. Wicks now has a hitting percentage of .368, which qualifies her for fifth on the single-season Vandal record list. Hanks is also faring well as her 664 assists has given her an average of 10.7 assists per game, which is also good for fifth on the single-season mark.

The Vandals will have Monday to practice before traveling to Lewiston to meet Lewis Clark State College in a match that begins at 7 p.m. tonight.

Now in an "anything-you-can-do-I-can-do-better" style game, Idaho looked to put some more points on the board before half-time. Starting on his own 16-yard line, Nussmeier led the attack as he completed six-of-eight passes, four to Murphy and two to May, and the drive was capped as May bolted into the endzone from two yards out to give Idaho a 21-14 halftime lead.

To begin the second half Idaho played flawlessly. The turning point of the game occurred on EWU's first drive to begin the second half. Facing a fourth-and-one from their own 45, Zornes decided to go for it rather than punt the ball. Tenneson ran a quarterback sneak, but the Idaho defensive line stopped him, and the Idaho offense took over on downs.

"I thought we had made it from the angle where I was," Zornes said. "I mean, you guys (the media) were upstairs, so you probably had a better view than I did. From where I saw him (Tenneson) land I thought he'd made it."

Idaho head coach John L. Smith stated what he would have done had he been in Zornes position.

"I would have made the same call if I'd have been in his shoes," Smith said.

Five plays later Nussmeier scrambled in from 23 yards out to extend the Idaho lead. Both the offensive line, and the defensive line began the second half playing a tougher style of football.

"I think it's (when Idaho pulled away) when our lines decided to play," Robinson said. "The starting of the third quarter had to be that turning point."

In the third quarter Idaho ran off 17 straight points, which included the touchdown by Nussmeier, a field goal by Mike Hollis, and a 46-yard TD reception by Murphy to secure the win. EWU tacked on a touchdown with :20 left in the third quarter to bring an end to the scoring.

"A tough, tough game," Smith said. "No team was out of it until the end of the game."

EWU did have a few chances to score in the fourth quarter, but a fumble recovery by Idaho linebacker Duke Garrett, and an interception by linebacker Brian Wamsley dispelled any hopes of a comeback.

"I thought we played well except for that spell in the third quarter," Zornes said. "We had some problems in some areas that I thought we'd have problems."

IDAHO INFO-- Yo Murphy finished Saturday's game with nine receptions for 152 yards. On the season Yo has 773 yards, and seven TD's. His total for the '91 season was 777 yards, and six TD's...Previously No. 2 ranked Villanova lost to Delaware Saturday, 21-20, which made way for the No.1-No.2 clash between UNI and Idaho. The game will be televised live on Spokane's KHQ Channel 6 at 4:30 p.m. THIS SATURDAY. When asked how good Idaho was Saturday Zornes said: "I think we'll find out how good they are next week."...Defensive end Jeff Robinson was named Big Sky Defensive Player of the Week. Against EWU the senior had eight tackles, one for a loss, and one sack for a loss of nine yards...Sherriden May has a league high 13 touchdowns, and leads the nation in scoring...Wamsley experienced a dislocated elbow towards the end of the EWU game. An MRI was run today, and if there is no ligament damage he'll be out 4-6 weeks. If there is damage, he'll most likely be done for the season. A starter will be named later this week.

Having dinner with Doohan

Dinner with Mr. Scott, what else is there to say? For all the Trekkies that want to know what he's like in real life, he's great.

James Doohan was warm, funny and he remembered everybody's name at dinner, all 20 of us. He brought his granddaughter, who is a WSU student along, and started dinner by introducing her and saying that she was a freshman and to "really give her the business."

Doohan wanted to talk to as many people as he could during dinner and managed to squeeze six people into his four person table, saying it was time to do the "old scoot and cuddle."

One lady at dinner was an author of Star Trek books and gave Doohan two copies of her latest books. He accepted them with a smile and then joked, "Like I want to read about (William) Shatner." Through the rest of the evening you didn't have to be an engineer to pick up on the animosity between them.

Doohan was patient, as everybody wanted pictures with "Scotty," and even Pops from Gambino's came out to get a picture with him. He was patient, that is until dinner came. Once the meal was served he refused pictures proclaiming, "It's dinner time, we'll never get out of here if we keep this up."

During dinner, the humor continued, when Doohan told the waitress to "go ahead and dump that (ice water) on her head, she needs to cool off." Doohan was referring to the author of the Star Trek books.

Overall, dinner with Doohan was great. He was just like any other guy. He made jokes all of the time and managed to keep his whole table laughing throughout the meal.

Strait shows his 'pure country' background

Review by Pete Gomben

If George Strait had offered to sell ocean front property in Arizona to anyone who attended his concert Sunday night, he would have had at least three thousand takers.

And he wouldn't have had to throw the Golden Gate in for free. The handsome native of southwest Texas sang more than 20 songs, most of them gleaned from the dozens of number one hits he has had during his 10 year career.

Over the last decade, no singer has enjoyed as much success on the country charts as Strait. He was named the Country Music Association's Entertainer of the Year for 1989 and 1990 and he was the first performer to have an album debut at number one on the Billboard country music charts.

In 1990 his back-to-back hits "Love Without End, Amen" and "Famous Last Words of A Fool" each spent five weeks atop the charts. Not a bad set of accomplishments for a guy who taught himself how to play guitar by studying a Hank Williams songbook while serving in the Army.

Strait and his Ace in the Hole Band kicked off the show with "The Fireman," a song about a man who makes his rounds "all over town putting out old flames."

"Everybody'd like to have what I got," he sang, "I can cool 'em down when they're smolderin' hot." Judging from the response of the women in the audience, he lit many more flames than he put out.

Throughout the concert, Strait alternated the tempo of his songs nicely. He mixed mellow ballads such as "You Look So Good In Love" — which he dedicated to the women in attendance — with upbeat tunes such as "You Know Me Better Than That," a song about a man lamenting the fact that his new squeeze, unlike his old girlfriend, is in love with his image, not him.

Strait also moved with ease from the older standards of his early years, such as "Marina Del Rey" off Strait from the Heart, to new material off Holdin' My Own and the recently-released Pure Country, the soundtrack from the movie of the same name.

The movie opens at theaters Friday, a fact Strait made clear to the crowd at Beasley Coliseum. "Y'all be needin' to go see that," he said in a Texas drawl so pure it conjured images of cactus, sagebrush and dust-covered chaps.

Of course no George Strait concert would be complete without renditions of "Gone with a Girl Can Get" and "Amarillo by Morning," which details the hard life of a rodeo cowboy.

Strait introduced the latter as a song he sang in Texas honky-tonks before he made it big in the music industry. It received a warm reception from the audience, most of whom were dressed in Wranglers, boots and hats, even though few had probably ever roped a bronc or punched a dogie.

Another crowd pleaser was "All My Ex's Live in Texas," during which he sang about all his old loves and the Texas towns in which they live. "All my ex's live in Texas," Strait sang, "that's why I hang my hat in Tennessee."

Strait has listed country legend Merle Haggard as one of his favorite singers. He paid homage to Haggard by singing three of Merle's songs, including "Cherokee Maiden" and "Tonight the Bottle Let Me Down."

Throughout the concert, loyal fans made the pilgrimage up to the stage to place gifts at Strait's feet. By the end of the evening, quite a pile of roses and trinkets had formed. Strait graciously acknowledged receipt of each gift, provided he wasn't in the middle of a song at the time.

Strait closed the concert with "Unwound," his first hit from way back in 1981. Afterward he took the time to shake hands with the scores of admirers who congregated around the foot of the stage.

He returned for a two song encore that included "Where the Sidewalk Ends" from Pure Country.

'Scotty' entertains Trekkies

Stories by Ryan Patano

James Doohan did it all for the crowd in the SUB Ballroom last Thursday night. He sang Welsh Gaelic ballads, he talked about extra-terrestrials, he recited Shakespeare, he talked about his work ethics and still had time to rip William Shatner to shreds.

The lecture stated off when somebody in the crowd yelled the inevitable, "Beam me up Scotty!" In his best Scottish accent Doohan shot back, "only if you're in dire peril." The crowd loved it, and the evening was off to an official start.

After that introduction Doohan taught the crowd how to ask questions by asking himself what changes he would've made if he were captain. "If I were captain, I would limit ensign Kirk to one girl per five years," Doohan said. "And Spock would never, ever, ever...ever be allowed in my engine room. The last time he was in my engine room he died. We can't have that."

For the next two hours, Doohan wandered around the crowd answering any question that came up, and at one point he said, "I feel like Phil Donahue."

Doohan got serious though for a minute when he talked about college students in general. Referring to the way the older generation gives the younger generation a hard time, Doohan only offered this, "You ain't got nothin' to worry about. A few of you go awry, but that happened 50 years ago and that happened 100 years ago. You are beautiful."

Doohan said he would remember "you the fans. That's it. You kept us on," about the Star Trek phenomenon.

One person said that he had seen Shatner and that he wasn't appreciative of the fans. Doohan retorted, "Ya, I noticed that too." When one person asked about Shatner's books, Doohan said, "he says he wrote them." Another person asked about Shatner's singing and Doohan said, "You call that singing?" And yet another person asked why Star Trek 5 was such a failure. Doohan only said "poor management," and then added, "you know who was in charge of that one." Needless to say Shatner received his share of abuse.

All in all, Doohan kept the crowd highly entertained for the full two hours. He has done everything from radio to TV, to live stage. Doohan, who always has and always will be an actor, just wants to please his fans.

Center discusses feminist spirituality

"I found God in myself and I loved her fiercely."

These were lyrics to a song that could be heard chanted from the Women's Center last Wednesday.

The Women's Center lunchtime program presented "Feminist Spirituality," which featured the Rev. Lynn Unger, minister of the Unitarian Church of the Palouse. Unger shared with approximately 20 attendants, some of her views on feminist theology, and her poetry, some of which is a retelling of bible stories and religious language.

Some of the poems Unger read, she wrote for her senior thesis in college. The poems she read included, "Pandora," a poem about the mythological woman, "Incarnation," a poem about the immaculate conception, and "Shoes," a poem that preaches, "Take off what binds you, you're standing on holy ground."

After reading eight poems, Unger took questions from the audience. One woman in the audience wanted to know if Unger was a member of the Women's Church Movement. Unger said she was not, but that there are "numerous ways women are claiming their spirituality."

Unger then explained the difference between religion and spirituality. "Religion is communal, but spirituality is what you find individually," said Unger.

She read five more of her poems before closing with a song. Unger's poetry has been published in the Jewish Feminist Journal, and in Cries of the Spirit, on Beacon Press.

Schultz's show starts Friday at Prichard

By JACKIE WOODS
Staff Writer

A showing of artist Stephen Schultz's wall-sized paintings and drawings begins Friday at the University of Idaho Prichard Art Gallery.

"His work is fairly realistic, but they are on very, very large canvases," explained Johanna Hays, Director of the Prichard Gallery. "They are eight by 10 feet, which is a huge scale for a painter to work on. They're very impressive."

Describing the artist's work in a promotional flyer, Hays wrote, "Using dramatic composition and a subtle, subdued, almost monochromatic color range, Schultz addresses the mystery of consciousness."

Writer Shellie R. Goldberg of ARTNEWS said Schultz's paintings "don't attempt to be a window into the real world, but rather a step from the world into another (world) of suspended time and action, much in the way a play does, rather than reflecting life it amplifies it."

Schultz, who holds a master in fine arts from Stanford University, has shown his work in New York, Los Angeles and around the country, said Hays.

"It's going to be a rare opportunity, the quality of the painting is extraordinary, the size of the paintings are extraordinary. I think it's going to be quite an experience," said Hays.

The show will include a series the artist calls 'Materialism' along with some of his carlier works, said Hays.

"Materialism' is a series in progress, not all the paintings in the series have been completed yet, but he'll show the ones that are finished," said Hays.

Schultz, who lives in Hope, Idaho, is a part-time professor of art at the University of Iowa. The artist has received many prestigious awards in the field of painting including a Fulbright Fellowship, a Rockefeller Foundation Residency and a National Endowment for the Arts/Western States Arts Federation Fellowship.

Schultz will be present at the opening reception on Friday,

Oct. 23, from 5 to 8 p.m. His work will be shown at the Prichard Gallery through Nov. 29.

UI Auditorium Chamber Music Series opened Friday

Review by Elizabeth Powell

A taste of culture came to Moscow Friday when Sanford Sylvan, Stephanie Friedman, and David Breitman performed Hugo Wolf's "Songs from the Spanisches Liederbuch."

"Spanisches Liederbuch" is a collection of 44 songs based on 16th and 17th century Spanish poems translated by Emanuel Geibel and Paul Heyse. The poems were translated into German and set to music for the piano by Hugo Wolf.

Sylvan, a graduate of the Manhattan School of Music, sings baritone and is well known for his many operatic performances, and has collaborated with Breitman, the pianist, on many different projects.

Breitman has had a varied career as a soloist and a collaborative artist. He is currently a visiting professor of historical performance at Oberlin College Conservatory.

Friedman sings mezzo-soprano and enjoys a wide spectrum of music ranging from Baroque to contemporary.

The concert received an unusually good turnout and throughout the performance the audience seemed to enjoy the pieces. The audience was given a translation packet to translate the songs from German to English. Unfortunately while they were riveted to the guide they may have missed some of the emotion that Friedman and Sylvan masterfully portrayed.

It was easy to see that the trio was performing with a love for the music. Breitman gave a wonderful performance as an accompanist, playing with an intensity that is necessary for the music, but not overpowering to the other performers. Sylvan and Friedman are careful not to detract from each other's performance and complement each other wonderfully, as well as possessing an excellent stage presence. The soloists had excellent projection and there was no problem hearing them throughout the concert. The phrasing of the pieces were colorfully done, and the powerful emotion of the songs were carried over to the audience even after the piano died away. The drama of the pieces were eloquently sang by Sylvan and Friedman, adding an underlying feeling of intensity and electricity to the performance.

The layout of the program was creative, the concert being broken up into pieces where Sylvan and Friedman sang alternate solos then consecutive solos, then reunited with a play between them once again. Unfortunately the audience didn't get to hear them sing a duet together until the encore piece of Es Rauschet Dus Wasse by Brahms. The performers should have sung more pieces as duets, adding to the feeling of singing with one another. The first half of the program dealt with the more romantic and happy times of love, while the second half expressed the darker and more tragic feelings of the poetry. Sylvan and Friedman sing with great expression, showing joy, sadness, hate, and sorrow masterfully.

The performance was excellent and well worth a night out. The Auditorium Chamber Music Series has many more concerts scheduled throughout the year to help put spice into those culturally depraved lives out there.

PRINCIPLES OF SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

IF YOU THOUGHT COLLEGE WAS EXPENSIVE, TRY PUTTING YOURSELF THROUGH RETIREMENT.

Think about supporting yourself for twenty-five, thirty years or longer in retirement. It might be the greatest financial test you'll ever face. Fortunately, you have one valuable asset in your favor: Time.

Time to take advantage of tax-deferral. Time for your money to grow. But starting early is key. Consider this: if you begin saving just $100 a month at age thirty, you can accumulate $192,539* by the time you reach age sixty-five. Wait ten years and you'd need to set aside $227 a month to reach the same goal.

At TIAA-CREF, we not only understand the value of starting early, we can help make it possible—with flexible retirement and tax-deferred annuity plans, a diverse portfolio of investment choices, and a record of personal service that spans 75 years.

Over a million people in education and research are already enrolled in America's largest retirement system. Find out how easy it is to join them. Call today and learn how simple it is to put yourself through retirement when you have time and TIAA-CREF on your side.

Start planning your future. Call our Enrollment Hotline 1 800 842-2888.

Ensuring the future for those who shape it.™
