UI student gives all to sociology organizations

By BETSY CARVER
Staff Writer

Deciding to finally stick to one major is a tough decision, but once it's official there are numerous activities, internships, and organizations to get involved with.

Mindy Krasselt, a sociology major with an emphasis on social work has found these benefits and worked with them to expand her knowledge in her field, made personal and professional contacts along the way, and had a lot of fun in the process.

A senior who graduates and will be married in May, Krasselt has experienced the benefits of being actively involved in her major. Not only has she taken part in two summer internships, been a volunteer for Alternatives to Violence on the Palouse, and been a key member in the UI Sociology Club, but she was also chosen to participate in the American Sociological Association's 87th Annual Meeting in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania this past August. She was one of only 67 university students chosen in the U.S. and Canada.

Her trip to Pittsburgh, she said, was an incredible learning experience where she found that there are a lot more people in her field of interest than she realized. She received a new perspective on her part in Sociology and became a member of the ASA Honors Program Student Association where she "got hooked."

"You become more interested in what you are doing," Krasselt said. "I found out that there are other sociologists in the world. Idaho is isolated and doesn't work enough with WSU and other schools."

Krasselt met the people who write her university textbooks, along with James Coleman, the president of the ASA. "You see his work cited in everything," she said.

Krasselt returned to Moscow excited about her experience in Pittsburgh, and the honor it was to be chosen to go. "I want to show ASUI how the money (they gave to defray costs of the trip) helped and can benefit others."

As a volunteer for Alternatives to Violence on the Palouse, she has seen problems in the system that need to be changed. "I've seen the inadequacies in our system and the way women have been put on the sideline. I don't feel UI is responsible for it's women students because the lighting is so poor."

Krasselt is considering Law School, and working directly with the legislature to solve some of these problems.

She also worked in her hometown of Potlatch to set up an Assault Awareness Day in the High School. She believes sexual harassment is a problem filtered down from adults to kids, all the way to elementary school.

As an intern, Krasselt found out what she doesn't want to work with in sociology: adult corrections. She worked in a Half-Way House in Spokane and focused on sex offenders. She also prepared a career planning program for the residents. The goal of her internship was to set up the program so another staff member carry it out in the future.

The sociology club, in which she has been highly involved, is now starting a raffle for a mountain bike, portable CD Player, and other smaller prizes. The money earned will help fund the community service project and scholarships for Sociology students.

Krasselt said she would like to see enough tickets sold so there will be money to support herself and fellow UI students attend the Pacific Sociological Association meeting in Portland next April. Krasselt will be attending as one of two HPSA representatives in the pacific region. She was chosen for this office at the annual meeting.

Krasselt said, "The HPSA creates an incredible network of students and faculty. You would never meet them any other way."

Adjusted to construction?

By CHRIS MILLER
Staff Writer

Students at the University of Idaho have finally managed to confuse the hammering on campus with the pounding migraines in their heads.

With over 385 different construction projects on campus, UI students have become familiar with grinding screams and nasty clangs that always seem to reverberate through ceilings and walls just as professors are laying out the study guidelines for the next test.

But students have learned to cope with the noisy construction projects.

"At first it (the noise) bothered me," said John Phillips, a junior biology major, "but now everybody's getting used to it."

Butch Fullerton, Construction Manager for Facilities Management at Idaho said there was upwards of $100 million spent on construction projects ranging from the $12.3 million library project to a $700,000 water quality update.

"This year has had far and away the largest amount of construction on campus," Fullerton said. "There's a lot of them you can see, and a lot you can't."

Leverrier Construction Superintendent Gary Coning said his workers haven't had any problems with students getting in the way, but sometimes students "mistakenly walk through the work area," he said.

Fullerton said, "Both sides (students and contractors) have worked remarkably well together. I've been pleased with the contractors and proud of the students."

Construction of the new library addition is about three weeks ahead of schedule and will open in December. Then the revision of the old wing will begin.

Other on-going construction projects include the renovation of the ventilation system in the chemistry building, the paving of the parking lot behind the Kibbie Dome, a new ventilation system on the roof of the Forestry Building, and a new campus-wide powergrid installation.

Fullerton said each building has to be shut down at least a day to make the switch over from the old electrical system to the new. The Food Science Building and Kibbie Dome have already been switched over. The temporary power outage will be tough on researchers and students, but "its got to be done sooner or later," Fullerton said.

The construction of a new Earth Resources building will begin this spring across Seventh Street from the existing Mines building. It will be second in scope only to the new library and cost in excess of $10 million Fullerton said.

PAYADA fights drug and alcohol abuse

By BRANDY CORGATELLI
Staff Writer

It's been said many times before but Assistant Professor of Communication Mark Secrist will continue to speak against alcohol and drug abuse until the message sinks in.

"We've had many national campaigns like 'Don't Drink and Drive' but it continues to happen," Secrist said.

Secrist is the chairman of Parents and Youth Against Drug Abuse in Latah County. PAYADA is a non-profit group sponsored by the Latah County Sheriff's Office and the Moscow Police Department. It is made up of local parents, business people, and law enforcement officials who volunteer to "wage a war against substance abuse."

During the week of October 26-29, PAYADA will for the fourth consecutive year try to make the Moscow community more aware of the local abuse problem.

"I hope the week will make people aware that we have a problem (right here in Moscow)," Secrist said. The group will hand out pamphlets at the Palouse Empire Mall on subjects such as 'How to talk to a friend about their abuse problem.' A whole slew of events are scheduled at the high school during the week and anti-abuse messages will be presented on the UI campus.

Secrist said people in Moscow, including himself, have a tendency to wink and smile at people who are bragging about their kegger parties. "It really isn't cute, when you abuse any drug. You lose you ability to reason and act safely," he said.

Like many involved in anti-abuse campaigns, a personal incident drew Secrist in. He said his son had a close friend who often went fishing and participated in other Secrist family activities through his junior high years. That friend eventually took a car ride with a group of drunk teenagers and was killed in a wreck on the Lewiston down-grade.

"A young man who was like part of our family died because of alcohol abuse," Secrist said.

"When you combine alcohol with little tiny two-lane roads you have a formula for trouble," he said.

Secrist doesn't deny the presence of drugs like crack and cocaine in Moscow but said the real battle is still with alcohol abuse. "We have way too much of it," Secrist said.

"We're losing college kids and we're losing high school kids," he said.

ASUI approves funding for computer

An Argonaut that comes out three times a week is entirely possible, Argonaut Advertising Manager David Gephardt told the ASUI senate Wednesday night.

The senate made a tri-weekly Argonaut possible in the future as all members present voted in favor of a bill to spend $7,110 to upgrade Argonaut equipment.

Gephardt said the new equipment will save the Argonaut writing staff over 100 hours of work a month putting out the paper. "The increase in saved time will allow us to look at putting out an extra issue a week," he said.

A new computer and printer will be bought which will allow the design and layout of the paper to be done through the computer. The current method of designing the Argonaut is to paste each article and advertisement by hand to pieces of paper before taking it to the printer to be copied.

Also at the Senate meeting, the resignation of Mark Hall was announced. Hall said in his resignation letter that he enjoyed working with the senate but cited time constraints and the demands on his energy as reasons for resigning.

Hall said he could not do both his senate job well with his other time demands.

Overstreet offers changes for Latah Sheriff's Office

By TANYA MADISON
Editor-in-Chief

Joe Overstreet believes he has the qualities it takes to be the next Latah County Sheriff and so he is running opposite incumbent Democrat Ken Buxton for the job.

Overstreet, a financial planner and tax consultant, says he thinks it is time for a change in the sheriff's office. One change he wants is to disband the deputies' union. "I am for a decent wage for the deputies, but I feel confident that this can be accomplished in-house through better management of the sheriff's department," Overstreet said.

The union is supposed to only represent deputies in wage negotiations, Overstreet said. By bringing in a union negotiator deputies are pushed out of the picture and county commissioners are given a bigger role in the department. "So now what we essentially have is the commissioners doing the duty of the sheriff," Overstreet said. "That's not good for the deputies because the commissioners don't know the job the deputies do."

Overstreet also said that a union is unfair to the county. "When the union negotiator asks for higher wages, the commissioners have to reach some sort of compromise," he said. That means the money needed would have to come from additional taxes, cutting other department's budgets or rerouting other money in the sheriff's department to pay for higher wages.

"It is clear that it is the sheriff's responsibility to set the wages for his department and the incumbent is giving away that responsibility," Overstreet said. "The sheriff is mainly the manager of his budget. If the sheriff doesn't want to face up to the issue of wages, he is giving away his duty."

Overstreet also believes that the sheriff's office should focus less on Moscow and more on the outlying communities. "The sheriff's office should provide little or no service (to Moscow), because service should be provided by the Moscow Police Department."

Overstreet said the outlying communities are often neglected by the current sheriff. "There is no law enforcement for people in small towns anymore."

Overstreet, who served as the commander of a 250 man military police company, said he would also put more emphasis on physical fitness for sheriff's deputies. "Every deputy should be in top physical condition," he said.

A desire to give something back to the community where he has lived for 18 years was what motivated Overstreet to run. He said his military police experience was an enjoyable one and he would like to apply the principles he learned there to the Latah County Sheriff's Office.

He also wants to help improve the quality of policing on the Palouse.

The inevitable decline of American civilization, Part I

Maybe it's time to throw in the towel as far as American civilization is concerned.

The downward spiral of our culture has nothing to do with the economy, foreign policy or chlorine in our drinking water. It has nothing to do with people like George Bush, Bill Clinton or Ross Perot.

It has everything to do with greed and people like Kevin Barry and Madonna.

In 1990 Barry was a panhandler in New York City. Like a lost soul, he wandered the streets of Manhattan asking passersby for money.

According to Barry, begging can be a tough way to make a living.

"Panhandling was not easy," he says. "At times it was very cold and rainy. At those times, even though my shoes had holes and I had no jacket, I would remember that I needed to work in order to pay my rent. I never sat down and just begged for money."

In a 1990 ruling, the United States Department of Health and Human Services said Barry qualified as disabled because of a personality disorder and a history of substance abuse, among other things.

However, since the money he received from begging was considered unearned, he qualified for less in benefits than if he had "earned" it. And therein lies the problem.

The federal government encourages people to work in spite of their disabilities. The feds deduct money from welfare checks if the recipient has an outside source of income. A smaller amount is deducted if the money is earned than if the money was unearned.

This doesn't make Barry happy. He says he has lost nearly $900 in benefits because of the HHS decision. So guess what? In a fit of unabashed greed, he is suing the federal government.

"He's sort of proud of his skills as a panhandler," says his attorney.

Which brings us to Madonna. The sultry sex kitten is proud of her skills as a shameless opportunist when it comes to promoting herself.

She has managed to parlay her breasts into multimillion dollar enterprises. Madonna's current book "Sex" is a 128-page exploration into her sexual fantasies.

According to reports, "Sex" includes portraits of bondage, public nudity, group sex and body piercing in some pretty interesting locations.

The book retails for $49.95 per copy, or roughly $24.98 per breast, and is expected to be one of the big sellers for Christmas.

What does this say about the state of affairs here in the land of the free?

On the one hand is Barry, a man who spends his time getting money for nothing, and who won't rest until he gets more for doing even less.

On the other hand is a talentless entertainer who seduces the public into spending its money for pictures of her crotch.

If Madonna and Barry are examples of the American dream — or the American nightmare — will someone please give us a wake up call?

October is the Las Vegas of months.

The minute you step off the plane in Vegas, you feel like you're in danger. There are larger forces at work and just because you make it out okay once doesn't mean you're safe.

October is the crapshoot of the year. It's nature's way of telling you to cut your losses and get out of Dodge. It's school's way of telling you that you don't really know anything.

Everything that is brutal and mercenary about human nature is on display in October. Everything is dying, and there's nothing beautiful left to shield you.

It's the time when the mud flying from under the wheels of the political machine moves from the news into prime time. It's the time of year that you almost feel sorry for what is happening to George Bush.

You feel sorry for him until you remember that he is only being visited by the ghosts of Bob Dole and Mike Dukakis. Poetic justice may not be the best way to choose the leader of the free world, but it

Woe in store for unwary consumers

Initially, the situation shaped up as a golden moment in apartment life.

My roommate received a phone call from an unknown person, shot a fist in the air and then went running out of the front door at top speed.

Returning a mere ten minutes later, I found out what the noise was about. With a large grin on his face, he came in with a box that read "VCR" in black lettering, five inches high.

After throwing my homework off to the side, I rushed to help him put the contraption together. Fifteen minutes later, we had managed to plug the 100 or so wires into the TV and cable box. Gleeefully, I fetched a movie and jammed it into the front end of the machine.

This proceeded to set my roommate into a series of odd behaviors.

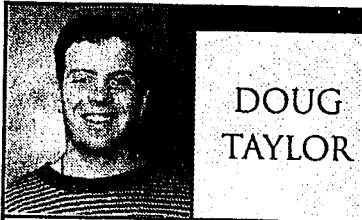

He started by closing his eyes and rocking back and forth on his heels, and then from somewhere deep inside him came this low feral growl. I took a quick step back and looked at him quizzically.

"What did I do," I asked innocently.

"It won't work like that," he exclaimed.

"We plugged it in just like a rental, so it should work just fine," I said.

DOUG

COMMENTARY

Alas, I was wrong because amid the jumbled jargon and arrows that passed for an instruction manual, there was a diagram that showed how to plug the machine up correctly. Oh.

Looking back on the situation, was I really the idiot here? Was it maybe the manufacturer's fault for designing a machine that had hieroglyphics for instructions?

Why do consumers let companies get away with this?

Seeking an answer to the dilemma, I went in and spoke with Dr. Douglas Gillan, a University of Idaho assistant psychology professor. Gillan had been my instructor in an engineering psychology course, which had focused on design in product manufacturing.

It was perhaps the most interesting class I have taken in five years because it told the average consumer he isn't an idiot if he face-plants into a door bearing no clue as to how to enter. Likewise, a consumer was told not to feel ashamed if he wanted to stick his fist through a computer screen after it refused to do what he wanted.

Simply put, the course focused on the problems that consumers faced in the face of poor product design.

Well, the question still remains. Why do people put up with shoddy design when scouting out a potential product?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Just what do homosexuals really want from society?

Editor:
In regard to Measure 9 (Argonaut, Oct. 13), I have a few questions. What do homosexuals want? What is the ratio of that which is lost to that which is prevented and gained? What is morality? What is discrimination? What is the real issue?

Do homosexuals really want to be considered the same as everyone else, with an inbred, irrepresible lust for the same sex? Or do they want to be something more? Is Measure 9 really a discriminatory act, or is it a way to prevent a group from gaining excess rights? Do homosexuals really want equal rights, or do they want a multitude of protective rights because they are an unaccepted "minority"? But they say they want to be recognized as equal and alternative, so what is the motive of the word "minority"? Notice that the words "minority" and "discrimination" tie directly with "gimme, gimme" in every political case.

If this measure is passed, homosexuality will not be promoted, or be held up as a positive alternative lifestyle. Bummer. You mean it isn't a good thing to become an AIDS statistic? Go Oregon!

Is homosexuality normal, right, natural and correct? Is it a thing that is to be striven for and encouraged? If your answer to any of the above is "no," then there is no argument against the third provision of Measure 9 — which immediately strikes one as the most important part. Something to think about: Why are men and women, uh, "designed" the way they are? What is the purpose of intercourse? It is purely a reproductive action. It is not for sport, for a full house, for a royal flush or for two-of-a-kind.

I really like the line where the Archbishop says: "Human rights are basic ... discrimination against anyone is immoral." Immoral? Immoral? And homosexual promiscuity isn't? What is the definition of morality? There is only one that I know of. It comes straight out of the Bible. Read I Corinthians 6:12-20 to find out about God's view of "sexual immorality."

I also like the part about the terrible, far-reaching repercussions. What will they be? A decline in AIDS victims, a return to a focus on real "families," a return to an accepted, healthy, heterosexual relationship with one partner for life, a definition of morality from its own source (hint: God), a new generation of young people (your offspring) that don't have to be exposed to the horrors of sexual misconduct? Sounds pretty bad to me. The other end of the stick? Rampant AIDS victims, people willingly committing suicide to uphold their "choice," an HIV positive surgeon probing your innards? Your decision.

Remember too that the concept of homosexuality being an inborn characteristic is a totally ridiculous attempt to conceal an unaccepted way of life. Do homosexuals want to be the same as you? Or do they want to take away your rights to become something more? It isn't about choice. Do you really want to uphold someone's "choice" by depriving yourself? You aren't being chivalrous, you are letting "choice" destroy you.

"People are so adaptable that they can adjust to even the poorest designs in a machine," he said. "The manufacturers continue to build poorly designed products because consumers continue to buy their stuff regardless."

This line of reasoning inferred that consumers were willing to overlook design blemishes for the latest technological breakthrough. It is easy to see how this can occur, though, since many customers are lured by the product that has the most flashing lights and colored knobs. Still, Gillan's comment wasn't exactly the confidence boost I needed to cure my consumer blues.

However, he then spent some time reassuring me about how certain companies are responding to consumer needs.

"Some manufacturers are starting to turn things around in the area of design," he said. "After all, they do want you to buy more of their products after the initial purchase. It is starting to make sense to make better designed products."

He then mentioned the popular word processing software of a large computer company as an example of a truly "user-friendly" product. Gillan mentioned that these products and others are a sign that companies are finally taking a more humanistic approach to design.

It's a good thing too because I can think of a certain VCR that would look better under the front tires of a car.

makes for good television. The guys that are still on TV by October deserve everything they get, and I guess Americans deserve what they get too.

October is the month that turns everything gray, kills all the grass and leaves, and chases the birds away. It ends with our children dressing up to drive away the evil spirits of October and increasing their candy capital in the process.

October reminds you that both Elvis and Harry Truman are still dead.

The power of October is reversed only in two areas, both of them legendary and bordering on the mystic. The first is in baseball, America's pastime and every half-baked journalist's favorite allegory.

In baseball, October is the month of the giant killer. The only megadollar player in this year's World Series is Jack Morris, who just bought a ranch outside Great Falls, Montana and is having one of his best years ever. (It must be something in either the water or the pizza.) There's only room for team players and those willing to sacrifice on baseball's October roster.

Well, there's room for Deion Sanders too, I guess.

Which brings us to Aric Wright. He's a buddy of mine from Great Falls who is now a Washington State University honor roll student on a R.O.T.C. scholarship. But that's not what makes this crazy motherscratcher legendary and mystical.

For starters, Aric knows almost nothing about baseball.

Two summers ago, he and a friend went looking for a fitted baseball cap. Knowing nothing about baseball, he was choosing this cap solely on the basis of what designs looked good to him.

He bellied up to the counter of the sporting goods store — and I do mean bellied — and said: "Give me that Mariners cap."

His friend, who knew slightly more about baseball than Aric did, said: "You idiot! That's a Milwaukee Brewers hat."

The guy behind the counter just shook his head and sold Aric the Minnesota Twins cap that he and his friend were arguing about.

The Twins went on to win the World Series and the F---in' A Wright theorem was born.

This summer, he decided he was a Raghil Ismail fan and went out to buy a Toronto Argonauts cap. He got a blue and white cap with TORONTO spelled out in red and blue letters. This time he'd gotten the right town, but the wrong team.

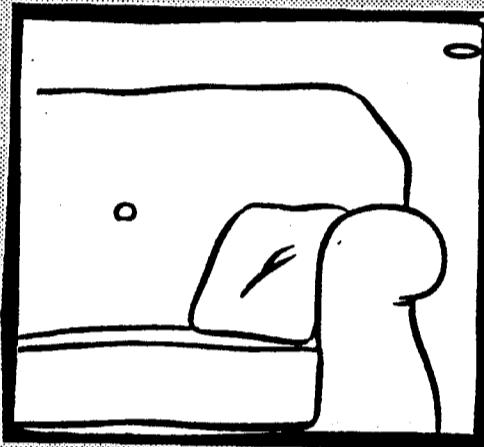

What he'd bought was, of course, a Toronto Blue Jays cap.

Wait a minute. Aren't the Blue Jays winning the World Series three games to the Atlanta Braves one?

F---in' A Wright they are.

Aric Wright handles the trials of October in true American fashion. He grits his teeth and bulls forward without really knowing anything about what he's doing.

No. 1 vs. No. 2 poses problem

COMMENTARY

It's No. 2 vs. No. 1.
It's challenger vs.
challenged.

It's more or less what the Washington Huskies and Miami Hurricanes wish they could have done for two years now.

It's a great match-up. It's great for television! It's great hype!!

But it's really bad timing. Tomorrow at 4:30 p.m. the No. 2 ranked Idaho Vandals will tangle with the No. 1 ranked Northern Iowa Panthers in the first ever meeting between the top two teams in I-AA. At first glance it's the greatest thing that could happen for both teams right now. It's far from that.

All that this game has to offer is two things. First, it's a chance for Idaho to get back a little bit of pride that the Panthers trampled all over last year when UNI came to Moscow, and stomped Idaho, 36-14. Second, it'll be great exposure for the football team, and the university as a whole. But that's about it.

"It's a big game nation wide," Idaho quarterback Doug Nussmeier said. "You always want to show people your program is in the upper echelon."

This, however, will not be Idaho's biggest game of the year. Idaho's biggest game of the year has already been played. It occurred last week in Cheney when the Vandals took sole possession of first place in the Big Sky by beating Eastern Washington, 38-21. Idaho is now riding a three-game conference winning streak, and to step out of conference play at this point could hurt.

"It's kind of a pain going out of league play when you're on a role," Idaho head coach John L. Smith said. "When you get into league play you'd like to stay in league play."

Another problem this game poses is the possibility of unneeded injuries. Last Saturday at EWU the first serious fatality hit the Idaho squad as starting linebacker Brian Wamsley was lost for the remainder of the regular season. With four league games remaining, all Idaho doesn't need is to play a non-league game and lose two or three more starters for the year. Just ask Idaho State head coach Brian McNeely whose team got pounded at UNI five weeks ago, 49-11. In that game the Bengals lost ten players (two for the season), and of those injured, six were star-

The Idaho Vandals and Northern Iowa Panthers will take a break from league play when they clash tomorrow evening before an expected sell-out crowd of 16,324 in Cedar Falls, IA. Game time is set for 4:30 p.m. PST, and will be televised locally on KHQ Channel 6.

Idaho, ranked No. 2 in this week's NCAA Division I-AA poll, will look to avenge last year's 36-14 loss to the No. 1 Panthers. Idaho, also No. 2 at that time, led 14-13 at halftime, but on their first four possessions of the second half they turned the ball over, and UNI capitalized for 20 unanswered points. Of those miscues, three were interceptions by Idaho quarterback Doug Nussmeier.

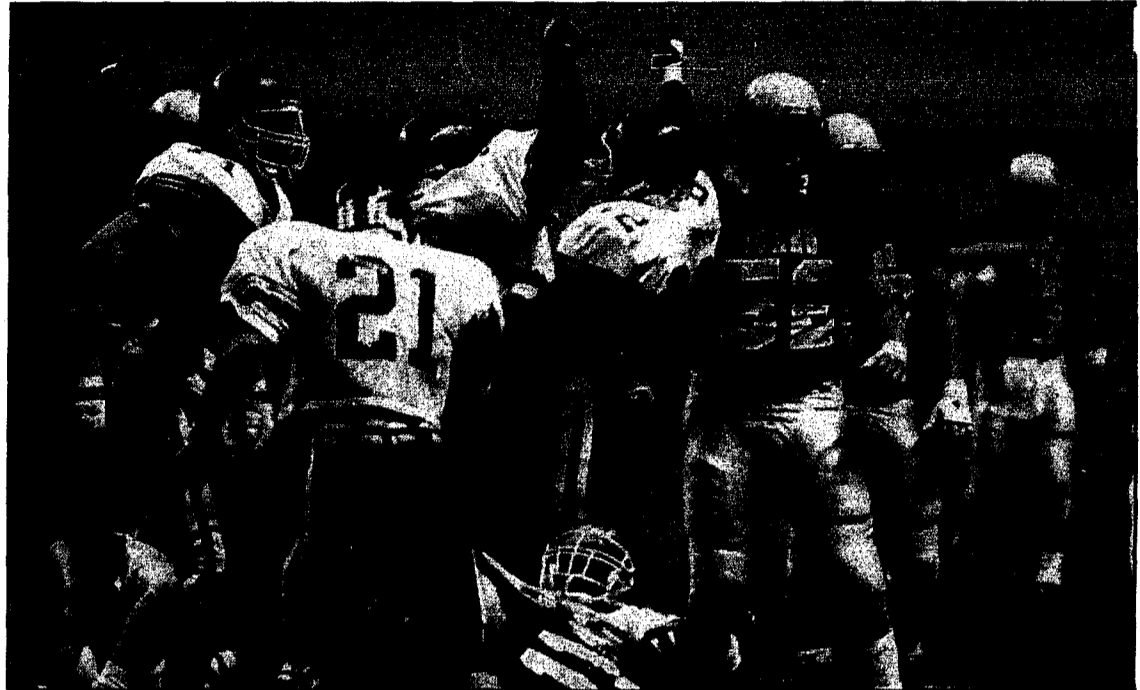

"When we look back to last year we just didn't play in the second half as a team," Idaho head coach John L. Smith said. "When you do that against a good team you get embarrassed. We've got to come out and play four quarters, and we didn't do that last year."

This year Nussmeier will have to throw the ball well all game in order to beat UNI. The Panthers boast the fifth best defense in the country, and are ranked sixth in pass efficiency defense. Idaho, on the other hand, leads the nation in total offense averaging 505.8 yards a game, and are averaging 41.3 points a game.

"They're defense is going to gear up for the pass," Nussmeier said. "But we also proved we can win with the run, so if we have to, we'll run the football."

If Idaho does go to the run, they'll need to do a far better job than a year ago. Against UNI in '91, Idaho ran the ball 40 times for a total of 21 yards. Ronnie White was the leading rusher with 36 yards.

"I don't think we'll see a lot of the things that we saw last year,"

Idaho head coach John L. Smith said. "They'll do anything to keep you off balance on defense, and they bring a lot of pressure."

UNI's leading tackler is senior inside linebacker Peter Burns who has 59 stops on the year, which includes 28 solos. The other big man for UNI on defense is senior linebacker William Freeney. Last season Freeney led the team with 13 sacks, and six tackles for losses. He also forced two fumbles, had two fumble recoveries, four pass deflections, and two interceptions. This season he's picked up right where he left off with 65 tackles, and nine sacks in six games.

"They show a lot of man coverage, and blitz a lot," Nussmeier said. "Most teams we see give us just one look, but they'll (UNI) give a bunch of looks, so it's hard to guess what their scheme is."

Offensively the Panthers rely on the running game. Junior running back Tank Comer leads the ground attack as he's rushed for 534 yards on the season, and set a Gateway Conference record last week by running for 254 yards on 46 carries against Southern Illinois.

"They're basically the same team from last year," Smith said. "They lost a few defensive linemen, but they've got their running back, quarterback, and wide receiver back."

The wide receiver Smith is referring to is the speed demon Kenny Shedd. Last season against Idaho Shedd had five receptions for 136 yards, which included a 52-yard TD on UNI's first possession, and another TD that went for 37 yards. This season the senior has six TD's, and is averaging 35.1 yards a reception. He's also returned two punts for TD's.

"He's a great, great player," Smith said. "That kid can play at any school in the country."

At quarterback for UNI is senior Jay Johnson. On the season Johnson has completed 58 of 119 passes for 48.7 percent, and has thrown ten TD's and four interceptions. After throwing for 2,399 yards and 20 TD's a year ago, Johnson is on pace to break that with over 1,100 yards this year.

IDAHO INFO-- UNI has won 20-straight games at home, and have won 14 regular season games in a row...Running back Sherriden May has 13 touchdowns on the season. Boise State has 14...Idaho linebacker Brian Wamsley is out for the rest of the season with torn ligaments in his elbow...Last year's loss to UNI was the Vandals worst since a 38-7 defeat to Furman in the 1988 playoffs...Receiver Yo Murphy is averaging 128.8 yards a game which is No. 1 in I-AA...The UNI-Idaho game will begin its broadcast on KIVI in Boise about 30 minutes before the Broncos begin their home game against Portland State. The game should have a negative effect on the gate for the BSU game.

UI can't afford second-half collapse

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

Sometimes it doesn't hurt to enter the lion's mouth.

The lion in this case would be the Northern Iowa Panthers, who are the number one NCAA Division I-AA team in the country. In 1991, they clawed back from a 14-13 halftime deficit to humble the University of Idaho 36-14 before 11,500 Kibbie Dome patrons.

The second-ranked 6-0 Vandals have to travel to Iowa this year, but there is no discouragement evident about this fact. The focus on Northern Iowa seemed to set in directly after the Vandals' big win against Eastern Washington University.

Idaho's 1991 contest with Northern Iowa was marked by more than just an L in the win-loss column. The game was also the beginning of an odd second-half Vandal malady that became known as El Foldo.

The symptoms of this ailment included outstanding first-half performances and then mysterious collapses in the final two quarters. Another example of this could be seen in the Vandals' game against Nevada-Reno, which followed on the heels of the NIU game.

The University of Idaho played like gangbusters in assuming a 23-10 lead against an exceptionally talented Wolfpack team. Then came the halftime speeches and....

The Wolfpack scored the game's final 21 points in the third and fourth quarters to beat the Vandals 31-23.

A third case of the disease struck in Ogden, Utah as Weber State scored 31 second-half points to pummel Idaho 45-17. However, Idaho has already wiped this slate clean with a 52-24 Kibbie Dome rout in the third game of this year.

As a matter of fact, Idaho

"We have to control both lines of scrimmage, and we can't have any mental breakdowns. If we have a breakdown like last year, we will be coming home with a loss."

—Jeff Robinson
Vandal defensive end has played tremendous second-half football in 1992 as they have outscored five of their six opponents in the final two quarters.

Which brings attention back to the Panthers.

As the Vandals fly to Cedar Falls, don't expect them to underestimate their opponent, especially with the thought in mind that a second-half collapse will be fatal.

Standout defensive end Jeff Robinson knew exactly the kind of Vandal effort needed for a win.

"We have to control both lines of scrimmage, and we can't have any mental breakdowns," said the 1992 Big Sky Conference defensive player of the year moments after Saturday's win over EWU. "If we have a breakdown like last year, we will be coming home with a loss."

From here, it doesn't look like any letdowns are coming in the near future.

Tennis duo heads to CA

By LOREN ROBERTS

Senior Merlene Forde and sophomore Shaley Denler will be competing in The ITCA Rolex Tournament at Stanford University this weekend.

"It's a good opportunity for my one and two players to play against a nationally ranked player," head coach Dave Scott said. "The competition is just at another level than what we see up here."

The field will include 128 women, and every player is guaranteed four matches, two in singles and two in doubles. Idaho and Nevada were the only schools accepted that were out of the region selected.

"This is something I've really tried to get in the program," Scott said. "It makes the girls work harder to get a shot at something like this."

ters. Now, after starting 2-0 (which included a win over 5-2 Boise State), ISU boasts a 1-3 conference record, and are 3-4 overall. Enough said.

After Idaho manhandled ISU 49-18 it can be argued that Idaho has a much better team going against UNI than ISU did, so the two aren't comparable. But it can also be said that ISU was a healthier team before UNI, and that the Panthers ran the score up in the fourth quarter.

The point is, injuries don't play favorites.

This isn't to take anything away from the game, though. If Idaho does win it'll be a big win for the program, and give the university some exposure that money can't buy. And with two of their last four competitors at the bottom of the conference, a win in Cedar Falls almost guarantees a play-off berth for Idaho. An important note, though, is that a non-conference loss at this point isn't a big deal.

Staying healthy is.

"This game is more of a pride thing," Nussmeier said. "So the only thing that's really important is being in the top-16 at the end of the season. We just need to stay healthy."

I wish Idaho wasn't playing UNI because of a fear of them not doing exactly that.

Nevertheless, the two will meet, and a win by the Vandals with no injuries would be incredible. A respectable loss without any injuries would be a blessing. Who knows, maybe somewhere down the road they'll play again, and Idaho will beat them when it matters...in the playoffs. At this point it's not worth losing any players just to be ranked No. 1. That only matters on December 19th, the day of this year's national championship.

This will be Idaho's second straight game against a ranked team which increases the challenge. Win or lose, the Vandals will get a good idea of where they stand on the national level.

A perfect scenerio? They'll be standing on their own.

Cars: friends or foes?

Students, I have noticed, have a decidedly love-hate relationship with their particular form of motorized transportation.

I drive a beat-up, powder blue Ford Escort. If we were to compare my autobiography with that of my car, my car would win the most interesting read contest tires down.

My car has had a run-in with a deer, a pedestrian, tree limbs and other cars. This was not under my ownership, however the previous owner would sue me for defamation of character if I were to name names. Needless to say, however, my car has had a rough life.

So at times, it decides to show the strain of age and abuse. Usually, it's when I really need to get where I am going. That's when my car decides to smoke, grind, gurgle, race, chug, putter or wheeze. That's when I decide to curse, kick it, swear that I was a Rockerfeller switched at birth, and call where I'm going to announce I'll be late.

I've noticed that I'm not alone in this phenomena. My friend Chris told me that he and his pick-up have the same contentious relationship. "When it works, it is the best truck in the world. When it doesn't, it's the biggest pile of...." Well, I think you can see where this is heading.

Another friend, Lisa, has a similar antagonistic relationship with her orange bomber. Her car has left her stranded, alone, at night, at some of the finer rest stops and hick towns in the Northwest. "I love my car," she said sounding defeated and tired, "but I would love it more if it were to run more than three days a month."

My last and final friend, I have only three, told me that she finds herself, gasp, looking at OTHER CARS when she is out riding around in her gerbilmobile, (Her name for it, not mine). "It's my baby. I bought it new and paid for it myself. But now I find myself gazing longingly at other cars, dreaming of shifting their gears...." Her eyes kind of glazed over then, and the conversation came to a sudden stop. I think she went out to have a cigarette and look at the hot Porsche that just raced by.

The point is that most students alternately curse and cuddle their cars. They rub the dashboard at the first sign of trouble saying in soothing tones, "It's okay baby car. You can do it. Do it for me, just this once." We sound like parents trying to get our kids to choke down strained peas.

But I've decided to look at the bright side of owning a clunker. There are actually several good points.

■ People stay away from me when I'm driving. They see the deer, car, tree and pedestrian dents and decide pretty quickly that I have the right of way, even if I am heading the wrong way up a one-way street at 95 m.p.h. in a blizzard. I like that.

■ There's not a lot of guilt to keep your car clean if it looks like the sole survivor of a Smash Up Derby. Spilled soda or a few cheese doodles between the seats lose their trauma potential pretty quickly.

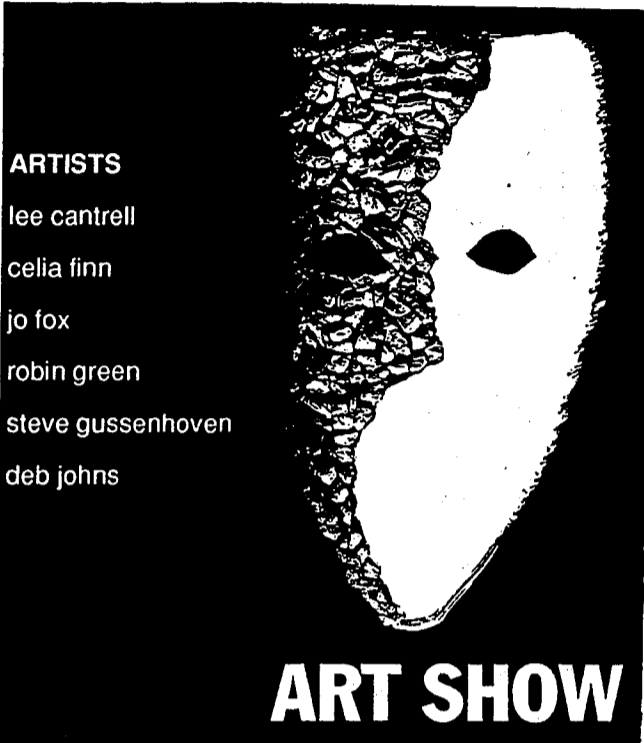

■ I never have to worry about anyone trying to steal my car. If someone is that desperate, and only an escaped convict who wants to be recaptured could be, they are more than free to try and get my car started. Good luck. Write me a postcard from the mall and let me know how you did it, if you get that far.

■ People don't ask you to give them rides in your car when it's a clunker. They ask if they can take up a collection to buy you a bus pass.

All in all though, I have to admit I love my nasty old temperamental car. It's fun to have a car with personality, even if it is a moody one.

Safe driving campers, I'm going to go see if my car is in the mood to go the marathon distance of four blocks. This could be a new world's record.

The first annual Juxtavisions art show, which includes photography and art by area residents, is currently on display at the University of Idaho Vandal Lounge in the Student Union Building through Oct. 30.

"Juxtavisions is an organization which recently evolved out of a need to provide a medium of exchange for serious photographers commercially and as a fine art," Lee Cantrell, one of the group's organizers said.

Juxtavisions includes photocopied photography by Cantrell, as well as black and white photography by Celia Flinn, Jo Fox, Robin Green, and Steve Gussenhoven. Deb Johns, a Lewiston resident, is displaying visual arts.

In addition to organizing an annual show for photographers and other visual artists in the Palouse, Juxtavisions is producing an annual calendar and other creative projects to bring local artists together.

"Palouse Expressions 1993," the title of this year's calendar, is due out this month and includes work from five photographers and four local poets. It will be available from group members, and local outlets including Bookpeople and Innervations.

Things that go "bump" in the night

By Jay Forman
Staff Writer

On Thursday, Oct. 29 at Xenon, something with a little bump is going take place.

For the past nine years, KRPL/Z-FUN has thrown a Halloween bash for those people that like to do something a little bit different around Halloween. But there's a catch, people must be lucky enough to win tickets on the radio and be 21 years old.

Steve Shannon, who is the promotions director at Z-FUN, said, "Last year the Bump In The Night was unbelievable. It was a full blown party. This year there's going to be more people."

The history of the Bump is fairly simple. The first seven years the party was held at The University Inn, and last year it was at Mingles. This year, Barry (Tassler, the manager of Xenon) really wanted it this year," Shannon said. "The capacity of Xenon is about 1,300 people, and we are expecting at least a thousand. Barry said that he was going to supply decorations and snacks for this one."

If people are lucky enough to win tickets, the invitation is for four people. "It used to be an invitation for a couple only, but we figured that when you go to a party with three friends it's already a party anyway," Shannon said. "It works out better this way."

With 250 invitations given, Shannon expects at least three of the four invited on the invitation to attend. Admission to Xenon is free with an invitation, but radio personality Daryl Summers said, "You probably want to bring a few dollars just to be on the safe side."

Local distributors have had a large hand in the Bump this year. Pizza Perfection has donated 90 large pizzas along with the various prizes that Miller has donated. In addition to key chains and shirts, Miller has donated "Ghost Bottles" which are glow in the dark bottles that have a "Ghost" inside of it after you drink the beer.

Z-FUN is giving away some major prizes: for best overall costume and for the most creative couple there are two Fisher CD players (one for each).

About the event happening on a Thursday, Shannon said, "I think that it's good that it's going to be on a Thursday night because with it being a weekday and all, people will remain under a semblance of control."

Gary Cummings, who is the operations manager at Z-FUN, said, "We've seen some pretty outrageous costumes. One year a guy came dressed as a battleship. We've seen a couple come as a living room set, and one year a threesome came and there were two guys who had a banquet table on their back and in the middle of the table was a platter. Open the platter and one of the guys' wives was a head on a platter. Some of the costumes that we've seen must have taken a lot of planning."

They've seen everything from The California Raisins to The Ghostbusters. But, one thing they haven't seen: "We'd like to see the Swedish Bikini Team this year," Cummings said with more than a hint in his voice.

Shannon said, "It's fine if you wear an outrageous costume, but there's a difference because what wins the prizes is not only

"Peter" with "John," "Michael" and "Lost Boys" in National Touring Musicals Production of "Peter Pan."

Peter Pan popping onto the Palouse

Peter Pan is flying into Pullman on Monday night. The Broadway musical version of the play will be featured at the Beasley Coliseum.

Everyone knows the story of Peter Pan. It is of a boy who refuses to grow up and spends his time flying off to new adventures. Something we all wish we could do from time to time.

Many actresses have brought Peter Pan to life on Broadway, but the performance in Pullman will be Melissa Giattino's version. She has performed in such shows as "Cabaret," "Chorus Line" and "Gypsy," and recently completed the National Touring Musicals International tour of "42nd Street." Giattino portrayed Peggy Sawyer in the leading role and performed in Singapore, Hong Kong and Malaysia.

Gary Kimble will play Captain Hook, "the greatest villain of all time." Kimble trained at the American Academy of Dramatic Arts and began his career with the Kenley Players. He has worked with such stars as Mickey Rooney and Paul Lynde.

Kimble's previous performances have included General Grant in "Bloody Shenendoah" on the Discovery Channel, and "God's Country" and "A Walk on a Lake Eerie" in New York. He also toured last season as Daddy Warbucks in the National Touring Musical's production of "Annie."

This production of "Peter Pan" is part of a Northwest tour and will also be seen in Seattle, Boise and Victoria, B.C.

Tickets for the show are priced at $8 to $25 and can be purchased at Ticket Express in the University of Idaho Student Union Building in Moscow, at the Beasley Depot in Pullman and at Albertson's in Lewiston. The performance will be Monday, Oct. 26 at 7:30 p.m.

Symphony performs two concerts

By ELIZABETH POWELL
 Contributing Writer

The Washington Idaho Symphony will be presenting its second concert of the 1992-93 season this Saturday. The concert, at the Lewiston Civic Theatre, will begin at 8 p.m. A second concert will be held Monday at Gladish School in Pullman also beginning at 8 p.m.

The Symphony, conducted by Dr. L. Keating Johnson, will be performing pieces by Maurice Ravel, Robert Schumann and Dmitri Shostakovich. The Symphony will begin the program with Schumann's Manfred Overture. Johnson stated in a press release that the Symphony has never performed Schumann and this was a precedent setting "foray into 19th Century Romanticism."

 Ravel's Alborado del Gracioso will delight the audience with its Spanish feel and wild emotion. Following intermission, the orchestra will perform Shostakovich's Symphony No. 1, a masterwork of 20th century music which made its premiere in 1926.

Conductor Johnson will hold pre-concert lectures one hour preceding each performance, where he will discuss the composers' lives and the music to be performed. These pre-concert lectures are free and open to everyone.

A special bus service is available from Moscow to the Pullman concert. The buses will leave from the Palouse Empire Mall and deliver concert goers to the auditorium. "This is a very special, new program for the patrons of the Symphony. We hope to make attending concerts as easy and fun as possible," commented Kenton Bird, who innovated the project.

Tickets for either performance are available at the door or from Ticket Express in Moscow or Marjean's Music in Lewiston. Adult tickets are $8.00, Seniors $7.00, College $4.50, and Youth $2.00. For more information call 882-6555 in the Moscow area or 1-800-949-2787, other areas.
