INEL to release Environmental Impact Statement

By SHARI IRETON
Assistant News Editor

For the first time, the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory is working on an Environmental Impact Statement to be released to the public sometime in 1993.

According to a press release from the Idaho Department of Energy, the EIS will address and identify the current and potential problems they face by managing the waste from INEL.

INEL was established in Idaho in 1949 as a site for the construction of nuclear reactors, support facilities and equipment for testing and operating. A National Environmental Research Park was established at INEL in 1975, one of only seven in the nation. The 570,000 acre INEL site is a protected outdoor laboratory where scientists from all agencies conduct research.

Much of the Environmental Restoration and Waste Management-related facilities at INEL are more than 30 years old and were designed to meet the standard of those times. DOE will upgrade and remediate these facilities in order to comply with the current environmental requirements and health standards due to the results of the EIS.

One of the main concerns that will be dealt with in the statement is the laboratory's disposal, treatment and storage of waste. INEL works with four types of waste, hazardous, radioactive, municipal and mixed waste.

Hazardous waste includes materials that may pose risks to human health and may be flammable, corrosive, reactive or toxic. There is no on-site treatment for this kind of material, but INEL does have temporary storage. After a 90 day storage, the waste must be transported to Hazardous Waste Storage Facility.

Radioactive waste is either incinerated or turned into glass, based on what level of waste it is. It stored until it can be transported and disposed of at a repository.

Recycling activities are used to separate and collect municipal waste products and no storage is needed. While a county landfill is being considered, municipal waste is currently disposed at an INEL landfill.

Mixed waste treatment is the biggest challenge to INEL engineers because it is so toxic. At this time, mixed waste is stored at INEL to await treatment, but is not disposed of on that property.

In 1969, Congress passed the National Environmental Policy Act for preserving and enhancing man's environment. The NEPA also created an advisory council to oversee trends in the quality of the national environment.

Representatives from INEL will be speaking in Moscow at the University Inn Nov. 24.

Cooperative Education helps students find jobs

By BETSY CARVER
Staff Writer

The Cooperative Education Department is helping students make decisions, and smart ones, by having orientation sessions.

These sessions talk about what Cooperative Education and Career Services can do for students interested in internships and other hands-on job opportunities.

Alice Pope Barbut, Acting Cooperative Education Director, is working to bring more businesses to the University of Idaho campus to interview students for these internships.

Already she has lined up Catherine Schatzel, Personnel Staffing Specialist of the Office of Personnel Management in Seattle, to discuss opportunities with the Federal Government. Schatzel will be in the Brink Hall Faculty Lounge at 9:30 a.m. and Forestry Building 108 at 1:30 p.m. on Friday, October 30th.

"A person majoring in anything can work for the Federal Government," Barbut said.

An information session for spring internships at Walt Disney World is also being held at WSU Compton Union Building 212 at 6:30 on Wednesday. Because of budget cuts agencies are choosing to only go to one of the two campuses, although all UI students are also welcome.

Other interviews will be announced as they come to campus. The Cooperative Education Department is constantly receiving new opportunities and would like to see more UI students apply.

Barbut also helps students with resumes, application forms, interviews, and interview follow up procedures. She advises students in picking the internship or post graduation job that best suits them.

For more information on internships and job opportunities Barbut is at 885-5822, in Education Building room 204.

NSE celebrates twenty-fifth year

By DEANN NORTHAM
Contributing Writer

For students who are bored, adventurous, or just like to travel, the National Student Exchange may have the right program.

NSE is a self-supporting, non-profit organization which provides students and inexpensive, cost-effective, domestic alternative to study abroad. The organization provides opportunities for students enrolled at colleges and universities in the United States and its territories.

NSE started its program in 1967, and is celebrating its twenty-fifth anniversary this year. There are over 100 accredited colleges included in the program, and nearly 2000 students who exchange annually.

UI is one of the universities enrolled in the NSE program. John Sawyer, UI's coordinator, said NSE "Opens opportunities, instead of saying 'I'd never want to live in a big city...it won't scare them (students) anymore.'"

Sawyer said there are some obvious advantages with the exchange program. First, it is possible for students to attend more expensive schools at UI's costs. Sawyer said students have two ways to pay for an exchange:

- They can arrange to pay Idaho's fees at the school of their choice.
- They can pay resident fees at their host school.

"The student and the school have a cooperative agreement," said Sawyer.

Students also have a relatively easy time transferring credits across schools. Sawyer said it is possible to find out in advance which classes will transfer, and which will not.

"We sent about 50 students a year, and take in about 20," said Sawyer. He said nationwide that 80 percent of the students who exchange go to their first choice of schools. Some of the schools that students tend to exchange to most often are the Universities of Massachusetts, New Hampshire, South Carolina, Hawaii, Maryland, and Trenton State at New York, and Humboldt State in northern California.

Lisa Bailey, a senior in psychology, exchanged to the University of Nebraska last semester. "It made me more outgoing, and more open about talking to strangers," she said about the exchange. Bailey knew nobody at that university.

Bailey said that transferring credits was the easiest thing to do. So her schoolwork was not effected at all by her exchange.

One of the big differences she noticed over there was the different floors of the dorms were not close-knit like those here. The whole tower was one dorm. "It was hard to get to know people," she said. However, Bailey enjoyed her time there. "I wouldn't mind going again sometime, to someplace else."

Yvonne Bordenave exchanged to UI from the University of New Mexico in Albuquerque. This was at the beginning of last year, and she liked it so much she decided to stay. "You don't think moving across the U.S. would make such a large difference," Bordenave said.

She said it was hard leaving her family, but everyone here was friendly. In New Mexico, her school had 30,000 students. "I like having a smaller school," she said. "You have small classrooms and the teachers actually know your name." Bordenave said she liked the collegiate atmosphere at UI, and that's part of why she decided to stay.

Sawyer said that students interested in exchanging next year can pick up an application on December 10. There is a $50 application fee, and the application needs to be turned in preferably by the third week in February. "We're working as hard as we can to get as many students to place as we can," he said.

Naval ROTC kicks off new year

By BRANDY CORGATELLI
Staff Writer

The UI/WSU Naval ROTC unit swore in the biggest crew of newcomers in years this fall, according to Paul Pierzchanowski, the public affairs officer for the unit.

Pierzchanowski, a senior at the UI who has been with the unit for three years, said forty-eight new faces have joined the unit.

The number of newcomers was, "highly more than usual," Pierzchanowski said. "This was about the best we've done in years."

Pierzchanowski attributes the high number a general military scale-down leading the Navy to the cancellation of some Naval ROTC programs at other colleges after a general military scale-down. "Those students who would have gone to those other schools are now coming here," he said.

Pierzchanowski said the recent Gulf war has not dampened interest in the military but rather has heightened it.

"It seems to have actually upgraded the pride in the military after that operation in the gulf," Pierzchanowski said.

One goal of the group is academic success, according to Pierzchanowski. "We have higher standards than the university itself," he said.

The ROTC group requires a 2.5 cumulative grade point average for the freshmen and the standard rises every year thereafter. The unit doesn't make members struggle through difficult subjects by themselves though, as in-house tutors are available.

Pierzchanowski said the unit also recognizes that there is more to life than school. Every week throughout the school year they schedule a personal development seminar on topics like AIDS, alcohol abuse and suicide prevention.

With all these different programs the unit doesn't forget the primary reason for their existence: to prepare for a commission in the U.S. Navy or Marine Corps. They prepare through Naval science coursework and various field trips and summer trips.

The field trips allow for some simulation activities and hands-on training. "At these sites a cockpit might be set up so you can jump-in and pretend your flying," Pierzchanowski said.

Benson seeks second term based on previous record

By TANYA MADISON
Editor-in-Chief

Idaho fifth district senator Betty Benson is hoping that Nov. 4 will find her still gainfully employed.

Benson is running against Republican challenger Gary Schroeder for the state senate seat. Benson believes that her experience and her effectiveness in office make her the better candidate for the job.

"I work hard. I read the bills. Very few legislators take the time to do that," Benson said. "I have been an effective legislator and that is what the people need." Benson has sponsored 18 bills during her first term in the senate. Of those, 13 became law. Benson said educational programs are her main area of concern. "I worked to support programs for preschools and kindergartens, pushed for reduced class sizes and other things that would generally improve education."

Benson is concerned about the impact that the One Percent Initiative would have on education if the proposition is passed by the voters. "I've been knocking on a lot of doors lately," she said. "The One Percent Initiative is the number one issue on people's mind's right now. A lot of voters are very concerned it will pass."

Benson said that the damage done by the initiative would not be easy to repair. "It would be very hard working lobbying to get some kind of remedy passed. If the One Percent passes, the legislature will have to try and fill the shortages immediately. That would mean having to implement an expanded sales tax or a similiar measure to get the money immediately," she said.

Benson said that replacement tax measures such as personal or corporate income tax would not come into the state coffers soon enough to offset cuts made by the One Percent. Other taxes, such as those placed on beer, wine or cigarettes, would not generate enough income quickly enough. "It would be very difficult to replace that kind of revenue quickly. Funding from that state would have to go to the public schools to make up the difference, which could lead to a shortfall for higher education."

Benson, a student at UI and a former UI staff member, said it is important to secure the position of the university as the premier university in the state. "Keeping UI strong in its state as the preeminent university is really important," she said. "BSU has a higher student population and so many think Boise should have a bigger piece of the pie. I don't believe that."

Benson said she wants to continue in office in order to work on the problems Idaho is facing. One of the biggest problems is finding the balance between the environment and business, she said. "There are a number of ways economic forces can continue to function and still take care of the environment," she said. Each industry just needs to look at how it can be more eco-friendly, she said.

For example, those who work in agriculture can test the water in the surrounding area, practice erosion control and cut down on chemical use. Those in the tourism industry can push for tougher littering laws. Timber companies can establish buffer zones along streams and eliminate clearcuts. "We can just go industry by industry to find ways to reduce pollution."

Crawford enjoys researching in Moscow

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

While sitting in his office, Don Crawford received a phone call from someone seeking legal advice from him.

After finishing the conversation and hanging up, Crawford said the caller was a friend of his who had worked in his lab as a graduate student — 10 years ago to be exact.

"I still know all of my students who have worked for me," said Crawford. "Sometimes, though, I have to put the voice with the face before I can recognize who I am speaking with."

Crawford, a professor of bacteriology at the University of Idaho, estimates that he has had about 40 graduate students working for him since arriving in Moscow in 1976. He said, however, that this number of students is small compared to the number of students working at labs in large schools.

He is a person who knows something about big schools.

Crawford grew up in a small Oklahoma town with a population of 4,000, and that it had "two stoplights, one of which was blinking." From there, Crawford enrolled at tiny Oklahoma City University where he graduated with a degree in biology. Then he hit the big time.

He took his scientific interest to the University of Wisconsin in Madison, and he received his doctorate from the huge Big Ten school in 1973. Crawford then moved to Fairfax, Va. to start teaching biology as an assistant professor. He remembers the campus growing exponentially while he was there, partly because it was close to Washington D.C., but he said the gridlock in trying to get to work started to frazzle him.

"My moment of clarity telling me it was time to go came one day as I was crossing the Potomac River after work," said Crawford. "It took me 30 minutes to cross that bridge, and I decided right there it was time to save my sanity."

So it was in the fall of 1976 that Crawford brought his family to Moscow, and it turned out to be everything that Crawford wanted.

Homecoming Royalty adjusting to newly found celebrity Jolley enjoys role as Queen Finch honored to be first Homecoming King

By TIM HELMKE
Staff Writer

A life of royalty and glamour has hit this year's University of Idaho Homecoming Queen and she loves it all.

Lisa Jolley, 1992 Homecoming Queen, remembers when her name was first called by UI President Elisabeth Zinser at the Homecoming bonfire. She didn't believe it at first.

Jolley, who is a member of the UI Vandal Marching Band which was performing at the bonfire, said that "the band members around me had to push me out to be crowned. I was in total shock at that time."

Jolley said she had her doubts after the interview, which she felt was very tough, but she knew that she had a shot at being one of the royalty. Jolley and her two attendants, Kiley Nichols and Kalista Barclay, already were great friends from working on the Student Alumni relations board together. She said they really enjoyed that time together through the Homecoming weekend.

Her Homecoming Weekend was full of activities and events, and she had personal commitments, as well as Queen commitments.

She attended the Homecoming Concert, the Alumni breakfast, the parade, a presentation prior to the football game, marching in the half-time show, the post-game celebration, and the dance.

Jolley was busy with these activities from 7 a.m. Saturday to 1 a.m. Sunday.

She found most of her highlights came at the presentation of Homecoming royalty at the pre-game show at the Kibbie Dome. She was escorted by her father, George Jolley of Boise, and was greeted by a sword arch from the Navy ROTC unit. The arch that really highlighted her weekend was that made by her fellow trombone players in the band. "I saw the arch and was so touched by their support and honor," said Jolley.

Jolley is working on getting an entry in the Boise Holiday Parade before the UI-BSU game in November to show that the students at UI are in touch with their alumni that represent southern Idaho.

By TIM HELMKE
Staff Writer

Being the first person in a new position is not always fun, but the first University of Idaho Homecoming King has taken it all really easily.

Rob Finch, a 20-year old junior, was crowned as the first ever UI Homecoming King at the Homecoming Week Bonfire. He was crowned after one week of competitions that vary from the queen's selection process.

Finch and the other candidates for king all submitted resumes that were then distributed to the living groups for voting. One-half of the total points that the candidates received were from these votes.

The other half came from the skit competition in which the living group that sponsored the king candidate had to perform with him. The skits were pre-judged before the bonfire so that a winner of the king competition could be announced at the bonfire.

Finch was one of three contestants in the "Homecoming Game" which was put on with his fraternity, Alpha Kappa Lambda, with a set-up similar to the "Dating Game." Finch was the ultimate winner of a date with the lovely "lady" that had chosen him as her "Homecoming King."

Finch attended most of the UI Homecoming events with Lisa Jolley, 1992 Homecoming Queen. They rode in a convertible at the start of the parade and then made an appearance on the AKL-AGD float that was later in the parade.

Finch particularly enjoyed being in the parade and getting to shake hands and see little kids. "It gave me a chance to represent the UI and to be that fairy tale role model to the kids that they look up to," said Finch.

Finch also was pleased with the number of alumni that were back in Moscow to support the current students. "I was happy to see so many alumni back," said Finch.

Finch is really honored to be the first ever Homecoming King that the university has crowned. He said that when he first came to the UI two years ago, he was surprised that there wasn't one. "It is about time that the UI jumped into the 1990's way of life and crowned a King with a Queen," said Finch.

Finch has been busy with interviews and may be the feature of an Alaskan magazine, his home state. He is taking everything in stride but he comments that the interviews are the toughest part of being king as he isn't quite sure what the interviewers want to know. "I have been getting used to these interviews and have started to actually enjoy them," reported Finch.

UI students takin' it to the streets

By BRANDY CORGATELLI
Staff Writer

Students are being encouraged to go "Into the Streets" in droves. It's not to riot. It's not for a political march. "Into the Streets" is a chance for students to volunteer for community service projects. "We're just a small part of a national effort to involve college students in the community," said Jim Sawyer, who works in the office of Student Advisory Services and is coordinator of "Into the Streets" at UI. Many campus in almost every state are involved in the "Into the Streets" program.

In some metropolitan areas, "Into the Streets" groups are focusing on issues like AIDS and homelessness. Moscow volunteers are addressing different, but not unimportant, needs, according to Sawyer.

Volunteers will spend part of their afternoon on November 7 with one of several different organizations such as Latah Care Center, Stepping Stones, Good Samaritan Retirement Village, and others.

"You totally get to choose where you want to go," said Kelly Rush, an ASUI senator who has helped organize the event.

"Some (activities) are inside and some are outside," said Rush. Outside work includes lawn care and winterizing homes for the developmentally disabled.

Several social activities will take place indoors with the elderly. For example, at Latah Care Center volunteers will play sit-down volleyball and will have a refreshment and social time, Rush said.

Sawyer said the people who get their yard worked on or who make social contacts obviously benefit, but the real benefit is for the student. "They get the good feeling of going out to brighten someone's day," he said. "Last year the people just warmed up to us."

Over 200 student volunteers were involved in the project last year and Sawyer is hoping for equal or higher numbers this year.

"I think this community gives a lot to the students and I think we should give something back," said Rush.

"Moscow is such a nice town to raise a family," said Crawford. "It's not like my childhood town where there was one blinking light. Moscow is a small town that has a lot of cultural opportunities."

He hasn't wasted the opportunity to teach in Moscow.

During his 16 years in Moscow, Crawford has become one of the school's top researchers. By his estimates, he has landed more than $4 million in grants to research ways in which to help clean contaminated soil with microbes. Citing an active personal support for the environment, Crawford now uses his lab to help different agencies clean up chemically-contaminated soil. He said the agencies seeking his help are extremely diverse in nature.

"I have done work for the Environmental Protection Agency, the U.S. Department of Defense and various industrial and corporate agencies," said

Crawford.

He said that his latest research has been successful in developing microbes to deal with contamination stemming from nitroaromatic compounds like TNT.

Despite his success, Crawford said he has experienced problems with trying to do research in a small state. He cited a limited infrastructure within the university system in funding large research projects. He also cited a problem in dealing with powerful individuals in the state who can influence a research grant based on their relationship with Idaho's politicians.

Nonetheless, Crawford was quick to defend the university, saying, for instance, that the school recently completed a couple of multi-million dollar fermentation labs to accommodate large research projects.

Crawford said that the problems mentioned above are trivial in the final analysis, "This school offers a great quality of life that is very attractive to top researchers and teachers looking for work."

Property tax slashing initiative is 100 percent wrong

Election time is drawing near and one issue could impact Moscow and Latah County more than any other. That issue is the One Percent Initiative.

The initiative would limit the property taxes that could be charged to one percent of the property's value. The problem is that by doing this, the university and surrounding communities will lose millions of dollars.

Supporters of the One Percent say the University of Idaho won't lose a single cent if the initiative passes. They claim that not passing the initiative will give the tax-and-spend crowd a blank check. They claim other sources of funding can be found to make up for the shortfall in city, county and state coffers.

The reality is this: the university is underfunded and understaffed. Classes are crowded, facilities like the U-Hut which houses the theatre department are crumbling and money for programs is scarce.

Think of all of the times classes weren't offered, closed out or taught with inadequate equipment. Passing the One Percent Initiative is akin to chopping off a man's leg when its broken instead of performing the surgery necessary to fix it.

The university would not be the only institution in town to be cut off at the knees. Latah County Sheriff Ken Buxton, Moscow Police Chief Bill Brown, the Moscow City Council, the Latah County Commissioners and the administrators at Gritman Medical Center are just a few of the people who have said the One Percent would cripple their operations.

Areas that would suffer include schools, fire and police protection, libraries, trash disposal, highways, hospitals, recreational programs, water and sewer, and emergency services.

These are all things residents of Moscow take for granted. But residents would howl and protest if these services were sliced. This initiative would not only slice these programs, it would dice and puree them.

The fact is no one likes property taxes. But they are a necessary evil in a society that likes having police, sewers, schools, etc. People get what they pay for. To not shell out the money now is to mortgage the future.

Opponents of the One Percent are not asking to raise taxes, they are simply asking not to have them cut when the money is desperately needed.

It's not right to tell a dying man he has received enough blood if he needs more. It's not right to do that to Moscow or Latah County either.

On Nov. 3, voters will have the opportunity to voice their opinions on the One Percent Initiative. Hopefully, the voters of Moscow and Latah County will stand up and shout No! to those pushing this initiative.

Otherwise the voters will hear county and city services shouting No! to them in the not too distant future.

There's something fishy about Rachel Gilbert

COMMENTARY

In a world that is desperately trying to become conservation wise, some of our lovely politicians can't keep their fingers out of the pot.

Take Republican Rachel Gilbert, who wants to take Snake River sockeye salmon off of the Endangered Species list. She says that paying for the fish's recovery would be too much for the Idaho economy and would cause loss of jobs. Rachel also said there is not enough scientific data to support the fish being put on the list in the first place.

"I believe we should make sound decisions regarding endangered species listing based on science, not 'political science,'" she told the Daily News. Maybe she should follow her own advice and do a little research. Since when has a politician suddenly become an expert on the statistics of a fish species?

Since Rachel doesn't have any faith in the statistics she has (or has not) read, let me give her the facts (from common sense, any basic biology class and informa-

Trapped by a typical consumer

"Today is very important for me," the man said as he eased closer on the park bench.

I cut him a sidelong glance. He looked shady, so I placed my backpack between us as a buffer and planned my escape route.

"I am tired of being put down by the media and by environmental know-it-alls. I am coming out of the closet to declare to the world that I am a typical American consumer, and I'm damn proud of the fact," he said.

At first I was speechless, but I finally managed to ask how he could be so sure that he was a typical representative of the quarter billion or so other Americans, many of whom were undoubtedly trying to enjoy a quiet lunch hour like me.

"Well, for starters, there is a half full box of 'Classic' Purex detergent on the shelf above my washing machine," he said.

I smiled. Trying to change the subject, I asked: "We sure are having beautiful weather for late October, aren't we?"

He ignored me completely, so I changed my strategy. "How about those Blue Jays?" I said. Still no response.

A moment or two later, and after a few nervous glances over his shoulder, he continued.

"I buy 'Classic' detergent instead of those cheap store brands because my clothes deserve the best, and so do I," he said.

"Besides, the box is pretty. 'Anyhow, the detergent I use can be quite revealing about my outlook on life. Fresh from past victories, I can look confidently toward the challenges of tomorrow wearing impeccably faded jeans. My shirts smell of

He paused for a moment. Taking advantage of the lull, I stood up and began to walk away. I had taken only half a step when he grabbed my arm and coaxed me back to my seat.

"And of course my underwear is sparkling white," he said with a wink.

"Wearing 'Classic' washed clothes fills me with the warm feeling that I am a wise and discriminating American shopper."

Giving up all hope of escape — though still praying for salvation — I decided to play along. "How do you know these things?" I asked.

"Because I am told so by the advertising geniuses on Madison Avenue. I don't know just how many times they have convinced me to buy something I wanted, even though I may not have needed it. God bless 'em, looking out for my best interests like they do.

Complaining about problems never accomplishes much

GUEST COMMENTARY BY RYAN PATANO

It is time for the students and the staff of the University of Idaho to get behind its only remaining history book, the Gem of the Mountains.

Last year the Gem came under fire by the ASUI Senate, which decided it would be prudent to cut the subsidy in half. At the time, I said it would be a bad idea to cut the budget. I stand by that opinion.

The Gem is the only history book for the students and staff once a year has passed. Many students do not realize the importance of purchasing a college yearbook. Once they become alumni, though, they wish they had a book to help them remember the "best days of their lives." It is time students at the UI to start supporting their yearbook.

This year the Gem has come under fire from the faculty. Dean Al Lingg was displeased with the coverage of the College of Agriculture in last year's Gem. I admit that it could have been much better. However, rather than contacting the current yearbook staff and asking for better coverage, he took it upon himself to write a two page letter of complaint to Vice President of Student Affairs

Hal Godwin. Of course, a reporter for the Lewiston Tribune got wind of this and decided to follow it up.

Somehow, the reporter got ahold of the letter. The resulting article quoted Lingg saying some less than positive things about the book. In my opinion, it is the job of the faculty to promote this school, not put it down. Dean Lingg also needs to realize the Gem is not a public relations tool for this university, it is a picture record for the students by the students, remember?

In his letter, Lingg suggested the addition of a yearbook advisor to essentially babysit the yearbook. Whatever happened to for the students by the students? Of course, this suggestion was made without input from the current Gem staff.

I find it disgusting that certain faculty within this university are not willing to talk to the students with whom they may disagree, instead of going around writing their complaints to other administrators. Traditionally, complaining has gotten very little accomplished. Facing the problem and working to solve it has been able to move mountains. Perhaps it is time for some faculty of this institution to start working for and with the students instead of against them.

Editor's note: Patano is editor of the Gem.

an item with a lot of unnecessary packaging, I buy it. All that colorful cardboard and shiny cellophane may be environmentally unsafe, but by golly, it is some poor soul's job to manufacture it.

"I'll be damned if I'm gonna put some guy out of work by spending my money on some bare bones product. The bigger it is, the better it is for all of us," he said, punching the air for emphasis.

"And to hell with recycling. It's just a scam by those loony Earth Firsters to put honest, God-fearing Americans out of work."

He was starting to give me the chills. Noticing my nervousness, he quickly continued.

"But my desires for the finer things in life don't end with the clothes on my back. I believe in eating only the most flavorful foods."

"For example?" I asked, tucking what was left of my lunch into my pack.

"Well, for starters I eat only the finest cheeses, lovingly processed from the milk of cows genetically engineered to provide the best products modern science can provide."

"As these superior cows squint and groan to push just one more drop of milk through shriveled udders, other young bovine are frolicking in the green grass, eager for the day they too will feel the strong, sensuous tug of the sleek milking machines."

"Who says technology isn't uplifting for all creatures?"

He was beginning to perspire, just like those television evangelists who with fevered brows and wild gestures work their audiences into rapturous frenzies, then pass the plate for donations.

"What happens to the cows when their milk-producing years are over?" I said.

"Oh, I imagine our lactating heroines will be free to become boot leather or the glop in a can of Alpo," he replied.

"Isn't that a bit harsh? After all, these creatures have given their all for the cheese companies," I said. "Don't they deserve a better fate than that? Don't they deserve to be turned out to pasture for the remainder of their lives?"

"And wouldn't you be a much healthier person if you cut down on your intake of milk and beef?"

"Sad as it may seem," he said, "no. The death of a few old cows isn't too much of a price to be paid for my comfort."

"As for my health, milk and beef are some of the most nutritious foods around," he said as he slapped his ample paunch. "Haven't you heard the mottoes:

'Milk is the fresher refresher' and 'Milk builds strong bones'?"

"Don't you know James Garner did commercials for the U.S. Beef Council? You wouldn't be calling Jim Garner a liar now, would you?"

"Nope," I said. "It's just that..."

"We are, after all, at the apex of the food chain, aren't we?"

I nodded. "Yes, but..."

"Then why should we feel sorry for animals, or for the earth? They are there for our pleasure."

I closed my eyes for a moment to formulate a response. I was going to tell him how wrong he was about consumerism, the environment, recycling and buying things that we really don't need. However, by the time I opened my eyes he had moved on to harangue two boys on rollerblades.

"Today is very important for me," he said to the boys. I could see the fear in their eyes.

tion given to me from the Idaho Department of Fish and Game).

Our salmon, Rachel, are declining because of three reasons: dams, harvesting and degraded habitat.

To cover the 900 mile round-trip, salmon must make it through eight hydropower dams on the Lower Snake and Columbia rivers. To have a visual, Rachel, just pull out any old map of Idaho and Washington and look at Bonneville, The Dalles, John Day, McNary, Ice Harbor, Lower Monumental, Little Goose, Lower Granite and Dworshak Dams.

These dams turn the usual fast moving rivers, which can easily sweep the fish toward their destination, into slack water. Due to this sluggish water, the usual 10 day trip will take almost two months. For another visual, take a little drive from your house in Boise to Lucky Peak and notice how the dam has turned a big chunk of the Boise River into a reservoir!

While traveling through the Snake River dams, over 80 percent of the salmon smolts die within the first 22 days, according to information from the Fish and Game, the Forest Service and the Shoshone-Bannock Indian tribes. Altogether, 98 percent die from stress and injury from downstream migration. Rachel refuses to believe these figures and I can't exactly go out and prove this myself without the needed technology and education.

I can say, though, that in 1894 the U.S. Fish Commission reported the "lakes and streams of the Stanley Basin teeming with sockeye." In fact, in 1881, 2,600 pounds of sockeye were harvested from Redfish Lake mining camps. The Stanley Basin is only near the end of the fish's trip, and further down the Snake and Columbia rivers in the late 1800s, over 4.5 million pounds of fish were commercially landed.

And you know what Rachel? In 1990 only ONE, SINGLE, SOLITARY sockeye was seen, and that was all the way down the Snake River at Ice Harbor Dam.

Due to the extreme pressure for a continued harvest of the sockeye, for such purposes as recreation, which Rachel wants to protect, up to 49 percent of the adult Idaho sockeye are caught in the Columbia River.

The human population has not only destroyed the fish's habitat by hydropower, but also by pollution, logging, mining and fish barriers. In fact, one of the major degradations to it's habitat are irrigation dams and irrigation diversions, both of which Rachel says she wants to protect for southern Idaho use.

"I will not be party to any proposal that pits northern Idaho's Port of Lewiston, the grain growers and timber industries against southern Idahoans who use water for irrigation and recreational purposes," she told the Daily News.

I don't know about the rest of you, but it seems that while Rachel may be running for our district, it sure looks like her interests lie in the south. While the southern agricultural belt is important to our flailing economy, does Rachel know how much mining, logging, farming and tourism affect this district?

Rachel's obvious lack of education on conservation issues makes me lose faith in her capability of being a leader. Since when has recreation become more important than a disappearing species, Rachel?

We cannot have politicians destroy effective conservation efforts that will benefit the entire state. Voting for self-interested politicians will be the fastest way we will lead our world into the inescapable pit of destruction.

My advice is simple. Vote for Larry LaRocco on Nov. 3.

Fair brings good nutrition and good advice to campus

By JACKIE WOODS
Staff Writer

Prepared to take some very important tests? These exams don't require studying, but they could lengthen your life.

The Student Health Fair will give students the opportunity to take cholesterol, body fat and other health tests on Thursday in the University of Idaho Student Union Building.

An instrument that measures fat in three different body sights will be used to do body fat tests on students, said Mary Schwantes, fair coordinator. The measurements are then plugged into a formula that can determine a person's body fat percentage.

"We don't just stop there," said Schwantes, a registered dietician at the Student Health Center. "We then give students handouts showing them where they are and what is considered ideal, which gives them some kind of a target to work towards. We also give them information on how to go about making those changes."

There will be two cholesterol blood tests being performed at the fair. The straight cholesterol test, where blood is drawn from the finger, will cost $5.00.

A more extensive cholesterol exam, the lipid profile test, will be done by Gritman Medical Center. In this test, blood is drawn intravenously from the arm, and results are available within a week. Students who want the lipid profile test need to fast for 12-hours and drink nothing but water before coming to the fair.

"We encourage people to drink plenty of water because they'll be able to find your veins a lot easier," said Schwantes. "Also, there is less chance of fainting because they don't have to poke and prod quite so much."

The lipid profile test will cost $10.00. It pays to be early to the fair, however, as the first 100 people will get $5.00 off the cholesterol test of their choice.

"This has been a very popular part of our cholesterol screening education program," said Schwantes. "We just really believe that every student should know what their cholesterol numbers are."

Additionally, the fair will include a "cancer risk evaluation" computer program set up by the American Cancer Society. Students answer several questions based on their lifestyles and family patterns, and then the program computes the likelihood of them contracting cancer.

Gritman Medical Center, who will have eight booths at the fair, will have people from their physical therapy program filming video tapes of individuals lifting heavy objects. They then will play back these tapes and evaluate with the individual how they should have lifted to prevent back injury.

The Latah Care Center physical therapy department will also have a booth.

"They will be doing neck, shoulder and low back evaluations in addition to their very popular shoe evaluations," said Schwantes. "They are the experts on sport shoes, so they'll be checking to see that students have the right tennis shoe for the kind of exercise they like to do."

Schwantes said another popular booth is the Student and Employee Wellness Programs, which will be doing body fat testing, flexibility studies and lung capacity exams.

"People like the booths where there's that one-on-one kind of evaluation," explained Schwantes.

Eye and dental exams, as well as hearing tests will also be available at the fair for interested students.

Besides all the tests being performed throughout the day, several nutritional booths will be serving free food.

"We've had wonderful donations of basic ingredients from the Palouse region and products from as far as Texas, so there will be lots of free food," said Schwantes.

The Idaho Potato Packers in Blackfoot donated 600 pounds of potatoes for the fair.

"We will be serving baked potatoes all day long with lowfat, healthy toppings," said Schwantes. "Of course, we put out recipes with everything we serve, so it's a good time to collect some nutritional recipes."

There will also be tofu recipes being served throughout the day. Additionally, The Unifine Flour Milling Company of Pullman will be on hand with samples of their low-fat muffins. The company, who mills whole wheat flour, recently began selling Palouse Power muffin mixes.

Other local exhibitors include: Hospice of the Palouse, Planned Parenthood, Pregnancy Council-ing Center, and River Crest Hospital. The Idaho Dairy Council, Idaho Commission for the Blind and the American Red Cross are just a few of the other exhibitors planning booths.

"I think the timeliness of this fair is important because people are becoming so much more aware of health and prevention of disease," said Schwantes.

Co-op offers discount for members

By KIM BLEDSOE
Staff Writer

The Moscow Food Cooperative is probably the only place on the Palouse where organic vegetables can be found without the trouble of planting a garden and growing them yourself. It is basically a health food haven, offering everything from local produce, such as lentils, to imported goods.

The Moscow Food Co-op, located close to campus, was started 19 years ago "to bring natural foods to an area where they are unavailable," according to Kenna Eaton, the general manager.

The Moscow Food Co-op specializes primarily in food rather than supplements, and bills itself as a "whole food grocery."

"We buy as much local produce as we can, and our supplier from Grass Valley, California delivers organic and bulk foods twice a week," Eaton said. "We try to have as much local and organic produce as feasible."

Variety is also something the Moscow Food Co-op has to offer. Depending usually on price, there are seasonal fluctuations in the organic produce that is carried, and several types of bulk items are offered by the pound so you can get as much or little as you like.

"Everyday you can find certain different things, there is always a variety," Eaton said.

In addition to being a whole food grocery, the Moscow Food Co-op has a whole-grain bakery located upstairs, making fresh breads seven days a week including muffins, cheese breads, bagels, and rolls.

The Moscow Food Co-op is owned by the members, who get a vote on anything that goes on with the store. For seven dollars a year, members can enjoy a 7-percent discount on any goods in the store. Currently, the Moscow Food Co-op has some 1,200 to 1,500 members.

Beginning November 2, the Moscow Food Co-op will be opening a Holiday Craft Bazaar above the store. Local crafts, imported sweaters, and different products made in Idaho will be available.

"There will be lots of neat stuff and gift items that we have access to that we don't have room to sell during the rest of the year," Eaton said.

During the Health and Nutrition Fair October 29, the Moscow Food Co-op will have a booth set up to answer any questions and offer free samples of some of their items.

Step Aerobics gives students healthy stress release

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

The Student Wellness program at the University of Idaho is now in full swing with the introduction of step aerobic classes.

Deborah Norum, Associate Director of Campus Recreation at UI, said herself and Director of Housing Jim Bauer had a meeting last spring concerning the need for an increase in student health awareness. With the help of numerous university personnel, different input was given on how to get the program started.

"Jim and I had a meeting and the idea was kicked around that we needed to provide healthy outlets for students," Norum said.

The initial notion to begin the program came about by listening to students concerns and watching their behaviors on campus. Norum noted problems that students face such as excessive drinking of alcohol, smoking and over-eating is the main reason for providing services for the students.

"That's where a lot of this is springing out of," Norum said. "The idea of having a new student choose a healthy environment to live in that has a good code of honor is what we're trying to push. Essentially, a well-ness choice as a way to stay fit."

So far the aerobics classes have been incredibly successful. Both classes are filled with 40 persons each, and when the second session begins November 15th, Norum expects those to be just as popular. But even though this particular aspect of the program has gone well it is by no means a reason to just be happy with that as an end.

"In the future I see a whole area coming about that will provide personal weight training, water aerobics, some cross-training, and a lot of things that are educationally based," Norum said. "I think students now are taking a much more serious look at life around them and they're more serious about their personal health."

When Norum mentions students she's not just referring to the "traditional student." She has plans of reaching out to those non-traditional students such as those from foreign countries or single mothers and fathers.

"Now you're seeing a shift in the 'normal' student population," Norum said. "I think we have an obligation to them and if people have particular requests we'll add in on demand. Our goals are to fill the needs of the student."

As the other activities on the agenda form and grow, just like the step aerobics, Norum sees the program opening doors for students who wish to go into recreation as a major.

"This is going to provide opportunities for students in the P.E. and Recreation departments in that if they would like to instruct some classes it'll give them some good experience," Norum said. "I see just a whole growth opportunity for students and faculty. These are opportunities that will augment the P.E. department."

As far as rating the success of the program to date Norum is pleased but can see where she'd like improvement.

"I think it's been a success," Norum said. "We need to specify each aerobic program so we can have, say, aerobics with weights and another class that's more dance oriented. That way there's something appealing to different types of students."

And what about through the turn of the century?

"I envision 15 years down the road where students will have many healthy programs to choose from," Norum said. "When a student comes to the campus they'll be focused in on all the good things going on here."

Hammersley pushes intramurals in a winning direction

By Mia Stivers
Contributing Writer

The men's ultimate frisbee championship game is about to begin. Spectators line the sidelines in the Kibbie Dome, and a supervisor is having a captain's meeting to make sure all rules and questions are understood. The women's teams are warming up on the side of the field in preparation for their game which follows the men's.

In the bleachers sits a petite young woman who is trying to figure out how a video camera works so she can film the championship games. As the men's game is just about to begin, a second supervisor comes in to run the camera, so now the woman can enjoy the matches with her husband who is sitting next to her. While watching the game, people tend to overlook the woman as just another spectator in the crowd.

But she's more than that. She is Judy Hammersley, and she's been the Director of Intramurals at the University of Idaho for two-and-a-half years. Her responsibilities include scheduling the student workers and facilities and "anything else that has to do with the intramural program."

"It's very important to be consistent because students change from year to year," Hammersley said. "The position involves a lot of mediating and rule enforcement, so that's why it's necessary to have a calm personality."

Since Hammersley has been at Idaho she's noticed a definite increase in participation in intramurals. Before coming to Idaho Hammersley was a physical education professor at Springfield College in Springfield, Massachusetts after receiving her Masters degree in recreation at the University of New Mexico. In comparing Idaho's intramural program to some of the bigger schools across the country, Hammersley feels that Idaho is right up there at the top.

"I think we stack right up there with the other big schools in the country," Hammersley said. "We have a national convention every year, so when seeing all the other presentations I can get a feel for where we are and where we're headed. Right now I think we really compare to them."

Because of the increase in enthusiasm for IM's on campus, such as ultimate frisbee, length of the games had to be cut so all the teams could play.

"We had to cut game time down so all the teams who signed-up would have the chance to play," Hammersley said. "Otherwise we would've had to turn away 13 teams."

While she's watching the game in progress a brawl breaks out on the field as the two teams and some fans try to break it up. One of the supervisors on duty is between the two teams trying to get cooler heads to prevail. Hammersley sits calmly in the stands making sure that everything is handled correctly.

"The only reason protests and fights ever occur is due to the point system, which allows students to compete and be competitive," she says with frustration in her voice. "The point system is the root of the problem. Everyone wants to win, and it puts a lot of pressure on anyone to get those points."

If there was one thing Hammersley could change it'd be to get some more help. With so much activity increasing on the campus (intramurals has grown every year since she's been here), and her leaving in a couple months to have a baby, Hammersley could use a couple of spare hands.

"If I could change one thing I'd like to have more help," she said. "If we had one more full-time person we could have a stronger program, but we do have a strong program right now, so it'd just make it even better."

Student Health Services offers nutritional counseling

By SAMANTHA GROOM
News Editor

Students interested in getting nutritional counseling no longer have to sacrifice an arm and a leg to do so.

Student Health Services has a full-time registered dietician, Mary Schwantes, to help students with their nutritional needs. Although Schwantes started the nutrition programs four years ago as a part-time service, today her services are available full-time.

SHS offers a wide variety of nutritional counseling including weight control, sports nutrition and pregnancy nutrition counseling.

The most popular program is weight loss, bringing in 75 to 90 percent of the clients looking for help in nutrition.

"Not everybody is doing it for cosmetic reasons," Schwantes said. She said people come in with concerns about their cholesterol level and heart disease, among other things. "It's preventative medicine," she said.

Pitted against commercial programs, she said the weight loss services at SHS are similar to Weight Watchers, except that SHS offers their services on a one-on-one basis. "People really open up" in their program, Schwantes said.

The SHS program teaches people about food exchanges and long-term weight maintenance. She does not advise gimmicky products, such as Slim-Fast and other liquid diets. She said she has had students come to her who have been on those types of programs and who complain of stomach cramps and diarrhea.

Students who grew up in the 70s and 80s have "grown up with health on the brain," said Schwantes. She said most people know how to eat, but they just don't do it right.

She also helps students who are just looking to balance their diet. She has them keep a diary of their eating habits, and then is able to find the strengths and weaknesses in their diets.

People with eating disorders, such as anorexia and bulimia, can also get help from Schwantes. She tries to get people to stop what they are doing (such as purging, if they are bulimic) and help them with their self-esteem. She prefers it when students are getting both nutritional and psychological help.

Schwantes said she will soon be starting a new program, quick and healthy cooking classes. The classes, still in the planning stage, will be offered during lunchtime. She will teach students four new dishes during lunch, and she said the meals — which will be quick, cheap and healthy — are planned with students in mind.

Schwantes sees her job as educating the whole campus, not just the students. Not only does she work with students, but she also works with the athletic and counseling departments, as well as speaking to student groups about nutrition.

The cost for nutrition counseling is $10 for the first visit, and $5 for each following visit.

Students interested in nutrition counseling need to call in advance for an appointment. For more an appointment or information about Student Health Services nutrition programs, call 885-6693.

No. 1 Panthers make Idaho see pink

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

In what was billed to be one of the best match-ups in recent Division I-AA football history was just that as the No. 1 ranked University of Northern Iowa escaped with a 27-26 win over the No. 2 Idaho Vandals in a non-conference game Saturday. A sold-out vocal crowd of 16,324 witnessed the two teams battle to the last few seconds, and who will likely be strong contenders in the playoffs, as the Panthers went on to win their 21st-straight home game.

The game ended as Idaho kicker Mike Hollis' 62-yard field goal attempt fell short as time expired. Idaho (3-0 in conference, 6-1 overall) led in nearly every statistical category, but failed to make a couple of critical plays when it counted the most. The Vandals held onto the ball for 13 minutes longer than the Panthers (2-0, 7-0), and converted 12 more first downs.

"I thought we dominated the game," Idaho quarterback Doug Nussmeier said. "They just didn't give up the big play through the air, though."

At the beginning of the game it looked like similar shades as the Idaho-Colorado State game five weeks ago when Idaho fell behind early and quickly. UNI quarterback Jay Johnson put the Panthers on the board early as he directed an eight-play 80-yard drive. The senior completed three-of-four passes for 60 yards which included a 22-yard bullet to tight end Chris Nuss for their first touchdown in just under three minutes into the game.

When Idaho's offense took the field on the ensuing series, things weren't clicking. Running back Sherriden May took Idaho's first play for a seven-yard gain, but on third-and-three quarterback Doug Nussmeier made a bad pitch and the Vandals lost 11 yards. Freshman punter Erich Gaedeke, who was replacing the injured Tom Sugg, booted away a 37-yarder.

From their own 47, UNI's offense again showed why they'll contend for this year's national championship. Running back Tank Corner began the Panthers running attack as the 5-foot-9 210 pound bruiser busted to the left side on three plays for gains of four, 13, and three yards respectively. On third-and-one from the Vandal one-yard line Johnson took a quarterback sneak in to give his team a 14-0 lead.

"It was a packed house, and every time he (Nussmeier) went up to take the snap the crowd got after him," Idaho head coach John L. Smith said. "You play in front of a crowd like that, and there's 14 points right there."

The Idaho offense that had been rolling up 506 yards a game showed themselves on the Vandal's next series. Nussmeier hit receivers Walter Saunders for 16 yards and Curtis Richardson for 19 to get Idaho to UNI's 22-yard line. But Idaho would have to settle for a field goal attempt as UNI's defense halted the drive on their 21, and Hollis drilled it to make the score 14-3.

"We felt like we could move the ball down the field," Nussmeier said. "I thought we did a good job of that, and they (UNI's defense) did a good job of giving and not breaking."

Now with a little bit of momentum building, the Idaho defense got into the act. After UNI started on downs from their own 20-yard line, four plays later they were punting the ball away.

"I think our defense controlled the front for the most part," Smith said. "Our defensive line got after them."

With the bugs out of the system now, the Idaho offense began to move the ball with more authority. May took a screen pass down the sideline and was hit out of bounds which brought a personal foul on UNI for a total gain of 25 yards. May ran two more plays before receiver Yo Murphy caught a perfectly thrown pass up the middle for Idaho's first TD.

"We knew that they hadn't really faced a running team so that's what we wanted to make them try to shut down," Smith said.

Hollis proceeded to kick his third straight kick-off into the UNI endzone, and for the third straight time there was no return. Johnson was then sacked two times in a row for a loss of seven yards. Now facing a third-and-17, Johnson came up with a big play to his big play man. Speed demon receiver Kenny Shedd burned the Idaho defense for a 42-yard gain to move the ball into Idaho territory. Four plays later Johnson hit split end Tim Mosley for a 32-yard TD giving UNI a 21-10 advantage.

"I thought we played real good, but the two things that hurt us was not putting the ball in the endzone when we had to, and giving up the big play," Smith said in referring to Shedd's two catches for a total of 126 yards. "We're going to learn from this."

After Idaho connected on two straight Hollis field goals to make it 21-16, the defense again stepped up and halted UNI's drive on four plays. With 1:50 left in the half Nussmeier began a 2-minute drill to get Idaho some more points. He completed six-of-seven passes, but after he was sacked for a loss of 13 yards, the Vandals needed to get the ball to the three-yard line for a first down and a chance to stop the clock since they had no time-outs left. Nussmeier looked for a play in the endzone, and hit Saunders who got down to the six-yard line as time expired.

"We decide we were going to take one shot at the endzone," Nussmeier said. "Walt ran a seam rout, and it just didn't work out. Coach said to look for the (end) zone, and if there wasn't anything there to throw it away. Walt tried to get down for the first (down), but we just couldn't make it."

Idaho had a 17:49 to 12:11 time advantage in the first-half.

The second-half began the same way the first ended. Idaho used a balance attack of the run and the pass to move the ball 65 yards on 14 plays. Facing a fourth-and-goal from the one-yard line Smith went for it, and May came through with a TD up the middle to give Idaho its first lead, 23-21.

After the two exchanged punts, Shedd once again showed his speed as he beat Idaho defensive back Darrick Davis for an 84-yard TD to shift the lead back to the Panthers. Idaho got another field goal from Hollis at the beginning of the fourth quarter, his fourth consecutive of the game, to finish up the scoring.

Idaho's best chance to win the game occurred with 3:19 left as the Vandals began moving the ball downfield with precession. On first-and-ten from the UNI 39, though, Nussmeier threw his only interception on the day and it appeared like the game was all but over.

"We were running the quick hitches on them and it was working well," Nussmeier said. "It (the ball) just happened to hit him (Saunders), and go up into the air. It was just a bad break."

With all three time-outs remaining, though, the Idaho defense stepped up to the challenge and forced UNI to punt. Idaho took over on downs with :42 remaining, but Hollis' only miss on the day would be as time expired.

IDAHO INFO- May had his fourth 100-plus yard day rushing on the season. The sophomore ran for 133 yards on 28 carries...With the loss Idaho slipped to No. 3 in this week's I-AA poll, falling behind UNI and Marshall...Gaedeke will most likely start again this week against Northern Arizona as Sugg continues to heal. Gaedeke is averaging 39 yards a boot.

Sigma Nu's hit the road for UI game

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

They went through sunflower seeds, chewing tobacco, beer, REM's new cd, and last, but not least, a terrible stretch in South Dakota.

Six Sigma Nu members left Moscow last Thursday afternoon and 33 hours and five states later they rolled into Cedar Falls, Iowa in one piece to see the Idaho Vandals play Northern Iowa. The idea of the grand scheme came from Chris Patano, who made the proposition last week.

"We were all watching the Eastern Washington game (last week in Choney) and after it was over Chris said 'Hey, I'm going to Iowa,'" said junior Shawn Mann. "There wasn't any hesitation- we all agreed."

So Thursday the six piled into Patano's Toyota 4-Runner and headed east. A few beer stops, a few more bathroom stops and "breakfast-in-a-cup" at Mount Rushmore highlighted the journey.

"We played a lot of cd's over and over and over again," said sophomore Dan Winn.

When they arrived in Cedar Falls it was close to 11 p.m., and they had anticipated getting there about six hours earlier. The first thing they did was go to the Ramada Inn to pick up their tickets that quarterback and fellow Sigma Nu Doug Nussmeier had left them. Not only did they get the tickets, but a little bonus as well.

"When we talked to the lady at the front desk she liked our story a lot and offered a room to us," Mann said. "She gave us a price and we said it was a little high, so as we're walking off she said she'd put us all up in one room for $44. We took it."

At the game they arrived early enough to tailgate which was the highlight with the exception of the game.

"I think we had the biggest tailgating party there," Mann said. "Some faculty members from Idaho and UNI stopped by to talk with us. Iowa people are really great and the beer there is cheap."

The six had brought a Sigma Nu flag to the game so when either Nussmeier or Jeff Robinson (also a Sigma Nu) did something well they'd wave it.

"One time when Jeff was coming off the field he pointed at us in the stands and we thought that was really cool," Winn said.

Right after the game, after talking to some players, it was time to head back. The 29 hour return trip was highlighted by a stop at Devils Tower in Wyoming and one "weary" traveler passing out in the candy aisle of a truck stop.

After seeing a lot of country, what advice do these journey-men have?

"Don't go to South Dakota!"

Setters serve past Gonzaga for second time this year

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

The Vandal volleyball team received some strong serving play from Heather McEwen and Jessica Puckett to defeat the Gonzaga Bulldogs in four games, 9-15, 15-12, 15-3, 15-13 last night at Memorial Gym.

The Vandals (17-3, 6-1) started slow in the first game, down 9-0 before they got on the board. Idaho hasn't played a match since last Tuesday when they defeated LCSC, and head coach Tom Hilbert felt the slow start was a result of that.

"That's the reason why I think we played poorly in the first game," Hilbert said.

In the second game Idaho jumped out to a 5-0 lead, but GU (10-12, 4-4) came back to tie it at 6-6. Idaho pulled away again to 11-8, but the Bulldogs wouldn't quit, inching back up to 13-12. But Puckett blocked a kill by GU's star player Kelley Cunningham for a 14-13 lead, and then got a kill to get the side out and eventually the win.

"We did a good job blocking her," Hilbert said. "Our game plan was to keep her moving around the court. She usually hits from behind the setter, and tonight we made her hit more in front of her. She's a player that if you don't block you can kiss the game good-bye."

Cunningham, who leads the team with 481 kills, was held to 19 Monday and had 11 errors. To begin the third game she had two in a row, and Idaho jumped all over GU to lead 11-2. Attacking percentage went Idaho's way, 34-percent versus 23-percent for GU.

"In the third game we started passing better," Hilbert said. "We really intensified our serving after that first game. We're a better team when we serve aggressive."

This weekend Idaho travels to Montana to take on Montana State Friday and the University of Montana Saturday. Idaho got a big win over UM a month ago, and the Grizzlies are in the title hunt along with Idaho, BSU, and Northern Arizona. Hilbert feels Idaho needs to win three out of their last four road games to stay in contention.

"It looks like Montana is going to win a lot of games, so we're going to go over and do the best we can," Hilbert said.

Vandal Hockey Team...You win some and you lose some

By SHARI IRETON
Assistant News Editor

The Vandals put Gonzaga on ice Saturday in their first hockey game of the season.

UI might as well have brought home the gold with their 7-1 victory against the Bulldogs. The Vandal's offense only got stronger as the game progressed. In the third period, they scored four goals against the Bulldogs.

The Gonzaga goalie had a hard time deflecting UI shots, and the rest of the Bulldog players seemed shaky on their skates.

While they racked up over 32 minutes in penalties at Saturday's game, the Vandals avoided any serious blood shed.

"I thought it was fantastic" said Shawn Frueden, who attended the Saturday game.

Frueden said that the Vandal's puck control was good and the whole team took advantage of the "breaks they were given."

"(The Vandals) played a really good defense, they really kept the Bulldogs to one goal," he said. "Our goalie looked sharp in the net and defensively didn't give up any shots."

Unfortunately, the Vandals didn't fair as well in their second game of the weekend and lost to Washington State University Sunday night by the score of 8-3.

Team captain Scott Squires said the Vandals "didn't really play that well as a team Sunday night...we came out pretty flat."

Squires said the team would have less problems if they had a local rink to practice on. They have to drive to Spokane just to practice on ice. "We just don't get in as many practices as we should," he said. "We just don't have the access we need."

"We need a little better practice," said Vandal hockey player Mark Berard.

Another problem the team faces is a lack of funds. The team pays for all of their equipment, including the Vandal jerseys, and coach Steve Rinker volunteers his time for the team.

On a positive note, Squires said the turnout for the first game was great, with over 100 people from UI and Gonzaga at the game. He felt Saturday's game was "a good, physical game."

"I'm really excited about this season," he said.

The Vandals will play their next game Sunday afternoon against WSU at the Eagles Ice Arena in Spokane.

Jolly Jethro Tull never to old to rock'n'roll

Review by Tracie Bruno

Weird and odd, yet somewhat divine...
Jethro Tull brought to Beasley a distinctive sound and an eccentric stage show that was everything but normal.

Led by Ian Anderson, Jethro Tull incorporated blues, jazz, folk and classical music, along with some grotesque gestures and comments into a two-hour performance.

The most peculiar assest to the show was Anderson's trademark flute, which was multi-functional. He used it as a baton, a joy stick and as a musical instrument. More than once, Anderson took his flute and simulated sex between band member Martin Barre's legs. And at one point, the British man screamed to the crowd (pointing with his flute) that men always know the size of other men's penises. What this had to do with classic rock, left me curious.

"For those of you who are too young to remember, we are the jolly Jethros. The exceedingly fucking old Jethros, so don't expect miracles," Anderson warned. Yes, I am too young to remember, and it took everything I had to understand this band that had found its success prior to my birth in 1971.

Throughout the show Anderson shot the crowd wild-eyed glances which left me thinking, "this man is insane." His stage movement was theatrical and obscure. When he wasn't standing on one leg playing the flute he was prancing around the stage with his legs and arms flailing. I heard the girl next to me say, "He's one flexible dude." She wasn't too far off.

Even Anderson's attire was odd. Dressed in a top hat, a tuxedo jacket with tails and a patchwork vest, he looked more like a character from "Alice in Wonderland" than an old rock star.

But beyond these obscurities that were visible were the divinities that were audible. Jethro Tull, in front of 2,000 people, cranked out some tunes that were true flashbacks to the classic rock era of the 60s. Promoting their latest album A Little Light Music, the British rock group played rearranged old favorites as well as many lesser-known songs.

A Little Light Music, released in September, is a result of countless requests from fans for a new live album. The album is a return to more intimate theater venues with more emphasis on the acoustic side of Jethro Tull.

The first half of the concert consisted of a semi-acoustic hour-long set followed by a heavier rock set.

Anderson opened the "Light and Dark Tour," playing "Some-day the Sun Won't Shine for You," which is the first cut from their latest album. It was a bluesy song, with Barre on the acoustic guitar and Anderson on the harmonica. In the middle of the melody Anderson took off his jacket and top hat, set down his harmonica and grabbed his flute.

And therein lies Anderson's true talents...playing the flute. Throughout the concert he trilled his notes which rapidly alternated musical tones with slightly higher ones. His range on the flute gave some new dimension to the instrument, and when he hit "high C" my ears couldn't help but hurt. But Anderson proved that flutes can and do belong in hard rock. So much so that the band's 1987 album "Crest of Knave" won the group a Grammy Award, in the newly formed Hard Rock/Heavy Metal category.

Anderson stopped in the middle of their second tune "Life is a Long Song" to make a comment to a late audience member. He told the person, "You'd be mad too if I showed up late to your house for tea." The audience found the comment rather amusing.

The crowd stayed in their seats for most of the show, with only a handful of members standing up to groove. It didn't take away from the intensity of the show, however, as they played, "Too Old To Rock'N'Roll, Too Young To Die," "A Christmas Song," "Bou-ree" and "Look Into the Sun."

During the break between sets I heard a young man comment, "The crowd's too mellow. I feel like a wild man." The guy standing next to him said, "Yeah, it's pretty bizarre. It's hard to get up and get aggressive." He then said he had hoped for a "mosh." At Jethro Tull?

The band got its best response from the crowd by playing the classic hit "Aqualung." This song dated them, in my mind, but it also reminded me that Jethro Tull and the sounds of the 60s are still very much alive.

Joining charter member Anderson on the tour were guitarist Martin Barre, a mainstay since 1969; bassist Dave Pegg, a member since 1979; drummer Duane Perry, who joined in 1984; and the newest member, keyboardist Martin Allcock.

UI offers non-alcoholic options for Halloween

By JACKIE WOODS
Staff Writer

It's time to drag out those costumes and dust off those scary masks as the ASUI Productions is planning a Masquerade Madness party for Saturday, Oct. 31.

Children activities will start off the festivities at 2 p.m. in the University of Idaho's Student Union Building.

"In the Vandal Lounge, we're going to have a Children's Carnival with face painting, a fishing game, and other surprises," said Colleen Evans, ASUI Productions Concert Chair. "Several living groups are responsible for setting up the games. We're very happy with the amount of people involved with (the party) that day. We've got a great turn out."

Evans said they have ordered about 1,500 prizes to give away to the children. Tickets at the carnival will cost 10 cents a piece, with proceeds going to KUOL, the UI radio station.

Other activities for children include a ghost storyteller in the Vandal Lounge, discount bowling in the SUB basement, and presentation of the movie "Something Wicked This Way Comes" in the Borah Theater.

The evening activities begin with speaker David J. Skal, author of "Hollywood Gothic: The Tangled Web of Dracula," who will use rare photos and amusing anecdotes to chart Dracula's popularity in novels and films. Skal, a resident of New York City, will be available to answer questions after the hour long presentation.

A non-alcoholic Halloween dance for adults will be held from 9 p.m. to 2 a.m. in the SUB ballroom.

"We are trying to get away from the alcohol and the idea that it's not a party unless you have it there," said Evans. "So this is an alternative for people to come in, have a good time, and live it up a little. We also encourage people to come in costume, although it's not mandatory."

Prizes, supplied by various local merchants, will be awarded at the dance for costumes in the Most Original, Scariest, Funniest, Best Couple and Best Group categories, said Evans.

Mitch Parks, Events coordinator for KUOL, said the radio station will feature a variety of music, as well as have compact disc give aways during the dance.

Parks appreciates the work ASUI Productions has put into this money raising event.

"The whole thing came about because we wanted to do a fund raiser. We are trying to do some events to provide more of our own funding," explained Park, who said without additional money the radio station may have to make some cuts.

Other activities planned for the Halloween evening party include an Open 'Mike' Nite at 8 p.m. in the Vandal Cafe, ghost storytellers for adults, discount bowling in the basement, and two movies, "Exorcist III" and "Omen II," to be shown at 9 p.m. in the Borah Theater.

"I know there are a lot of other parties going on within the community, but this is something with the school. We have stuff for kids, people who will go to the Open Mike, the lecture, the ghost stories, the dance and the bowling. We're trying to hit every personality here on campus, we want everyone to be involved," said Evans.

The evening events are free to ASUI Undergrads with their student ID cards. Non-students, law and graduate students will be charged $2.00 at the door, and no one under 18 will be admitted without a parent.

KHTR sponsors haunted house proceeds going to Goodwill

By Jay Forman
Staff Writer

This Halloween at the Pi Kappa Alpha house in Pullman, "The Scariest Thing About Halloween Is Going Hungry."

Tonight and tomorrow night from 7 p.m. to midnight, The Pikes, Alpha Omega Pi and KHTR are sponsoring a haunted house at the Pikes, which is located at 710 Colorado in Pullman.

The Pike house itself is five stories, and according to David Morris, president of the Pikes, "It will take about 25 to 30 minutes to get through the whole thing."

"This year the admission price is $2 or 3 cans of food. All of the proceeds are going towards Goodwill. This is the 3rd annual haunted house, and this year "We decided to get KHTR involved," Morris said.

According to Jim Mitchell, who is the music director for KHTR, "We're going to be broadcasting live in the front yard, and we'll have some stuff to give away."

"We're going all out this year," Morris said. "Last year some kids got scared. So this year if moms don't want their kids to get too frightened there is an alternate route which basically skips the upstairs area, where the house gets the scariest."

The upstairs area is geared more toward the college students, and Morris said, "Expect the upstairs to be chaos. One might expect to see anything from Freddie Krueger to lunatics with chainsaws. There definitely will be a variety."

The take on all of this for Goodwill should be about $1,500 and they are expecting around 800 people between the two nights. The reason that the haunted house is being held relatively early to Halloween is simple: This weekend at WSU it is "Dad's Weekend."

Autumndance opens Friday at Hartung

By CHRISTINE ERMEY
Contributing Writer

Funky jazz, ballet, tap and even traditional clogging are the different dance styles that will be featured in the University of Idaho's Dance Theatre concert, "Autumndance."

The concert will be held in the Hartung Theatre at 8 p.m. on Oct. 30 and 31, with a matinee at 2 p.m. on Nov. 1.

"A dance concert is like a musical concert except instead of music pieces, dance pieces are performed," said Erin McCoy. McCoy is a choreographer, performer and half manager of "Autumndance."

All of the dances to be performed are original pieces choreographed by and performed by faculty and students, including three international students and one professional dancer from Los Angeles.

"The upcoming concert features something for everyone," said McCoy. The funky jazz piece features street dance, like that seen in music videos. The lyrical jazz piece is more of a smooth piece, however, and would not likely be seen in a music video. The ballet piece is a solo point piece featuring one of the international students. The tap dance piece is to be a comedy dance, and the traditional clogging piece features a western theme, with dancers wearing western attire.

Tickets are now on sale at ticket express for "Autumndance." Tickets for general admission are $7.00 for section A and $6.00 for section B. For seniors and students, the prices are $6.00 for section A and $5.00 for section B. Reserved tickets may be purchased by calling 885-7212.

A "Very Special Dress Rehearsal," is being held at 5 p.m. on Oct. 29, in which all disabled persons along with their friends and family are invited to attend at no charge.

The leading killer of college students is car accidents.

Alcohol is involved in half of them.

Drinking and driving, of course, is stupid. But people continue to do it. Maybe the drinking part is the problem. It dulls your senses, dims your mind, makes you careless and unafraid of something that can kill you. And often does.

Maybe we should change "Don't drink and drive" to "Don't drink because once you do, you aren't yourself anymore."

'Ag Day' all day Saturday

By KIM BLEDSOE
Staff Writer

A country dance, barbeque, 4-H/FFA judging contests, and Vandal football will all be part of the annual University of Idaho College of Agriculture 'Ag Day' on Saturday, Oct. 31 at the UI campus.

Official 4-H and FFA team members can test their livestock judging skills in a contest sponsored by the UI Block and Bridle Club. Registration for the contest begins at 7:30 a.m. in the UI's Livestock Pavilion, and the competition begins at 8 a.m. 4-H and FFA judging contest participants can order complimentary tickets for the football game.

The barbeque, a fund-raising event for the Agricultural Student Affairs Council, will begin at 11 a.m. at the Agricultural Engineering Building and continue until 12:45 p.m.

A special section of seats has been reserved for the Vandal/Northern Arizona Lumberjacks game in recognition of Ag Day. Football tickets will be offered to Ag Day participants for the reduced price of $7, and must be ordered through the College of Agriculture prior to the game.

Wrapping up Ag Day, the UI Block and Bridle Club will be sponsoring a dance at the North 4-D Ballroom from 9:30 p.m. to 1:30 a.m. featuring the popular country band Blue Highway.

Tickets for all Ag Day activities, except the dance, can be ordered through the College of Agriculture's Office of Academic Programs. For more information about Ag Day or to order tickets, call 885-7984.

Deymonaz behind the scenes at Domino's

By David Jackson
Contributing Writer

For most college students, the only person that represents the local pizza place is the guy who brings it to their house. What they don't see is the people behind the scenes.

For "more years than I'd like to admit," Joe Deymonaz has been behind the scenes as the manager at Domino's Pizza in Moscow. From dealing with hectic Tuesday nights to interacting with drunks around closing time, there isn't much he hasn't seen over the years.

A typical day for Deymonaz starts at 4 p.m. when he comes into the store. While guessing when the dinner rush will begin is sometimes just pure luck, he usually is safe coming in before 5 p.m. Once the rush does hit, he works with the lunch manager making up to 50 or 60 pizzas an hour.

"Tuesday is usually the busiest because of the special," Deymonaz said. "But it all depends on what's going on around the town and on campus."

Domino's stays open as late as 2 a.m. on weekends and sometimes they are busy until they close. When there is a break in the action, Deymonaz starts in on the paper work.

"Food costs, labor costs, checking out the drivers, there is a lot of work you have to keep on top of," he explained. "If business is really going and I can't take many breaks, I can be here well after closing catching up."

Despite the 50 and 60 hour weeks and the headache that comes with them, Deymonaz insists that his job has its benefits as well.

"Sometimes it's a pain, but it can be fun, too," he said. "When we are really busy, there isn't much time for fun, but when it slows down we relax a little. You have to take a break every once in a while or you will go nuts."
