Student to be tried for second degree murder of infant son

By CHRIS MILLER
Staff Writer

After hearing closing arguments in the preliminary hearing of University of Idaho student Megan Heber, Latah County Magistrate William Hamlett found sufficient evidence to put Heber on trial for the second-degree murder of her unnamed baby.

Hamlett polarized the evidence presented by Deputy Prosecutor Robin Eckmann and Moscow-based defense attorney Allen Bowles by saying the case could be seen from two extremely different perspectives. Hamlett said from one perspective Heber could be viewed as a murderer who planned the death of her baby, but from the other side, she might simply have been a young woman unable to cope with a traumatic situation and lost her child only through negligence, not intent.

The preliminary hearing lasted all day Friday, recessed over the weekend, and closed Monday morning.

Eckmann called five witnesses Friday in her attempt to establish enough evidence to warrant a trial regarding the death of a new-born baby found in a dumpster at Theophilus Towers Oct. 5.

Under questioning from Eckmann, Dorothy Wischmeier, a custodian at the Towers, testified she and another janitor found a bloody package in the building's trash compactor. They lifted up a bloody bundle of sheets and "the baby just rolled out," she said.

Melanie Nickisch, the resident advisor on Heber's floor in the Towers, testified she thought someone had cut themselves shaving after she saw blood in the showers and the hall floor.

Nickisch said she asked Heber if she had cut herself shaving and Heber said she had, but that she was alright.

Moscow Police Detective Neil Odenborg, the investigating officer of the case, testified Friday that he interviewed Heber three times for a total of three hours Oct. 5, two of which were recorded on tape.

Odenborg testified he read Heber her rights before the first interview, despite the fact that she was not yet under arrest.

Odenborg said Heber told police she hated the baby and she was not in control of the situation. He said Heber suffocated it when she pushed too hard on its neck and chest when she was cleaning it with a T-shirt.

Latah County Coroner Dan Schmidt testified Friday that the baby he examined behind Theophilus Towers Oct. 5 was born alive but was dead when he arrived on the scene.

"Given a depressed birth, given a lack of support, I believe this baby could have survived," Schmidt testified.

Schmidt also said it was possible the baby was a depressed baby, meaning the baby was alive, but would not cry or be as vigorous as a healthy newborn. A depressed baby may also have difficulty breathing.

Based on the autopsy report by George Lindholm of Spokane, Schmidt said the baby definitely lived after birth because the lungs had been inflated, indicating the baby had breathed. The autopsy also indicated a skull fracture, but said the baby died of asphyxiation.

On closing arguments, Eckmann reiterated the fact that the baby was born alive and died of asphyxiation. "It's not the kind of injury that could be caused accidentally... by rubbing as Ms. Heber said," Eckmann said.

Eckmann also stressed that Heber "did nothing to prepare for the arrival of this baby... because she didn't need help deciding what to do with this baby. She knew what she was going to do with it." Eckmann pointed out that the police search of her room uncovered no maternity or baby clothes, diapers or any other thing asso-

Officials prepare for annual snowball fight as flakes fall

UI officials are preparing ahead with student leaders, staff, and the Moscow Police Department for the first snowfall and possible snowball fight.

"Nearly every year it seems the first major snowfall is marked by campus wide snowball fights that result in property damage and personal injury," said Bruce Pitman, dean of students. "We're getting closer to putting this obsolete tradition behind us, but it still is important to remind students what consequences they face."

Hal Godwin, vice president for bodies is expensive and a waste of money. "There are so many other, better things to spend our money on," said Kevin Bartz, president of the Resident Hall Association. "It's frustrating to watch a very small group of heathens literally throw away what little money we have."

Some student leaders said they will organize alternative events to help celebrate the first snowfall and detract from a snowball fight.

"We're hoping having a sort of on-the spot winter festival that will attract people away from the snowball free-for-alls of the past," said Polly Olson, president of Panhellenic Council.

Reed Mahan, president of Interfraternity Council, agreed and said, "It's always exciting when the first snow comes. What seems to be a friendly snowball fight always turns out to be an insane battle over who is better, residence halls or the Greeks. Let's try to have fun without ruining it for others."

If some people still insist on fighting, Moscow Police Chief William Brown said the police will definitely respond. "We hope that we don't have to become involved, but obviously, we will react if people are bent on destruction or injury."

Roe vs. Wade attorney to speak Friday

Sarah Weddington, the attorney who successfully argued Roe vs. Wade, the Supreme Court ruling which allows women to receive medical abortions, will address University of Idaho College of Law students in the law school courtroom at 2:30 pm on Nov. 13.

Following her lecture, Weddington will be honored at a reception in the law school lobby from 3:30 - 4:30 p.m. After the reception she will appear at Book People in downtown Moscow at 4:45 pm to sign copies of her new book, A Question of Choice.

Weddington, who argued Roe vs. Wade 19 years ago at the age of 27, is currently traveling throughout the country promoting her book. It is a first person account of the Supreme Court decision, as well as a look at the decision's place in American constitutional history. Her narrative speaks of the constitutional ground gained in 1973 which is in sharp contrast to her account of what has been lost in recent years. The political winds that brought Ronald Reagan, George Bush and a conservative Supreme Court to power, have nibbled away at women's right of privacy, according to Weddington.

Weddington also discusses her own abortion experience in the first chapter of the book. She tells of crossing the border into Mexico as a young woman to get an abortion because the procedure was illegal in her home state of Texas.

In her presentation to law students, Weddington will talk about her experience arguing before the Supreme Court fresh out of law school, as well as a legal career since then which has spanned two decades.

Greeks keep kids crossing streets safely

By TIM HELMKE
Staff Writer

Safety for young children is the focus of the newest Greek campus project to hit the University of Idaho.

The Inter Fraternity Council and Panhellenic Council are working together with the families who live in UI family housing to ensure the safety of children crossing streets.

The IFC and Panhellenic have come up with a plan to direct traffic at the intersection by Sigma Alpha Epsilon, the Panhellenic house, and the Lionel Hampton School of Music to help children cross the street safely.

The university was approached by some concerned parents in family housing who felt the intersection was too dangerous for the young children to be crossing. UI officials then approached the Greek community to see if they would be interested in organizing a volunteer program to help these children.

The IFC and Panhellenic Councils agreed that there is a need for safety in crossing the intersection so they came up with a plan to help out. Each fraternity and sorority has been designated one week out of the fall or spring semester to help out with the crossing guard program. Greeks who are out directing the traffic to help the children are there from 7:50 a.m. to 8:20 a.m. and then again from 3:00 p.m. to 3:30 p.m.

Linda Wilson, UI Greek Advisor, feels this program is a very important program and gives the Greek community a positive role that is not always seen.

"This crossing guard program is a very important one and helps the Greek students impact the community in a positive way," said Wilson.

The students who work the crossing guard time slots are required to wear the safety orange vests that ensure that they are visible. Children that use the program are able to distinguish the person they are to be watching who will motion them across the street.

Kumalo speaks of diversity

By BETSY CARVER
Staff Writer

Dumisani Kumalo is a man with a vision and hope for the future and a dream of promise for his native country of South Africa.

At a speech given in the Ballroom at the Student Union Building last Thursday night, Kumalo was positive and inspiring in a time when his country, as well as the U.S., is under major changes and challenges.

He spoke to a small crowd on the topic "Can We Live Together?" and highlighted what people can do to make living together with culture differences easier. "One thing that will keep us together is the culture that we bring to this world."

Kumalo is a journalist and freedom fighter exiled from South Africa and now U.S. Citizen. He is the Project Leader for the American Committee for Africa in Brooklyn, New York. This was his first trip to Idaho.

Kumalo described of what living under apartheid was like. He explained the ten legal classifications of people by the color of their skin. The classifications can be challenged, he said, and a person who had been qualified Chinese, could change classification to white. In South Africa, whites are the only recognized citizens, although blacks are the majority, he explained.

"Apartheid is no different from Nazism," Kumalo said. He explained the history of South African leaders supporting the German movement.

Kumalo, a motivational speaker, had words of wisdom for his audience. "It is from speaking out our minds, in whatever way. Then we can communicate better..." he said. "It is out of accepting each other that we can live together."

Filled with anecdotes from his past and experiences here in the US, Kumalo said, "Americans are people of diverse cultures. We cannot deny who we are."

Since the freeing of Nelson Mandela, Kumalo is now able to return to his home country. He spoke of powerful young leaders fighting against the wrongs in South Africa and the loss of many lives through the violence that occurs in trying to achieve freedom. Fourteen lives had been lost only days before he came to speak in Moscow.

Following the speech, Kumalo mingled with the audience in an informal reception at the back of the ballroom, discussing further the changes that need to be made and sharing personal experiences.

Dumisani Kumalo is a man who is making a positive difference in the way cultures look at and accept each other. By sharing with Moscow students and the community, he has made a difference and helped the Palouse better understand cultural diversity.

"I think that her intent to kill was indicated by the secrecy of her delivery," Eckmann said. Heber then covered her tracks by saying she cut herself shaving, flipped her mattress to conceal the blood from the delivery, and disposed of the body in a secret way, Eckmann said.

Eckmann also said that Heber may have committed the murder out of anger toward the baby's father. Heber said earlier that the pregnancy was the result of a date rape on New Year's Eve.

Tim Gresback, the defense attorney assisting Bowles, stressed in the defense's closing arguments Heber did not intend to kill the child. A second-degree murder charge mandates an intent-to-kill.

"Failure to prepare or call... does not buttress a finding of intent to kill," Gresback said. Heber knew she was pregnant, but was denying it, and did not know what to do in what was obviously a traumatic situation, he said.

Gresback quoted Heber from the police interview transcripts numerous times: "I was in such a stupor yesterday. I was in such a haze. I was being as careful as I could... I figured the baby was born and died and I could go on with my life.... There was a lot of hate and other emotions in me and I was angry and upset and hating him (the father of the baby)."

Gresback said, "The truth, like cream, rises to the top. She is responsible for the baby's death and she has to live with that. It in no way says she wanted the baby to die."

Gresback said at the end of his arguments, "A tragedy does not a murder make."

Judge Hamlett said the "spin or slant" put on the evidence by the prosecutor or defense can drastically change the outlook on the case. "Each of the positions is equally arguable," he said.

The prosecuting attorney will have to convince the jury that the death was done with malice and forethought, Hamlett said. "I find that the state has provided sufficient evidence for a charge of second-degree murder," Hamlett said.

Heber's arraignment is scheduled for Nov. 30 at 1:15 p.m.

The elections are not over yet; Vote for student leaders Nov. 18

By BRANDY CORGATELLI
Staff Writer

Local and national elections are over, but UI students have one more election left to vote in.

Students will elect their Associated Students University of Idaho student president, vice-president, and six senators on November 18.

The chance to get to know this year's candidates and their project ideas is on November 10 at 7:00 pm at the candidates' forum. This year's forum will feature a new call-in segment for radio listeners, ASUI President Amy Anderson said at the Wednesday night senate meeting. Students listening to the forum live on KUOI radio can phone-in and question the candidates.

The call-in opportunity will hopefully boost participation in the student election process, Anderson said. "The most I've ever seen at one of these is 50 people,"

Anderson said. "But its usually about 20 people."

The senate also voted to put an informal question on the election ballot about the UI yearbook, Gem of the Mountains. The question asks whether students are willing to have $14 a year added to their $65.50 yearly ASUI dues to all get a yearbook. Yearbooks are currently purchased on an individual choice basis for $25. The ballot question is not binding, but is designed only to assess if there is enough interest in buying on a yearbook on a mandatory group basis. If all students were to buy the yearbook, it would greatly reduce the production price.

In other senate business:

■ The senate is coordinating rides home for the Thanksgiving and Christmas holidays. If someone want to volunteer a seat in their car or if someone needs a seat, they should sign-up in the senate office in the SUB, Anderson said.

■ The senate installed John Marble as the newest ASUI senator, replacing Marc Hall who resigned three weeks earlier.

■ Anderson said the senate plans to begin awarding an endowment scholarship established by the 1990 senate. The 1990 senate passed a bill for $17,000 establishing a scholarship to be awarded to anyone actively participating in any part of the ASUI. Anderson said they want to give a $500 per semester scholarship which accumulates as the interest on the $17,000. However, with interest rates so low right now, the scholarship amount might be a bit lower initially, according to Anderson.

Essay contest on peace might yield scholarship

University of Idaho students and high school seniors around the state can win a one-year scholarship to the UI as part of an essay contest currently being conducted by the university's Borah Symposium Committee.

The committee coordinates the yearly Borah Symposium, held each spring to explore the causes of war and promote conditions for peace.

The theme for this year's symposium is "In the Service of Peace." First prize in each case is a one-year scholarship to the UI, valued at $1,296. Second place winners earn a one-semester scholarship worth $648.

Bob Bolin, chair of the Borah committee, noted that, "our aim is to inspire students and the Northwestern community to service by featuring exemplary leaders of organizations such as the Peace Corps, Volunteers in Service to America, Habitat for Humanity and many others.

"It's important for students to note that the subject (for the essay contest) is quite general. This is deliberate, since we're encouraging students to find their own interpretation of the topic," added Bolin.

He said the committee is planning an unusual program April 5-6. It's sponsoring two symposia -- one focusing on the situation in east Africa and the role of volunteer agencies there. The other examines opportunities for voluntary service," said Bolin.

Besides the symposia, the Borah committee is planning an "Opportunity Fair," where organizations like the Peace Corps and Doctors Without Borders can recruit for their causes.

Bolin said the committee also intends to bring members of the community -- especially students -- together with speakers and other guests through breakfasts, classroom visits, receptions and other occasions.

When it comes to cutting the budget, let's start at the top

On January 20 George Bush will join former presidents Nixon, Ford, Carter and Reagan on the public dole.

Many people may not know it, but American taxpayers foot the bill for the retirement of all former presidents. We also get handed the check for their Secret Service protection.

How much do we pay? To provide Nixon, Carter, Ford and Reagan with comfortable retirements, we annually fork over $17.2 million. The addition of Bush will boost that figure accordingly.

Former presidents are provided with an annual pension that is equivalent to the salary of a current Cabinet secretary. This year that amounts to $143,800 a pop.

But wait. It gets better.

Our former leaders get nearly a half a million per year for office space, staff and travel expenses. That's half a million per year for the rest of their lives.

Protection from foes both foreign and domestic is by far the biggest expense. To his credit, in 1985 Richard Nixon waived all Secret Service protection. The other three men are the recipients of $15 million in taxpayer-funded security this year.

In what amounts to the ultimate in eternal rent-a-cops, Secret Service agents are at the beck and call of Ford, Carter and Reagan 24 hours a day, 365 days a year.

Imagine having your own bodyguards and passing the bill on to someone else.

The high price of protection first hit the headlines in 1989 when Ronald Reagan made a highly publicized trip to Japan. Although Reagan was paid $2 million in honoraria by a Japanese corporation for making speeches during his visit, U.S. taxpayers were saddled with the costs of his traveling security agents.

Seventeen million dollars, especially when it is spread amongst four former heads of state, seems insignificant when compared to the monstrous size of other federal outlays.

And it is peanuts when we read about the million dollar contracts signed by athletes or entertainers, or the billion dollar pork barrel projects slated for the home districts of the most influential members of Congress.

Still, it's a little extreme. All our ex-presidents were wealthy and influential men long before they took the oath of office. They have remained wealthy and influential long after they have taken their last strolls down the Rose Garden.

Why not welcome them back into the real world with the rest of us? If they want to be protected, let them come up with the cash for their own bodyguards.

There is hope. Sen. Dennis DeConcini (D-Ariz.) has added a provision to an appropriations bill that requires the director of the Secret Service to meet with former presidents and discuss the costs of their protection. The plan is to find ways to get rid of unnecessary security.

Cutting $15 million in government spending won't make much of a difference in a trillion dollar budget, but we've got to start somewhere.

—Pete Gomben

Learning how to vote

When you're in high school, no one teaches you how to buy groceries. There are no classes for choosing the right health insurance and there is no "How To Deal With Bounced Checks 101."

Unless your parents remember how hard it was for them to deal with the real world when they were your age, there is little guidance for college students.

Although I managed to learn how to buy the right groceries and my mother taught me how to buy health insurance and how to deal with angry bank tellers, there was one thing that no one ever taught me how to do. Not one person sat down and gave me the dos and don'ts of voting.

That sounds strange to those of you who voted in 1988. Before this year I had only voted on an absentee ballot in 1990 for my hometown elections. I would get this little slip of paper in the mail that looked just like the pieces of paper you would check off who you wanted to be class president or head cheerleader. Every thing was simple and neat. I checked the boxes, licked the envelope and slipped it into the mail slot.

This year I was excited to be old enough to vote in a national election. But it wasn't until last Tuesday that I understood the true meaning of what they call

Looking for love in the wrong places

On a never ending quest for romance, a friend of mine recently put a personal advertisement in his local newspaper. It read:

White male, late 20s, slim and good looking, intelligent, enjoys sports and good conversation. Seeks slender, attractive, healthy, stimulating woman 22 to 26 years old for romantic relationship.

His heart leapt with glee when he received messages from interested women on his answering machine.

However, his mood plummeted when the women he called for dates turned out to be pudgy, chain-smoking waitresses who were carrying enough emotional baggage to break a bellhop's back.

"Didn't the women read the ad?" he asked. "I don't want a woman who looks like Delta Burke. Why weren't they honest?"

I shrugged. It wouldn't have been useful to point out that he wasn't necessarily slim, good-looking and intelligent himself, and that he wasn't exactly honest when he wrote the ad.

Attractive, sleek, shapely SWF, big beautiful eyes, long brunette hair, affectionate, sexy, seeking non-smoking SWM, honest, affectionate, handsome...

Matchmaking has become a multimillion dollar industry. Look in the personals of any major newspaper and you'll find ads — some full of more lies than a political commercial — from thousands of lonely people. Some cities have entire magazines devoted to getting prospective lovers in touch with each other. For a nominal fee you can have a roll in the crapsheet of love.

In part the romance industry is fed by our desire for immediate gratification. What better way to slice through all the baloney of the singles scene than to spell out who you are and what you want in 30 words or less?

Get your desires down on paper and out into the market place, dammit. Stop wasting effort at nightclubs hitting on someone who turns your head, only to find out three minutes before last call that you turn her stomach.

Cute and curvy SWF, 25, 5', brown hair, green eyes. Enjoys sports, live music, working out, long walks and romance. If you're that dark-haired, professional, 25-32, 5'8" to 6', who shares some of the interests above, call/write soon!

Time, or lack of thereof, has also played a role in the rise of romantic personals. Busy professionals have no time to nurture relationships. Slowly fanning the coals of affection until an all-consuming blaze is merrily a cracklin' has given way to micro-wave love affairs.

There isn't even time to defrost. If two people don't heat the voting process. When Nov. 3 came, I was ready. As I set my schedule for the day, I realized I had forgotten where to vote. All I could remember was that it was not at the Kibbie Dome, where all of my friends did. Having blind faith that truth lies in friendship, I asked my good friend Jane (not her real name) where she thought I should go.

"You live on the east side of Main St.?" she said. "Um ... I think that would be in the junior high."

I took off on my scooter, battling 40 degree winds and a runny nose. In my home town, they voted in the foyer outside our high school gym, so I logically headed for what looked like a gym. I threw open the gym door, I was suddenly surrounded by 3,000 pre-pubescent kids. This was not where I was supposed to vote.

Leaving the parking lot with smoking tires and mumbling under my breath about the 20 ways I could murder my friend Jane, I decided my best bet would be to go to the courthouse. The secretary pointed me in the right direction and I was on my way to the Latah County Fair Grounds.

After wandering around the building like a lost sheep, I was guided to Precinct Six. I was ready to "Rock the Vote" when the woman at the desk did something very unexpected. She gave me a card. Not a piece of paper with little boxes to make an "X" in. Just a card with numbers on it.

Trying as hard as I could not to look like a baffled idiot, I wandered over to an open booth. This is where things started to get really strange.

There was a plasticized book with the names of the candidates on different pages, a little metal thing that looked like an Iraqi torture device, a pencil, a sign that read "Take only five minutes, please" and a plastic thing with two red prongs. On the plastic thing it said "Insert Card Here."

I was frantic. I thought to myself "Whoa. Five minutes? I'll be lucky if I figure this contraption out in 10! What have I gotten myself into?"

I looked around to see if anyone else was as confused as me, but everyone was just calmly looking down inside their booths, moving their hands around, then leaving.

I tried to look over at the woman next to me to see how she was doing it. She glared at me as if I was trying to copy the answers off of her microbiology test and hunkered down over the card so I couldn't see.

My point is, people often wonder why it is that no one in our generation votes. Some of it is due to the fact they just don't want to, but how much of it is because they don't know how and don't take the time to learn? To solve some of this problem, I think the government should implement "How to vote" curriculum in the classrooms. Just to teach them how to register, find out what precinct they live in and how to use the metal punch. It would take 15 minutes a year to teach this to a classroom of sixth graders. And if they learned at 12, maybe they won't have to feel stupid at 21.

each other up the minute they meet, it's back to the personals for another go around.

I am Gumby looking for Pokey. Free-spirited, alternative SWM, seeks a random, spontaneous, and intriguing woman to explore and love. Let's be playmates...

Adjectives are the lifeblood of personals. Words like sassy, dark, erotic, kinky, hard, dominant, lusty, submissive and naughtily all conjure certain images and ideas.

Nevermind that the person who describes himself as a "wealthy professional, built like Adonis" may actually be an sleazy accountant with a skin condition. Just reading a steamy personal can provide some people with the sexual charge they desire.

Where do "slightly kinky" and "semi-naughty" fit into the scheme of the romantic personal? Or is it all relative? After all, one person's "attractive" may be another person's "grotesque." My idea of "erotic" might be your idea of "perverted."

Finding the person of your dreams may be as simple as mastering your thesaurus.

Gorgeous face, great body and mind; honest, sincere and fun-loving. SWF, 22, blonde/blue, seeking same qualities. Must be financially secure, tall and very attractive...

Hollywood and romance novels have spoiled us. There are no muscular hunks or buxom lasses that will step out of a warm summer rain, triceps flexing or moist lips glistening, to sweep us off our feet.

People who stumble through life believing in the love-at-first-sight romances made popular by the entertainment industry are setting themselves up for heart-break. They are blind to the opportunities that can be found around them all day, everyday.

My friend, though far from perfect himself, has an idealized version of the woman he wants. By holding to standards of womanhood that even the Virgin Mary couldn't meet, he has allowed dozens of caring, humorous and intelligent women to pass by.

Former schoolteacher aches for excitement. Seeks large, muscular, tattooed harpooner for friendship and adventure. Cannibalism not a problem...

The biggest sin committed by people on the prowl for love is having tunnel vision. For example, my friend cannot conceive of having a relationship with a woman based purely on friendship. To him it is an all or nothing proposition.

That is a terrible shame. If he would learn to put aside romance and look at women as a something beyond possible girlfriends, wives or mothers, he would be a much more well-adjusted person.

And he might eventually find what he's looking for.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

What homosexuals want from society

Editor;

How sad to read such a hate-filled letter by Marcus Valentine in the Oct. 23 Argonaut. But perhaps it would be helpful to consider Mr. Valentine's question — what indeed do gay men and lesbians want from society?

Well, I am not gay, but let me take a guess. Perhaps they would like to be able to walk down the street without being afraid that they will be called names, shoved and insulted, attacked and beaten up. Perhaps they would like to know that they will not lose their jobs, their homes, their friends and families, and their standing in the community if they are honest enough to admit to being gay.

I think they also would prefer to live safely in their homes without having garbage dumped on their lawns; their houses vandalized; and "fag" spray-painted on their cars (all of these have happened to friends of mine).

Maybe they would like to open the newspaper each day without seeing articles, editorials and letters promoting stereotypes of gays as promiscuous, sadistic, child-molesters, etc. People who would never dare proclaim stereotypes of other minorities still merrily say whatever they want about gays and lesbians.

They probably want the rights that you and I take for granted of being able to marry the one they love, to enlist in the military, to have insurance for their families, and just simply to be left alone to live safe and productive lives.

Are these "minority rights" or "special rights," Mr. Valentine? I would call them basic "human rights." Not all injustices can be addressed by laws, and it is a shame we have to have protective legislation at all. But thanks to people and organizations who feel they have some kind religious mandate to continue to persecute these people, we do need such legal protection. In the same way we have had to pass the protective legislation to avoid discrimination when people cited the Bible and other justifications for slavery, separation of the races and the inferiority of women.

As more and more gays and lesbians come out of the closet, more and more of us realize that these are indeed the family, friends, neighbors and colleagues whom we care about, trust and respect. In this way the myths and stereotypes are dispelled and the straight society that believes in justice and liberty for all will increasingly demand that our gay and lesbian brothers and sisters be treated fairly and given the chance to enjoy the same basic human rights that you and I do.

Editor should resign

Editor;

In response to Tanya Madison's editorial "Media dropped the ball in election coverage" (Argonaut, Nov. 3), I have to point out an obvious irony. Here we have an editor, who in the months preceding the election printed more column inches of ill-considered, unthoughtful dribble about female-male relationships, female psyches, male shortcomings and being daddy's little girl, who is now complaining about the shortcomings of the media. You are a part of the media, Tanya. Did you really mean to complain about your own performance and shortcomings? If you did, then I applaud you. If you didn't, then I intend to complain now.

The last paragraph of your editorial was a plea for all students to vote. After witnessing the wholly inadequate job the Argonaut did in covering election issues, I would make the plea that the students didn't vote. It is possible that for many students, the Argonaut comprises their main source of information. I hate to see totally uninformed people entering a voting booth.

As editor of the Argonaut, Tanya Madison has committed a gross violation of her privileges and power. Instead of being provided with a newspaper that enlightens and stimulates thought, we have been saddled with one person's tilted view of a limited world. It is my opinion that Tanya Madison should limit the number of articles she authors, and strive to cover issues from a point of view not centered on herself. If this is not possible, then resign, Tanya.

Open invitation to Thanksgiving dinner

Editor;

It soon will be time for the Thanksgiving holiday. For some students this will not mean a trip home. There may be obligations here, or the distance may be too great. Yet Thanksgiving Day can be celebrated with happiness. You are invited to share in my community dinner, which will be held again this year at 12:30 p.m. at St. Mary's Family Center, 618 East First St.

The menu will include the traditional turkey and fixings, plus baked ham and enough vegetables, salads and non-meat dishes to provide a satisfactory meal for any vegetarians among the guests.

Everyone is invited: students away from home, international students and student families. It would help us a great deal if I had an RSVP for those wishing to attend the gathering. This is not totally necessary, but would be tremendously helpful. Then we could have a place set for you. Please call me at 882-8124 and let me know your intention to come. Food shopping will take place a few days before the event and your RSVP will help determine how much to purchase. Thanks!

There will also be free door prize drawings to add excitement and fun to the celebration.

Creature comforts are worth fighting for

Editor;

In his column in the Nov. 3 Argonaut, Pete Gomben suggests that our preoccupation with creature comforts presages dark days for Western civilization. Ours is a generation too quick to reach for between-meal snacks, too eager to turn up the thermostat and, to our lasting discredit, too willing to combat minor rectal discomfort with soothing over the counter remedies. We are jello, through and through.

To hear Mr. Gomben tell it, the significance of the story of Androcles and the lion is not that what goes around comes around, but that it is only a very sorry excuse for a lion that would ever wish to have a thorn removed from its paw in the first place. The problem is not the thorn; it is the lion's obsessive focus on pain-free existence. If indicative of the priorities of lions generally, this can only lead to trouble for the species at some point down the road. The moral to Mr. Gomben's story is presumably this: If the road to hell is paved with good intentions, the road to heaven is paved with broken glass, and shoes are the devil's work.

This is an acceptable philosophy, I suppose, and it has certainly proven adequate to the needs of generations of ascetic monks. I stand between no man and his ritual self-flagellation, nor would I seek to dissuade those who would wear their welts as a badge of honor. It is a big, wide open world, and there is certainly room enough in it for proponents of Mr. Gomben's Spartan inclinations. Live and let live is my motto. (Until recently, my motto was: Hug a tree. This remains a very fine motto, but unfortunately is almost entirely meaningless in this context.)

If we the depraved masses — who eat when we are hungry, scratch when we itch and avoid above the gum dental work whenever possible — are on the path to our own destruction, so be it. We'll die happy and, if we're very lucky, in a frenzied fit of self-gratification. All we ask is that Mr. Gomben keep his agony private; scream softly and we can all enjoy ourselves together.

—Derek Caplinger

What is the source of morality?

Editor;

I am responding to Monte Abbot's letter (Argonaut, Oct. 30) concerning his views of morality. What is the source of absolute morality? If it is of human origin, then man's ideas of morality are totally subjective — all can claim to have authority upon morality. Imagine that somebody claims belief that the murder of anybody for any reason is moral. Another claims murder of any sort is totally immoral. When one confronts the other with a gun, a death occurs. One or both views of morality become null and void, showing futility in believing everyone is subject to their own morality. This illustration is easily applied to other situations. Morality is a trait of humanity that is basic to our nature and dictates our rational behaviors and attitudes toward others. It must be the same for everybody.

If no source of absolute morality exists, nothing can be considered moral. Absolute morality is claimed by the Bible. The Bible says we are created beings and are the image of the Creator. It also says as the result of our rejection of Him we can do nothing but detestable things in His sight. Within its central theme it shows that man, living a life apart from Him, will be held fully accountable for every action. In contrast, most believe that all actions carry little or no consequences. If these consequences are not presently apparent, they will be meted out sometime in the future. "Since (man) did not think it worthwhile to retain the knowledge of God, he gave them over to a depraved mind, to do what ought not to be done ... although they know God's righteous decree that those who do (evil) deserve death, they not only continue to do these very things but also approve of those who practice them" Romans 1:28-32.

The Bible does have some very succinct moral rules about how we should regard the tough issues. One of these issues concerns homosexuality. In Leviticus, it says that one should not lie with a man as one lies with a woman — this is detestable to God (Leviticus 18:22). Man originally knew God and worshipped Him, but later refused to glorify Him as God then began to worship both themselves and the creation. As a result, He gave them over to their shameful lusts and to do what they wanted to do — exchanging natural sexual relations (men with women) for unnatural ones (men with men and women with women) Romans 1:21-27. The preceding describes God's view of homosexuality. The Bible calls man to treat those who are homosexual as they would treat others who are not, and avoid all judgment — bigotry, hatred and homophobia. This will only show that God does truly love and care for the homosexual, and will provide full forgiveness and healing. Only when a decision is made to seek the Lord instead of the inward desires and feelings can the "choice" to lead a homosexual lifestyle be seen as immoral.

If our morality dictates that we live lives in light to what is written in the Word of God, we will be able to achieve a lifestyle that is appropriate and pleasing to Him. We should reject living our lives as we believe we should live them and accept Christ with His authority on absolute morality as the Bible directs.

Spikers scare WSU, beat EWU

By MISSY WILSON
Staff Writer

A record crowd of 1,213 sat on the edge of their seats Saturday night through an intense "border battle" volleyball match as Idaho fell to the Washington State Cougars in a five game non-conference thriller, 13-15, 15-11, 15-6, 14-16, 12-15 at Memorial Gym.

Vandal outside hitter Dee Porter predicted Friday night after Idaho swept Eastern Washington University in three games that Saturday's competition would go five games, and that if the Vandals wanted to beat No. 19 WSU, they'd have to serve well. But serving ended up being one of Idaho's downfalls as they missed 11 crucial serves late in the match to give WSU the push they needed.

Idaho head coach Tom Hilbert said that Idaho missed important serves at the beginning of the fourth game, and at the end of the fourth, which he felt was the turning point of the match.

"It is very frustrating as a coach to watch serving errors," Hilbert said. "The girls were trying to serve tough and competitively, and we missed a few too many."

Throughout the entire match, both teams played with fiery emotion as leads bounced back and forth throughout each game. In fact, the Vandals led 14-11 in the fourth game, but couldn't hold on for the kill, and ended up losing it 14-16. One point would have secured the match, but instead the teams moved into a grueling fifth game.

Hilbert said he was proud of his team for playing a great match, but pound for pound WSU was more athletic. Hilbert also mentioned that he thought his team played as good of side-out volleyball against WSU as they had all year long.

"If we would have played this way against Montana, we would have beat them (UM) for sure," Hilbert said. "Tonight we played at a level high enough to win the Big Sky Conference."

The attendance, however, wasn't the only record breaking number on Saturday night. Setter Amie Hanks broke her own previous school record for most assists in a match by seven. Her old record of 78 assists was set in October of '91 when the Vandals played Northern Arizona, but Saturday the senior racked-up 85 against WSU.

"Amie played better tonight than she has played in the last few matches," Hilbert said.

Hanks also set the tone early for a great hitting performance by the Vandals. The team broke a school record of total single hitting attempts with 282, and Idaho out hit WSU 282 to 210. Outside hitter Jessica Puckett lead the Vandal attack with 24 kills on the night while Dee Porter and Nancy Wicks both added 22.

Despite the team's commendable offensive performance, Hilbert thought his team had the defensive advantage.

"I thought overall that we had the edge defensively, and they had the edge with passing and serving," Hilbert said. "They just got the important side-outs."

"Heather McEwen did a great job blocking," Hilbert said. "She took the big hits away from (WSU outside hitter Becky) Howlett."

Howlett, who stands 6'-5", finished with just 14 kills on the

Crowd helped Vandals

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

As the Idaho Vandal volleyball team faced match point twice Saturday night in their five-game loss to No. 19 Washington State, one thing cannot be said about the experience — that the vocal Vandal crowd didn't try to help them win it.

Idaho coach Tom Hilbert commented that when the crowd of 1,213 made some noise, he wasn't the only one who noticed that it played a part in the Vandal's near upset against the favored Cougars.

"It (the crowd support) was a huge factor, and I know it was a huge factor because after the match, the WSU coach came over and told me that the crowd here was great," Hilbert said.

Throughout the match, especially when Idaho saved a point with a diving dig or blasted down a tremendous kill, the fans let the Vandals know how they felt about their inspired play. This, in turn, gave the team the confidence it needed to give the Cougs a scare.

"Our team met yesterday (Sunday) and we talked about the things that helped us play well, and everyone said that the crowd was a really big help," Hilbert said.

Hilbert, in his fourth year at Idaho, commented on if he'd ever seen such overwhelming crowd support.

"No, never," Hilbert said. "I thought that that crowd was more effective than some of the (Idaho) men's basketball games. It seemed like throughout the entire match they (the crowd) were having fun."

The top four teams go to the conference tournament, but the winner of the regular season hosts it. This Thursday's home opponent, Northern Arizona, already beat Idaho once in Flagstaff in five games, and Hilbert commented that if Idaho's crowd from last Saturday shows up for it, they'll rival what it was like at NAU.

"When we were at their place, their crowd was plain obvious, and I'd like to return the favor," Hilbert said.

Their stands are right down on the floor, so the fans were right behind us yelling. Memorial causes a pit effect so it gets really loud in there when the fans get going."

Game time is set for 7:30 p.m. and is free to all students with a valid Vandal ID card.

night, but outside hitter Kristen Hovde led the way offensively for WSU as she posted 23 kills and 19 digs.

Friday night Idaho rolled over EWU in three easy games, 15-9, 15-12, 15-5. In the match the Vandals looked to their bench for help, and the bench shined.

"We don't really consider our bench as 'the bench,'" Porter said. "They come in to play and do a great job."

In game three, Mindy Rice came off the bench and exploded with three kills and eight service points, including three aces to give Idaho a huge advantage.

"Rice came out of a time-out and served great," graduate assistant coach Melissa Stokes said. "She threw EWU off balance with five straight points. She did great off the bench."

Lebo lights up air as Vandals sputter on ground

UI's 47-29 loss to Griz puts Vandals in must win situation

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

For the first time in the 1992 football season the Idaho Vandals experienced what six of their opponents this season have felt.

To get down early and never get back-up.

The Montana Grizzlies (3-3 in the Big Sky Conference, 4-5 overall) used a pressuring defense on Idaho (4-1, 7-2) all day, and got a near perfect performance from quarterback Brad Lebo to pummel the Vandals, 47-29 Saturday at a cold and wet Washington/Grizzly Stadium. The win keeps UM's hopes alive for a seventh straight winning season with two games left, while Idaho, who slipped to No. 6 in the I-AA poll, will need to win its remaining two games, or hope for a Boise win over Eastern Washington (far-fetched) to capture the Big Sky title.

As far as Saturday went, UM looked like the BSC title contender, not Idaho.

"I think we got them off-balance," UM linebacker coach David Reeves said. "We felt coming in that (Idaho quarterback Doug) Nussmeier likes to audible on the field so we played games with him, and today I think we did a good job of that."

When Nussmeier did get the chance to make the plays he wanted, especially rushing ones, the results were usually sub-par. Idaho had 33 rushing attempts on the day, and netted a total of 32 yards. The Big Sky's leading rusher, Idaho's Sherriden May, who had been averaging 104.25 yards a game, was held to 30, due to a sore knee which required fluid to be drained from it.

"Offensively I don't think we executed too poorly," Nussmeier said. "We were doing the little things we needed to to win, but we weren't playing with a whole lot of intensity. The fact that we didn't ever get our ground game going really hurt us."

Montana, on the other hand, went to the weapon they normally do in Lebo's right arm. The senior, out of Lewiston High School, completed 33-of-47 attempts for 389 yards and three touchdowns. On UM's opening drive, Lebo led the Griz on a 15-play drive that covered 76 yards and took 6:20 off the clock. During the drive, Lebo connected on four-of-six passes and the Vandals were called for three offsides penalties inside the 10-yard line.

"He got into a rhythm," Idaho defensive end Jeff Robinson said. "The thing with Lebo that we knew all along was that if you let him get into a rhythm, he's going to be real good."

Idaho's first possession of the game was shortlived. After May ran for eight yards on first down, Nussmeier threw an interception to UM linebacker Chad Lembke who ran the ball back 29 yards down to the Idaho 22.

"They were doing a good job moving around on the front (line)," Nussmeier said. "On the play I saw the safety, but I didn't see the linebacker underneath. I just tried to hit Walt (receiver Walter Saunders) in the chest and it didn't work out."

The Idaho defense stepped up, though, which included cornerback David Gistarb breaking up a pass in the endzone, and UM had to settle for a partially blocked 26-yard field goal to take a 10-0 lead with 6:06 left in the opening quarter. It was the first field goal that UM has had this season as kicker Matt Wells had gone 0-3 before the boot.

Once again Idaho's offense, which is commonly referred to as "high octane," was in definite need for a tune-up. Two draw plays to May on second and third down resulted in a total of three yards, and Idaho was forced to punt on fourth-and-one.

Reeves felt that the ability of the defense has been there all year, they just haven't been able to put all the facets together at once.

"I think we're just better, honestly (from earlier this season)," Reeves said. "I think when it comes down to a game like this the kids have to make the plays. We just needed to put a game together."

Lebo began putting a game together of his own. On the Griz's ensuing drive, Lebo hit wide receiver Shannon Cabunoc for 18 yards, six yards, and then for a 14-yard touchdown with 0:01 remaining in the quarter. UM also scored on their next possession to go up 23-0 with 11:59 still remaining in the half.

Idaho finally got on the board with 11:00 to play as running back Wind Henderson went in from a yard out, bringing a sigh of relief from the estimated 600 Vandal faithful who made it to the game. The drive was highlighted as May took a screen pass 57 yards down the sideline to the one-yard line.

But UM again scored on their next two possessions as receiver Shalon Baker caught a touch-down pass, and running back Tony Rice took one in to make it 38-7 with 5:42 left in the half.

"Idaho could not deal with our offense at all today," Reeves said. "Today I think it shows what happens when you let your kids loose."

Idaho did get nine more points on the board before the end of the half as kicker Mike Hollis popped through a 29-yarder, and Yo Murphy, who ended the day with a career high 11 catches for 200 yards, pulled in a six yard TD reception to make it 38-16 at the intermission.

Down 44-22 in the third quarter, Nussmeier hit Alan Allen on a 43-yard strike for a TD, but offsetting holding penalties

UI's Porter keys team resurgence

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

Before the University of Idaho volleyball team tangled with the Oklahoma Sooners earlier this season, seniors Heather McEwen and Amie Hanks handed out a series of gag gifts to all members of the volleyball team.

And what did junior outside hitter Dee Porter receive from her teammates?

"They gave me a baby telephone," the 6-foot Porter said with a laugh.

"Yes, she is a very social person," Vandal coach Tom Hilbert chuckled. "This has started to shine through on the court in terms of confidence."

Whether the phone was a reference to her self-admitted social skills off the court or her newfound vocal leadership on the court is unknown. What is a known quality would be the improvement of her play.

Porter is currently ranked in the top five in at least six different team statistics, including team highs in service aces and digs.

Hailing from Cambridge High School in southern Idaho, Porter was on a volleyball team that won one state title and a basketball team that won two more.

According to Porter, many people around town automatically assumed she would play basketball since her best friend on the team, Courtney Edwards, came to Idaho on a basketball scholarship. Additionally, various college recruiters had picked off the other four starters besides Edwards, and so Porter wouldn't have had a difficult time attracting collegiate attention.

Garnering attention wouldn't have been a problem, though, considering she was USA Today's high school athlete of the year for Idaho during her season year.

What cemented Porter's decision to play volleyball was a European tour she took with a northwest volleyball club that included current teammate Jessica Puckett.

After witnessing the intense level of competition present in European volleyball, Porter decided to give volleyball a shot.

"I went overseas and saw a whole different level of volleyball than what I was seeing in high school," she said. "I still wasn't 100 percent sure, though, until I got to Idaho and started playing."

And coach Tom Hilbert couldn't be happier.

While the program had improved in the first three years of Hilbert's reign, the team had never gone to the conference tournament and had losing records in 1990 and 1991.

So his approach when recruiting Porter was an honest one — if she came to Idaho, Porter would be part of the "building" process. This year's team, which is the first to be comprised solely of Hilbert recruits, has proved good on the coach's promise to Porter three years ago.

The Vandals are 8-2 in conference and 19-5 overall heading into Thursday's important match with Northern Arizona University. With Porter paving the way, the Vandals have an excellent chance of participating in the post-season conference tournament held in late November.

In evaluating the role of Porter in the program's upswing, Hilbert would only change one aspect.

"I would like her to give herself a pat on the back when she does something well," he said. "She's the first person to congratulate a teammate, but the last to give herself a compliment when things go well."

Porter did concede she used to come down hard on herself when her play or the team's play wasn't up to par. The important part would be the phrase "used to."

She said the biggest improvement in her game this year has been her surge in mental toughness.

"I'm not as tentative, and now it's easy for me to look ahead instead of looking back and figuring out what I did wrong," Porter said.

Which basically translates into a more mature, confident player. "I definitely talk a lot on the court now, and I'm not the shy one anymore," said Porter.

This new level of confidence has also improved her clairvoyant capabilities.

"This team is confident right now that it can win the Big Sky championship," she said.

With her steady improvement over the last three years, she just may be right.

Dee Porter will help the Vandals in their efforts to chase down the Montana Grizzlies for the Big Sky Conference volleyball title. (MIKE SPINOSA PHOTO)

UI starts Grizzly watch

With four games left and trailing first-place Montana by one game in the Big Sky Conference, the University of Idaho volleyball team might be said to need some divine intervention to take the title.

Barring this, however, the 19-5 Vandals must focus solely on their part of the equation and let the rest take care of itself.

But for this Thursday's match against Northern Arizona, redemption might be the key item on many Vandals' minds.

One month ago today, the Lumberjacks beat the Vandals in a drawn-out 15-13, 6-15, 15-12, 10-15, 15-11 victory in Flagstaff that knocked the Vandals out of first place in the BSC.

How things can change in a month.

After being tied with the Vandals for second place in the conference at 6-2, the Wildcats have lost three straight conference matches to effectively eliminate them from the regular-season title. The Vandals, meanwhile, are now 8-2 in conference.

Still, there is that redemption factor.

"For me, there's a lot of redemption," Vandal coach Tom Hilbert said. "We had everything going against us in Flagstaff, and we almost beat them."

By beating Northern Arizona on Thursday and Weber St. on Saturday, the Vandals can keep the pressure on the Grizzlies, who are 10-1 in conference and 13-10 overall.

The biggest pitfall for the Grizzlies should be their next conference match against Boise State, which will be played in Missoula. BSU has played well recently and is currently ranked 10th in the NCAA's Northwest Region poll (This poll doesn't include Pac-10 schools).

Should Montana lose to Boise St. or any of its other two conference matches and end up tied with the Vandals for the league lead, a complicated set of tie-breaking procedures will determine the title.

The first determinant would be Montana's record with Idaho in head-to-head matches. Since the teams split their two games, conference officials will then figure out which team has the better record against the third-place team, then the fourth-place team and so on. If this is inconclusive, then whoever has the most overall wins will win the title.

What if the Vandals finish in second place and must travel to Missoula for the conference tournament?

Vandal coach Tom Hilbert isn't fretting about it.

"Playing in Missoula doesn't scare me," Hilbert said. "We can beat them if we play like we are capable of playing."

UI hockey up to 4-1

By MISSY WILSON
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho hockey club crushed the University of Washington two times in the club's doubleheader last weekend in Seattle.

The skaters racked up a combined total of 15 goals on the weekend, compared to just three by the Huskies. In their first meeting Saturday night, Idaho exploded to beat UW by a six-goal margin, icing the final score at 9-3. They added another six on Sunday, and combined it with nearly perfect play to end up with a 6-0 victory. The two wins put the skaters season record at 4-1.

"We're winning because we have 13 guys with a lot of experience," head coach Scott Squires said. "We are working well together, and we always put in a great team effort."

Squires added that the team is fast and moves the puck quick. That is definitely the case with Toby Caron, who lead the team in scoring over the weekend with a total of four goals. The impressive part is that he scored two of his goals within seven seconds of each another.

Mark Berard was also tops on the scoring list with three goals, directly followed by Squires who added two.

Another impressive performance came from goalie Randy Zemplak. Zemplak had his first shut-out of the season on Sunday by preventing UW from scoring on any of their attempted 30 shots.

"We have a great team, and we took over and played our game," Squires said.

The team's only blemish on the season was a loss to Washington State University. Squires said that in that game they got behind early, and couldn't catch up. One week later, Idaho got thier dignity back by beating the Cougars club in style.

"We came back and played tough to beat them the next week," Squires said. "We should have never lost to them in the first place."

The Vandal hockey club plays through March, with their next trip scheduled to the University of Oregon in February. Squires says that up until that point they have a fairly free calendar, but are hoping to schedule some short-notice games soon.

brought the ball back, and Idaho eventually lost the ball, and any hopes for a comeback, when Nussmeier slipped on fourth-and-one.

"I really think we were still in it until that play got called back," Nussmeier said. "That really hurt."

IDAHO INFO-- How emotional of a win was it for Reeves? Well, after the game Reeves discussed his feelings towards Idaho on UM's post-game show: "It's not a dislike, it's more of a hate. I don't know where it comes from-it's just a hate. I've always hated Idaho. I've never liked them and I never will." Wow. With qualifications like that someone should see if he's interested in a probable head coaching job at Boise State in two weeks...Idaho, who had been converting on 58 percent of their third down conversions, managed just 3-of-12 Saturday...Murphy's 200-yard performance now brings him to 1,057 in nine games, a 120.7 yards per game average...Linebacker Duke Garrett recorded double-digits in tackling for the eighth-straight game as he totaled 14 Saturday to bring his season total up to team-high 112...If Boise State wins at EWU, and Idaho wins this week against Montana State, the Vandals and Broncos would be playing for the league title in Boise on November 21.

The Posies playin' the Palouse Saturday

By KARIN MASON
Staff Writer

The Posies will invade Moscow on Saturday night. The Seattle band is made up of Jon Auer on guitar and vocals, Mike Musburger on drums, Dave Fox on bass and Ken Stringfellow doing vocals and guitar.

Back in 1988, just Auer and Stringfellow made up The Posies. The two cut an album titled "Failure," but the title is definitely a contradiction in terms. The Posies album was a hit.

With all of the publicity and radio air time, "Failure" became the object of more than local attention. Following this, the band expanded into the four-piece band it is now, with just one change from bass player Rick Roberts to Musburger, and began a series of live performances.

In 1990, The Posies released their major label debut album titled "Dear 23."

"We didn't have incredibly grandiose thoughts. Our ambition was simple: to make pop music where the songs were the most important thing--songs with an implied simplicity," said Auer on a press release.

Stringfellow adds, "If there were two of us who like it, then maybe others would appreciate it too."

The music on the album has been described as buoyant guitar-rock with smooth vocal harmonies, with major focus on pop song structure.

Despite Seattle's reputation for producing thrasher, metal bands, The Posies went against the extreme and didn't push people with outrageous noise and loud volume.

"What we do is not extreme. We don't force someone to listen by shoving volume and bombarding them with images," said Stringfellow in the press release.

The Replacements noticed The Posies while passing through Seattle and requested them to open two concerts. Other big names like the Hoodoo Gurus and the Grapes of Wrath noticed this original band also, and tapped in.

Although Seattle isn't where the music industry is, the group remained there to record. A lot of The Posies style has changed since the first album with the lyrics more suggestive and image-laden. But, still a success.

Appearing with these Geffen/DGC recording artists on Saturday, Nov. 14 is Seattle's Inflatable Soule and The Meices from San Francisco. The show is being sponsored by KUOI Radio and Strong Promotions.

Tickets are available in Moscow at Ticket Express, Murdoc's and the Guitar's Friend, and in Pullman at Pterodactyl Records. They are also available at G&B Select-a-Seat outlets. The tickets are $6.50 for WSU or UI students and $8.50 for non-students. The show will be held at the University of Idaho in the SUB Ballroom. The Meices will also hold an after-show party at Murdoc's.

John Dunnigan performed Friday night at the SUB's Vandal Cafe as part of an ASUI Coffeehouse performance. Coffeehouse Chair Jan Proctor said, "He was hilarious...people were howling. Of course, he's a good musician too."

Proctor estimated about 120 were in attendance, and the show was a success.

Cavani Quartet brings vivacious spirits to UI

By ELIZABETH POWELL
Contributing Writer

Virtually every seat in the Administration Auditorium was filled when the Cavani Quartet delighted the audience with the captivating melodies of Mozart, Zwilich, and Ravel.

The quartet, consisting of Annie Fullard and Susan Waterbury, violinists, Erika Eckert, violist, and Merry Peckham, cellist, performed Friday, Nov. 6 in the second Auditorium Chamber Music Concert of the season.

The quartet opened their concert with the playful and imaginative "K. 488" of Mozart in the "Eine Kleine Nachtmusik" by Wolfgang Amadeus Mozart. The first movement of the concert, featuring a lively and spirited exploration of the "K. 488" by Mozart, was playing.

The Quartet concluded with the gorgeous Quartet in F by Maurice Ravel, undoubtedly the finest piece of the concert, which struck a wide range of emotion both in the performers and the audience.

The quartet was very expressive in their interpretation of the pieces. It was wonderful to see the expanse of feeling on the faces of the performers as well as feel the exquisiteness of the music throughout the Auditorium. The quartet was able to switch modes and play with vivacious spirit and grace, with a sense of joy and playfulness. The quartet was able to switch modes and play with vivacious spirit and grace, with a sense of joy and playfulness. The quartet was able to switch modes and play with vivacious spirit and grace, with a sense of joy and playfulness.

The group played vivid music that enhanced their creative and energetic style, and exposed their wide range of musical talents. Once again, the Auditorium Chamber Music Series has provided the citizens of Moscow with professional players that entrance and inspire as indeed they wish to do.

The next Auditorium Chamber Music Series Concert will be February 7, 1993 at 8 p.m. at the Administration Auditorium. The Aeolian Chamber Players, consisting of a violinist, cellist, pianist, and clarinetist will be performing pieces by Brahms and a number of American composers. The Aeolian Chamber Players will also be performing "Clara" of music written by WSU and UI faculty and students.

Quiet Riot makes noise Friday at Murdoc's

By Jay Forman
Staff Writer

On Friday night Quiet Riot played at Murdoc's in Moscow, and it was one wild and crazy time.

Quiet Riot has a new record deal and are "gigging" around the country, trying to get it together. According to Ray Newton, manager of Murdoc's, "Quiet Riot got onto the stage at about midnight and the people there (estimated about 150) had a dynamite time."

Originally Quiet Riot was scheduled to perform in front of 1,000 fans, but left early because they were unable to get into the venue. According to Newton, "It was a great show, and a great group to watch."

The band's live show is a mix of heavy metal and hard rock, with a Queensryche-ish music style. The band's live show is a mix of heavy metal and hard rock, with a Queensryche-ish music style.

Royball was supposed to open the show, but the band was so loud that Quiet Riot was late.

Markus James' 'Spirit Gate' everything but dull

By TRACIE BRUNO
Lifestyles Editor

Primal, haunting, ethereal, desolate...these are just a few words to describe the complex ambiance of Markus James' music. Fusing together four decades of music--from the 60s psychedelia to the 70s metal to the 80s alternative to the 90s "world music"--James goes beyond unspoken boundaries to create new forms.

A student of Indonesian gamelan, traditional African forms and Haitian voodoo drumming, James draws from several genres, yet cannot be called derivative. His newest album, Spirit Gate, is lush with dense melodies and thought-provoking lyrics, with some songs bringing to mind King Crimson and early Genesis, and others conjuring up the Beatles' mystical era, a period when the English lads collaborated with world-famous sitar player Ravi Shanker. Still other tracks--infused with an undeniable Middle Eastern sensibility--are reminiscent of Peter Gabriel's Passion, the brilliant soundtrack from The Last Temptation of Christ.

Spirit Gate is Markus James' third album, put out by San Francisco's Firenze Records. His first album, Green Eyes, released in Europe on the La Califusa label, was produced in collaboration with virtuoso Bay Area guitarist Joe Satriani, who arranged and co-wrote several of the tracks. James' second album, Season of Dread, also released by La Califusa, is a 17-song melange of reggae, rap, Middle Eastern, metal and pop sounds; the album was critically acclaimed. Sea- son of Dread was praised in Musician magazine, Alternative Press and Billboard.

But it is perhaps on Spirit Gate that James has most fully realized his potential, bringing together a litany of exotic influences: psychedelia, African, Middle Eastern, New Age shamanism. From the guitar-heavy, almost dolorous intensity of "Wave" ("the wave spread across...like Christ on the cross") to the lush sensuality of "Everything Is Different Now" (where James sings of "passin' by the spirit gate") to the driving, metal-heavy poetics of "Buzzard Tree" ("I can see you're a vanishing species...with your diamonds and you maharishis") to the rhythmic, vocally distorted, alternative sound of "Head Fulla Snakes" ("head fulla snakes/season of dread/try to forget/everything I said"), James proves he's a man for all seasons--whose spiritual and musical journeys have reached their pinnacle.

Markus James

When the walls come tumbling down:

By KIM BLEDSOE
Staff Writer

It's nothing more than a shack now, but the old "Black Joe's" house located next to the Sigma Alpha Epsilon fraternity has been the subject of many tales. Of course, many of the stories are nearer to fiction than fact, and depending on who you talk to the stories can become pretty interesting.

If only the walls could speak, but even if they could, they're due to be torn down in a few short weeks.

A well-known story, one that has never been documented, was that an old black man named Joe, who cooked for the SAE's in the 1940's, lived there with his family. After Joe passed away, the SAE's supposedly bought the house, naming it "Black Joe's." The house became a favorite party spot for members of the fraternity.

Several other variations of the story abound, but probably the closest anyone has come to trying to explain the history of "Black Joe's" was the attempt made by

SAE alumnus, Chuck Labine. Labine still lives in Moscow and works for the University of Idaho Housing Services. He remembers when the house was bought back in 1974 and to his recollection, the story is of a different sort. He lived at "Black Joe's" his senior year at UI.

According to Labine, the story goes that a widower whose husband's name may have been Joe lived in the house for as long as anyone could remember. She came to befriend the members of the fraternity next door, and apparently after her death in the early 70s, she had stated in her will that the house should be offered to the fraternity first. The SAE's decided to purchase the house for $16,000, and it became tradition that seniors or super-seniors rented it from the fraternity.

"In the past, out-of-house fifth-year seniors could rent the house really cheap," Labine said.

It was a tradition that was carried on until just last year. Since the house was so old, however, and the wear and tear so great it naturally deteriorated. The Moscow Fire Department inspected it, determined it was a fire hazard and estimated it would take around $20,000 to make it livable for a group of people, thus they suggested that the walls come down.

Sophomores in the house began to tear it down just prior to Rush so that it wouldn't be accessible to trespassers who may get hurt, making the fraternity liable.

SAE's prepare to tear down "Black Joe's"

"We had some guys set up to rent it this year, but the house was uninhabitable," Labine said. "Fortunately, they were able to find other apartments in town."

After a company in Pullman tests the house for asbestos and other harmful elements, the house will be torn down. If asbestos are found, the house will have to be transported to Grangeville, the nearest place that could contain the harmful elements.

"Right now we're looking at all the options we have," SAE member Scott Thomas said. "One option that we have is possibly leveling the area and paving it, then selling parking permits to people since we do own the property."

Thomas also mentioned the possibility of building a full-size basketball court, noting that whatever is decided depends mostly on cost.

The immediate future holds some sort of landscaping since it is described by Labine as "a big eye sore."

"We're looking at making it a park-like area for the house, with benches and trees," Labine said. "Someone mentioned putting up apartments, but I don't think that it would be possible because there would be a problem of who would be able to manage it."
