The race for ASUI Senate positions is off and running

Richard Rock, he's the only person for the job?

By BRANDY CORGATELLI
Assistant News Editor

The hot contest in ASUI elections this year is for vice president.

ASUI senator Richard Rock is running unopposed for the presidency. At vice president, senator Derrick Brown is challenging the incumbent Brad Moeller.

The vice presidential candidates were divided on the merits of travelling around the state at a candidates forum broadcast live on KUOI radio Tuesday evening.

Brown said a top priority for the vice president should be lobbying for student concerns, which means travelling to State Board of Education meetings and to the state legislature. "I take a pro-active approach," Brown said. "I believe in influencing things before they happen."

Moeller said there just isn't enough time or money to take care of the vice-president's responsibilities here at home and still travel. "Unlike Derrick, I won't go to Boise often," Moeller said. "I will stay right here in Moscow to keep our political system working."

Moeller said the vice president must constantly look for people to fill university committee positions. If these positions aren't filled, problems will arise like two years ago when there weren't any students on the parking committee and students had no voice in parking decisions.

Brown contended he would have time to do all the work Moeller mentioned and still be able to lobby UI administrators and the state legislature in Boise.

Rock did answer a few questions as the lone presidential candidate. Rock said his two years on the senate and his work as chair of the finance committee creating the nearly $1 million ASUI budget well-qualifies him for the job of president. A major project for Rock is "to make teacher evaluations available to the students," which he thinks will lend credibility to the process.

Unlike the ASUI, the Graduate and Professional Students Association had two candidates vying for the top spot. Bill Owens is running against Bob Reynolds for the president's position. Both candidates stressed the need for more funding from the ASUI for travel grants.

Reynolds said UI graduates are working on things like cleaning up contaminated soils which are "major contributions to society." Reynolds said it was a shame the researcher could only be given a $125 travel grant to present this to businessmen.

Owens agreed and also mentioned the problem of renting an office at the newly-converted graduate housing at the old Cavanaugh's motel. Owens said no one knows how much the rent on this office will be and this could be a major added expense to GPSA.

GPSA treasurer candidates are Daniel Downs and Steve Faulk.

Downs said graduate students pay $5,000 in general operating costs and he would like to see a lot of that money sent their way to set-up their new office. Faulk said there needs to be an assessment of what ASUI programs graduates want out of so more money can go toward travel grants.

RHA learn to handle rocky situations in Colorado

University of Idaho Residence Hall Association members have chosen to attend the Intermountain Affiliate College and University Residence Halls conference in Colorado that began yesterday.

Fifteen residents of the UI residence halls made a trip to Colorado State University for a conference of the IACURH for this region.

The fifteen students drove to Boise and took a train to the conference in Fort Collins, Colorado. They spent one night as guests of Northern Colorado University residence hall officers before going on to the conference.

The IACURH conference began on Thursday and will conclude tomorrow.

The goal of the conference is to offer residence halls from all over the west region of the IACURH to meet and work together. The regional conference covers the states of Arizona, New Mexico, Utah, Wyoming, Colorado, Montana, Idaho and the Canadian provinces of Alberta and Saskatchewan. Students from all major colleges and universities in these areas will be represented at the conference.

Mary Paradise, UI RHA National Communications Coordinator, was in charge of organizing the UI trip to the IACURH conference. Paradise explained the UI had several goals with their attendance at the meetings.

The first two goals are nominating two UI people for national awards for their work in the RHA and in their supporting roles.

The UI group is nominating Jim Bauer, Director of Residence Life, for Advisor of the Year. Paradise described Bauer as "a leader of RHA that leads in the right directions and helps us with everything."

The UI group is also nominating UI student Amoreena Roberts for Student of the Year. Roberts is currently active in the RHA and has been for the four years she has been at the UI, according to Paradise. Both of these are national awards and will

Attorney to discuss landmark abortion case

By BETSY CARVER

The attorney who successfully argued Roe v. Wade, Sarah Weddington, will address the public in a talk held today at 2:30 p.m., in the University of Idaho College of Law courtroom.

Along with discussing details on her role in the landmark Supreme Court case, Weddington, will also talk about her career following the court case, predictions on the status of Roe v. Wade in the future.

Weddington will also give an account of what has changed in the past few years as a woman's right to privacy has again been a topic in the courtroom.

Weddington became involved in the case as a young lawyer, fresh out of law school, who had a hard time finding a job as a woman.

After her success in the Supreme Court, she went on to work for the Carter Administration dealing with women's issues and affairs. She is now on the law faculty at the University of Texas-Austin.

She has come to UI to promote her new book, A Question of Choice. The book is a first hand account of the Roe v. Wade case and the place that decision has had in American constitutional history.

A reception will be held in the law school lobby for Weddington from 3:30 to 4:30, following her talk. Bookpeople, in downtown Moscow, will then host a booksigning at 4:45.

Betsy Thomas, Director of the UI Women's Center, introduced Weddington when she spoke two years ago on the University of Idaho Campus before the completion of her book.

Thomas said, "She has a personable, bright, talking style. She puts complicated matters in simple terms."

Molly O'Leary, Idaho Women Lawyers President, said of Weddington, "She is a dynamic speaker."

Ten different organizations and individuals, local and National, helped in bringing Weddington to the university for this engagement.

O'Leary encouraged the public to attend Weddington's address as she is an important figure in American constitutional history.

Student victim of knapsack nabbing

One University of Idaho student lost $248 in the ten minutes it took her to buy a pop.

The student arrived to class early in the Administration Building before any of her classmates. She set her backpack on a chair and left the room to get a pop. When she returned, her backpack had disappeared, presumably in the hands of some enterprising crook.

The student lost several textbooks, priceless notes, a calculator, and her purse which contained her checkbook, credit cards, driver's license, and student I.D.

The student cancelled her credit cards and checks and has not yet lost any money from her bank account.

"Backpack theft is pretty common," said Dan Bruce, Campus Liaison Officer at UI. "We expect it to pick up again around dead week."

Bruce said the end of the semester is prime time for backpack thefts. Students' guards are down and they're more concerned with passing chemistry than packing a 60 pound backpack down the hall to the drinking fountain.

The crooks steal the backpacks, and like in a surprise grab-bag, get whatever goodies they find, ranging from cold cash to credit cards to mommy's cookies mailed specifically for dead week studies.

But perhaps the most valuable thing in the backpacks are the textbooks. The robbers slip into line and sell the textbooks back to the U of I Bookstore for cash profit.

Bruce said the police have caught students who have admitted to actively searching for backpacks to steal, and not all backpack thefts are strictly spur-of-the-moment opportunity thefts.

Sleeping in a box gives students insight to homeless plight

By TIM HELMKE
Staff Writer

Those who have a place to sleep braved the elements of a chilly fall night to help out people who are homeless through a program sponsored by some residents of the Wallace Center residence halls.

The "Hear the Homeless" program was put on Wednesday night in the parking lot of Jeff's Foods. Participants, including some students, university faculty, and community members, spent the evening experiencing the life of a homeless person. Cardboard boxes were used for shelter and barrel fires were the only sources of heat.

"This event gives the students an opportunity to see the other side of life for those less fortunate," said David Bayless, resident director of the west wing of Wallace Center.

Students from the west wing of Wallace Center along with their resident advisors directed the program. The Wallace Center residents established several goals for the event.

The most important goal according to Bayless, was to make the campus and community more aware of the homeless problem right here in the Moscow-Pullman area. The YMCA has established a homeless house in Moscow for women and children who have no place to live. There are currently six people using the house and the YMCA is in search of another house to use for homeless men, according to Bayless.

"We want to heighten the awareness of homeless people in our area and help them as it is getting colder and snowy," said Bayless.

A second goal was to raise money for the YMCA and other local charities who aid less fortunate people in Moscow and its surrounding areas. All of the money raised will stay in the Moscow area and some of the money will be used to pay rent on the house the YMCA is using to house the homeless.

The program also gathered food, clothing, and blankets to benefit needy citizens of the Moscow area. "We want to help people to stay fed and warm this winter who are otherwise unable to do it on their own," said Bayless. The gathered goods will be distributed to the local charities which will pass on the goods to needy people.

Shane Harris, President of Willis-Sweet Hall, said the program gave the campus and the community the opportunity to become aware of the problem of homelessness and help find a solution. "As students, we don't always see the people who are in need and this program gave us an opportunity to help them out," said Harris.

The event ran from 5 p.m. on Wednesday evening until 7 a.m. on Thursday morning. People planning to spend at least part of the night outside were taking bids from their halls, houses, businesses, and other people to raise money for the event to donate. These people received certain pledged amounts for each hour they spent as a "homeless person."

The event was considered an overall success by participants because it raised awareness of the homeless people. The event may be continued next year, according to Bayless. "We had a great time helping the homeless and getting their voices heard," said Bayless.

Chris Murray, the Resident Advisor from Chrisman Hall, said that the night started out nice, but the "homeless" ended up getting soaked. "...about midnight we got a little bit of snow and it drizzled all night long," he said.

Murray said they had a lot of participation early in the night and they had many visitors.

Thursday afternoon, it was estimated they received almost $300 in donations from the

Can a UI Tobagoan ride on an Olympic toboggan?

University of Idaho can add another Caribbean nation to the list of countries competing in the bobsled.

The International Bobsledding Federation recently approved the formation of the Trinidad and Tobago team training in the tropics. Two bobsledders are living and working in Moscow.

Gregory Sun, a research assistant for the United States Department of Agriculture's Animal Disease Research Unit at the UI, recently received word that his application to form the Trinidad and Tobago Bobsleigh Federation had been approved. Joining him on the team is Jeff Collins, who works in the UI Student Financial Aid office. Both Trinidadians received B.A. degrees from Idaho and are currently working on masters degrees.

Their goal is to compete in the 1994 Winter Olympics in Lillehammer, Norway, but Sun admits they've got a lot to learn about bobsledding in a fairly short time. Their bobsled education will begin Nov. 16 when Sun begins a week-long bobsled driving class at the Calgary, Canada bobsled course. Sun calls it "bob school." It will be the first time he's ever piloted a bobsled.

Sun admits it's a controversial subject. "There is a lot of talk that some of the countries competing in the bobsled really shouldn't be there," he said.

Also, the International Bobsledding Federation has made several new requirements for teams to meet in order to compete in the Olympics. Teams have to compete in at least five international races at three different tracks and score a minimum of 20 points.

"That makes it difficult for us since there are only two tracks in North America," said Sun. "We'll have to get to Europe for races and that will be expensive." The Trinidadians are hoping to secure sponsorships and donations to fund their effort. Sun estimates it will cost $60,000 to finance a season of racing.

If the Trinidad and Tobago team overcomes the training, competitive and financial obstacles and reaches the '94 Olympics, they will very likely run into two Idaho bobsledding friends. UI employee Chris Stokes is a member of the Jamaican bobsled team, and UI alumnus Trond Knaplund is training for the Norwegian team.

Sun credits Stokes and Knaplund for encouraging his effort to form the Trinidad and Tobago Bobsleigh Federation. Sun traveled with Stokes to Calgary last year, expecting to be a spectator.

"But Trond said I couldn't just stand around and watch, I had to take a run down the hill with him," said Sun. He admits it took him a while to get up the courage, but he finally gave in to his curiosity. Sun said his reaction was, "This is cool. I want to do this!" Now he's getting his wish.

UI professor deals with toxic waste

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

As public concern over toxic waste mounts, scientists and industry are coming up with innovative techniques to solve the problem.

University of Idaho bacteriology professor Don Crawford is one local researcher who has come up with an imaginative way of dealing with this problem.

With grant money from the J.R. Simplot Company, Crawford and his lab assistants have found an alternative method to clean chemically-contaminated soil.

Currently, the most widely-used method of treating such soil is to haul it to an incinerator and have it burned, which is enormously expensive.

What Crawford's assistants have invented is a method of treating contaminated soil with tiny bacteria known as nitroaromatic compounds. These bacteria break down the toxic components of the chemical and render it harmless.

The project is now in its fourth year and Simplot's investment in the work has become quite large.

"This is an on-going project that started about four years ago, and I would say that Simplot has now put about $200,000 or $300,000 into the project," said Crawford.

One of the big contaminants facing industries like Simplot right now is dinoseb, a powerful herbicide that was banned by the Environmental Protection Agency in 1989, according to Don Eckerman, chief of the disposal section in the office of pesticides for the EPA.

Dinoseb was used as a defoliant in potato fields as well as destroying noxious weeds in pea and lentil fields. This chemical posed an especially big problem for Simplot because of their vast number of potato fields due to the company's exclusive contract for McDonald's french fries.

As a result, there are hundreds of acres within Simplot potato fields that are laced with dinoseb.

Crawford and his assistants have gone and hand-sprayed these fields with highly successful results. So successful, in fact, that Crawford and his lab have patented the technology.

"This technology will probably be commercialized by Simplot sometime next year," said Crawford. "That would benefit this university because the school would receive all the royalties from this nitroaromatic use."

Crawford said both parties are benefited by such work because his lab receives corporate research funding and Simplot can market the technology as a product that is available to other industries.

The end result is that Crawford may be seeing more research money coming his way to look at the problem of contaminated soil.

"Simplot has been very pleased with how this has turned out," said Crawford. "This type of work could expand to other projects."

He said that a recent example of this is the research money given to him by the United States Air Force and the EPA to look at soil contaminated with TNT.

"What makes this research attractive to corporations and different agencies is the cost effectiveness," said Crawford. "Using nitroaromatic compounds costs a tenth of what it costs to incinerate soil."

Only one candidate, Jeff D'Almeida, is running for GPSA vice president. D'Almeida said his main goal is to take on projects to reduce the high cost of living here in Moscow. His ideas are to get more publicity out to housing developers about the need for housing in Moscow and also to negotiate with Washington Water Power about cutting user rates at certain hours.

All GPSA candidates said they are willing to continue to fulfill their duties unpaid as opposed to ASUI positions which are paid. While they hope the positions can be paid in the future, their sentiments were that there is not enough money for salaries at the present time.

The ASUI senate candidate hopefuls are high in number this semester, with 13 students contending for only 6 spots. Of the 13 candidates, eight appeared at the forum to answer questions. All the senate candidates got the same number of questions, but they didn't each get to answer every question.

Mike Smith said he has attended past candidate's forums where people listed off their good ideas. "Needless to say, I haven't seen them happen." Smith said he will stick to his projects. "I would like to see an easy, accessible scholarship book given to students every year," Smith said.

Recently appointed senator John Marble said his determination will be an asset to the senate. "When I take on a project it becomes a major commitment in my life." Marble said he is willing to spend around 20 hours a week doing senate work.

Senator Kelly Rush said her work at getting recycling bins in campus buildings and changing the final exam schedule so afternoon classes have afternoon finals and not 7:30 a.m. finals, are reasons for keeping her in office. Rush also wants to work at raising attendance at football games by considering night games and working with alumni and President Zinser to consider tailgate parties.

Senator Jill Presnell said she worked hard at informing the campus about the recently-defeated 1 Percent initiative and at helping disabled students and would continue to work hard if re-elected.

Jon Maughan said he won't quit on a project until the job is done. Maughan said he would make sure the interests of off-campus, residence hall, and Greek students will be fairly represented.

Dave Wilson said he has struggled some in classes and in life but didn't quit when it got tough. He will have the same determination if elected to the senate, according to Wilson.

Tamara Cantrell said her experience on the political concerns board and on speech and debate teams are a major asset. "I like my opinions to be heard and to hear other's opinions," she said.

Senator Sheikh said she has struggled to get more off-campus people involved with the ASUI. She cites her work on a student health insurance committee and on getting a WSU/UI bus shuttle running as major contributions to the senate.

The ASUI and GPSA elections are November 18.

be announced at a later date.

Another goal the UI group has is to meet the other residence hall officers and representatives from all over this region.

"This gives us a chance to share concerns and problems that may be similar to those of other campuses," said Paradise. With meeting new people, there may be new solutions that may solve some of the problems facing the UI campus residence halls.

The UI group had to raise their own money to make this trip to Colorado for the IACURH conference. They received some funding from the university but a major portion came from their fundraisers, according to Paradise.

Gail Hazen, French Hall President, was one of the students who attended this year's conference. "I hope to meet a lot of new people and to learn a lot of new ideas about what can improve student life here at the UI," said Hazen.

Belt said the night was "a lot of fun." The homeless slept in boxes covered with plastic, so some of them stayed dry.

"When we woke up this morning, the sign said 'It's 7 a.m. Great job. We're proud of you,'" said Belt.

Nobel Prize winner to present seminar on his research

Nobel Prize winner Konrad Bloch presents a seminar on his studies of biosynthesis of cholesterol and the metabolism of fatty acids at 12:15 p.m. next Tuesday in room 106 of the University of Idaho Agricultural Science Building.

Bloch was awarded the Nobel Prize in Medicine and Physiology in 1964. He was also honored in 1988 with the Supelco American Oil Chemists Society Research Award for his distinguished service as a lipid researcher.

Born in Neisse, Germany, he began his research in Switzerland with studies on the phospholipid metabolism of tubercle bacteria. His doctor of philosophy degree in biochemistry is from Columbia University. From Columbia, he went to the University of Chicago as a faculty member and from there to Harvard University, where he still works.

The lecture is free and open to the public.

It is sponsored by the UI Department of Bacteriology and the Institute of Molecular and Agricultural Genetic Engineering.

Don't worry about trying to keep up with the Windsors

Sooner or later it was bound to happen. After two children and countless rumors of infidelity, the marriage that was the stuff of television movies and tabloid headlines seems to be headed for heartbreak in a very big way.

Chuck and Di — Britain's answer to Ken and Barbie — are about to announce their separation.

It has been over a decade since everyone who watched the royal wedding shed tears of joy for Prince Charles and Lady Diana Spencer.

Billed as the marriage of the century, the money spent on frills, lace and horse drawn carriages was probably equal to the gross national product of many Third World countries.

Anyone who saw the wedding remembers Charles was decked out in full military costume, while Diana wore a dress with a train longer than a speech in the House of Commons. It was an orgy of decadent and conspicuous consumption. People around the world ate it up and begged for seconds.

Unfortunately for the Prince and Princess of Wales, somewhere between that joyous London day in the summer of 1981 and now, reality kicked in and love died a cold, screaming death.

Unfortunately for everyone else, too many people seem to be spending too much time feeling sorry for the royal couple, or too eager to hear the latest dirt.

Is Diana a shameless hussy and a thorn in the side of the royal family? Or is Charles an unfaithful lecher whose animalistic cravings are an embarrassment to his mum, the Queen?

None of the above.

What are the differences between the separation of Charles and Diana and the separation of two "commoners" who had been married for two years, five years or a decade?

Nothing, really. So why is there so much interest in the plight of Britain's first family?

Vanity.

It may be a function of too much leisure time, too much wealth or too much fluoride in the water, but our Anglo-American society is hopelessly self-reflective. Give us a mirror and we will look long into it, searching for a relevance that does not exist.

In the Prince and Princess of Wales we see either a goal — wealth, luxury, romance — which we seek to attain, or someone so untouchable and remote that we want to drag them down to our level and roll them in the mud.

Both viewpoints are equally despicable. To feed the demand for news on the royal family's latest exploits, a small army of paparazzi stations itself wherever good photographs of the typical lives of untypical people can be snapped.

In the past, pictures of the royal kids taking a royal tinkle in the royal shrubs have been published. Enough is enough.

The separation of Prince Charming and Sleeping Beauty may end in divorce or in reconciliation. Whatever the case, we should forget about the lives of people we cannot affect and worry more about improving the ones we can.

A generation finds power

Every generation gets what the last generation deserved.

The post World War I "Lost Generation" gave way to the flappers of the 1920s, who in turn gave birth to the children of the Great Depression. They stepped aside to the hopeful recipients of the New Deal who won the Great War. That generation settled in only to have the hippies and protesters of the sixties turn their world upside down.

But that's where it ended. The protesters became the corporate raiders of the eighties. The baby boomers of the forties and fifties are now clinging to their jobs as the power structure they put in place mortgages our future. What are we doing about it?

Well, we're growing our hair out, smoking a lot of cigarettes and just sort of taking it all in.

Or at least that's how it seemed until Nov. 3 when the new demo-

Every medium that appealed to the 18 to 24 age bracket launched an all out Choose or Lose, Rock the Vote, no vote no voice assault. And it worked. Eleven million 18 to 24 year old registered voters showed up at the polls. That's two million more than voted last time.

It was another election that

To give blood is to give some life

The scene was straight out of an international terminal at a busy airport.

People were jammed into a small designated area and all available chairs were occupied. While no one was sleeping on the floor like the practice is at some airports when waiting for a flight, individuals who couldn't find a seat wandered aimlessly about the room. Everyone wore glazed looks.

Cartoons chirping from a large TV kept some people occupied, but the majority of people looked at their feet or conversed quietly amongst themselves.

Every few minutes, someone would meander out of an adjoining room and fill out sheets at one of several tables that were set up. In the center of most of these tables was a large plate of cookies. A huge barrel of punch was also available.

The only difference between this scene and a congested airport was that instead of the whole room emptying at once, a single person would walk into the other room when that person's name was called.

What exactly were the people in the chairs waiting for?

They were going to give blood, of course.

On Nov. 5 to Nov. 7, several volunteers got together on the second floor of the University of Idaho Student Union Building in order to coordinate the school's latest blood drive. These volunteers, who represent the American Red Cross, gathered 365 units of blood in three days.

Regardless of the chills that a syringe can inspire, a few hundred individuals chose to give a small part of themselves to possibly save a life.

"Our goal was to get 120 pints a day," said Sean Syverson, a UI student and one of the event's co-chairmen. "We overshot our goal by five pints, so we got 365 pints after the pre-screening process."

My hat is off to all of you people — those of you who took time off from a busy day to unselfishly think about the welfare of someone else.

With a boatload of difficult classes, a job or two and maybe a boyfriend or girlfriend thrown in with the package can make the life of a typical college student seem more like a marathon than a pursuit of a degree. In the midst of trying to achieve 400 tasks simultaneously, it is easy to forget about everyone else and tend instead to your own immediate needs.

Another factor that can steer people clear of any blood drive would be believing the old wife's tale about catching AIDS from a dirty needle. There was actually someone I knew that didn't give somehow kept the candidates downwind of the more potent issues like homelessness, environmental decay and racism. Instead we got the same nebulous rhetoric about the economy and ugly character assassinations.

We were settling into being the generation that inherited the economic backlash of wild eighties prosperity, financed by even wilder debt and living on a gutted planet because there's a race to see who can exploit natural resources fastest and most profitably. At the same time 1992 epitomized the homogenized culture we've become.

Like Nero playing the fiddle while Rome burned, the major media figures of '92 spoke in loud voices with lofty aspirations, but they all echoed the same hollow theme. There was only one message sent by the different shapers of popular opinion.

From Madonna's new book to Sinead O'Connor's tearing up a picture of the Pope, from George Bush's double whammy of calling a group of twentysomething hecklers "draft dodgers," and telling the families of MIAs to "sit down and shut up," right on down to Earnest Elvis Clinton not inhaling and changing his story on his draft status the statement was the same: Look at me. Emphasis on me.

Bush was saying: "Look at me, I'm more important than you."

Clinton was saying: "Look at me, I'm okay. Really."

Madonna was saying: "Look at me, I'm naked."

And Sinead. Instead of singing her song "My Special Child," which is about an abortion and might possibly explain why she tore up a picture of the Pope, she sang a Bob Marley song instead. And then tore up a picture of the Pope.

Instead of seeing it for the pathetic joke of a political statement it was, a lot of Americans went seven kinds of ape. No matter what she thought she said, all Sinead really said was, you guessed it: "Look at me." And I don't think she liked the attention.

Luckily one segment of the population finally found a voice. It finally found an opinion and the time to express it. They contradicted their role models and, right or wrong, sent a unified message for the first time. That message was: "Look at us."

We turned our backs on the politics of the last two generations and ushered in a sweeping change in government. The gloom and doom sayers can join my buddy, the Lummo, and his "I" hat in Brisbane if they don't like it.

If the Clinton administration fails, then that failure could very well strike a blow to the two party system of politics. Other countries have a party which represents practically every special interest within their borders. That seems a lot more logical than having the special interests with the most money controlling the two party candidates and the voters never knowing for sure exactly what interests their candidate represents.

If the Democrats are unified, Clinton should be able to get his proposed measures passed with ease. The best part is that if, in four years, Clinton's administration doesn't get things handled, we'll know exactly who is at fault. And our generation will be back at the polls in force.

blood because he felt he would get the virus from a needle used on someone else.

Just so this hysterical notion is thrown out with that old pair of socks, realize each needle that goes into someone at a blood drive is brand new. A needle is never used twice.

"They use a new needle for every person they stick," said UI blood drive chairman Scott Windley. "When you walk in, they give you a blood packet with the needle sealed to the side. This seal is broken only when you walk through the door to give a unit of blood."

When the AIDS paranoia is factored in with a busy schedule and about a hundred other excuses, it becomes apparent how easily a blood bank could dry up.

Which just makes those who gave blood even more noteworthy.

In this world, there are plenty of arm-chair philosophers who say that people like the kind who give blood can't make a difference anymore. According to this line of thought, the world is all powerful rich men and oil barons. As a result, it is very satisfying to show these people how mistaken they are.

Consider this: If potential blood donors take the words of the world's pessimists at face value alone, there would be no more room for error in this world.

A mother who has complications during childbirth and needs blood would be out of luck. As would be the person whose car is plowed into by a drunk driver and who needs a couple of units of blood to see the next sunrise. Or what about loggers whose chainsaws kick back at them while they are working on a thick tree?

The world's fastest emergency-response team, the most brilliant surgeon and a hospital's best nurses would be rendered useless without the gift of blood.

It is understood that not all people can give blood. There is a vast array of pre-existing medical conditions, such as anemia, and other health and nutrition concerns that make the possibility of giving blood unrealistic.

Barring these kinds of conditions, however, a person should make it a priority to give blood. If not for the life of someone else, then do it as a safeguard for yourself in case you ever need it.

Windley rightly summed up the importance of this.

"It's real important to give blood," he said. "You might end up using it for your own self someday."

Despite the initial unpleasant sensation of a needle going into a vein, remember that this is just temporary. Just think of the person who needs a small part of you because he has been in a car accident and is racing to the hospital in the back of an ambulance.

Your discomfort in giving blood lasts only a few minutes. The person who needs your blood to survive doesn't have this luxury of time.

Will Clinton put his foot down?

Two days after the '92 elections and the Spokesman-Review's headline read: "Clinton set to kick in major changes."

My high school football coach used to say "Shit in one hand and wish in the other. See which is heaviest."

I think Clinton may find that "wishin' ain't doin'," and "build it, and they will come" doesn't always work when "it" is a political platform and "they" is the United States Congress ("All rise!").

Still, Bush reneged on a lot of his '88 promises, distancing both the liberal conservatives (like myself) who believed in protectionism in ecology as well as in trade, ethics in industry as well as in church; and the conservative conservatives who believed in "My country, right or wrong," "No abortion, no time, nowhere, no how!" "Don't let God hear you say that!" and "We got the right to prosper; you got the right to starve!"

I think that President-elect Clinton has some good planks in his platform.

■ Ban assault weapons (whoops ... I don't remember hearing that during the campaign, although I heartily endorse it).

■ Guaranteed abortion rights. No sane person could deny a woman control over her own body, any more than any sane electorate could deny a Native American group the right to govern the pittance of land our government allows them to retain (at least until something else of value shows up on it).

■ National examination of the progress of students and schools. Does this include examination of the ability of teachers, or does the NEA get to continue holding the lid down on that can of worms?

Will the construction unions get their paybacks for all those years of 100 percent PAC financial support, regardless of how the rank and file felt about the candidates, or will their only reward be a slackening in actual persecution?

Raising taxes on those with incomes over $200,000 is something I can see, if the money is used for a purpose like national health care or creation of new jobs, but not just for more handouts to the able-bodied.

He wants to ban off-shore drilling. He backs the Brady Bill ('cause we're the Brady bunch). He wants to spend $8.25 billion on the super collider. Good, good, good. Willingness to fight big oil and the NRA shows more backbone than I expected.

He wants to cut American troops in Europe to 75,000 and increase the number of police officers in this country by 100,000. He supports the death penalty. This last is a decision that may cause friction with some members of this party, but is definitely right on target when it comes to the question of quality of life, and he should get credit for a brave stand.

He wants people to register to vote when they get their drivers' licenses; he wants to cut defense spending by $100 billion by 1997; he wants to scrap Star Wars, but build a new Seawolf submarine. All good plans that show that he's headed in the right direction.

Good ideas on Head Start, college aid and AIDS research (but where's the money coming from, Bill?). He's gonna snub up the rope on China (a recommendation, young cowpoke: Don't be too proud to fly your China plans by Ol' Tricky Dick for a once-over).

He has a lot of good ideas about ecology, and his post-election message shows a lot of caring (and enough common sense to leave some of his goals out of his pre-election platform).

When Congress reads this new, improved program, and when all those waggy-butt smilers pick it up between their teeth and take it into the living room and lay it on their owners' laps and get their heinies hoisted by a size 12 Can he do it?

Will Clinton be the "kick-or" or the "kick-ee"?

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Support the Vandals

Editor;

This Saturday at 1:05 p.m. the Vandals will play their last regular season home football game. Seniors should be honored this weekend for all their outstanding service on the team. They may be part of the Big Sky Championship team.

If we can beat the Montana State University Bobcats this weekend we will be playing for the championship next weekend in Boise. I find it rather disheartening that we haven't had more crowd participation and that attendance has been so poor all season long.

We would like to encourage everyone, students, faculty and staff to attend the game this Saturday. Let's give our Vandals the home field advantage by showing up with signs and banners and making some real noise in the Dome on Saturday.

Again, this is a nationally-ranked championship caliber team. And, as always, students get in free with their Vandal Cards. Please come to the game, it will be one hell of a good time.

Brown supported for VP

Editor;

With the ASUI elections coming up on Nov. 17, I would like to voice my support for Derrick Brown as ASUI Vice President. He has been on the ASUI Senate for one year and has served as pro-tempore for most of that term.

Brown has several things going for him that separates him from the competition. He has extensive budget experience that can only translate into good things for the students, and has written several budget bills for the senate which seem to be in the best interest of the students.

Brown also wants to take the students' concerns to Boise to make sure students start getting some of the things that they want and need. He is the best voice for student concerns.

As a senator, Brown has done a great job in checking with departments on campus to see how they are doing or what they need. He has been up to the communications department in the SUB several times this semester to see the general operations and see what could be done to improve the day to day operations.

I consider Derrick Brown a great choice and someone who will be a student's voice that we desperately need.

Reynolds endorsed for GPSA president

Editor;

An open letter to all graduate students:

The Graduate and Professional Students Association election is Wednesday, Nov. 18. As a graduate student, you will not only be voting for ASUI positions (as will the undergraduates), but you will also be voting for GPSA officers.

The GPSA is the group that represents the interests of graduate students. It provides travel and departmental grants, sponsors the research competition, has given you back your Social Security and has battled long and hard to increase the number of tuition waivers and assistantships available at the University of Idaho. The GPSA works within the ASUI to insure that at least some of the fees you pay support graduate student interests instead of entirely undergrad projects, which are understandably different than ours.

GPSA officers put in a lot of time to effectively run this organization. Unlike ASUI positions, GPSA officers are not paid. The office of president is the most influential GPSA position. The president must be an on-time, well-organized, responsible, concerned, tenacious individual who will act instead of just talk. Fortunately, our past two presidents have been such people.

As a graduate student, you know how hard it is to find time to be involved in all the projects you'd like. IF YOU CAN DO ONLY ONE THING FOR THE GPSA DURING YOUR TIME HERE, PLEASE MAKE THAT ONE THING BE A VOTE FOR BOB REYNOLDS FOR GPSA PRESIDENT.

As a past vice president of GPSA, I have seen the GPSA from both inside and out, and I have seen both candidates for president administer positions within the GPSA. I support Bob Reynolds because I believe that he is the most qualified person for the job. He is the type of person described above. I have seen Bob, in his capacity as Travel Grants Chair, be efficient, involved, fair and willing to listen to student concerns on this busy and sometimes difficult committee. This committee handles by far the majority of GPSA funds, and Bob has managed it in a professional manner. I believe that his experience on this committee, his excellent management of it and his inherent, direct problem solving nature make him well-suited to move on to the office of president.

I urge each of you to vote on the 18th. And for GPSA president, a vote for Bob Reynolds will keep the two-year old GPSA growing and moving forward as our representative body to the UI administration.

Meeting disrupts regular classes

Editor;

On the 9th of Nov., two of my classes were forced to relinquish our regular classroom. It is my understanding that the room was used by legislators to hold some type of meeting. It was also brought to my attention that there are conference rooms in the Student Union Building that are reserved especially and exclusively for administrative use. I find it interesting that these legislators who are supposedly acting on the behalf of students choose to disrupt those very students with little regard for the consequences. One class met in a room that was too large to the extreme for the class size. The other class was the reverse with students sitting on the counters and standing due to lack of seating. The instructors of both of these classes expressed their apologies and frustration to the students. One instructor pointed out how he tries to present the class in a cohesive and consistent manner and that this type of interruption makes that unachievable. This is the second time this semester that this has happened.

The University of Idaho tries to project the image that the students come first, that the priority is first and foremost a quality education. The disrupting of classes for the benefit of politicians does not qualify as "putting the student first." In my opinion tuition and fees go in part toward the lease of the classrooms in which classes are held. To tell students that they can't use their classrooms is in violation of that lease. Does this mean I get a refund (I'm not holding my breath on that one)? If the school administration needs a place to grease the politicians, use a conference room in the SUB (which the students cannot use) or some other empty classroom, such as the inappropriate rooms to which my classes were moved.

The way I see it, I am a paying customer at this institution. Being such I have the right to protest the service that I am getting. Consider this a formal complaint regarding the poor attitude that the University administration is projecting to the students.

—David E. Beaver

Column was misleading

Editor;

In response to Shari Ireton's commentary on HJR Number Four, I would like to offer my observation.

Ireton wrote a misleading article about a proposed amendment to the state constitution. "If you vote Yes on this bill," according to her article, "it denies Native Americans the right to have gambling casinos on Idaho reservations." She goes on to say "this bill would allow only reservations to have gambling." Where did she find this information? Native Americans are not mentioned in the proposed amendment.

I hope Ireton's misleading article, published on election day, didn't confuse voters.

Vandals put it on the line UI faces MSU in crunchtime for title

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

For the second time this season the Idaho Vandals will meet the league leader in defense, yet it's not the same team.

This time around Montana State (2-4 in the Big Sky Conference, 4-5 overall) will bring in the league's best defense to the Kibbie Dome when it squares-off with Idaho (4-1, 7-2) tomorrow at 1:05 p.m.

Under first year head coach Cliff Hysell MSU has climbed to first in the BSC in scoring defense (16.4 points allowed a game) as well as total defense (319.8 yards allowed a game). MSU also leads the BSC in turnover margin as well as being tops in I-AA at plus-2.00 a game.

The Bobcats had a bye last week, but the weekend before shocked Boise State in Bozeman, 17-13.

"I think the week off helped us in that it was our ninth week of playing and health wise we could use the time-off," Hysell said.

Against BSU the MSU defense held the Broncos to just 16 rushing yards which Hysell felt was the key to winning the game.

"Against BSU, after a while they just flat out stopped running the football," Hysell said. "That gave us a chance to win the game because since their running game wasn't going they opted to throw the ball."

BSU did throw for 300 yards, but three interceptions by BSU quarterback Travis Stuart in the fourth quarter sealed BSU's fate. This season the veteran Bobcat defense has allowed just 10 passing touchdowns while leading the league in interceptions with 19.

But Hysell admits that his team hasn't faced a caliber offense like the Vandals.

"Idaho does pose a problem for us because the things you can do against other teams you just can't do against Idaho because they run the ball so well," Hysell said. "And (Idaho quarterback Doug) Nussmeier poses some problems because he has such a quick release and he can also role out and run the ball real well. We've faced nothing like Nussmeier this year."

MSU's defense will be led by its veteran core of defensive backs. Free safety Sean Hill, cornerbacks Ernie Boyd and Reggie Carthon, and safety Morgan Ryan lead a tough secondary. Ryan, a junior, leads the team with five interceptions on the season and has totaled 16 in his three years at MSU.

NAU comes from behind, destroys UI

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

The Idaho Vandal volleyball team self-destructed in the fourth and fifth games of last night's match and in doing so all but destroyed their chances of winning the Big Sky Conference regular season title.

The Vandals played the first half of game one against the Northern Arizona Lumberjacks to near perfection, but faltered towards the end to hang on for a 15-10 win. After splitting games two and three, 13-15 and 15-10, Idaho was blown out of the water in games four and five, losing 5-15, 6-15 in front of 422 fans in Memorial Gym.

After watching his team practically give away the last two games, Idaho head coach Tom Hilbert led his team off the court and didn't return with them for about 15 minutes. On return, a furious Hilbert had little to say about the match.

"We didn't pass well and that's all I have to say," Hilbert said.

In game one, Idaho looked like a team that wanted to avenge an early season five-game loss to NAU. The Vandals blasted out to a 12-3 lead on strong play by middle blocker Brittany Van Haverbeke, but NAU fought back to 12-8 before Idaho could finish the game off. NAU head coach Kim Hudson noted that although her team had lost four straight league games, a loss against Idaho wouldn't have knocked the 'Jacks out of the conference tournament.

"It's never cinched who's going to the tournament," Hudson said. "We'd have had to lose the remaining three to get knocked out."

In game two the score saw-sawed back and forth. NAU jumped out to an 8-5 lead, but Idaho came right back to take a 13-11 lead on two aces by Idaho outside hitter Dee Porter. But NAU star Angel Leath served three straight points and on game point Idaho faltered with four hits to give game two to the 'Jacks.

"I'm really happy about the way we played tonight," Hudson said. "They (NAU) looked like they were enjoying themselves the last four games. I'm real pleased about that."

After never being threatened in game three, Idaho came out in game four flat. Errors plagued Idaho as NAU jumped out to an 11-4 lead, and then Leath served three straight aces to put the game out of reach. Leath finished with a match-high seven service aces.

"Idaho is a good team," Hudson said. "Tonight they weren't passing well so when their passing breaks down it's hard for them to execute in the middle where they're real lethal."

Game five was even worse for Idaho as they fell behind quickly 13-1 and never put anything together.

Say it ain't so, Joe

The Washington Huskies are not only looking at not winning the 1993 national championship, but quite possibly forfeiting all eight of their wins this season due to an NCAA violation.

One Dawg's act of seeing too much green may lead to "the big purple" seeing red.

On November 4 it was supposedly learned by both UW head coach Don James and athletic director Barbara Hedges that quarterback Billy Joe Hobert had received $50,000 in loans from a nuclear engineer in Idaho Falls. The money was swallowed up in three months as Hobert used the cash to buy guns, a stereo, cars, pay bills, and for various entertainment.

Yesterday the Pac-10 Conference committee met to decide the fate of both the No.

COMMENTARY

6 Huskies and of Hobert. A decision concerning both will be made this Sunday and it will be determined if the junior should be suspended for just the rest of the year (which includes games vs. Oregon State, at Washington State, and a bowl game) or should he also forfeit his remaining year of eligibility? If Hobert were to lose his last possible year as a Husky, he'd enter the NFL draft and be a possible fifth to seventh round pick.

But the biggest decision will be should UW forfeit all of their eight wins on the season in which Hobert played in every one. If the athletic department or coaching staff knew about the loans, then for the sake of justice to not only the other universities around the country, but to those students athletes, UW should forfeit.

If the Huskies do forfeit their eight wins on the season then the best they'll finish the year is 2-9, considering they lost last week to Arizona 16-3 and they'll be favored over OSU and WSU. But by forfeiting UW will be setting a precedent that this type of action, no matter how big the program is, is not the direction that the NCAA wants collegiate football heading. In the past five years football programs such as the University of Houston, Southern Methodist University, Texas A&M, and most recently, allegations against Auburn are making the "bigger" college football schools look more like UNLV, Kentucky and Syracuse have in basketball.

Although the sting will hurt immensely if this year's UW team has to give up a possible history making third-straight Rose Bowl victory, but as Bart Wright wrote in a recent column in The Spokesman Review:

"If games aren't forfeited, the discussion of windfall bowl profits and the precedent of using school officials who don't know details of rules violations as a defense will continue long after Don James and Barbara Hedges have retired from their present occupations."

No one, including boosters, alumni, fans or students like to see events like this unfold. College athletes often get confused about where the overlap exists with events that concern their sporting life and personal life. Until the NCAA can clearly state what is legal for a student athlete to do in terms of benefits and what is illegal, the future shows more things like this happening. But if UW forfeit's their 1992 wins, it is doubtful that this exact scenario will take place again.

And that will make program's throughout the country not only stronger, but more respectable as well.

UI seniors hope for one last hurrah in final home match

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

With potentially only one home match left in their respective careers, University of Idaho volleyball players Heather McEwen and Amie Hanks would like to go out with a measure of redemption.

This should come tomorrow night against the Weber State Wildcats.

After last night's disappointing 10-15, 15-13, 15-10, 6-15, 6-15 loss to Northern Arizona University, which effectively dropped Idaho out of contention for the regular-season title, all Vandal eyes will be very focused on tomorrow's match.

Despite the loss to NAU, the Vandals are assured of a conference tournament berth. Most likely, the Vandals will be traveling to Missoula for the Nov. 27-28 tournament because the Montana Grizzlies have almost wrapped up first place.

But for now, Idaho coach Tom Hilbert is worried about the varied look that Weber can present his squad.

"They are probably the most difficult Big Sky team to prepare for," said Hilbert whose Vandals are now 8-3 in league and 19-6 overall. "They show you a lot of different looks, and so they can mess you up."

Hilbert said that Weber St. has a real prize in junior middle blocker Alison Borgman. "She has played very well against us in the past," said Hilbert.

Idaho's coach is hoping that the Vandals do not overlook the Wildcats.

"I certainly hope not," said Hilbert in response to questions of being emotionally and physically fatigued in facing Weber St. "It will potentially be the last home match for Heather and Amie, so this is an important match."

Hanks has 987 assists for the year and could pass Kris Little for fifth place on the single-season list. With nearly 1,900 career assists, Hanks is secured at third place on the Vandal career list for assists.

McEwen, meanwhile, has more than 850 career kills and could catch '84 graduate Julie Holsinger for sixth place on the all-time Vandal kill list.

The two seniors aren't the only players worthy of merit. As of the NAU match, junior middle blocker Nancy Wicks was leading both the team and the conference in hitting percentage with a .335 average. Also, with a recent 24-dig effort against Washington St., Dee Porter fell just six short of setting an all-time Vandal record.

The match against the Wildcats will begin at 7:30 p.m.

Striders run into finale well-rested

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

The Idaho men's and women's cross country teams will be in Salt Lake City tomorrow for the Big Sky Conference Cross Country Championships. Along with the seven other Big Sky teams, Idaho will be joined by all nine Western Athletic Conference schools and some independents.

Scott Lorek, head coach for the women's team, said he's looking forward to the 5,000 meter race and is hoping that his team can place in the top 10 of the 22 schools running.

"I do think we're going to run real well," Lorek said. "I think the team is up for the best race of the year."

Although the Idaho striders ran well most of the year, the strong favorite going into tomorrow's race will be Northern Arizona. Since the Lady Lumberjacks joined the conference in cross country in 1987, they have won the championship every year. This year appears to be no different as the only school who'll give them some tough competition will be Brigham Young University and maybe the University of Colorado.

"What would bring a smile to my face is seeing three girls on our team finish the race under 19 minutes," Lorek said. "But I think all seven of them will run well."

Although NAU is the favorite, the other seven conference spots may be up in the air. Idaho could wind up as low as seventh and still only be a few points away from second place.

"The Big Sky is so balanced this year that we could finish anywhere from second to seventh," Lorek said. "We could wind up seventh place and be only 15 points out of second. I envision this being the closest race team-points wise since I've been here."

Helping out the striders will be that they've had the past two without a race. Last week Lorek had the runners all compete in a one mile time trial and the women's times were encouraging.

"We ran our time trials last week and they were excellent," Lorek said. "Everyone who returned from last year's team had a time of at least 10 seconds faster than last year."

Idaho will be led by: Robin Betz, Tara Edwards, Angie Falk, Tara Hamilton, Kerry Huss, Lauren Jefferson, and Robyn Slate. With Falk being the only senior on the team, Lorek is optimistic about next year if things don't finish well tomorrow.

"We need another year," Lorek said. "I think next year if things go well we'll be an outstanding team."

An external factor that may play a part in tomorrow's race is the weather. Lorek said that Salt Lake has been much like Moscow the past couple days which may help some teams towards the bottom of the pack.

Junior Robin Betz will try to help the Vandals run to a strong finish in the conference finals tomorrow in Salt Lake City.

UI alumnus looks back

By WILLIAM MCGOWAN

Enrichment! That's the bottom line for students engrossed in the "university experience."

Your objective: enhancement of your life's quality, intensification of your ability to succeed in your career, a compliment to classroom lectures and texts which enrich you and maximizing your potential.

To reach your goals, pursuit of available options is important. One such option is as a spectator or participant in Idaho's wide ranging athletic program. The menu is substantial: volleyball, tennis, basketball, cross country, football, basketball, golf and track and field.

The Greek civilization is admired and respected around the world generations after its zenith. In theatre, philosophy, art, medicine, architecture, political science and ethics it excelled. It also introduced the Olympic games! Why? The Greeks, very much aware of enrichment of their lives, made united activity essential.

Citizens of ancient Greece, unable to physically participate in the Games, did so as spectators to enable them to share with fellow citizens the glories of victory to bond them in accomplishing a common goal.

Idaho students can emulate the ancient Greeks. You too can share with your classmates the rich color, rousing sound and the nailbiting excitement of Vandal competition against athletes from peer universities.

But only if you decide to enrich your "university experience" as part of the action at Vandal competitions. The final football game of the season tomorrow brings Montana State to the Kibbie Dome to meet the Vandals. Your classmates on the Idaho roster have given of themselves to enable you to share an exciting afternoon of entertainment.

Please accept the suggestion of a graying alumnus from half a century ago: twenty years hence you will recall the traditions of Idaho athletic competition as vividly as any other from your "university experience." Enrichment will be your reward.

Editor's note: William McGowan was Sports Editor at the Argonaut in 1938 and '39. He currently resides in Moscow.

'Patchwork' playing at Collette

Ariana Burns has been working on her latest play since last May and now "Patchwork" is ready for its first run at the Jean Collette Theatre. This Sunday at 2 p.m. a dramatic reading of Burns' play will be performed.

"Patchwork" tells three separate, yet intertwined, stories about six uniquely individual characters as they try to relate to each other while living with the reality of AIDS.

According to Burns, the play is set up similar to a soap opera in that the three stories "hop back and forth," from scene to scene.

"A soap opera is a bad example, but it's the only way I can describe the way the play will be performed," Burns said.

The presentation will feature actors from the community, rather than drama students. The actors will work through the script with minimal lighting and props.

The characters include a stand-up comic portrayed by Meg Gibson, an old woman portrayed by Laurie Cartright, a young child portrayed by Don Nelson, a woman named Gwen portrayed by feather, a man named Bill by Brian Boyd and Curtis played by Gary Carver.

The piece was commissioned by the Palouse AIDS Network. The Network approached Burns to write a play about AIDS that "wasn't a stereotypical story," but one that educated.

"It's not a stereotypical story, like 'just gays get AIDS,' everyone can get it," Burns said.

Currently, Burns and the Palouse AIDS Network are working with Bruce Pittman, University of Idaho's Dean of Advisory Services, to perform the show for living groups and other campus organizations.

"We want to have the show move around the Palouse area and have different living groups come and watch it," Burns said.

The UI Theatre Department is striving to showcase the work of its students, but "especially so with this production." Burns is a recent graduate of UI and the performance will be the debut of her second play.

Burns was a finalist in the American College Theatre Playwright Competition two years ago with her first play, "Stick In The Spoke," and has continued to be involved in the Collette Theatre and the Moscow Community Theatre.

The presentation of "Patchwork" will also be performed in January as a benefit for the Palouse AIDS Network. The performance on Sunday is free and open to the public.

Cybernetics latest thrust of sci-fi...

UI professor examines the 'godfather' of cyberpunk

By JACKIE WOODS
Staff Writer

Enjoy watching the man-computer character in the Terminator movies? If so, pick up a cyberpunk novel for some high intensity, high energy, futuristic reading.

"Cyberpunk is science fiction set in the near future. It is a dingy view of the future and it sort of works as a warning about where we are going to go if we're not careful," explained Lance Olsen, an associate professor of English and creative writing at the University of Idaho.

The "Cyberpunk End of the Millennium Party," held Tuesday night at BookPeople in Moscow, was a book signing party for Olsen's latest book entitled William Gibson. Olsen's book is a critical novel about Gibson's contributions and influence on the cyberpunk movement.

"William Gibson is sort of the 'godfather' of cyberpunk," said Olsen. "He's the one who came out with this book called Neuromancer in 1984 and started the whole movement."

These novels often refer to humans merging with computers, said Olsen. 'Cyber' refers to cybernetics, or the computer part, while 'punk' actually comes out of the rock'n'roll movement of the same name.

Olsen said the cyberpunk movement bares the same relationship to science fiction that punk bares to rock'n'roll. During the late 1970s, punk came in and shook up a somewhat mellow rock'n'roll scene.

"In the same way, cyberpunk came along to a science fiction genre, that was really very predictable and had lost a lot of its reason for existence, and revitalized it by bringing in these near future worlds," said Olsen. "It has a grungy sense of what the future is going to be rather than a utopian view where we don't have to worry about anything."

These books brought a lot of literary techniques to science fiction writing that created a sense of artistry, said Olsen. He believes cyberpunk has helped bring sci-fi novels into the mainstream of contemporary fiction.

"It's real literary, it's real experimental, and it's really well written," said Olsen. "It has all the intensity of the Blade Runner and Terminator movies, with all the visual aids done in words instead of on the screen."

UI student Mark Coen agrees, "The thing I like about (cyberpunk) is it's very fast paced, visually orientated writing. It lets the reader actually become a part of the story because of the way it is geared."

Coen, an English creative writing major, said he enjoyed reading science fiction and fantasy novels as a child. When he started college, Coen found himself drawn more to the literary type science fiction books of cyberpunk.

"It's very high tech, but it is all really based on stuff that is tangible, that can be reached from the point we are at right now," said Coen.

Olsen believes the cyberpunk genre was very much a student movement. He was first introduced to these futuristic novels by his students in 1984. They encouraged Olsen to read these new and different works.

"A lot of books in academia come from the top down, where professors read it, think it's a really important piece of literature, and then teach it to their students," said Olsen. "Cyberpunk is the kind of work that started with a real cult following in the student population."

BookPeople also had Olsen's novel Live From Earth available at the book signing party. Published in 1991, Olsen said the book is a love story about a woman and her dead husband.

"It's kind of a fantasy novel that explores the idea of death and trying to cope with the loss of a loved one," explained Olsen.

He said the book is a comedy, and not a dark story, despite the unusual topic matter. Besides William Gibson, Olsen has also written two other critical books on contemporary literature.

Olsen, who has worked as a UI professor for three years, said he really enjoys both research and teaching.

"My writing feeds my teaching...and my teaching feeds my writing," said Olsen.

ASUI playing three cult classics

ASUI GUEST COMMENTARY
BY WADE ALONZA

Well, the ASUI film series this year, in case you haven't noticed, has been a bit slow in getting off the ground. I took on the position of film chair late in the semester and have been devoting most of my energy and the energy of my faithful film committee to getting geared up and ready for next semester. Nevertheless, we've managed to hunt down three classic (in quite a few circles) short films for your pleasure. (No "thanks" necessary I'm that kind of guy).

This Saturday, beginning at 7 p.m., in the SUB Borah Theatre we will present the movie "Wizards" accompanied by two short films taken from Jim Henson's "Story Teller Series."

"Wizards" is indeed a lesser cult classic. It's a full-length animated film that's set a few hundred years after the last and most devastating nuclear war. The mythical races awake from their long sleep to reclaim the earth. The queen fairy soon gives birth to twin wizard sons, who are completely Yin and Yang, the evil Black Wolf and the cantankerous Avatar. The film is about cruel and torturous Black Wolf's attempt to conquer the world in a Hitler-esque fashion. He digs up twentieth century technology to inspire his demon hordes and armies of mutants. "Wizards" is an eclectic story with a wide range of moods and animation styles. Some parts of the story are black, and other parts are just full of giggles. The characters include an ex-assassin-turned-pacifist, a Conan-like elven warrior and a bodaciously endowed fairy princess. Each are animated in different styles as well. For those that have never seen "Wizards" don't expect a Disney story or a Warner Brother cartoon. It is more closely related to the animated film "Heavy Metal."

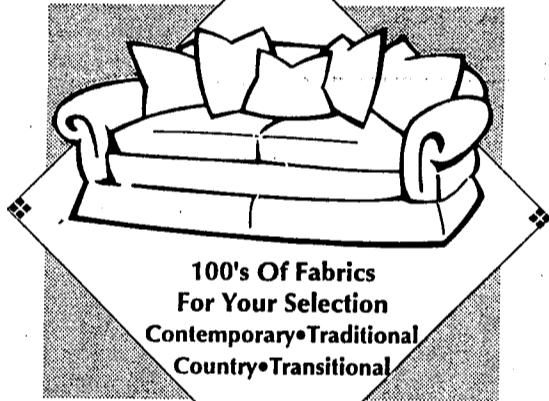

The other half of the ASUI program features two films that are not well known. In fact, I have only seen them available in Australia on video. They are two selections from Jim Henson's "Story Teller Series" (sorry, no Cookie Monster here). Both of these forty minute films are taken from the vast storehouse of European folk tales. Let me start by saying that these films are BRILLIANCE INCARNATE!!! They are elegantly and masterfully narrated by Johnathon Hurt. He tells the stories with state of the art animatronic technology using Puppets from Henson's Creature Shop.

The first story is about a weary soldier returning home from a battle, hungry and poor. Along the way he meets several decrepit peasants on the road and shares what meager rations he has with them. Each of them in turn gives him a mysterious and magical gift. The most curious of these is a magical sack. I can't say anymore because it would give the story away. I will say, however, that the soldier comes up with some (ahem) innovative uses for the magical sack.

The second film of this series is about a couple, who, in the past, have tried every knuckleheaded trick to have a baby but just couldn't manage it. Finally the wife wishes so hard to have a baby that she decides she would even settle for something as ugly as a hedgehog. I'll leave it to the audience to guess what happens.

I would urge everyone to come and see these two films, because you'll probably never get another chance to see them in a theatre again. The fact that the titles sound unfamiliar should not prevent people from viewing them. All three films are highly entertaining and worth seeing, and it will only cost one thin dollar for undergrads with a valid I.D. card and two dollars for everyone else. So come in out of the cold because I hope to see everyone there.

ASUI on shopping spree for talent

By JODY DECKER
Contributing Writer

Students may see some changes in ASUI Productions as a result of a three day conference in Portland, Ore.

The National Association for Campus Activities had its Pacific Northwest Regional Conference Nov. 5-7, and three students from the University of Idaho attended. ASUI program coordinator, Jan Abramson, ASUI student programs manager, Becky King, and ASUI films chair, Wade Alonzo, all attended the conference.

Abramson said the conference, among other things, was entertaining. "It was a virtual shopping market for talent," Abramson said. She said several acts came to the conference, performed, and tried to sell their respective talents to different schools.

Averson said, however, that their was more accomplished at the conference then just looking at prospective acts. "It's a good place to network...you share ideas. Plus there were educational type sessions," explained Abramson. The education sessions discussed different ways to promote activities and ways to organize committees.

One of the new ideas Abramson took home with her from the conference was the idea of putting posters up around the Vandal Cafe the day of a Coffeehouse production. She said the poster would say something about the performance and the free coffee being offered.

Some of the possible acts UI students can expect to see from this conference could include a lecturer who speaks about Edgar Allen Poe dressed up like him. Another possible act would be the Michael Gray Quartet, who describe themselves as an "in your face guitar group."

ASUI hasn't decided concretely on any of the acts they saw at the conference, but the three agreed that the conference definitely gave them several new options.

Bon Jovi's latest album is something to consider

By Jay Forman
Staff Writer

It was the fall of 1987 when Bon Jovi released the multi-platinum album Slippery When Wet. At the time, they had not yet climbed to the top of the pop charts, and they had not yet released a disappointing follow-up album called New Jersey.

In 1987, Bon Jovi was still a rock band.

In 1992, they are still a rock band, but a rock band with a lot more fans and a record company counting on them to come through with a new album called Keep The Faith.

After the hoopla of a "break-up" and a solo album from the top two people in the band, namely Bon Jovi's Blaze of Glory and guitarist Richie Sambora's Stranger in This Town, Bon Jovi is finally back.

Do we care?

Well, the record is good. It's not great by any means, however. What made good Bon Jovi music on records such as Slippery and the earlier records (7800 Farenheit, etc.) was the simple fact that the music was planned, but it was fun rock and roll. Let's face it; "You Give Love A Bad Name" is always going to be a sing along song that will be remembered whether we like it or not.

There are a few songs like that on the new album, namely "Fear" and "I'll Sleep When I'm Dead." These songs showcase the band, which is Jovi, Sambora, David Bryan, Tico Torres, and Alec John Such-- at their finest moments. The music is tight, and straight ahead.

Other songs on this record however, miss the mark.

The first single is called "Keep the Faith," and UI senior Rachel Reese put it as simply as possible when she said "This song is terrible," after she said, "He (Bon Jovi) cut his hair!"

There are many reasons that this album isn't stellar, and one could be the plain fact that they've tried too hard to make this album a classic. There's a nine minute-plus opus called "Dry County" and to be honest, it harkens back to another "rocker" from New Jersey, Bruce Springsteen. Springsteen created a classic album in Born In The U.S.A. and the reason that it was classic is because it wasn't supposed to be.

It seems that lately the albums that are eagerly awaited disapoint, and the albums that no one hears about until they come out become million sellers.

This album will do fine, because there are plenty of teenagers out there, but Bon Jovi will never return to what they were in 1987 until they loosen up and play the kind of music that got them there-- again.

Time has stood still for the barber shop on Main Street

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

Time has stood still in the small barber shop on Main Street where the blue and red barber pole rotates slowly in the display window.

Peeking in the window, you will see an occupied chair over which a small elderly man is hovering.

Meet Clarence Johnson.

It was in 1929 at the age of 17 that Clarence first started cutting hair. At this time, he was enrolled in a year-long program at a barber school. Upon completing the course, he opened his own shop in Troy, Idaho, and a few years later, he moved his operation to Yakima, Wash. It was in 1934 that Clarence moved to Moscow. He has called it home ever since.

His first Moscow shop was located on Second Street where he was helped by his brother. Sitting right next door was a beauty parlor operated by the two men's sister. Clarence and his brother operated the barber shop for 27 years before a pair of fires destroyed almost the entire block.

"The first fire happened on Christmas Eve in 1961, and it burned all the shops across the street from me," said Clarence. "The second fire was right around New Year's Day, and it took care of my shop."

He said that foul play wasn't suspected in either fire, but he was still without a shop, so in 1968, he opened a tiny shop directly adjacent to the Kenworthy Theatre.

For the last 24 years, he has cut hair for anybody willing to wait because Clarence doesn't take appointments. In fact, he doesn't even have a phone.

"I don't believe in appointments," he said. "I run a regular barber shop where you walk in and have a haircut. Sometimes, you may have to wait in one of the chairs, but if you are patient, I will get to you."

He is referring to the five chairs that hug the wall facing the barber chair. As Clarence works on his first customer on one particular morning, a man walks in and takes a seat in one of these chairs.

He begins a conversation with Clarence's current customer, Marvin.

"I'm going to be a grandpa,

Marvin," says the man.

He waits for a response and upon a long interval of silence, he figures out the problem.

"Marvin, do you have your hearing aid in?" asks the man. Still no answer.

At about this time, Marvin looked up at the wall and noticed a sign that read "Uff da." He furrowed his brow and asked Clarence what the sign meant.

Before Clarence had a chance to respond, Marvin formulated his own answer.

"Does it mean something about what's going on in the world and things not being so good?" said Marvin, nodding as if answering his own question.

Wearing a simple yellow tie, glasses and a blue work coat, Clarence smiled and responded affirmatively with a nod of his head. Marvin appears satisfied and lets Clarence resume the haircut.

Haircuts are the only work done by Clarence, and he describes most of his haircuts as the "high and tight" variety. He still attracts a number of ROTC students from the University of Idaho in addition to his normal clientele of elderly men and women.

One of these students is David Moritz, a senior UI student, who swears by Clarence. Moritz said he started going to Clarence because of what he felt was an assembly-line approach used by some beauty parlors here in town.

"Those places herd you in and out because they stress quantity over quality," said Moritz. "Your $7 with Clarence is well worth it."

The only drawback to Clarence is the amount of time that a haircut takes. Moritz said that a haircut can take a while, but he quickly defended the reason to why Clarence takes as long as he does.

"He may take a long time, but that is part of the guy's charm," said Moritz. "He not only talks to you while you're in the shop, but he also remembers you on a first-name basis."

Jim Ingebritsen, who grew up in Moscow and now lives in Spokane, agreed.

"He could pick and poke at your hair for half an hour or more," said Ingebritsen with a laugh. "He is just a heck of a nice guy who cares about his customers and remembers them by name."

Clarence, however, doesn't confine his work just to the Main St. store. He said he is also asked by several local nursing homes to cut hair for the men and women living there.

He said that in all his years of business, his barber shop and its small radio have been home to many significant historical events.

He most vividly recalls the 1963 day on which President John F. Kennedy was assassinated in Dallas.

"I remember that I was cutting someone's hair, and we heard President Kennedy had been assassinated," he said. "It didn't sound serious at first, but then we found out that he had died. All the guys in my shop gathered around the radio and listened until we found out the rest of the news."

Clarence said this was one of the few days he closed the shop early.

"Kennedy getting shot was like a ship losing its rudder," said Clarence with sad resignation.

As the years have passed, the talking and laughter which once rang out in the shop have largely disappeared. Clarence said that most young men now go to salons or beauty parlors instead of barber shops.

"All the college guys go to beauty parlors now, and the number of barber shops in this town has gone from 10 down to four," said Johnson.

Moritz and Ingebritsen sadly recognize that these old-fashioned barber shops are no longer the gathering places they once were. They also know that when these shops are lost, a piece of Americana will be gone forever.

"It will be sad to see this type of place go," said Ingebritsen. "It was a gathering place where people would carry on the gossip, and if the barber didn't know the answer to a question, then nobody would."

Moritz said these places are what small towns are all about.

"There should always be a place for someone like Clarence to cut your hair," said Moritz.

In spite of the melancholy predictions, Clarence said he is doing just fine.

"I still have plenty of customers, so I'm not feeling sorry for myself," he said.

Over the years, Clarence said he has raised his prices only when necessary. Since the World War II era, his price has only increased a few times, and it now stands at an affordable $7.

Clarence keeps his doors open from 8 a.m. to 4 p.m. every Tuesday through Saturday. His shop isn't hard to find. Just find the barber pole on Main Street, and peer inside the window until you locate the sign representing a 63-year-old business philosophy — "Just Haircuts."

Campbell juggling three lives gracefully

By KARIN MASON
Staff Writer

Chris Campbell gracefully juggles three different lives. She is a cheerleader, sorority member and college student.

The 18-year-old freshman has been a cheerleader since junior high school in her home town of Kuna, Idaho. After traveling to Moscow last April, Campbell tried out for the University of Idaho squad. She was chosen out of 11 candidates to be one of six cheerleaders that made the squad.

"I came up for the weekend for tryouts. I had never been to Moscow so I tried out and toured the campus also...I did the whole sha-bang. I found out Sunday evening that I had made it," she said.

After arriving in Moscow ready for the fall semester, Campbell had to adjust.

"It's hard getting used to. I have enough time usually, but it's tough to want to start studying after classes and practice all day," Campbell said. "Being a freshman, I'm not used to doing that much studying, but I know what I have to do and I'm getting used to it."

She's not fooling around when she says she knows what she has to do. Campbell has wasted no time in already setting her goals for the future, and in the meantime has also defeated the typical "airhead" stereotype usually associated with cheerleaders.

"I want to major in communications/public relations. I also want to minor in German so I can work in Germany and specialize in international public relations," she said.

Another obstacle this Gamma Phi Beta member faces is making time for her sorority as well. Campbell says it's like living in two different worlds.

"To cheerleaders, cheerleading is the most important thing. To the house members, the house is the most important thing. To me, they are both equally important. It's hard to make choices because sometimes I miss out on both ends," she said.

But, she's not missing out on making friends. She has the whole sorority and the cheerleading squad as well.

Campbell says of the squad, "Pretty much everyone gets along. If people are unhappy or have a problem, they'll talk about it or just let it slide. We don't have many problems considering the amount of time we spend together."

The amount of time they do spend together adds up to quite a bit. The squad practices Monday, Wednesday and Friday from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m. Tuesday and Thursday practices from 3:30 to 5:30 p.m. are optional, but she said everyone usually shows up. On top of that, they have to condition in the morning for at least an hour three times a week doing either aerobics or lifting, but they do earn a credit for that.

—Chris Campbell
UI Cheerleader

Campbell said that despite what people may think, she doesn't take on all this work and responsibility to go out there and look cute in front of everyone.

"It's like a rush. We're part of a team...at the football games, we feel it when they win and we feel it when they lose," she said. "You really have to love it to want to do it. At Kuna, it was looked down upon so I've never thought of it as a popularity thing...especially up here because it takes so much time."

She doesn't even get too nervous anymore before a game.

"I've done it for so many years I know how to hide it. I learned it looks better to look relaxed."

And, if there's one thing Campbell has learned from all of this, "People are people, you just have to be yourself. You have to make yourself happy before you can make anyone else happy."

Campbell and the rest of the UI Cheerleading squad will be cheering tomorrow at UI's last regular season home football game. The game begins at 1:05 p.m. in the Kibbie Dome.

"We have a solid group in the backfield," Hysell said. "I sort of inherited a good secondary when I came here."

Hysell said that what has kept MSU in games this year has been the fact that it can hang onto the ball while forcing other teams to turn it over. In three of the Bobcats four losses, though, MSU should have come out on top. The losses include a three pointer to Sacramento State, a four point loss to Northern Arizona, and, after leading 17-0 at halftime, a 23-17 heartbreaker to Eastern Washington.

"We could very well have won those games," Hysell said. "The loss to EWU was one where we just couldn't get over the hump at that point. But considering what we have, a freshman starting at running back (Dawson Williams) and a starting freshman quarterback (Chad Mayer), I haven't been too concerned with the wins and the losses this season."

On offense the Bobcats have more than struggled. MSU ranks last in the BSC in yards per game (240 yards), yards per play (3.5 yards) and total yards (2,160 on the year). On the flip side Idaho is first in all three with 486.8, 6.3 and 4,381 respectively. Therefore Hysell will look to his defense to slow down the Vandals and hope his offense clicks enough to put some points on the board.

"With the team that we have we can't get into a scoring contest with them (Idaho)," Hysell said. "I don't think we can point at one thing that'll help us in the game, but we will have to play well on defense."

IDAHO INFO— The game is a must win for the Vandals if they wish to stay in the hunt to win the Big Sky title outright. With a loss to MSU, Idaho will need to pray that Boise State will have beaten Eastern Washington so Idaho can play BSU for the title next weekend in Boise...Last year Idaho blasted MSU in Bozeman 48-14. In that game Nussmeier went 28-for-43 for 396 yards and threw five touchdown passes.
