Two UI fraternities sanctioned for hazing violations

By TIM HELMKE
Staff Writer

Two University of Idaho fraternities have been penalized for participating in hazing activities, with one receiving the harshest sanction the university can hand down.

Phi Delta Theta has been stripped of their recognition by the university indefinitely after allegations surfaced on hazing. They have been found to have engaged in placing "physical, mental, and emotional abuse on pledges." The abuse included paddling of pledges by members and verbal abuse.

Beta Theta Pi has also been put on probation until May after hazing was found to have occurred there as well. The occurrences involved in this case involved pledge sleep deprivation and house cleaning duties given to pledges. Some felt that these actions are not hazing, but according to the university guidelines they are.

The action taken against the Beta's is not as strict as the one placed on the Phi Delt's.

The Phi Delt's incidents have been occurring for more than a year according to Bruce Pitman, UI Dean of Student Services. Pitman said that the incidents involving the Phi Delt's include complaints of parties getting out of control and noise complaints.

"The Chapter is not being penalized for hazing only, it covers a broad range of issues," said Pitman.

The incidents of hazing at the Phi Delt's occurred during the last part of August and early September but went unreported for several weeks. After the allegations were made, an investigation by the InterFraternity Council Tribunal was made. These investigations showed that the incidents involving hazing did actually occur and the sanctions by IFC and the university were then handed down.

Hal Godwin, vice president for student affairs, said the Chapter has been uncooperative until now when it comes to making positive changes. "Until now, this Chapter has been irresponsible and unresponsive to an effort to create positive change

Delta Tau Delta released from probation

By TIM HELMKE

Delta Tau Delta fraternity has been released from their probation here at the University of Idaho, UI administration announced Tuesday.

The fraternity had been placed on two-year probation after publishing a dance booklet which included sexist, racist and off-color text and pictures. The university had outlined a series of conditions to be met during the probation. These conditions included: creating an alumni/university control board, hiring of a live-in adviser, planning and executing a fund-raiser to help Alternatives to Violence, having contacts with the university who are advocates of social justice issues, and the planning and funding of two major campus programs on cultural diversity and respect for human beings.

Chapter members have also developed a set of sanctions which are self-imposed in response to public outrage sparked by the booklet for the Russian Ball, an annual Delt event.

Hal Godwin, UI vice president for student affairs, said the chapter has met all of the requirements of the probation and will be reinstated. All participants in the UI Greek system

As the alumni have become more aware of the seriousness of the situation, they have taken steps which, if successful, will contribute to a positive resolution," said Godwin.

Pitman has been working extensively with the fraternity officers and national staff to help solve the problems with the Phi Delt Chapter here at UI.

"I've been very pleased with the cooperation and support we've received from the national fraternity staff," said Pitman.

Without recognition from the university, the Phi Delt's will not have access to the lists of potential rushees, house guests through the New Student Services visitation program, use university buildings, or receive university awards. The actions which need to be taken by the chapter to regain recognition include establishing a functioning Alumni Board of Control, arrange for a live-in adviser, forfeit all social privileges involving alcohol and compliance with the risk management policies, certify that all hazing activities have been eliminated, complete programs including sessions on alcohol abuse and human relations, complete a series of alumni relations programs, and sponsor a nationally known speaker on topics of values, ethics and ritual, as well as other public services.

Interfraternity Council has also endorsed the sanctions placed by the national fraternity on the Phi Delt's. They have also withdrawn Phi Delt recognition from the Council.

The Beta's action differs from the other fraternity in that cooperation from the Beta's has been strong since the beginning. "Chapter members have been extremely cooperative and responsive to our concerns," said Godwin.

While on probation from the university, the Beta's will not be

Salmon need to ride the rapids to survive

A resolution to the problem of salmon recovery in the Columbia River basin lies in providing safe, fast and free passage down river for juvenile salmon and upstream for adult fish, said Charles Ray, Wild Salmon Project Coordinator of Idaho Rivers United.

Reservoir drawdowns, such as the one tried last spring, may offer a solution to the quandry, Ray said.

"Drawdowns provide the most balanced approach to attaining this goal, and they may lead to fishable and healthy runs of salmon," he said.

Ray, along with Jim Baker, who is the Sierra Club's Northwest Salmon Campaign Coordinator, provided the "Conservationist View" of salmon recovery at a public meeting Wednesday night in Moscow.

According to Ray, much of the blame for the demise of the once plentiful runs of salmon must be placed on the eight dams—four on the lower Snake River and four on the Columbia—the fish have to pass as they make their way downstream.

"The dams were built with no provisions for safe downstream passage for juvenile fish," he said.

There are a number of choices that can be made to resolve the situation, according to Ray.

"We can let the fish become extinct, we can tinker with the system with schemes like genetic engineering and more hatcheries, or we can continue with trying seasonal drawdowns" to help flush the young fish downstream, he said.

Before hydroelectric development, five to eight million salmon used to migrate to the rivers and lakes of Idaho to spawn each year, Ray said.

Unfortunately, only "five sockeyes returned to the Stanley basin in 1991 and 1992," he said. "The system has been thrown out of balance at the expense of the fish."

"Manifest destiny didn't die when bison died. It moved across the mountains and into the Columbia River basin. The mindset that allowed millions of bison to be slaughtered remains," Ray said.

Baker debunked many of the myths that are circulated about the plight of salmon.

Too much turkey causes a crime wave

By CHRIS MILLER

Deviant students worked hard in several different ways over Thanksgiving break.

One or more car thieves took a 1983 Subaru for a destructive joyride, another thief stole a $250 camera barely six feet away from the owner, a student threw a chunk of ice onto the hood and windshield of a police patrol car, a man stole $723.31 from the Vandal Cafe where he worked, and someone else ripped up an entire USA Today vending machine valued at $250 according to Dan Bruce, UI campus liaison officer.

A woman visiting her brother on campus left her car unlocked with the keys in the ignition on Nov. 28 at approximately 11:30 a.m. Police were examining the remains of her vehicle on Rayburn street south of the Kibbie Dome when she reported the car stolen on the morning of Nov. 29.

The car sustained $1,910 worth of damage mostly to the passenger side.

Another thief stole a student's camera and some photography equipment while the owner was using the phone in the Student Union Building. The owner had his back to the camera, which was

UI Letters and Sciences holds reception

By BETSY CARVER
Staff Writer

The College of Letters and Science will hold the second annual reception for winter L & S graduates this December.

L & S Dean Kurt Olsson and Associate Dean Dene Thomas, began holding this reception in 1991 due to the large number of December graduates from the college. L & S diplomas will be handed out to 136 students this December. This is one third of all graduating students this semester making it the largest college at the university.

The College of L & S also holds the title as the oldest college at the university and has the most departments, ranging from math to music.

The reception is planned for Dec. 17 at 7 p.m. in the Administration Building Auditorium and will include addresses by both Dean Olsson and Associate Dean Thomas, a performance by the Lionel Hampton School of Music Brass Quartet, and a special member of the UI Alumni as a guest speaker.

Liz Madison, advancement officer for L & S, who has been directly involved with the reception, said invitations have been sent to family members of the graduates to allow them to celebrate also.

"We realize some students will not return to campus for the commencement ceremony in May. We know they are finished and are proud of them."

Dean Olsson, who will be addressing the graduates at the reception, said of the reception, "Last year was very well received. We are very positive about it. We are very happy for (the graduates) and we are pleased that we can honor them in a timely way."

Madison expressed excitement for those graduating students and feels students rarely finish college in four straight years. Those who take an extra semester or more need to be recognized for their successes in graduating, Madison said. "It's an exciting program for us."

Mike Long, who graduates the end of this month in communications said, "You feel like you are getting rewarded for hard work. Normally people haven't had any kind of event to look forward to."

Another December graduate in Communications, Gretchen Kelly said, "I've been here for four and a half years and can't believe how exciting it is to graduate. It feels real good and for the college to put on this celebration. Otherwise it would be anticlimatic."

Due to the number of students rising in the College of L & S, Madison looks forward to keeping this tradition alive in the future.

sitting on top of a backpack about six feet behind him when the thief walked off with it.

"Even here in Moscow... It's important people realize it can happen that fast," Bruce warned.

While the traditional snowball fight between the Greeks and Residence Halls didn't happen this year, one student couldn't resist tossing a few chunks of frozen water in the wrong direction on Nov. 30.

Police arrested UI student Adam James Cochran for resisting and obstructing. Bruce said police stopped their cruiser to talk to a group of guys who appeared to be heading toward the residence halls for a snowball fight. Police explained the possible repercussions they might catch if they were caught throwing snowballs, then Cochran picked up a "one-foot cubed piece of street ice (frozen slush)" and threw it on the hood and windshield of the patrol car and fled on foot. The officers on patrol chased the perpetrator into Phi Gamma Delta fraternity house where police questioned him. Cochran gave the officers false information about his identity then fled again. The officers caught Cochran and arrested him, Bruce said.

Police also arrested a 53-year-old employee of the Vandal Cafe for grand theft. Bruce said John, alias "Herbert," Rathbun admitted to taking the money. The money was being counted then left unattended for a short time when Rathbun happened on the money police said.

able to use university facilities, participate in university sponsored events, or receive university awards. In order to get the probation lifted, the Beta's must establish a functioning Alumni Board of Control, meet monthly with the Greek Advisory Board of Control to help oversee chapter operations, and implement a live-in adviser program.

Even though the two incidents and sanctions occurred at the same times, they were totally separate. "It is pure coincidence that the incidents occurred during the same time, but does not mean that hazing is increasing," said Godwin.

"Some people, such as Idaho Senator Steve Symms, believe there is no salmon crisis, even though in the present economic recession salmon provide 60,000 jobs and billions of dollars annually to the economy,

"Other people blame the decline of salmon on drift nets, over-harvesting and habitat degradation.

"While the importance of these factors should not be downplayed," Baker said, he also agreed with Ray, noting that dams are very definitely the biggest problem.

Another misconception about the drawdowns is that they have no scientific basis or biological benefit, he said. "On the contrary, it has been demonstrated that travel time and fish survival increased as a result of the drawdown.

Baker said he thought the drawdowns will not wreak havoc on the local economy, as some opponents of the action have maintained. "Businesses have the ability to adapt to 10 week draw-downs," he said.

A lasting resolution to the problem of a feasible salmon recovery program lies with the Bonneville Power Administration, Ray said.

"When they say they don't know how to fix the system," he said, "they mean they don't want to fix the system."

Oh my, what big teeth you have grandmother

Who's afraid of the big, bad wolf?

Some Alaskans, that's who. Alaska is the one state in America where large herds of animals still roam free of fences and encroaching suburbia. Moose, wild sheep and caribou wander through the forests and tundra thicker than the snow that now covers Moscow Mountain.

Unfortunately for some Alaska wildlife officials and politicians, there are also large populations of wolves and grizzly bears. And unfortunately for the wolves and bears, a large portion of their diet consists of caribou and moose.

In an attempt to boost the tourist trade, David Kelleyhouse, director of the mis-named Alaska Division of Wildlife Conservation, and Alaskan Governor Walter Hickel have decided to start killing off wolves and bears to boost the ungulate population.

Their plan calls for wolves to be shot by game officials or by private citizens who will track the creatures from the air, then land and shoot them. Under federal regulations, both practices are illegal. However, there is an exception granted for state game managers and state-sanctioned wildlife control.

So Alaskans will be able to shoot animals that are considered endangered in the lower 48 states. Not because the wolves are a nuisance, but because they are just inconvenient.

In some areas, up to 80 percent of the wolf population will be killed. It seems kind of foolish to be arguing about the reintroduction of wolves in Idaho if they are being blasted out of the Alaskan outback.

"We feel we are going to create a wildlife spectacle on a par with the major migrations of East Africa," Kelleyhouse said. "Mom and Pop from Syracuse can come up here and see something that they can't see anywhere else on earth."

Kelleyhouse uses twisted logic to justify the plan. Has he considered that if Alaskan wildlife officials have their way, they will wipe out all possibilities Uncle Clem and Aunt June from Pocatello have to see something they can't see anywhere else on earth: wolf packs roaming the woods and a grizzly sow watching over her cub in a berry patch?

What Hickel and Kelleyhouse fail to realize is that they already have a wildlife spectacle that cannot be seen elsewhere. Why can't they be content to maintain the abundance with which they have been endowed and not seek to alter the balance of nature?

Not everyone is as confident as Hickel and Kelleyhouse that the plan will succeed. One wildlife scientist who has been studying Alaska wolves for 27 years said the "decision is bad biology all around, almost insulting from a scientific standpoint. They are making a dumb mistake."

Think about it. If predators are exterminated, over a period of time herds of big game would increase, go through a period of mass starvation and die off.

So then what? Where will tourists go for wildlife spectacles, the Anchorage Zoo?

Let's hope not.

—Pete Gomben

Happy marriages take work

The blushing bride dressed in white. The dapper groom looking resplendent in a new tuxedo. A church packed to maximum capacity. Images that are fitting for a sacred institution like marriage.

Too bad it has been damaged, perhaps irreparably.

Casting aside all the "politically-correct" garbage about family values, a real crisis is unfolding within many marriages in this country.

A national divorce rate hovering around 50 percent. Prominent Hollywood couples hitching and unhitching faster than the tabloids can spit out the information. Television shows sticking four cameras into divorce court to get 16 possible angles of the sobbing participants. And the American public loves every minute of it.

Even professional golfers are joining the battle.

In a recent wire report, pro golfer Fred Couples and his wife are about to engage in divorce proceedings. It seems that Freddy was a neglectful husband and refused to help shore up their 12-year marriage.

Well, that's what his wife said anyway. A rebuttal from him is expected soon.

It is certainly sad to see the

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

Gomben writes like 'Bozo the Clown'

Editor;

Mr. Gomben, you are the most sorry excuse for an associate editor as I have ever encountered. Your recent article "Cheeseburgers and buffalo hunters" in the Dec. 1 Argonaut literally stank of ignorance and common stupidity. It baffles me as to how you attained the position of associate editor with your style of yellow journalism.

Mr. Gomben, I am almost positively sure of the fact that you have never been hunting. Thereby with your liberal animal rights facade the concept of wildlife management has not even crossed your extremely dim mind, even though it is a whole curriculum taught here at this very university (glory be!). Do you even have the vaguest notions of why buffalo are hunted? Obviously you need help in comprehending these ideas so I will explain using small words.

First of all the animal that the hunter in question harvested was very likely a rogue. One of those who will refuse to stay inside national parks or protected areas and endanger themselves or other neighboring establishments. How do I know this? Well, tags are only given out when repeated attempts by the Department of Fish and Game to relocate the animal to areas where it will not do itself or neighboring areas harm have failed, or in the case of overpopulation.

The very most basic of conservation principles is that only a certain number of animals can inhabit a natural habitat area. If this number becomes more than the area can support, animals will starve to death in order to preserve the natural balance. After Fish and Game efforts have been made, tags are made available. This amounts to a whopping total of approximately 20 tags worldwide. Now the tags are not, contrary to liberal belief, distributed to big fat sweaty guys. In fact, hunters have to apply for them a number of years in advance.

And did you know that even good upstanding individuals can put in for the hunt? To name one, our good buddy and pal Cecil (governor of the state of Idaho) Andrus has applied.

Yes, this is all true, it is not a communist plot. Let me ask you something Petey, who do you think brought the American bison back from the brink of extinction? Sportsmen, that's who. Through organizations like the Izaak Walton League, Rocky Mountain Elk Hunters, Ducks Unlimited, North American Hunting Club and even the NRA.

Nobody else pays for the protection of game animals like sportsmen do. Through taxes on firearms, ammunition, clothing, licenses, tags, action groups and private donations, sportsmen actually do the work that you know-nothing activists scream about but never actually accomplish.

As for the four wheeler and warm clothes, it is pretty evident. Then again I remember who I am talking to, so I'll go through it slowly. Buffalo mostly inhabit flatlands with wide ranges of vision. And you know, wild animals tend to have above average natural senses. Therefore, if I were a buffalo, I would think a four wheeler would look out of place in the middle of the prairie and then proceed to get the heck out of Dodge.

Now unless the hunter and his sons can squat a combined total of about 2,500 pounds he probably drove the ATV in, not to shred and thrash on natural landscapes, but to pack the animal out of the back country. As for the warm clothes, naturally sportsmen like to keep warm when outdoors. However, Pete, to show you I can see your point of view, next year I will don only a loin cloth and hunt with a toothpick. How's that?

Your article is not a complete waste of paper though, Petey. I do agree that the bison is a great and noble animal. And undoubtedly this particular animal endured Mother Nature's furies. And that is why I would feel mighty proud and fortunate that I had gotten such a noble beast. A firearm is something that everyone should learn how to handle safely. There would most likely be a lot less needless fatalities. As for the venomous remark about modern firearms I absolutely fail to see the point. It's like Bozo the Clown wrote this article. Maybe you are right, Pete. In sticking with ancient tradition I should use a slingshot and slightly wound the animal so it can run all over heck dying slowly, ruining the meat with adrenaline or even getting away and eventually dying of lead poisoning.

But then again I could always use my .270 thereby rendering it a painless death (what a lovely concept!). A 30-06 is a complex piece of weaponry (that's right Petey, they actually have moving parts) and I seriously doubt that a chimpanzee could be trained to shoot one accurately. I tell you what, Pete, why don't you resign and turn your job over to Shari Ireton. It appears that she conducts the lost editor's art of research and whaddaya know, she even knows what she's talking about. If ignorance is bliss pal, you must be in hog, excuse me, buffalo heaven.

—Robert Trammel

P.S.: How dare you stain George Strait's image with your fake, fair weather country music fan, commentary.

Editor's note: Gomben will serve as editor-in-chief of the Argonaut next semester. He has hunted, is a lifelong fan of country and Western performers who write their own songs — such as Merle Haggard — and is a graduate student in the College of Forestry, Wildlife and Range Sciences. He appreciates the use of small words.

Couples' marriage, or any marriage for that matter, go down in flames. What starts as a lifetime vow of love, trust and companionship can be reduced to a shouting match in court within just a few months.

And it is nobody's fault but the participants.

When a marriage is consecrated, it is understood that there will be problems. Sometimes a petty matter like who feeds the dog can turn into a verbal volley while in other situations, it may be a more serious matter like a question of fidelity.

Whatever the circumstances, it is important that the two participants work it out through communication.

Now there's a word that could use a resurrection.

Whether through society's influence or personal misconceptions, it now seems far easier for married couples to stomp off and see a lawyer than to sit down and discuss a problem like rational adults.

Maybe this is naive, but isn't a marriage centered around communication and a sense of trust towards the other partner? This means that if there's conflict, the couple works it out by talking about it and trying to come up with a reasonable solution. The court system should not be even considered an option here.

Ask any couple who have been married for several years and a common theme might emerge.

They will probably say that yes, there have been fights and bickering over the years, but they were able to work them out. Communication, therefore, is one of the primary reasons for their happiness. The mention of divorce court might evoke a quizzical look from such a couple.

The troubling part is that marriages which started in 1950 are no different than in 1992. The conditions are the same, but the perceptions are not.

Nowadays, words like business marriage and prenuptial agreement enter into a discussion about matrimony. Before the marriage is even begun, there is fervent discussion about who gets the dining room table.

The concept of loving somebody for a lifetime seems to have been lost somewhere.

Call it laziness or whatever. Couples aren't talking like they should or else 50 out of 100 marriages wouldn't be failing.

The answer is simple — don't get married if you are unwilling to sacrifice a large part of yourself. Marriage isn't something to be sloughed off and abused. It takes hard work to make it last, but if you love the person, then this won't seem like work.

This may seem like an ideal, but it has been reality for many married couples.

I hope Fred is listening.

Hunters play role as natural predators

Editor;

I am responding to the column titled "Cheeseburgers and buffalo hunters" by Pete Gomben in the Dec. 1 Argonaut.

I am appalled that you would write such satire on a subject you just simply do not understand. The government agencies responsible for protecting and enhancing wildlife populations set guidelines to manage the game animals. The hunter plays a very, very important role as a natural predator to keep the ecosystem in balance. Without the hunter the animals would become diseased and starve to death.

Mr. Gomben, maybe the next time you pass Hanksville, Utah, don't eat at Stan's Burger Shak. The bison head on the wall is sure to stare down at your double cheeseburger and bring back memories of the blood-spattered ATV.

I would like to recommend "Val's Vegetarian Valhalla" for your feasting fancy.

—Kerry-Lea Lockhart

Dead buffalo was lucky

Editor;

Mr. Gomben, regarding your commentary "Cheeseburgers and buffalo hunters" in the Dec. 1 Argonaut, I was shocked by your complete misunderstanding of the subject. I believe it is your uneducated position of the subject which shows this misunderstanding. I am not protecting the position of hunters but as a hunter myself I find it a duty to make this rebuttal to your unfounded article.

Before you tell someone that he is a piece of garbage first you must understand that man's position. We as humans have destroyed the natural balance of predator and prey, therefore we must manage herds (such as the buffalo) to maintain their integrity and health. Let me tell you that animals dying of overpopulation and overgrazing are not pretty sights to see.

Furthermore, bison do not "play with deer and antelope on the range." On the contrary, the only time you may see them in close proximity is in the winter when many animals have to share scarce winter range.

Drawings by early man depict animals with large antlers or horns. We as a race inherently respect and appreciate an animal with large horns or antlers. Therefore, I would question your vanity when you look at a picture of a large bull elk in the future.

As for the weapon you choose, whether a bow and arrow or a highly precise high power rifle, there is no guarantee you will harvest an animal. Do not believe that you just buy a weapon and go out hunting, you will need more practice and perseverance which is not dependent on the weapon of choice. As for a rifle I would urge you to try accurately to shoot one free hand time.

Finally, in your closing I was shocked by your complete ignorance of what you had said: "As I ate that cheeseburger, I thought how fortunate that cow must have been." How fortunate, sir, is an animal which is penned up in a corral, pumped full of drugs, shipped over land excreting bodily waste over one another while packed into trucks, lined up into mass extermination slaughter houses, packaged and prepared for your plate without you even seeing any of these processes. I believe that it would be a much more dignified way to expire unknowingly by a hunter's bullet or arrow rather than a slaughter house circular saw.

In conclusion, I would ask you to visit a slaughter house and think how fortunate that cow is next time you eat that cheeseburger. I will appreciate that my deerburger was taken in fair chase rather than letting someone else do my handy work.

Gritz may be just what Idahoans are looking for

Editor;
Mr. Gomben, regarding your Opinion commentary in the Nov. 20 Argonaut: Knowing your political leanings and reading a title like "Idaho is not ready for a Rambo in the statehouse," I was pleasantly surprised to find the content fairly unbiased. The quotes presented were basically a regurgitation of a Spokesman-Review article I had read the day before and therefore were nothing new. The political prejudice you took in discussing Mr. Gritz was also nothing new since this is generally how a liberal media portrays such men. But because your article tended to be a little more blatant than most (i.e., "Gritz, who is rapidly beginning to resemble a political Captain Ahab in ruthless pursuit of his own private white whale..."), I decided to comment.

While researching for a paper on the Weaver incident, I had the opportunity to interview Mr. Gritz; he was speaking in Spokane at the 1992 Preparedness Expo. Going into the Expo I expected to see the place filled with skinheads and paramilitary survivalists. Instead what I saw were a collection of people that were fed up with the government's abuse of our economy and were looking for an alternative way to support themselves in case of a nationwide recession. In interviewing Mr. Gritz I found out that he is indeed not a racist and has two adopted Asian children to prove it (not to mention that his father was killed by the Germans in World War II). This was considerably different news than I had been reading in the articles on the Weaver case.

Bo Gritz may have some very unfavorable political opinions and may have been "politically incorrect" for safely talking a racist man and his family into surrendering, but that by no means implies, like your article does Mr. Gomben, that he is a racist. If Mr. Gritz does decide to run for governor in 1994 I think that we should look at the issues he is standing on and not resort to political innuendoes to decide our vote.

Good Samaritan deserves thanks

Editor;
On Nov. 16, while walking from the Life Science Building to the Engineering Building I unknowingly dropped my wallet. When I realized that it was missing, I retraced my steps only to find the wallet gone.

It contained a small amount of cash, credit cards, my checkbook and several other personal items. I thought it likely that someone would turn the wallet in, but I nonetheless cancelled my credit cards, etc.

The next morning I called the SUB information desk and was told that they had the wallet. I wish to express my thanks to the unknown person who was honest enough to return it with all contents in place.

Mens basketball faces first two tests in Midwest

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

Final exams are still two weeks away, but the Idaho men's basketball team will be taking a two-part test this weekend.

Idaho will be competing in the Pizza Hut Classic tonight and tomorrow night at the home court of host Southwest Missouri State in Springfield, MO. Idaho and SWMS will be joined by Arkansas-Little Rock and Tennessee State in the consolation and championship game tournament. All four teams are 1-0 on the season, and first game action begins at 4:00 p.m. tonight and can be heard on KRPL 1400 AM.

In the opener, Idaho will face a strong opponent in Arkansas-Little Rock who hails from the Sun Belt Conference. Last year the Trojans finished 17-13 and were 8-8 in conference, but will be a much improved team.

"They're a very good team," Idaho head coach Larry Eustachy said. "They have the best player in the Sun Belt Conference."

Eustachy is referring to the Trojans 6'-5" forward Tony Martin. The 205-pound senior scored 20 points in Little Rock's season opening 63-59 defeat of Delta State, and was a unanimous first-team all-conference pick last year. Other impact starters include 6'-6" sophomore forward Tony Chime (11 points and eight rebounds per game), and 6'-9" senior center Bob Sahr (8.0 ppg, 6.0 rpg).

"I hope we go out and beat Little Rock by 20 points, but I'm hoping for the best and expecting the worst," Eustachy said. "We'll find out a lot more about this team after this weekend."

The other two teams competing also have a chance to go either 2-0 or 0-2 for the weekend. The Bears of Southwest Missouri, who are picked to win the Missouri Valley Conference and are Eustachy's favorite to win the tournament, are led by 6'-1" sophomore Johnny Murdock. The guard popped in 21 points in SWMS's 47-44 opening win over Missouri-Kansas City. They will also get help from center Chris Albright and guard Rodney Perry, both of whom are seniors. The Bears finished last year 23-8 and 13-5 in conference.

"I'd have to say they're the favorite to win the thing," Eustachy said. "There's four decent teams in the tournament, though, and that's why I scheduled it."

The final team is Tennessee State who plays in the Ohio Valley Conference and finished the '91 season 4-24 overall, and last in conference with a 2-12 record. This season the Tigers boast a young starting line-up with two juniors, a sophomore, and a freshman. Junior Carlos Rogers, a 6'-11" forward, led TSU with 22 points in its opening win over Jackson State, and sophomore guard Tim Horton poured in 14 in the home win.

Idaho is coming off a convincing 93-68 win over Simon Fraser of British Columbia last Sunday afternoon, but Eustachy says his team still has a lot to prove.

"Since the Simon Fraser game we haven't had a good practice," Eustachy said. "Right now this team isn't concentrating. We're trying to find the toughness to win the conference title, but I haven't seen it."

In the Big Sky Conference's preseason pick, Idaho was predicted by both the media and the coaches to win the BSC title. Eustachy, however, isn't convinced after just one game.

"It's tough for an 18 year old to read all these magazines (predictions) and not believe them," Eustachy said. "The measuring stick for me won't be the wins or losses this weekend, but if we're making progress. I want to come out of these games playing hard and making progress."

Idaho returns home briefly next week for the traditional "border battle" with Washington State University Wednesday night in the Kibbie Dome. Last year the Cougars blasted Idaho in Pullman 81-49, but the Vandals played without starters Orlando Lightfoot and Deon Watson. Game time is set for 7:05 p.m.

Transfer forward Xanthus Houston shot six-for-six from the field in Idaho's first victory of the season. Houston will look to improve his 13 point average this weekend in Missouri. (JEFF CURTIS PHOTO)

A Schott should be fired

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

Editor's Note: The following editorial contains strong racial slurs concerning the controversial comments made by Cincinnati Reds Owner Marge Schott.

"Marge Schott is not a racist. She's not a bigot and I wish you people would leave her alone, and by you people I mean the national media (ESPN). It seems like you get Sam Wyche (ex-Cincinnati Bengal head football coach) and you run him out of town, you crucify Pete Rose (ex-Reds player) and now it's like you want her (Schott) on your plate and you national types are ready to eat her."

So says Bill Cunningham, Cincinnati Radio Personality on ESPN's Sports Center.

To paraphrase MTV comedian Dennis Leary, I've got two words for Bill Cunningham and anyone else who feels Schott is getting a bad rap from all the press that the preceding incident is bringing. Civil Rights.

Last week a woman by the name of Sharon Jones came forward with documentation stating that Schott has used racial slurs when describing other races, most notably blacks. Jones, who is a former Oakland Athletics employee, and who is black, stated on national television that: "(Schott said that) she would never hire another nigger" and that she'd "rather have a trained monkey working for her than another nigger."

In a rebuttal to Jones' comments, Schott claims that the individual that Jones is referring to (a black employee who worked in the Red's mailroom) never existed and she double checked on it. What Schott did admit to was saying the word nigger, stating that: "yes, I have said it; everyone says it at least one time in their life."

Apparently Schott has taken it upon herself to speak for the rest of the country. How noble of her! Well, I'm positive there are millions of people who don't use that word in their vocabulary and Schott should quit playing the part of the mighty Guru of the English language for the time being.

LOREN ROBERTS

Furthermore, whether or not a black person actually worked in the mailroom is really beside the point. The point is whether or not Schott made the remarks. The defamation of any race plays no positive role in sport, or society for that matter. Sports is the ultimate representation of blacks, whites, hispanics, and any other race or nationality working together for a common goal.

Racism by anyone is inexcusable and unacceptable. Period.

Two former players with the Reds, outfielder Eric Davis and first baseman Dave Parker, are also said to be targets of Schott's mouth. The eighth-year owner denies allegations that she referred to the two black all-stars as her "million dollar niggers," but rather said they were her "million dollar babies."

Her babies? Yeah, right. Black baseball Hall of Famer Hank Aaron feels that Schott has crossed the line with what she's said.

"Those (racial) words come out of Marge's mouth much too easily," Aaron said on ESPN. "She says them like she's saying 'go get me a glass of water.' The word 'nigger', the word 'Jew', and the word 'jap' all come to her much too easily."

Whether or not the public as a whole shares Aaron's thoughts is uncertain, but they certainly don't think so in Cincinnati. Opening day Red's tickets sold-out in a record 65 minutes, and an overwhelming support for Schott has been aired on local radio stations. One Cincinnati disc jockey said that this is another example of the press blowing things out of proportion, something they've been doing since the 1960's with the Watergate scandal.

By living in Idaho, more specifically Northern Idaho, this area knows all about what that DJ is saying (i.e. the media's confusion after the Sharon Akhavan hanging on campus

Vandals fall to UCSB in NCAA's first round

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho volleyball team found out what experience can mean to a team.

Led by Julie Pitois' 17 kills, a veteran UC-Santa Barbara squad gave NCAA tournament newcomer Idaho a wake-up call with a 15-3, 15-8, 15-13 victory in first-round tournament action in Santa Barbara on Thursday night.

Following the match, Idaho coach Tom Hilbert had seen plenty of Pitois for one evening.

"Julie Pitois is the best right-handed outside hitter I've ever seen," Hilbert said of the 6-2 senior who had an incredible .437 hitting percentage.

The match against the Gouchos marked the first-ever tournament berth for the Vandals, who entered the tournament after a three-game thumping of Montana in the Big Sky Conference championship match last Saturday night in Missoula.

The problem was that the Vandals' first-round NCAA opponent was one of the "gray beards" of the tournament.

Under coach Kathy Gregory, who has racked up 434 victories in her 18 years as UCSB head coach, Santa Barbara has been to the tournament in several of her years at the school.

And they showed this right away against the Vandals.

The Gouchos' Chrissy Roehle had four quick service points in the first game, and teammate Heather Collins added three service aces later in the game as UCSB rolled to a 15-3 victory.

The second game saw the Vandals stay competitive until a final rally by UCSB. Ahead only 9-8, Santa Barbara rolled to the next six points for the victory.

By the third game, the tournament novelty had worn off for the Vandals.

Reserve Tzvetelina Yanchulova mowed down three kills and Dee Porter added a service ace as the Vandals stormed to a 12-7 lead in the third game. But UCSB proved too much. An 8-1 rally closed the game and the match for Santa Barbara.

Hilbert complimented Gregory and UCSB following the match.

"They are a great defensive team," said the fourth-year head coach. "We got a little bit more of our game together in games two and three, but our serving took us out of it."

Hilbert proved astute as the Vandals committed 15 costly service errors.

Playing in their final collegiate games, Idaho senior Amie Hanks and Heather McEwen went out in style.

Hanks recorded 24 assists and had seven digs while McEwen had 10 kills and six digs to lead their team.

Porter and Yanchulova also contributed to the effort with nine kills apiece.

With the loss, Idaho completed its most successful campaign ever with a record of 24-7 and gained invaluable tournament experience, which might come in handy for next year according to Hilbert.

"We have some very good athletes, and we have a good shot at being back next year," said Hilbert.

Lady Vandals ready for tonight's Idaho classic

By DOUG TAYLOR
Staff Writer

The Idaho women's basketball team will be shooting for four in a row when they line up for Friday's first-round game of the Idaho Safeco Classic basketball tournament in Memorial Gym.

The Lady Vandals, who face the University of Nevada at 8 p.m. tonight, have won the tournament for the last three years, and the goal is no different for coach Laurie Turner and her team this year.

"We've won it the last three years, so obviously we look to win the tournament again," said the seventh-year Idaho coach.

Joining the host Lady Vandals for this year's tournament are Nevada, Gonzaga University and the University of Missouri-Kansas City.

Among these three, Turner said the only known quantity for this year's tournament would be Gonzaga. Turner noted that Gonzaga returns several players from a year ago, and one player in particular could pose some problems if Idaho should meet GU in Saturday's 8 p.m. championship.

"They have everybody back, and their inside player (Juanita) Rivera is a rebounding machine," Turner said.

Rivera, a 6-4 junior forward, joins 6-2 sophomore Kelli Howell on a formidable Bulldog front-line. Gonzaga's 6 p.m. game with UMKC will precede the Lady Vandal-Wolfsack clash.

Besides the Bulldogs, Turner isn't really certain about the competition coming to Memorial Gym, but she isn't that concerned about it at this juncture in the season.

"We're not so much concerned with how everyone else is doing," Turner said. "We're worried about how we are doing right now."

She did say that Nevada, with 6-foot senior forward Ann Barry leading the way, would provide an ample challenge for Idaho post players like Kortnie Edwards and Brenda Kuehlthau.

To deal with players like Barry and Rivera, Turner said that the coaching staff has once again emphasized team defense. This doesn't come as an overly big surprise considering that strong team defense has been an Idaho strong point under Turner.

"We have been trying to capitalize on team defense in practice," Turner said.

One pleasant surprise for Turner and her coaching staff was the leadership and scoring role provided by Jennifer Clary in a recent exhibition game against the Australian Institute of Sport.

Clary, a 5-8 junior guard, scored 14 points in the Lady Vandals' 62-48 victory, and Turner said she was also impressed with Clary's take-charge mentality on the court.

Turner is hoping this will rub off on some of the Idaho seniors she is expecting leadership from.

"My question is, who is going to step forward among our seniors," Turner said. "It's time for our seniors to come out and be leaders."

In the game against the Australian team and in practices, the Lady Vandals have been emphasizing the perimeter game, which is a far cry from last year when Idaho relied on strong post play.

Coach Turner did say, however, that this area is improving as Edwards, Kuehlthau and fellow frontcourt player Karen Poncina adjust to leadership roles left to them by last year's squad.

But as of now, Turner said her team will have a decidedly different look than last year.

"We're probably going to shoot the ball a little more than last year," said Turner.

Vandals post five first teamers

■ Nussmeier, Robinson voted BSC's best

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

The Idaho Vandal football team landed five players on the Big Sky's first team, and had 13 players qualify overall for mentioning.

Leading the way for Idaho offensively were unanimous selections Yo Murphy and Sherriden May. Murphy, a senior wide receiver, pulled in 1,156 yards receiving to go along with nine touchdowns. His 105.1 yards per game ranked him first in the Big Sky (second in I-AA), and his 6.2 average receptions per game was fourth in I-AA.

May, a bruising running back from Tacoma, ran for a league high 1,111 yards, had 362 yards receiving, 147 yards on kick-off returns, and finished the season No. 1 in the country in scoring with 150 points (second all-time in the Big Sky). He averaged 101 yards a game (147.3 all-purpose) and had 25 total touchdowns, which included 21 rushing, three receiving, and a 96-yarder on a kick-off return.

Junior quarterback Doug Nussmeier and junior tackle Jody Schnug were also first-team selections. Nussmeier, who hails from Lake Oswego, Oregon, threw for 3,028 yards, 22 touchdowns, and just nine interceptions. He also rushed for 409 yards while getting into the endzone six times. In addition, Nussmeier stole away Weber State quarterback Jamie Martin's 1991 award as he was named this year's Big Sky Conference Offensive Player of the Year.

Schnug, who came to Idaho from Spokane's Gonzaga Prep High School, helped pave the way for Idaho's first ever 1,000-yard rusher, 1,000-yard receiver, and 3,000-yard passer.

On the defensive side, All-American Jeff Robinson became just the 23rd player in the Big Sky to be named a first team selection three years in a row. Robinson, a senior defensive end who is Idaho's only defensive first-team pick, led Idaho with 13.5 sacks for -117 yards, had 79 tackles, 13 tackles for minus yardage, and forced six fumbles. Robinson finished his four-year career at Idaho with 57.5 sacks which is a school record. For this season's efforts Robinson repeated as the conference's Defensive Most Valuable Player.

Second team selections included: sophomore linebacker Duke Garrett (who led the team with 129 tackles), senior defensive lineman John Sirmon, senior defensive back Jeff Jordan, senior tackle David Spellman, senior guard Chris Schneider, and junior center Mat Groshong.

Honorable mentions went to senior tight end Paul Burke, and junior place kicker Mike Hollis.

a year and a half ago). And the few skinheads who live at Hayden Lake just adds additional disgust that minorities have of the area. This is where a contradiction arises. A couple dozen names in the middle of nowhere, who remain mostly silent, is worth nationwide attention, but an incident like Marge Schott's is supposed to be just swept under the rug and forgotten? Although it's known that the media can blow things out of proportion, many people will agree that when it comes to racism, what you don't know can hurt you.

Racism by anyone is inexcusable and unacceptable. Period. If Jones' accusations are fact, Schott should not only make a national apology, but also be fired as the Reds owner never to be allowed to step foot in an athletic administration position again.

A slap on the wrist just won't cut it. A slap across the face will.

Maybe a slap is precisely what Marge needs to become colorblind.

SHAKING THE MONEY TREE

Law school offers a bargain education

By DEANN NORTHAM
Staff Writer

When students think about attending graduate school, financing their education can become a major concern.

Some students think about attending law school, but the cost of funding it can be scary. However, for students who attend the University of Idaho's College of Law, expenses are not as big of a concern.

Sheldon Vincenti, the dean of the College of Law, said students who attend law school at UI are playing only $100 more than students who are enrolled in other graduate programs on campus.

In-state undergraduates are paying $648 in fees each semester. That money pays for facility fees, the general education operation budget and activity fees. In-state graduate students who aren't in the law school, pay an additional $216 a semester in graduate and professional fees for a total of $864 per semester.

In-state College of Law students are paying a total of $964 a semester. Law students are paying the same campus fees, plus their own professional fees. The extra $100 tacked on to their fees goes toward

Food Services offers students a way to make bread at UI

By BRIAN DAY
Contributing Writer

Money. It's something that every college student needs, but never seems to have enough of.

The problem can be partially solved by landing a full or part-time job. One of the easiest places to begin looking for employment on campus is with food services.

According to Marriott management, food services depends on student workers. "The vast majority of University Dining Services part-time associates are students here at the University of Idaho," one manager said. "It just so happens that utilizing a large number of student associates is a practical arrangement from the viewpoint of both Marriott and the students."

From Marriott's point of view, hiring students is smart business.

UI students provide a large labor pool that is close at hand. "They are bright, fresh, easily-trained, capable of great efficiency, and they come with a peculiar, built-in advantage — understanding student customers."

Applying for employment at UDS is easy. To be eligible for employment, a student should have a 2.0 grade point average, be flexible about job assignments and be willing to follow safety and quality standards.

Students who work for UDS have a variety of locations they can choose from. They include the Wallace Cafeteria, WILD PIZZA, the Wallace Snack Bar, Vandal Cafe, the Espresso Stop, the Blue Bucket Restaurant, the Vandal Cart and other locations around campus.

Applications for interested students are available at the Wallace Cafeteria Office or the Vandal Cafe Office.

The Pope, Madonna, & the Arg. Madison meanders down memory lane

TANYA MADISON
Editor-in-Chief

Mark your calendars ladies and gents. Today is a first. I, Tanya Madison, have absolutely nothing to say.

So in the tradition of great columnists like Dave Barry, Lewis Grizzard, Mike Royko and Bill Hall, I'm going to do my first random thoughts column. Join me on my meandering mind-wander if you dare.

■ I'm preparing to graduate in three weeks but there are still a few questions that have remained unanswered. Such as, what kind of underwear does the Pope wear? Who first came up with the idea of crocheting covers for toilet paper? Why are barbecued chicken wings called buffalo wings? Why did K-mart choose a blue light to announce its specials? Why not red or green or strobe?

■ Is it me or has Madonna gone outer-limits? Her latest video is a tribute to the disco era complete with bell-bottoms, afros and a disco globe. I guess if I had a body like hers I would be walking naked through the frozen food aisle at Rosauers, but it seems to me that she has taken this natural thing to extremes.

■ Speaking of extremes, the conservative student newspaper of UI and WSU came out with its second issue this week. The cover story is by Rick Rock, the new ASUI president. It is entitled, "Nightmare!!! Democrats in the driver's seat." Pick up a copy around campus. It's good for a giggle if you are a liberal and it's not bad reading for conservatives either.

■ People looking for the ultimate stocking stuffer should stop by the Gem office on the third floor of the SUB. Yearbook editor Ryan "stud puppy" Patano says that this year's edition will be G-rated, unlike last year's ode to vomiting and passing out.

■ If you want to know why Ryan is known as "stud puppy," ask him. He said, "I have friends who actually read that rag, the Argonaut."

So all two of his friends should contact him and ask him about the nickname. Also ask him about the green Jell-O incident.

■ Now is as good a time as any to thank the people here at the Arg who have put in countless hours to make my term as editor an interesting one. First, thank you to David Gebhardt, Mark Jones and Kelly Culp for not choking the editorial staff when we ask to rearrange all of the ads. Thank you to Amy Granger for never considering any request too big or too silly. Her sunshiny personality made many paste-ups almost bearable. Thanks to Doug Taylor for never letting me finish a beverage or snack without having to beat him off with a stick. Thanks to Loren Roberts for keeping Doug sedated during paste-up.

Thanks to Shari Ireton and Tracie Bruno for the fun time in Boise. Thanks to them both for agreeing not to write a book about that weekend as well. We'll have to go in search of Mr. No Underwear someday soon.

A special thanks to Samantha Groom for making my life a living, breathing hell and for teaching me what all of the drinks on Mingle's menu are.

Thanks to Stephanie, Cynthia and Susan for redirecting hate mail and nasty phone calls on days when I just couldn't take it. Thanks also for playing mom and looking out for the motley crew that works on the third floor.

Thanks to Pete Gomben for having to deal with everyone next semester. Good luck romancing the bison, Pete.

■ For those of you who read and replied to my "Dating Tips for Morons" column, I have news. Contrary to what many of you thought, I was capable of meeting Mr. Politically-liberal-sexy-intelligent-etc. So thanks for the kind offers to show me what a real man is like, but I found one. He can even spell his own name.

■ To David McLean for all of his kind letters to the editor, get a life.

■ To those of you who have said that you liked this column, please seek professional help, immediately.

Happy days dears. Take heart. The last Left of Center comes out next week.

UI continues to beat BSU in football, but is the bar scene a different story?

By KIM BLEDSOE & KARIN MASON
Staff Writer

Not only did the University of Idaho defeat Boise State University in football, the Vandals also managed to dominate the Bronco's bar scene. And what a bar scene it was!

If you've ever been to Main Street in Boise, then you know that the only similarity between it and Main Street in Moscow is the beer. Everything from the crowd to the music was different, not to mention the prices.

The most notable difference was the patrons of the Boise night life. Whereas a typical UI student would most likely throw on a pair of Levi's and any sort of clean shirt, the dress code for Boise is anywhere from casual to semi-formal, and in some instances, black-tie. At first glance, perhaps while waiting the standard 10 to 15 minutes to just get inside the bar, one could instantly tell who a person had been rooting for at the UI-BSU game.

As the night progressed, and blurred vision set in, it became more and more apparent that the musical preference of Boise bar-goers was of a different sort as well. For instance, the Garden we all know offers a wide variety of music on the jukebox. Not so, six hours south of Moscow. The only variety offered in the Boise bars were assorted country tunes, a few rap songs, and Top 40 tunes from 1984. Needless to say, Van Halen's "Jump" began and ended the evening.

Moving on, $2.75 in Moscow will actually buy a pitcher of beer in certain places. However, this same $2.75 will get you a nice 16-ounce glass of beer at Joe's American Bar & Grill. Real American, Joe. It basically depends on where you go and what night, but all in all it's a bit more expensive. The Palouse definitely has a monopoly on drink and beer bargains.

We're not trying to say that the Boise bar scene is all that bad. In fact, they have one definite advantage that Moscow does not. Conveniently located in front of several bars on Main Street are numerous hot dog vendors. To some, it seems like a gift from God, to others it is more of an annoyance trying to pry your friends away from the grill in order to go home. If there were bacon wrapped around the hot dogs, it would almost seem like Tijuana, Mexico.

There's one more advantage that Boise has over the Moscow bar scene and that is its 24-hour taxi cab service. These friendly, well-mannered people are more than happy to take care of everyone's drunken transportation needs. Although Moscow isn't quite as large as Boise, and probably with less of a need for taxi transport, it would still be an added bonus, relieving people of many unwanted overnight parking tickets or long, cold walks home.

See you in downtown Boise over Christmas!

'The Cube,' the library's PR consultant

By JEFF KAPOSTASY
Contributing Writer

Call it the UI library's public relations consultant.

But this PR consultant is not paid well, does not wear expensive dress suits, and certainly does not always give nice, friendly, politically-correct responses.

In fact, this PR consultant appears tattered, torn and just plain old. But the consultant never tires of giving quick-witted responses to the written questions concerned library patrons drop by.

The consultant, of course, is The Cube. The Cube sits in plain sight next to the phone booth on the first floor with a small "Suggestions" sign stapled to the front. Students with concerns, questions, and nasty criticisms drop their little pieces of paper into the slot and the Cube gets to work responding.

In the past, library employees have been pretty tight-lipped about the brains behind the cube. The library likes to give the impression The Cube is an entity in itself.

When associate dean Monte Steiger was asked if he was the man behind the myth, he responded with a chuckle.

"No, I don't write those. The person who writes those is demented."

This makes library dean Ron Force laugh. Force admits to being The Cube. The Cube has been in place since the mid-1970s, and Force has been answering the suggestions since 1982, after he came here from Ohio State. Force brought the idea of injecting humor into the responses from Ohio.

"The purpose of The Cube is to give serious responses to the serious questions, and answer some questions with humor when the situation calls for it."

For instance, one comment laced with obscenities and anger about the library not having the books this particular patron desired was answered in typical Cube-ian fashion:

"Your silver-tongued oratory and extensive vocabulary has convinced us we should obtain instant access..." If someone shoves something in The Cube's face, The Cube shoves it right back.

After the dust clears when the new library is completed, The Cube will live on. Force has tried to have a new Cube built to no avail. But no matter what shape or form, The Cube and its responses will live on.

AIDS victim gives real life account of the deadly disease

By DAVID JACKSON
Staff Writer

AIDS is real. AIDS is not just a gay person in New York City or a junkie in Los Angeles, it is also a 29-year-old working mother in Spokane, Washington.

December first was World AIDS Day, and in recognition, the Student Advisory Services of the University of Idaho presented a special speaker. Bruce Pitman, the Dean of Students, introduced the guest, and in doing so set the tone for the discussion.

"I am personally very concerned about AIDS," he said. "I have children and loved ones who I want to see stay healthy. Needless to say, this is very important."

Pitman then introduced Joyce, a Spokane native who is infected with the HIV virus. She began by explaining her situation.

"I have a four-year-old daughter named Kara," she said. "When she was four months old, my husband approached me and said he thought he had AIDS. He did. And so does my daughter."

Joyce gave a brief talk before entertaining questions from the audience of approximately 100 students at the SUB's Gold Gale-na Room. She showed no reservations about approaching this touchy subject straight forward.

"This is a real disease," she stated. "This affects you, me, the guy down the street and the guy at the hamburger stand."

She went on to tell the crowd she contracted the HIV virus from her husband, who got the disease from intravenous drug use. She further explained she wasn't gay, and that she did not use drugs. She then offered several statistics aimed at her college-age audience.

"High school and college age heterosexuals are the fastest growing group at risk of getting AIDS," she warned. "On top of that, women are ten times more likely to get it than men."

It was obvious Joyce felt an urgency to educate young people about this disease. A member of the audience asked her about teaching abstinence rather than about protection in public schools.

"If people are going to be sexually active, they need to be educated," she offered. "Abstinence is the best way to avoid this disease. This is not safe sex we are talking about here, it's safer sex. There is still a risk. But when you tell that to young people, their reaction is 'The more you tell me how to have fun, the more I'm going to do it.'"

Joyce was asked if she felt hostile towards her husband, who died two years ago. She said her faith in God allowed her to ignore hostility, and to instead concentrate on living.

"As far as death goes, everyone in this room is going to die," she said matter of factly. "No one knows when or how they will die. I could have died on the car trip down here. It's not how I will die, it's am I prepared to die."

Preparing for death is also a factor in dealing with her daughter. Joyce assured the audience her daughter knew what was happening.

"She knows she has AIDS and she knows what that means," she said. "She is not afraid of dying."

Joyce seemed very comfortable speaking about a sometimes taboo subject. She kept herself in control when talking about aspects of her life that made members of the audience visibly emotional. Indeed, she challenged the crowd to ask themselves some tough questions.

"Does everyone you've slept with know how to get ahead of you?" she asked. "That is not the case with me, and that is scary."

She then told a story to further illustrate her point.

I was at a New Year's Eve party a year after my husband died, and the men found out that I had AIDS," she started. "One 23-year-old guy ran out of the room crying. I chased him down and asked him what was wrong. He told me he had slept with between 200 and 300 women during the last two years, and that I could have been any one of them."

She ended the program by once again stressing how important education about the subject is. She offered more statistics, and told people how to learn more about this lethal affliction.

"If you get nothing else from this," she said, "make sure that if a loved one finds out tomorrow that they have AIDS that you can care for them and help them. That's the best thing anyone could do for someone in that position."

Names of UI legends engraved on campus buildings

By BRANDY CORGATELLI
Assistant News Editor

Giving a name to a university building can sometimes be a sticky subject.

Quite a stir was created a few years ago in Caldwell, Idaho, when the College of Idaho was renamed. It became Albertson's College of Idaho based on the financial contributions of the wealthy Idaho grocer.

The University of Idaho is not without this sort of controversy. There were long debates in October by the Idaho State Board of Education meetings over whether to put Steve Symm's name on the future Transportation building. Symms secured the grant money for the new building. Eventually, the idea was dropped with the university and Symms' agreement.

Yet, the UI already has over a dozen buildings displaying the names of influential people. Most of these building names don't honor politicians or even large donors. They reflect the efforts and accomplishments of native Idahoans and accomplished UI faculty.

■ Buchanan Engineering Lab Named for the first curve ruiner at UI. Jesse Buchanan was the first UI student to achieve straight "A's" in his college career.

He stayed at UI after graduation to join the civil engineering faculty in 1927. Buchanan then worked his way up to Dean of Engineering and finally to President of UI, where he became the first alumnus president of this university. He died in 1986.

■ Morrill Hall UI doesn't have a monopoly on this building name. "You'll find Morrill Halls at universities throughout the West," said Roger Wallins, Associate Dean of Graduate Studies, whose office is located in Morrill Hall.

The building is named after Justin Smith Morrill, a U.S. Representative from Vermont in the mid-1800's. Morrill was the impetus behind a Congressional act providing free land to found land-grant universities, of which UI is one, in every state in the West.

Most land-grant universities quickly thanked Morrill by naming one of their first buildings after him. "It is usually one of the oldest buildings on campus," Wallins said. This is true at UI. Morrill Hall was built in 1906.

■ Brink Hall Named after Carol Ryrie Brink, a famous writer born here in Moscow who authored over 20 books, some about Moscow. Brink attended UI for two years in the early 1900's.

She was best known as a children's writer and won the Newbery Award, the nation's most prestigious award for children's literature for the book Caddy Woodlawn. "I remember reading it as a kid, not knowing who Carol Ryrie Brink was at the time," said Gary Williams, Dean of the English Department.

Yet, Brink Hall houses the English and the Math departments, so why is it named after a literary figure? When it came time to vote on a name, explained Williams, "there were more English people than math people so we got a writer."

■ Renfrew Hall Home to the physics and chemistry departments, this building is named after an alumnus Chemist, Malcum Renfrew. Renfrew got a bachelor's and a master's degree from UI and later taught at UI.

Renfrew was also an inventor. You can thank him that your eggs didn't stick to the pan this morning. He was part of the team that developed the polymer known as Teflon, the non-stick coating on many cooking pans.

"He is one of the most influential alumni from this campus," said Chemistry Professor Jean'ne Shreeve.

■ Ridenbaugh Hall The oldest building still standing on campus, this building is named for Mary E. Ridenbaugh, a board of regents member from 1901-1907. Built in 1902 as a dorm, it was dedicated to "the young women of Idaho." Now musical notes can be heard pouring out the windows of Ridenbaugh Hall. It is currently used by the music school for practice rooms.

■ Menard Law Building Named for Albert R. Menard Jr., who served as dean of the College of Law from 1967 to 1977 and as a UI law school professor from 1978 to 1984. Menard came to UI before the Law School even had its own building. The Law School had to make due in the Administration Building, with books from its library stacking up in the Administration halls.

The law building took the highly-respected Menard's name in 1984, shortly after he retired. "He's one of the people I admire most in the profession," current College of Law Dean Sheldon Vincenti said.

■ Niccolls Home Economics Building Some buildings have names most students and even faculty aren't aware of. This is the case with Niccolls Home Economics Building. Niccolls' name is not even posted on the building.

The building is named for Mary Hall Niccolls, a UI alumnus. She received a small scholarship in 1906 to attend UI. She thanked the school by leaving a $450,000 scholarship fund when she died in 1962.
