Student reports she was sexually assaulted at UI fraternity party

By Greg Burton
Staff Writer

While the frequency of crime on campus may have diminished, the severity has increased.

The weekend free-for-all at Xenon has led to charges and accusations from Washington State University to University of Idaho, and from Barry Tassler to the police and the community.

Monday morning a female student reported she was sexually assaulted at Tau Kappa Epsilon Fraternity.

Campus Police Liaison Lieutenant Jake Kershnik said the female subject reported she was attacked after falling asleep at the UI fraternity.

The subject knew one or more of the members of the Tekes, and reported she was there for a party. Kershnik said there was alcohol involved.

"Officers responded to the Teke house and investigated the crime scene, and we have several good leads to follow," said Kershnik.

Members of the fraternity could not talk while the police were still investigating.

"For every one reported rape there are ten more that go unreported," said Kershnik, "and although the figures indicate that the last reported rape on campus was in September, statistics imply that there were possibly 20 unreported."

Kershnik said out of a living group of 100 individuals, or a party with 100 people, "99 may be good people, but it only takes one bad apple."

The Moscow police have deemed the incident a possible rape.

Committee seeks protection from discrimination for sexual preference

ASUI President and former Attorney General come head to head again

By JEFF KAPOSTASY
Staff Writer

Confusion and concern. Debate and disgust.

All words that can be used to describe the ongoing conflict between members of the Non-discrimination Committee and ASUI President Richard Rock.

What Rock is calling "the only fair way," members of the committee are calling political, as Rock announced he would seek a referendum on April's ASUI ballot. The referendum will give Rock and the Senate tangible student input on the work of the Non-discrimination Committee, formerly the Non-discrimination Language Committee.

"Regardless of my feelings toward the work of the committee, I was elected to represent the views of the majority of students," Rock said. "If the referendum passes then my office will fully support the committee's work."

The stated purpose of the committee is to fight all kinds of discrimination. Currently, the committee is attempting to change the wording in several university documents to protect discrimination based on sexual preference. Specifically, the referendum deals with the Statement of Student Rights.

Currently, the Statement says nothing explicitly about protecting students from discrimination based on sexual preference, the way it does race or religion. The referendum would ask students if they want the Statement to change to include such protection.

According to Rock, this would be a useful tool in gaging student support for the committee's work.

"I believe that anytime you are trying to amend the Statement of Student Rights the first thing you should do is make sure that it is what the students want," Rock said.

However, Thomas Talboy, a founder of the committee and former ASUI Attorney General says students are not ready to vote on such an issue and hinted there may be other motives for the referendum.

"I don't think they (students) know quite enough about what we're doing," Talboy said. "A referendum is a good way to get a reaction from the students. But I think there are a lot of underlying motives that may detract from this."

At a meeting Wednesday, the committee talked about methods to let people know exactly what work they are involved in. They plan to visit living groups and advertise heavily. Not being a member of the ASUI, the committee receives no university funding for this.

The committee will also hold an open forum Jan. 26 at 8 p.m. in the SUB Ballroom to let people speak their mind on the issue. Rock says he will try to attend.

If the referendum does make the April ballot, there are still several hurdles to clear before this change becomes the law of the UI land. To pass the referendum, a simple majority in which at least 25 percent of the students vote is needed. To actually amend the Statment of Student Rights a two-thirds majority in which at least 35 percent of the students vote is required.

At a university where only 15 percent of the students voted in the last election, this could be quite a task for the committee. Rock said this is the way a Democracy works, no matter what the outcome, and more people will head to the polls to vote for this issue.

"The first vote would be to see whether or not we, the ASUI, wants to give the committee the resources of the ASUI to pursue this. The second vote would be the actual amendment," Rock said. In short, it would take two elections to make the proposal a law.

At the heart of this issue, there is a gnawing antagonism between Rock and the committee. The two groups can't even agree where the ill-feeling blossomed. Rock says he sincerely doesn't know why the antagonism exists. Some committee members say Rock has fought their work since the groups inception last semester. Talboy blames it on "the Attorney General thing."

That "thing" has caused a lot of controversy and more than a few headaches for both sides. Talboy resigned when Rock passed a bill to make the Attorney's term run concurrent with

No gun found in football player's car after incident at Xenon

By GREG BURTON
Staff Writer

Shawn "Duke" Garrett and two Washington State University students pleaded not guilty Tuesday to charges stemming from a weekend skirmish in front of Xenon.

At least 200 patrons filled Main Street after Xenon security forces closed the Moscow nightclub when several fights broke out on the dance floor.

Garrett, a University of Idaho football player, was arrested on the charge of display of a weapon. According to the police Garrett was pulling a gun from the trunk of his car when he was engaged by Officer Nick Almquist.

Witnesses stated that after fighting inside the nightclub, Garrett had threatened to kill somebody. Moscow Police Lieutenant Jake Kershnik said at this point Almquist witnessed Garrett open the trunk of his 1985 model Pontiac Grand Am and pull out a handgun.

Kershnik commended Almquist's courage in a difficult situation. "Whether there was a gun or not, the officer entered a possible fatal situation and prevented any action from an obviously enraged man," Kershnik said.

After arresting Garrett and dispersing the crowd, police returned to the vehicle and found a key broken off in the lock of the trunk.

Kershnik said the vehicle was impounded and a subsequent search of the vehicle revealed an interior trunk release. Once open, no gun was found inside the trunk.

However, Kershnik said the case does not rest on the discovery of the gun.

City prosecutor Mark Moorer had no comment on the disposition of the case against Garrett dependant on a weapon being found. Moorer said his office plans to continue prosecution on the basis of the original charges.

"Since no gun has been found we must consider Shawn innocent," said UI Athletic Director Pete Liske. "There will be no action taken by this department unless he is convicted, and that doesn't seem likely. If any action is taken it would be strictly according to University policy and not exclusive of the Athletic Department."

Liske said the focus of this incident, "should be on the few individuals who upon their own initiative prevented what could have turned into a real donnybrook (brawl)."

Moscow Police Chief William Brown has scheduled a meeting with the UI Athletic Department today. WSU officials have also been invited, but Kershnik said they have not committed to attending.

WSU students Demarcus Girmar and Jeffie Lou Jackson, along with Garrett will meet with Moorer Jan. 26 for pre-trial hearings.

If convicted Garrett faces up to six months in jail, and a $300 fine.

Greeks honored with awards for leadership development

By DAVID JACKSON
Staff Writer

The Greek system at the University of Idaho was recently given a boost by their peers as eight fraternities and five sororities won national or international awards from their governing affiliations.

"The quality of awards these chapters won upholds the fact that they are doing a good job," said Linda Wilson, the Greek Advisor for UI's Student Advisory Services. "This is a nice showing."

"The leadership development demonstrated by these chapters is outstanding," agreed Bruce Pittman, UI's Dean of Students. "Each one of them should be applauded for their dedication to improving the Greek system and the university as a whole."

Phi Gamma Delta was a runner-up for The Cheney Cup Award for Chapter Excellence, the award given annually to the top three chapters within the entire International Fraternity. House member David Burns was also selected as traveling field secretary for the International Men's Fraternity.

Kappa Sigma earned awards for Outstanding Brotherhood Development and Outstanding Rush Publication. Zell Cantrell was also named Outstanding President. They were also recognized for overall grade point averages significantly above all men's and all Greek averages.

Theta Chi was recognized for Chapter Excellence in Membership Recruitment, and was awarded the Stanford Scholastic Achievement Award.

Delta Chi earned both the Outstanding Alumni Newsletter Award and the Outstanding Secretary Award. Sigma Nu was recognized as the Most Improved Chapter Internationally and Pi Kappa Alpha earned a National Chapter Excellence Award, while Beta Theta Pi was awarded the Virginia Tech Award for Scholastic Achievement and Phi Kappa Tau earned an award for Administrative Excellence.

Kappa Kappa Gamma was one of the recipients of the national Kappa Challenge to Excellence Award. Only 12 chapters received this award out of the more than 70 that applied. UI's chapter also received honorable mentions for Ritual Appreciation, Pledge Education Program, Chapter/Advisory Board Relations, Fraternity Appreciation and Most Improved Chapter.

Pi Beta Phi received the Elizabeth S. Kora Award for best overall programming in moral, mental and social areas. They also received a Top 10 Chapter Award. Mindy Cox also received honorary mention in the Best Treasurer competition.

Out of 130 national chapters, Delta Gamma was one of five to earn a Finacial Excellence Award. They also received a Province Scholarship Award and a Delta Gamma Scholarship Award.

Gamma Phi Beta received the McCormick Medallion Activities Award and was recognized for Outstanding Senior Scholastic Achievement.

In addition to those chapter awards, Sharon Payne, a recent public relations graduate and member of Alpha Gamma Delta, has accepted a position as traveling leadership consultant for the International Women's Fraternity.

"These awards are a way of showing recognition to our houses," said Kappa Sigma President Chris Bernardi, a senior in business. "A lot of times you hear about the negatives of a house in the press and not the positives. These awards display our positives."

the President's. Critics claimed Rock proposed the change because Talboy is homosexual. Rock claims he made the change so the Attorney's term would run concurrent with the President's, and had nothing to do with Talboy's sexual orientation.

Despite an uphill battle, the committee is prepared for the fight. In addition to getting word out, the committee will be asking for help from various faculty and organizations. Talboy says he is confident the committee will gain the support of many in their effort to add sexual orientation to the list of illegal discriminators.

Rock says he has been in contact with the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Alliance to help with the wording of the referendum, and has sought help from the committee. Talboy, however, says the committee is not ready to help Rock at this point.

"I'm just afraid that will open it up to such open interpretation it will help him and hurt us," said Talboy.

Rock says he expects Senate approval of the referendum, and hopes to propose it by Feb. 24.

A Voice From Washington: 🇺🇸 Innauguration seems like campaign time to Clinton

Commentary by Frank Lockwood
KUOI News Director

(Editor's note: Lockwood has been in Washington D.C. for the inauguration ceremonies this past week.)

Somebody needs to tell Bill Clinton the campaign is over. The votes have been counted. He's won! He doesn't have to shake hands, kiss babies and rub shoulders with the little people. Not until 1996 anyway. But the Energizer president keeps on going, and going and going, unaware he's got the job.

While George Bush considered campaigning — pressing the flesh and groveling for votes — to be an unpleasant if necessary task, Clinton clearly loves it.

This was evident Sunday as Clinton made his triumphal journey from Monticello to the Capitol. In the heart of Bush Country, hostile land for a liberal Democrat, Clinton reached out. He spoke of hope, of change, of renewal. And in the heart of Virginia common folks waved their flags and dreamed a little, too. The throngs that greeted him in Culpeper, Warrenton and Gainsville looked a lot like America, black and white. Young and old. Liberal and conservative.

Single mothers brought their babies to see the man from Arkansas. And fundamentalists gathered to decry Clinton's social agenda, policies they say are contrary to God's will. Clinton plowed into these crowds, grasping hands, hugging ecstatic admirers, thanking folks again and again for their votes and their prayers.

Symbolism surrounded William Jefferson Clinton and he eagerly embraced the emblems of American greatness, Jefferson and JFK. He paid tribute to these Democratic icons and also to Bush, praising his nemesis for leading America forward to the post-Cold War era.

Clinton also acknowledged the symbols of American's divisions, his buscade rolling past the bloody Civil War battleground at Bull Run. Clinton often accused the Republicans of dividing America into "us" and "them" — of exploiting the nation's differences rather than celebrating its diversity. This week Clinton embraced the "thems" — the blacks, the women, the liberals, the poor, the gays. He promised that an era of openness and tolerance is dawning in America. Up on Capitol Hill the Senate reviewed Clinton's cabinet nominations, the most diverse cabinet ever proposed by an American president. Calling this inauguration "An American Reunion," Clinton sought to make everybody feel welcome, for at least one week.

After arriving in Washington, Clinton continued at a frantic pace, addressing a quarter of a million people on the steps of the Lincoln Memorial. Always behind schedule, the press dubbed the new president's scheduled arrival times "Clinton Standard Time." Just hours away from the presidency, Clinton pressed on. Concerts, luncheons, Martin Luther King Day services and a bell-ringing ceremony.

Repeatedly attacked by the Religious Right, Clinton sought to assure Americans that he'll seek God's help over the next four years. The first and second families attended a Southern Baptist Prayer meeting that lasted until 1:20 a.m. At that service, former president Jimmy Carter asked the Almighty to guide Bill Clinton and guard over his family. Clinton went to church three times in four days, and asked Billy Graham to pray at the inauguration ceremony.

Despite Clinton's exhaustive schedule and his attempts to include just about everybody in the celebration, there are some here who find fault with this diverse reunion. Critics accuse Clinton of staging an expensive coronation instead of a traditional inauguration. They call it a $25 million festival for the politically correct. Clinton is a panderer, not a unifier. A master campaigner, but a mediocre leader. Liberals counter that if reaching out to include all American is politically correct, then so be it. They vow that a Clinton administration will bring healing and hope to a divided land.

Clinton may be able to provide hope and increased tolerance. But there's little money around for expensive government programs. During the campaign, Clinton promised too much to too many, including tax cuts, training programs and a host of multi-billion dollar federal projects. Already he is backing away from many of his pre-election promises. They call those promises "goals" now. The deficit is more menacing than ever, they maintain. The promises will have to wait.

The president throws one mean party. He's a masterful campaigner. He inspires people, too. But in order to succeed Clinton must show he is more than a great host. He'll have to show he can make tough choices, provide bold leadership and awaken a brain-dead Congress. The five day party is over and the first 100 days have begun. Now comes the hard part.

It's time to expand the boundaries of our wilderness

Idaho lawmakers are currently debating whether or not more public lands in the Gem State should be set aside as wilderness areas.

The good part is that the debate showcases efforts by politicians from both parties to roll up their sleeves and strike a nonpartisan agreement. The bad part is that most arguments in the debate use rationales that consider economics and little else.

Increased wilderness means decreased opportunities for logging, mining and grazing, we are told. Therefore some people believe we should forget any plan that would "tie up" more land in worthless wilderness areas. There sadly are still many people who believe that if a tree exists, it exists only to be cut down and trucked to a sawmill.

When balanced against real and potential human suffering, such as the loss of jobs or income, the urge to exploit the land is nearly overpowering. No one likes the idea of people being tossed out of jobs they have had for years.

However, if we extend economic arguments to their logical conclusions, we might lose the rationale for having any wilderness areas at all. If we look only at economics, every productive acre within the boundaries of a wilderness area should be thrown open to development to save our failing economy.

If that were the case, only the most barren, worthless, desolate areas that offer no timber, minerals or forage would be considered wilderness. Since those areas would never feel the bite of a chainsaw or the thumping hooves of cattle anyway, there would be no reason for the protection that wilderness designation offers. It would be like locking an empty vault.

Proponents of wilderness who fall into the trap of the economic argument often point to increased recreation receipts as a means to offset reductions due to wilderness set asides. No matter how the numbers get cooked, however, increased recreation will probably never make up for money lost from the decline of extractive industries.

But so what?

There are noneconomical reasons for preserving wilderness. An old growth Douglas-fir that rots on the stump and provides food and shelter for animals is not a loss for the lumbermill. It is an inextricable strand in the web of nature. Not everyone realizes that.

There are other reasons for preserving wilderness which consider much more than the dollar value of the physical resource.

Wilderness has historical value. It allows us to step into the shoes of our forebearers and experience the richness of the landscape and some of the fear of self-sufficiency.

Likewise, though some traces of human influence can be found in even the deepest wilderness, we still have the chance to look back at the way things might have been.

Or at least to look at the way things are, without a Wal-Mart in every town and a fast food restaurant on every corner.

Idaho — and America — needs more wilderness.

'Sweet Medicine,' how sweet it is

"Philbert and Bonnie were madly in love." This is how the king and queen came together into sacred union. The king being Philbert and the queen being Bonnie.

I'm not referring to a romance story but rather David Seals' book Sweet Medicine. It's a modern-day adventure story of Indian heroes, with some insight into native realities in America today.

Sweet Medicine is a sequel to The Powwow Highway, Seals' first novel. The narration is provided by an Indian named Storyteller, who's a cross between a native Trickster and a literary huckster. Storyteller begins the tale with Bonnie and Philbert in a friendly pueblo community. In the community Bonnie and Philbert discover an attraction for each other. It's an attraction that takes days in bed to explore fully, but eventually the long arm of the law forces them to run (out of their bed). Let me back up. Bonnie and Philbert, who are Northern Cheyenne, are on the run for breaking Bonnie out of jail in Santa Fe, where Bonnie was being charged with crimes she hadn't committed.

On horseback, the convoy (aging Indian vans full of elders and kids) attempts to help Bonnie and Philbert reach sacred ground. During this journey Bonnie is nearly killed with an

Feminists help destroy stereotypes

Men need feminists.

Some extreme feminists deny they need men, wishing the Earth were the dominion of ruling females. But without men to rule, how would these women even enjoy ruling?

Men, let's not make the same mistake of wanting a one-sex world. Women of all kinds are wonderful. We need them all. We even need full-blooded feminists.

Feminists have undeniably done this country some good. In the beginning they fought with valor for the righteous cause of voting privileges. Women have only had a say in electing about 15 of our 42 presidents. Later on feminists took up the cause of equal pay for equal work. More action still needs to be taken on this front.

Feminists have helped destroy the stereotype of women as second-class citizens. It was often culturally common for past generations of men to belittle women, boss them around and even discipline them like little children. Men expected women to wait on them as the kings of the household. dresses, tutors, counselors, child care workers, and so on.

Men need to respond to these issues. We don't need to agree with the latest feminist goals (many women don't agree with them), but we simply need to start showing more respect to our female counterparts.

Spring semester one year ago was a good one. I made big advances in learning how to treat a woman with dignity. My motivation to love, respect, and encourage my fiancée (now wife) to develop her outside interests came from two markedly different sources.

The first was the Bible. Its commands to honor wives (women) as equals and love them enough to suffer, even die in their place, are unparalleled motivations. We are also directed by the Bible to serve our women, not sit around expecting them to serve us all the time.

If the Bible was my number one motivation, reading feminist

LETTERS LETTERS -LETTERS- LETTERS LETTERS

Sharp: 'Nielsen hasn't read the Book'

Editor;
I have a few problems in regards to the letter written by Ralph Nielsen in the Argonaut on Jan. 15. He obviously hasn't read the Bible fully and doesn't understand what some of the verses are really talking about. After all, every quote he made was totally out of context. In the Ten Commandments, it says God will punish those people who hate Him to the third and fourth generations, but it also says He will show love to a thousand generations of those who love Him and kept His commandments.
In 1 Samuel 15, the Lord is talking about punishing the Amalekites for what they did to Israel. In Isaiah 13:16, God is telling us what is going to happen in the last days when the Lord comes. "Happy is he that dashes your little ones against the stones" (Psalm 137:9). This verse is referring to what the Israelites were condemning on the Babylonian children. God says, "Their little one shall be dashed in pieces, and their pregnant women shall be ripped open" (Hosea 13:16). This is referring to what the people of Samaria must bear, because they have rebelled against God. And last of all, in Genesis 6-7, God drowned the whole human race except Noah and his family. Why? In Genesis 6:5-8, it explains the Lord was grieved that He made man because of man's wickedness and evil desires.
Tell me this. If God didn't love children or any human being for that matter why would He have sent His Son to die on the cross for our sins? Then He promises us eternal life if we believe in Him (John 3:16). In 1 John 4:7-12, God's love for us is also explained very well.
The Bible is full of verses about God's love for us. You can't just open it up, read a verse, and take it as law. But you have to read it in context will all the other verses and then it will all make sense.

Cave astounding 'Human nature for gays to be rejected in a violent manner'

Editor;
Nick Cave, your performance on Tuesday night was a masterpiece! It was well planned and fully thought out assault on all close-minded bigots who live in our area. Not only can they not say a thing about the homosexual content of it, for fear of being branded "Puritanical," but they must keep quiet, too, about your physical traits (the color of your skin) for fear of being labeled "Racists."
We admire your ability in so brilliantly disguising your attack on the traditions of our forefathers. If only we could have figured out a way to have gotten this message across before you came, then we would not have these close-minded fundamentalists up in arms over your exposure, for they would have already brought into our message of complete freedom without any bounds. Thanks.
—Wynn A.T. Alcost
(Nathan Huntington)

Editor;
This is a letter in response to a Jan. 19 editorial concerning homosexuals and military service. The article centered on the case of Allen Schindler. Mr. Schindler was a sailor who, after revealing his homosexuality, died allegedly at the hands of two United States Naval officers.
The above mentioned editorial continued on to discuss the effect homosexuals have on military discipline and order. The article also questions the enforcement of and the constitutionality of the military ban on homosexuality.
I found the article to be full of non-supported (non-supportable) opinions, completely lacking in evidence and short of explanation.
Firstly, the author complained that the military is not in the business of protecting it's homosexual members. Since when is it the mission of the military to protect homosexuals? A military man or woman cannot expect to make that type of disclosure without receiving serious harassment. Don't get me wrong, I DO NOT condone the type of violence that was perpetrated on Seaman Schindler. However, by the same token, it is unfair to expect the military to defend this man more than any other of its members simply because he is homosexual.

The author went on to complain that the military, rather than dealing with homosexuals in what I can only assume should be a more human manner, simply discharges them.
Well, had the author done her homework, I am sure she would have found that there is an article in the Universal Code of Military Justice (UCMJ) which clearly stipulates homosexuality as grounds for dismissal from service by way of dishonorable discharge. This is because, among other reasons, upon enlistment all servicemen are required to sign a document which states that they have not partaken and will not partake in homosexual behavior.
The writer of that ill fated article quoted a Miss Margarethe Cammermeyer, who just last year was discharged from the Army after admitting she was homosexual. The former Col. Cammermeyer claims that gay men and women, rather than damaging military order and discipline, in fact reinforce military order and discipline. (Argonaut Jan. 19, 1993)

Somebody please explain to me how this is true. Logic and knowledge of the human character exclaim that the only effect open homosexuality can have in a fighting organization is a negative one. It is simple human nature that in a group of primarily heterosexual men, homosexuality will be completely rejected in a potentially violent manner. The process of this rejection will dig deep lines in the unity of any given military force.
Finally, the author suggest that the military ban on homosexuals is somehow in violation of the constitution. This is simply untrue. I have reviewed the constitution and cannot find any passage that could be legitimately used in defense of allowing homosexuals to openly serve in the Armed forces.

Please clear the sidewalks and walkways

Editor;
I am writing in reference to the maintenance of the campus walkways and sidewalks. While some remain clear of snow and ice many others do not.
It is the students who pay the wages of the physical plant workers. Where are these workers when the snow and ice remain? Does someone have to fall and break a limb and sue the university before something is done?
We students have the right to safety when walking, summer or winter. Please clear the sidewalks and walkways.

Local police are looking for your tax dollars

Cinch up your purse strings fair Muscovites, the tax man has arrived.

But these aren't your typical IRS collection officials in cheap suits and coke-bottle glasses. Instead, they sport badges and wear guns.

I'm referring to our local police department, and they are seeking anyone with loose bills that may be tucked under that seat cushion in the front seat.

Sandpoint resident Bernardino Garcia Espinoza found out the hard way that a person wants to have his wallet out of sight when pulled over in Moscow.

On October 16, 1992, Espinoza was pulled over on suspicion of speeding by Moscow officers Dave Lehmitz and Jim Kouril.

In a subsequent search of the car, the two officers discovered $7,220 in cash that was lying behind the back seat of Espinoza's car.

The money was seized by the officers, and although no drugs or criminal charges were ever filed, the police might get to keep the money.

According to a recent article in the Moscow-Pullman Daily News, the police may keep possession of the money through an inane law called the Idaho Uniformed Controlled Substance Act.

It allows police to keep materials that are suspected in drug activity.

Espinoza, as could be expected, was outraged and filed a claim in Latah County Magistrate Court on Nov. 5 to get his money back.

Idaho Assistant Attorney General Clayne Zollinger, Jr., who is acting as counsel for the state, said to Latah Magistrate William Hamlett that the officers lawfully seized the money.

He also said that a police dog sniffed at the money and indicated that it had been "tainted with a controlled substance." Stop everything.

Doug Taylor

COMMENTARY

There were no drugs present, but Fido alerted officers to the fact that the money was somehow involved in drug running?

This certainly sounds convincing.

I wonder how the dog indicated the presence of drugs when there were none present.

Did the dog devour the hand of the officer who was holding the money? Did he roll over and request a Scoobie snack?

Upon this shaky evidence, the MPD contends they can keep the money because of the aforementioned drug act.

Hamlett then summed up the ludicrous nature of the state's evidence when he said, "Your case rests in the nose of a drug dog?"

Nonetheless, state law is state law, and so Hamlett told Espinoza that in order to get his money back, he must account for all of the $7,220.

A court date of March 18 has been set, and so for the next two months, Espinoza must prove that the money is legitimately his.

This doesn't sound that difficult, but it becomes mind-boggling when looking at the list

Among several other requirements, Espinoza must show a monthly itemized list from the last five years to show all expenditures on food, clothing, shelter, entertainment, travel, insurance and so on. He must also list all sources of income for the past decade, including gambling winnings and interest among other things.

Espinoza must therefore "describe the world and give two examples," Hamlett said in righteous mockery of the drug act.

In reality, Espinoza must show the money is truly his, which is frightening in its implications.

Let's conduct a little example here.

Suppose you withdraw $5,000 from your savings account to put a down payment on that slick, blue VW bus sitting across town.

On the way to the dealership, you're whistling a merry tune and thinking about weekend ski trips to McCall in your new vehicle when suddenly a Moscow cruiser whips around. Busted!

The officer strolls to your window and informs you that one of your brake lights is out.

He looks on the seat and notices your $5,000. His eyes bulge, and he instructs you to slowly get out of your vehicle. After a rigorous search, he turns up nothing. He scratches at his forehead and looks dumbfounded.

Despite this, he grabs the cash and says auf wiederseh'n. Adding insult to injury, you have to prove that the cash belongs to you.

Now any reasonable person could see the justification in seizing a large sum of cash from a car if drugs, weapons or other illegal items were stashed in there also.

But it was just money that Kouril and Lehmitz found in Espinoza's car.

So once again, Idaho has reinforced its image of pioneer-style law enforcement where the burden of proof isn't on the various police departments of this state. It's on you.

Eagles perched with UI at top of BSC

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

This past October the two 1992 football powers in the Big Sky Conference met in Cheney to see who would remain undefeated in conference play.

Three months later it's a different sport, same scenerio, and those same two teams.

Tonight the Idaho Vandals will tangle with one of the two remaining unbeaten teams in the BSC when they tip-off with the Eastern Washington University Eagles. Game time is slated for 6:05 p.m. in the Kibbie Dome and will be televised live on Prime Sports Northwest.

Idaho (13-4 overall, 2-0 in league) and EWU (5-8, 2-0) show similarities in that both start only juniors and seniors.

But that is pretty much all the two have in common.

The Vandals have defeated the Eagles 14 times in a row spanning a six year period, and the last time EWU beat Idaho was when they swept the Vandals in 1986 while playing as an independent.

"You know I just looked at that stat and it really doesn't matter," Idaho head coach Larry Eustachy said of the streak. "Our philosophy has always been one game doesn't affect the next. They have a completely new team this year."

Leading the scoring attack for the Eagles this year are guards Brad Sebree and Carren Wilson, both of whom are juniors. Sebree, who was named co-Big Sky Player of the Week this past Monday, averages 12.2 points an outing and in the past four games the 6-footer has nailed 12-of-21 3-pointers. In EWU's home sweep of Montana State and the University of Montana last weekend, the Indiana native totaled 27 points, five assists and four steals. Wilson, the only other player in double-figures for EWU, pumps in 11.3 points per game and is first in the conference with a 49 percent 3-point field goal percentage.

"Wilson is an all-league guard and Sebree was just named player of the week," Eustachy said. "They've got two very good perimeter shooters and if you move out top to guard them they've got two good post players to go to."

Filling the middle for the Eagles are the two senior starters in 6-6 forward Austin Layton and 6-10 center Rick Swanwick. Layton, who leads the team in rebounding with 7.0 a game, is third in scoring with 8.3 points a game. Swanwick contributes 5.8 points a game and pulls down 4.5 rebounds.

"We've got some kids that are pretty good players," EWU head coach John Wade said. "They're going to come out and play."

For the Vandals, Orlando Lightfoot still remains the center of attention for defenses in the BSC, but other Idaho players have shown that they can contribute to the team's success as well. Against MSU last Saturday, forward Dan Serkin had career highs with seven points and five rebounds, Jeremy Brandt yanked down seven boards, and Chauncey McBride played all over the court.

"It really helps to have depth on this team," Eustachy said. "We're not a two-man team or a one-man team."

Wade shares Eustachy's view on the strength of Idaho's depth.

"They've got an outstanding team down there," Wade said. "It's no secret that Orlando is going to get his (points). You just have to try to make him work for it—you're not going to stop him. Deon (Watson) and Marvin (Ricks) are going to get theirs too, we just have to make them work for it all."

Two major differentials in the two teams lies in rebounding margin and scoring margin. While Idaho is leading the league with a plus-8.9 margin on the glass, the Eagles are seventh with a minus-3.1 deficiency. As far as scoring goes, Idaho is beating its opponents by about 10 points a game, while EWU is in the red with a minus-5.0 scoring margin.

"People talk about the

PSN airing Idaho game

Tonight when the Idaho Vandals clash with Eastern Washington for the 55th time, history will be made in the Kibbie Dome.

For the first time ever live television will broadcast a regular season basketball game from Idaho's home court. Last weekend Idaho appeared live on KTRV in Boise, but this is the sole time this season that Idaho will get a large viewing audience for a home game on Prime Sports Northwest.

Bill Cooper, a freelance producer for PSN, said the decision to televise the Idaho-EWU game was made months ago when the Big Sky schedule was made up, but added that the game is a good one market-wise.

"Prime Sports goes into Oregon, Washington, Idaho and Alaska," Cooper said. "Spokane and Moscow are a good market for Big Sky games because their locations fall into our area."

Cooper, who orchestrates everything from the timing of the tip-off to commercial breaks says that the subscription of PSN is right around 1.8 million and that can help a university in itself.

"The university can look at this as a two-hour recruiting commercial," Cooper said.

Like any live broadcast, what makes the atmosphere so impressive is the support and noise of the home crowd. For example, Duke Blue Devil fans, known as the "Cameron Crazies," get on ESPN weekly not only because Duke basketball is a perennial powerhouse, but because the fans alone are worth watching.

"We're trying to develop that," Cooper said of increasing fan support when PSN roles into town. "It would be good to have a lot of students make signs, paint their faces, and get loud to get their face on the tube. We'll be looking for them."

Vandal women clipped by Eagles

By DOUG TAYLOR
Assistant Editor

Following Thursday's game against Eastern Washington, Idaho women's basketball coach Laurie Turner scanned the stat sheet for something that would spark some optimism.

She didn't find much. Idaho shot just 34 percent and committed several late turnovers as EWU pulled away down the stretch for a 66-59 Big Sky Conference win.

The loss marked the sixth consecutive defeat for Idaho and dropped its record to 0-3 in conference and 4-10 overall. Idaho did have its chances, however.

Forward Kortnie Edwards dropped a jump shot with 7:07 left to cap a 6-0 UI run and give the Lady Vandals a 48-47 lead. But EWU guard Jodie Dorricott hit a critical 3-pointer to give the Eagles a 54-50 lead that they never relinquished.

Turner said her team is playing with enough inspiration to win right now, but the equation comes down to not enough basketballs falling through the hoop.

"The good thing is this team plays hard and is scrapping," Turner said. "We're just not putting the ball in the basket. Our leading scorer had 11 points, but it took her 17 shots to do it."

Turner was referring to guard Jennifer Clary, who was hampered into a 3-of-17 shooting night that effectively eliminated her from the Lady Vandals offense.

Eagles guard Keri Schwenke, who was assigned to guard Clary, paced all EWU scorers with 13 points.

The Lady Vandals' other player of note, Brenda Kuehlthau was having her difficulties also.

In the initial minutes of the second half, Kuehlthau picked up her fourth personal foul, which forced her to the bench for more than eight minutes.

When she returned with just over nine minutes remaining, she grabbed a key rebound and made a steal that set up Edwards' previously mentioned clutch jumper.

Kuehlthau ended up leading all Idaho scorers with 12 points.

For Eastern Washington coach Bill Smithpeters, it was a huge conference win.

"It has to be good for us," said the 17-year coach. "It doesn't put us over the bridge, but to come in here on the road and win a conference game is big for us."

Two items that had to please Turner were the performance of Karen Poncina and the play of reserves like former Moscow High School standout Jill Morris and Jeri Hymas.

Poncina dropped her status as role player for the evening as she scored eight points on 4-of-6 field goal attempts and snared seven rebounds.

Loss of hoop player is as tragic as it gets

To some, the way to measure what an individual had accomplished in their life before passing away is to reflect on what they had done for other people.

While still some may say that one's life can be admired on the basis of what they had done for themselves.

And then there's those people who leave this world much too early, that all can be said is 'god, they could have done so much more.'

As is the case with Chris Street. On Tuesday night the Iowa basketball star was returning back to campus after a team meeting when disaster struck. Street, who was behind the wheel of his car with his girlfriend seated next to him, collided with a dump truck and was killed instantly. His girlfriend was just slightly injured in the crash while the driver of the truck was not hurt.

After word of the tragedy, Iowa head coach Tom Davis met with the team to inform them of what had happened. Since that time Iowa's scheduled game last Wednesday night at home against Northwestern was cancelled and the same may happen with a game at Penn State set for tomorrow night.

For weeks, for months, and for years to come Street's family,

Kuehlthau hunts for killer instinct

By DOUG TAYLOR
Assistant Editor

Brenda Kuehlthau notices something missing from the University of Idaho women's basketball team this year.

Quite simply, the team is looking for some leaders.

"I would say that there is a certain killer instinct lacking on this year's team," said the 6-foot senior forward. "We have the talent, and the coaches are doing all they can. We're just not going after it right now. We need people to step up."

Idaho coach Laurie Turner said that Kuehlthau can be one of the players who reverse such a deficiency.

"When things aren't going well out on the court for this team, Brenda has to be one of the players who pull the team together," Turner said.

During the midst of her monologue on the team's troubles, a furrow creased Kuehlthau's brow, and she has every reason to be concerned. The team is hurting not only for killer instincts but wins as well.

The Vandals took a 4-9 record into Thursday's home game with Eastern Washington University and had lost five straight games, including their conference openers against Montana State and Montana last weekend.

Kuehlthau said the contest with the Eagles represented an important junction of the season for the Lady Vandals.

"I think that this game is a very important one because it can put us on the winning track and act as a confidence booster," Kuehlthau said. "It's at home and it's a conference game, so it's a big game."

The fact that the Lady Vandals are playing at home could be seen as something of a small victory for Kuehlthau and the Lady Vandals.

After starting the season by going 1-1 in the Safeco Classic on Dec. 4-5, the Lady Vandals have been on the road for nearly a month and a half.

After swings through California and the Oregon coast around the Christmas holidays, Idaho had come out with a respectable .500 record of 3-3. Then the road may have caught up with them.

Following an 11-point loss to Pacific in Stockton, Calif., on Jan. 3, UI absorbed road defeats at the hands of Baylor, Texas Christian and Montana. Rock bottom came on Saturday when Idaho limped into Bozeman to face a surging Montana St. squad.

Playing what Kuehlthau said was "far and away our worst game of the year," MSU took advantage of a noticeably flat Idaho team to roar to a 29-10 half-time lead that ended up a 74-45 Bobcat rout.

The expressive Kuehlthau grimaced at the mention of the game and then broke into laughter upon reflection.

"I hope it doesn't get any worse than that," she said chuckling. "I really shouldn't be laughing at all because it was absolutely embarrassing being out there. There were a lot of times in the first half when the team didn't know what to say out on the court."

Even though Turner has expressed disdain for the home-sweet-home theory, Kuehlthau did admit that the road trips were getting old.

"It's nice to be home for a few games," Kuehlthau said.

Nicer than that is the fact that Kuehlthau is playing college basketball, something she considers to be a dream come to life.

As a girl, Kuehlthau battled her sister in a make-shift basketball hoop that they constructed in the family barn in Kent, Wash., which is south of Seattle. These battles might have made the difference for once she reached the eighth grade, her mind was set on playing Division I women's college basketball.

Although she played softball in the off-season to keep active, Kuehlthau focused primarily on basketball during her four years at Kent-Meridian High School. While there, she began to develop the slashing moves to the basket that have characterized her career at Idaho.

Once she hit her senior year,

UI tennis ready to swing into action

By MISSY WILSON
Staff Writer

University of Idaho head tennis coach Dave Scott notes that if his men's and women's team can perform as well on the court this season as they do in the classroom, than they'll both have incredible success.

Scott, in his fifth year at Idaho, said that his team is doing an all-around great job this year both academically and athletically. He said that of the 14 men and women playing for him, four received 4.0 gpa's in the fall.

This fall has also brought major improvements to the teams. The girl's squad has played their toughest fall season yet, and Scott said they've benefitted from it.

"It's exciting to come to practice and see the girls improve daily," Scott said. "They've matured a great deal. They have more mental toughness and experience than last year. With the work ethic we've got, our win-loss column should improve."

Scott said that his top six women players have all shown consistent improvement and that making a line-up would be impossible at this point in the season with the exception of returning senior Merlene Ford, who Scott said will play at the No. 1 seed.

Although the level of competition this year is not comparable to seven years ago when Scott became part of the program, he believes that the Idaho women will be one of the top five teams competing for the conference title. The others include Idaho State University, Weber State University, Boise State University, Montana State University.

On the men's side, Scott points out that the team received a tough blow last year when No. 1 seed Scott Andersen graduated.

"Scott was a great player and an academic All-American," Scott said. "He was one of those kids who could do everything and do it right."

That vacant No. 1 position will be filled by Magnus Orrod, who took a leave of absence during the '92 season while returning to his native Sweden. Scott is also optimistic about freshman newcomer Chris Daniels.

"Chris has a lot of possibilities," Scott said. "He's a talented player and I think he will be a strong contender in the Big Sky."

Bob Uhlenkott, an Idaho graduate assistant, said that the work ethic on both the men's and the women's teams is impressive.

"The quality of these teams makes me excited to be a coach," Uhlenkott said. "A lot of programs don't have this dedication from both the players and the coaches. We are really lucky."

Scott said that Big Sky tennis has grown from being a mediocre program to one of the top five in the nation. Northern Arizona should be the team to beat on the men's side because the Lumberjacks still boast Michael Tebbutt, the 1992 defending Big Sky Conference champion.

Scott also believes that Weber State will again be tough, as the Wildcats have now won the conference 10 consecutive years. Idaho State, this year's regional champion, should also vie for the top spot.

"Those three teams (NAU, Weber, and ISU) will be in the top three," Scott said. "You can count us right in there, along with Montana State who is the biggest bunch of dog fighters in the conference."

Both the Vandal men and the women will compete in their first dual match February 4, 5 and 6 in the Kibbie Dome. Competition will also feature Montana, MSU, Lewis-Clark State College and Washington State University.

rebounding (for Idaho), but there are a lot of concerns when playing them," Wade said.

IDAHO INFO— Lightfoot has boosted his scoring average up to 20.2 points a game which now ranks him third in the conference. The 6-7 junior has scored 20-plus points in the last seven games in averaging 24.8 in that span... Point guard Ricky Wilson leads the league with 106 assists in averaging a league-best 6.2 a game, the most impressive showing by a Vandal point since Otis Livingston compiled 262 dishes in the '89-'90 season... Idaho's six-game winning streak is its longest since 1991, and Eustachy has yet to win seven in a row while at Idaho... The most memorable EWU-Idaho game came on March 10, 1990 in the BSC championship game in Boise. With the score tied 62-62, former Vandal Ricardo Boyd took an inbounds pass near half-court with four seconds remaining, dribbled once, and then hit nothing but the bottom of the net on a 3-pointer at the buzzer to give Idaho its second straight conference title.

friends, and teammates will question why such a thing had to happen to a man who was just two short weeks away from his 21 birthday.

They will question what this man could have done in a world full of challenges ready to be conquered, similar to those challenges he'd faced on the basketball court.

They will question where this son, this roommate, this grandson, or this neighbor is while they search for these answers as so many others have done before them.

Unfortunately, they are questions that have no immediate answers for those who must remain living without the Chris Street's of the world.

To sports fans, when an incident like this happens, the thought of competition, the thought of success, and the thought of winning all mean absolutely nothing. A thousand losses by every college basketball team in the country won't bring Chris Street back to life, but if so it would unarguably be the simplest trade-off for each school to make.

And as far as those asking the question of why someone like him could be raped of his life at such a young age, hopefully, somewhere out there, Chris is listening and replying, 'I did do so much.'

Because in real life, not just in sports, that's all that really matters.

Morris and Hymas logged 18 minutes between them while Kuehlthau was on the bench and held the Eagles defensively until Kuehlthau returned.

The Lady Vandals now host the Hornets of Sacramento St. tonight at 8 p.m. in the Kibbie Dome.

Familiarity with the Hornets isn't a problem for Turner and her Lady Vandals as Idaho defeated them earlier in the season 64-59 in Sacramento.

Turner said her team will key on Kristy Ryan, a 6-foot junior forward. Ryan is averaging a shade over 18 points a game and is tied for the team lead in rebounding. In the Jan. 1 meeting between the two teams, Ryan scored 21 points and seven rebounds. She had but two turnovers in 37 minutes of playing time.

Kuehlthau likewise had a good outing in the Jan. 1 meeting of the two teams.

She led Idaho with 21 points, eight rebounds and three steals.

Despite the earlier win, Turner said she is not looking past the Hornets.

"They are a scrappy bunch, and they like to set the tempo of the game," Turner said. "They like to play pressure defense that can cause a lot of quick turnovers for the other team."

Handling press defenses has been a source of concern for Turner all year long. The Lady Vandals have turned the ball over 274 times or 19.6 a contest.

Tonight's game is preceded by the men's match-up between EWU and Idaho. Game time is scheduled for 6:15 p.m.

Kuehlthau developed into the school's marquee player as she averaged 19 points and 14 rebounds a game. Despite the gaudy statistics, college scouts weren't exactly banging down her door.

"I had some offers, but they kind of fell through," Kuehlthau said. "I was all set to go to a junior college, and Idaho called at the last minute."

Literally, last minute at that.

Turner and her staff made a couple of inquiry phone calls to Kuehlthau in the last days before the NCAA signing deadline. From there, Kuehlthau was invited to Moscow on a recruiting trip.

She took all of about five minutes to sign on the dotted line.

"My desire to play Division I certainly played a part in me coming to Idaho, but it was more than just that," Kuehlthau said. "I liked the area immediately because everyone was so friendly to me. I signed the first time I was in Moscow because of this."

While Kuehlthau was eager to join the Idaho program, she did concede her freshman year at Idaho was a major adjustment.

"Whenever you come in as a freshman and you're used to being a star, reality kind of hits you," Kuehlthau noted. "My freshman year was hard because I did my time on the bench, but I learned that you have to accept your role. It just made me work harder to try and get some playing time."

Turner and the University of Idaho ended up making a sound investment.

Kuehlthau played significant minutes in each of her first three seasons at Idaho, improving in every offensive category. As a junior last year, Kuehlthau averaged a career-high 9.4 points a contest and 4.8 rebounds a game.

But these statistics have paled beside her statistics this year as she has averaged 14.2 points a contest and has been over the 20-point mark three different times this season. Kuehlthau is also leading the team in rebounds with over seven a game.

She can also think of one statistic that could use some work — her turnovers.

Kuehlthau has coughed up the ball a team-leading 57 times this year, which is 20 more than her closest competitor for the dubious honor.

When asked what her greatest strength was, Kuehlthau thought of two aspects that definitely didn't deserve merit.

"Well, my turnovers are certainly not a strength," she laughed. "I don't think it's my free-throw shooting either."

Turner was able to elaborate in more detail as to the highlights of Kuehlthau's overall game.

"Her strongest point has been her defense," Turner said. "We have stuck her on the opposing team's best player a few times, and she has done an above average job. She has also become much more of an offensive threat."

Leadership has also been something rolling off Turner's tongue of late, concerning Kuehlthau and teammate Kortnie Edwards.

"I'm starting to see the take-charge attitude that we need so badly right now," Turner said. "Brenda and Kortnie have spearheaded this by being more vocal on the court."

Controversial artist performs about masculine, feminine identity

By MICHELLE BARGEN
Contributing Writer

Performance artist Nick Cave showed his inner and outer self in his performance Tuesday night in the University of Idaho Administration Auditorium. He began with a short scenario about his father.

“He never touched me, never touched my hand, my face, and never spoke to me, but I love him,” Nick Cave repeatedly said. The audience was left to imagine why he dedicated his talent and love to a father, whom never actually raised him and was not part of his life.

Dressed in nothing except a Speedo, high heels, gloves and a turban, Cave portrayed himself as a woman, speaking of his father and displaying slides to the audience. Throughout the performance, Cave was occasionally shown putting on makeup and acting as a woman.

“In my shows, I try to help people understand masculine and feminine identity,” Cave explained. “I want men and women to understand each other better.”

Of the costumes Cave displayed, one consisted of wigs, which he described as a “fur personality,” despite the fact he stands against killing animals and is “anti-fur.”

Cave then came on stage, dressed in a glimmering short miniskirt and lip-synced a Tina Turner song. Cave infuses his cross-dressing with a spirited lightness, cunningly moving back and forth from male to female, pursuer to pursued. He believes in the transference of sensuality from one sex to another, and sexuality for him, like race, is integrationist rather than separatist.

Wanting to educate about AIDS, Cave showed a slide show of people infected and dying of the disease. It depicted pictures of people having safe intercourse and oral sex, not only between male and female, but between males.

A few people appeared somewhat offended by the graphic pictures and may have thought they were morally wrong, but Cave believes that the issue is reality, not morality.

Cave then appeared in his costume made of plastic garment tags after the slide show. He explained afterward that, “This costume symbolizes an angel and everyone coming to peace.”

His idea originating from a Northern African tribe, Cave performed his last setting. While dancing on stage in the nude, a student proceeded to run around him, painting Indian symbols, dots, and abstract lines. With the bold background music, this last portion of Cave’s performance seemed quite intense in perfecting the portrait of performance art.

“My main goal is to educate, and not offend my viewers,” Cave said. “I want my work to be about sensuality, not sexuality.”

Cave will work with dance, theatre, home economic and art students the remaining week. A performance from the students will be Monday at 7:30 p.m. in the Administration Auditorium.

Cave’s performance was sponsored by the Dept. of Art, School of Home Economics, Dept. of Theatre Arts, Dept. of Dance, ASUI, and the Martin Peace Institute.

‘Bohemian boogie grind’ comes to John’s Alley

By HALO DEWITT
Staff Writer

The Renegade Saints are returning back to John’s Alley tonight to celebrate their one year anniversary together.

Ray Fiero of John’s Alley said the last time the Renegade Saints were in Moscow they were “huge.” He went on to say that they have reached almost cult like status and that they have a “great following.”

The Renegade Saints made their debut on Jan. 17, 1992 at Belmont’s Inn in Portland, OR.

Since September, when the Saints were here last, they have released the album “Rendegade Saints.” The album is available at gigs, by mail order, or at Face the Music in Eugene, OR.

Bob Keefer of the Eugene Register-Guard writes of their September release, “Strong vocal harmonies and driving guitar work make for good dancing and good listening.”

The night of music and dancing starts at 9 p.m.

They have also done shows in Seattle, WA and all over Oregon. On Thursday, before they arrive in Moscow, they will play in Big Sky, MT.

The Renegade Saints have been together for just one year but they have already opened for Bob Dylan and Little Women. Many of the more than 200 shows they have performed have sold out.

The Saints have also done three tours through the Rocky Mountain states, which have only increased their popularity and their following.

The Saints’ September show in Moscow was set up by the band. Their anniversary show tonight was set up when they played here last year. Fiero said, “We’re lucky to have them.”

The Renegade Saints

According to Fiero, their style of music, which has been described as “Bohemian Boogie Grind” is “60’s throwback” music. He stressed that part of the band’s following comes because the band members have so much fun when they play their music.

Fiero said the Renegade Saints play “rock-n-roll, blues and a lot of feel.”

The Renegade Saints are a combination of members from the groups Mission District and Nine Days Wonder. Dave Coey and Mike Walker are originally from Nine Days Wonder. Matt Reynolds, Alan Toribio and John Shipe are from Mission District.

Some of the band’s influences were the Allman Brothers, Santana, Eric Clapton, Neil Young and Stevie Ray Vaughan. They have played at the Willamette Folk Festival in Eugene, OR, and at the Ballard Firehouse in Seattle, WA.

Fiero stressed that fans interested in seeing the Renegade Saints play should get to John’s Alley early because “it will be packed.”

McConnell features weavings

By LANAE EMPEY
Staff Writer

Weaving, spinning and lace making will be featured in "A Tale of Weaving in Two Cities," an exhibit to celebrate the 40th anniversary of the Palouse Weavers Guild at the McConnell Mansion Jan. 21 through March.

"We are trying to display some of our work, said Guild member Winnie Robinson. "We are also celebrating 40 years of weaving on the Palouse."

A highlight will be a large 1930s Swedish loom owned by UI weaving instructor, Shirley Medsker.

While in Stockholm, Sweden, Guild member Cynthia Hosick sketched a costume, came home and weaved a copy of the dress. The costume will be on display.

Also featured in the free exhibit will be contemporary weavings by the Guild. Examples of handmade laces, a bobbin lace maker, antique bobbins and yarns hand dyed from local plants will also be displayed.

During February and March, visitors can see Guild members working on a loom from 1:30 p.m. to 3:30 p.m. every Thursday at the McConnell Mansion located at 110 S. Adams in Moscow. Also, on Saturdays Jan. 30, Feb. 6 and Feb. 13, a series of demonstrations of weaving, spinning and lace making will be held.

On these Saturdays, the Latah County Historical Society will hold Victorian Valentine Warm-Ups at the McConnell Mansion. Vintage valentines will be displayed with free Valentine punch, coffee and cookies.

The exhibit is a celebration of the Guild activities, which began in 1953 in Pullman. Several wall exhibits include excerpts of the Guild's history, Joann Jones of the Latah County Historical Society said.

There are approximately 40 members from Whitman and Latah Counties sponsor displays, demonstrations, an annual show and sale in November and workshops on spinning and weaving techniques.

Great exercise for the mind & body

By RUSS WOOLSEY
Contributing Writer

The ASUI Outdoor Program is set to begin cross country and telemark skiing classes and trips for those students who feel like their minds and bodies are going downhill.

There is no better way to get away and enjoy the surrounding country-side and burn-off extra calories to than with a day or weekend skiing trip.

With all of the snow this year, the opportunity to ski outside of a resort's boundary is infinite. Given the right equipment and instruction, cross country and telemark skiing can be learned quickly and painlessly.

Moscow Mountain, or an open field on campus can challenge the beginning skier for hours. A short drive to North/South ski area (located 40 miles north-east of Moscow on U.S. Highway 6) will provide the cross country skier with intermediate loop trails. The beginning telemarker can also practice turns next to the North/South Ski Bowl lodge with a rope-tow pass that can be purchased for $6.

If a beginning cross country skier is looking for instruction the ASUI Program is offering three instructional trips to begin on Jan. 23, with the last of the trips ending on Feb. 13. Each of the three sessions will provide a class session and instructional trip. The cost is $8 without equipment.

Two clinics will be held for the first time telemark skier. Clinic No. 1 will begin Jan. 26 with a class session, and then two evenings of skiing at North/South Ski Bowl on Jan. 27 and Feb. 3. The cost is $15 without equipment or a lift pass.

Clinic No. 2 will begin with a class session on Feb. 4 and then a day of skiing on Feb. 6. Clinic No. 2 costs $10 without equipment or a lift pass.

Two back-country trips have been planned for the advanced telemark skier in Feb. The first will be a day trip on Feb. 6 with a pre-trip meeting on Feb. 3. The second trip will be a three day back-country trip in the Eagle Cap Wilderness between Feb. 12 and 15. Pre-trip will be held on Feb. 11, the cost is $15.

Nordic, Alpine and telemarking equipment is available for rent at the ASUI Outdoor Rental Center located in the basement of the Student Union Building. Student cross country ski packages are $4, telemarking packages $10, and downhill packages $16 for students.

Seating is limited on all trips and classes. Information and sign-up sheets for the cross country skiing and other activities scheduled for Spring '93 can be found in the ASUI Outdoor Program office located in the basement of the SUB. The office can be reached by phone (885-6170) Monday through Friday 8 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Key-note speaker addresses problems of humanity

By PATTI CROW

Wednesday's Keynote Address commemorating slain civil rights leader, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. covered some problems facing humanity and how his vision could help people solve them.

The evening's events began with a march from Friendship Square in a bone-chilling wind up to the University of Idaho Administration Auditorium for the Martin Luther King, Jr. Week Celebration for the keynote address by Dr. Blossom O'Neally-Nelson.

Dr. O'Neally-Nelson said the U.S. commitment to the celebration of King's birthday is an "unequivocal statement of the esteem in which (he) is held." She added that this leader who hungered for peace, has a significant place in both U.S. and world history.

O'Neally-Nelson, the executive director of the National Development Foundation of Jamaica said that King promoted "the peaceful resolution of problems" and "the full involvement of the individual" in their community. For King, civil disobedience could also be used to achieve a civil society and react to unjust laws and systems.

In spite of the gains made in civil rights, O'Neally-Nelson said that because of lingering bigotry, greed, and differences in opinion, "we live in the shadow of a reversal of all that King fought for."

Part of our problems, she noted, is that we have become consumed with our technological advances and aesthetic creativity and have neglected or ignored human conflict that has developed.

And from this conflict, internal violence has erupted, especially in the Third World of which O'Neally-Nelson's native Jamaica is a part.

She urged people to find hope in the momentous events such as the end of the Cold War, the tearing down of the Berlin Wall and the appointment of the first Black Chief of Staff of the U.S. armed forces.

She referred to a "New Generation" that has inherited challenges, and the need for leaders "to address today's profoundly different world."

O'Neally-Nelson also mentioned that everyone will need to develop a heightened consciousness and consideration of others to find meaning and stop humanity from "losing the world."

She then addressed the commitments to global improvements of Presidents George Bush and Bill Clinton along with her guidelines for the progress of northern and southern countries of the world.

O'Neally-Nelson also called for a renewed activism to "move beyond (people's) belief systems into action and responsibility, and in terms of the welfare of the many."

She said that the U.S. should not lapse into isolationism as "the world needs your leadership, now, more than ever, it is all the more imperative, therefore, to strengthen the ramparts of your heritage and to pass on to the young adults in a conscious way your ideals and your dreams."

O'Neally-Nelson quoted King from his final work, Where Do We Go From Here? Chaos or Community? in the last chapter, The World House:

"All inhabitants of the World are neighbors, nothing could be more tragic than for men to live in these revolutionary times and fail to achieve the new attitudes and the new mental outlooks that the new situation demands."

HEALTH & FITNESS

GUEST COMMENTARY BY CATHY HANSON

ACHOO! SNIFF...

You've got a runny nose, you're sneezing and you feel chilled. Next, you have a sore throat, fever and your head feels congested. Or maybe you develop a cough or a headache. You've lost your appetite and you feel tired. You've caught a cold.

WHAT IS A COLD?

A cold is an infection caused by a virus. There are at least 150 different cold viruses, and while you may develop immunity to a particular one when you have a cold, you may still be susceptible to numerous others.

Antibiotics won't help either. Antibiotics attack bacteria and fungi. Since colds are caused by viruses, antibiotics won't help.

Colds aren't caused by bad weather or getting chilled. Stress, fatigue and poor diet can increase your susceptibility to colds.

WHAT CAN YOU DO?

Over the counter cold remedies may provide some relief of your symptoms. But the old home remedy of rest, warmth, fluids and Tylenol (acetaminophen) is still your best bet.

THINGS YOU SHOULD KNOW:

1. Rest will help you fight your cold. Take it easy; learn to listen to your body.
2. Fever in itself is not dangerous; it's a symptom of infection and may cause discomfort. Aspirin or acetaminophen (Tylenol or Datril) are good fever-reducing medicines.
3. Sore throats can be treated by gargling with warm salt water (1/2 tsp. salt to 8 oz. of water) at least every two to four hours or more often. Throat lozenges can provide temporary relief;

aspirin or acetaminophen may also help.

4. Nasal or chest congestion and cough should be treated with plenty of fluids. Drinking lots of hot or cold fluids will help loosen secretions in your respiratory tract and prevent complications such as bronchitis, ear infection and sinusitis. Cough suppressants containing dextromethorphan (such as Robitussin DM) may help a dry, irritating cough. Decongestants (such as Sudafed) may relieve nasal, sinus and ear congestion. Be sure to follow the directions listed on these medications. Nasal sprays (such as Afrin) may be more effective at relieving congestion, but should not be used for more than three days.

COME TO STUDENT HEALTH SERVICES IS YOU HAVE:

- A temperature of over 101 degrees.
- Severe headaches or pain around your eyes or over your sinuses.
- Significant ear pain (throbbing, not just plugged up).
- A cough that produces green or bloody phlegm.
- Wheezing or pains in the chest when you take a deep breath.
- Severely swollen glands (lymph nodes).
- Intimate exposure to someone with proven strep throat.
- Enlarged and reddened tonsils; white spots on them.
- Excessive fatigue or runny nose which has lasted more than 14 days.
- A cough for more than 10 days.
