Committee holds forum to respond to discriminatory actions

By JEFF KAPOSTASY
Staff Writer

Right now, a person can be fired from their job because he or she is homosexual.

That doesn't make Thomas Talboy and the Non-discrimination Committee too happy.

"If I want to go around parading as a Catholic, they can't fire me," Talboy said. "But if they find out I'm a homosexual, I can lose my job."

This was one of the topics six members of the committee addressed at an open forum Tuesday night in the SUB. The forum gave interested people a chance to speak their minds and ask questions about the work of the committee.

About 35 people filtered into the Ballroom to listen, ask questions, and otherwise get informed.

The purpose of the committee is to fight any kind of discrimination based on sexual preference. Currently, the committee is working to amend the Statement of Student Rights to protect students from such discrimination.

As of now, there is nothing binding and specific to protect students from being fired or otherwise harassed because of sexual preference.

Clarke Tibbitts, a law student and member of the committee, said a change to include such protection is long overdue.

"We all have some fundamental rights because we are human beings," Tibbitts said.

Although the audience was small, there were plenty of questions to keep the committee busy. Inquiries about the committee's purpose, plans, and long-term goals helped keep the forum rolling for just under two hours.

The length of the forum was helped along by President Rock's arrival. At times, the audience seemed more interested in what Rock had to say than what the committee had to say.

Rock and the committee have not seen eye to eye in the past. Rock is still planning to ask the students what they think about the committee's work in the form of a question on the ASUI's April ballot. Members of the committee have said Rock's been anything but helpful to their cause.

Rock has sought the help of the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Alliance and the committee with the wording of the question. Originally, the Alliance had said they'd help Rock. But at the forum, a member of the Alliance said they'd decided to stick with the decision of the committee to not help. This baffled Rock.

"Why not submit a question," Rock asked. "Are you saying you can't come up with a question telling people what the committee is about in two-and-a-half weeks?" Rock hopes to have the question ready for proposal to the senate by Feb. 10.

"I don't think it's time," Talboy said. "I'm not sure everybody really knows what we're about. It's too soon." Talboy also feared that helping with the question would turn the situation into a "political pawn."

Talboy said the committee, through publicity, visiting living groups, and forums like Tuesday's will educate the university to their purpose.

Several members of the audience hounded Rock and accused him of being an obstacle to the committee when, some felt, he should be paving the way for their work.

Rock was reluctant to say much. He reasoned that answering questions would put him squarely where his personal beliefs don't belong. In the end, Rock hopes the students will answer the question next election.

"I knew what I was walking into," Rock said. "People kept fishing for my personal feelings about the committee."

Alan Rose, a member of the University of Idaho Federation of Teachers delivered some good news to the committee. The Federation voted to propose an amendment to the Faculty/Staff Handbook. The amendment will read:

"The University of Idaho does not discriminate on the basis of sexual preference/orientation."

This is exactly the kind of wording the committee wishes to add to the Statement of Student Rights. Talboy said he is "most joyous" to hear this.

"He (Rock) has not taken a leadership role to get rid of this kind of discrimination," Rose said after the forum. "I would hope the students would have someone leading a charge for human rights."

Talboy said people are definitely talking about the committee. Thanks to publicity and increasing awareness, they will continue their work election or no election.

Quiet Palouse takes on appearance of big city with recent violence

By GREG BURTON
Staff Writer

"If people are going to start jumping out of the bushes, it kinda makes me want to carry a gun."

These are the words of Richard Ingram, a sophomore at the University of Idaho.

Ingram was commenting on the escalation of violence on the Palouse, while reading an article about "Trans-Am assaults" at Washington State University.

Two unidentified males have assaulted three joggers on different occasions at WSU, punching them and attempting to take their wallets.

"The violence isn't going to stop. People need to protect themselves," said Ingram.

On the UI campus there have been several incidents where students have fired pellet guns, either at inanimate objects or at other students.

One WSU student, deeming that snowballs were not enough, equipped himself with a loaded .38 caliber handgun during a dispute between two WSU fraternity's.

"In our own town we have the Husky Station where you can fill your car up with gas, and buy a gun while you wait," said Jamie Dougherty, a UI senior. "It's just too easy to buy a gun."

Vijay Subramaniam, a graduate student from Malaysia, said that in his country only the police are allowed to have guns.

"I thought the fight at Xenon was just another incident, that it goes on all the time," said Subramaniam.

The fight at Xenon, while a gun has not been found, involved one man threatening to kill someone, anyone, as attested to by witnesses.

"I think we should get Wyatt Earp and the boys to clean up this town," said WSU senior Mike Nilsson.

Warning to students about bogus services

By SHARI IRETON
News Editor

Being in college means being tight on money.

College students spend much of their time looking for any available spare change, including scholarships. However, some companies who offer to search for scholarships for a small fee may be bogus.

According to a recent statement released by the Idaho Attorney General's Office, the Consumer Protection Unit has filed a lawsuit against an out-of-state scholarship reference service.

Larry EchoHawk, attorney general, alleged that The Scholarship Foundation of Dallas, Texas, promised students that for a fee of $100 they would receive at least $1,700 in scholarships in return.

The students received a list of possible scholarships, but no attempt was made to match the students with any sources. Many of the sources were outdated and when students asked for a refund, their requests were ignored.

Brett DeLange, chief of the Consumer Protection Unit, said the attorney general's office now has a court order prohibiting The Scholarship Foundation from doing any business in Idaho.

"We have taken action against other scholarship services in the past," he added.

DeLange's advice to students who receive a letter from commercial services is to "trash it."

This action follows a recent consumer alert issued by the New York City Better Business Bureau last September. In an article by the National Association of Student Financial Aid Administrators Newsletter the Bureau researched some of the services and found "that while students may receive potential sources of aid, few, if any, receive funds."

The article said the NYC Bureau's investigation revealed that "none of the firms, save one, were able to verify to the Bureau that any students had obtained

Future of Idaho mining industry discussed

By DAVID JACKSON
Staff Writer

The future of mining and processing in Idaho looks solid, according to Robert Bartlett, dean of the College of Mines.

Bartlett was the featured speaker at the first segment of the University Roundtable for the spring of 1993, sponsored by the College of Letters and Science. Bartlett's lecture, entitled "The Future of Idaho's Extractive Industries," was the first in a series of four talks concerning issues facing our state.

These lunchtime lectures at the Student Union Building are open to the public and designed to inform interested parties about issues affecting the Gem State. According to Larry Merk, director of the UI Center of Business Development and Resources and moderator of the first lecture, "these discussions will provide a great chance for interdisciplinary dialogue concerning these important topics."

Bartlett said Idaho's most important revenue resource will decline a bit in the future, although it will remain an important industry.

"In 1990, mines revenue was approximately $883 million. In 1992, the projected revenue is about $770 million," he said. "It is still the largest national industry in Idaho."

Bartlett also said that despite Idaho's reputation for silver and gold production, a not so famous product will lead Idaho into the future.

"Phosphate mining and production will by far be the biggest chunk of our budget, about two-thirds of the $883 million," he said.

"Idaho is a haven for elemental phosphates because our higher ore grades and our cheap electricity. Phosphate is being slowly phased out of commercial use in some things, but all of the production nationally will be in Idaho."

Bartlett explained that despite the resources of silver at the Coeur d'Alene mining district, its usefulness is diminishing.

"The problem with Coeur d'Alene is that it's the deepest ore deposit in North America," he explained. "The labor intensity is high and the production is low. The ore is still there, it's just a question of economics."

Bartlett also said gold could play a future in Idaho's mining operations, but that will depend on factors outside of the state's control.

"We have two big deposits of a

Hispanic students discuss rights

By BRANDY CORGATELLI
Staff Writer

Hispanic representatives had a hard time getting to the University of Idaho this weekend, but weather may have been the smallest of the many challenges facing the newly-formed group, Hispanic Collegians of Idaho.

Students from Boise State University and Idaho State University were forced to travel the Oregon and Washington roads to Moscow Friday night when they heard on the radio the Lewiston grade was closed.

Once in Moscow, the students met with UI delegates all day Saturday in an HCI board meeting.

HCI is a three-year-old coalition of Idaho universities and colleges. The group meets once every two months during the school year, rotating campus locations for each meeting.

The long range goals of HCI are acting as an information source to Hispanics, acting as a support group for each other and getting more Hispanic students to finish high school and go on to college.

Right now there are about 1,000 Hispanic students attending Idaho colleges or universities. "We want to get out of the fields and get into the offices," Rene Hurtado, chairman of the HCI Board of Directors, said.

As an information disseminator, HCI would like to be able to tell prospective college students which is the best school in the state for the program they are interested in. HCI also wants to spread scholarship information to Hispanic students. There are many national scholarships for Hispanics, but most Idahoans aren't aware of them, Hurtado said.

Those involved with HCI also plan to lobby their universities for improvements in Hispanic services.

Vicky Salinas, a student at the UI, said the university needs a GED program geared specifically to Hispanic students who are unable to complete high school. Salinas said she has many friends who would have come to UI, but went to BSU instead because UI lacked such a program.

"It should be available at all universities," she said.

Gilberto Ruiz, a member of the HCI board of directors, is one such student who received a GED and is now attending ISU. Ruiz, who had to drop out of high school as a sophomore and return to Mexico for a while, always emphasizes two things to younger Hispanics.

"I tell them they should be proud of their Latino culture and get that education," Ruiz said.

Bill Van Dyke, a UI student graduating in May, said all Idaho universities should offer registrations in the Spanish language.

"Zinser has been pushing increasing minorities so she should give them the means to sign up," Van Dyke said.

billion ounces, one outside of Yellowstone and one outside of Salmon," he said. "Right now the owners of those properties are sitting on them waiting to see what the new federal government will do. If inflation rises, gold prices could go up and we could see some action."

The environment was also a topic of concern addressed by Bartlett. He said that while mining is a very visible use of land because of the physical presence, mining operations are careful to oversee environmental precautions. He also gave examples of natural occurrences doing more damage to the environment than humans.

"A volcanic eruption last summer caused more damage than 200 years of the copper industry," he said.

For the foreseeable future, Bartlett hinted that mining and related industries may lose some funding here and there, but would remain one of Idaho's most important resources.

"There won't be a lot of change. It's pretty stable," he said. "New technology could affect things and as the state grows, we will get a smaller percentage of the state's resources, but Idaho began with the mining industry and it will remain strong."

"Mining has and always will be a vital part of Idaho's economy and industry," agreed Carlos Schwantes, professor of history.

The second lecture of the University Roundtable is scheduled for 12:30 p.m. Feb. 17 in the Silver and Gold Room of the SUB. The topic will be Idaho Tourism Today and Tomorrow.

"Seriously," said Nilsson, "I think the problem is symptomatic of the nation as a whole."

UI Campus Police Liaison Jake Kershnik said, "when someone brings a gun to a snowball fight you have to wonder what they are thinking. You never know what the other guy is thinking."

Kershnik said his office is attempting to better coordinate their efforts with other law enforcement agencies on the Palouse.

"I believe in the right to bear arms, but it can be a two-sided sword," said junior LeAnn Subramaniam said the strict laws in his country deter violence and crime. "Just to have 200 grams of cannabis is punishable by hanging."

"There needs to be more walk programs on campus, and they need to extend to downtown Moscow too," said Ingram. "The hours at the library extend longer than any of the escort services available. That needs to change."

"What is sad," said Vargo, "is that a small community like ours can be affected by a national problem. Where will it end?"

New IFC members take office for the new year

By TIM HELMKE
Staff Writer

With the new year beginning at the University of Idaho comes the installation of the new Inter-Fraternity Council officers.

The new officers, who represent the 19 fraternities here at the UI were elected in December and began their official duties Tuesday night.

Some of the faces are new to IFC and others have held previous offices or were representatives for their house.

Shelby Leforgee, of Sigma Nu, will take over IFC president duties from Reed Mahan.

Leforgee has spent several semesters as a representative for Sigma Nu and decided to run for President when elections were held. Leforgee wishes to strengthen relations between houses and to the alert the community of the positive service fraternities offer to them.

Linda Wilson, UI Greek Advisor, feels Leforgee has the experience and leadership skills important to fill the office. "Shelby is a fine choice for IFC president and will get things accomplished. He has the ability to get people to work together to get things done," said Wilson.

Steve Sutherland of Alpha Kappa Lambda, will serve as the new IFC vice president. Sutherland had previously served as an AKL representative before taking a year to serve as his chapter president.

He is eager to get back into being involved in IFC and working with other chapters on campus.

"I like to work with other people representing other chapters on campus as it gives me a feel for what is going on. I feel that with this form of interaction on IFC, people in the UI Greek system can achieve common goals for the whole community," said Sutherland.

Bill Porter, an Alpha Kappa Lambda National executive council member, feels that it is important for a house to hold IFC positions as they can better improve their own chapter from interaction with the other chapters. Porter has worked extensively with Sutherland and feels that he has the skills needed to serve the office well. "Steve is a great leader and offers a great amount of experience to the IFC," said Porter.

Other people who were elected to IFC positions and will be installed at tonight's meeting are:

- Secretary: Tucker Shaw - Farm House
  - Treasurer: Eric Pierce - Sigma Alpha Epsilon
  - PR Chairman: Pete Mundt - Farm House
  - Sorority Relations Chairman: Robert Diamond - Tau Kappa Epsilon
  - Fraternity Relations Chairman: John Roters - Theta Chi
  - Greek Week Chairman: Craig Pobst - Alpha Tau Omega
  - Rush Chairman: Ben Chase - Phi Gamma Delta
- Wilson feels that these new officers will work together to make the IFC a learning environment. "The new officers will make IFC a place where each chapter can find new ideas and new meanings to their chapters," said Wilson.

Looks like middle class will pay for deficit reduction

Well, so much for a "populist" presidency.

In order to encourage fuel conservation and reduce the federal deficit, Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen recently suggested that a tax on all forms of energy wouldn't be such a bad idea.

Bentsen also hinted that the middle class tax cut proposal President Bill Clinton spoke about during the campaign will never materialize.

Now there is a novelty. A politician who makes promises that he never intended to keep. Middle class America, welcome to political reality, where someone else has the party but we get the bill.

No pun intended.

According to reports, if a five percent energy tax were enacted, a family that spent $160 a month for gasoline and utility bills would chip an extra $96 into the federal coffers each year.

Doesn't sound like much, does it? It works out to just over 26 cents a day. Even if you figure in the prices of other products and services that would rise as the higher cost of fuel was passed down to consumers, the difference might be piddling.

The tax may actually be — perish the thought — a wise move if it helps cut into the federal deficit and forces us to develop alternate and renewable forms of energy.

Unfortunately, however, the tax is regressive. That is what has many people steamed.

During the presidential campaign, Clinton ran as a flesh-pressing populist. Night after night he said the deficit could be reduced with a minimum of discomfort by increasing the taxes of wealthy individuals and by improving the way the government is run.

Since then he has hummed a different tune, emphasizing the difficulty of the task at hand. Administration officials working on the president's economic package confessed that the measures offered by Clinton during the campaign were always insufficient, and that they had underestimated the difficulty in cutting the deficit.

As Elvis once said, "Ah-thank ya, thank ya very much." It's great to hear administration officials clear their collective conscience after Clinton has taken the oath of office.

Most people have probably heard about the phoenix, the legendary bird that would burn itself to death and then rise fresh and young from the ashes.

We may be witnessing the phoenix phenomenon in reverse. Clinton took office fresh and young and may now be degrading into a pile of ash.

Deficit reduction is a tough job, but Clinton may pull it off. He will have to battle armies of entrenched bureaucrats and a Congress that has a historical affinity for spending our money quicker than they can tax it. He may rally the American middle class into supporting his tax increase, regressive though it may be.

In any case, get your checkbooks ready.

COMMENTARY

"It is incumbent upon anyone who knows nothing about guns to receive proper instructions in use and storage. Understand the destructive capabilities of a gun and the range of a bullet." — Moscow Police Chief William Brown.

Once again, California has proved to be a trendsetter for the rest of the country. Only this time, the nation may want California to keep its fad.

In several recent articles, Californians, especially those in the soupbowl of Southern California, have taken to buying handguns that will not only protect oneself but also work as a fashion statement.

Rationale for the increased gun sales has been in part explained by the Los Angeles riots last year. People no longer feel safe and have started to take means by which to protect themselves.

Also, however, there is an appalling sense of fashion and style that is being associated with carrying a gun in California right now. People are talking about guns as they normally would about sports cars or jewelry.

According to a Wednesday story in The Spokesman Review, guns are increasingly being packed by the jet-set crowd of Los Angeles and surrounding areas.

Wait until Hillary Clinton finds out

Our country is in trouble. Republicans have been saying so for months, scared by the new donkey (party symbol) in the White House. Now the two-week-old president has done something really big and dangerous.

The tabloids are going to smear the name of this fine nation in the muck. It will be a catastrophe on the magnitude of the Prince Charles-Lady Diana separation. Our country will soon be rocked by the divorce of Bill and Hillary.

Sounds unlikely? Wait until Hillary finds out. That is if she lives long enough to find out. Bill is out to get her. He wants to get her out of his sight and possibly even destroy her.

It all started so innocently. That was the brilliance of Bill's plan. Hillary will be honored when I appoint her head of the health care task force, Bill thought. She won't even notice the noose I'm slipping around her neck. But Bill, in his excitement, slipped up and betrayed his intentions while speaking to newspaper reporters.

Brandy Corgatelli

COMMENTARY

Quoting from the Tuesday Spokesman Review, "The president said that the task force would work 'day and night...'" No, Hillary won't be at the White House rearranging furniture or baking cookies, as columnist Sandy Grady of Knight-Ridder correctly pointed out. In fact, Hillary won't even set foot inside the White House at all for the next 100 days. She will be slaving over that report 24 hours a day.

You would think Bill would give her a little time off to be a mother and wife. At least a little time off to rest. Bill must not want her around his big white house at all.

That's not even the worst part of President Clinton's remarks. He wants Hillary dead. It's premeditated, first degree murder folks.

Finishing up the newspaper quote, "The president said that the task force would work 'day and night' out of a 'war room.'" A war room? She's going to be studying health care in military barracks? Hillary could be rattled with bullets or filled full of shrapnel at any moment. Bill's placing her on the front lines (probably somewhere near Iraq), figuring she won't survive.

When Hillary realizes that Bill has a death wish for her, watch out for one of the ugliest and most publicized divorce cases ever. And remember Bill, she's a lawyer. You'll be lucky to keep the White House in the settlement.

So much for the tabloid news, now for some really disturbing (and completely serious) news. A northern Idaho man was charged last week with sexual harassment. If he went to trial today, the

Letters to the Editor: Students speak out about A.S.U.I. President

Editor;

Richard Rock's referendum is nothing less than a public filibuster. Why else would you have a referendum to see if we should have a referendum? Could it be a stall tactic? Hmmm ... Isn't that special!

By putting off this important discussion until the April ballot, to even consider talking about it, seems to be a ploy. With Rock's referendum the ASUI will not act to consider defending basic civil and human rights until the fall semester.

Why the delay? Maybe a hope that the issue will die.

How abhorrible for a student body president to allow discrimination to be used against his fellow students. It is the responsibility of the government to protect ALL of its people from such crimes no matter how unpopular it may be. This country was founded on majority rule and minority rights. As students we cannot allow this disregard of fellow students' rights to continue.

At this time it has become necessary to exercise our rights as students. We must send a loud and clear message that we support the incorporation of basic civil rights and anti-discrimination protection for ALL University of Idaho students. Sign the petition to recall Richard Rock.

—Shane R. Sanford

Editor;

I am writing to express my views about the recent controversy surrounding ASUI President Richard Rock. I have known Rick for a year and have frequently disagreed with his political views. However, I feel that he has been misrepresented by some people on campus who disagree with his political views.

I believe that those individuals who are organizing the recall election are doing themselves and the university a disservice. If their point is to promote the work of the Non-Discriminatory Language Committee, then they should focus on that and not assassinating Rick's character. Rick has publicly stated that if the student body informs him, through a referendum, that they support the committee's work, that he would also support its efforts. I also find it abhorrent that those organizing the recall did not have the courage and integrity to inform Rick themselves. It is the right of those students to disagree with Rick and take the action they deem appropriate. However, the way they have gone about it shows a lack of maturity and taste.

Many people assume that because Rick is politically conservative that he is anti-gay. Being a Republican doesn't make a person bigoted and discriminatory any more than being a white makes a person racist. Rick is a good, kind, fair-minded individual who only wants to serve the student body and contribute to his school. Hopefully, the students will give him a chance to do it.

—Tanya Madison

Editor;

As I read the editorials about gay rights, freedom of choice for abortion and the bigot attitude of the religious right, I can't help but look at our history. In the 40s the most common disciplinary problems in the elementary school were chewing gum, talking and running in the halls. In the 70s the chief fears of a student at the junior high level were dark rooms, high places, strangers and loud noises.

Now a dark place is a comfort zone compared to the horrid fear of getting AIDS. The kids that ran down the halls at school are now running from bedroom to bedroom with a condom that has a 20 percent failure rate, hoping that the AIDS virus will some how pass them by. My what a change we have made. We sure are evolving, NOT!

Even as late as 1984 a Gallup poll finds that most Americans agreed that children need to develop "a reliable standard of right and wrong." Yet we have convinced ourselves that slogans save us. "Shoot up if you must, but use a clean needle." "Enjoy sex whenever and with whomever you wish, but wear a condom." Those standards are about as reliable as Bill Clinton's commitment to not raise taxes on the middle class.

Looking at what the youth today have to face, proves to me that our morals are crumbling rapidly; AIDS is taking on a new meaning. Acquired Integrity Deficiency Syndrome, and at the UI we attack our ASUI president for having reliable moral standards. It makes no sense. If Richard Rock has moral convictions about "sexual preference" and is willing to stand firm on them then he should be honored. To recall the election of Rock would prove that the UI students are deficient in integrity and respect.

—Matthew Gibbon

Editor;

We elected Mr. Rock to a one year term as ASUI president — with the full responsibility of hand-picking responsible people to work with him — and now I hear rumbling that a few disgruntled people do not like his picks. BIG DEAL. Democrat Gov. Andrus just two year ago got rid of a 42-year-old woman, head of the Department of Health and Human Services, for one simple reason. BECAUSE.

It's called serving at the pleasure of the executive. No executive on Capitol Hill or the White House is bound by the "rules of non-discrimination" nor should they be. When we, by majority vote, elect a thing (note the use of non-discriminatory language) to represent us to accomplish a certain task, we step back and give it the space to work. If we do not like the methodology it uses, so long as it does not do criminal activities, our best recourse is the ballot box.

If we want to pay $1,900 from our student fees to recall Mr. Rock, we should analyze if there is any better use of our money. Case in point, I have brought the idea to several ASUI senators to organize a book swap so that when we have finished our use of an assigned book. We can get a lot more than the average 10 to 25 percent return that we get at the bookstore.

To do this right, I need a computer terminal set up in a strategic location, so that students can preregister for books right alongside preregistration for classes. I also need roughly $5,000 to set up the logistics of this operation (databases, hardware, operators for one week, etc.)

I estimate the saving to students here at UI could run over $100,000. But if we are shortsighted enough to waste our money on a recall like this one, then maybe we're saying we've got more money than we need.

Editor;
This letter is in response to Frank Lockwood's plea for the ASUI Senate to break the "deafening" silence in reference to Richard Rock's actions.

The ASUI is not Rock's mother. The Senate is the legislative and budgetary decision-making body of the ASUI.

Lockwood has attacked the Senate recently for holding an emergency session which he thought might be in conflict with Idaho open meetings legislation. He was wrong. The Senate was unequivocally in the right.

Lockwood has attacked the Senate for not standing up and choosing sides in the controversy surrounding Rock and former Attorney General Thomas Talboy. I don't know if Lockwood wants the Senate to call Rock a bully or a hero. I've been flooded with about all I can stand from KUOI and the Argonaut about this incident.

Rock and Talboy came to what Rock called "a positive and acceptable solution for both sides." That was announced on Dec. 6, 1992. Talboy in his resignation expressed his relief that the matter had been resolved and was finally over.

Lockwood attacked Rock in a KUOI interview on Dec. 4. He based his attack on the allegations of one individual, and even boldly requested that Rock submit to a lie-detector test to prove his innocence. In the United States, due process dictates the "innocent until proven guilty" ideology.

Rock responded by requesting that KUOI revise their policy on live interviews to prevent the tactics of Lockwood from being employed again. Rock was informed that any such action would be unconstitutional, and subsequently withdrew his request with apology.

Lockwood feels responsible to be the ASUI's watch-dog. I'm sure that he will see fit to continue in the path he has worn.

However distasteful Lockwood's style of newsgathering and reporting may be, I too believe he has the right to do so under the protection of the First Amendment.

The ASUI Senators have better things to spend their time and energy on than Lockwood, who hides his own personal agenda behind the ASUI-funded media.

I would like to commend the other Senators for staying on task and working together for the improvement of the ASUI. I would like to offer this promise to the people who elected me to the ASUI Senate: I will continue to perform as a representative of the entire membership of the ASUI to the best of my ability.

—Kelly Cross

Editor's note: Cross is an ASUI Senator.

Editor;

This letter is in response to the overwhelming ASUI funded media coverage of the Rock/Lockwood/Talboy controversy. I think it's time an average student stood up and support Rock, who I supported in the fall ASUI presidential election.

Here is a question for Frank Lockwood: What if he did fire former ASUI Attorney General Thomas Talboy because he is gay? I bet this is really the first time this question has really been asked of you, isn't it, Frank? If any of President Rock's other supporters have said this to you, I don't recall reading about it before in the Argonaut.

How stupid do you think the students of the University of Idaho are, Frank? When journalists like you attribute quotes to ambiguous and unreliable sources, it makes your fantasy news insulting to even the lowliest of tabloids. I bet The Enquirer would even be insulted by your garbage.

Let me make it clear, Frank. I'm not saying that Rock "fired" Talboy because of his "actual or perceived sexual orientation," or that I think he would have. I'm merely wondering who these "supporters of the embattled ASUI president" were that you quoted in the Tuesday, Jan. 19, Argonaut, saying "so what"?

Here we go, Frank, I'll quote you, verbatim, from your same commentary in the Jan. 19, Argonaut. "As journalists it is our responsibility to search for the truth." I think we need to define the truth, Frank. How about this: /truth/ n.: whatever a journalist can get a couple of friends to say or write in order to slander or libel someone he/she resents?

Come on, Frank, let's go for the real truth here. Richard Rock announced his intentions to open the ASUI Attorney General position for application and your friend Thomas Talboy was suprised and upset. Rock and Talboy reached an agreement. Talboy resigned and Lockwood continues his demented manipulation of the media ad nauseam.

—John Huntington

Editor;

It is my understanding that a recall campaign against ASUI president Richard Rock has been launched and I am disturbed. The basis for this ordeal is nothing but speculation and rumor, none of which is true.

The entire situation (discrimination, "homophobia," etc.) has been badly deformed by rumor and bias, such as that of Frank Lockwood. Many people are now making judgments about Rick based solely on the articles they have read.

Well, I personally know Rick and I know that what is portrayed is not the truth. He is a caring, sensitive and compassionate man. When I needed help, he was there. His integrity is stronger than anyone else I know and his dedication to his job is obvious. It would truly be a shame to remove him.

Upscale gun clubs now offer patrons the opportunity to whip small handguns out of Gucci handbags and silk shirts to shoot down a menacing target.

The implications of this are absolutely staggering.

Imagine yourself dining in a small, crowded Los Angeles restaurant.

With avocado slivers hanging out of your mouth, you notice a group of expensively-dressed people at a table next to you. They seem normal enough until they reach for their pistols tucked away in a handbag or an ankle holster.

Needless to say, you probably wonder if you're about to become the next victim of those random shootings that occur on what seems like a weekly basis.

As you look out from underneath the table, you notice that the group has laid its guns on the table. In short order, they start comparing barrel sizes and bragging about the way the colors coordinate with their business suits.

Sound ludicrous?

Ask Mick Jackson, the director of the hit movie L.A. Story, which lampooned the do-anything air of Southern California.

"In the past few months, I've been shocked to find out that some of my best friends actually own guns," said Jackson in the Spokesman article. "Nice, peacable, otherwise sane people, talking about their Glock this, their Beretta that, like any other status symbol."

Don't think this fad has been lost on advertisers.

Magazines, like Women and Guns, have been quick to leap on the bandwagon connecting fashion and style with guns.

"Light and lithe, the Hammerli 280," read one ad in Women and Guns.

"Be safe, feminine and stylish!" read another by a Vancouver, Wash., company that calls itself Love Leathers.

Peddling guns in certain publications is nothing new, but guns are not cute like a favorite pet. Nor should they be considered a sex symbol.

The problem is basic — a gun is a deadly instrument that can take the life of another human being. It doesn't matter whether the gun barrel is hot pink or tucks comfortably in your leather belt.

And most certainly, it is not a fashion statement, something that might be brought home the first time a gun accidentally discharges in the seat of your pants.

New Moscow Police Chief William Brown had some thoughts about this. Brown came to Moscow from a police department in Southern California, and in a phone interview Thursday, a person could almost visualize his eyes rolling when he heard about this.

"As far as guns go, they certainly have their place within our society and this community," Brown commented. "At the same time, there is also a sense of responsibility that goes with handgun ownership. People who are inclined to go out and buy a gun for fashion may not feel inclined to learn the proper responsibilities of owning a gun."

Brown summed up beautifully why guns are not in the same realm of style as Armani jackets and cool sunglasses.

"Primarily it involves understanding that guns have the potential to take human lives," Brown said.

There is no maybe about it, California can keep this fad all to itself.

city would have no one to prosecute the case. You see, the man charged with the crime also happens to be the city prosecutor specializing in sexual harassment cases.

You would think at least this man, of all men, would know better. If found guilty, here is one candidate for prosecution to the full extent of the law.

That story sounds a lot like another big national story just resolved — the Zoe Baird story. Both broke laws they were fully aware of.

Now that the Baird nomination for Attorney General has been withdrawn, let the U.S. people applaud her. She fessed up to her crime with courage and character, when too few Americans are willing to admit the have done wrong. Especially in government. Either Clarence Thomas or Anita Hill were lying. Neither will admit it. Mums the word on what Ronald Reagan or George Bush knew about Iran-Contra.

We don't know Baird's motives. Maybe she confessed to try to save her job. She knew the crime would probably be proven against her, so maybe she thought confession was the only way to salvage the job.

We'll give Baird the benefit of the doubt and assume honorable motives. We'll assume she didn't want to add lies on top of her crimes. That's noble. I'd hire her as my private lawyer based on her character (if I ever needed a lawyer and if I ever had the kind of money it would take to hire her).

Baird shouldn't have the Attorney General job, but she should have the public's forgiveness.

Wildcats squeak out a win

■ Phantom foul leads to Idaho loss

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

The Weber State Wildcats led just once in last night's game against the Idaho Vandals, but they picked the best time to do it. Senior Mike Sivulich made one of two free throws with :03 left to lead WSU to a 67-66 victory over Idaho in front of 4,884 fans.

After Orlando Lightfoot missed a 27-footer with :06 left, Sivulich grabbed the rebound and was supposedly fouled by Vandal guard Ricky Wilson. One official, the nearest to the play, called it Idaho ball. Another official down the length of the court said Wilson had fouled Sivulich.

"I thought it was as poor a call as I've ever seen while coaching basketball," Idaho head coach Larry Eustachy said. "It's unfortunate that the game was determined by that call."

Wilson explained he was just playing tough defense.

"He (Sivulich) got the ball, and I had to block him off," Wilson said. "All he did was slip, and I was called for the foul."

In the early going, the Vandals (14-5, 3-1 in league play) jumped all over the Wildcats (12-5, 3-2). Just 12 minutes into the game, Idaho had jumped out to a 30-10 lead behind nine points from Lightfoot. Idaho could do little wrong as it got scoring from seven players while only two players scored for Weber.

"We just played our regular game," Wilson said. "We came out playing well and just couldn't hold them at the end."

As soon as Idaho had built its lead, the Wildcats began knocking it down.

WSU mounted a 12-0 run over the next five minutes to cut the Vandals advantage to 30-22.

The key to the stretch was in the shooting of senior Stan Rose. The 6-7 forward scored seven of the 12 points in the Wildcats' rally to get the Wildcats back in the game.

"We just played our regular game. We came out playing well and just couldn't hold them at the end."

Vandal guard

"I was disappointed we let them back in the game," Eustachy said. "They just started poorly, and as is with good teams, they came back."

At the break Idaho lead 38-31, but the momentum had clearly shifted.

In the second 20 minutes Idaho just couldn't get the ball in the basket. At the 6:50 mark Idaho had just three field goals and was 13-of-20 from the line. WSU, meanwhile, was sparked by the recently slumping Al Hamilton. The senior forward scored 11 straight points to bring the Wildcats within two, 55-53, with 7:30 left.

"To win a game like this you have to play a near perfect game," Eustachy said. "We played hard but we just didn't have that killer instinct."

In the closing minutes Idaho got a great effort from Lightfoot as the Chattanooga, Tenn., native scored 10 of Idaho's 11 points to give the Vandals a 66-64 lead with 1:09 remaining. But a Rose tip-in with :40 left tied the game. Lightfoot led Idaho with 25 points and had a game-high 13 rebounds. Rose had a team-high 24 points and was an outstanding 10-of-13 from the charity stripe.

Idaho Info—The Vandals out-rebounded WSU 45-34, including a 21-11 margin in the first half...Idaho shot a dreary 23 percent from the field in the second half, compared to 51 percent in the first stanza...Ricky Wilson, who averaged 6.2 assists per game, had two...Chauncey McBride had a season-high 11 rebounds.

NAU up next for Idaho

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

Following last night's 67-66 loss to the Weber State Wildcats in Ogden, the Idaho men's basketball team will try to better its record tomorrow night against the Northern Arizona Lumberjacks in Flagstaff.

NAU (3-2 in league, 7-8 overall), which is coming off a 89-69 win against Eastern Washington last night, has become a much improved team from last season's 7-20 campaign. In its first home league game of the season, the Jacks stunned Boise State University for the second year in a row in the two team's league opener, 78-72.

"We've certainly tried to improve," third year head coach Harold Merritt said. "We had the chance to get out of the gate fast, but we've got to continue to play well to stay up there (in the conference)."

Following the defeat of BSU, NAU took care of ISU 76-68, but then faltered on the road trip through Montana last week and dropped both league games to the University of Montana and Montana State.

"The road is tough in this conference, and it's evident in that as of this week, just two teams had won league games on the road," Merritt said.

The key to NAU's scoring attack lies in its two forwards. Demetreus Robbins, a 6-7, 205-pound senior, pours in a team-high 16.5 points a game while his counterpart, Jason Word, a 6-5 junior, is second on the team with 15.6. Both lead the Big Sky with points in a single game as Robbins drained 35 against St. Mary's and Word had 34 in a home game against Missouri-Rolla.

"Definitely," Merritt said when asked if the two had to produce to beat Idaho (3-1 in conference, 14-5 overall record). "They didn't have a really good road swing (in Montana), and it showed on our record. If they're playing well then we feel pretty good about our chances against any team."

Last January in Flagstaff, Idaho escaped with an 84-80 overtime win behind the sharpshooting of guard Marvin Ricks. Playing in just his fourth game as a Vandal, Ricks scored a career high 31 points on 14-of-24 shooting. He scored four points had a steal and forced a turnover in the final seconds of regulation to help push Idaho into the overtime period.

"(Orlando) is going to get his quota of shots because I don't think anyone has been able to slow him down," Merritt said of Idaho's 6-7 Lightfoot. "We'll have to decide whether to double-down on him or someone like Marvin Ricks."

After facing WSU last night, which is ranked second in the conference in rebounding, Idaho can't relax as NAU is No. 1 in rebounding in the BSC. NAU, although it holds just a slight +0.5 rebounding edge over its opponents, still leads the league with 41.1 boards a game.

"Idaho is a very big, athletic team," Merritt said. "Rebounding will certainly be a big factor. Rebounding, free throws and turnovers will be the three big areas in this game."

While Idaho is fourth in the conference in rebounding with a 38.2 average, and the two teams are seventh and eighth in the conference in free throw percentage respectively, points off turnovers could be the deciding factor in the match-up. The reason being is that both teams look to push the ball when possible.

"I'd rather it be a high scoring game, somewhere in the 80's because of both the altitude, and we feel we're in better shape," Merritt said.

UI guns for first conference win

By DOUG TAYLOR
Assistant Editor

Now that a six-game losing streak is over, Idaho women's basketball coach Laurie Turner said her Lady Vandals can assert themselves in the conference this weekend.

She expects nothing less.

The Lady Vandals will meet Weber State and Northern Arizona University in a pair of Big Sky Conference home games that begins today against the Wildcats in Memorial Gym. On Saturday, Idaho meets the Lumberjacks.

Turner could be considered justified in her high expectations.

The Wildcats and the Lumberjacks are a combined 2-27 for the season, and neither team has won a conference game. Idaho, however, hasn't fared that much better than the two squads.

The Lady Vandals enter this weekend's action with an 0-3 record in conference games that currently places them in sixth place ahead of NAU and Weber. Idaho is 5-10 in all games.

It is therefore an imperative to Turner that Idaho capitalizes on the home-court advantage before hitting the road again next weekend.

"Mentally, we're in a must-win situation with these games," said Turner on Monday. "Our players believe in themselves a little more after the Sacramento St. win, and now we can go after Weber and Northern Arizona." Turner has put her team through an intense week of practice to work out kinks like rebounding and turnovers as the Lady Vandals have been outrebounded in recent games and still are averaging over 19 turnovers a game.

The Wildcats and Lumberjacks may not bring much to combat Idaho's improvement in those areas.

Only center Wendy Talbot of Weber is scoring in double figures at 12.8 points, but she is a much larger force on the boards averaging nearly 11 rebounds a game, tops in the conference right now.

"This will be a good challenge for Karen (Poncina)," said Turner of her junior center who will be matched against Talbot. "Overall, Weber moves the ball down the court quickly and has a good transition game. We need to force some turnovers."

After Weber, the Lady Vandals face a Northern Arizona team that fields a balanced scoring attack led by Jody Hensen and Cristina Willis.

Hensen is averaging 11.2 points a game while Willis tops the Lumberjacks in scoring with 11.8 points per game.

Turner said the Lumberjacks will not lay down and die for her team. In fact, if all the Lumberjacks show up to play, Idaho could be in for a real fight.

"They are like a lot of teams that struggle," Turner said. "The Lumberjacks, like ourselves, have had only certain players show up to play. If they ever played all together, they would be a tough team to beat."

The Lady Vandals have been led up to this point by the scoring of Jennifer Clary and Brenda Kuehlthau.

The two players are averaging nearly 30 points, 10 rebounds and six assists a game. Clary has also buried 29 3-pointers and ranks in the top five nationally in free throw percentage.

Poncina leads the team in rebounding with nearly seven a game after a huge night last Saturday against Sac St. in which she had 14 rebounds.

Hampering Idaho's preparation has been a rash of minor injuries that have plagued the Lady Vandals during the last week. Turner said all the injuries have been nagging sorts of ailments that are inherent in a long basketball season. Additionally, Kortnie Edwards, Idaho's third-leading scorer with 10.7 points a game, has been ill during the week.

Nevertheless, Turner said the team should be at full strength and ready to go for this weekend.

She said they must be focused also.

"We have to be focused right now because if my athletes want to go to the conference tournament, we have to beat teams at home," said Turner on Monday. "We have to beat teams at home that aren't going to the tournament."

Clary seeks the perfect game

By DOUG TAYLOR
Assistant Editor

Jennifer Clary has some scores to settle, most importantly with herself.

By any reasonable standards, Clary should be happy with her game. Averaging 16.1 points a game, she is the top scorer for the University of Idaho women's basketball team this season. In Idaho's win against Sac St. last Saturday that broke a six-game losing streak, Clary knocked in a season-high 26 points.

She is also the team's top gun from beyond the 3-point line, hitting 29 of them so far this year.

What's eating at her then? Head coach Laurie Turner had some possible explanations.

"She is an extremely competitive kid," Turner said. "At times, she is her own worst enemy out on the court. If she misses a few shots, she starts to doubt herself and sometimes, she has taken herself out of games because of it."

A recent practice offered ample evidence.

Turner had the team engaged in a drill which required a team to make three consecutive baskets in order to avoid postgame running. With an assistant coach and one other person rounding out the number of participants to an even 15, the drill started.

Clary's team eventually rotated so that it was the "offense." Clary received the ball from Turner and immediately blew by a defender to the hoop. Suspending herself in the air, Clary floated a jumper that clanged off the rim.

She strode off to think matters over, and further analysis made her use a stream of expletives that would have wilted a schoolmaster's ear. The rest of the team, though, didn't give her so much as a momentary glance. It was as if the tirade was simply part of the practice itself.

Clary readily admits the problem, but she said a solution is going to be hard with her approach to the game.

"I'm really hard on myself," said the 5-8 junior. "If I miss a shot, the next one is going to go in or I'll continue to shoot it until it does. Sometimes that's good for the team and sometimes bad, but I can't change the way I play."

Don't tag Clary as a headache for Turner or a detriment to the team. In fact, it's completely the reverse of this.

Clary's aggressive court demeanor usually draws opponents to her in hopes of stopping her 3-point marksmanship or her uncanny drives to the hoop. Usually that kind of attention results in a wide-open teammate or in Clary being fouled.

It is wiser, however, not to foul her.

That is because Clary's instinctive tenacity has paid off at the free throw line where she is a remarkable 43-of-48 so far this year. This 89.6 percent accuracy places her fifth in the nation.

Clary doesn't know what the fuss about her free throw shooting is all about.

"It is automatic for me," Clary declared. "I just know I'm going to make it when I go to the line. If I don't think that, then I start second-guessing myself."

Her past experiences may account for some of her grittiness.

While at Shelby High School in Montana, she was a two-time all-state selection but was snubbed by both state universities when it came to recruiting. Fuming, she eventually settled at North Idaho College in Couer d' Alene for one year before coming to Idaho last year.

The decision to enroll at UI was made easier by her frustration with Montana and Montana St.

"I wanted to enroll at a school that could beat both Montana schools on a given night," Clary said. "I just want to kill those two teams every time we play them."

She has transformed this anger into some of her best games such as one of the two meetings between Montana and Idaho last year. She scored 17 points on that Feb. 22, 1992 evening, which was her season-best for points.

The Bobcats and Grizzlies have also brought out the side Clary doesn't want to see in herself.

Exactly two weeks ago, Clary and company went to Montana to do battle with UM and MSU. Clary, perhaps letting her anger rise into impatience, hit only 9-of-32 shots in the two games. She scored only 21 points in the two games, including just six against the Grizzlies, and turned the ball over seven times.

"I hate losing, and sometimes that will make me do things on the court I don't want to do," Clary said.

With this in mind, it must also be noted that Clary will take her share of these confrontations because of her multiple offensive skills, and the team will subsequently benefit.

The battle with herself may take longer.

Idaho hosts women's track meet

By MISSY WILSON
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho women's track team, being called one of the best in Idaho's history, starts competition tonight by hosting the University of Idaho Scoring Invitational.

"This is my favorite meet of the whole year," head coach Scott Lorek said. "I can't wait to see what's going to happen."

Seven teams are competing in the indoor meet, including Idaho, University of Washington, Washington State University, Eastern Washington University, Portland University and Western Oregon State College. Lorek said the two Pac-10 schools, UW and WSU, will be the toughest teams competing in the invitational.

Lorek said his team is looking for conference qualifying performances. He added that he wouldn't be surprised if a few personal records were broken.

"This year's team is the most enthusiastic and committed team we've ever had," Lorek explained. "Since September they've had great attitudes. All year people have been doing more than I've asked them to do. If anything I've had to ask them to slow down."

Lorek added that there are a few athletes he is expecting to start off with significant performances.

One of those is junior Tanya Tesar, the UI heptathlon record holder, who will be competing in the long jump, triple jump and 55-meter hurdles. Lorek said he is also looking forward to solid performances in the 3000 from Robyn Slate and Laura Moore, in the 800 from Angie Smith and in the 55 and 200 from Venise Walker.

Lorek thinks that this meet will also be productive in helping decide his mile relay team.

"We have probably nine people who run the 400," Lorek said. "This meet will help narrow it to four for the 4x400 relay."

Against the two Pac-10 schools that are competing, Lorek said his team will have a tough time with UW but will be able to score some points against WSU. He added that UW's strength is distance.

"They have been in the top 20 in cross country for three years in a row," he said.

Lorek thinks that UW distance runners Stacie Hoytink, who was an all-American in cross country and one of the top 20 finishers in the nation.

Two WSU standouts include Jennifer Bravard, who will be competing in the mile and Chantal Brunner, a tough competitor in the long jump.

Lorek said that he will be watching Joyce Johnson from EWU, who was an NCAA qualifier two years ago in the 55 and 200. Johnson took some time off and is now back in competition.

The invitational begins tonight at 6 p.m. in the Kibbie Dome with both men and women's competition. Tonight's events include the long jump, high jump, 400, 800 and 3000. Competition tomorrow begins at 9:30 p.m. and consists of the triple jump, 55 hurdles, 4x800 relay, 55, mile, 200 and the 4x400 relay.

"Our emphasis will be on competing well, and the times will come secondary," Lorek explained. "We are more concerned with how our athletes compete mentally."

funding using their sources."

Dan Davenport, the director of student financial aid at the University of Idaho, said students at the UI have been receiving letters from various scholarship search services.

"I don't have names," he said. "I've just had people telling me they have been getting letters from these outfits." While Davenport does not to accuse all services of fraud, he warns students to be cautious.

Davenport explained many of the services are franchise offices of a national company. The national companies have a data base with scholarship information on them, and a company who buys into them has access to that data base.

One company calls itself The Financial Aid Office, said Davenport, and that can cause confusion for many UI students. "Students get so much information about financial aid, we just want them to be cautious in what they are doing."

"What some of the companies that we found would do," said Davenport, "is that they would promise to give the student's money (from the initial fee) back, and they just never got the money back."

He said their office has sufficient information in their lobby and can assist students in their search for scholarships.

"There is no need to spend hundreds of dollars when you can go down to your financial aid office and get the information for free," said DeLange. There is a free service, he said, called Career Information System, which can be accessed from most Idaho high schools, colleges, libraries and Job Service offices.

Brown heats dome

By CHRIS MILLER
Lifestyles Editor

Sawyer Brown, Mark Chesnutt and Chris LeDoux bebopped, two-stepped, heel-toe dosey-dosed around the stage in cowboy hats, boots, tight Wranglers with belt buckles so large a guy could serve salmon on them Wednesday night.

But even die-hard rock-n-rollers whose girlfriend's forced them to go the concert couldn't help but have a great time.

Chris LeDoux and his band Western Underground took the stage first. He asked the crowd, "Ladies, ask yourselves this? 'Whatcha gonna do with a cowboy?'" and proceeded to give the audience a quick, tight-fisted blast of country laced with a touch of rock off of his second album Whatcha Gonna Do With a Cowboy.

LeDoux's first song warmed up the crowd so much that country music fan Pam Weber screamed out in delight, "What a cute ass! God he's cute!"

LeDoux's ballads fell short and could not keep step with his faster, harder songs like "Hooked On An 8-Second Ride." He said to the audience before he played the hit, "A lot of people think a bull-rider's eyes are about that far apart (small space shown between fingers), but you know they're athletes and they know what they're doin'. This song's for them." LeDoux had no trouble convincing the audience of his true cowboy background.

Mark Chesnutt wouldn't come out until everybody in the crowd was on their feet. That took about 3 seconds. He added fuel to the fire with his hit single, "Old Flames Have New Names."

"You all look like a bunch of people I could really get into trouble with!" he started, then introduced his band The New South Band, who all are from either Texas or Louisiana. Chesnutt couldn't help but stoke the fire by adding, "Well I'm gonna show ya what happens when you get a lot of rednecks and cajuns in one place." The crowd roared and he hollered back, "I'm never gonna go home!"

Ren and Stimpy!

By JASON UHLMAN
Staff Writer

Stimpy, the well known stupid fat cat on Nickelodeon's "The Ren & Stimpy Show," will be speaking soon at the University of Idaho on Feb. 3.

"The Ren and Stimpy Show" is the cartoon that has taken the nation by storm. The type of humor used to make the show was too controversially hot for any of the "Big Three" TV networks to handle, so Nickelodeon took a gamble in hopes that it would pay off. What they received in return for their risk was nothing less than the biggest hit on television today. While only in its second season, "Ren and Stimpy" has already earned many prestigious awards, including Grammy nominations.

What's the secret for this instant success? Some might say the "Ren in Stimpy" magic comes from famous quotes like "You bloated sack of protoplasm!" and "Don't do anything stupid!" These phrases are being spoken on college campuses all over the world. The originality of "Ren and Stimpy" talk lets people know that they are dealing with the cutting edge of tooning. However, the real success story does not come from the characters themselves.

The magic of "Ren and Stimpy" comes from a man named Billy West. He has been described as having an "army of voices," and is the man behind the cat. In his upcoming presentation at the UI, "Tooning in with Billy West," he will share his comedy, talent, and Stimpy quotes

Horror/Sci-fi movies in Borah tonight

Two movies will be shown on campus tonight: "A Boy and His Dog" and "Alien."

"A Boy and His Dog" is a fairly old science fiction cult classic starring Don Johnson. It takes place in a double post apocalyptic setting, that is after WWIV, where the remnants of humanity (almost exclusively men), live in the desert fighting for food and women. Johnson plays a daring, violent and ignorant survivor who roams about with his highly intelligent and vocal dog, Blood. From here the plot, which could have been one of a dozen post apocalyptic films, takes a lighthearted and comical twist. It involves using the hero to fertilize a race of subterranean women.

The second film, "Alien," is extremely well known and has almost reached the state of "classicdom." It is a horror/sci-fi thriller about a mining ship making its lengthy return to Earth after a long and arduous mining expedition. The crew is awakened from its deathlike cryogenic slumber to investigate a distress call on an unexplored planet. Further investigation leads them to discover an insidious alien race and that the distress call is really a warning to avoid the planet at all costs.

"A Boy and His Dog" will play at 7 p.m. today and 9:15 p.m. Saturday. "Alien" will play at 9:15 p.m. tonight and 7 p.m. Saturday.

Both films are shown in the Borah Theatre in the Student Union Building and cost $1 for undergraduate students and $2 general admission.

►BROWN from page 12

When Sawyer Brown and lead singer Mark Miller blasted onto the stage with legs that never stopped moving and started to play their hit single "Some Girls Do" the crowd about went loony-tunes. But Miller stopped that up short by ending the song and saying, "Don't think for one minute that we're gonna play that song this early in the show."

Brown's country added a strong element of rock that added an extra boost of pure energy to his music. Their ballads edged more toward traditional country and proved why Brown was the feature group.

Miller was the showman both on stage with legs that maintained a continual blur and with excitement-inducing banter. "I gotta tell you all something. They told us, 'You can't go to Idaho in the wintertime—nobody will show up.' I said, 'Let's go to Idaho and heat the place up!'"

"I gotta tell you the show is over," Miller said, shoulders drooped. "The show is over... and the PARTY begins!"

The finale, "Some Girls Do," left the crowd singing the chorus: "I ain't first-class, but I ain't white-trash... I'm wild and little crazy too. Some girls don't like boys like me... ah, but some girls do!"

Artist-puppeteer-satirist to perform

By LANAE EMPEY
Staff Writer

Presenting reality in a zany way, Paul Zaloom, performance artist, puppeteer and political satirist will be performing "Sick But True" Feb. 5 at 8 p.m. in the Jones Theatre of Daggy Hall at Washington State University.

"All that Paul Zaloom needs is a stage, himself as actor and enough trash to fill a month's quota at a recycling center," said Marty Mullen of Activities/Recreational Sports at WSU.

"He's an entertainer," Mullen said. "I think he's satirizing what's going on around him—what he sees in life, politics."

Zaloom takes objects he has found and uses them as puppets for the "greatest found objects" part of his performance, Mullen said. During one segment of "Theater of Trash," which appeared at WSU in 1986, Zaloom did an expose on farming in America. As part of the act he used a thermos to represent a silo, fuzzy black dice for cows and gardening tools for the farmer and his family, Mullen said.

"He goes to junkyards to find things like old packing materials to use in his shows," Mullen said. He manipulated anything he finds to represent something else in his shows.

"He animates various toys, appliances, tools, packaging materials and other trash as puppets and environment in rapid-fire vignettes and has a wonderful knack for making junky objects into irreverent metaphors for powerful people," Mullen said.

Another segment of the show involves a unique use of a overhead. In a show he used water paints on the overhead to represent the forms of life, Mullen said. He uses different substances to form different images. This is new to this year's show.

The slide show is based on reality. "It can be very heavy stuff, but it's almost as if it's not true because it's so funny," Mullen said. He has done slide shows on what is really in "phood" including preservatives and how it is processed.

"It's reality presented in the most painless way possible," Mullen said.

Zaloom will present a workshop from 2 p.m. - 4 p.m. Feb. 4 in the Little Theatre in Daggy Hall at WSU. A class meets at this time, but any students are welcome.

Students will bring any object they have found and Zaloom, in a likeness of his "found objects" segment of the show, will teach them how to improvise using the object, Mullen said.

Health & Fitness: Shin splints explained

By SAM A. MONGER, M.D.
Contributing Writer

The increased popularity of running in the 70's and 80's led to renewed interest in shin splints, a fairly common over-use injury. Poor conditioning and changes in running routines such as going from a soft to a hard surface or changing distances or speeds of running seem to predispose to this problem. Footwear may also be a factor.

Formerly used as a term to loosely describe any lower leg pain associated with running, the terminology has changed and the definition restricted. Now referred to as Medial Tibial Stress Syndrome (MTSS), the term applies to activity-related pain limited to musculo-tendinous inflammation. Although MTSS is the most common running over-use syndrome, it is not strictly limited to running. Excessive walking, marching in the military and aerobics can on occasion cause this problem.

MTSS occurs in plus or minus 15 per cent of injured runners and casually is brought on by the cumulative impact of the repetitive micro trauma of running or less commonly, walking. Considering that with each stride in running, the lower extremity is impacted with a force of two to three times the body weight and that on average one gets plus or minus 1500 strides to the mile, one might not be surprised! The trauma causes micro injury to muscle, fascia (muscle covering), periosteum (bone covering) and bone. This leads to inflammation in the soft tissues and resultant swelling (not always obvious) and pain.

With MTSS, pain may occur after activity, initially during activity, or through and after activity, dependent upon the degree of severity. Symptoms and findings in MTSS are in the soft tissues at the inner lower one-third of the tibial area (shin bone). Stress fracture symptoms may be located here, but more often are in the upper outer aspect of the tibial area. A third much less common, but much more serious running injury to the leg is compartment syndrome. A circulatory impairment from swelling in the muscle causing extreme pain, sensory changes and muscle weakness, it is usually associated with extreme running abuse and fortunately is relatively uncommon.

If you have MTSS, the most important aspect of treatment is to stop running or alter activity to a non-impact activity that does not cause pain. Easy alternatives are the stationary bike, swimming and/or running in the pool, generally for at least one week or until pain decreases. Rubbing down the area with ice for 10 minutes, two to three times a day, helps reduce pain and inflammation. Be patient. This problem won't go away just because you want it to.

Identification of the problem, rest, medications, and proper rehabilitation all go hand in hand in managing MTSS and help get you "back on the road again."

If you are active and have symptoms suggestive of MTSS, your problem can be evaluated at the Student Health Center.

until the audience (like Ren) will want to beat Stimp into the ground. West's modern style of cartooning humor promises to make all who watch fans for life.

Billy became famous as the voice in such commercial bonanzas the "Honeynut Cherrios Bee," McDonald's ads ("Is he a fry guy?"), and another of Nickelodeon's self entitled hit cartoon series, "Doug."

"Ren and Stimp is hilarious. It's been years since I've laughed as much as I do making the show. With all of the primevil screaming Ren and Stimp do, how can I not love it?" commented West during a recent phone interview.

"Today's cartoon characters are mostly millions of guys imitating the voices of all the old classics. The stuff is terrible. Ren and Stimp is never the familiar, and even though it is abstract, it still has strong roots in cartoon sensibility."

Inspired by comedy giants like Jonathan Winters and the Three Stooges, West's vocal characters are now household names across America. However, that is not the reason he does what he does.

"The part I like about cartooning is the way people respond. The cash is great, but that alone is not enough."

Throughout his 75 minute presentation, he will show slides, video projections, and the classic "Ren and Stimp" episode Space Madness. Of course, there will also be the plethora of voices that West has built his life around.

West will talk about past shows and possible, future productions like "Ren and Stimp: The Movie," working with legendary radio bad boy Howard Stern, and Howard's upcoming movie "The Adventures of Fart Man" will all be highlights of the evening.

The program begins Wednesday, Feb. 3 at 7:30 p.m. in the Student Union Building. Admission is $3 for UI undergrads and children under 12, and $5 for everyone else. Listen to KUOI starting Jan. 29 for a chance to get free tickets to the show and rare post card comics of "Ren and Stimp."

What about "Simpson's" fans? Is "The Ren and Stimp Show" better than "The Simpson's?" Jan. 29 until 5 p.m. students can vote to decide which toon is on top. Those interested should call 885-5756 and leave a "yes" on the answering machine for "Ren and Stimp" fans, or a "no" for "The Simpson's" fans. Results will be posted in next Tuesday's Argonaut.
