Local Sears store suffers closure in the wake of company's nationwide cutbacks

By DAVID JACKSON
Staff Writer

What was once "the mall with it all" will lose one of the biggest stores to its credit by the end of March, according to store managers.

Last Monday, the Sears, Roebuck and Co. department store chain announced the closing of 113 stores nationwide. The Moscow store was one of those selected.

"We are tentatively scheduled to be closed by the end of March, the 30th or the 31st," said Dennis Woolverton, the auto center manager at the Moscow Sears store. "It all depends on how fast we get rid of the merchandise, and where some of the other stuff will go."

Bad finances were the reasons given by Sears for the drastic changes in its future. Analysts quoted figures to support those claims, saying the department store lost $166 million during the first nine months of 1992, its worse showing in five years. Sears' earned revenue figures were also the lowest seen since 1988.

Not only will 50,000 jobs be lost by the store closures, but many departments within the remaining stores will be combined, and the popular Sears Catalog will no longer be printed, closing down 2,000 catalog order stores. Sears estimates these cutbacks will save the company around $300 million a year.

"We are obviously doing this reluctantly," said store manager Robert Valentine. "This store has been an important part of this town."

Valentine also commented that the Sears closing in Moscow has nothing to do with the recently opened Wal-Mart store. He said the actions being taken by Sears were being planned well before Wal-Mart moved in to Moscow.

As far as tying up loose ends at the Moscow Sears, Woolverton said he expected big sales in the future to get rid of remaining merchandise, but stated those decisions have not been made yet.

"Certainly we expect big sales on lots of things, but our district managers haven't decided on that yet," he said. "We have other stores we can move things to, so we'll have to wait to see what they say."

The Moscow store employs 52 people, 12 of which are full time. Valentine said some of the employees will be eligible for severance packages or other benefits. He is also working on the possibility of finding current employees work in other Sears stores around the area.

The Lewiston Sears, however, will remain open.

Rift widens between ASUI and KUOI news director

By JEFF KAPOSTASY
Staff Writer

Mention the name "Frank Lockwood" to some members of the ASUI government and you're likely to hear teeth grind.

Thursday the KUOI news director raised questions about the Conservative Voice Coalition's use of ASUI funds. They are questions that several people feel are unwarranted.

The CVC is responsible for the publication of the Vanguard, a politically conservative journal published every month.

Last December, ASUI Senator Daniel Whiting, a member of the CVC and a staffer for the Vanguard, attended a Leadership Institute in Washington, D.C. Among other things, Whiting learned the skills involved in running a publication.

Funding for the trip was approved by the ASUI Activities Board. Since the CVC is a member of the ASUI, it is entitled to a certain amount of funding. The Activities Board picked up $207.60 of Whiting's tab.

The CVC started publication of the journal last semester. Editorial policy is established by the CVC, and several Vanguard staffers sit on the CVC board of directors.

According to a disclaimer, the Vanguard receives no funding except through advertising and private donations. Although it is produced and delivered through a joint effort of UI and Washington State University students, it is not officially affiliated with either university.

But because the trip was paid for with funds from the ASUI, Lockwood said the disclaimer is misleading, and the funds may possibly have been misused.

"I'm not saying it's right or wrong," Lockwood said. "We (KUOI news) have not done a

Assistant professor researches bug that plagues Jack in the Box

E. Coli 0157:H7

Beef-linked bacteria poisoning fast food

Infection can be transmitted through cattle and consumption of contaminated or undercooked beef and underpasteurized milk. It is also transmitted person-to-person.

Symptoms of infection include headaches, cramps, abdominal pain, nausea, vomiting and bloody diarrhea.

According to federal Centers for Disease Control estimates, approximately 6.5 million people become ill and 9,100 people die of acute food-borne illness each year.

By SHARI IRETON
News Editor

It's smaller than a dime, but it can be as deadly as a day in Beirut.

It's called Escherichia coli 0157:H7 and it is the bacteria responsible for the contaminated hamburger patties found in four states in January.

People in Idaho, Washington, California and Nevada have been struck with the bug, and one University of Idaho researcher is trying to find out why.

According to Carolyn Bohach, assistant professor of bacteriology, most E. coli are not dangerous, but certain strains, like the 0157:H7 can cause severe illness.

E. coli, a rare fecal bacteria, can lead to an extremely painful if not deadly case of food poisoning, which includes the symptom of bloody diarrhea. The recent western outbreak seems to be linked to Jack in the Box restaurants in Idaho, Washington and Nevada, leading to the death of two children and the infection of more than 300 people.

What makes this strain more deadly, said Bohach, are two unique characteristics. First, the E. coli 0157:H7 will attach itself to the intestinal wall, leaving sores. Second, it creates a toxin that can kill some human cells, like ones found in the intestine, kidneys and red blood cells.

While these discoveries are all very interesting, scientists still do not have the answers for exactly why the E. coli is so deadly. "Researchers across the country are not sure what causes the kidney failure," said Bohach, but added that killing the kidney cells may have something to do with the problem.

"What my laboratory does is we are studying the Shiga-like toxin," said Bohach, the same E. coli found in the recent cases of food poisoning.

Another obstacle scientists and food producers have encountered is that it is difficult to discover the toxin in beef before it reaches the stage for human consumption.

"What is difficult is that adult cows look completely healthy when they carry the toxin," she said. "You can't tell that the meat is contaminated, if the number (of E. coli) is small."

Bohach is warning what most officials have been for many years...not to eat undercooked beef. She added that the E. coli is "very susceptible to heating" and proper cooking will almost eliminate at person's chance of being infected with the virus.

Bohach's research is currently funded by the USDA, the Idaho Beef Council, United Dairyman of Idaho and the Idaho affiliate of the American Heart Association.

story on it yet. Is the ASUI giving money to an organization that is not affiliated with the ASUI? It's a simple and wholly legitimate question."

But according to an official statement released by the CVC Monday, the funding was completely legitimate. The costs of publishing the Vanguard itself are paid for solely by advertising and donations. The CVC stated that the trip helped "to prepare the organization for the difficult task of establishing a political journal" which "presents a fresh perspective and promises to be around long after the initiators of it have graduated."

Whiting pointed out that technically, the CVC and Vanguard are separate organizations. Also, according to Whiting, fundraising skills and the methods to use to lure guest speakers, among other things, were taught at the Leadership Institute.

"The ASUI didn't fund the Vanguard," Whiting said. "They are two separate coalitions.... I honestly didn't mean to fool anyone."

"It sounds like Frank Lockwood is stretching for another story to put in his resume for when he leaves here," said William Hart, ASUI senator, writer for the Vanguard and co-director of the CVC.

"No money from the ASUI or the ASWSU goes to fund the Vanguard or its distribution," Hart said. "I think that it's totally indirect. The Activities Board laid it all out and they funded it, and obviously they didn't have a problem with it."

ASUI Activities Board director Kathi Lemberes could not be reached for comment.

Hart does admit that the purpose of the CVC is to advise and publish the Vanguard, but says the disclaimer relates to the publication and distribution, and maintains that the funding was legitimate.

Lockwood disagrees. "It's like trying to draw the difference between CBS News and CBS Inc.," he said.

Several members of the ASUI government contend that Lockwood spends more time in the news than covering it. Lockwood said he has covered far more interesting things than this, and that he is not out to be a character assassin.

"I'm just doing my job," Lockwood said.

Amongst the controversy of KUOI news director and ASUI government, dee-jay Matt Kitterman decides the show must go on. (JOE STROHMAIER PHOTO)

Review upholds tradition of communication and law

By GREG BURTON
Staff Writer

It is the substantive defining output of a class; produced around and between the popular paper chase, but it serves as the final capture of that paper. It, is The Idaho Law Review.

The Review was originally produced as the Idaho Law Journal in 1931. On the first page of the first edition were advertisements for David's Department Store in downtown Moscow, and The Blue Bucket Inn - Vandal Cafe, "Whether it's a cup of coffee or a banquet" read the ad.

Idaho and Moscow's histories are intrinsically coupled with the Review.

The first article of the 1931 edition was "The Law of Community Property in Idaho," by UI associate professor of law Francis W. Jacob. Today the Review continues to publish one entire issue on community property.

Current Editor-in-Chief Steve Weeks said The Idaho Law Review is the only law review among colleges in the nine states that have community property laws to publish review on the subject.

Weeks was not hired to his position, he was elected by a vote of all second year and third year members of the Review.

"An attorney must be a good writer, and a good editor," said Weeks, "I look at this as an opportunity to advance those skills."

In 1989, 111 students were accepted to the University of Idaho Law School, 85 percent graduated, and 15 percent of those worked on the Review in their third and last year.

This year 14 students are on the staff.

Whether it be to extend knowledge, or to pad the resume, the process of acceptance to the Review staff lasts for one year.

All students who make it through their first year of law school are given a packet of cases after their last final, and from these cases they have one month to produce a research paper to be reviewed by a panel of faculty and staff.

Once accepted, second year law students become associate members of the Review and enter into a year long trial period.

Second year law student Eric Wildman is currently in this trial period.

"At this point we must spend a year producing original research in the form of a publishable article," Wildman said. "We make four copies of our article and submit it for review to determine if we will become full members in our third year."

Fifty students submitted papers from Wildman's first year class, and 24 are now trial members.

The finalized Review consists of articles from students and from qualified practitioners of the law, and while it is not used as precedent, it is a valuable original source for legal research.

Weeks said the Review is an opportunity to discuss where the law is going. "The Review cites a great number of cases, and it is an avenue for legal scholars to exchange intellectual discourse," Weeks said.

The Review is produced quarterly with Fall and Spring Editions, a Community Property Edition, and a Symposium Edition.

This year's Symposium Edition will evolve out of a conference in Coeur d'Alene March 22 and 23. The topic will be creditor's rights and the Uniform Commercial Code, with Law Scholars from around the Nation in attendance.

UI Law Professors Dale Goble and Craig Lewis serve as faculty advisors for the Review, but their involvement is limited. Lewis said he enjoys the opportunity to teach a gifted set of individuals.

Goble said he only serves as a point of reference. "The journal is theirs."

Wildman is looking forward to his involvement next year with both apprehension and delight. "It is a great way to develop my research capabilities, but it's like an extra class on top of the regular curriculum."

"Employers see that we have been able to produce above and beyond our regular classes," said Weeks, who has already been hired by Givens, Pursely, Webb and Huntley in Boise.

The forward to the 1992 Symposium Edition dealing with current water rights reads, "If Mark Twain was right when he said that in the West whiskey is for drinking and water is for fighting over, then this is a forum for fighting."

Former Chief Justice E.T. Knudson of the Idaho Supreme Court, wrote in 1964 of the need and service of the Review throughout the state of Idaho. Why? Because it's The Law.

A woman who finally holds the president's power

Finally, a woman in the position of president.

Although Hillary Rodham Clinton isn't officially in office, she holds enough weight with her husband that she can make decisions that actually count.

Last week President Clinton dubbed Hillary the head of the Task Force on National Health Care Reform, one of the most important issues of Clinton's campaign. Her job on that committee will be to come up with a health care proposal to be presented to Congress in May.

This is a huge task. Hillary must find ways to provide health coverage to 37 million uninsured Americans without raising the deficit.

However, Hillary's ability to accomplish this task and her qualifications for the position shouldn't be questioned. She has an exemplary background. Through her career she has maintained a corporate litigation and family law practice, sat on five corporate boards and participated in an array of public interest activities.

On a national level, Hillary has chaired the Children's Defense Fund and the American Bar Association's Commission on Women in the Profession and served on the board of the Legal Service Corporation.

In Arkansas, she started Arkansas Advocates for Children and Families and worked to bring parenting skill programs to the state. In addition, she helped develop a neonatal care unit at Arkansas Children's Hospital, and served as a court-appointed attorney in a dispute over student assignment plans for the Little Rock School District, which is still under a desegregation order.

So any question about Hillary's qualifications are invalid. It is true that the health care reform will have powerful impact on the nation. But it is also true that Hillary will be able to handle this job.

The reform will impose an overall spending cap on health expenditures and may promote managed competition in health care related fields. Thus insurers will force doctors and hospitals to keep their costs down. To compensate for this, Clinton may tax a portion of employee health care benefits.

Although Hillary said she would "do what my husband asks me to do," in regards to the health care reform, many people feel she will take the situation into her own hands. If she so chooses, with her background, she will succeed.

And while Hillary isn't the first woman in the White House to voice her opinion, she will certainly have the loudest scream.

John McLaughlin from the McLaughlin Group made the prediction that Hillary may run for president when her husband is done.

What a nice thought. Finally a woman for president.

We owe it to canaries to wear Lee Jeans

The Super Bowl is to advertisements what hops is to beer. Without it, it isn't.

Sunday's game served as a launching pad for large advertising campaigns. Some being more successful than others.

And the advertisers had nothing to lose during this blast-off. Well, maybe a mere fortune. The average cost of a 30-second-commercial Sunday was $900,000. That's $30,000 a second. The average cost (F.Y.I.) for a 30-second-commercial during "Rosanne" is $245,000. For "The Simpsons" and "60 Minutes," it's $240,000. And for "Cheers" it's $290,000.

At that price, and with more than a hundred million people watching the game, it's no surprise that Super Bowl commercials can make or break a product.

My award for the 1993 Super Bowl Superspot goes to Lee Jeans for the two new executions of their humorous campaign theme "Maybe it's a better fitting jean."

Getting a grasp on the Super Bowl

It was just a game, and not much of one at that.

The final tally was 52 points for the Dallas Cowboys, 17 points for the Buffalo Bills and 22 crotch grabs for Michael Jackson during the halftime extravaganza.

Woeful were we men. The women of Moscow had a socially acceptable alternative to watching the Super Bowl. They could have gone to a certain downtown nightclub to watch the male strippers flex and sweat and drip body oils all over the stage.

Not so for the male half of the population. It was either watch the Super Bowl or risk developing a reputation as an effeminate flower-picker.

So I watched as much of the game as I could stomach.

Super Bowls are always educational experiences. For example, I learned that Michael Jackson loves me. And you too.

And that he likes children.

And that he likes touching himself in places he shouldn't, at least not in public and with a viewing audience that numbered in the hundreds of millions.

Pete Gomben

Editor in Chief

But I also learned something about our values.

Listening to play-by-play announcer Dick Enberg and color commentator Bob Trumpy blather on endlessly was more sickening than watching the Bills twitch and bleed like a fresh road kill.

Enberg and Trumpy did their best to exaggerate the importance of the occasion. The Super Bowl is nothing more than the final game of the football season, and football is nothing more than a little boys' game played by big boys.

At one time or another, every little boy dreams of playing professional football. Those of us who grow up come to realize there are more noble pursuits in life than tackling other men, so we hang up our cleats.

Those of us who are stuck in the faux machoness of high school go on to play in the NFL.

Trumpy — the high priest of hyperbole — overstated the significance of Buffalo's third straight Super Bowl loss. Sure it's demeaning to lose three straight, but I seriously doubt that the losses will haunt the personal lives of many of the players. Life goes on.

After all, the Germans lost two straight world wars and they seem to be doing just fine.

Both Enberg and Trumpy were frightening in their cliched characterizations of the teams. They described the players merely in terms of physical abilities, somehow trying to make them into outstanding human beings solely on the basis of their enormous size.

The incompetent should be rooted out, not gays

Editor;

In response to Hank E. Smith's letter (1/26/93). You have got to be kidding Hank!

Yes, I do feel that the murder of any military personnel, including a gay soldier, by another member of the military is truly a detriment to order and discipline within the military. However, you missed the point by a mile. The key word here is "murder" not "gay." I feel that the kicking and beating to death of another human being by two highly trained, disciplined naval officers to be an infinitely bigger detriment to military order than the dead soldier's sexual preference.

I myself am one of the few survivors of one of the biggest military defeats in Vietnam. And I assure you, Hank, it wasn't because of any homosexuals that we may or may not have had in my unit. This enormous loss of life and limb was caused by one man, our company commander. He was, and still is I imagine, an incompetent fool who had requested the position as our commanding officer purely for promotional reasons. He was an unqualified coward that was placed in a position, for all the wrong reasons, by a military leadership that had forgotten its true purposes.

In my experience based opinion, Hank, it is not the gay men and women that need to be rooted out of the military, it is the incompetent cowardly officers like my excommanding officer and the two naval officers that brutally murdered a man for his honesty. That is the biggest threat to military order and discipline.

Editor;

I'm writing in response to the article entitled, "Problems with purging plagues some students" in the Jan. 19 Argonaut. I got purged from the UI system like the rest of us poor souls that didn't receive a letter to pay fees, or some other pathetic excuse not worthy of Idaho Registrar Matt Telin's attention. After all, not everyone that registers months in advance should get what they want.

I read the first page of the article with bitterness, but understanding. I do acknowledge the fact that other people who want to get into classes are held back by some students who drop, or never come to class. However, I find it very disturbing to read that the article used such statements as "it only involves 3.3 percent of the total students." What? Like that's not enough to realize that the new system doesn't just have some bugs, it has some real problems. For example, what about the students who really did pay, and still got purged? This alone gets me a bit upset. What right does anyone have to consider 800 students a small price to pay?

Telin says that this purging system is a "real learning experience." For who? For Telin?

Lastly I'd like to touch on the address issues Telin brought up. Telin was quoted saying, "If anything positive has come out of this new system, it has been the large number of students who have updated their addresses." Well that's a perfect way to get everyone to update their address. Let's get everyone purged so that we can get all the addresses up to date. Yes, let's even purge the faculty, and make them wait on their paychecks until they update their address. Listen, if it's not a good enough excuse for the students to say they never got the letter in the mail then it surely isn't good enough for Telin to say they didn't have all the students' addresses.

All men are equal, unless black, gay or female?

Editor;

I found Hank Smith's article in the Jan. 26 Argonaut very interesting, mildly amusing, but mostly full of ignorant views on the subject. The idea expressed in his title appears throughout the context of his work, but is never supported. The closest he comes to offering any support is in his contention that "If a homosexual is present, it could possibly cause rifts in unit cohesiveness."

Mr. Smith, homosexuals have been present in our military since the birth of this nation with no adverse effects. Furthermore, many of our allies have no ban on homosexuality in their competent militaries. We didn't even have such a ban until Ronald Reagan signed one into effect early in his presidency. Is it your claim that the military units that won the two World Wars were not cohesive? Clearly, "survival" is not at stake.

Mr. Smith uses the death of a gay sailor in October to illustrate his belief that homosexuality is detrimental to "military order and discipline." In some bizarre sense he is correct. In this particular case homosexuality was detrimental to discipline in the same manner that being black was detrimental to order earlier in American history. I would suggest Mr. Smith, that the military, and the ideals of our nation would be better served by banning the "10 percent" that find it impossible to work with homosexuals than to ban the homosexuals.

Removing this ban from the military is not a license for homosexuals to act in an unprofessional manner. Quite the contrary, they must still exhibit behavior appropriate to a member of the United States Armed Services. If their individual conduct is questionable, if it causes a "rift in unit cohesiveness," then they may be discharged. In the past, many homosexuals have served with distinction. They have created no rift. Removing the ban accomplishes one thing, it prevents the government from inquiring about an individual's sexual preference when he or she joins the military.

In all fairness Mr. Smith, there is one solid argument that supports your position, despite the fact that your article never mentions it. If homosexuality is immoral, then the government may have the right to ban it from the military. If this is your position then say it. Don't explain to us how "ignorant" Tracie Bruno and her "liberalist views" are. It is offensive.

So Hank, if you'd "take off your rose-tinted glasses" of a world where all men are created equal, unless of course you are gay, black, or female, you might realize that removing this ban is more than just a "cute little political statement." Hank, you "obviously don't understand, don't comprehend, don't really know what is at stake here." Removing the ban on homosexuals is an attempt to defend one of the founding principles of our nation. All men are created equal. It is hard to believe in this ideal when a presidential order screams otherwise.

UI needs students as #1 priority

Editor;

As students here at the UI we feel that we should be the university's first priority. Our safety should be a concern of the university's while we are paying for our road to the future. We pay a great deal of money as students to not only broaden our education, but to also help maintain the campus where we live and learn.

Since we are paying so much to the university each semester we feel it is the university's responsibility to keep the campus safe. For the past two months the campus has been hazardous to walk through or to drive on because of the ice, snow, and slush that has accumulated on the sidewalks, roads and parking lots.

We do understand that when it is frozen, nothing can be plowed or cleared away, but with the current warming trend everything has melted. The snow and ice are now slush and water and would be easy to clear away. When we walk through the parking lots we are ankle deep in water and slush and the sidewalks are just as bad.

We strongly hope that the university will listen to its students and clear the campus of the water, slush and snow. Many students have already fallen and hurt themselves because of these dangerous conditions. Please take some responsibility and clear off our campus!

Rush fliers obtrusive

Editor;
First of all, I'm not writing this letter in hopes of starting a riot and I know many people in the residence halls (note the term residence halls, not "dorms") share my opinion. I am tired of getting fliers, posters and invitations to attend sorority "rush" activities. It may be hard to believe, but those of us who live in the residence halls live here because we want to, just as those choosing the Greek life style chose their houses in which to reside. Sometimes I feel as though these constantly circulating day-glow fliers are trying to emancipate us from the terrible lives we must lead, lives with no activity, no fun, no friends and apparently no need to advertise for new membership.

It is unfortunate that there must be this constant friction between residence halls and Greek houses. In many ways the Greek halls and houses are alike.

At the same time, each living group must respect the other for choosing as they did. We should concentrate more on being Vandals and less on being geographically separated.

'We offend one who is infinite'

Editor;

Concerning the letter by Ralph Nielsen, "That's not what the Bible says," in the Argonaut on Friday, Jan. 15, 1993, I must disagree with his logic (which is based on the same foundations that prove 1+1=3). Just because a tree is green doesn't make it a banana.

First, if he is trying to prove abortion is O.K., then he should have proved it and not via a double negative that "God kills," (we all have to die because of Adam's fall). Even the devil can prove his case with the Bible; just look at Matt. 4:1-10 and Luke 4:1-13 as evidence.

Second, why did God command that all those people be killed? Because they spurned His love and refused to obey His law—His justice was violated. What does one do with the batteries that do not work, or anything else for that matter? Witness our "dump problems:" if you cannot fix it, you destroy them. Those people were destroyed for the very things Nielsen is fighting to "rationalize."

I pray that he not be hardened in his ways (and therefore not fixable) and ultimately DESTROYED, for the destruction of God is eternal—without end. I doubt that he ever considered that if he cannot keep his finger in the flame of a feeble candle how would he ever be able to spend not one moment, hour, day, week, month, year, decade, or even a century, no not even a million billion years, but forever in the flame kindled by the wrath of his maker.

If someone has a friend that they really love, and repeatedly asks them over for a party in their honor, wouldn't he be offended if he never shows up? How do you think that host would feel if his guest destroyed the host's property, or even assaulted him? What if the guest killed his wife and children (besides possible civil court, the guest would have to face criminal charges for violating "societies standards")? What would that poor host do to get his guest to come and enjoy the elaborate banquet in his honor?

And what do you think man does to his God? Look. God is so loving that He made us to be happy—forever with Him. But only we can choose NOT to, but in that choice we have to take the consequences.

We offend one who is infinite. An infinite offence demands infinite reparation, but as we are incapable of rendering it.

There will come a time when "Ralph Nielsen" will not appear as a byline in any newspaper, but in the obituary. That is the real test, but then it is too late to do anything about it as his choice would then be irrevocable. Then it would be time for God to have His say.

We may have the freedom to drive on the wrong side of the road, but NOT the RIGHT, freedom to run stop lights and signs, but NOT the RIGHT, freedom to kill unborn babies, but NOT the RIGHT, freedom to offend God and ignore the Ten Commandments, but NOT the RIGHT. Don't mix those two word up! Very important. Get the semantics correct. (Freedom is the same as choice or liberty. Liberty becomes license when it violates God's Law).

If God does not give you that right, then no one, not a judge or justice, no president or pope, not a state or government agency, NO ONE can give it to you. With freedom comes responsibility and accountability. (That is why we have a conscience).

Now let us take Nielsen on his own turf. Let us just take a look at just one of his references. Let us look at the reference of Hosea in context, and pay special attention to the part he conveniently replaces by "...," as that gives the cause and effect of this whole discussion. (Hosea 13.)

Mr. Nielsen, as you are the special collections librarian you have excellent access to get a Bible. Ask God to speak to you through it and in imitation of His Mother who pondered it in her heart (Luke 2:51.) You will find it amazing how much you can learn with an open mind.

Please open your Bible and continue reading, and throw away your concordance if you continue using it to an evil end by nit-picking and altering the meaning (there is a heavy penalty for changing one iota).

Ad may be a case of reverse-sexism

Editor;

What's the deal? I seem to recall last year (at least three times) when your opinion page was littered with responses from men and women opposing the various wet t-shirt and bikini contest held at Xenon as well as the Sports Illustrated Swimsuit Issue. Now I open your opinion page and see a greased half-naked male clad only in what appears to be a smaller version of a bikini thong under the phrase, "Ladies, The Men of Seduction, Versus The Hollywoods Hottest Bodies are coming to Moscow." The advertisement also goes on to boast about two Playgirl models that will be "performing."

The same arguments made by feminists last year regarding S.I.'s Swimsuit Issue and the bikini contests also apply to this situation. It is the blatant use of sex for profit. It is the exploitation of human sexuality, should it matter if it is male or female? I think not, however it disturbs me that the "...biggest strip off competition ever!" is not gaining the same response as the highly controversial bikini contest and swimsuit issue.

Perhaps this is what annoys me the most, because it could just be the result of people not realizing that it is sexist. Is it not sexist within itself that the exploitation of a human being is occurring? In addition does anyone realize that it is even more sexist that an all-male strip off does not get the same public upheaval as an all-female strip off would?

The reason being is that it is obviously so entrenched in our thinking that it is peachy-keen for males to strip and be used as pure sex objects that no one really cares when it happens, or maybe they do realize, but do nothing about it. Is this a case of ignorance or reverse-sexism, you make the call.

She hops from one side of her bedroom to the other until she finally catches her foot on a cord and falls. Her mannequin falls on top of her and the two ungracefully land in the missionary position on top of her bed.

Keep in mind her date, who is standing outside and watching through the window, sees a silhouette of this whole episode. His flowers wilt as he thinks she's fallen for another man.

The second Lee spot shows a man trying to button his too-tight jeans. He's sucking his gut in so hard that the curtains and wall hangings begin flying his way.

The funny part is when a canary gets sucked out of its cage and into the man's gut. About this time his wife walks into the room and gives him an odd look. The man, looking guilty, burps a few feathers.

The morale of the story: Buy Lee Jeans.

I knew this commercial was effective when I looked around the party to see a few men, who were laughing and busting their guts, pondering whether they should undo the top button of their jeans or not. One man commented as he let out a beer belch, "Maybe it's time I get some."

The second place winner goes to Nike with their 90-second spot reteaming Michael Jordan and Bugs Bunny. In this new spot they add Bugs' Warner Brothers cartoon foil, Marvin Martian. The commercial was created by teaming up computer-generated imagery with live action. Jordan seemed to be enjoying his time with Bugs but was rather annoyed with Marvin. What were they promoting? Air Jordans of course.

Jordan also took third place honors in his McDonald's commercial with Larry Bird. The two were involved in a basketball shootout and the first to miss had to watch the other eat a Big Mac. They start shooting at half-court and work their way up into the bleachers, into the rafters, outside the gymnasium and finally to the top of a sky-scraper where Bird proclaims that the ball will go, "over the expressway, over the water" and eventually find its way through the hoop. Needless to say, we don't find out who wins the glorious shootout.

It's been five years since the start of the Budbowl. Each year the competition growing fiercer. This year Anheuser-Busch used computer-generated imagery blended with live action to enhance the spots. Joe Namath and Corbin Bernsen coached competing teams of bottles for Budweiser brands. Budweiser prevailed as the champs. Anyone know their overall record?

Although the Super Bowl didn't prove to be exciting, the commercials did. This year sparked truly new and well-liked advertising campaigns.

The major advertisements for the Super Bowl were purchased by Anheuser-Busch (eight spots), Coopers & Lybrand (two), Ford Motor's Lincoln—Mercury (one), Frito-Lay (two), Gillette (four), Lee Apparel (four), Master Lock (one), McDonald's (three), Miller (two), Nike (three), Pepsi (ten), Reebok (three), ServiStar (two), Seven-up (three) and Subaru (three).

If a man describes a woman in shallow, one-dimensional or purely physical terms (e.g., "she's got a body that could melt a polar icecap") he is probably a sexist.

If one man describes another man in the same fashion (e.g., "he's got a body so big he needs his own zip code") he is probably a sports commentator for NBC.

Because Troy Aikman threw a few touchdown passes and won the most valuable player award he has become sort of a demigod to be admired by young and old, male and female.

It is the "athlete as a hero" mentality raising its gruesome head again.

As far as I know, Aikman is a wife-beating, gin-swilling horn-dog who would be serving five to 10 in Leavenworth if he wasn't playing football. Or a moral and upstanding member of society who sings in his church choir and donates 25 percent of his salary to charity.

Whatever the case, he is no hero to me. I'm not going to judge him as an admirable human being based on the fact he can throw a football 60 yards.

The misplaced enthusiasm of Enberg and Trumpy was a hold over from the print media. For the two weeks preceding the Super Bowl the sports pages of every newspaper in America were full of stories that went beyond simple reportage.

Instead of reporting the facts, sportswriters tried to turn a simple sporting event into an epic struggle between right and wrong. They tried to convince us that the future of humankind would rest on the final score, when in fact the game was nothing more than the overblown hobby of a bunch of men in silly outfits.

My beliefs put me in the silent majority, I suppose. The most vociferous Dallas fans will rant and rave for the next year, letting us all know how great they are just because their team won the Super Bowl.

But then it's easy to love a winner, isn't it?

Buffalo fans will mope around, wearing frowns and wondering why their team can't win the big one.

And I will spend the next 12 months hoping that some downtown nightclub will have the foresight to schedule a group of female strippers so I can miss the next Super Bowl but keep my delicate male identity intact.

UI rebounds for needed road win

Not as if the Idaho Vandal men's basketball team needed any more motivation.

Following Thursday's 67-66 heartbreaking loss to the Weber State Wildcats in Ogden, the Vandals bounced back to defeat the Northern Arizona Lumberjacks Saturday night in Flagstaff, 59-53.

To prevent the loss to WSU in becoming a determinant on his team's performance against NAU, Idaho coach Larry Eustachy had a pre-game speech prepared for his team prior to Saturday's match-up.

But the third year coach didn't have to use it—the Lumberjacks did it for him.

"I'd like to thank NAU for the things they said in the paper," Eustachy said afterwards in referring to comments made by Lumberjack players that Idaho was 'going back over the mountain losers.' "I had a motivational speech but I didn't have to use it."

Idaho (15-5 overall, 4-1 in conference) won its first road game of the season behind a smothering second half defense and a career high performance from Dan Serkin. Serkin, a 6-7 reserve forward, came off the bench to score seven of his eight points in the second half. The junior also had 11 rebounds to tie teammate Orlando Lightfoot for game-high honors.

"Dan was easily the player of the game," Eustachy said. "The bench was super tonight."

NAU (7-9, 3-3), which was coming off an 89-69 trouncing of the quickly faltering Eastern Washington Eagles, kept the score close early behind the shooting of forward Jason Word. The 6-5 sophomore scored six points in helping the 'Jacks to a 22-20 lead with 11:46 left.

After a media time-out, Idaho took the opportunity to begin heating up behind the smooth shooting of senior Marvin Ricks. The 6-0 guard scored seven points in a 12-0 run to give Idaho its biggest lead at 32-22 with 7:06 remaining.

"We held them to one shot and that was the key for us," Eustachy said.

The 'Jacks fought right back as guard John Rondeno found his outside touch in hitting two 3-pointers in a 10-2 NAU run and helped pull the score to just a 39-37 Idaho advantage at the break.

"I definitely think Northern Arizona will beat some conference contenders (later this season)," Eustachy said.

Word began the second half the same way he had ended the first by connecting on four of NAU's first eight points as the 'Jacks built a four point lead which resulted in a Eustachy time-out.

But then Serkin decided it was a game that he needed to be a large part of.

The transfer from East St. Louis scored five points in a 12-0 Idaho run to help give Idaho a 53-45 lead with 10:02 left. The scoring drought lasted 10 minutes for NAU, but didn't completely eliminate it.

A 3-pointer by Rondeno and another from Brad Snyder cut the lead to 54-51 with 5:40 left. But two free throws by Marvin Ricks, and a tip-in by Lightfoot with :19 sealed the Vandals tenth win in its last 12 games.

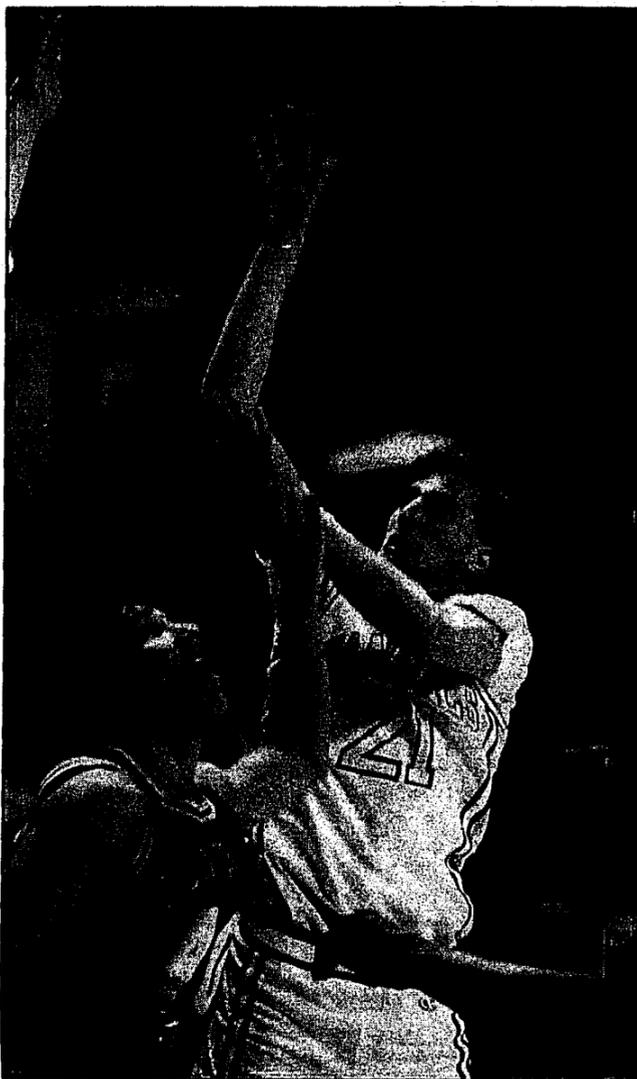

Eustachy was most pleased with the defensive effort of Idaho on the Lumberjacks, who had been averaging 73.2 a game.

"With seven minutes into the game they had scored 20 points and finished with 53," Eustachy said. "I'm extremely proud of our players after the disappointing loss at Weber."

Ricks led all scorers with 17 points which included three 3-pointers. Lightfoot also scored in double-figures for the Vandals as he had 16 in recording his sixth double-double of the season.

Word led the 'Jacks with 16 points followed by Rondeno with 12 and Snyder with 10. Leading scorer Demetreus Robbins, who had been averaging 16.5, was held to three on 1-of-6 shooting.

IDAHO INFO— In the five below average games this season where Ricks averaged 6.4 points (which includes nine at Weber), his next-game average is 20.4 points a game... Idaho outrebounded NAU 46-29 and now have done so 19 of 20 times this season... NAU shot just 6-of-24 from the field in the second half.

Weekend of basketball worth the travel time

March Madness is still a month-and-a-half away, but now that it's the first of February, and every conference is in the middle of league play, college basketball is starting to grow more interesting with each game.

Since this past weekend was an away trip for the Idaho Vandal men's basketball team, I decided that away would be a good place for myself to be as well. With Washington State on the road and Gonzaga a little too far to walk, I realized I would have been without a live basketball game for the first weekend since Dec 26.

So with a load of pens, a couple of notebooks, and enough clothes to last about a month, it was time to leave for the weekend to catch a game or two.

Thurs. 10:20 a.m.: While sitting in the Pullman/Moscow Airport waiting for a 10:40 flight to Boise, a woman behind me from Potlatch begins a conversation with her friend by saying: "If the plane crashes and I die, I want everyone at my funeral to be happy because essentially I'll be in a better place." Well. We haven't even left the ground yet and the trip is off to a bad start. The ironic thing is that if the plane doesn't go down, then the pessimist and myself both wind up at our final destination safe and sound... that being Salt Lake City.

I can see where a crash may be a coin toss.

2:50 p.m.: Following a 30 minute stop in Boise, we've touched down at the "Sun Valley/Hailey Memorial" Airport. There's more snow here than in Marion Barry's nose and since there's a 15 minute break, it's a good time to take a stroll.

Straight ahead there are three doors to the "Sun Valley/Hailey Memorial" Airport, but they're locked.

After walking around the side of the "Sun Valley/Hailey Memorial" Airport there's plenty of snow, but there are no people.

Then, when it seems impossible to get into this impressive worldwide used international structure, I decide to cut through the door that Horizon Airlines uses to bring baggage out onto the plane. Big mistake.

"Hey," a male employee says while coming out of the door-

Idaho sweeps conference foes

By DOUG TAYLOR
Assistant Editor

Compared to a more dubious streak that ended just two weeks ago, the University of Idaho women's basketball team hopes to keep a new variety of streak intact after this weekend.

After losing six consecutive games, the Lady Vandals snapped back to take an 81-76 victory over Sacramento State on Jan. 22. Two more wins were added Friday and Saturday with home victories over Weber State and Northern Arizona, respectively.

Now with a sense of confidence that accompanies a three-game winning streak, the Lady Vandals will head to southern Idaho to face Idaho State and Boise State.

The most daunting challenge will be in BSU Pavilion as the Lady Vandals face a Boise squad that is third in the conference with a 3-2 record and sports a 12-4 record in all games.

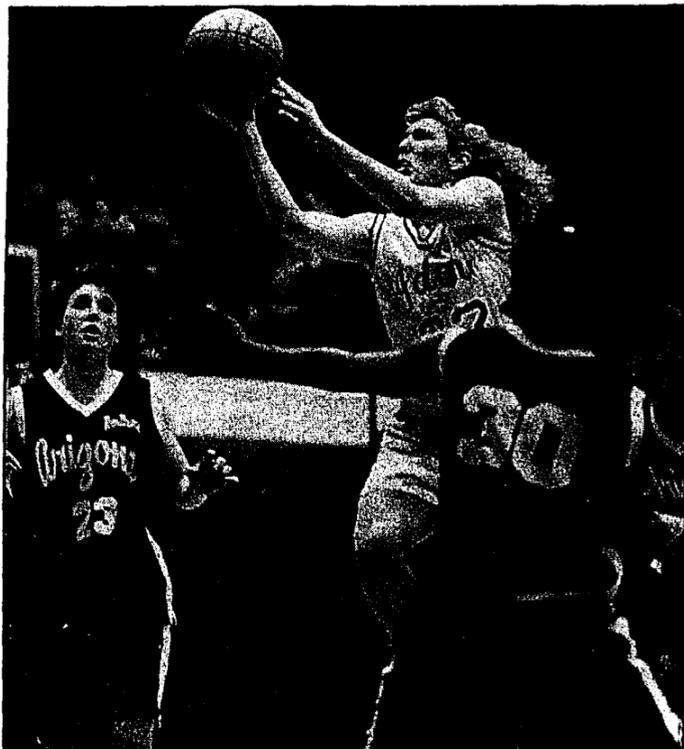

That task, however, comes after a trip to Pocatello to face ISU, which is tied with Idaho for fifth place in conference at 2-3.

The Lady Vandals are now 7-10 overall heading into the weekend games with the Bengals and the Broncos.

For now, Idaho can savor a pair of conference wins that showcased Idaho's talent in the front-court and out on the perimeter.

Weber St. was the first to fall as Idaho rallied from a four-point deficit with 4 1/2 minutes left to claim a 65-62 win.

After Rachele Gardner hit her only basket of the game, a huge 3-pointer from the right baseline with 4:35 left, the Lady Vandals were staring at a Weber lead that was 57-53.

Senior forward Brenda Kuehlthau must have caught the score for she scored the next four Idaho points as part of a 12-5 run that handed Idaho the win.

The 6-foot Kuehlthau, who shot 10-of-17 from the floor to finish with a game-high 24 points, started the run by sandwiching two layins around one by WSU's Jenifer Wood to draw Idaho within two, 59-57.

Kuehlthau then found center Karen Poncina for an easy basket and guard Jennifer Clary drilled a jumper to give Idaho the lead for good at 61-59.

Clary added 16 points in the win while Poncina added eight points and 10 rebounds. The Lady Vandals ended the ballway. "What can I do for you?" "I was just looking for a way to get in."

"Oh," he replies with an uncomfortable lucky-for-you type of laugh. "One more step and we would have had to shoot you." Which, in a way is kind of funny, but not really.

At any rate, it was good to see that security hasn't taken a back seat at the "Sun Valley/Hailey Memori... etcetera, etcetera."

5:00 p.m.: To Miss Potlatch's surprise, I'm sure, we've made it in one piece to Salt Lake City. A plus for this city is that ground transportation has got to be top 10 in the country. As I approach the Utah travel counter which has about nine people for roughly six different companies, "May I help you?" bombards me faster than little kids in Tiajuana asking if I will 'BuyaChicklet?Chicklet?BuyaChicklet?' It's just a 35 minute drive to Ogden so I graciously accept the lowest price.

After loading into the van, I quickly realize that I am now travelling with the four strangest people that could have been recruited for the drive.

Nick, who hails from the beautiful country of New Jersey, and, as like the other three, is going to Ogden for a nutrition seminar, has more trash coming out of his mouth than a Rush Limbaugh show. For example, a year ago

Nick was doing 140 miles an hour on his motorcycle in his hometown and came inches away from slamming into a police roadblock. The catch, though, is that the police let "Evil Nickevil" go because they realized they buy health food at his father's store.

The three older ladies from Kallispell, Montana aren't much more sane and it finally dawns on me that I am actually living the van scene from the movie "The Dream Team." Thank god the Dee Events Center is the first stop so I won't see anyone rip into the song "Hit the road Jack."

7:50 p.m.: Idaho has rolled out to a 30-10 lead over the Wildcats and are in position to win its eighth straight game.

9:30 p.m.: WSU's Mike Sivulich hits a free throw to lead the Wildcats to a 67-66 come from behind victory over Idaho. An iffy call by referee Dick Ball (yes, that's correct) with :03 left once again shows that when you're on the road in league play, B.S. doesn't always stand for Big Sky.

12:00 p.m.: After writing the game re-cap and faxing it to the Argonaut, I'm in the Ogden Park Hotel drinking 7-and-7's like they're Kool-Aid. The loss to Weber is a tough one to swallow but the drinks sure as hell aren't. Luckily for me the bar closes at 1:00 because if not, I was well on my way to receiving my 6:30 wake-up call the next morning with my face in a basket of complimentary bar trailmix.

Fri., 7:30 a.m.: A little breakfast in the hotel with Vandal radio voice Tom Morris. The buffet spread is a good one consisting of more fruits than the military will ever want. The two of us spend the hour doing what any other journalists would do after a loss like the night before- we second guess things.

8:30 p.m.: Now back in Boise, it's intermission of the Boise State University-Montana State University game. Thank god I'm on the press sheet and didn't have to pay for this one. With Boise leading 31-25, and the two teams combining for 22 turnovers in 20 minutes, the simple choice for "play of the game" thus far is the three minutes of BSU's Mane Line Dancers.

Mon., 8:30 a.m.: Now back in Moscow, I realize that the trip to Ogden was well worth the time even though it did have its moments. The game was worth covering because it was a well played, exciting clash of two teams figured to be the best in their respected league. One team breaks out to a quick lead and then the opposing squad mounts an incredible comeback making the outcome not determinable until the last second.

So what was learned on this enlightening four day trip? Make sure there's film in the camera when at S.V./H Memorial Airport, avoid van trips with Nicks, and the Buffalo Bills should catch a few UI-WSU games.

game shooting nearly 50 percent. The conference win came despite two areas that coach Laurier Turner has been trying to get improvement on for the entire season — turnovers and rebounds.

The Wildcats outrebounded the Lady Vandals 40-38 as Wendy Talbot, the Big Sky's leading rebounder, racked up 13 boards to lead both teams.

The other Idaho pitfall this year, turnovers, proved to be a detriment also as the Lady Vandals turned the ball over 18 times. Clary accounted for seven of these personally.

Once again, Idaho forced some turnovers of its own with pressure defense as the Wildcats fumbled the ball away 17 times. Idaho's defense was also the bane of WSU shooters as the Wildcats were held to just 36 percent from the field.

Wood led the Wildcats with 20 points while forward Carla Parkinson added 14 points, including four treys.

Earlier in the season, Turner noted that the Lady Vandals would be a dangerous team if all "the components come together."

Interpreted simply, this referred to a team tendency of alternating slumps among the starters. One important player would fall in a mini-slump, and in turn, that player's slump would end and another's would begin.

That tendency came to a screeching halt on Saturday night as the Lady Vandals put together one of their more complete efforts of the season in routing Northern Arizona 78-44.

After Kuehlthau started the game's scoring with a short jumper, the Lady Vandals scored six straight points to make the score 8-0. That lead would eventually stretch into a 23-12 cushion when guard P.J. Hall buried a 3-pointer.

That was just a prelude, though, to what would happen after the Lady Vandals assumed a 39-27 lead early in the second half.

Keyed by three consecutive 3-pointers from Clary, the Lady Vandals went on a 13-2 tear to take a 52-29 lead with 12:31 left.

Matters didn't brighten for the Lumberjacks following Idaho's run.

Idaho would outscore NAU 26-15 the rest of the way to claim the 33-point margin of victory.

Clary finished with the hot hand as she scored 24 points, including six 3-pointers. She also had six rebounds and five assists for the Lady Vandals.

Kortnie Edwards contributed 14 points and 10 rebounds while reserve Jeri Hymas added 10 more on 4-of-4 shooting from the field. P.J. Hall added nine points, all of which came on 3-pointers.

Edwards' 10 rebounds were a deciding factor in why the Lady Vandals held a 43-32 rebounding advantage over the Lumberjacks.

Idaho women go 3-1 in home meet

By MISSY WILSON
Staff Writer

The Idaho women's track team accomplished both its goals this weekend by setting a number of personal records and achieving some conference qualifying times.

"This is the best opening meet we've ever had," head coach Scott Lorek said. "It ran smoothly and the times were better than I could have ever hoped for in an opening meet."

The Vandals are well on their way to climbing to the top of the Big Sky Conference in dual meet competition. After their first meet of the season, their indoor record sits at 3-1, losing only to the University of Washington.

One of the conference qualifying performances came from Teresa Batt who high jumped 5-5 3/4 to give her a second place finish overall and an indoor personal record.

Cindy Smith and Cathy Balensky also finished in a first place tie in the high jump, both sailing 5-4 1/2.

Going into the meet Lorek knew that some of the toughest competition would be in the distance running because of the high caliber of athletes competing.

The Vandals rose to the occasion by placing well in both the mile and 3,000 meter and by setting a number of personal records.

Tara Hamilton ran a conference qualifying time of 5:13 in the mile, placing fourth in the overall standings. In the 3,000 meter, Robyn Slate placed third just under a conference qualifying mark with a time of 10:19, and Laura Moore finished fourth with a time of 10:34.

According to Lorek, these times are personal bests for all three runners in their respective events.

Shannon Russell-Shaw also topped the shot put charts with a conference qualifying throw of 40-5 1/2. Russell-Shaw broke the Idaho school record last season as a sophomore in the discus, and Lorek said earlier this year that he thinks she has great potential in both the shot put and discus.

Prior to the meet, Lorek was anxious to see how his freshman women were going to do against the competition. Once again he was impressed.

Sarah Dudley, a freshman long and triple jumper, finished seventh overall in the triple jump at 35-10, which was just two inches short of a conference qualifying jump. For her high jumping marks, Balensky, also a freshman, received praise from both Lorek and teammate Batt.

"Our freshman are outstanding- they have incredible potential," Batt said. "I was especially impressed with Balensky. She had a fantastic performance for a freshman."

Idaho's first year athletes are standing out in other areas, as well. According to Lorek, three of the four mile relay runners are freshman. He said that the team ran well in finishing third overall.

Lorek added that his sprinters also had a solid opening meet.

"We wanted our emphasis to be on the women competing tough mentally, and they did a great job," Lorek said. "With performances like we had this weekend, our times are going just keep getting better."

The Vandals are headed to Eastern Washington University this weekend for the EWU Invitational and then are back home the following weekend. Lorek said he is sending only half of his team to the invitational, including mostly sprinters.

The Dome is going to be a hectic place on February 12 and 13 when Idaho will host both the Vandal Indoor Invitational and the Idaho all-comers.

The invitational will be on Friday night and will consist of competition from "the best individual athletes we can find," Lorek said. There will be eight women's events and 10 men's events in the competition, along with some extras such as a football 40-yard dash, fraternity-sorority 400-meter race, and an invitational boy's high school mile run.

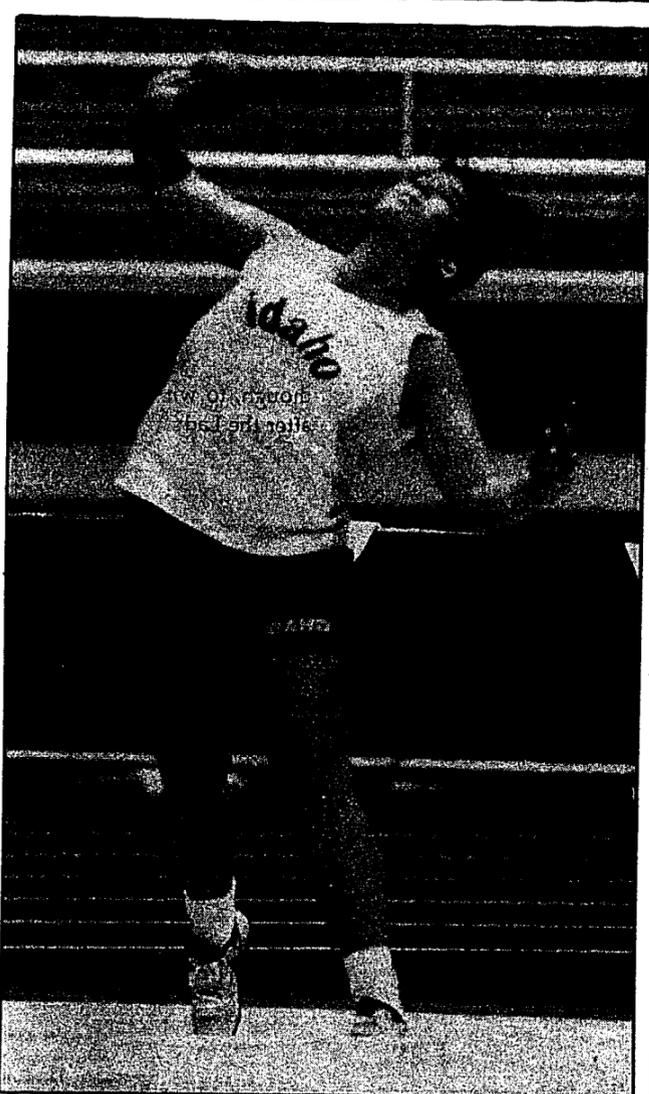

"This invitational isn't just for collegiate athletes, but for the top athletes from all over," Lorek said. "(World Decathlete) Dan O'Brian will be competing in it."

Lorek said that there will be women from the UI track team competing in the high jump, 55-meter high hurdles, 55-meter dash and the mile run.

The team will turn around Saturday and compete in the Idaho all-comers. Lorek said that this meet is for anyone who walks in the door.

"We are expecting Saturday's caliber of competition to be very good," Lorek said. "There will be a lot of events and my team is looking forward to it."

Junior Shannon Russell-Shaw lets a shot put go in this past weekend's Idaho Scoring Invitational in the Kibble Dome. The women's track and field team opened the season by posting an impressive 3-1 record in the meet. (JEFF CURTIS PHOTO)

1982 Celebrating Our 12th Year 1993

Strippers showed skin

By SHARI IRETON
News Editor

The screams of the mob of women rose as the man's clothing, ripped from his body, were tossed into the audience.

Was this a scene from some demented, Basic Instinct-like movie? No, it was the scene at Xenon Sunday night when the men of Hollywood's Male Image stripped down to their skivvies for the women of the Palouse.

For a $10 cover charge, females were witnesses to the bare buns and scantily clad group of nationally traveling dancer/strippers. Among the dancers included a former Playgirl magazine stud and actor who will soon replace the character of Emilio, on the soap opera Days of Our Lives.

The night began with three dancers (fully dressed) performing on stage to Janet Jackson, just to set the mood and create tension for the women who impatiently awaited the disrobing to begin.

After the rules were explained, stripper Jelly T. from Los Angeles took the definition of "stripteasing" to the limit, decked out in rock star attire.

Dressed in, or undressing out of costumes that followed the themes of Robin Hood, Top Gun cowboys and rock stars, the men danced their way into the ladies hearts. Or other unmentionable body parts.

For many of the women in the audience, like Terri Hart, it was a virgin viewing of a professional male stripper. "I had only $2 to give him (Jelly T.), but I was right up at the stage." Hart was one of the scores of women that managed to scrape up some money to give the strippers.

The most popular way for the audience to tip the dancers was to roll up the money, put it between their teeth and then slide it into the strippers briefs as he gyrated within inches of the women's face. While this may sound uncomfortable to some, not one complaint could be heard from the audience.

"It was a lot of fun out there," said Hart, "the guys are real nice."

Roxy Frye, nicknamed "Hot-pants" by the host of the night's entertainment, said the dancers she talked to were "really nice...they're really cool." When asked she thought the dancer was embarrassed, she smiled mischievously and said "he looked like he was having a really good time."

While bouncing buns and bulging g-strings may mean sheer excitement for some women, it is just a job for stripper Julian Alexander, albeit one he enjoys and takes seriously.

Alexander became a professional "nocturnal enticing engineer" as a part time job and it helps him pay for his higher education. "I figured this was as good as job as any."

Four-time college entertainer of the year to perform at UI

By HALO DEWITT

The hometown voice in the Hallmark commercials, Barbara Bailey Hutchinson, will sing Friday, Feb. 5, at 8 p.m. in the University of Idaho Administration Auditorium.

Hutchinson, a Grammy nominee, has also done commercials for McDonald's, Stouffer's, United Airlines, and Heinz.

"I'm hooked and thrilled," said Hutchinson of her Grammy nomination. "He also said he could hear a wonderful, wonderful voice."

wait for the award show on Feb. 24.

Hutchinson has also been named "Campus Entertainer of the Year" by the National Association of Campus Activities.

Hutchinson's biggest influence has been her parents who surrounded her in music as a child. Next in line after her parents is Josh White, Jr., Hutchinson's mentor. She said when she listens to the radio she listens to everything from classical to rock and roll. There isn't any type of music that doesn't influence her.

Hutchinson said she has been singing "since I was old enough to cry." She continues to perform and sing because she "loves it" and she especially likes the interaction with the audience, she said.

Hutchinson got her start in a coffeehouse, not unlike UI's own Coffeehouse productions, in Detroit, MI.

Chris Hutchinson, her road manager and husband, would not say how many years they have been married, only that it has been a long time. Chris first saw Barbara on stage and she instantly stole his heart. However, he went to see her perform every night for three years before she would go out with him.

"I walk around with a grin on my face all the time now," Chris said, stressing how happy and proud they are to be married.

"It's incredible," said Chris, of the pride he feels when he sees his wife perform. He credits her hard work, talent, and patience with her success, though.

The only states Barbara Bailey Hutchinson has not performed in are Idaho, Oregon, and Washington.

There will be a press conference on Feb. 5 at noon for Hutchinson. There is also a possibility that she will make a guest appearance on a KUOI Saturday morning radio show about women in music.

Tickets are currently on sale and will be available at the door on Friday night, as well. The cost for UI undergraduates is $3 and general admission is $5. The event is sponsored by ASUI Productions Coffeehouse.

Moscow hypnotherapist changes people's minds

By ELIZABETH POWELL
Contributing Writer

"I'm a guide," said Mark Krueger, Hypnotherapist. "I utilize techniques that help people have greater access to their subconscious mind. I'm a tour guide to access the power of choice."

How do we access this power of choice? By using hypnosis. Mark Krueger, a certified Hypnotherapist who has been working in the Moscow area for one year, uses hypnosis to help people change their lives for the better. Hypnosis is a natural state of being, corresponding to the alpha and theta states when awake and deeply asleep. This feeling occurs with deep relaxation accompanied with focused attention. When we daydream, read, watch T.V. or a movie, or drive, we experience self hypnosis.

During hypnosis the subconscious mind is more peaceful and effectively available to the individual. The subconscious mind is the motivator to our actions. To change our actions or behaviors, we have to change our subconscious belief system. And that is where Krueger steps in. He helps people change to find a deeper confidence, happiness, integration for themselves.

"Hypnotism changes people's power of choice," said Krueger. "People get to places in their life where they don't feel they have a choice. If a person has a problem with smoking, I help them re-establish their power of choice. With smoking, the only way to change is to quit, and the subconscious mind hates quitting. I begin helping by establishing a goal, and I find a creative, relaxing way to reach it. The process then becomes fun."

Krueger offers Hypnotherapy sessions at the Inner Vision Bookstore. His last session was at the end of January and dealt with changing people's lives for the better. Leigh Taylor, a student at the UI, attended the session and had a positive experience with the Hypnotherapy. "I felt that by attending the hypnotherapy session, I was being exposed to something that could better my life. I learned a way of relaxation through self hypnosis that will open new channels to understanding myself."

"I feel that Hypnotherapy is effective and productive because people get their lives back when they break their bad habits," said Krueger.

For more information regarding Mark Krueger's Hypnotherapy sessions, stop by the Inner Vision Bookstore at 118 E. Third for the times of future sessions available.

Music, poetry shared

By LANAE EMPEY
Staff Writer

From original poetry to music, UI students found a chance to share their talent at the Open "Mike" Nite, presented by ASUI Coffeehouse Jan. 29 in the Vandal Cafe.

"We just thought it would be a good way to give local talent a chance," said ASUI Program Director Jan Abramson.

Seven to eight performers a night get a chance to share their talents, said Jan Proctor, Coffeehouse chair. At 10 p.m., all Coffeehouse productions are ended.

The first Open "Mike" Nite in Fall 1991 was really a talent show, said Proctor. It was such a hit they had another show for Halloween and have implemented it as a part of the Coffeehouse series. The final Friday of each month will be an Open "Mike" Nite, with the exception of February due to the Jazz Festival.

Performers said they went because they knew the crowd would be supportive. "They want to hear new artists," said Andrea Vogt, a senior who played blues and bluegrass. "It's different than a bar where they are there to drink. You won't get any tomatoes in the face."

Gerry Stewart, a junior who read original poetry, didn't know exactly how the crowd would respond, but came for the opportunity. "There is not other place to do it (read poetry)," she said. She had decided the night before to read her poetry.

In the past, the performers have been mostly musicians and mostly guitarists, said Proctor. She said they haven't had many performers from the Lionel Hampton School of Music. Most are casual performers searching for a stage.

Performers sign up as they arrive and perform in the same order they arrive. Some people want to play all night, Proctor said, but they try to keep the time down so more people have the opportunity to perform.

The next Open "Mike" Nite will be Feb. 19 at 8 p.m. in the SUB Vandal Cafe. Admission and a limited supply of coffee is free.

'Cinema Paradiso' shown in Borah

By WADE ALONZO
Contributing Writer

Wednesday night at the Student Union Building Borah Theatre ASUI Productions will present Cinema Paradiso, at 7 p.m. as part of its ongoing Wednesday night International Film series.

Directed by Giuseppe Tornatore, and starring Philippe Noiret and Leopoldo Trieste, Cinema Paradiso has won a number of awards. In 1989 at the Cannes Film Festival it won the Special Prize of the Jury and a Golden Globe award for best foreign film, the same year.

It begins with the aging Salvatore Di Vitto, a successful Italian filmmaker recalling his childhood in the small and peaceful town, Giancaldo Sicily, in the late forties. His memory is spurred by a phone call from his mother saying that his oldest and dearest friend Alfredo has died. Alfredo was the projectionist of the town's only theatre, the Cinema Paradiso. The smart and bratty little Salvatore, or Toto, befriends Alfredo and gets to see the movies before they have been censored by the screen. We watch Toto grow and take over as projectionist when Alfredo goes blind and then leaves Giancaldo for good.

"Giuseppe Tornatore says everything that needs to be said about laughter, pathos, passion and loss through the simple story of a boy who loves movies," said Premiere Magazine.

Peter Travers of Rolling Stone said, "Movie lovers will lose their hearts to Cinema Paradiso, not out of nostalgia, but for Tornatore's vigorous demonstration of the enduring power of dreams."

Admission is $1 for undergraduate students and $2 for everyone else. There are only 200 seats.

Places to burn calories during the winter

Moscow has many exciting options for individuals who don't like exercising outside in the cold.

On the University of Idaho campus there are several options for exercisers. Memorial Gym has a large gymnasium, a men's sauna, combative room, two raquetball courts, a shooting range, and a weight room. The weight room has Universal weight machines, free weights, one Schwynn Air-dyne bicycle, and five regular bicycles with digital timers. It's busiest between 3:30 and 5 p.m.

Memorial Gym's hours are: Mon through Fri: 11:30-1:30 p.m., 4-9:45 p.m. Sat: 9 a.m. to 9:45 p.m. Sun: Noon to 9:45 p.m. Memorial Gym Weight Room hours are: Mon through Thu: 9:30 a.m. to 1:30 p.m., 3:30-9:45 p.m. Fri: 9:30 a.m. to 9:45 p.m. Sat: 9 a.m. to 9:45 p.m. Sun: Noon to 9:45 p.m. Shooting Range Hours: Tue and Thu: 7:30-9:30 p.m.

The Physical Education Building (PEB) offers large and small gyms, dance studios, a squash court, and a women's sauna. PEB hours: Mon through Fri: 11:30-1:30 p.m., 5-9:45 p.m. Sat: 9 a.m. to 9:45 p.m. Sun: Noon to 9:45 p.m.

The Kibbie Dome Activity Center houses eight raquetball courts, a weight room, and the large gym has tennis courts, basketball courts, volleyball courts, and a running track. The weight room has Universal weight machines, free weights, a chin-up bar, and a squatting bar, but no bicycles. It's usually much less crowded than Memorial Gym's weight room.

Dome hours: Mon through Fri: 6 a.m.-10 p.m. Sat and Sun: 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Weight room hours are: Mon through Thu: 6-8 a.m., 11:30 a.m. to 2:30 p.m., and 6:30-9 p.m. Mon through Fri. Sat: Noon to 4:45 p.m.

Students, faculty and staff can use all the above facilities free of charge, with a valid ID.

The UI Swim Center is free to students, faculty and staff with a valid ID. For the general public fees are 75 cents for senior citizens and those under 12 years of age, and $1 for individuals age 13 or older. Seasonal passes and private lessons are available. Call 885-6381 for more information. For group lessons, call Conferences and Enrichment at 885-6486.

Swim Center hours are: Open Recreation Swim: Weekdays: 7-8:30 p.m. (closed Wed). Weekends: 2-4 p.m., 7-8:30 p.m. Lap Swims: Mon, Wed, Fri: 7:30-8:20 a.m., Tue and Thu: 7-8:20 a.m., Mon, Wed, Fri: 12:30-1:20 p.m., Tues, Thu: 11:30 a.m. to 1:20 p.m., Weekdays: 8:30-9:30 p.m. (Closed Wed), Weekends: 4-5 p.m., 8:30-9:30 p.m.

In addition to the facilities at UI, there are two fitness centers in Moscow. Gold's Gym, at 302 S. Main (in the basement of Xenon), is still under construction. Manager Andy Rockenfield expects it to open in about a month. Weight machines that will be available there are Flex, Cybex and Hammerstrength.

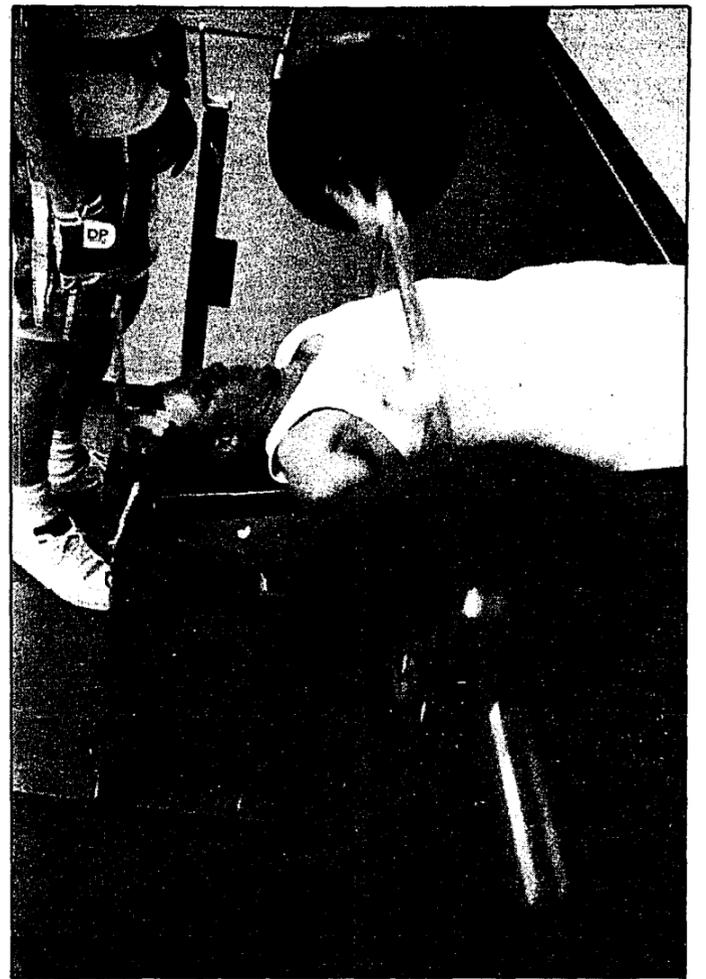

There are also free weights, 3 treadmills, 3 stairmasters, and 5 computerized lifecycles with a television monitor so users can race each other.

There will be two to four certified trainers always available in the weight training area and at least one trainer will be a woman. Rockenfield stressed that it's important to have good services for people. Trainers conduct fitness evaluations, develop personalized programs, and assist people with their workouts. "Every program will be individualized to suit that person's needs," Rockenfield said.

Gold's Gym will offer 30 or more aerobics classes per week in low impact, step, or high impact. Other facilities include five tanning beds, a co-ed jacuzzi, and separate men's and women's saunas. A full service juice bar is set to provide protein shakes, weight gaining shakes, and other drinks. In addition, Gold's Gym's own line of supplements and vitamins will be available.

For busy business people, there is a specialized workout program that provides a good workout in less time. Here, there's a line of Flex machines, each for a different part of the body. In general, Rockenfield said there is enough machines so that no one will have to wait.

Anticipated Gold Gym hours are: Mon-Fri: 6 a.m. to Midnight, Saturday and Sunday: 9 a.m. to 9
