Radioactive waste from research finds home at university

By SHARI IRETON
News Editor

When one hears the word "radioactive," images of Three Mile Island and Hanford come to mind.

What may surprise many University of Idaho students is that the university handles radioactive waste right here on campus.

While they may not deal with glowing green fluids, the UI Physical Plant has been storing solid radioactive waste from biological and physiological research in a storage garage.

The Physical Plant stores materials from "all of the research on campus that uses radioactive isotopes," said Fred Hutchison, university safety director.

"It makes a useful tool for tracing biologic reactions," he said.

"We are storing it in that little garage at the Physical Plant ever since they demolished the old one when they built the new parking lot," Hutchison said.

Employees like Vicki Schur, laboratory safety specialist, are packaging and moving the materials to the new storage area near the west UI farm area. The waste is compacted and placed in 50 gallon drums.

Later, the waste will be transported to the US Ecology Site in Hanford, Washington, where Hutchison said the government runs a "low level radioactive waste site."

"There are various users (of radioactive waste) on campus," said Hutchison. One such "user" is Don Crawford, professor of bacteriology.

"We use radioactive isotopes primarily in biotechnology," said Crawford. One of his fields of research deals with using microorganisms to clean up toxic waste.

Crawford has worked with Hutchison and radioactive isotopes for years, and said Hutchison is at both ends of the waste cycle.

"The material has to go through Fred first" for inventory purposes, making it easier for the university to keep track of everything, said Crawford.

The UI researchers take the used solid waste that handled the radioactive material to Hutchison. They are then

Scientists practice safety in genetic research

By DOUG TAYLOR
Assistant Editor

Responsibility is the theme for a branch of scientific research that is becoming widely popular throughout the country.

The general name associated with such research, biotechnology, has enabled researchers to alter the genes of organisms such as bacteria and some commercial foods. These organisms are usually then tested in a regulated environment.

Controlling this somewhat new line of work has been the federal government and even scientists themselves.

At the University of Idaho, such efforts rest mainly with the Institutional Biosafety Committee, which operates according to federal guidelines from the National Institutes of Health.

The Idaho committee, chaired by UI law professor Dale Goble, regulates all research grant requests dealing with genetically-altered organisms and subsequent release into the environment.

Typically, the process will begin with a UI scientist forwarding a research proposal to the committee indicating what the work will pertain to. The amount of money involved in the project along with the sponsor is also included.

Goble said such measures are an in-house checklist designed to keep safety in mind first.

"The NIH requires every institution that receives federal money to have a biosafety committee like the one at Idaho," Goble said. "Safety is a key motivator for such a program."

In addition to the committee's work, a researcher must also fill out a form from the USDA or EPA depending on what is being tested. This form can take about a year to complete, but most requests are eventually granted.

Currently, Goble said there are no researchers doing such work on campus, but he indicated the committee is an active part of the research process.

"We basically review proposals and try to make them compatible with NIH guidelines," Goble said.

A more active campus organization dealing with scientific research proposals is the Institute for Molecular and Agricultural Genetic Engineering.

Senator gives insight on solutions for economic woes

By JEFF KAPOSTASY
Staff Writer

Bringing the $4 trillion deficit under control should be America's absolute, number one priority, according to Idaho Sen. Larry Craig.

The first-term Republican stopped by the SUB Saturday afternoon nearly 40 minutes late, but ready to talk about the huge monetary hole that has been under such intense focus lately.

"If we don't move toward a balanced budget, we won't have jobs for you people when you graduate," Craig told students.

Craig has co-authored a balanced budget amendment with Democrat Sen. Paul Simon of Illinois, and will be introduced to congress this week. A similar measure failed to pass the House last year by seven votes.

Craig said that attitudes of fiscal responsibility by all branches of the government have been largely forgotten, and interest groups now exert tremendous power in finding money for their causes. According to Craig, there is plenty of blame to go around.

Student makes memories and finds niche in singing telegram business

By DEANN NORTHAM
Contributing Writer

For Paula Dambra, working with people has always been a goal.

Dambra, a junior in public relations, has fulfilled part of this goal by opening her own business. She has combined her hobby of singing and her commitment to making people happy in a new venture for the Palouse - singing telegrams.

"Over Christmas I decided to do this (a singing telegram) for a friend," said Dambra. "There were a lot of people watching, and they all seemed like they thought it was a cool idea, something they'd do for someone."

Dambra said she is a natural performer and loves to sing. She said the most important point with her business is the fact that she's acting as a medium for people who might want to let others know they care about someone.

"I'm not selling a tangible item, I'm selling a memory," said Dambra. "They can look back and say 'I got a singing telegram once in front of 50,000 people and I was so embarrassed...'"

Dambra said she is willing to sing anything for anyone. "It may take a while to come up with music for an obscure piece, but if I am called in advance, I'll do it," she said.

Dambra said she knew there was nothing like this around in the Moscow area. "I thought, why not? I needed to find a job where I could have fun...this is like a license to be myself."

Dambra said she has run into several problems in starting her business. "It's discouraging," she said. "Some days I'm thinking 'Oh my God, I'm really doing this. Why?'"

She has had to work hard making contacts and distributing business cards and flyers. Dambra also worries about the phone. She is in class during the day, and there is no one around to answer her business line. She said this is frustrating because she does not know how many calls she misses, even though she has an answering machine.

"I think this is a good opportunity for college students," said Dambra. She charges students a base rate of ten dollars. She said this could increase if a customer wants a delivery made, or has a difficult song in mind.

"College is supposed to be the best time of someone's life," said Dambra. "Making memories is part of it."

For information regarding a singing telegram, Dambra said to call 883-0823. If no one is there leave a message or try 885-6668.

It can't do laundry or find a date, but it can help you find time for both.

Professor proposes contraception use from 13 to menopause

By TIM SCHREINER
Contributing Writer

Universal contraception may be the next step in curbing unwanted pregnancies and controlling the population explosion, according to a recent guest speaker for the University of Idaho philosophy department.

Dr. Margaret Battin, a professor of philosophy from the University of Utah, spoke to a group of about 200 people in the law courtroom about "understanding pregnancy as a positive choice rather than one that is avoided."

In her lecture, Battin said Norplant used as a universal automatic contraception in women from 13-years-old to menopause could result in reversing the "default mechanism" of unplanned pregnancy.

Battin said there have been many forms of contraception in the past, from "physical agitation to direct the semen off course, to the use of strychnine. Condoms have even expressed social rank in some cultures." She said the Pill, used since 1960, had 80 to 100 million users worldwide in 1980.

"Though current technology is not failsafe, it provides for more safety, efficiency and comfort," she said.

Battin went on to explain that Norplant, "which has been available since 1990, is effective for about five years. It is about 20 times more effective than the Pill and as much as 200 times more effective than the sponge, foam and other related forms of contraception. Norplant causes no apparent long-term damage and the side effects are reported as minimal," she said.

"Norplant is composed of six capsules which are implanted in a woman's forearm and are about the size of a matchstick," said Battin, "and implantation is quick, painless and low-risk for about a two to five minute job. The drug must also be surgically removed, but fertility is immediate and complete."

Battin also explained that although this drug does nothing to prevent sexually transmitted diseases, Norplant could be effective in "dual-use strategies."

According to Battin, there are about 1.6 million abortions every year in the United States. "One-half of all pregnancies in the U.S. are unplanned and one-half of those result in abortion," she said.

One-third of teenagers are not protected when trying sex for the first time, she said.

Battin then compared the abortion rate to population growth. "Population growth went from about 2.2 percent in the 1960's to 1.7 percent in the 1980's and the world's population of about five billion people is expected to double over the next 40 years."

"There are alternatives to universal automatic contraception," Battin said, "such as hormonal therapies which interrupt implantation." She said pregnancy, in medical terms, occurs within one week after contraception, and user-controlled morning after pills, such as the French abortion pill, RU486, can intervene in implantation.

Battin then questioned whether the use of such quick-acting drugs would be preferable over Norplant-type drugs. She said that long term effects would have to be studied to find out which would be the preferable scenario, and humans would need to question whether prevention would be preferable to destruction.

"Pregnancy as a future condition by choice may be better than having to accept pregnancy as something that has already happened."

The ideal situation, she said, would require a decisional choice by women and men alike, as this would better result in the need for "two to tango."

"If everyone used this technology there is the potential for genocide and targeted birth control," she said.

Universality would have to be broad and rigorously met by women of productive age, she said, with possible exceptions for those who are infertile or have present religious conditions."

Opportunity will knock at Career Fair

By DAVID JACKSON
Staff Writer

For all you job seekers waiting for opportunity to knock on your door, it will be found Wednesday from 11:30 to 3:30 in the University of Idaho SUB.

The Career Fair, sponsored by the UI College of Agriculture, will feature representatives from over 30 companies looking for full-time, as well as part-time employees. Because the fair is sponsored by the College of Agriculture does not mean all the companies in attendance will be agriculture related.

"There will be major companies there looking for all types of degrees," said Wayne Rush, the assistant to the director of academic programs at the College of Agriculture. "We are inviting students from the College of Business, L & S, Home Economics, all different types. This is not just an agriculture fair."

If a student missed the career fair workshop last Wednesday, don't worry. They do not need to be registered with Career Services to attend, and do not need to bring anything special, depending on their intentions, that is.

"Students looking to make an impression should be dressed nice and should bring copies of their resume," offered Rush. "You never know what could happen, so we encourage students to be prepared. What we told the students at the workshop was to be prepared to sell themselves. That is important at a function such as this."

Although seniors are the main focus of the career fair, underclassmen are also encouraged to attend.

"Freshmen, sophomores, and juniors who don't attend are really missing out," said Dan Blanco, the Career Services director. "These companies are looking for all kinds of people, not just seniors. Lots of underclassmen find summer jobs through this program."

Students are encouraged to come not only to look for jobs, but to brush up on their interviewing skills. Two workshops will be set up by Career Services for interviewing practice, as well as other related activities.

The Career Fair is an indispensable part of any student looking for a job, according to Blanco. This fair presents a unique opportunity for those trying to get the attention of possible employers.

"The toughest part of any job search is meeting face to face with employers," he said. "This fair has employers from 32 companies ready and willing to concentrate on anyone who shows up. It is a great place to launch a job search."

required to turn in inventory every month of every radioactive material they have received into the university.

Where does a researcher get the isotopes for experiments? From radioactive material supplier, of course.

"There are a dozen companies where you can order the material from," such as New England Nuclear, said Crawford.

Crawford stressed that the radioactive materials they usually deal with, carbon-14 and phosphorus-32, actually evolve from naturally occurring forms of the elements, are not really created by man.

"We always have to follow strict procedures," said Crawford, but added that the amounts they use are small and the isotopes they work with are fairly safe.

"With carbon-14, it is not very potent radioactive but it does have a long half-life," he said. "Phosphorus-32 has a little higher radioactivity, but a very short half-life of just a few days."

The university stores everything from used gloves to paper towels, materials that were used in experiments with radioactive isotopes. The risk is "minimal" said Hutchison, and the university doesn't work with any biological waste.

While Hutchison hopes that the workers will actually need very little protection, they are still bundled up in protective suits and masks. "She (Schur) has the mask on for respiratory protection and the suit is to avoid the waste coming in contact with her skin."

Crawford said IMAGE works in cooperation with the biosafety committee to handle requests for recombinant work. If the proposal checks out with guidelines, then a researcher can proceed with the research process until funds can be procured for the work.

Once work begins, recombinant DNA can be used in a variety of settings. Research with many diseases has been a focus of recombinant DNA.

He said such guidelines are an absolute necessity for scientists.

"The public has a right to know about safety, and scientists, plus the federal government, are just responding to that," Crawford said.

Goble agreed with such assessments, but he noted that the scientific community began policing themselves long before the federal government came into the picture.

"The scientific world started thinking about safety first because they knew first-hand about some of the dangers involved with genetic engineering," Goble said.

Crawford said proposals dealing with nonrecombinant DNA are more common. Even with this area, there are still safety rules governing its use.

One Idaho researcher, assistant bacteriology professor Scott Kellogg said there were some kinks to be worked out in the system.

"One example I can think of would be the laws treating chemicals and microorganisms the same way when the two are very much different from one another," Kellogg said.

Crawford readily agreed with Kellogg.

"The various regulations are so dynamic that it's hard to know from one day to the next what they will be," Crawford said.

Crawford and Goble both said the NIH regulations have eased somewhat in recent years because of increased knowledge in the area of biotechnology.

With thousands of scientists working with DNA across the country, Crawford said the regulations can become more defined.

"Even though DNA work has been going on for several years, we're still in the learning stages of such work," Crawford noted. "Rules were strict in the old days because not a lot was known. Now the guidelines are easing, and they will continue to do so as we know more."

"Is the debt Reagan's fault? Yes. Is it congress' fault? Yes. Is it your fault? Yes," Craig said.

During the early Reagan years, Craig said the government was headed in the right direction fiscally. But then, Craig said, Congress, Reagan and Bush began severely overspending and catering to the many special interests.

"The government is spending $3 for every $2 it takes in. This must stop," Craig said.

Craig stressed that until the deficit is brought under control, and until serious steps are taken to bring spending under control, the deficit will bankrupt the country.

"Some people think that what we're doing is silly," Craig said. "But we are asking for a lot. This will change the way the government does business."

"We are now at the point in our economy where all savings are borrowed. Right now, there is no new capital to generate jobs," Craig said. "Thirty years of overspending will do this."

Craig, however, does not believe that raising taxes will do the trick. Craig wants to cut spending on many programs, putting a 2 percent spending cap on the growth of government programs.

"Right now, we are not economizing, not being efficient," Craig said.

Although Craig said he wishes Clinton would be talking more about the economy now, he was not critical of the new president. Despite political differences, he is hoping the new economic plan will be something that is workable and will truly cut the deficit, like Clinton has promised.

"It's not surprising Clinton has focused on this (the economy)," Craig said. "In the end, all will judge Clinton on his performance."

If the Balanced Budget Amendment passes, it will take affect in 1999.

Moot court competition to be held

By GREG BURTON
Staff Writer

A moot court is one of a hypothetical nature.

The Fourth Annual McNichols Moot Court Competition is of a real nature.

The McNichols competition, named for the late Judge Raymond C. McNichols, will be held in conjunction with a weekend conference sponsored by the Board of Student Advocates of the University of Idaho, College of Law.

On Feb. 26 a convocation featuring three distinguished Northwest judges, including Justice Linda Copple-Trout of the Idaho Supreme Court, will focus on "Opinions From the Bench."

Acting Associate Dean Monique Lillard said this is the first year the UI College of Law has sponsored a convocation in association with the moot court competition.

Arthur D. Smith, acting Dean of the College of Law, said President Zinser and many area lawyers will be attending the event, which is open to the public. Smith will be involved with the moot competition.

The McNichols competition has grown out of the stewardship of BSA and an endowment from the late U.S. District Court Judge.

"Judge McNichols, who once taught a semester at the UI, was a renowned scholar of national distinction. The lawyers who argued before him always came away respecting his judgment," said Smith.

McNichols was born in Orofino and graduated from the UI Law school in 1950. In 1964, President John F. Kennedy appointed McNichols to the Federal bench in Idaho.

BSA President J. Scott Andrew said the Saturday competition will be the culmination of a process that began in January. Second and third year law students, enrolled in a legal brief writing seminar have submitted written briefs with respect to a hypothetical case in front of the U.S. Supreme Court.

The final oral advocacy will be held in the Moscow Community Center and be judged by Justice Copple-Trout, Judge Cynthia Holcomb Hall, of the Ninth Circuit Court of Appeals in California, Judge Faye C. Kennedy, of the Washington State Court of Appeals, and Judge John H. Bengtson, of the Idaho District Court.

Michael E. McNichols, son of the former Judge, and a partner in a law firm in Lewiston will also be on the panel of judges.

Andrew said the contest involves an important aspect of law which isn't familiar to the general public.

"This year's competition will involve right to privacy issues," said Andrew, "and what will be evident is that appellate litigation helps define issues decided by a judge."

Andrew cited the Roe v. Wade as an example. "The judges jurisprudence and privacy interpretation was influenced by the attorney's arguments and case justifications."

"The public only sees the end result of a case, not the technical aspects," Andrew said.

Placement Director LeAnn Phillips said the law students like to call it a weekend of appellate advocacy, which is the process of oral litigation. "It gives both the judges and the students a chance to learn more about each other."

The winner of the competition receives only the recognition and title that come with victory, but they can advance to national competitions next year.

Andrew, who was in the final eight last year, is part of a team traveling to Pace University in White Plains, New York. They will argue questions of environmental law.

The Convocation on Feb. 26 will begin at 2:00 p.m. in the UI College of Law Courtroom, and the Competition will begin at 3:00 p.m. in the City Council Chambers. For more information call the BSA or the College of Law office.

OPINION

Abuse of power and sex is not just a 'male thing'

Oh boy. Here we go again.

About this time last year, then-Sen. Brock Adams of Washington was accused of taking a few too many liberties with his female employees. Thanks in part to the outcry following revelations about his wandering libido, Adams decided against seeking re-election to the United States Senate.

This time around it is another senator from the Northwest whose romantic misadventures have grabbed the headlines. Last November, just after the election, 10 women accused Oregon Sen. Bob Packwood of making unwanted sexual advances. Now 13 more women have stepped forward to say that Packwood made unwelcome sexual overtures to them.

What caused these sexual indiscretions on the parts of the two northwestern senators? Could it be something in the drinking water, or perhaps something foul in the wind that blows down from the icy Cascades?

Or could it be something more dark and malignant, like a monomaniacal abuse of power?

The Packwood situation is ripe with ambiguity, and the Senator may not deserve all the blame. How was he to know if his sexual overtures were "welcome" or "unwelcome" until after the fact?

Nearly two dozen women have claimed that Packwood made passes at them. Chances are that not every woman who Packwood made advances to pushed him away. If he tried to put the moves on 23 women and they all rejected him, sooner or later he'd get the message.

Unfortunately, there were probably some women who leapt at the chance to sleep their way up the ladder of success. There were undoubtedly some women who let Packwood caress them during those weekend trips back to Oregon.

The actions of those women served as positive reinforcement for Packwood's philanderings. This is one aspect of the sordid affair that no one seems to mention. As any sensible person will tell you, the surest way to get someone to repeat his behavior — deviant though it may be — is to offer rewards. And some women probably did just that.

If a female sleeps with a politically powerful male to further her career, isn't she just as abusive of power as he is?

Of course.

None of this washes Packwood of responsibility in the matter. What he did was morally wrong, and he should apologize to the women he offended and resign from the U.S. Senate before the situation becomes even more pathetic.

But let's not kid ourselves. Packwood is not the only villain here.

Some blame should be placed on the shoulders of the women who were power hungry enough not to turn down the Senator's advances. They helped lay the foundation for his continued abuse of power.

And all the credit in the world should be given to the 23 women who have come forward to see that a monomaniac won't hurt anyone else again.

Foresight can prevent another L.A. riot

March 3 marks the date.

It's a date that's accompanied by an image, an image that many Americans will not soon forget. It's the date Rodney King was beat. And it's the date many Americans saw the reality that black Americans have been seeing for years.

People are brutally raped, killed and beaten every day. In our country, violence is commonplace. Unfortunately it is so commonplace we often play a dangerous game of "Hear No Evil, Speak No Evil, See No Evil."

The King beating was a common event, but it became uncommon when it was captured on videotape. And the tape, which was shown repeatedly on TV, became undeniable proof that the four officers who beat King were guilty of assault.

Before the officers' trials, black Americans gained a sense that this time even the bigoted whites would have to find the four men guilty. That this time justice would become the rule rather

Spike and the shadow of Malcolm X

Talk about Black History Month and sooner or later film maker Spike Lee will be mentioned.

Lee has never passed up the chance to use his as the voice of disgruntled black Americans — his "people" — who are tired of getting kidney punched by whites.

After the premiere of his movie Malcolm X last fall, Lee told an interviewer: "White Americans will never know what it feels like to be an African American in this country."

Really? How surprising.

African Americans will never know what it feels like to be a white farmboy from the Midwest. Asian Americans will never have a clue as to what it's like to grow up Navajo.

In fact, Navajos don't know what it's like to grow up Hopi.

But just as Lee was reaching the apex of his popularity — just as he was gaining acceptance as a film maker, with no "African American" qualifier before his title — along comes Kwame Toure.

Better known by his former name, Stokely Carmichael, Toure was on the frontline of the black independence and civil rights movements before it became such a stylish place to be.

Toure recently threw a brick through the window of Lee's glass house.

Rebutting Lee's cinematic success, he said: "Spike Lee is incapable of making a film about Malcolm X. Spike Lee is a petty bourgeois who took the choice of selling his people for a fistful of dollars."

Ouch. But Toure wasn't done

venting his spleen.

"Can you imagine for one minute Hollywood giving Malcolm X a hand? You might as well ask Zionists to make a film about (Yasser) Arafat."

Well, well, well, what have we here? Lee sold "his people for a fistful of dollars" and is "incapable of making a film about Malcolm X"?

Wow. Pretty strong words.

Unfortunately, Lee was unavailable to comment on Toure's charges. He was off making Nike commercials and stuffing his money in "petty bourgeois" shoeboxes.

What really gets me wondering, though, is that if I were an African American which of the two would I choose to be my leader? Which man would I allow to refer to me as "his people"?

Would I choose Toure, who is now living in Africa, or would I opt for Lee, since he is so much more stylish and hip?

than the exception. And that this time the public would have to admit that this hate-crime was racially motivated.

When the officers were found innocent of the charges, Americans couldn't help but be shocked and dismayed. Many Los Angeles citizens lost faith in the judicial system and, ultimately, decided to take the law into their own hands.

As a result, 54 people were killed and $1 billion in damages were caused.

The acquittal of the four men last April was given by a jury without a single black member. The trials took place in the mostly white suburb of Simi Valley. Now, a year later, the jury is being selected for the federal civil rights trial of Sgt. Stacey Koon, Officers Laurence Powell and Theodore Briseno and former Officer Timothy Wind.

At the same time, the trial of the four black men charged with attacking trucker Reginald Denny is set in a court room only a few miles away.

Now the question that arises, however, is whether the prospective jurors in the King and Denny cases will be able to reach verdicts without fear of more rioting. Some people see it as a Catch-22. And as a matter of law, the civil rights case will be more difficult for prosecutors than the criminal beating case.

A black University of Idaho student, who lives in Los Angeles and was present during the riots, predicts that more trouble is on the way. "In the King trial they (blacks) were pushed for the last time and weren't going to take it anymore," he said. "The same goes for these cases. It's a no win situation, and there will be more riots."

He added that he's heard from people in Los Angeles that say there is already a fear growing. "Already civil leaders and people are coming together to prevent the riots from happening," he said.

Shop owners in Los Angeles are also preparing and predicting for the verdict of the cases — many are purchasing insurance and securing their buildings.

But street gangs are trying to make a difference. On Thursday, gang leaders from four major cities pledged a truce. In addition, the gangs will be holding a "summit" April 30-May 2 in Kansas City, Mo., timed to coincide with the first anniversary of the Los Angeles riots.

Involved in the truce were leaders of the Crips, Bloods, Different Nation, Vice Lords and Disciples of Soul.

"From Los Angeles to Boston, Minneapolis to Chicago, from the barrio to the ghetto... On this day, our chain will be strengthened and lengthened in Kansas City, and we're going to leave there with vision, unity and drive," said the Rev. Ben Chavis of the United Church of Christ.

"We're not going to buy into the concept of 'Once one, always one, no more,'" Fred Williams said. Williams is an ex-gang member who helped establish a May 1992 truce between the Crips and the Bloods.

Last year alone there were 800 killings in the Los Angeles County. So the truce, which is aimed at preventing further riots, comes at a much needed time. And as always the foresight is the first step in the prevention.

Supposing neither Lee nor Toure deserved my loyalty, would I search for someone else?

If Gandhi were still alive or, say, if Jesus Christ returned, would I think that maybe it was okay if one of them called me "his people"?

Or would I think to myself: "Gee, Gandhi and Jesus sure are swell fellows, and they both preach messages of peace and understanding, but by golly, they just aren't the right color."

If I was black, I'd be more than a little resentful of someone using me like a poker chip in a high stakes game of racial politics.

"I'll see you one thousand of my people," one can imagine Lee saying with a wink, "and raise you two thousand."

But I'm white, so the point is probably moot.

Of course, interracial — and intraracial — relations in America deserve a much more serious look than I have given them above.

One thing should be clear, however. Any discussion of the needs and desires of a particular group of Americans should be held in strictly moral and non-personal terms. The more variables that come into play, such as a person's skin color and sex, the more resentment that will be bred among the general populace.

Keep arguing for "black rights" and pretty soon everyone who is not black will begin to miss the relevance.

If I started a campaign for "white graduate student rights," I sure wouldn't expect anyone who isn't white, or a graduate student, to get all worked up about it.

In other words, park your demographic variables at the door, buster.

Should anyone ever say people like Martin Luther King, or Malcolm X, or Nelson Mandela are great human beings because they were black, they would be doing a great disservice to those men and the causes for which they stood.

If those men are to be judged by history as being great leaders, it should not be because of their African heritage.

After all, Idi Amin is black. I haven't noticed anyone naming inner-city high schools in his honor.

If King, Malcolm and Mandela are to be glorified in history books, it should be because they established for themselves a collection of moral convictions from which they refused to back down, even in the face of death.

One wonders if Lee would exhibit the same courage in the face of real danger.

GLBA provides support

Editor;
The members of the Gay, Lesbian and Bisexual Association feel that it is time that we let the students know exactly what our purpose is and to clear up any misconception that may have arisen with the recent events between members of some political circles.

The purpose of our organization is to provide support and resources for students on campus that have questions about their orientation. We also provide information about local support groups and organizations to students upon request.

We are not a political organization, nor are we going to become one. The recent events concerning the Non-discrimination Committee does concern our organization. We support the efforts of the committee to amend the anti-discrimination policy to include homosexuals, but we do not have a direct influence in the formation or ratification of such legislation.

President Rock had mistakenly assumed that our organization was in support of his idea for a referendum to be brought before the students. We had in fact decided that we would not support Rock's idea because we felt that he has been rushing the issue in order to make it fail. At this point, it is more important to focus on educating the student body on the issues regarding individual's civil rights. We also feel that it is in the best interest of Rock to make sure that he truly has the support of an established student organization before he claims that he does.

As has been previously stated, we are not in the political business so we do not understand where a possible misunderstanding has occurred. We are currently trying to establish a clear line with the president's office so that this type of error is not allowed to happen again. We would also like to thank Rock for his enthusiasm in trying to solve this issue, even if we believe that his actions may be hasty and detrimental. The issue of civil rights regarding homosexuals is a growing concern of our society and is not going to be solved by a neat little referendum initiated by one person.

'Stupidity Index' test

Editor;
After reading the Jan. 22 Argonaut, I realized that the "Stupidity Index" in this area seems to be awfully high. So I have created this fun little quiz to help some people gauge their "Stupidity Index." Circle the answer which best describes your thoughts and actions. (Hint: quick quiz — circle all A's)

1) Some of the sidewalks on campus are kept perfectly clear and dry because: A) some of the physical facilities dept. employees are more diligent than others at keep their walks clear (C. Bowman must answer A). OR B) some sidewalks are actually the tops of heat tunnels as indicated by the clearly visible markings on each of the manhole covers.

2) When parking on a hill with a curb to your right, and your car is facing up the hill, you should: A) turn your wheels to the right. OR B) turn your wheels to the left.

3) The "Free Lunch" theory is valid. A) Yes- there is such a thing as a free lunch because not everyone who offers you something for free (like "frat brats" offering free beer at a party) necessarily wants something from you (like sex whether agreed or not). OR B) No- whenever someone offers something for nothing you should be aware of an ulterior motive.

4) When partying at a fraternity a girl should: A) find a couch to curl up on because none of these "honorable" men would think of taking advantage of a poor drunk girl. OR B) have a person who does not prefer your same gender walk you home to sleep off the alcohol. OR C) not attend Frat parties!!

5) When leaving the Moscow Mall by way of one of the stop signed outlets to the South to travel toward Moscow I: A) wait until traffic is clear in both directions then slowly pull into the East-bound lane. OR B) wait until the traffic to my left is clear, pull into the turn lane where I speed up until I can merge with the traffic to my right.

6) When parking on a hill with a curb to your right, and your car is facing down hill, you should: A) turn your wheels to the left. OR B) turn your wheels to the right.

7) Whenever a professor says the word "calculate" I: A) shutter and shake until I go to the Dean and change my major to "Outdoor Rec" or some other non-math major. OR B) grab my calculator and apply a certain logical method to problem solving until I have the answer.

8) When turning onto a one-way street at red light I: A) wait until the light turns green and the traffic coming toward me has all passed. OR B) wait until the cross traffic on the one-way street is clear and turn left on red because it is legal in Idaho.

9) When walking on ice I: A) take powerful strides and go as fast as I can because of the conservation of linear momentum principal. OR B) take short steps and try to keep my feet under me.

10) When taking a class from a professor who can't, or otherwise won't teach. Do you: A) stick it out in hopes that you will get any grade at all? OR B) get the heck out of Dodge and take that class from someone else who can or will teach.

Well, that's it. Now let's see how you did. The Stupidity Index is given by the equation: $X = \# \text{ of A's} / 10$. If your Stupidity Index is from 0-0.5 there may be hope for you. You only have a mild lapse of stupidity which can be corrected with common sense training, but if your index is from 0.6-1 it's a wonder you're even here at a university.

Straining at Gnats

Editor;
Sandra Haarsager wrote an editorial a short while back that spoke to an angle of a recent incident that seriously needed addressing, but had been totally ignored in a storm of racial allegations against Pullman's police force.

I feel remiss in waiting this long in tendering my support to the beleaguered Haarsager and those officers involved.

The point Haarsager brought up (in a beautifully drawn contrast between the Viva Zapata! incident and the miscalculated abduction attempt that finally got Westley A. Dodd captured for the final time) was that the focal point in a suspected abduction of a protesting, screaming child should be the welfare of the child, not the feelings of any of the adults involved. In the Dodd case, if Dodd had been Hispanic or Black, should the arresting officer have backed off (as one did with one of Jeffrey Dahmer's victims) for fear of violating Dodd's rights?

I think this is an area where we should adopt a measure equivalent to the "Good Samaritan" Law; anyone who interferes in a situation where it appears that a child may be abducted or harmed (and especially when the interfering person is an officer of the law) should be presumed acting in pursuit of the greater good of Society, and should not be subject to nuisance lawsuits claiming that he violated someone's civil rights. If Garza has any children (and I strongly doubt it), I would hope that any officer finding one of her kids in a similarly questionable situation would not be tempted to turn his back in order to protect his job.

Financial Aid hurts the needy

Editor,
This letter is addressed to anyone who is thinking of applying or has applied for Financial Aid for the 1993-94 school year under independent status. Good luck! As many of you may have already noticed, our beloved Congress has drastically changed the requirements for independent status, eliminating what I believe to be a large portion of the undergraduate student body from receiving financial aid (myself included). As a single, independent (in everyone's eyes, except Financial Aid), college student that depends on financial aid to continue my education, I am OUTRAGED.

As I understand it, in order to be considered independent, you must: be born before Jan. 1, 1970; be a veteran of the U.S. Armed Forces; be a graduate or professional student; be married; be ward of the court or have both parents dead; or have legal dependents. My question is this: Are not most of the undergraduate students unmarried, born after Jan. 1, 1970, not veterans, still have both parents living (or at least one), have no dependents and are only able to scrape a mere four or five thousand dollars a year from summer and part-time jobs? Or am I just being egocentric here? Because I am just all of those things that make me a dependent in the eyes of the Financial Aid, yet, I do not depend on anyone for income or help with my education (except for Financial Aid programs). Last year I was considered independent, and this year I'm not. What happened? Is there anyone else like this?

My complaint is this: In a society that depends so much on innovation and education, is it wise to hinder the possibilities of the younger generation by making it harder for them to go to a university? I understand that the law may have been intended to eliminate people from obtaining aid that did not actually NEED it. However, I think the result was that it eliminates many people from obtaining a higher education. I feel that it would be better to allow a few to get aid that did not need it than to keep people that truly need it from getting it.

If you are as upset with this as I am, please do not bomb the financial aid office (as I thought of doing until I realized that it was not their fault), do something much more effective, speak out! Write your U.S. Congressmen and express your views.

Political strategies or mistakes?

Editor,
I would like to comment on President Rock's recent "mistakes." I don't believe them to be mistakes, but calculated political strategies. Rock is not a newcomer to politics and is familiar with the Constitution. His recent "mistakes" cannot be dismissed as such.

When he wishes to limit our First Amendment rights merely because he was challenged, he is abusing the power we granted him. His suggested referendum sounds good, but is it really? He believes the voice of the people will come through loud and clear with his referendum. How can you expect this, when on the average only 15 percent of the student body votes? Is this representative of the majority, President Rock? You are not fooling those of us who have been there before. I recognize his "mistakes" and referendum movements as retaliation tactics. We should applaud Frank Lockwood and others for watching out for us.

When a president begins to abuse his power almost immediately upon taking office, we can NOT afford to maintain him as president. I support the recall election because I don't want a president who strikes out at those who oppose him by trying to deny everyone their rights.

I would also like to address Sen. Cross. You were elected to protect our interests. With this comes the responsibility to act as a check on the power of the president.

Instead of attacking Lockwood for doing YOUR job, you should thank him and take a few pointers. I am disappointed in your poor performances. I hope that by making your promise, you intend to start doing your job.

I hope members of the student body, who recognize an abuse of power when they see it, will join me in support of the recall election of President Richard Rock.

Bible readers duck the issues

Editor,
Some people can't stand what the Bible really says when it is held up to them. Then they cry "Out of context!" (Bob Sharp) or try to duck the issue by long harangues against the writer (Marv H. Lewis).

In his letter Lewis asserts that we must keep the Ten Commandments (does he keep his Sabbath?) and that I will be infinitely tortured in hell by God (for reading the Bible?). Lewis hasn't noticed that in the Old Testament religion there is no life after death and no hell (except in dishonest translations of the Bible, like the King James Version). In the 1,000 year history of the Old Testament only one person went to heaven: Elijah (possibly Enoch also). And he went up bodily because once you're dead you return to the dust from which you were made and that's the end of you. Millions of people today still believe in the Old Testament religion.

When you show Bible-believers that God is the all-time killer of little babies and of pregnant women, they self-righteously protest that all of the infants and fetuses deserved to be killed because their parents were enemies of God. So why all the outcry against abortion? Any woman seeking an abortion is offending God, according to the religious right. The fetus then deserves to be killed, either by drowning a pregnant woman (Genesis 6-7), or by removing the fetus from her womb (Hosea 13:16). Unfortunately for God, the first alternative has been declared illegal by secular humanist lawmakers. But the second alternative is still legal. So remember, Christians (by Xian in this letter I mean the religious right), every fetus aborted is one heathen less for you and your God to put up with. And to all you heathens out there: the real reason the Xians want to abolish abortion is that they want to change the law against child murder and kill your kids later, just as God ordered people to do in the Bible.

Hillary will do a fine job

Editor,
It was deeply unfortunate that Brandy Corgatelli had to write his commentary "Wait until Hillary Clinton finds out."

First of all, President Clinton had no negative motive by putting his wife, Hillary, in charge of the health care task. Why did you assume the first time our first lady gets appointed to something that it must be through no merit of her own, but through deviant action? Did you think that it just couldn't be possible any other way? Clinton's only motive was that he felt she was competent enough to lead the task. I believe that would make it an honor and not an excuse to "get her out of his sight and possibly even destroy her." I have to admit, turning it around sure makes for a good controversy, huh Corgatelli?

Lastly, I am sorry that Corgatelli is not able to realize that this is the first time our first lady isn't being used as just an ornament to make the president look good. Hillary has a chance to help get great things accomplished and join many other women who have done remarkable things. It's a shame that Corgatelli had to turn that into something dishonorable. I hope Corgatelli can someday realize the importance of women, I mean more than just as ornaments, and I know that Hillary will show Corgatelli just what I mean.

Mind opening show

Editor;
I was the naked guy who danced with Nick Cave. His dynamic performance visually presented a number of issues we all struggle with, i.e. gender as a social construct, parent-child relationships, race and sexual discrimination and sexually transmitted diseases, especially AIDS.

Into our behavioral vocabulary we must engage compassion, empathy, consideration, patience and cooperation. I actively encourage students to challenge their veils through the vehicle of performance art by attending upcoming performances. I especially invite those who left during Cave's performance due to the limited scope of their own veils. Open your minds while you have the opportunity, or you may never break free of your debilitating prejudices. I feel it is imperative that we understand our taught behaviors, they may not necessarily be healthy for you or society. I will be performing periodically at the Colette Theater. Watch for posted notices.

Physical Plant trying to keep up

Editor;
This letter is in reference to the letter written by C. Bowman in the Jan. 22 edition of the Argonaut.

This year we have had a great deal of snow and cold weather. Unfortunately, this makes traversing the campus walkways somewhat treacherous. To combat this problem, the Physical Plant has formed a snow removal crew with the responsibility of clearing the miles of sidewalks (and roadways) that run throughout the campus. These people work as swiftly as possible to remove the snow and ice and should be commended for their work. However, as the inclement weather continues, ice and snow build up and sometimes the crews are unable to keep up. In these instances, it is our responsibility to exercise our common sense and use caution on our trek to class.

This individual seems to think that the employees of the Physical Plant are on their personal payroll. The truth of the matter is, a student's tuition covers less than 20 percent of the cost to educate that student. This is a state institution. The State of Idaho subsidizes the school to keep tuition down. Thus, the many taxpayers of this state pay for snow removal on the campus, not the students. Should these taxpayers expect their driveways to be plowed in return? And to C. Johnson, rather than criticizing the employees of the Physical Plant, just get out of their way next time they're plowing the walks.

Breaking bad habits

Editor;
Please allow me to clarify some important points in your generous article of 2/2/93 concerning my work. As a personal consultant I do not "change people's minds!" I assist people through changes in their lives by giving them techniques and guidance in their use of their power in their subconscious mind. Hypnosis is a very effective technique for individuals to access that power by their choice. All hypnosis is self-hypnosis. I do not help "people get their lives back when they break their bad habits." I've never said such and never would. People have wonderful lives and experience habits and when they want certain habits to change I assist them in realizing a greater power of choice. I do not offer "Hypnotherapy sessions at Inner Vision Bookstore." I have a private practice and may be reached at 882-1070. Every month at Inner Vision Bookstore I give a public lecture about the functions of the subconscious mind and your ability to positively utilize it including a group guided imagery.

Vandals outlast Broncos in 2 OT thriller ■ Lightfoot's 44, Ricks' 32 keys critical home win

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

Needless to say, Orlando Lightfoot doesn't sweat it when an Idaho game goes into overtime.

Actually, he tends to thrive off it.

Lightfoot, the Vandal's 6-7 versatile forward, broke the Idaho single-game scoring record with 44 points Saturday night in the Vandals 107-99 double overtime win over archrival Boise State. The win pushes the Vandals to 17-5 overall, 6-1 in the Big Sky Conference while Boise State slips to 13-6 and 4-3 in league play.

In Lightfoot's seven overtime games in two years at Idaho, the junior averages 32.3 points and 10.5 rebounds. Although his previous high of 41 points in an OT win last year at Sacramento State fell just one point shy of the record, Lightfoot felt he would eventually achieve the feat.

"I was hoping I'd get that," Lightfoot said of the record with a laugh. "I actually didn't know how many I had (towards the end of the game)."

Three of his most important points came late in the first overtime. With BSU leading 88-85, Lightfoot sent a 3-pointer from roughly 27 feet out through the air with BSU's Sherman Morris in his face. The ball hit nothing but the bottom of the net with :16 left and sent the 6,800 on hand in the Kibbie Dome into a screaming frenzy.

"When it left my hands it felt pretty good," Lightfoot said with a smile.

The shot seemed to spark the scoring fiend as he went on to score 11 more points in the second overtime to launch Idaho to its 10th win in its last 11 outings and 18th straight home conquest.

"Hopefully the world won't end tonight," BSU center Tanoka Beard said afterwards. "Because if it does, Idaho will be one up on everyone."

BSU, which was coming off a 76-66 win at Eastern Washington the night before, showed Idaho early why it's a contender for the league title. Beard paved the way to an 18-6 Bronco lead as he pumped in nine points.

"Tanoka is just a different player," Idaho head coach Larry Eustachy said. "He's grown up. He could have broke Wilt Chamberlain's record tonight- we couldn't stop him."

Idaho battled back behind the smooth shooting of guard Marvin Ricks. The senior hit a pair of jumpers in an 8-0 Vandal run to get Idaho back in it. As BSU led 22-21, the two teams burst into an outside shoot-out as Ricks hit three 3-pointers in a row for the Vandals and BSU's Morris and Darnell Woods both connected from beyond the arc. Lightfoot also hit a pair of bombs to pull Idaho to within 42-43 at the break.

"I told our team at halftime if we didn't win this game we weren't going to win the conference (regular season title)," Eustachy said.

With 11:20 left in the game, Ricks converted a four-point play as he drilled a 3-pointer and was fouled by Jermaine Haliburton. Following the free throw, Idaho held its biggest lead of 12 at 63-51 and appeared to have the momentum to put the lid on the game- something it lacked in a 66-67 loss at Weber State.

BSU though, behind 17 second half points by Beard, mounted a 10-2 run and the score fluctuated between a two point Idaho lead and a tie game for the final eight possessions. Beard also dropped in the Bronco's final basket to tie the game at 78-78 with :24 left in regulation. Idaho forward Dan Serkin had a chance to give Idaho the lead with :06 remaining but the junior missed the front end of a one-and-one. BSU pulled down the rebound, but couldn't get a shot off after calling time-out with four ticks on the clock.

Beard, in spite of having just five in the two overtimes, led BSU with 37 points.

"You can't say enough about him," Lightfoot said. "Our plan was to knock him off his sweet spot. He's so much of a great player he just overcame that."

Damon Archibald, who came off the bench for the injured Lance Vaughn, scored six straight points in the first OT to give BSU an 84-81 lead. The 6-3 freshman guard hit a 3-pointer and converted a three-point play as BSU looked to pull away early.

"When we went into overtime we were a little nervous at first but we said 'we have to come together,'" Ricks said. "At that point we became solid as a team on defense."

Ricks, whose mother flew to Moscow from Atlanta to see her son play, answered Archibald's three with a trey of his own and forward Chauncey McBride donated three points before Lightfoot's long ball from the right side sent the game into the second OT.

BSU did have :14 to set up a good shot for a game winner but the opportunity didn't occur.

"No we didn't," Bronco coach Bobby Dye said about getting a good look at the basket. "I think sometimes we forget how new some of our guys are. A lot of them have never played up here and aren't used to this situation."

As well as Lightfoot's 11 points in the second five minutes, Ricks made five of six free throws to secure the win. The tandem combined for 19 of Idaho's 29 points in the two overtimes, 76 of the team's total 107.

"It was one of the best wins to have because she (his mom) came so far to see me play," Ricks, who finished with a career high 32 points, said. "It was one of the best for my mom and my team."

Lightfoot led all rebounders with 17, notching his sixth double-double in a row and his eighth on the year. McBride was second on the boards for Idaho with 11 and contributed 10 points for his second straight double-double.

Joining Beard in double-figures was Archibald with 16,

UI gets 1,000th over ISU

By LOREN ROBERTS

Idaho didn't get 100, but it got 1,000.

The Vandals, being faster, stronger and just more experienced as a team, defeated the Idaho State Bengals 97-76 Friday night in the Kibbie Dome.

The win was Idaho's 1,000 in school history since it began play back in 1905.

Idaho forward Chauncey McBride had career highs of 19 points and 15 rebounds which included 12 on the offensive end. The 6-5 swingman continually drove the baseline for finger role layups as he scored 11 of his points in the first half.

"Should of been doing that all year long," McBride said of his play following the Vandals 17th straight win at home. "They (ISU) weren't blocking me out so I tried to get as many boards as I could."

On the first play of the game guard Ricky Wilson connected with McBride on an alley-oop pass which resulted in a lay up. The play has become a trademark of how the Vandals begin a game, and it was the first time the play has resulted in a basket in spite of not being a dunk.

"We like to start with it to try to get the crowd into the game," McBride said.

The 4,150 spectators may have gotten into it, but ISU didn't get out of it. The Bengal's Jim Potter, a talented 6-9 sophomore forward, kept his team close by scoring eight points early to tie the game at 15-15.

UI-BSU rivalry back up to par

By PETE GOMBEN
Editor-in-Chief

Ask Vandal Coach Larry Eustachy his impression of Idaho's double overtime victory against arch-rival Boise State and he won't mince words.

"That was the best basketball game I've been involved with as a coach," he'll tell you about Saturday night's thriller. "Somebody had to win the game, and we were sitting lucky."

After years of playing the Broncos with nothing better than third place in the Big Sky Conference on the line, Eustachy was happy to have the league-leading Vandals facing second place BSU in a meaningful contest.

"This rivalry is back to where it means something," he said.

"The TV people said 'keep (the game) close so we don't lose our audience. I told them not to worry."

Orlando Lightfoot continued the hyperbole where Eustachy left off.

"I've never had a win at Idaho that was this sweet," said the junior forward, who led all scorers with a career high 44 points. "This ranks among the best ever."

For his part, BSU's Tanoka Beard was happy the Broncos' annual trip to Moscow didn't end in a blowout, as it had in years past.

He complimented the effort of the Vandals, who have won five straight against BSU at the Kibbie Dome.

"Idaho made huge plays when they had to," Beard said. "They played a great game."

"Orlando was just hitting (everything). It was phenomenal to be on the court with him. There's really nothing else to be said."

The intensity of the game was felt by more than just the players and the coaches.

In the second half, a small plastic basketball found its way onto the court. Bronco guard Damon Archibald kicked the toy into the Idaho student section, drawing the immediate ire of two students. The students had to be restrained and were given a talking-to by security personnel.

A quick look at the final statistics brought words of praise from Eustachy for the hard-nosed Archibald, who had just played in his first UI-BSU skirmish.

"I am really impressed with Damon," Eustachy said. "His savvy is incredible for a freshman."

The Vandals, who now hold a 25-22 advantage in games between the two schools, will visit BSU for the rematch March 5.

IDAHO INFO— Lightfoot and Beard, arguably the two best players in the league, shared the Cenex/Land O'Lakes Player of the Week award. Lightfoot averaged 32.5 points and 16 rebounds this weekend while Beard averaged 33.0 and 15.0, respectively... McBride, whose father rode a bus from Topeka, Kansas to see his son play this weekend, most likely strengthened the family ties. The 6-5 springy forward, who had been averaging 6.3 points and 4.3 rebounds prior to the weekend, netted a 14.5 point and 13.0 rebound average for the homestand... Since 1972, Idaho is 4-2 in double overtime games. In its sole triple overtime game, Idaho fell to the University of Washington at home 69-83 in 1983... Fouls became more of a factor in the second half. Idaho was 1-for-2 from the charity stripe in the first 20 minutes while BSU was 3-for-5. Excluding the overtimes, Idaho was 9-for-12 after the intermission while BSU was 8-for-10... Point guard Ricky Wilson dished out a game-high eight assists and was 4-of-5 from the field for nine points... BSU made drastic improvements in rebounding as Idaho claimed just a slight 46-44 victory on the glass... When asked about the March 5 game against the Broncos in Boise, Ricks simply said with a smile: "Looking forward to it."

But four points off the bench by Vandal Xanthus Houston sparked an 18-5 run to put Idaho up 33-22. Jeremy Brandt also came in to hit a pair of 3-pointers as Idaho went up 52-40 at the break.

"We had our hands in their face all the time in the first half," ISU head coach Herb Williams said. "We broke down a couple of times (in the first half) and had a couple of mental lapses."

The deciding factor in the first half was Idaho's ability to take the ball off the glass. The Vandals held a commanding 24-8 rebounding margin in the first 20 minutes as Lightfoot had seven and McBride six.

"I always felt he should be a good offensive rebounder," Idaho head coach Larry Eustachy said of McBride. "That's his game."

In the second half Idaho again spread the scoring around as nine of 10 Vandals scored at least two points. ISU made a small run at Idaho as it cut the gap to 57-50 on a 7-0 run. But following a Lightfoot lay up, McBride came charging down the key and threw down a thundering dunk off a Marivin Ricks 3-point miss. The play brought the crowd into it, pushed the lead back up to double-figures and sent the Bengals to its third straight loss, its eighth in nine games.

"I told our guys to keep their heads up (after the game) because they got beat by a solid team," Williams said. "If Idaho was in the Pac-10 or the Big-10 they would be in the top three or four."

Williams, who was an assistant coach at the Big 10's Michigan State for six years before heading to ISU, may have exaggerated, but was still impressed with the league-leading Vandals.

"They've been together for two or three years and that's the way you win ball games- to be experienced," Williams said.

Lightfoot paced Idaho with 21 points and tied McBride for game-high honors with 15 rebounds. Ricks and guard Andre Whitney also joined the two in double-figure scoring with 16 and 10, respectively.

Potter finished with 22 points for ISU on 4-of-12 shooting but registered 13-of-15 from the free throw line. Derrick Boles came off the bench to drain 15 and guard Chris Baker had 14 points for the Bengals.

IDAHO INFO— The Vandals now own an 11-game winning streak over ISU... Idaho out-rebounded the Bengals by 33 (56-23), its largest margin this season... Brandt put up four shots, all of which were 3-pointers, and three were good.

Idaho tennis opens season on upbeat note

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

It took awhile to get started, but Idaho's first dual tennis match of the spring season was completed this past weekend in the Kibbie Dome.

The tournament, which included the University of Montana and Montana State University, was scheduled to begin before the Vandal basketball game Friday night, but didn't get under way until afterwards.

On the women's side, they began the night by playing a tough match against MSU, but ended up falling to the Bobcats 4-5. The following night they were up 4-1 against the UM Grizzlies, but the match was called due to lateness.

"For a young squad and for what we've had to overcome this season in means of experience I'm really happy," head coach Dave Scott said of his women's squad.

With the win, the women now have a 1-1 dual meet record. They were led by No. 1 seed Merlene Forde as the senior played strong in her two matches, winning both.

"She does a lot more work than she needs too," Scott said. "It's evident in the way she practices each day."

Also having a good weekend was two-sport Vandal Leah Smith. The No. 2 seed lost her first match of the season to MSU, but bounced back the following night to take one from UM.

"Her first one (match against MSU) was a little rough but that's the way it is for her after finishing up volleyball," Scott said. "Leah is the kind of player who at the end of the season will be playing her best tennis of the year."

Over on the men's side, they had a tougher time with the competition. Now 6-3 on the season, the Idaho men lost their first match against MSU 5-1, but came back to beat UM 4-2.

"At this point I just don't think my one, two, and three seeds are at the level I'd like them to be at," Scott said of the men's side. "I'm extremely pleased with the four, five and six players."

Leading the way for Idaho over the weekend was No. 4 seed Niren Lall. The sophomore was the lone winner in Friday's meet and went 2-0 on the weekend.

"He's phenomenal," Scott said of the University of Oregon transfer. "He's the most improved player on the team all around."

Bengals, Broncos rout Lady Vandals

By DOUG TAYLOR
Assistant Editor

A common theme begins to emerge after viewing the results of women's basketball games within the Big Sky Conference this year — playing on the road has been especially treacherous of late.

In games played through last week, teams traveling to meet a conference foe had come away with only five victories in 22 attempts, a .227 winning percentage.

So it may come as no profound surprise that two more losses were registered by the traveling team this last weekend. In this case, Idaho played the victim as Idaho State and Boise State won in convincing style.

With losses of 76-64 and 83-60 to the Bengals and Broncos, respectively, the Lady Vandals now find themselves at 2-5 in conference and 7-12 overall. In the four conference games played away from the confines of Memorial Gym, the Lady Vandals are now 0-4.

The ramifications of these two most recent losses is something that coach Laurie Turner fully realizes. She herself noted that the Lady Vandals have placed themselves in a must-win situation if they intend to qualify for the post-season tournament.

"This year in the conference, the road is a tough place to play," Turner said. "We have to shake that off, though, because this coming weekend (home games against Montana and Montana St.) is a very big weekend for us. The girls realize that they have dug themselves a big hole."

Friday's game with Idaho St. certainly didn't provide many pleasant moments for Turner.

Courtesy of eight points from forward Shawna Fortney, the Bengals scored 26 of the game's first 35 points. Idaho St. expanded the lead until the Bengals led 47-26 at halftime.

The Lady Vandals would start a minor second-half rally keyed by the play of guard Jennifer Clary and forward Kortnie Edwards but Idaho could get no closer than 11 points. Even that little victory was muted by the fact that the 11-point deficit came in the last minute when the game had been decided.

The twin curses that have plagued the Lady Vandals all year long, turnovers and suspect rebounding, continued to prove detrimental. Idaho was out-rebounded by a 27-20 mark and committed 19 costly turnovers.

Turner said the turnovers went against a recent Idaho trend marked by a "better" kind of turnover.

"Lately, we had been committing turnovers like traveling that just gave the other team the ball instead of an easy transition lay-in," Turner said. "Against Idaho St., 13 of our 19 turnovers were steals that put us into a transition defense where we either fouled them or gave them an easy shot."

Another trend, however, was reinforced as the Lady Vandals' propensity for balanced scoring was upheld by four UI players breaking into double figures against ISU.

Clary paved the way with 15 points before fouling out late in the game. Brenda Kuehlthau received runner-up honors with 14 points and four assists while Edwards and center Karen Poncina each finished with at least 10 points.

Jennifer Cannon, ISU's 5-10 senior guard, provided the biggest punch for the Bengals. Cannon hit 6 of 10 from the field and 11 of 17 from the line to finish with 23 points.

Poncina's continued emergence as an offensive threat emerged as a bright spot for her team. Poncina buried 6-of-7 shots to finish with 12 points in addition to snagging four rebounds.

Along with Edwards, the two combined for 23 points, seven rebounds and three assists. Turner is the first to suggest that the team may benefit from featuring Edwards and Poncina more prominently.

"Kortnie and Karen have been putting in some very good minutes for us lately," Turner said.

Saturday's game against Boise St. could almost be seen as "different team/same result" syndrome. Although the Lady Vandals were behind just 19-17, the Broncos went on a 23-7 run in assuming a 42-24 halftime lead.

Eleven of the 23 points came from junior guard Angie Evans. Nine of the 11 came courtesy of three consecutive 3-pointers towards the end of the first half that pushed BSU towards its large halftime lead.

Evans was one of six Broncos in double figures. Angie Cline and Lidiya Varbanova led all BSU scorers with 14 points. Besides Evans, freshman center Verna Guild, Tricia Bader and Heather Sower all scored 10 or more points.

For Idaho, Kortnie Edwards led the way with 17 points while Clary notched 16 more.

Turner thought the game was decided by BSU's press, which proved especially lethal in the second half.

"We did alright in the first half, but in the second half it seemed like we couldn't get the ball across half court against BSU's press," Turner said.

Naturally, turnovers were the most visible part of the Lady Vandals' struggles against BSU's pressure defense. Idaho turned the ball over 22 times compared to just 13 for the Broncos.

When summarizing the weekend results, Turner said there were three areas which could be construed as positives.

Primary of these three aspects was a needed inside game to complement the outside shooting of Clary. In fact, Turner felt there has been a shift of power from the outside game to the inside game.

"Our perimeter shooters have not been doing that outstanding of a job shooting the ball lately," Turner said. "When your inside players are doing well, it starts making sense to get the ball in the paint more."

Turner said that turnovers continue to be a problem as well as a deficiency of leadership from her upperclassmen team members such as Edwards and Kuehlthau.

"Right now, most of the problems are mental because I know this team has the ability," Turner said. "We have to have players start taking charge on the court."

Vandals make strong statement in meet

By DOUG TAYLOR
Assistant Editor

At this point, University of Idaho women's track coach Scott Lorek is gauging his expectations for April and May.

Yet, he admitted that it's nice to see how his team progresses outside of the practice environment.

Lorek received such an opportunity at last Saturday's Human Race Invitational Indoor Track & Field Meet.

The meet held in Eastern Washington University's Thorpe Fieldhouse gave Lorek a chance to see how 14 members of his woman's team measured up against opponents from several Northwest colleges, including Washington State University and the University of Montana.

Evidently, some of Lorek's team is ready for the outdoor season in April and May.

Idaho highjumper Cathy Ballensky finished second in the event with a jump of 5-4 1/4. Lara Pokall from EWU won the event. Meanwhile Sara Dudley finished third in the long jump.

Other highlights included the second-place finish of sprinter Heidi Bodwell in one of the two 55-meter finals. Her time of 7.53 seconds was 2/100 of a second place behind the winning time posted by EWU's Holly Newell.

In the other 55 final, Venise Walker finished third while Kristi Becker came in fifth.

Other Idaho notables included three top 10 finishers in the shotput, Shannon Russell-Shaw, Francisca Rapier and Jill Wimer, and a fifth place finish from Becky Stabler in the triple jump.

Lorek said he did see some general improvements from the team members who participated in the match. "Venise Walker was one who showed improvement in her times," Lorek said. "She went from 7.40 in the finals to 7.31 in her final heat."

What the meet didn't give Lorek was a sense of how his team rates against the conference pre-season favorites Weber State, Boise State and Northern Arizona University.

Lorek thought that the Vandals might be a strong contender in tournament action, but he said it was much too early to be calling any team a favorite.

"Weber, Boise and Northern Arizona are the teams I would call the favorites," Lorek said. "I wouldn't call us one of the favorites, but we work hard as a team. We do have the capability to have a strong showing this year."

The UI men were equally as impressive, notching three first-place finishes and two second-place marks.

Jerry Trujillo enjoyed perhaps the most impressive afternoon, finishing first in the triple jump with a mark of 45-8 feet and second in the long jump with a leap of 22-1 1/2 feet.

Other top finishers included Charlie Wheeler in the high jump (6-8 feet) and Travis Allen in one final heat of the 55-meter hurdles.

Sprinter Darrick Davis, who saw time for the Vandals' football team as a defensive back last fall, finished third in one final heat of the 55-meter run with a time of 6.56 seconds while UI backup quarterback Eric Hisaw finished second in a 55-meter final heat.

Devin Olsen also merited attention with a fifth-place finish in the shot put with a heave of 45-5 1/4 feet.

Storyteller shows and tells her 'Tales'

By HALO DEWITT
Staff Writer

Tale weaver, Brenda Wong Aoki will open eyes to the Asian and Asian American experience on Feb. 11 at 7:30 p.m. in Bryan Hall Auditorium at Washington State University.

Aoki, who is part Chinese, Japanese, Scottish and Spanish, tells ghost stories, real life stories and legends from all parts of her background.

She tells of her grandfather in one story and an enchanted crane in another. Most of her tales have moral themes that include love, greed and envy. Her performance consists of not only telling stories but acting them out, often with multiple characters portrayed by her.

Joann Muneta, executive director of Festival Dance, said Aoki's characters "come alive on stage" and that it is a "magical experience."

Her performance stems from talents as an actress, dancer and storyteller. Thursday's performance, "Tales of the Pacific Rim," consists of Chinese, Japanese and Asian American myths, folktales, and stories that are told by combining Asian and American theatre and dance techniques. She brings Japanese theatre, Chinese folklore, and Western modern dance together in captivating ways.

In addition to Thursday's performance, Aoki will also visit schools throughout the area in part of her role as a cultural emissary. Between Moscow, Pullman, Potlatch, Deary, Juliaetta and Genesee she will reach approximately 1,500 students of all ages.

Aoki has performed throughout the United States, Canada and Japan. She has appeared in The Kennedy Center, Washington D.C.; the Whitney Museum, New York City; and the Tsukuba World Expo, Japan.

"Dreams and Illusions: Tales of the Pacific Rim," Aoki's debut album, won the National Association of Independent Record Distributors Award for Best

In San Francisco, her hometown, Aoki has worked with the Dell'Arte Players and the Asian American Theatre Company.

Thursday's performance promises to be enlightening for adults and children alike. Tickets are available at Ticket Express at the University of Idaho Student Union Building, at The Pearl in downtown Pullman and at the door Thursday night. The cost is $8 for adults and $6 for students and children. Special rates are available for groups, for more information call the Festival Dance office at 883-DANS (883-3267).

Home brew easy to make and drink

By RUSS WOOLSEY
Contributing Writer

The art and science of home brewing is for those who are not satisfied with the watered down beer that most American breweries are famous for. It is affordable, relaxing and easy to get started.

By law any adult that is over 21 can brew 100 or fewer gallons of beer per year. In 1979 former president Jimmy Carter signed a bill that ended the prohibition of home brewing that had lasted for nearly a generation.

The products that a home brewer has for brewing has reached a "state of the art" level in the short 15 years that it has been legal. Here in Moscow the prospective brewer can buy supplies from two different locations. The first and better equipped supplier is Marketime Drugs located at 209 East Third downtown Moscow. A spokesperson for Marketime said that they, "order often; it goes out fast and the suppliers are often short but we usually keep it stocked."

The second supplier of equipment for brewing is Tri-State Distributors located at 1104 W Pullman Rd, Moscow. They carry the essentials at a reasonable price, but are often out of essential equipment.

With roughly $65 a beginning brewer can buy most of the essentials for their first batch of beer. However this does not include the necessary instruction.

The home brewer needs a handbook for brewing just as a good Christian needs a bible. The New Complete Joy of Home Brewing by Charlie Papazian is the ideal beginner's handbook. Papazian's book is easy to read and follow and he takes both the beginner and the advanced through step by step instructions. His motto, "relax, don't worry, have a home brew," has become the anthem for many beer enthusiasts.

Other books are available but Papazian's is

Ex-stuntwoman masquerades as a UI instructor

A personal profile

By JASON UHLMAN
Staff Writer

Throughout history, the lion has been feared by man because of its fierce killer instinct. To control the mighty king of the jungle, mankind has used everything from sophisticated steel traps to really big guns.

The UI teaching staff has received its first expert in the field of lion taming. He came to Moscow under the disguise of an ordinary biology teacher. Unfortunately for this beast master, word of his true identity leaked out. Steven Austad, evolutionary biologist, has dedicated many years of his life practicing behavioral control on lions. According to Austad, he requires only two things when going one on one with a ferocious feline: a nice looking short skirt and a wig. Sometimes the truth isn't pretty.

To understand how and why Austad went from being an English major in college, to training lions, to hiring out as a stuntwoman (yes, stuntwoman) for Hollywood productions, and finally moving to Idaho, a person must first know a little bit about the man.

Talking with Austad, you'd think that all of his life's adventures happened every day. His conversation, while being both friendly and humorous, casually drifted over the many years of events that most of us only see in movies. Like the time he was a cabbie in New York, and a cop jumped into his cab and yelled for him to "follow that car!" The person they were racing down Park Avenue in pursuit of was a psycho who had just tossed a firebomb into an Iraqi consulate. Throughout the whole chase the policeman was popping off shots out the window.

"The whole event wouldn't have been as memorable," Austad admits, "if it wasn't for the two old ladies screaming in the back seat."

Life didn't start out as an action/adventure flick for Austad, but was instead more like a movie filmed about growing up in the great depression. Moving to an impressive 15 elementary, and 12 Jr. high and high schools, his life lacked a direction. He graduated from the University of California at Los Angeles as an English lit. major, and then started driving cabs. When he began to worry that being a cabbie was "encouraging the wrong part of my personality," Austad moved from New York to his boyhood haunt of Portland, Oregon. That was when he began encouraging the "right" side of his personality, the side that knew and loved animals.

His first step into the lion training business began innocently enough. Austad's karate instructor (who, by the way, just happens to own a 22 acre lion ranch) asked him to lend a hand moving two lions down the California coast, one at a time, for a movie production. He neglected to mention the fact that the vehicle being used to transport them would be the back seat of a Mercedes Benz, and that they would be using cattleprods to keep the beasts "calm."

"The idea was to control the lion with the cattle prod, but the batteries wore out after the first hundred miles," said Austad. The rest of the trip was spent trying out a new method of lion control called "just go bzzzzt with your mouth." When trying a scientific experiment of this nature, one of the sure signs of success is if you come out alive. This is one of Austad's many triumphs in the name of science.

As many people know, when a person does a drug that they really like, they want to do that drug again and again, in stronger and stronger doses. In Austad's case, that little road trip had given him a taste of the excitement, and he was looking for the grand pooba, full blown, bull moose lion high. Where else could one look for a sure high in this world but in Hollywood? So, that's where he went.

It was in Hollywood where Austad found his true calling. Steven Austad, though special movie effects and the magic of show business, was transformed into...a stuntwoman!

"You just put on a skirt and a wig and let the animals beat you up," commented Austad, adding quickly "though I wouldn't really recommend it." Although he describes the shows he acted in as "some really awful movies," Austad has worked with household names, many of which are not human. Some of his more famous highlights include an episode of "The Bionic Woman," working with Gentle Ben and meeting Grizzly Adams.

The big question that came to mind after hearing all of this was "How in the heck did he get to Idaho?" The answer he gave was more of a compliment to Moscow and Idaho than a criticism of his old way of life. After he tired of the glitter life, and then tired of teaching at Harvard, Austad was ready for something really special. As it turns out, he found what he was looking for here.

"I loved the lions, and I loved Harvard, but I also love the west and would like to be near wildlife." Exactly how near did he want the wildlife to be?

"In my back yard," commented Austad.

Valentines shown at McConnell

By MICHELLE BARGEN
Contributing Writer

McConnell Mansion will be showing an exhibit through March of ladies' elegant attire worn in the northern Idaho area in the early 1900's. "Valentine, Sweet Valentine" stands as the theme of the exhibit.

A dress of diamond-mesh net with woven sprays of flowers and green leaves represent the time around 1900. Embroidered flowers adorn a pink dress of China silk worn around 1910. There are two dresses from the 1920's: One is a dusty rose silk crepe with a jacket which Mrs. Charles Deobold wore to her children's weddings. The other has a pink satin top trimmed with ribbon roses, once worn by long-time Moscow resident, Carrie Schnell.

The clothing is from the University of Idaho Margaret Ritchie School of Home Economics, Leila Old Historic Costume Collection, and from the textile collection of the Latah County Historical Society.

Vintage valentines of paper, lace and ribbons add to the romantic theme, in which some are elaborate fold-outs. A mandolin valentine is made of celluloid. These are from the collection of Dolores Sanchez.

Visitors to the Mansion on Feb. 6 and 13 can enjoy demonstrations of weaving on a Swedish style loom, spinning, and lace-making by members of the Palouse Hills Weavers Guild from 1:30 to 3:30 p.m. An exhibit will also be shown of their vintage and traditional weavings. Refreshments will be available as part of the Latah County Historical Society's "Valentine Warm-Up" Saturday events.

McConnell Mansion is located at 110 South Adams Street in Moscow. The demonstrations and exhibits are free and open to the public.

Grammy nominee wooed audience

By LORI BARKLEY
Contributing Writer

Four time "Campus Entertainer of the Year," Barbara Bailey Hutchinson wooed and charmed her audience with jazzy rhythm and blues guitar, contemporary lullabies and gag songs last Friday night.

Hutchinson's dynamic performance illustrated why she was nominated for a Grammy. "I do like to cover all the given emotions in a show," Hutchinson coyly told a crowd of 100 people who attended the special Coffee-house production in the university auditorium.

"Let's Talk Tomorrow, Let's Love Tonight" was the opening selection, followed by several upbeat rock songs. After the quick warm up, Hutchinson played her most famous songs: the "good times, great taste" McDonalds song, a few riffs from various Hallmark commercials and "I Like It Slow," the current Heinz Ketchup song.

Hutchinson next preformed some songs that were "on the dark side of love." She joked that they were easier to write because after being dumped, "you have more time on your hands."

The concert's repertoire also included selections from Hutchinson's Grammy nominated children's album Snuggle Up. The contemporary lullabies on the album contain no violence and have somewhat of a Disney style Hutchinson said.

Of the Grammy Nomination Hutchinson said, "It's the biggest achievement of my career. I used to be really shy and just play for myself, but my roommates in college dragged me out and made me start playing for people. I found out I liked it and it's just grown from there."

Perhaps the most touching songs were "It's Only Lonely Sometimes," a song about grandmothers, and a song Hutchinson wrote for Bette Midler in support of the Oxfam organization. "It's hard to write a lullaby about starving children," Hutchinson said, but commented on the song's good message.

For the encore, Hutchinson treated the crowd to a debut performance of a new song "On The Edge Of Wisdom," and to an old favorite, "Scarecrow." Hutchinson also grabbed her camera and snapped a picture of her first Idaho audience.

Hutchinson, like her mentor, Josh White, Jr., is an outstanding entertainer who can connect with an audience and really sparkle.

Hutchinson said she likes the college circuit of concerts because she can stay in touch with the ever changing tastes of her audience. "You never quite know what to expect," she said, "besides I get to meet the movers and shakers on campuses, the ones who put their heart and soul into everything."

According to Hutchinson there are three types of people, "The ones who make things happen, the ones who participate, and the ones who are left saying 'Uh-what happened.'"

Hutchinson's main musical influences were Neil Young, James Taylor, Joni Mitchell, and "anything acoustic." Hutchinson confessed that she started out as "a little Joni Mitchell clone."

On Feb. 24, Hutchinson will be performing at the Grammy Awards Ceremony, but doesn't expect to be on the national telecast portion of the show. "I'm just tickled that I'll be there."

for about 10 years. The group's success took off with their 1988 debut album, Information Society featuring "What's On Your Mind (Pure Energy)" and "Walking Away."

Before that, the group, which started as high school friends, put together an EP of original material, which included the band's high-powered, machine driven sound. "Running," from the EP became a major dance hit on the East Coast.

The 1990 album, Hack spurred global tours including a string of stadium concerts in Brazil. This resulted in an international uptick in enthusiasm.

"Hack was the record we had to do to keep growing," said band member Kurt Harland. "We had all sorts of ideas we wanted to try and we needed to give ourselves the room to try them."

Hack added depth to the group which shows in their next album,

Peace and Love, Inc. It is a driving, dynamic and danceable collection of new Information Society originals.

"There's a real consciousness to these songs, a distinct point-of-view," said band member Paul Robb. "We're saying something about the world we live in and hopefully the music will help get the message across."

"The sound this time around is more streamline," Harland said. "We stayed away from the pop, experimental side, back to a harder, dance-drive feel... which is what we were doing originally."

"Techno music was what drew us all together and what attracted our fans," Robb said. "For us, techno has always been about attitude. It's street level, a do-it-yourself sound with real underground credential, like punk or hip-hop. We're just picking up where we left off."
