Faculty Council takes away student voice from Kibbie Dome

By JEFF KAPOSTASY
Staff Writer

Last year the UI Faculty Council took the "ASUI" right out of the ASUI Kibbie Dome.

In a move that went largely unnoticed, the Council voted to delete the section of UI's Faculty-Staff Handbook which gives students a say in how the Dome is used.

Until July 1992 the Recreation Advisory Board, which is made up of five students, brought the voice of the students to decisions of how the Dome is used. Without this voice, decisions such as Dome hours, student usage and other priorities were taken out of the hands of students and given completely to the administration.

This left the Recreation Advisory Board largely a mock committee. Earlier this semester ASUI senators David Wilson and Rob Blinzler were appointed to the Board. It didn't take long for them to realize the group was basically powerless.

"The Board did nothing. There was no power," Blinzler said. "We wondered why it was here, and thought maybe we should get rid of it."

Blinzler began to investigate and found that a great deal of funding for the Dome's construction came from students in the 1970s. In fact, students took a fee increase to help build the dome.

As Blinzler looked deeper, he discovered the Faculty Council had deleted the section that gives the Board the power to help oversee the Dome. This has members of the ASUI government wondering why.

"This really concerns me," ASUI President Richard Rock told the Senate Wednesday night.

"It's called the ASUI-Kibbie Dome because student fees went to build it. Now, we don't have a say in its use."

Last weekend Blinzler and Rock met with U.S. Sen. Dirk Kempthorne, who was ASUI President when the Dome was constructed.

Because student fees were used to finance the Dome, Kempthorne made stipulations with the UI Board of Regents to make sure students always have a say in the use of the Dome.

Members of Tau Kappa Epsilon were cleared from suspicion of possible rape charges on Tuesday.

Campus Police Liaison Jake Kershisnik said an investigation by Moscow police has proven inconclusive, thereby relegating the case to the inactivated file.

"At this time we are unable to determine if a crime was committed," said Kershisnik.

The possible sexual assault was reported Jan. 18 by members of the Teke house. The alleged victim had fallen asleep at the fraternity Sunday evening after a party, and claimed to have been assaulted while sleeping.

John Atkins, Teke graduate advisor, called police when he first discovered the problem. "We had absolutely nothing to hide. We really wanted to know what happened."

But Teke members have been left questioning their treatment by the Moscow

Independent auditor says university mainframe computers 'five years behind'

By DAVID JACKSON
Staff Writer

For all those students who have sworn at the University of Idaho's mainframe computer system, calling it old and outdated, there is some good news.

An independent auditor agrees.

Last summer, The Arthur Anderson & Co auditors studied the UI's administrative computer systems as part of a yearly audit. They were not impressed with what they found.

A copy of the auditors written comments and suggestions said the university was "five years behind" in the effort to keep updated on software, and failing to fix the problem could result in a "complete breakdown" of the system.

"Certainly we don't like the words 'critical' or 'system could crash,' but we are taking steps to fix the problems," said Brian Farmer, UI's fiscal analyst and compliance officer. "There is only a remote possibility of something really bad happening to the system."

Farmer said the computer systems audit was just a small part of a larger audit done by Anderson last summer. He also said UI officials knew about the problems with the mainframe before the audit, and that they were being worked on simultaneously.

"By the time they gave us their findings, we had already hired Fredric Hibbler as the new computer systems director and had already begun looking for solutions," he said. "We are looking to get this taken care of as quickly as possible."

Farmer said four or five committees have just completed studies about the comments made by Anderson, and will present their findings by the end of next month. He also stated that a request for proposal, a formal request to have possible solutions implemented, should be released at that time.

Hibbler stressed that while the audit report painted a rather ugly picture of the mainframe and its software, the current programs are not dangerous, just old.

"What we have here is old software that can sometimes be problematic," he said. "But there is no real danger to anyone. A computer break down is very unlikely."

After the committees present their findings, purchasing a new software system and fixing the tarnished image of the mainframe is the first priority. However, making the needed changes may not come down to choosing a certain software package over another, it may hinge on the time honored problem of money.

While exact figures as to how much the new system could cost are hard to say, Farmer said money will have to be available from more than one source

PCEI wants to improve Palouse bicycle safety

BY NATALIE SHAPIRO
Contributing Writer

Head injuries make up one-third of bicycle injuries.

According to Lawrence Walters, Safety Education Coordinator for the Spokane Bicycle Club, these injuries are the primary or contributing cause of the 574,000 injuries and 70 to 80 percent of the 1300 deaths reported each year in the U.S. from bicycle crashes. Helmets are the best known means to reduce these statistics.

Walters visited Moscow Feb. 9 to discuss bicycling issues in the Inland Northwest area. He conducts bicycle safety education classes in elementary and middle schools in Washington.

"The bicycle is considered a toy in our society: to modify behavior, it is best to start when young," Walters wants to institutionalize bicycle education in Washington, Montana, North Carolina, and Florida have already done so, while the city of Spokane is in the process of creating a bike plan.

What about bicycle safety in Moscow? Dave Peckham, transportation coordinator of the Palouse Clearwater Environmental Institute, agreed with Walters' position on bicycling needs at the meeting. He stated Moscow needs to consider bicycles as an alternative to cars, "The town is growing like mad, with a five percent growth rate, so, in 15 years, it will double in size. We need to build bike friendly planning into Moscow's future."

Peckham explained bicycling offers part of the solution to the problems brought on by rapid growth, such as traffic congestion, parking shortages, noise levels, expensive road widening, and deterioration of air and water quality.

Peckham stated there are three top priorities to serve college and young bicyclists:

■ Revamp the Sixth St. bike path by realigning the street with five foot bike lanes and removing the north curb, which is currently used as a bike path.

■ Improve Cleveland St., its connecting paths, and Park Drive for alternatives to using Mountain View, which is an extremely busy street.

■ Connect the Cleveland path to Mountain View Park, either by widening D St. or by building a separated path along E St. Walters helped develop a bicycle education program for fifth graders in one Washington school. Walters assisted the teacher by using modified bikes (with quick-release seats and coaster brakes to make it easier to accommodate the number of kids) to teach children the concepts of bicycle safety.

They were taught bicycle laws, how to expect the unexpected, and to wear helmets. "I was amazed at how seriously the kids took this course," Walters stated, "And it worked." They went home and told their parents to buy them helmets."

To institutionalize bicycle education in Washington, Walters plans on developing a task force with the superintendent of public schools. He is also working with Cascade Bicycling Club to develop bike education programs for middle schools in Washington.

There is a need for bicycle education in middle schools said Walters. "Once they get out of basic bike education in fourth and fifth grades, there's nothing till they join bike clubs when they're older," he said.

Students learn from $100 million mistake

Students in a unique course at the University of Idaho are learning from a $100 million environmental headache in northern Idaho.

They're enrolled in "The Social Ecology of Landscape: An Experimental Course in Art, Ecology and Architecture." It was funded by a $24,000 grant from the National Endowment for the Arts, and is being taught through the College of Art and Architecture, and the College of Forestry, Wildlife and Range Sciences.

The site, the former Bunker Hill Smelter in Kellogg, Idaho, is one of the largest non-governmental Superfund sites in the U.S., and is the result of severe toxic waste from decades of smelting and related activities. Clean-up costs have been estimated at $100 million. Kellogg and its surrounding communities are economically depressed, and the future of the Superfund site is of critical concern to citizens and decision makers.

Thought to be one of the few university courses of its type in the nation, its purpose is to integrate science and the humanities to get students "talking across disciplines," in the words of Gary Machlis, one of the three UI faculty members who proposed, designed and are teaching the course.

The 20 students in the course meet once a week with Machlis and Kate Grinde, assistant professor of landscape architecture, and Bill Bowler, associate professor of architecture.

"For the students, a Superfund site is both an extremely practical challenge and a metaphor for the design arts in an increasingly industrial world," said Bowler.

"What we want to do is give students the opportunity to work with students from disciplines outside their own. We're challenging them with a real-world problem -- planning for the future of the Superfund site," Machlis added.

Working in teams of four, students in the class will construct projects depicting what they feel the Bunker Hill site should eventually look like.

After the projects have been displayed in Kellogg for comment by its citizens, they'll return to Moscow for exhibition in the university's Prichard Art Gallery.

Paul Windley, dean of College of Art and Architecture, said he was favorably impressed with the project for several reasons.

"For one, it shows the extension of cooperation between colleges at the University of Idaho to solve complex problems that require a multi-disciplinary approach. Secondly, I know of no other project funded by the National Endowment for the Arts that is as thoroughly interdisciplinary as this one."

Blinzler is hoping everything will work out, and power will be restored to the Board. He met with Faculty Council Chairperson Molly Stock yesterday, who was surprised to learn that such a provision was taken out.

"We're going to find out why this passed and what was the rational behind it," Stock said.

Blinzler and Stock say the deletion may have happened by accident. The provision was allegedly buried in outdated Rules and Regulations inside the Handbook, and perhaps taken out along with the useless sections.

"It's not like it's us against them," Blinzler said. "We're not biting out nails trying to figure out what to do."

Letters are being sent to UI President Elisabeth Zinser and Vice-President of Student Affairs Hal Godwin to figure out how to give the power back to the Board. Stock is contacting other members of the Council to find out how this happened.

"We want to re-establish the Rec. Board as an authority of policy at the Dome," Blinzler said. "We hope it will be a smooth transition."

for this venture to happen.

"We are hoping to get funds from the current operating budget, as well as some from the legislature," he said. "There is also some money set aside in our budget specifically for computer replacement costs, but we will probably need more than is in there."

Farmer hinted that these changes could be on line by the start of the fiscal year 1994, but that would depend on finances, as well as cooperation in choosing the new software. Once the new system is up, students can expect to see changes in many mainframe operations, including pre-registration.

"Pre-registration now is a little difficult because all the departments such as the controller's office, financial aid, and campus food service don't have instant access with one another," he said.

"Hopefully with the new system, we can get those people together and have a better pre-reg(istration) system."

Police, and feeling only marginally vindicated.

"The investigation was botched from the get go," said Atkins. "The police never had any leads, and yet they implicated three of our members."

Kershnik said the investigation dragged on due to the large number of people involved, and the inability of the victim to be clear on details.

"The girl claimed to have been assaulted while sleeping, but later said she may have been awake at the time," said Kershnik.

According to the investigation the victim never identified a suspect, even though she was familiar with several members of the fraternity.

Atkins said Teke members do not feel the victim made anything up. "She was as unsure as we were, but the way we were interrogated was out of line. It smacked of the Mayberry Police Force." "Nobody admits to the assault," said Kershnik, "and our information won't either confirm or deny a crime ever took place."

An inactive case does not prevent future investigation though, said City Prosecutor Bill Thompson. "I haven't seen any of the evidence, but the department will confer with me once the investigation is complete. If police have determined there is insufficient evidence I would tend to agree."

Inactive, the case will remain shelved indefinitely unless new evidence is found significant enough to compel a review and possible reopening.

Atkins said members can never truly feel vindicated, and they are hoping to arrange a meeting with Greek Advisor Linda Wilson, and Moscow Police Chief Bill Brown to discuss the way the investigation was handled.

Festival will miss presence of Gillespie

By TIM SCHREINER
Contributing Writer

A special dedication in memory of jazz great Dizzy Gillespie is in the making for Feb. 25 at the Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival.

According to Dr. Lynn Skinner, the director of the festival, Gillespie has played with Hampton, Herb Ellis, Arturo Andoval and many others. "We'll put a crew of those people together," he said.

"We were most fortunate to have had Dizzy here at the Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival twice. Once in 1988 and again in 1991," Skinner said, "and during the visit in 1988 we inducted him into the Lionel Hampton Jazz Hall of Fame. Dizzy was really excited about it."

Skinner said Gillespie was a very dear friend of Hampton. "In the spring of 1990, he and Lionel did a series of concerts together and Dizzy used Lionel's band. Lionel called and said 'Hey, Dizz wants to be with us next year so count him on, he's going to be there.' The neat thing about Dizz is if he told you he was going to be here, you knew he was going to be here. In fact, a lot of the artists, I guess in the early days, if they told you they were going to be here that's what they meant."

In the spring of 1991, said Skinner, when Gillespie was here last time, he did a clinic with the young people. "He rarely did that kind of thing," Skinner said.

Skinner explained what happened. "The clinic was at the Lionel Hampton recital hall, and during noon on that Friday of the festival, Dizzy tried to get into the room. There wasn't room for him to get on the stage because there were so many kids," he said. "The building was packed, and people were waiting in the hallway trying to get in so they could see him. They made a place so he could get in there, and he called a kid up and taught him some things to do on the piano. He had the kid play for him and (Gillespie) was overcome. He told me that night, 'I haven't had that ever happen to me, having all those kids wanting to see what I had to say just got to me.'"

Skinner continued to talk about the jazz artists. "He was great believer in his country," he said, "like so many of the jazz artists. Lionel, for instance, is a goodwill ambassador for the whole world. He has been given the title by officials of the American government, and whenever he goes, he's there to promote good will. We're celebrating his 65th year in jazz this year, that's a lot of concerts."

One person who owes much to the late great of jazz is Sandoval, who until two years ago, lived in Cuba.

After two years of freedom, Sandoval is up for Grammy. Skinner said Sandoval says "I owe it to Dizz. It wouldn't have happened without him."

ASUI and Faculty Council will work to bring back 6530

The bad news is that a deletion from the Faculty-Staff Handbook which at first seemed unimportant in reality deprived UI students of their authority in planning Kibbie Dome activities.

The good news is two campus organizations — the ASUI Senate and the Faculty Council — will be working together to correct this unfortunate mistake.

If you flipped through the latest copy of the Handbook searching for the section outlining student control of the Kibbie Dome, you would be sorely disappointed.

Where you'd expect to find an outline of student authority, you would instead see a notification that Section 6530, titled "Kibbie-ASUI Activity Center," was deleted by the Faculty Council, effective in July 1992.

Fortunately the exclusion was seemingly due to misunderstanding, not malice. Here is how Section 6530 used to read:

Part A-1: In the William H. Kibbie-ASUI Activity Center, UI has an outstanding facility for indoor sports and recreation.

The structure was designed to accommodate exhibitions, concerts and similar events in addition to football, basketball, track, soccer, field hockey, tennis, volleyball and badminton.

Part A-2: Construction of the center was financed primarily by student fees substantially supplemented by private donations.

Part A-3: The Activity Center Board, consisting of five students appointed by the ASUI president, develops recommendations for policy governing the operation and use of the center. This board's recommendations are reviewed and approved by the UI president and are subject, in some cases, to final approval by the regents.

By erasing Section 6530 the Faculty Council effectively shut off students from any say in the activities which are held in the Dome.

And it is the students who should have the most input into the ways the Dome is used. According to former ASUI President and current U.S. Sen. Dirk Kempthorne, one of the main reasons students went along with the fee increase that provided the money for Dome construction was that they were promised a say in how the structure would be managed.

Thanks to the efforts of ASUI senators and Board appointees Rob Blinzler and Dave Wilson, the oversight was brought to the attention of the ASUI and Faculty Council Chairperson Molly Stock.

Stock, who was not chairperson of the Council at the time of the deletion, and Blinzler will work together to see that the Board is restored as an authority of policy at the Kibbie Dome.

During times when it seems so many UI organizations are at odds with each other, it is gratifying to know two campus groups will work together to correct what could have been a catastrophic mistake.

Dr. Death is an insult to the medical profession

She was not a plaything for the Nazis. Most officers weren't too interested in a fifty-year-old. They used women half her age to satisfy their lusts. But the concentration camp was still a living nightmare for her.

She shared a single bed with four to six other women. Insects and lice crawled all about their living quarters. They stood outside in roll-call lines for hours, their worn-out shoes unable to protect them from the icy-cold puddles. She watched helplessly as her sister and many other women collapsed from sickness during the forced standing. Her sister did not recover from the illness and was buried just a few months before the end of the war.

Years after the war, she met face-to-face with an officer of her camp. He didn't remember her,

Company may have warped motive

The ad started by showing the brain waves of a sober teenager, which resembled the jumbled pattern of a richter scale recording an earthquake.

The screen changed drastically a few moments later as the schizophrenic lines on the brain wave machine evened out to become long, sloping lines. It was at this moment that the narrator told viewers that the second picture they saw was the brain activity of a teenager after smoking marijuana.

This commercial first started airing in 1987 but was pulled a short time later. Apparently, there seemed to be a slight problem with the ad.

It was rigged. The ad was sponsored by an organization called Partnership for a Drug-Free America, a non-profit group that uses heavy doses of advertising to steer people away from illicit drugs. The ad mentioned above was indeed a fairly good deterrent. Some scientists, however, were skeptical about the content of the commercial and began their own investigation into the matter.

A short time later, PDFA conceded that the brain waves of a person on pot had actually been those of a person in a coma.

This doesn't really make much sense until one begins looking at a list of PDFA sponsors — alcohol companies, giant pharmaceutical firms and the tobacco industry have donated heavily to the PDFA cause.

According to an article in the March 9, 1992 edition of The Nation, tobacco, alcohol and pharmaceutical companies have pitched in $5.4 million to the PDFA cause so far.

Mathea Falco, a former U.S.

Assistant Secretary of State for International Narcotics Matters, is currently writing a book on drug prevention. She readily defended these advertisers and the Partnership's sometimes skewed information presented in ads.

"The message may not be complete," she said in The Nation article, "but it's better than nothing."

Well, no it's really not better than nothing.

Translated, Falco's message clearly states that it's alright to lie to Americans in order to curb the scourge of drug abuse in this country. The legitimacy of the drug war is probably lost when kids learn of such half-truths.

Even more skepticism may be aroused when looking at the man in charge of PDFA.

James Burke, who was CEO of pharmaceutical giant Johnson & Johnson, resigned in 1989 to become chairman of the Partnership.

LETTERS LETTERS - LETTERS- LETTERS LETTERS

U.S. soldiers needs to remember enlistment oath

Editor;
I would like to address PFC Mark Barlow's letter regarding his condemnation of both gay's in the military and a citizen's right to express their opinion of how our military services should be run. The U.S. military is a reflectance of our society. As our society changes so must the military.

As a little reminder (since you've obviously forgotten) this country is a democracy and everyone has a right to publicly express their opinion as to how all aspects of our government may be run. It's called freedom of speech. Apparently you weren't paying attention when you took your enlistment oath. Remember the part about defending the constitution?

Barlow, I suggest you learn a bit more about the military yourself. Basic Training and AIT are totally unlike day to day life in the military, and even less like combat. And if your wondering who I am to be expressing my "sorry, ignorant opinions," I'm just some poor guy who spent six years in the Army, flew over 50 combat missions in the Invasion of Panama and the Gulf War. I flew with whites, blacks, Hispanics, women and maybe a gay person or two, and I can tell you firsthand when the bullets (or SCUDS) start flying all you care about is how good that person next to you is at doing their job. Their sexual preference is the last thing on your mind (or should be).

—Dean Gettinger

It's an unrealistic & cynical outlook

Editor;
It is amazing to me the amount of ignorance that people allow themselves to reveal when national issues are brought up in the letters to the Argonaut. One that I found particularly distressing was from one PFC Barlow, in the Feb. 5 edition. While I respect his devotion to the military and applaud his efforts to stand up for what he believes in, it seems to me that Barlow has a lot to learn about humanity. Whether it is a notion that the military instills in its soldiers, to insure their defending capabilities, or something that Barlow has always felt, it seems that he has an awfully cynical, and somewhat unrealistic outlook on people.

I have never been in the military, so aside from information that friends, and proud stories from my father and two grandfathers about their time in the Army and Navy, I know very little about the whole experience. Regardless though, it still troubles me that Barlow's main concerns seem to be being watched in the showers, and jumped at night, by libido--crazed homosexuals. It would be quite a surprise to Barlow, I'm sure, to find out that as statistics show, we have all, male and female, probably been watched in the shower by at least one homosexual or more since our first PE class in junior high. I'm also sure that if and when it happened, it was surely nothing we were aware of, and it did little to affect our daily routines, whether that would include playing basketball in PE, or defending our country.

I have only Barlow's own statements to base my opinion on, but in this case, they seem to be enough. He stated that "As a soldier you cannot be worried about the guy next to you wanting to sleep with you." My question is, what is there to worry about? Paranoia is a dangerous thing. Barlow is obviously not going to agree to sleep with any homosexual, and I seriously doubt any homosexual is going to try to rape him in his sleep.

Especially if there is a whole barack of soldiers, with the same opinion as Barlow, asleep as well. And if a woman in the military can learn to deal with the threat of sexual misconduct, so can Barlow.

Reiterating his concern, Barlow also said he didn't want to be "worrying if you're safe at night from some homosexual on fire-guard." Safe from what? The homosexual letting the enemy through? There doesn't seem to be any rational reason for worrying. And when Barlow says "If you cannot be 100 percent confident in the homosexual soldier during training, then how will your confidence be during combat..." I wonder. What is he basing his confidence on? The homosexual's ability to protect his fellow soldiers and perform in the field? I doubt it. Given equal training, will the average homosexual be any worse at performing any part of military duty than the average heterosexual? At shooting? At running? At fighting? At thinking and reacting under pressure? I can't think of any evidence that would prove it to be true. I also think it's safe to say that when the bullets and shrapnel are flying in battle, a heterosexual would not flatter himself by assuming the homosexual next to him was thinking of having sex with him.

This whole issue is sickeningly reminiscent of what it must have been like when the first African-Americans were fighting to enter the military. The majority was sure that no black man could ever defend the country as well as a white man. No white man can trust a black man to watch his back. Integrating white men with black men? Showering together? Sleeping in the same barracks? Eating together? It will cause chaos and totally destroy moral in the ranks. The horror of it all.

Now that the majority of the country has realized what a crock of shit all that was, it seems that many in the military are looking for a new person to demoralize and keep clear from their elitest clan. I have a great deal of respect for the military and I do realize that changing the current ban on homosexuals would shake things up in the military.

But Barlow asked that "before anyone else starts writing letters about how the ban won't effect military, ask yourself, have I ever been to basic? Do I have a clue what goes on inside the Army? If you haven't...keep your sorry ignorant opinions... to yourself. I won't effect you directly, but it will effect myself and many other good American soldiers."

I would like to ask this of Barlow, and others with his opinion. Before you start writing letters about how lifting the ban on homosexuals WILL effect the military, ask yourself "have I ever met a homosexual? Do I have a clue what goes on inside his head?" If you haven't, maybe you should learn a little more about homosexuals and what true ignorance is before you start blaming a whole group of people for the fact that you can't deal with change and equality. It WILL effect you directly, and it will effect many other good Americans.

Eleanor's first

Editor;
I too am glad Hillary Clinton is a competent woman who has been and will be more than an ornament for her husband, but Jodi Nelson needs to study U.S. history. She should have said ONCE AGAIN rather than "the first time" in reference to a first lady being of great public service. Eleanor Roosevelt springs instantly to mind. She preceded Hillary Clinton by half a century.

her late teens she was graceful and athletic. But the sport she loved most, diving, broke both her heart and her body. Now confined to a wheelchair, she will never spring gracefully into a pool or even walk again.

They were both victims, of a war and an accident respectively. But these victims didn't quit. They refused to be defeated. They didn't find healing for their bodies, but they found some healing for their soul. They became our heroes. Not that they even wanted to be heroes, they just wanted what we all want—to find a meaning and some significance to their lives.

They needed encouragement along the way. What they didn't need were fellows like Dr. Jack Kevorkian. Frankly, Kevorkian (a.k.a. Dr. Death) is an insult to the medical profession. The Golden Rule for doctors is the Hippocratic Oath, requiring all actions to stem from the goal of preserving life. Assisted suicides don't qualify I'm afraid.

Kevorkian's latest "patient," Elaine Goldbaum, a 47-year-old blind woman in a wheelchair, died earlier this week. She wrote in a letter to Kevorkian, "The loss of dignity is atrocious...I cannot do anything for myself. I can no longer continue living like this."

These were the words of someone discouraged, not of someone who necessarily wanted to die. Kevorkian provided no hope but in his twisted sympathy assisted in her death. If he were at all interested in the Hippocratic Oath and preserving life, he could have given her some obvious reasons for living.

He could have told her that she still had a fully-functional mind. She could still think for herself. Her letter to him in full, articulate sentences proves that she wasn't becoming a mental vegetable. She could have created poetry or composed music with her healthy mind. She could have formed opinions and discussed them with others.

She also had many joys ahead of her in life. She had a 17-year-old daughter who was becoming a woman. She should have still been here for her daughter's beautiful wedding. She should have stuck around to hold her grandchildren in her lap. Maybe a little encouragement from the "doctor" could have convinced her to live.

The two women whose stories I told earlier would have been potential Kevorkian patients. They had troubled and painful lives to escape from. Thank God he wasn't around and they didn't end it all. They have inspired millions of people with their stories.

Corrie ten Boom has helped untold people find the courage to forgive. If she found the courage to forgive the Nazis who killed her sister and mistreated her, I can summon the strength to forgive a friend for some cruel words.

Joni Erickson Tada has helped people recover from bitterness when a tragedy like paralysis strikes their lives. Her life has been an example that no matter what life throws at you, you can still find joy and significance.

We have so many writers and doctors today who offer hope to the hurting. We don't need guys like Jack Kevorkian around who squash hope and pollute our nation with their euthanasia ideas. Let's put this man behind bars or politely ask him to leave our country now. In the words of Simon and Garfunkel, "Hit the road Jack, and don't you come back no more, no more, no more..."

The ads produced in his term have relied on a host of tactics to keep people away from illegal substances. There has been the stereotypical black boy selling crack in the schoolyard. Scare tactics like a school-bus driver smoking marijuana while driving have also been used.

The various forms of mass media in this country have helped the Partnership by offering free airtime and ad space (this paper is one of the many that gives PDFA free space).

In all, the message seems to be perfectly clear in these fear-inducing ads. Yes, drugs are very bad for you, and yes, Burke is becoming an extremely rich man.

The tradeoff for "legal" drug companies funding Partnership ads is that more kids may turn towards their products of cigarettes, pills and booze after seeing these ads.

One begins to wonder if these companies are truly concerned about combatting the drug problem in this country.

Drug abuse is a serious problem in this country costing employers millions of dollars in lost productivity as well as ruining countless lives. If drug, alcohol and tobacco manufacturers are playing on this fear to make a buck for themselves, then they are true scum.

If Burke is trading on the hysteria around drug use to benefit himself, then both himself and his organization should be openly ridiculed.

After several ads were shown to be inaccurate or merely ludicrous, the Partnership has made a somewhat concerted effort to be more truthful in its advertising campaign.

One recent ad showed a rolled-up diploma and carried the headline of "If you're into dope, you might as well smoke this."

The ad then explained that American businesses have lost some $60 billion (remember, these are PDFA figures) in revenues because of the drug problem. As a result, most Fortune 500 companies are administering drug tests to their employees this year, and if someone is found positive, "you're out of a job."

With the U.S. drug problem cutting into all sectors, the hope is that PDFA is conducting their new advertising campaign with the welfare of the American public in mind.

I doubt it is.

Actually I am very appreciative of the Vanguard. The deliberate social near-sightedness and ignorance so flagrantly displayed in its pages reminds me that there are still plenty of conservative fanatics who would walk on their mother out of selfishness and narrow-mindedness.

They're continuing a "rich conservative tradition" which has bequeathed to us, so far, complicity for mass racial murder, battery and enslavement of women, brutal dehumanization and criminalization of gay, bisexual and interracial relationships, grinding inner city and rural poverty, the poisoning of our environment, unwillingness to take control of the plague now sweeping the world, and a host of other evils. Thanks Vanguard, keep up the good work. Please continue your opposition to the logical advancement of all life on our planet.

McBride won't just go along for the ride

■ Vandal forward's aggressiveness magnifies down the stretch

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

Tell Chauncey McBride that his father should come to Moscow more often so he'll play better and he'll likely answer the same way he did to a friend last week.

Without a word.

"I saw someone the other day and they said 'hey, your dad needs to come back up here every weekend so you'll play like that,'" McBride said. "I just sort of smiled."

The games in reference are the Vandals' two recent wins over Idaho State and Boise State. Prior to the weekend McBride had been averaging 6.3 points and 4.3 rebounds a game, but in the homestand the senior erupted for career highs of 19 points and 15 rebounds against ISU. In his 40-minute encore the following night he pumped in 10 points on 4-for-5 shooting and snagged 11 boards in Idaho's double overtime win over the Broncos.

"I had already made up my mind that I should be playing at a better level," McBride said as he reflected on his best weekend as a Vandal. "I have always been aggressive and that's the way I want to play."

Which leads back to the relationship he has with his father, Joe McBride. Having not seen each other for two years, the senior McBride took a bus from Topeka, Kansas to see his son play as a Vandal for the first time.

He wasn't disappointed.

"Yeah," McBride said with a laugh. "He was pretty impressed since the last time he'd seen me."

But while McBride was growing up in Topeka, 'impressed' was an adjective that neither of his parents used to describe him. The oldest of eight kids, a 'difference of opinions' led to his leaving home at age 17 and losing most, if not all, of his parents' support.

"My parents and I really didn't get along that well," McBride

Similar to driving down the lane and throwing down two points, Idaho forward Chauncey McBride attacks everything he does with the same amount of relentlessness. (JEFF CURTIS PHOTO) said of his childhood. "They thought that once I got out of the house I'd be a nobody like the rest of the guys my age in my neighborhood."

That neighborhood, which lies just outside of Kansas City, is where McBride's parents felt he would one day either wind up on drugs or be killed.

"There's a lot of violence down there," McBride said with the same serious glare he flashes on the basketball court. "When my father was here he told me a couple of my friends got killed there a couple of weeks ago."

Set on not becoming another dead-black-urban-youth-killed-violently statistic, McBride turned to his high school basketball coach in order to get his confused life back in order.

"He was having a tough time trying to do what his parents wanted, what I wanted, what teachers wanted and what his peers wanted him to do all at the same time," Davy Babb, McBride's high school coach at Highland Park High School said. "He had a lot of raw talent on the court. We just had to work on his decision making and attitude."

After correcting both, and registering a successful sophomore and junior year on the court, McBride and Highland Park had high hopes his senior year. HPS hadn't been to the state tournament since the early 1980s, and hadn't played in a championship game for years. McBride, who was focused on winning the entire thing, received negative reinforcement from his mother.

Idaho center Karen Poncina will lead the Lady Vandals against Montana St. and Montana this weekend. (JEFF CURTIS PHOTO)

UI begins critical series tonight

By DOUG TAYLOR
Assistant Editor

At several points during this year, Laurie Turner has talked about the importance of an upcoming game or series of contests.

For this weekend's set of games, however, calling them important may be doing an injustice.

In a real sense, the games may decide if the Lady Vandals can entertain thoughts of heading into the post-season Big Sky Conference tournament.

Idaho faces conference leaders Montana State and the University of Montana in two crucial contests that start today with the Bobcats.

The Lady Vandals, 2-5 in league and 7-12 overall, currently sit at sixth place in conference action. Two losses may put Idaho out of the running.

Turner is fully aware of the fact.

"We have seven league games left, and if I had to predict how well we would have to do, I'd say 5-2," Turner said.

The Grizzlies and Bobcats could certainly be the teams that account for those two losses.

Montana St. is currently 6-1 in BSC play with the lone loss coming at the hands of their cross-state rival last weekend.

The game was so hotly contested that Bobcats' head coach Judy Spoelstra received a verbal warning from BSC Commissioner Ron Stephenson on Tuesday. The warning came after Spoelstra had publicly berated the officiating crew that worked the game.

Nestled one game behind the Grizzlies in the standing, the Bobcats are certainly as formidable in many respects as UM. That would be the Cass Bauer factor.

Turner called Bauer "one of the league's top inside players," and the compliment is certainly warranted. The 6-3 junior center is averaging 17.6 points a game along with 8.6 rebounds. Two weeks ago against Boise St.,

Bauer poured in 35 points, which is the highest one-game total from any conference player this year.

It was against the Bobcats that Idaho played perhaps its worst game of the year on Jan. 16. The Lady Vandals scored a season-low 10 points in the first half as the Bobcats devoured Idaho 74-45. Bauer led the way with 19 points and seven rebounds.

"That was what you might call a collapse," Turner said in the days following that game. "We had no cohesiveness, and I didn't think we were ready to play whatsoever."

Turner is counting on the home court advantage offered by Memorial Gym to ward off memories of the road where Idaho is 3-10.

"The road has been a very tough place for us this year," Turner said. "We have to win some of these home conference games to have a chance of going to the

Vandals begin life on the road in Montana

■ Crunchtime starts tonight for Idaho

The Vandals, including forward Deon Watson, will look to get fired up for road games this weekend in Montana. (JEFF CURTIS PHOTO)

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

The Idaho men's basketball team will now find out if it can shake its road jinx by playing its next four games on the road.

And there is no bigger a challenge to start with than where they play this weekend.

Tonight the first place Vandals (17-5 overall, 6-1 in the Big Sky) will tip-off against the Montana State Bobcats (7-12, 3-4) in Bozeman. They will then face two-time defending champion University of Montana (12-8, 3-4) Saturday in Missoula. Both games begin at 6:05 PST and both will be televised live on Prime Sports Northwest.

"We've never been a position to win this league since I've been here and now we do," Idaho head coach Larry Eustachy said. "This is the most important trip since I've been here."

Traditionally Idaho hasn't had the best of luck on this road swing. Since the 1988-'89 season, the Vandals hold a 2-8 record versus the two schools in their arenas. In Eustachy's two seasons at Idaho he has yet to win at either school, going 0-6.

"I really don't think it'll play a part," MSU head coach Mick Durham said of Idaho's recent history in the Big Sky state. "We usually get them on the second night so sometimes they may have been a little fatigued. This year we play them first which scares me. They know they've got to win some games on the road to win the conference and I'm sure they feel that here (Bozeman) is a place where they can get one."

In the first meeting against MSU in Moscow, the Vandals held the Bobcats to a 35 percent shooting performance in a 63-46 Idaho win. In that game just six Bobcat players scored—something Durham notes can't happen again if MSU wants to split the season series.

"We're going to have to shoot the ball better," Durham said of his fourth place squad. "We've got to score more than 46 points. I think if the score can be in the low 70's we can stay in it. If it gets any higher than that they'll (Idaho) pull away."

Leading the Bobcats this year has been forward Art Menefee. The senior led his team with 13 points in the loss in the Kibbie Dome and is averaging 15.8 points on the season. As well as Menefee, forward Glen Allen has turned his play up a few notches. The sophomore, who had no points at Idaho, came off the bench to score 19 in a 65-62 overtime win at Montana last week.

"Their players are just stepping up and playing good basketball," Eustachy said. "They've gotten some good help from their bench."

The Grizzlies, who are in an uncharacteristic tie for fourth place with MSU and Eastern Washington, have showed the signs of losing all five of its starters from last season. Montana, in spite of currently having a two-game losing streak and possessing no players in double-figure scoring, still has the attention of Eustachy.

"We've worked on both (teams)," Eustachy said of this week's preparation. "We haven't over or under emphasized one or the other. They're (Montana) playing well. Its no question its the toughest road swing in the conference for us."

In the starting line-up for Montana are four players averaging more than nine points a game. Guards Jeremy Lake and Travis DeCuire average 9.3 and 9.5 points while forward Matt Kempfert and center Josh Lacheur slip in 9.0 and 9.3, respectively.

IDAHO INFO— Idaho point guard Ricky Wilson will most likely not play in tonight's game and will probably see minimum time on Saturday. His uncle, Bob Spearman of Walla Walla, passed away in his sleep Saturday night and Wilson is attending his funeral. Spearman was like a father to Wilson as Ricky lived with him for four years prior to coming to Idaho... Idaho is now at plus-10.6 rebounds per game, up from 9.9 last week. With that the Vandals now rank No. 3 in the nation in rebounding margin... Guard Marvin Ricks, who has 88 3-pointers at Idaho, needs just two more to beat Ricardo Boyd's school record of 89... After the Montana swing, Idaho plays at Sacramento State Wednesday and then up in Cheney against EWU next Saturday.

"She said, we wouldn't make it," McBride said. "That set it off right there and made me want it even more. I had promised her we'd make it to state."

In spite of coming back from 16 points down in the third quarter, and McBride hitting a key 3-pointer in the final minute, HPS fell in the end by one point.

But beyond the game, and even beyond the sport of basketball, McBride had to decide what he wanted to do with the rest of his life. After Oklahoma State University looked at him but was shut off by his academic situation, McBride was soon a talented, determined young man without a direction to go.

"It seems like just yesterday when Chauncey came into my office and said he didn't know what to do," HPS athletic director Bob Hayes said. "His grades at the time kept him from doing as well as he might have."

"I called over to Johnson County Junior College (in Overland, KS) and asked the head coach why he hadn't contacted Chauncey about playing. He didn't have an answer."

Hayes' persistence paid off as McBride had a successful stint with JCJC. As a freshman he averaged a team-high 16.3 points and his sophomore year was similar as he recorded 14.3 points and 6.2 rebounds a game.

"I knew he had the aggressive nature," Babb said. "Whether or not he was aggressive in a game made a big difference in the outcome."

Now, three years later, as his career winds down at Idaho, McBride has proved himself on the court, but still feels he has to prove himself scholastically.

"All my life I've felt like I've had to prove something," McBride said. "I know what I've got to do now. I'm determined to graduate. I'll be the first one in my family to graduate and I've got six brothers and a sister (ranging from one to 17) who need to. I've got to set an example."

Expecting to walk down the aisle in May of '94 with a degree in Sports Science, McBride envisions himself coaching someday, giving back to a community that has provided him so much.

And, undoubtedly, doing it with as much aggressiveness as always.

tournament."

Citing improved play from center Karen Poncina and forward Kortnie Edwards, Turner said her team's inside play has improved tremendously. In spite of two recent losses at Idaho St. and Boise, Edwards scored 28 points while Poncina had 20 points and 16 rebounds.

Both players must have strong games if the Lady Vandals have a chance to beat the Grizzlies on Saturday night.

The Grizzlies, who are well on the way towards defending their Big Sky title from last year, are the only undefeated team in league right now with a mark of 7-0. Overall, the Grizzlies are 16-3 with one of these wins coming against the Lady Vandals in Missoula.

In his 15th year, coach Robin Selvig has compiled an amazing 351-86 record, which is tops among all active Big Sky women's coaches. Even after losing standout post player Shannon Cates to graduation, Selvig's team shows no sign of losing its grip on the top spot in conference.

Helping Montana stay in the lead is forward Ann Lake, who is averaging 12.9 points a game. After that, nobody scores in double figures, but it doesn't matter considering that eight other players are scoring five or more points.

Additionally, Montana welcomes back junior forward Trish Olson. Olson broke a bone in her foot at the beginning of this year and was unable to play. She saw her first action against the Bobcats last weekend, and Selvig expects her to start contributing more as the season progresses.

"No question about it, she is going to help more and more as the year winds down," Selvig said. "She's a good defender. The more time she puts in, the better off she will be."

Olson will help anchor a defensive unit that is stocked both in speed and strength. Montana ranks first in the conference in both scoring defense and field goal percentage (Idaho ranks second in this category, allowing opponents to shoot just 38 percent).

The unit is led by guard Kelly Pilcher, who is first among all Grizzlies in steals with over two a game.

An example of this could be seen in Idaho's 77-58 loss to Montana on Jan. 15 as the Lady Vandals fumbled the ball away 23 times because of Montana's pressure defense. The Grizzlies, meanwhile, turned the ball over just five times.

Keeping the number of turnovers low and forcing the opponents into miscues are both items that Selvig mentioned as improvements on his team.

"We've been taking much better care of the basketball," Selvig said. "Our defensive effort this year has been something that has really impressed me this year. Our quickness seems to be there too."

Turner said Montana is definitely a concern regardless of how much they have improved.

"Their defense really impressed me last time," Turner said. "We will have to watch our turnovers if we expect to win this game."

Guard Jennifer Clary continues to lead the Lady Vandals in scoring with a 16.5 average. Forward Brenda Kuehlthau remains the second-leading scorer with a 13.5 average while Edwards rounds out the top three with a 10.9 average.

Dome hosts track events

By MISSY WILSON
Staff Writer

Three of the world's top athletes will be competing in tonight's Vandal Indoor Invitational.

Decathlon world record holder Dan O'Brien, Olympic Decathlon Gold Medalist Robert Zmelik of Czechoslovakia along with Olympic Decathlete Eric Long are all competing in the men's 55-meter high hurdles, pole vault and high jump. Top collegiate and track club athletes from all over the nation will also be competing in the meet.

The invitational has been a part of Idaho's history for 18 years, and this year it will feature nine men's and six women's events along with a few other events to add some variety.

"This is a chance for our top athletes to be put in a situation where they will be face to face with the best athletes around," Scott Lorek, women's track and field coach said. "We hope that they will rise to the level of competition, because if they can their times are going to be faster than ever before."

The 55-meter high hurdles will begin the men's competition. The premiere match-up will be against O'Brien, Zmelik and Long. There will also be a few Idaho athletes competing, including Darrick Davis, Lance Osler, Eric Hisaw and Travis Allen. O'Brien holds the Idaho school record in this event with a time of 7:24.

The men's high jump follows the high hurdles which will also feature O'Brien, Zmelik and Long.

For the last four years Idaho's Eversley Linley has won the men's 800-meter run at the invitational, improving his time each year. Linley is no longer running for Idaho but is back to compete in the event.

Calvin Harris of Idaho won the 400-meter dash last year at the meet running a time of 48.59 and is one of this year's top entries in the event.

Another Idaho winner at last year's invitational was the men's 1,600-meter relay team running a time of 3:15.92. This year's team consists of Harris, Scott Whalen, Dustin Ainsworth and Ryan Puckett.

Other Idaho men competing in the invitational include Anthony Pennino in the 55-meter dash along as well as Kienan Slate and Jason Uhlman in the 3,000-meter run.

Teresa Batt will start off the women's events as the only high jumper competing for Idaho. Lorek said that Batt will be in a stress situation similar to the indoor championships, and its better she faces it now than in March.

Idaho women are well represented in the 55-meter hurdles with Tara Gehrke, Emily Wise and Tanya Tesar all competing.

All three of these athletes are running equally, with only a few hundredths of a second separating them, Lorek said. "They will be running in a fast field and should record some good times."

Karen McCloskey and Sheri Marlatt, who are redshirting for Idaho's indoor season, will also be competing in the hurdles. McCloskey is the school record holder in the event with a time of 8:19.

Venise Walker, Kristi Becker and Heide Bodwell of Idaho will be competing in the 55-meter dash. Jackie Ross set the Idaho record in this event

SI awards UI's Lightfoot

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

Idaho forward Orlando Lightfoot's astrological sign is Sagittarius, but for the second straight year the junior has found national success under Aquarius.

Lightfoot, the Big Sky Conference's second leading scorer, was named Sports Illustrated's Player of the Week this week for his contributions in home wins over Idaho State University and Boise State University. The 6-7 Chattanooga, Tenn., native drained 21 points and pulled in 15 rebounds in the Vandals 97-76 win over ISU last Friday night. On Saturday Lightfoot dropped in a school record 44 points and had 17 off the glass in the Vandals 107-99 double overtime victory over BSU.

"Everything that Orlando has accomplished is because of him," head coach Larry Eustachy said. "Since the beginning of the season it (his play) has been a product of his practices."

Lightfoot also received the award exactly one year ago for a three-game homestand. In a week's stretch last February he averaged 27 points and 10 rebounds in wins over Eastern Washington, Southern Utah and Northern Arizona.

After beginning the season averaging just 12.8 points through Idaho's first five games, Lightfoot has averaged 24.0 the past 17 and has eclipsed the 20 point mark in 14 of those. The turning point of the season for Lightfoot, according to Eustachy, is when he had just seven points in a 61-80 loss at the University of Oregon in Idaho's fifth game.

"I think he realized after the Oregon game that he can't just step out on the court and have it all happen," Eustachy said of Lightfoot scoring. "You can have all the preseason polls give you honors but preseason is exactly what it is. After that Oregon game, though, he hasn't had a bad practice yet and it has showed."

Lightfoot is the only basketball player in Idaho history to receive the honor.

In other notes, Lightfoot needs just 56 points to move ahead of ex-Vandal great Riley Smith for the sixth spot for UI career point leaders. If Lightfoot can hold or better his 21.5 point average through Idaho's final eight regular season games, he could move up to as high as third. Brian Kellerman, who played at Idaho from 1980-'83, holds the record at 1,585.

Only the passionate give lingerie

By CHRIS MILLER
Lifestyles Editor

The timid buy cards and candy, maybe flowers if they're feeling particularly confident, but only the wildy passionate purchase lingerie on Valentine's Day.

Because lingerie is an undeniably straight line of communication that unerringly goes directly to the receiver and shouts, "I want you!" the giver cannot digress and claim, "Well, I'm just giving you it as a friend." Uh-uh. Friends give cards.

"Garter belts or teddies with garter belts are the biggest sellers on Valentine's Day."

— Sherry Gains
Sales Rep. for Satin and Lace

Sherry Gains, a sales representative of Satin and Lace, said lingerie sales definitely pick up by about 50 percent around Valentine's Day, but they also move a lot of lace around Christmas.

"Garter belts, or teddies with garter belts are the biggest sellers," Gains said.

However, Rebbecca Tiffany from the intimate apparel department in The Bon Marche said, "a lot of men buy panties and thongs. For the women, they buy more teddies or spaghetti-strap sleep shirts—and the "silky" material sells better than the cotton."

Both lingerie sellers agreed that red was barely the hottest color selling on Valentine's day but black, white and pink all came in as close seconds

"It's really a personal preference, but the traditional red and pinks sell more," Tiffany said.

More women than men tend to buy lingerie, but during the holidays there is a definite increase in male buyers. The guys usually come in alone, and are more timid.

"They're a little more shy, but when we let them know we're not going to laugh at them, they loosen up," Gains said.

Perhaps a store devoted entirely to intimate apparel is more intimidating than a department in a larger store such as The Bon Marche. Tiffany said the guys aren't embarrassed and "they aren't afraid to ask questions."

Ideas for a perfect V-Day

By LANAE EMPEY
Staff Writer

A candlelight dinner a cliché—if it's in a bathtub. Valentine's Day can be as corny as the conversation hearts that say, "Hey Q-T" or memorable, all depending on the activity.

Dinner in a bathtub, or an elevator, is an inexpensive twist to an old standard, mentioned in the book Up-Date by Dee W. Hadley. One of the 766 different ideas presented by Hadley includes having dinner on the median of a highway.

If time for planning is available, Mission Impossible can be recreated for your date. When your date comes to the door, there is a tape recorder and envelope with your picture in it waiting.

The taped message could say "Good evening, Mr.—. The picture you see before you is your valentine. Your mission, Mr.— is to find her." Friends in trenchcoats can help your date to the final point—dinner with you.

Or you could kidnap your date. Take them, blindfold them and drive around until they are unsure of your location. Then take them to a friends apartment and have dinner.

Sunday morning, wake up your date and watch the sunrise eating sugared cereal.

Rather than the expensive Valentines found in stores, a homemade Valentine offers a chance for creativity. Personal jokes or situations make an ideal message for the inside.

Another cheap valentine uses cut up pictures and words from a magazine. Make a collage and hang it in their room.

Breakfast in bed is nice, but not original. Unless the meal consists of a couple's favorite foods, even if the food is a Big Mac and fries.

For dinner, cheap is fine if you have a creative setting. Some ideas include the back of a pickup truck, a moving van, a parking lot, a barn, a tent in your backyard, a tree, a decorated large appliance box, a boat parked in a garage, or an empty swimming pool.

If money is a problem, go to the supermarket and give your date $2 to buy his favorite food. Go home and eat it together, by flashlight.

A theme to this Valentine's Day can make a difference. If you have a jungle theme, decorate your apartment and serve shish kabobs. For a sports theme, have posters hanging everywhere and watch a game together.

If your date expects flowers, make them out of tissue. Or draw, on a large piece of newsprint, a huge bouquet.

If jewelry is in line, buy the Smartie necklaces and hard candy rings. You can also make a necklace out of colored macaroni.

Grammy awards cause jazz festival switch

By LANAE EMPEY
Staff Writer

Arturo Sandoval, trumpet and flugelhorn player, will be allowed to miss the first day of the 1993 Lionel Hampton/Chevron Jazz Festival, but only because he may come the second day with a Grammy tucked under his arm.

Sandoval has been nominated for four Grammy Awards and recently was invited to perform in the ceremony Feb. 24—the day he was scheduled to perform at UI.

"Obviously we're very excited that Arturo has received this special invitation to perform on the Grammys," said Lynn Skinner, festival chairman. "It's a great honor for him, and we think he'll come to the festival the next night with at least one Grammy win."

Sandoval has been nominated for Best Jazz Instrumental Performance, Best Large Jazz Ensemble, Best Arrangement on an Instrumental and Best Instrumental Composition.

The Ray Brown Trio, scheduled to perform Feb. 25, will perform in Sandoval's slot Feb. 24.

Purchased tickets for either the Wednesday or Thursday performances can be exchanged at Ticket Express due to the new schedule.

Sandoval, a native of Cuba, was granted political asylum in 1990. He and his family now live in Miami, Fla.

When he was 12, Sandoval began his study of the trumpet. He later performed with the Cuban Orchestra of Modern Music, the BBC Symphony in London and the Leningrad Symphony in the former Soviet Union.

Sandoval founded the Grammy-winning group Irakere. The explosive mixture of jazz, classical, rock and traditional Cuban music sent a shock wave through the entertainment world.

However, in 1981, Sandoval formed his own band, Arturo y Grupo, which has also sparked enthusiastic praise from European and Latin American critics. In fact, for three years Sandoval was voted Cuba's Best Instrumentalist.

Sandoval, a prodigy of Gillespie, was a featured artist with the Dizzy Gillespie United Nation Orchestra. As well, he toured with Gillespie and performed with Herbie Hancock, Jon Faddis and Stan Getz.

Sandoval will also conduct a free clinic Feb. 26 at noon until 1 p.m. in the UI recital hall. All clinics are open to the public.

Tickets for the Jazz Festival are still available from Ticket Express.

Roses and restaurants are the way to go

Flowers, food and a card are the traditional Saint Valentine's Day purchases made for a significant other.

Cards are plenty cheap and more than abundant since just about every store carries them. Flowers and food, however, are not nearly as cheap or abundant. These days reservations for restaurants and roses are almost required to insure a sweetheart's happiness on this most romantic of days.

■ Moscow Florists and Gifts, in downtown Moscow, has one rose for about $5, a half a dozen roses for about $25 and a full dozen roses for about $50. They can also put together just about any kind of arrangement you want for anywhere from $20 to $50.

■ Scott's Flowers, in downtown Moscow, has one rose for $4 to $5, a half dozen roses for $25 to $32 and a full dozen roses for $37 to $49, depending on the kind of roses desired. They also have mixed bouquets and arrangements for anywhere from $18 to $22.

Raving Ruthless Reviews

By HALO DEWITT
Staff Writer

It's winter and since it is more difficult to get out, some people simply take their brain on an adventure. Books are one way to get away but who has time to read things not assigned in class? Music is another way to escape winter doldrums and can be listened to while doing something else.

One album that is a definite brain teaser is Social Distortion's "Somewhere Between Heaven and Hell."

The music is very 50's-like but also punky. In fact, two of the songs on the album come straight out of the early 1950's. At times it felt like I should be wearing a poodle skirt and dancing with the rebel my parents didn't like.

The band even dresses in vintage rebel clothes. Blue jeans, white tee shirts, motorcycle jackets (which resemble letterman's jackets), and the greased pompadour hair. Almost Richie Cunningham and the Fonz and definitely not 1990's.

The musical lines compliment the clever lyrical compositions. It would appear that the band's lyricist has poetic talent and the ability to laugh at convention as well.

Aside from Happy Days flashbacks, it is a fun, witty album that is not drenched in political correctness like so many of the releases in recent years.

Also on the music scene:

■ The Hair and Skin Trading Co. has an interesting album out. "Jo in Nine G Hell" has a simple style. The repetitious sampling gives it an almost one dimensional feel that tends to make it an uncomplicated album that does not require much brain capacity for listening. There are no complicated lyrics or music lines.

However, it is not simple in the way some mainstream artists are simple. This album is far from mainstream, but also far from brain taxing.

■ Paul Brady also has a new album out. "Songs and Crazy Dreams" is a clean and clear album. It's mellow and laid back, and it doesn't feel like it is in a big rush to get anywhere. It echoes of Dire Straits and other early eighties music. The piano emphasis in combination with the relaxed sound makes it seem like an adult's lullaby. I have fallen asleep to it many times in the past couple of weeks. For that reason, "Songs and Crazy Dreams" is not an album to be listened to when studying.

Editor's note: Raving & Ruthless Reviews will run every Friday and cover music, movies, and books.

'Alice in Wonderland' recreated

By MICHELLE BARGEN
Contributing Writer

Recreating Lewis Carroll's version of "Alice in Wonderland" might seem a difficult task, with its psychedelic concepts and intriguing characters, but Donna Tingle decided long ago to take on the challenge.

Tingle, making her directorial debut with "Alice," said that "the play has been coming along quite well and I'm enjoying working with it very much."

Although the play requires different props and set material, like pink flamingos, for example, Tingle is doing her best. She said it's difficult finding pink flamingos in the middle of the winter, but "they might use chickens instead and paint them pink." They have been looking for odds and ends like baby dolls, tea sets, etc.

The script also contains words that would not be found in everyday conversation. "We're having to look words up ourselves, like 'treacle,' which means 'syrup,'" Tingle said. She plans on providing a glossary of terms for young and old alike to help them understand some of the poetry in the play.

The cast consists of Moscow

Community Theatre veterans and newcomers. Some are high school students and one is a graduate student. Hilary Hardcastle is playing Alice. Hardcastle is the only actor on stage with one role. The other 25 roles will be played by six other actors: Kami White, Delain Horn, Laura Lee Cornelison, Jim McProud and Chris Sprende. Helping with the crew work are Loran Cornelison as stage manager, Paul Knickerbocker with set design, Jean Crawford handling costume coordination, and Jeff Dall and Gena Trotter running lights.

Playing several roles means a lot of hard work for the actors, but they all came to the consensus that they don't feel any extra pressure. "Working with fewer actors makes it easier, filling almost 30 roles means a lot of actors. Although I think everyone has to feel some kind of pressure," Tingle said.

"Alice in Wonderland" will show Feb. 19 at 7 p.m. and Feb. 20 and 21 at 2 p.m. at the Moscow High School Auditorium. Tickets are $4 for adults and $2 for children under 12. They will be sold at the door and at Bookworld II in the Palouse Empire Mall.

WSU gala offers multitude of performances

JASON UHLMAN
Staff Writer

The finest music and theatre Washington State University has to offer will be arriving soon to the Beasley Performing Arts Coliseum in Pullman. The WSU School of Music and Theatre Arts and the WSU Alumni Association is presenting the 1993 gala "Showcase on the Arts," highlighting a multitude of different performances.

The performing arts gala, featuring 10 musical ensembles and scenes from four recent WSU Theatre productions, will be a two and a half hour performance. It involves more than 200 WSU music and theatre students, and is the second in a series of performing arts galas that was started in 1990.

Even though the show is open to the public without charge, the organizers and producers of the gala hope to produce one every other year. According to Associate Professor of Music David Jarvis, the non profit approach is really the best way to go.

"This is a chance for the School of Music and Theatre Arts to show its best work to a large crowd. It's a chance to put our best foot forward and perform some of our finest work," Jarvis said.

Jarvis, one of the many gala organizers, is looking forward to this years performance. "It's going to be a big bash, that's for sure."

Performing for WSU's program will be the WSU Madrigal Singers, the Wind Symphony, the Symphonic Band, the WSU Solstice Woodwind Quintet, the Faculty Brass Quintet, the WSU Percussion Ensemble, WSU's popular show choir Crimson Company, the Opera Workshop, and the Vocal Jazz Ensemble and Jazz Big Band.

Guest soloist Dick Griffin, a well known trombonist from New York, will be performing with the WSU Faculty Jazz Quartet.

Interspersed among the musical numbers will be scenes from WSU theatre productions. "Coyote Tales," "On the Verge," "The Skin of Our Teeth," and "The Boys Next Door" are the plays that will be performed.

All of the people performing will be involved in some careful and interesting choreography. The Beasley Coliseum stage will be divided into a front and back half, allowing for alternating acts to set up behind the curtain while the acts demanding fewer instruments or simpler sets will take place in front of the stage.

The show starts at 8 p.m. on Feb. 19. Admission is free.

A bit early for turkeys, but steelhead looks good

Outdoors with Nick Brown

About this time every year, when most of us can hardly wait for spring to arrive, I overhear someone mentioning that they spotted a flock of wild turkeys somewhere.

Itching to get out of Moscow and anxious to get a jump on scouting, I fire up the Ford and tear down the road in eager anticipation of finding a flock of winter savvy Merriams. Usually, I am disappointed, and on the long drive home I would either curse the source of the sighting, my bad timing, or worse yet, heavy winter kill.

Trying to figure out why those late winter scouting forays only turned up old tracks in oozing Palouse mud drove me nuts. But now, thanks to a study by the Idaho Fish and Game, the

B.L.M. and University of Idaho. Student Frank Edelman, I'll nix the February scouting, save gas and go ice fishing.

Why? A flock of radio tagged birds in the study revealed that some North-Central Idaho flocks migrate farther than a lot of high county elk and deer. In fact, the radio-tagged birds traveled nearly twenty miles between wintering areas and nesting sights. I couldn't imagine how long it would take them to wander that far... considering the cold molasses pace of a cautious spring tom looking for a date.

Nonetheless, those slender track-star legs make better soup than Thanksgiving fodder, and they're able to take on migration routes that would put a mule deer to shame. It goes to show a person that eavesdropping never pays off.

While it may be a bit early to scout for turkeys, there is still some good steelheading to be done this year. By now, most active steelheaders have noticed that the hook-jawed males are taking on a dark appearance as spawning time approaches.

Happen to catch a hatchery male? Fillet and smoke it to make some incredible munchies to augment your favorite home brew. A good tip: The best way to avoid turning out a batch of rock hard fish jerky that even the Donner party would have shunned, is to check the smoker every 45 minutes. Particularly, after the first few hours.

When selecting wood for your smoker, there are several types of commercial chips sold in a bag (for about the price of a cheap pitcher of beer). However, spending an afternoon on Moscow Mountain searching for dead alder and then cutting the chips is a good escape and adds a self reliant twist to the operation. After the neighbors have been alienated, by the madly hacking at the alder log for several hours with your favorite dull hatchet, it's time to make the brine.

Experiment with varying mixtures of Tapatio (hot sauce), soy and Worcestershire. Let it soak over the weekend and then enjoy the results (even if the neighbors think it's loony).

Finally, for the turkey hunter: If there isn't much time to scout, but you'd like a good chance to bag a tom, consider applying for a controlled hunt this year. In this region (Unit 1, 901) near Bonners Ferry offers the best chance of hunting undisturbed gobblers and avoiding the general madness. The application deadline is Feb. 13.

Editor's note: This is the first in a weekly series on outdoor recreation. The column will appear every Friday.

at the invitational last year with a time of 7.15, but is not competing in the 1993 indoor season due to knee surgery last spring.

"We are bringing Jackie back slowly after her knee surgery," Lorek said. "She will be competing in her three best events (the 100-meter dash, long jump and triple jump) during the outdoor season."

The favorite of the extra events will be the football 40-yard dash. "We have football players from Idaho, WSU, CWU and EWU running," Lorek said. "We'll find out who the fastest football player in the Northwest is."

Events start at 6:20 tonight in the Kibbie Dome. Idaho students are admitted free with their student ID cards while general admission is $5.

Idaho is also hosting an Idaho all-comers meet tomorrow. Field events start at 8 a.m. and running events begin at 10 a.m.

"Competition Saturday will be equally as good as Friday," Lorek said.

Sue Kincaid, owner of Flowers Etc., said roses are such a popular flower to send on Valentine's Day because "they are a flower that symbolizes love." The meaning of the red rose, in fact, is love. Each different colored rose has a different meaning.

Many of the restaurants in the area are also offering special meal deals for couples on Valentine's Day.

■ Biscuitroot Park offers either a shrimp scampi or a prime rib dinner plus champagne or cider for $38.95 per couple. This deal is being served Saturday, Feb. 13 and Sunday, Feb. 14. Biscuitroot is taking reservations for dinner.

■ Gambino's is only offering their regular menu, and they are not taking reservations. However, there will be a surprise for those who dine at Gambino's on the evening of St. Valentine's Day.

■ The Beanery is offering either seafood crepes or lemon parmesean chicken dinners plus champagne and a rose for $29 per couple. The Beanery is also taking reservations for the evening.

■ Swilly's, which is not usually open on Sunday, will be open for Valentine's Day between 5 and 10 p.m. In addition to their regular dinner menu, they are offering a choice of raspberry steak, grilled salmon or fettucini dinners, chocolate truffle cake with raspberry sauce and champagne for $25 to $36 per couple.
