Police pull out bikes for patrol

By GREG BURTON
Staff Writer

With the change in weather students can expect to see a change in the transportation mode of area police.

Campus Police Liaison Jake Kershnik said his department is preparing to unleash the Campus Bicycle Patrol sometime after spring break if the current weather pattern holds.

"We've done these patrols in the past, but we plan to be more extensive this year," said Kershnik.

The Moscow Police currently have two officers trained for bicycle patrol, while two other officers expected to finish their training next month. The department has also acquired two more mountain bikes, adding to the one they have, which they are painting and adapting to police specifications.

"The bike patrols will concentrate more on pedestrian and bicycle safety," said Kershnik. "Certainly the bikes make more areas accessible to the officers, and in turn the officers will be more accessible to the students."

Kershnik stressed the same

No life after college? Try graduate school

By DAVID JACKSON
Staff Writer

The sun is finally shining and another school year is winding down.

For most people, packing up the car and getting out of Moscow for a week is their only thought. Graduate school is probably not at the top of their list of things to mull over while working on a tan.

Fortunately, that's where Career Services comes in.

At a graduate school seminar last Wednesday, Career Services Director Dan Blanco said while graduate school is not a popular thought right now, students who are thinking about it should get their thoughts organized and take action. Especially students who don't like what they see in today's job market.

"For lots of people, graduate school looks good when the job market doesn't," he stated. "They think getting that next degree will make them more attractive to employers when things get better."

The first step for graduate school is applying. While some might choose to procrastinate, UI English Department Chair Gary Williams stressed it should be done in an organized fashion.

"You need to apply a year in advance, that is during the fall of the preceeding the fall you want to attend," he said. "You should write in early and get cataloges and all the information you can."

While applying, Blanco said students should get all the information they can about their area of study and what kind of degree that area might require.

Buckley to speak at university

By JEFF KAPOSTASY
Staff Writer

Clinton, Cuomo and Young Democrats, get out of the way. William F. Buckley Jr. is coming to town.

The conservative columnist, publisher and activist will be giving a lecture at the University of Idaho April 3. The lecture will be open to the public.

Although Rush Limbaugh may outshine him in popularity, Buckley definitely gets the nod for more respect. Often praised by liberals and conservatives alike, the outspoken Buckley has been influential on modern American political ideology.

Buckley is founder and editor of the National Review, a popular conservative magazine. He is also a widely syndicated columnist, author of several books, and host of the PBS political program Firing Line.

Despite being labeled a conservative, Buckley has argued for ideas that make the Reagan/Bush crowds cringe.

In the past, he has spoken in support of complete legalization of drugs, gay rights and abortion rights.

Daniel Whiting, an ASUI Senator and member of the UI Young Republicans, was a key person involved with arranging Buckley's UI debut. Whiting said Buckley has a definite Libertarian leaning.

"(Buckley) doesn't focus on moral values in government, like many conservatives do," Whiting said. "He believes in as little government interference as possible."

Buckley's appearance is being partially funded by UI, WSU and Gonzaga University. Whiting and the Young Republicans asked ASUI Productions to help fund the appearance, which they agreed to. When bids went out, Buckley chose UI.

Also funding Buckley's appearance is the Young American's Foundation. The Foundation, which was also started by Buckley, is a nationwide organization which believes there is a conspiracy to prevent conservative lecturers from coming to colleges. The Foundation works to counter this alleged conspiracy by helping fund conservative speakers.

The lecture will begin at 4 p.m. in the SUB Ballroom. There will be no charge, but people are advised to arrive early to get a seat.

Society helps find homeless and orphaned animals a home

By SHARI IRETON
News Editor

While a cute puppy or an adorable kitten may be something a student looks for, they should remember what they will do with the animal when graduation time comes.

Problems with stray cats and dogs in the Palouse area led to the formation of the Companion Animal Aid and Placement Society in January. "The goal of the society is to prevent cruelty against pets, and focus on the adoption and fostering of homeless pets," said CAAPS President Yvonne Herman.

Herman said every year, over 10 million cats and 9.5 million dogs are put to sleep in pounds around the country. "The society works at the promoting of spay/neutering programs as a means of controlling the enormous over population of pets, rather than killing them," she said.

Herman said the society also takes in pets that have been abandoned or do not have a home. The pets are given to foster owners who will care for them until another owner adopts them.

When a prospective owner is looking for a pet, however, they are first referred to the Pullman pound "because the animals have a shorter stay there," said

Herman. Shorter stays mean quicker deaths because the animals aren't being adopted, something CAAPS is trying to avoid.

Owners will also be referred to the Moscow Humane Society which has their own program for finding pets a home.

"Sometimes, students who graduate will call us ahead of time and tell us they need to find a home for their pet in a few months," Herman said. She hopes many Washington State University and University of Idaho students will take advantage of this service when school is over.

Rebecca Redinger, secretary of CAAPS, is fostering a cat, Alli, in her home for adoption. "I've been doing it for the past year and half by myself." Her involvement in saving stray and abandoned cats and the fact she had been trying to rescue animals from "death row" in the Pullman pound led to her current work for CAAPS.

While she may feel some personal reward, saving the cats from their certain death at the pound means more to her.

"It amazes me just how much euthanasia goes on over there," said Redinger, "It is like they are blind to it."

Keeping the animals in her home and getting attached to them has its advantages, she said. "It makes you drive to find better homes...and these animals get the best homes." Redinger said she tells owners who adopt a foster cat that they can bring them back anytime. She also calls the new owner to double check everything has worked.

Redinger has raised 13 orphaned kittens and said the society and hasn't had one unsuccessful adoption, she added.

"It a lot of work, but it's well worth it to beat the Pullman pound," she said and added raising an orphaned kitten is more difficult than taking care of her infant child.

Right now, CAAPS has nine cats and nine dogs that need a home on the Palouse. Before the pets can be adopted, Herman goes through a personal questionnaire with the prospective owner.

The type of environment in which the pet will live and if they have small children are taken into consideration before a pet will be given up.

If interested in adopting a foster animal or starting to find a home for Fido before summer, call Redinger at 882-1609.

"You need to pursue a degree which will get you where you want to be," he said. "In physics for example, you don't become a research physicist with a bachelor's degree. You need to find out what is needed." Which, according to Blanco, often includes looking at more than just the minimum requirements.

"You'll also see jobs where a B.S. is the minimum, but realistically you need a master's because of the competitiveness," he said.

Another helpful hint to follow when trying to gain acceptance into a graduate program is to make a contact with someone on the inside of that program, and to ask them all of the questions.

"Talking to someone about their program is crucial," said Williams. "Every discipline has some unwritten codes you need to find out about."

Finally, students should try and get in to the best graduate program they can. Grades and resumes do matter when applying to graduate schools, and it's important to know what certain schools are looking for before applying.

"A lot of grad schools, especially law schools and medical schools, have information about the people they have let in during the past few years," Blanco said. "From that information, you can get a better feel about how realistic your chances are for acceptance."

"One of the reasons we don't have a Ph.D. program for English here is because you just would not be competitive with that degree from the University of Idaho," said Williams. "You need to enter a good program, because it does matter to employers."

Blanco stressed the Career Services at UI is for undergraduates to take advantage of. Their resources can make the paper trail of finding out information about graduate schools easier to follow. And when dealing with graduate schools, it's best to be on guard.

"It is a game in some ways," warned Williams.

rules that apply to cars also apply to bicycles, and even though bicyclists can ride on the sidewalk they must yield the right of way to pedestrians.

"Bikes must not only obey the speed limit, but they must also obey the driving conditions, and adapt their speed accordingly," said Kershnik. "The most frequent complaint we hear about bike riders around campus is that they scared the beejesus out of someone while speeding past them."

This April, Kershnik said students can expect to see Community Affairs Officer Jim Kouril as well as the other three trained officers riding around campus.

Two students who won't be riding their bikes anytime soon had their bikes stolen from Gault Hall this week.

Freshman Matthew Sowder reported his purple Rock-Hopper Sport mountain bike stolen on March 6, when thieves took it from the storage rack in the basement of Gault.

Although Sowder said his bike, valued at $450, was locked with a Kryptonite Lock, it was disassembled leaving only the rear wheel and lock still in place.

Gault resident Jeremy Andrews, also a freshman, had his mountain bike stolen March 7. No other details of the theft were available.

From the courts, UI student

Matthew Bass has plead guilty to malicious injury to property stemming from a night of vandalism on campus over Christmas break.

Bass received five years probation from Judge John Bengston, along with 15 days in jail, which he has served. He has also agreed to pay $3,867 restitution to the university for the destruction he inflicted.

The campus was quite abused, as windows were broken at the University Classroom Center, the KUID Building, the Student Health Center, and the Administration Building.

Various vehicles were damaged, and band-aids and gauze were taken from the student clinic, reportedly to cover wounds sustained from the broken glass. Witnesses also reported seeing someone trying to pull the flagpole down.

In light of Bass' clean record, Bengston ruled to withhold his conviction, which allows the felony arrest to be taken off of Bass' record if he complies with the terms and conditions of his probation.

Ag program helps college

By GREG BURTON
Staff Writer

What began as Steep One under former President Carter has grown and developed into an extensive water quality, erosion and agriculture research program impacting both area farmers and universities.

Under Steep Two, University of Idaho Agricultural Engineer Charles Peterson has developed a spatially variable management program with respect to fertilization.

"What our program does is break down a field into manageable units which we then can measure for specific water and nutrient need," said Peterson, who started at Idaho in 1973, left to do doctoral work at Washington State University, and then came back to Idaho in 1986.

Peterson said he collects data on slope, aspect and available nitrogen from individual land cell units 40 meters across by 40 meters long.

From there Peterson enters the unit factors into a computer which stores the information, and transfers the information to an onboard computer driven fertilizer by way of a United States Defense Department Satellite which directs specifically controlled fertilizer application for each land unit.

"What we can do is reduce over or under fertilization, and over or under watering," said Peterson. "In effect maximize yields and minimize erosion, all at the same time."

The Steep program is federally funded by the U.S. Department of Agriculture in association with the UI, WSU and Oregon State University, who all continue agricultural research.

Peterson said the only drawback of the program is the labor intensity of the original data collection. "But once you've recorded an entire field, you have that information forever."

And forever is today on the Mark Hall farm near Steptoe, Wa. On an 86 acre portion of Hall's farm Peterson has concluded spatial analysis and triangulation, and now he is waiting for this year's wheat harvest to see the results.

But Peterson is not worried. "We have already demonstrated that the technology was possible. What I am anticipating is the color variance of each cellular unit of wheat. That will be spectacular."

Steep Two continues to fund the project although the program will end in one more year, at which time President Clinton will have a say in further funding.

"Clinton or Carter do not really matter. We are a soft-money research program, and as such we will continue to be up to scrutiny all the time, always proving our worth. That's the challenge," said Peterson.

Will the real Jesus please report to the courtesy phone

If David Koresh wants to be Jesus, why don't the feds let him? And if his Branch Davidian followers want to believe they are the loyal disciples of the big J.C., what right does the government have to tell them differently?

There is no doubt Koresh is a crackpot. And based on his conduct during past run-ins with the authorities, one can argue that he is a very dangerous crackpot indeed.

But was there justification for special agents from the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms to gird their loins and storm Koresh's Mount Carmel compound, setting off a mini apocalypse, Texas-style?

The strategy of the agents was questionable. If Koresh and his devotees were as well armed as the feds estimated, was a frontal assault the best course of action? Obviously someone thought so, but that was nearly two weeks and 14 deaths ago.

The situation has begun to escalate like a taunting war between school yard enemies. To flex its muscles, the FBI brought in a few Bradley armored personnel carriers.

Taking exception to the build up of military armor on his front lawn, Koresh told the FBI he had explosives that could blow the Bradleys "40 or 50 feet into the air." The FBI countered by bringing in a few Abrams battle tanks "strictly for defense."

Koresh has yet to say how high his explosives can blow the tanks. Of course, if he really was the righteous man from Galilee he claims to be, he wouldn't need explosives. He could move the Bradleys with faith alone.

Maybe someone ought to ask him about this.

The mistakes of the feds would be easier to stomach if it didn't seem so familiar. For residents of North Idaho, this is like a rerun of the Weaver stand off last August, albeit with a better script and a larger supporting cast.

Like the incident at Ruby Ridge, the standoff in Waco serves only to fan the flames of two-bit fanatics and ultra-religious wackos who go to sleep at night with visions of the rapture dancing in their heads. Many undoubtedly think the end of the world is rapidly approaching, and will start quoting Scripture to justify their beliefs.

For all we know, they may be right.

Just like the Weaver stand off, many people have been left wondering if the confrontation was necessary. The Branch Davidians have obviously assembled an illegal arsenal that is the envy of every third world dictator. Old Saddam himself must be trying to telephone Koresh to get a few pointers.

But with terrorist organizations planting bombs in the World Trade Center and the international drug cartel still thriving, fringe groups like the Branch Davidians should be low on the priority list.

And that's the Gospel truth.

—Pete Gomben

Slowing down to the good life

"There is an appointed time for everything. And there is a time for every event under heaven-- A time to give birth, and a time to die...a time to kill, and a time to heal...a time to weep, and a time to laugh..." (Ecclesiastes 3:1-4)

I'm not a preacher, but I have a few thoughts on the meaning of life. They aren't as poetic or thought-provoking as those penned 2,700 years ago by King Solomon of the Jews. His words live on through millennia while mine will not. Yet, in dedication to the spirit of his words I write.

I travelled to Moscow pursuing a better life. I chased after it in the world of academia. I gained success and even enjoyed the work, but it provided only shadow answers. The intellectual challenge was healthy, but what difference was I making in the world around me?

Tears won't wash away mistake

See Butch drink and drive. See Butch land in jail. See him blubber.

And get forgiven by the Idaho legislature.

Butch Otter, Idaho's lieutenant governor, has been embroiled in scandal stemming from an Aug. 1 arrest for drinking and driving. After he entered a plea of not guilty, his trial proved that prominence and power doesn't amount to much in a courtroom as he was found guilty of driving under the influence on Wednesday.

In sentencing on April 19, Ada County Magistrate Kay Hamilton could hit Otter with a six-month jail sentence, $1,000 fine or 180-day suspension of driving privileges.

More importantly, Otter's political career could be in jeopardy if public outcry is high enough. While he may be able to finish his duties as lieutenant governor, his probable gubernatorial bid in 1994 may be in doubt. Many felt that the race was Otter's to lose.

So it was understandable that

Doug Taylor

Otter was somewhat downcast when he resumed his position on the state Senate floor, barely an hour after the verdict was announced. In fact, he was downright tearful when standing before his legislative peers.

"I was found guilty. I am guilty of that charge," Otter said in a Wednesday Spokesman Review article.

The heartwarming speech was certainly a different tune than what was heard in the courtroom.

In his courtroom pleadings, Otter announced that his flunked Breathalyzer test resulted from whiskey-soaked chewing tobacco in his mouth. He also stated that his car was observed swerving because his cowboy hat had fallen from his head. Walking a straight line proved difficult because of thorns and gravel underfoot.

It's a wonder that jurors kept a straight face.

Despite such feeble excuses, his tears of sorrow before the Senate was enough to win back a few allies. His speech drew a rousing standing ovation from all Senate members and afterwards, nearly two dozen of his colleagues rushed forward to hug him or shake his hand.

When analyzing the situation, Idaho Republican Party Chairman Phil Batt admitted that Otter's offense was a serious mistake. Nonetheless, he said the public would probably forgive him due to his congenial manner outside of the legislature and his tough guy image within it.

Batt should have left it at that.

"If he works at it diligently, he can probably overcome it," Batt continued. "Butch has a very warm personality, and people

Bikers who lose their licenses?

Editor;
Did you know that your drivers license can be suspended for incorrectly riding your bike? As a normal student with a not somewhat normal driving record I find myself now riding my bike everywhere my little heart desires. This last spring, supposedly when the mountain bike police were giving out "warnings," a friend of mine and myself found each other being haled over "who, who, pull over" I think that's what he said. Anyway, the next thing we knew they called in our drivers licenses, then sighted us for traveling up a one way street on campus. This infraction cost $26. Some two months later I received a notice from the Department of Motor Vehicles that my license was being suspended, since this infraction put me over the three point limit allotted every year. Does this mean a sixteen year old can be turned down due to too many points on his non-existent record, for such a bicycle violation?

RU486 is safer

Editor;
Mr. Corgatelli please take off those rose-colored glasses, leave your holier-than-thou attitude at home, and note that ignorance is bliss. Say no to RU486 - I think not.
You suggested that the attacks on women at health clinics are but a few. Where have you been? The vast majority of health clinics in this country are stalked by anti-abortionists, who daily harangue each patient arriving for care. I've had the displeasure of going to a clinic for an annual physical. I arrived to the slurs and comments of people who presumed that I was there for an abortion.
Thank you for telling me that I should agonize over the decision to have an abortion. Are you the self-appointed authority over what I and other women should do with our bodies and how our conscious should be affected? I do not share your religious beliefs. I do not care for you to impose your moral judgment on me. The last time I looked, abortion on demand was legal in this country. Yes, I support abortion for economic reasons, mental and physical health concerns and life-style choices.
Now for your ignorance. RU486 is not an over-the-counter drug that women take in the privacy of their own homes. RU486 is a prescription drug. In countries where it is in use, it is administered in a physician's office under the supervision of a physician. It produces the same effects as a miscarriage, which should be attended to by a physician. In addition, I would like to note that you haven't bothered to learn much about the vast majority of abortion procedures. Women do not "go under the knife" during the first trimester of a pregnancy to end that pregnancy.
Existing evidence indicates that RU486 will make a legal medical procedure safer than our current procedures for women who chose to have an abortion.

Homosexuals can be set free once evil spirit is cast out

Editor;
I remain astounded! I quickly turn to the opinion page of every new issue of the Argonaut, eagerly looking for an article that will tell Palouse readers why homosexuals are the way they are. In the March 2 issue, Jeff writes that "many scientists agree homosexuality is not a choice, but the hand you are dealt." Probably most of these same scientists also agree with Charles Darwin. It must be exceedingly difficult for them to find that Noah's Ark still sits atop Mount Ararat, just where the Bible said it landed! Scientists have always been the last people to believe anything spiritual, and homosexuality is a spiritual problem.
Jeff, you want us to look at this "philosophically." Let me ask you a few questions. Can anyone actually be a "homosexual" before they participate in a homosexual act? Does the desire make someone a homosexual? I may have a great desire to ski, but that desire doesn't make me a skier. I could not be called a skier until I spend time skiing. Neither is a person a homosexual until they engage in homosexual acts. Even if a desire was enough to cause someone to be called a homosexual, babies and young children have no sexual desires of any kind, so homosexuality is caused long after a baby is born.
Isn't a "choice" made when someone engages in a homosexual act? They have a choice not to do what they may have a desire to do. I made a choice "not to" engage in premarital sex many times before I was married, although I certainly had the desire. I say all homosexuals have a choice.
Marcus Valentine's article in the Feb. 26 issue makes an interesting parallel between alcoholism and homosexuality, but he still doesn't get the point: what makes a homosexual the way he or she is? Actually, he is very close to the truth, because alcoholism is also a spiritual problem. What kind of a spiritual problem? A problem with the spirit!
There is a legal precedent set in a court in Chicago, of evil spirits indwelling a human being, and causing him to act in a certain way - in this case, committing murder. A minister by the name of Lester Sumrall from Indianapolis was subpoenaed to testify in this court case about "demons" indwelling humans, because he had much experience in dealing with this problem. There are many people that at one time were homosexuals, but were set free when an evil spirit was cast out of them; one moment a homosexual, and the next moment normal. Yes, I am saying that homosexuality is not normal. The Bible tells of many incidents of evil spirits indwelling people, and of Jesus casting them out!
Homosexuals are not born that way! People are turned into homosexuals after they are born. Usually homosexuals are "created" when a child or a young person is "attacked by" or "coerced into" sex with a homosexual, or into lesser acts, such as fondling. How does this turn a child or a young person into a homosexual? When a homosexual has sex or commits sexual acts with someone who is not a homosexual, an evil spirit causes the abnormal desires, and the person follows through with actions, creating another homosexual.
Have you ever wondered why children of alcoholics frequently turn into alcoholics themselves, and why abused children frequently become abusers themselves? When a human being is a victim of something God calls sin, such as homosexuality, an evil spirit enters the victim to continue the "curse" into the next generation. This could and would be common knowledge if "scientists" would study the "Manufacturer's Handbook," (the Bible) instead of some text book written by another scientist who is also clueless of spiritual things.
Historically in our country, we have not given evil spirits any "rights" to manifest themselves through people, and we should not start now. Homosexuals do not have to remain the way they are. They can be free, if they want to be. Evil spirits can be cast out. I know because I have cast them out. We don't need to grant any special rights to homosexuals if they happen to like themselves the way they are and desire to remain homosexuals.

Fee increase is a 'bait and switch'

Editor;
I would like to express my opinion about the proposed tuition fee increases. I am not opposed to fee increases for new students, but I AM OPPOSED TO THE PROPOSED LARGE FEE INCREASES FOR CURRENTLY ENROLLED NON-RESIDENT AND RESIDENT STUDENTS.
Quality of education and cost are two important factors in determining where to pursue a higher education degree. Decisions to attend a school are based on weighing these factors at the time of enrollment. When I enrolled at the University of Idaho I felt that the tuition was reasonable for the quality of education. Other schools might have had a higher quality of education, but tuition was also higher. I made what I considered to be an informed decision to attend the UI and have been satisfied with that decision.
I feel that imposing large fee increases on currently enrolled students is a case of "bait and switch!" I understand the need to cover increased costs and to improve the quality of education. I am not opposed to these efforts, but I do not think that improvements due to revenues raised from these large fee increases will significantly benefit currently enrolled students.
I am willing to pay reasonable fee increases, but strongly urge a grandfather clause for the LARGE jump in fees being proposed. New students can weigh the higher costs with the quality of education and decide what they want to do... those of us currently enrolled have already made that decision based on existing standards.

Take the test: Are you a homophobe?

Editor;

Are you a homophobe? Do you use the Bible to justify your hatred of gays and lesbians? But do you obey all the commandments of God and Jesus yourself? Here are some divine laws you probably transgress frequently:

- You must do no work on the seventh day, the Sabbath, from sundown Friday to sundown Saturday. (Exodus 20:8-11)
- You must not eat pork, clams, oysters, shrimps, lobster, or rare steaks. (Leviticus 11:7,12; 19:26)
- You must not cut the hair on the sides of your head, or trim the edges of your beard. (Leviticus 19:27)
- You must not charge interest on loans to your countrymen. (Deuteronomy 23:20)
- You must not pray in public. (Matthew 6:5-6)
- You must give to everyone who begs from you; and when someone takes your things, don't ask for them back. (Luke 6:30)

Now, if you still think you're holier than gays and lesbians, here's what Jesus says about you: "Don't pass judgment, so you won't be judged. Don't forget the judgment you hand out will be the judgment you get back. And the standard you use will be the standard used on you. Why do you notice the speck in your neighbor's eye, but overlook the timber in your own? How can you say to your neighbor, 'Let me get the speck out of your eye,' when there is that timber in your own? You phony, first take the timber out of your own eye and then you'll see well enough to remove the speck from your neighbor's eye." (Matthew 7:1-5 Scholars Version) —Ralph Nielsen

'Timbear' teaches tots the facts of forestry

Editor;

Your article in the March 2 Argonaut regarding the "Timbear" coloring book being distributed in Coeur d'Alene schools was not only factually incorrect but was also grossly offensive.

Your article accused "Timbear" of being pro-timber. The book merely explains how the wood that paper (the very same substance you wasted with your article) and other products are made of is removed from the forest. It shows the complete cycle from harvesting to replanting to so-called second-generation forests. The book also encourages people to be "responsible environmentalists," as well as to "say no to drugs" and "always do your best in everything you do." This doesn't sound like a fascist propaganda to me.

Your statement that sometimes clearcuts don't grow back is only partially correct. Yes, sometimes trees can not be reestablished in a clearcut, but it does grow into grass and other vegetation that is extremely beneficial to wildlife. A fact that hysterical environmentalists still seem to be missing, however, is that clearcuts are being phased out as a popular forest management tool.

It would have been nice if you'd have offered some clarification on this "virus of shortsightedness" that you claim plagues pro-"Timbear" parents. Why don't you take a look around you and count all the things that have wood in them. People are always going to need these things, and trees have to come from somewhere. Perhaps you should use your obviously more superior foresight to look into your own future, like when you try to buy your first home but find out you can't afford it because the lumber it took to make it cost about 10 times as much as it does now. Or how about pursuing a career in journalism when paper costs a fortune, or is simply unavailable?

As far as your statement about keeping propaganda and politics out of the schools, puhleeze!! When the big debate over the 1 Percent Initiative was going on grade schoolers were going home and begging their parents to vote against it because their teachers were telling them that they would never get new playground equipment if it passed. Home economics students in Potlatch even had to take a class period to fold flyers that were going to be mailed to everyone in the district. Try to tell me that these aren't examples of using children for political gain.

The coloring book is full of FACTS about the forest. It is neither a philosophical statement, nor a theory (like evolution and global warming). It attempts to show the TRUTH about timber harvesting and loggers, instead of jumping on the politically correct bandwagon and showing children the proper way to chain themselves to a Forest Service gate.

tend to like him."

Great, so everybody loves Butch, but why should the public forgive him?

The point that Otter and Batt seem to be missing is that every member of the public is accountable when getting behind the wheel of a car. The law fairly claims that if you've had too much to drink, you will pay the price if caught.

From what I have gathered, this law includes all government officials whether they are swell people or not.

Especially shameful is that Otter helps codify Idaho drinking and driving laws as a member of Idaho's Congress.

Former state Representative

Dean Sorenson, who plans to oppose Otter in the '94 gubernatorial race, said he wouldn't dredge up the DUI conviction next year.

This is certainly admirable of Sorenson, but maybe a lengthy debate on double standards might be suitable.

UI benefits from exchange

Editor;

Thanks to reporter David Jackson and the Argonaut for the story on the students from Nagasaki Junior College (NJC) who are visiting the University of Idaho for three weeks. I appreciated Jackson's enthusiasm and interest in this special program.

I believe one or two points in the story deserve clarification. As Jackson wrote, the program originated as a sister college relationship between NJC and North Idaho College. While it's true that UI as a four-year institution may have some things to offer that are not available at junior colleges, the language and culture program is not necessarily one of those, and the International Programs Office in no way wants to imply that our intention is to take over NIC's program with NJC. UI has a Memorandum of Understanding with NJC that is primarily a document of mutual friendship and we hope that some of their students may choose to apply to the UI after visiting here. However, the relationship we develop through PACE International, the agency that matches U.S. and Japanese educational institutions and with whom we are contracting, will be the key in helping UI develop a sister-university relationship of its own in Japan.

Also, we sincerely hope that the program we developed for the NJC students will benefit them - we worked very hard to assure that it does. But each time international participants come to the UI campus, it becomes a very important learning experience for all of US and North Americans. That is really the whole point of international exchanges, isn't it — TO LEARN FROM EACH OTHER!?

Perhaps my description of the Japanese junior college system, which makes it difficult to move from a junior college to a four-year degree granting institution in Japan, was confusing. However, I believe I said that by developing inter-institutional agreements, Japanese junior college students can continue their educations at U.S. colleges or universities.

Thanks for the opportunity to clarify these points. We invite UI students to visit the International Programs Office to find out what kind of international exchange opportunities may be here for you!

Big Sky Tourney Continues

Vandals to tip-off against lowest remaining seed tonight

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

Barring a Montana State upset over Weber State in last night's first round action, the Idaho Vandals woke up this morning with either Idaho State University or University of Montana advancing to the second round to face them.

Idaho State, the No. 5 seed, lost both of its regular season games to the Vandals. Idaho defeated the Bengals 97-76 in Moscow on Feb. 5 and the Vandals slipped by ISU 52-43 last week on the road. The win in Pocatello gave Idaho the regular season championship and right to host the tournament.

"They can beat anybody," Idaho guard Marvin Ricks said. "They have a lot of talent. They have an experienced point guard and if you have that you can beat anyone."

At the point is senior Erin Cowan. The 6-foot senior is second on the team in scoring with 15.4 points a game and dishes out 5.4 assists a game. The Portland native had 22 points and six rebounds in the loss to Idaho. Despite his efforts, the Bengals still shot just 25 percent from the floor.

"(Corey) Bruce didn't shoot the ball very well (against Idaho) but they'll be ready to play," Idaho head coach Larry Eustachy said. "We did a good job of guarding everybody on the floor. We missed some easy shots early but double teaming (Jim) Potter helped us."

Potter, a talented 6-foot-9 sophomore in the post, averaged a team high 18.8 points a game. But the Vandals, as they had done to Boise State's Tanoka Beard the previous night, dropped two or three guys down on Potter to force the Bengals into perimeter shooting.

"Going into that game we worried about him," Ricks said. "We just concentrated on covering down on him and let the ball get shot from the outside."

Towards the end of the game Idaho forward Chauncey McBride drained some clutch free throws to help the Vandals beat ISU for the 12th straight time.

"He's (McBride) missed some free throws earlier this year so he wanted to make up for that," Eustachy said. "Their (ISU's) coaches were saying 'foul 44, foul 44' so he was excited to go to the line. He (even) made a couple of them with a dislocated finger."

The Grizzlies fared a little better than the Bengals as they split with the Vandals this year. Idaho beat UM 60-50 in the Dome before falling to the Griz 68-65 in Missoula.

"They're going to zone us and we have to be ready for it," Eustachy said of UM. "The difference in the game in Montana was that they got the ball inside and we didn't."

The Grizzlies are led by only one player in double figures and that is sophomore guard Jeremy Lake. The 6-foot-3 Lake drops in 10.6 points a game and hit numerous 3-pointers in the Grizzlies win over Idaho.

"Lake really hurt us but (Travis) DeCuire can shoot and (Gary) Kane is good," Eustachy said. "All five of the guys in the line-up can score which makes them a tough team to guard."

Idaho, which will be playing its first home game since falling to Weber State on March 1, is excited to get back on its home court after winning two on the road.

"The biggest thing is that we didn't play real well at home last time so we're excited to have a second chance," Eustachy said. "You don't get too many of those."

#4 Montana (8-6, 17-10) vs. #5 Idaho St. (5-9, 9-17) Game starts 9:05 p.m.	* Idaho will play the lowest surviving seed from Thursday's action at 9:05 p.m. Friday and BSU will play the highest remaining seed at 6:35 p.m.

Tickets still available

Plenty of tickets are still available for tonight's Big Sky Conference Coors Light two semi-final games and tomorrow night's championship game.

University of Idaho students can purchase a two-day pass, which includes all three games, for $12 at the Kibbie Dome ticket office. The phone number is 885-6466.

Also, single-game tickets went on sale yesterday afternoon and run $6 for students and $12 for adults.

The first semi-final game tonight will feature the No. 2 seed Boise State University Broncos and the highest remaining seed from last night's action and will begin at 6:35 p.m. The second game will feature the No. 1 Idaho Vandals facing the lowest remaining seed at 9:05 p.m.

The two winners will then collide tomorrow night at 9:07 p.m. with the game being broadcast live on ESPN and the winner receiving an automatic berth to the NCAA Tournament beginning next weekend. The winner will most likely be sent to either Salt Lake City, Utah or Tucson, Arizona for first round action.

Jim Durham and Los Angeles Laker legend Kareem Abdul-Jabbar will be doing the play by play for the ESPN broadcast.

All of Idaho's games can be heard on KRPL 1400 AM in the Moscow area with the voice of the Vandals Tom Morris at the mike.

It is the first time Idaho has hosted the tournament since 1982, where Idaho defeated the University of Nevada 85-80 and then fell to Oregon State University in the second round.

Idaho was the last Big Sky team to win a NCAA game as they defeated the University of Iowa 69-67 in overtime over Pullman in 1982.

Records fall during Lightfoot's days

■ Junior pursues all-time tops at Idaho

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

If Idaho Vandal forward Orlando Lightfoot doesn't come away with the conference title and free trip to the NCAA Tournament this weekend, it won't be from a lack of trying.

Lightfoot, a six-foot-seven native of Chattanooga, Tenn., has been the direct cause of numerous school records either being broken or closed in on this season.

Here is a list of a few of his accomplishments:

1. By draining 44 points against Boise State on Feb. 6 the junior set the Idaho single-game scoring record. He broke the previous record of 42 points set by Steve Weist nine years ago. He has eclipsed the 40 point mark on three occasions, twice this year.

2. He is now No. 4 on the Idaho all-time scoring list with 1,336 points in his two years as a Vandal. If he can score another 22 points before the season is over he'll move up to No. 3 and be just 213 points behind No. 2 Kenny Luckett (1985-88) and 227 within No. 1 Brian Kellerman (1980-83). If the junior does stay at Idaho for his senior year (the idea of the NBA draft has been floating around), the record should be broken by the beginning of conference play next season.

3. Lightfoot has nailed 94 three bangers during his stay in Moscow. With still a year left to play, he trails only teammate and record holder Marvin Ricks for the top spot. Ricks has 100 in his one-and-a-half years at Idaho.

4. He currently ranks No. 10 on Idaho's all-time rebounding list with 536 boards. He needs another 255 to beat that record which will mean averaging about 8.5 a game next year, roughly what he averages now.

5. Lightfoot currently has a career average of 21.9 points per game which puts him about two points a game ahead of the current leader Riley Smith (1989-90).

6. Lightfoot has been named Sports Illustrated Player of the Week twice since at Idaho and is the only Idaho player to ever receive the honor. He has also been named Big Sky Player of the Week seven times in two years.

7. The latest of honors, Lightfoot was an unanimous choice for the National Basketball Association of Basketball Coaches' first team in District 13.

But Lightfoot still has one record that he wants to accomplish not next year but this season.

"We want to bring this school a Big Sky Championship," Lightfoot said. "If we do that we'll have won one in football, volleyball and basketball all in the same year."

UI draws Bobcats in first round

By DOUG TAYLOR
Assistant Editor

Bozeman is probably not a place the University of Idaho women's basketball team thought they would be traveling to.

Mired in sixth place in the Big Sky Conference after a loss to Montana on Feb. 13, the Lady Vandals had to win their last five games in order to entertain thoughts of making the Big Sky Tournament.

They did just that. After two close home wins over Boise State and Idaho State, the Lady Vandals, 7-7 in conference and 12-14 in all games, emerged as the fourth-seeded team in the tournament. First-round action starts tonight as Idaho and top-seeded Montana State meet at 6 p.m. with second-seeded Montana and third-seeded BSU following at 7:30 p.m. The two winners meet at 7:30 p.m. Saturday to decide the Big Sky championship and the automatic bid to the NCAA Women's Basketball Tournament.

As elated as the Vandals were after the victory over ISU on Saturday, that's probably how disheartened the Bengals were. While the Lady Vandals were in the midst of their five-game winning streak, the Bengals were in the process of losing five straight. So it's on to Bozeman to meet the top-seeded Bobcats, who won the right to host the tournament by virtue of a March 5 53-48 victory over Montana and a subsequent coin flip to decide the conference winner.

Montana St. coach Judy Spoelstra said that winning the coin flip was a relief.

"If we had lost that coin flip and been seeded second, I would have hated to go out and tell my team 'sorry, we have to go to Missoula,'" Spoelstra said. "I think we worked too hard this year not to eventually host this tournament."

The coin flip also sat well with Idaho coach Laurie Turner.

"I heard about it last night, and I think Montana St. is a good draw for us in the tournament," said Turner after beating Idaho St. Saturday night.

Now that the compliments have been exchanged, Idaho will bear down to face an MSU squad that registered two double-digit victories over Idaho this year. The most recent Lady Vandals' setback to the Bobcats occurred Feb. 12 in Memorial Gym as MSU handed Idaho a 67-56 loss.

Spoelstra said her team's defensive outlook is even better than it appeared last time in Moscow.

"We have improved our defense tremendously since our Idaho-Eastern Washington road trip," Spoelstra said. "We were really flat on that trip, and now we are playing like more of a unit."

The most recent Big Sky statistics bear her out. Montana is ranked third in conference field goal defense as opponents are shooting just 39 percent. The Bobcats also rank high in scoring defense, giving up just under 60 points a game.

One large problem is presented in the form of MSU post Cass Bauer, who is leading the conference in scoring with 18.3 points a game and is third in rebounding with over eight a game.

Bauer is considered a favorite for Big Sky player of the year and brings her formidable inside game against the Lady Vandals' front line of Karen Poncina, Brenda Kuehlthau and Kortnie Edwards.

Spoelstra said her team's pattern has been to get the ball inside to Bauer and allow her to hit short shots on a variety of moves. Staying consistently in the Big Sky's scoring limelight, though, has brought Bauer more defensive attention from opponents. This has brought about a needed change in MSU's gameplan.

"We still try to get the ball to Cass whenever we can, but what happens now is that a guard will drop down on her and help the center deny her access to the ball," Bauer said. "Then when

Vandals excell at meet

By MISSY WILSON
Staff Writer

Two Idaho track and field athletes captured first place in Flagstaff last weekend, despite the 7,000 foot altitude factor.

Before the Big Sky Conference Indoor Track and Field Championships, Idaho women's coach Scott Lorek said the altitude would be hardest on the distance runners and jumpers, but Ty Koellmann and Tanya Tesar used the altitude to their advantage during the meet.

Koellmann, who was considered himself the 'sleeping-dog' in the 800-meter race, said he knew who his toughest competition would be.

"I knew it would be between Sean Boyd from Eastern Washington, Glenn Russell from Idaho State and I," Koellmann said.

The three athletes finished in the top three places with less than 0.5 seconds separating first from third. Koellmann finished first with a time of 1:52.50, followed by Russell in second and Boyd in third.

Although the thin air gave the field events potential for better performances, Lorek's fear was that his jumpers wouldn't have enough time to feel comfortable with the altitude adjustments they would have to make.

Tesar, however, didn't seem to have any problems adjusting.

Tesar scored 12 of Idaho's 22.5 points, placing first in the triple jump and fifth in the long jump.

Both Northern Arizona University teams dominated the rest of the fields, with the men finishing first scoring 136 points, and the women doing the same scoring 133 points.

As a whole, Idaho didn't stand out in comparison to NAU's stellar performance. The Vandal men accumulated 44 points for a sixth place finish and the women finished seventh.

she turns to score, she has another person in her face. Now we have Cass scoring 15 points and other teammates are hitting for 12 or 11 points to help her out."

Idaho will probably continue the trend of heavy defensive pressure on Bauer. In the Big Sky, the Lady Vandals are currently ranked third in scoring defense and second in defensive field goal percentage.

More importantly has been the pressure Idaho puts on an opponents' top scorer. This was most evident in the weekend victories over BSU and ISU. The Broncos' uncannily accurate Lidiya Varbanova hit less than 50 percent of her shots after entering the game as the nation's leader in field goal percentage with 71.3 percent accuracy from the floor.

Idaho State's Jennifer Cannon had similar problems as she scored just 12 points while acquiring close-up views of Jennifer Clary's hands. Against Idaho in Pocatello, she had erupted for 24 points in ISU's 76-64 win.

According to Edwards, Idaho's improved defense has been a result of hard work and luck falling on their side for a change.

"We knew that we could play this way coming into the season," said Edwards after the ISU game. "That was why losing all those early games was so frustrating."

Turner agreed with her senior forward.

"We seem to be on a roll, and I think the whole team is starting to step up," Turner said.

Stepping up is something that Idaho has done in tournament time, winning six games in 11 attempts since the tournament's inception in 1983. The most recent tournament experience for UI occurred last year in Boise as the host Broncos defeated Idaho 69-60.

One shining moment occurred in 1985 with coach Pat Dobratz as the Lady Vandals capped a 28-2 season by sweeping the tournament which was held in the Kib-bie Dome. They then lost to USC in the first round of the NCAA tournament.

Following that successful campaign, Idaho finished in second place to Montana during the 1985-86 season. Although the Grizzlies knocked off Idaho 63-49, Dobratz's team was invited to the women's National Invitational Tournament where they beat Northwest Louisiana 100-91 in the final to cap a 26-5 season.

With Clary, Edwards and Kuehlthau all enjoying good weekends against the Bengals and the Broncos, Idaho may return to the post-season success it had in year's past.

Clary scored the game-winning layin against BSU on Friday and had four free throws to put the Bengals away on Saturday. Kuehlthau scored game-highs in points against both BSU and ISU while Edwards collected 10 rebounds to go with nine points in Saturday's game.

Kuehlthau is leading the team in steals, assists and is second on the team in scoring with a 14.2 average. Clary, meanwhile, is among the conference scoring leaders with a 16.2 average as well as 3-pointers with 47. Edwards is contributing nearly 11 points a game and is hauling down 6.6 rebounds a game.

Young students learn self-esteem at ECLC

By LANAE EMPEY
Staff Writer

A morning of classes was followed by an afternoon snack of celery with peanut butter filling, raisins and a cup of milk. The entertainment included the dinosaur song, performed by students.

Following snack, the three to four-year-old students cheered at a promised trip outside the University of Idaho's Early Childhood Learning Center (ECLC.)

One hundred students from three weeks to 12 years old attend ECLC. The child care facility currently has four sites, but will combine into one May 1.

"This has been a dream for a long time," Mary Spilva, acting director of ECLC said. "The present locations are poor, small and old. They don't meet good standards of child care."

The new location, Sweet Avenue in the same area as new married housing, is being designed with children in mind, Spilva said. "It will be developmentally suited for them with structures suited for their age," Spilva said. Each classroom will have a separate play area, windows and bathrooms in the room.

Teacher Pat Bennett and Beth Price agree. "You will be able to do things for more than one group," Price, who has been teaching for two years, said. "It will help to keep track of different teachers and sponsor the comradery we really need."

The children will also be able to see other age groups. "Intermingling makes them feel good about what they're going to become and where they have been," Price said. "They see there is more out there than their classroom."

Currently, 30 paid staff and 30 volunteer students work at the ECLC, according to Spilva. All teachers are licensed. Others come and work as education labs or just to see the children, Bennet said. "Many are not even education majors. It really adds a lot of depth to the program."

The need for help is apparent when the day's itinerary is laid out. The center opens before 7:30 a.m. classes and doesn't close until after the 5 p.m. classes. The majority are students' children.

Breakfast, lunch and a snack are served. Along with meeting educational needs, the center meets functional needs.

"We wash hands, comb hair and brush teeth," Price said. "We are with the children more than the parents. We are the ones that help the children grow up."

This growing up process is something both teachers take seriously. "We teach self awareness and we teach them to be independent, to be happy about who they are and to be excited about learning," Price said.

"There is a wide diversity of students and teachers here. Many of the children are children of foreign students," Bennett said.

Children and teachers come from Pakistan to China.

"The children are learning that they are all the same," Bennett said. "They aren't worried about where they are from. They sit side-by-side and play."

Much of the learning is geared toward self dependency. Children learn to put on coats and shoes as well as open doors and take care of themselves.

"It is exciting to hear the children say that their parents are amazed at something they did," Price said. "The have come so far and the parents didn't even know it."

Raving & Ruthless Reviews

Book: Facade

by Kristine Kathryn Rusch

BOOKS

By CHRIS MILLER
Lifestyles Editor

Facade, by Kristine Kathryn Rusch, is one of a new line of horror books especially chosen to surpass old-style terror and gore and enter a new realm of the human psyche.

Under the "Abyss" label, Dell Publishing has created a fresh line of psychological horror designed to explore the inner darkness that everybody carries within themselves. Abyss is not about haunted houses or evil aliens or ancient Indian burial grounds whose plots are known before the first chapter is read, but examines the terror within.

Master of Horror, Stephen King wrote a self-proclaimed unsolicited blurb in the initial pages of Facade praising the Abyss line. "In terms of quality, production, and plain old storytelling reliability (that's the bottom line, isn't it?), Dell's new line is amazingly satisfying."

Rusch is the editor of The Magazine of Fantasy and Science Fiction and has won several awards for her work in science fiction and fantasy. Her first novel, The White Mists of Power, falls into the genre of fantasy. Facade is her first horror novel.

Abyss imprint.

In Facade, the movie-star protagonist (Thomas) returns to the Oregon coast after he fell and broke his leg in an accident while shooting a television mystery series. He returned to his beach house where his daughter had been brutally murdered a year before. The plot hints at the outcome when Thomas recalls the police's accusations that he murdered his own daughter. When he took the lie-detector test, he called up "his acting shell, the one that protected him against stage fright, and answered each of the questions. Twice he had lied on purpose and neither time the machine caught it."

Tempting metalheads on break

Nick Brown Outdoor Commentary

As soon as I finish this week's column and round up a skein of cured steelhead eggs, I'm off to the Clearwater River. Spring break is time to tempt outside "B" run metalheads that begin to stack up in the holes near the Dworshack National Fish Hatchery.

With the Middle Fork of the Clearwater running the color of creamed coffee, no boat to fish from, and my disdain for "bobber jucking," it looks like I'll drift fish the Pole Yard hole this evening.

For those anglers whose image of the Idaho Steelheader is a solitary angler peacefully fishing a placid stretch of river shrouded in early morning mist, initial experiences with the Pole Yard can be shocking. In the past, I considered the Pole Yard a fishing battle ground whose only merit was realistic training for the "combat fishing" conditions of Alaska's congested Kenai River.

On most days, it is the antithesis of the Idaho Outdoor Experience. Despite his drawbacks, the "Yard" is a consistent producer of hefty steelhead and offers opportunities for both drifters and bobber fisherman. Tonight, I'll have to squeeze in somewhere and fish marginal water — hoping to catch a steelhead moving upstream. In the Pole Yard, people stand on rocks all night to reserve their casting position near the best holding water. Those who show up late don't get the best spots.

If I don't hook a tinhead in the Yard or tire of untangling lines, I'll move downstream to the Middle Fork of the Clearwater and float my eggs and corkies through the lower part of Pink House. If the drift fisherman can steer his slinky around a couple of unforgiving rocks, he'll find the bottom user friendly.

Pink House is rarely crowded from the bank and is one of the better holes to fish when the fish are moving upstream. Sometimes the boat anglers can be a nuisance though, as I am positive that every Montana angler floats Pink House on their first trip to the Clearwater.

If the Missoula crowd gets too hairy and the boat noise bums me out, McGill is the next stop, headed downriver. While I've beached some beautiful runs in upper McGill, the bottom is a drift fisherman's headache. To counter this, my vest is loaded with new drift rigs designed by Stone Lures in Pullman. If snagged, 6 lbs. of pressure is all that is needed to break free. This should save a lot of cursing and lost drift gear.

Losing drift gear can be a pain, even to the dedicated drift fisherman like myself.

The thrill of hooking a fish that bites softer than any other fish in the world is usually enough to keep me casting all day. Still, on some mornings I don't feel up to concentrating on the soft "strike" of steelhead gently mouthing yarn and eggs. This is bobber fishing time.

Fishing a jig below a bobber is a great way to catch steelhead and salmon. Of all the steelhead methods, it requires the least skill and keeps your lure in front of a fish the longest time, with the exception of pulling plugs. Good bobber fishermen know that there is more to just casting a bobber and mindlessly watching it float downstream. My trouble is trying to overcome my bad attitude toward bobber lobbing. I can't seem to break my "bobber jinx" and hook many fish on the accursed things. Still, I've had enough exciting experiences with a jig and bobber to continue trying to overcome my jinx.

If you're new to steelheading, the jig/bobber method is probably your best bet to bring home a keeper for the "barby." If you decide to try out bobber fishing over break, stop by the bobber haunts on the North Fork, McGill, or Saddlebags. Maybe you can give me some pointers and help me overcome my bad luck with bobbers. If you do, I'll teach the nuances of combat drift fishing in the infamous Pole Yard.

Outdoor events during spring

The ASUI Outdoor Program has several activities and outdoor presentations planned for spring '93.

■ Introduction to rock climbing classes will be held at the University of Idaho Adventure Education Facility Climbing Wall on March 23 and April 14, and 27. The cost is $5. Those interested can sign up in the ASUI Outdoor Office located in the basement of the Student Union Building.

■ A two series basic rock-climbing instructional class will be held in April. The first session is April 1, at 7:30 p.m. with a trip on April 4, or 5. The second rock-climbing class is on April 8, at 7:30 p.m. with a trip on April 10. Each trip will cost $10.

■ Two classes on the Introduction to Kayaking will be held at the Physical Education building swimming pool on March 24, and April 7. The cost is $6. Sign-up at the ASUI Outdoor Program office.

■ The UI Outdoor Rental Center has special spring break rates from March 13 through 21. Rent any equipment and get nine days for the price of five. The rental center has climbing gear, whitewater gear, tents, sleeping bags, skis and more. The rental center is open March 12 from 10 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. and will be closed from March 13 through 21, for spring break.

For additional information about outdoor events call the ASUI Outdoor Program Office at 885-6810, or drop in the office located in the basement of the SUB.

>FACADE from page 9

For a while, Thomas relishes the peace and quiet of the Oregon coast and begins working to uncover the mystery of his daughter's murder. He enlists the help of an attractive local newspaper editor.

Then dead birds, hundreds of dead birds, begin showing up on his porch, nailed to his door — sometimes with little notes supposedly written from his daughter. Another woman is murdered near the beach house during the recovery and Thomas sees a stranger in a long black cape running along the moonlit beach. A stranger like the character Thomas once played. Then an old man recalls several other deaths surrounding the stretch of beach Thomas lives on.

The plot then moves on, exemplifying the nature of the Abyss line, and builds as Thomas and the reporter work to discover the true nature to the deaths on the beach. The end of the book is a natural progression of the search, but comes almost abruptly and unexpectedly because it all just sort of falls upon Thomas—he doesn't actively bring the story to a close.

Despite the too-quick ending, the plot moves along quickly and leaves a balance of hints to persuade the reader to keep turning the well-packed 386 pages.

The paperback edition of Facade came out March 2 and retails for $4.99. It is currently available at Book People in Moscow and will be available at Waldenbooks in the Palouse Empire Mall in "about one week."

>CHILDREN from page 9

The center, which has a six month to year wait for admission, revolves around themes and play centers. This week was dinosaur week in Price's classroom and St. Patrick's day in Bennett's.

The walls of Price's room were plastered with posters of dinosaurs and charts. Construction paper shamrocks hung from the ceiling of Bennett's room. "It makes facts and tidbits become real to them if we do something with it," Price said.

The learning centers, which are little stations around the room, change every few weeks to a month, Bennett said. One girl's favorite center was the barber shop which included "real blush and real makeup." Other favorites were the housekeeping center, a post office at Valentine's Day, Santa's Workshop and an Indian Village, complete with teepee.

All of the play is geared towards learning, however. "People think all we do is play all day, but that is how children learn," Price said.

The ECLC is open year-round. During summer break, they have a summer camp. Once a child is enrolled in the center, they can attend until they are 12, Spilva said.

Because not all children will be able to go to the ECLC, UI has an office for child care sources and referrals. Spilva does not place children, but she has approximately 100 places she can refer parents to.

looking around a bit my pace slowed, as it obviously must. Many fine diversions into the good life came my way.

The good life hides out in some of the strangest places, like the bowling alley in the SUB Underground. While competitive in nearly all other sports, I'm not a bowler. I could care less about improving my bowling skills. It's something I do a couple of times a year when really bored.

Last week was my first time at the lanes since Christmas break. It was also my friend Matt Holmquist's night for greatness. His personal high score before this fateful evening was a 133. When he marked in the first four frames and then kept on marking after one bad ball, I knew he was in for a special game. His final score proved me right. A 178. He clobbered his previous best by 45 pins.

The joy of being part of a friend's success, no matter how great or small the feat, that's definitely where the good life is. Although I like other sports much better, I wouldn't have wanted to be doing anything else but bowling with Matt that evening.

The good life made an appearance at Memorial Gym in early February. With five seconds left, I passed the ball to my brother who hit a clutch Orlando Lightfoot-like 3-pointer to win the intramural game for us. Just to be on the court with him when that happened—to hear the team cheering and to see Bret shaking with nerves and excitement, I won't forget it.

The good life isn't limited to pleasantries. I found it two years ago in a painful wake-up phone call. Barely cognizant, I heard my friend's (now wife's) voice on the other end of the line. "Can you come over," she barely choked out.

I hurried for her dorm room, dreading the worst. She could only tell me her dad had called with news of her grandfather's death, then the tears rolled and her voice quit functioning. All I could do was hold her, knowing the classes I was missing and the plans of the day were insignificant compared to her need.

The good life has taken so much longer to develop between my mother and me. We were adversaries throughout much of my teen years. We both remember the bitter fights, where each was deliberately contradictory and refused to understand the other.

When I left for Moscow, it was on peaceful terms. But neither of us wanted to settle for just peaceful. Now each visit finds us closer. The relationship is restored and my mom is among my closest friends. We both finally have the mother-son relationship we have yearned for.

The conclusion to this question of what is good in life is this. Wait a minute, I shouldn't spoil the ending for you. You can read it in the last few sentences of Ecclesiastes. It has to do with keeping God's commandments, which Jesus summed up as loving God and loving our neighbors around us. After almost 3,000 years, I couldn't have said it better myself.
