Xenon manager arrested

By SHARI IRETON
News Editor

Barry Tassler, the manager of Xenon nightclub, is out on bail after being arrested for assault and possession of stolen property.

Tassler, 31, was released Friday from the Latah County Jail after Ben Tassler, his father, paid the $2,000 bond. Tassler said he had no comment at this time.

Tassler pleaded not guilty to the assault charge, which stemmed from a proposed Sir Mix-A-Lot concert Thursday before Spring Break. Sir Mix-A-Lot, whose real name is Anthony Ray, did not perform that night because of a dispute over payment, according to the Moscow Police Department.

"There were a couple of bands that did play and then when Sir Mix-A-Lot was supposed to play, there was a dispute over payment," said Lt. Dan Weaver. "Sir Mix-A-Lot refused to play."

Tassler said, according to the Daily News, that John Crump of Pullman was going to promote the concert and use Xenon for ticket sales, sound and lights.

Engineering jobs become endangered with lay-offs

By GREG BURTON
Staff Writer

In the wake of extensive Boeing Aerospace firings, and the anticipated collapse of the defense industry, the once sure-to-get-a-job engineering graduates are entering the job market with lower expectations than any time before.

Boeing has announced plans to trim 19,000 jobs in Washington state alone, and a story in Friday's New York Times reported United Airlines has balked on orders for 41 jets, equating to some $2 billion in lost revenue for the Seattle, Wash. based firm.

Corporations such as Northrup and Rockwell, located in California, and heavily dependent on defense contracts have just begun to slash jobs. The pending fallout from Northrup alone, which has lost billions of dollars in planned revenue due to the government's reduction of planned B-2 Stealth Bomber purchases, could be devastating.

Students who once expected to travel to California or Arizona, Seattle or Boise, to find work with leading engineering corporations are looking for work with smaller more flexible firms that are better able to change with the times.

But there are still jobs to be found with large companies.

Electrical Engineer Eric BeVan, a 1987 University of Idaho graduate, has found steady and gratifying work with the Honeywell Corporation. Based in Phoenix, Ariz. BeVan designs flight control systems.

"When I graduated jobs were tight, but new positions were still being created," said BeVan. "Now, unless someone leaves no new people are hired, and some positions have been eliminated."

But a recent anomaly of the sluggish economy is a corporation based in Pullman. Schweitzer Engineering Laboratories, created by former Washington State University professor Edmund Schweitzer, has continued to grow every year since its inception.

"We're successful because we function on the leading edge of the industry," said Human Resource Manager Chris Benenson. "We are

Groups fight for more wilderness

By NATALIE SHAPIRO
Staff Writer

A coalition of environmental and outdoor sports groups announced a 6.5 million acre wilderness proposal at press conferences throughout Idaho last week. Currently, Idaho has four million acres of wilderness.

The coalition consists of about ten groups, including the Idaho Conservation League, Sierra Club, Wilderness Society, Fly Fishermen and Idaho Sportsmen Coalition.

Why does Idaho need more wilderness?

"It needs protection for its value to people as a source of recreation, adventure, and for itself. The value of wildlands that are not disturbed and without the heavy human hand," said John McCarthy, Coordinator of ICL's Moscow office.

According to McCarthy, an area designated as wilderness means that no roads can be built in it, no machines such as off-road vehicles or mountain bikes can be used and no logging is allowed.

"To decide on the amount of wilderness, it was up to people who knew these areas well, so local groups gave us comments," said McCarthy.

The proposed wilderness plan was also based on an existing plan. "We started with the formal proposal of 4.2 million acres, which was the former ICL proposal embodied by former Representative Peter Kostmayer in 1988," explained Mark Solomon, ICL member. "Kostmayer's bill just sat there. We revised it, looking at it with the ecosystem approach; how can we improve biological diversity, wildlife travel corridors and adjoining roadless areas for buffers of protection. The result was 6.5 million acres."

"What we're after is three things," explained McCarthy. "One is 6.5 million acres of wilderness, the second thing in our proposal is we're seeking a new approach to forest management of all roadless areas, which totals 9.3 million acres. We're adopting a concept of ecosystem management."

"The third component is to look at the economics of forest workers and to encourage shifts from timber sale preparation to forest restoration. This would create jobs for people. Repairing watersheds and fish and wildlife habitat are examples."

According to McCarthy, ecosystem management is "the opportunity to look at the health of the whole forest and not isolated parcels of land, and where we can use the forest and protect it also."

McCarthy explained that preserving biological corridors for big game animals and considering entire watersheds are key components of ecosystem management. In addition, "no more clearcuts."

According to McCarthy, there are very few areas where clearcuts, even small ones, can be biologically sound.

"Roadless areas are generally steep, erodable and remote. They need a lot of roads to get to them," he said. "Logging companies have hammered roaded areas."

"The goal of the proposal's announcement," explained McCarthy, was to present it to the public to receive feedback. "We want to encourage people

Expo brings Palouse products to Dome

By JEFF KAPOSTASY
Staff Writer

From gems to hot tubs, dog shows to parachutes, it will all be on display at the 18th annual Palouse Expo.

This event, held every year in the Kibbie Dome, allows local businesses and organizations to strut their stuff in front of visitors. Last year's Expo netted a crowd of 20,000 and organizers are expecting a similar crowd this year.

The Expo is sponsored by the Moscow Chamber of Commerce and is open to everyone.

According to Chamber secretary Jill Strom, there will be plenty of things to do for the entire family. New on display this year will be more arts and crafts. Other exhibits will include motorcycles, boats, RV's and home improvement. The Palouse Parachute Club will also be on hand, and there will be a Pinewood Derby.

There will also be plenty of food to make everyone pleasingly plump. Gyros, espresso, popcorn, baked goods, confections, coney dogs, sausages and drinks will all be available.

"We're expecting a great show," Strom said. "We've been advertising this event in all newspapers within a 100-mile radius."

Entertainment will include live music by The Wanderers and The Senders. The Palouse Country Dance Association will also be giving line dance lessons.

Rick Minard of Moscow Building Supply said the Expo gives a good opportunity to get word of the company out to people.

"This lets do-it-yourselfers know they can come up here and do home improvement without going to a contractor."

The Expo will run this Friday through Sunday. Hours will be Friday 4 p.m. - 9 p.m., Saturday 10 a.m. - 9 p.m. and Sunday 10 a.m. - 4 p.m. There is no admission charge. For more information, contact the Moscow Chamber of Commerce at 882-1800.

to write to Congress." Solomon felt the public will be receptive to the proposal. "Region One of the Forest Service in Missoula, polled communities in the area, and asked people if they wanted more wilderness. An overwhelming majority wanted more wilderness." Solomon has had no feedback from the Forest Service regarding their proposal. McCarthy said the next step is a slideshow, and tabloids showing the proposed designated areas. "Then we hope that LaRocco will adopt it as a bill. We hope to get the Forest Service and timber support." Representative Larry LaRocco is drafting a wilderness bill to be finalized by the end of this month. McCarthy thinks that key differences between LaRocco's bill and the coalition's proposal is how areas will be managed; LaRocco will identify areas he thinks needs special management, while the coalition feel that all areas need full protection. "LaRocco's response was positive to our proposal," said McCarthy. Representatives from the forest products industry appeared to dislike the proposal. "It's actually a nine million acre bill," said Ken Kohli of the Intermountain Forest Industry Association in Coeur d'Alene. "It also outlaws road building on existing acres. It would put the forest products industry in a difficult position. It would decrease timber availability by 50 percent." Kohli isn't concerned about the proposal becoming law, but he said there is a good faith effort by legislators such as LaRocco and Senator Larry Craig, who are trying to prepare wilderness legislation. "With the Kostmayer Bill, they (wilderness advocates) said it was the upper limit of what they wanted for wilderness. Now, it's doubled in size," explained Kohli. "We would have no roadless areas left for the timber industry to go into." Kohli feels that the wilderness proposal severely restricts the landbase. "We need to access a broad area, but lightly. We think that's the most environmentally sound practice." Some areas in North Idaho included in the proposal are: White Sand Creek on the South side of the Lochsa, Weitas Creek, Grandmother Mountain and Pot Mountain.

also in a relatively stable market." Benenson said Schweitzer, which produces micro processors for electric power companies, and currently employs 110 people, has five positions which need to be filled, and has already hired two engineers this year. Figures from the UI support this positive outlook. Director of Career Services Dan Blanco says 90 percent of engineering graduates can expect to find work within one year. "One group who may experience difficulty finding work are mechanical engineers due to defense industry fallout, but as long as graduates are not restrictive geographically there should be no problem," said Blanco. Mike Nilsson, a senior in civil engineering, tends to agree. "I originally planned to work for a large corporation, but present conditions may affect that," said Nilsson. "People are going to have to be more mobile. Making plans to go to one specific area to find work must be replaced with a willingness to go anywhere to find work." "What will soon take place is a shift in the market for engineers," said Tom Arnold, a UI civil engineering graduate. "I spent some time looking for work after college, but what I eventually found was a need for more diversified knowledge," said Arnold. "I found work for the city of L.A. rebuilding bridges and highway ramps, and more people are needed for this type of work, but this isn't what I originally planned to do." Blanco agreed the trend is towards civil as well as environmental engineers, but added the market is still receptive to chemical and electrical engineers. President Bill Clinton has presented a plan to retrain the work force in order to target what he deemed a lack of concentration on infrastructure rebuilding in the United States. But the next few years could be a struggle until such retraining is completed. "I've seen 50 or 60 of my friends already lose their jobs," said Boeing employee Erv Williams. "I think its a good time to go fishing."

Crump said he had paid Ray $5,000 in advance, but Tassler said Ray refused to perform unless he was paid $10,000. When both Crump and Tassler refused to pay him, Ray refused to play and left. After Ray's departure from the club, a fight broke out and Mark Plampin of Pullman began to take pictures. "The photographer that was hired by one of the promoters for Sir Mix-A-Lot, started flashing pictures of the fight," said Weaver. "Xenon bouncers grabbed a hold of this person, took his camera and battered him."

Pamplin told police Tassler took his camera and asked him to leave, but Tassler denied ever taking the camera. Pamplin called the police at 11:37 p.m. The police came and asked to search the club that night, but Xenon employees would not permit the search. The next morning at 6:25, the police obtained a search warrant and returned to Xenon. They found Tassler asleep in the basement of the club. While looking for the camera, police found two televisions, a portable compact disc stereo, trash cans, a cable television box, a vacuum and a box springs mattress, all of which have been reported stolen since October. Quentell Hicks of Moscow told Officer Jim Kouril that Tassler gave him a list of items he wanted. "Barry kept bugging him (Hicks) because he (Tassler) wanted to get him (Tassler) some stuff, and he asked Quentell to get these items," said Kouril. "When I talked with Quentell, he did not like Barry all that much," said Kouril, who is in charge of the investigation. "Barry paid him for these items," said Kouril, although he added that it was less than the items were worth. Tassler's preliminary hearing on the charge of grand theft will be March 31.

Violence exposes the lowest form of hypocrites

It's the same old thing. Bombings, chemical attacks, harrasment, and assassination all used to reach a political aim. Where's it happening this time? Northern Ireland? The Gaza Strip? Bosnia-Hercegovinia?

No, no and no. It's all happening right here in the good ol' U.S. of A.

Dr. David Gunn was shot down outside Pensacola, Florida. He was murdered because he performed abortions. With one cold-blooded finger twitch, the so-called pro-life movement had a lapse of both conscience and memory.

In other words, they finally showed their true colors.

If life were a cartoon, the pro-life movement would be the villain getting it's mask torn off at the end of a Scoobie-Doo episode and screaming,

"I would've gotten away with it, too, if it weren't for those meddling kids with their civil liberties and their Constitution and their pesky Supreme Court decisions."

But life isn't a cartoon and real life laws are being broken. The movement which bombs, harrases, and intimidates in defense of their rhetoric that all life is sacred has committed murder.

That means that all life is sacred, except those lives that interfere with pro-lifers getting what they want. It proves the assertion that the pro-life movement has nothing to do with protecting life but is just another political lobby that will use any means to get the control over American lives that it desperately wants.

So, the pro-life movement defends its reprehensible actions as merely distasteful means to the moral end they want. They know what's good for us and if they have to kill and intimidate people to show us that they are right, well, so be it. It will all work out in the end.

And the trains will all run on time.

If the pro-lifers are against abortion, they simply shouldn't have one. But that's not enough for them. This conservative group is frustrated because they find their cause stymied by the actions of the same strong central government they espouse.

If America can summon enough guts to punch through the prevailing politically correct, tacitly accepting fog, this incident can be used to shut down the pro-life movement and move the abortion debate back to the legal and political theatres where it belongs.

The First Amendment, while it's famous for protecting the freedoms of speech and of the press, also protects the right of the people "peaceably to assemble."

Assembling for the purposes of personal intimidation, committing property damage, or stalking a private citizen is immoral, illegal, and definitely not peaceable.

The legal mechanism is there to eliminate the more rabid factions of a group which has been exposed for exactly what it is: the lowest form of hypocrite. America just needs the courage to use it.

The country mice vs. the city slickers

Leaving normal, leaving Moscow.

I know I must have had a fun Spring Break, I saw the police reports. I figure, oh well, it doesn't get much better than being 21, a senior in college, single and living in America.

I went on a road trip to the Oregon coast (camped out-in the rain), went to San Francisco, Berkeley, Reno and finally home, to Moscow.

It was an interesting trip.

In San Francisco I saw a man get forcefully pulled to the ground by four police officers for stealing baby clothes. At Berkeley I saw a nude man strutting his stuff around campus with a beer in one hand and a petition in the other. Two police officers walked by the nude man and didn't seem to mind, actually no one did. In Reno I saw bright lights, a lot of booze and a lot of money cruising through peoples' hands.

It's no wonder going to the "city" makes me appreciate living in a small town all the more. Call me the country mouse, but having lived in Idaho all my life,

Following our parents' footsteps

Bill Clinton and his economic shamans are up to their old tricks. To support his economic plan, they have begun to re-emphasize something the president used as the cornerstone of his campaign.

Our generation, they tell us, could be the first in American history to be worse off than our parents.

That's got me scared. And confused.

My parents were children of the 1950s. Their political consciousness and social ideals were formed by the likes of Harry Truman, Dwight Eisenhower and John Wayne, with a little Marilyn and Elvis mixed in for good measure.

At family gatherings I heard rumors that my parents — crazy kids that they were — used to put Sinatra on the Hi-fi and cut the rug right there at home.

But only when my grandparents weren't around.

They had to sit through hours of Great Depression stories and hear yet again how Aunt Freida and Uncle Frank lived for three months on one can of beans and a loaf of moldy bread.

Pete Gomben

Editor in Chief

They grew up at the tail end of World War II, when America was riding high after decisive victories over the krauts and the japs.

Yet after the post-war euphoria subsided, they became all too familiar with things like backyard bombshelters, Chicoms, the Cuban missile crisis and the uncertainty of the Cold War.

My parents lived near a stereotypical industrial town, one of those sooty small cities where one could always tell which way the wind was blowing by the way it smelled.

Not only was the snow not safe to eat, the air was not safe to breathe. Kids in their neighborhood didn't have to hide behind the tool shed to sneak a smoke. They could throw open their bedroom windows and take a few deep breaths to achieve the same effect.

Although they were bright and did well in high school, my parents never had the chance to go to college. They both began jobs right after graduation.

And now the president is telling me I'll be worse off than them? That I'll never be able to enjoy a lifestyle similar to theirs?

Oh boy. Someone find me a gas oven and a match. It's time to end it all.

But I'm not as bad off as some, I suppose. The father of one of my friends used to come home from work and sit on the couch, watch television, drink a six pack of beer and smoke cigarettes like he was a stockholder in R.J. Reynolds.

When the beers were empty, he'd belch and ask his wife — who was slaving in the kitchen — to bring him a couple more brews.

If Clinton is right and we are has made me take the "small town ways" for granted. After going to the city for a few days I always come home more appreciative of the surroundings God has blessed Idahoans with.

Don't get me wrong, I don't hate the city I actually like it... but in limited dosages. It's because cities put me on edge. Small towns like Moscow have their dull moments, but they don't have the violence, crime, traffic and poverty problems that large cities do. Things run at a much slower pace in Moscow, where people actually take time to smell the roses.

Traffic in the city is always congested. The only time Moscow has a rush hour is at 5 p.m. and it usually only lasts 15 minutes. I wonder how many hours city slickers waste each lifetime in traffic?

In Moscow we don't live in paranoia. We don't worry about locking our doors while we're home or carrying a gun when we walk the streets and we know our car will be where we parked it.

Maybe that's not wise, maybe we are assuming too much when we say small towns are safe... or maybe living in a small town is just a peaceful state of mind.

I take precautions to make my life safe, but I'm not nervous each time I walk down Main Street that I may be mugged, raped or have my purse stolen at any moment. Moscow isn't Saintville and it has its fair share of crime but it doesn't measure up to that of the city.

When I was younger, I wanted to live in the city, wanted to be in the rush-rush and wanted to have that lifestyle, but the older I get the more I'm leaning toward living in the country. Maybe city mice see their environment in the same light. Maybe when they were younger they dreamed of living in the country and having a dog but now find their heart belongs to the city. Maybe city folk can't fathom coming to the country.

I don't know.

I do know that I'm content living in small town. Living in a small town brings peace in knowing your neighbor, your local police officers, the mayor, the man that runs the little market and the woman that sits next to you in class.

Small towns also mean knowing that when you go to a store, the mall or to church you'll most likely see someone you know and won't mind. (That's if it's not a bad hair day or you are not in a hurry.)

More importantly, in a small town your charitable acts rarely go unnoticed. People are also more likely to return the good deeds and favors than in the city. In the city, you're just another lonely soul in a sea of people. And to paraphrase Norm from Cheers it's a dog eat dog world in the city and the city slickers are wearing milk bone underwear.

At least as an outsider, that's what I see looking in.

Each time I go to a city I come back home a little more baffled that people can live in that type of rat-race for their entire lives and not realize how incredible life outside the city can be. However, this DOESN'T mean I'm encouraging the city slickers to pack their bags and move up north.

In fact, I'm hoping they will STAY there so we can continue to enjoy the lives we have in Idaho and revel in the lyrics of John Mellencamp's "Small Town."

Idaho quake on its way

Alot of people are wondering why people are "flipping their cookies" so bad. Murders and rapes are getting out of hand. I am glad now that scientists are finally agreeing with me.

They say that within a month the Northwest will be hit by a quake measuring to the San Francisco quake. A woman was fired from networks in California for breaking the "HUSH" and letting people know that by December 1994 California will be hit by a quake of a magnitude around 12.0.

I am glad the University listened to my predictions. I have been right on the last 197. They bought a generator so they can provide water for campus. Just wish Marriott would keep more then only one weeks food in stock.

doomed to be worse off than our parents, my friend has to be sweating bullets right now.

Clinton, and anyone who thinks America is on the decline simply because our industrial output is down, misses the mark. There is no guarantee that one generation will be more prolific and economically comfortable than its predecessor.

In fact, the motives of anyone who tries to convince us that economics alone determine the success or failure of a civilization should be questioned. Chances are they have some kind of stake in maintaining the status quo and of defining our lives in strict monetary terms.

Take a look beyond mere economic well-being and what do we see? We have made huge strides in other areas, like peace of mind.

We can never be safe from terrorists who drive vans loaded with explosives into the World Trade Center, but we no longer have to deal with the possibility of Soviet ICBMs raining down on us like a plague of angry locusts. Random violence is a dreadful thing, but it is nowhere near as alarming as the thought of millions of people dying in the blink of an eye. That is something our generation won't have to think about.

Forget nuclear holocaust for a moment and focus on education. Most people probably go to college in hopes of landing jobs with fat salaries and keys to the executive washroom.

But you have to believe all the learning that has gone on at American universities isn't wasted just because all graduates can't find their dream jobs. We are all better off, if not economically, then socially.

After predicting a grim future if things continue as they are, what would Clinton and others have us choose as an alternative to our present way of life? The industrial model of, say, Germany or Japan? Will we ever adopt the standards of the Land of the Rising Sun?

I hope not.

According to what I see on the evening news and read in the print media, some members of Japanese society are so hyped on achieving economic success that they devote up to 20 hours a day to their careers.

Twenty hours? Some students don't spend that long in the classroom during an entire semester.

Commit that much time to your career and one of two things will happen. You will either lose your sanity or you'll wind up on your death bed realizing that, although you may have been around for 70 years, you never really lived at all.

Even if you were financially well-off, that's not the kind of thought you'd want to have slipping through your brain as you drew your last breath.

Is it?

Argonaut computer story incorrect

Editor;

I was happy to pick up a copy of the Argonaut last Friday and discover a front page article on the proposed Computing Fee to be implemented next fall. My glee took on a shade of concern, however, as I read the article. The article misrepresented the computing fee, unintentionally I'm sure, by using a single source of information Derrick Brown. While Derrick may be the ASUI Vice-President and has much knowledge of ASUI activities, he had not taken part in the formation or presentation of this fee proposal.

As one of two student representatives on the Computer Services Advisory Committee, the committee which formed the fee proposal, I feel it is my responsibility to set the record straight. Here are some facts about the fee:

■ Computer Services is not just considering implementing a DARS (Degree Audit Report System)-like system. Instead, along with the Administrative Computing Committee, Computer Services will be updating all administrative systems at the UI including: admissions, financial aid, and financial affairs.

■ Even when such a system is purchased, NONE of the money raised by a student fee will be used to purchase it. There are three categories of improvements Computer Services can make, each with its own source of income, they are as follows: 1) Administrative improvements (like DARS): This money comes from several sources including general funds and computer allocation charges. 2) Networking improvements (like the Backbone): This money comes from proceeds Computer Services generates by re-sale phone and long-distance services to the university community. 3) Student computing improvements (like new labs): This is where the new computing fee funds would be placed; however, the new fees are only a small portion of the money in this fund. The remainder comes from the State of Idaho.

■ The student computing fee money will be accounted for, every dollar of it, in an annual report by Computer Services. Students will know exactly where this money is being spent.

Perhaps next time before running a story which affects every student on this campus, the Argonaut could try a little harder to present accurate information. The meetings of the Computer Services Advisory Committee are open meetings and all are welcome to attend to get this and other computing information first-hand.

Read the homophobic flyer and decide for yourself

Editor;

I've been accused of "editorial slander" and a host of other nasty-sounding things by a Mr. Christ Schlect because I accused a handful of militant anti-gay protestors of mocking gays and apparently welcoming AIDS as divine punishment on homosexuals. Schlect maintains there was no mockery: when they advocated the death penalty for America's gays, passed out flyers and carried signs saying "AIDS Distribution Center," they weren't mocking gays, but were showing "our love for homosexuals."

Please print the text of Schlect's flyer entitled "Homophobes Standing Against Sodomy" so your readers can determine who is more accurately reflecting the taste and tone of the brochure. Also, please make it clear that I do not believe Schlect's message represents the mainstream of either America or the Christian Church.

—Frank E. Lockwood

The flyer reads:

Why Homophobic?

Many of us have known we were "different" for quite some time. Way-back when Rock Hudson died and all America eulogized him, some of us felt instead a deep and satisfying sense that justice was served. More recently, when Freddie Mercury died, the feeling was even greater. But even then, only the courageous ones were open about their feelings of joy that this world was made more pure by his absence.

Still, many of us kept our feelings to ourselves, afraid because we were "different."

We homophobics have for too long been oppressed. But now we have come out of the closet, announcing this message of personal freedom to the world: We're homophobic, and we're O.K.! No longer will the homophobic tendencies of our society intimidate us! We are free! We herby stand united against their intolerance, no matter what it will cost us.

Our right as consenting adults to participate in homophobic demonstrations may not be denied. We will stand for what is morally right in this backward moving society. We believe homosexuality to be a sin against God, and a capital crime against the State. This belief is not a popular one, and many across the land who agree with us have been silenced. Such intolerance must not be tolerated; we will stamp out homophobia wherever it raises its ugly head.

What do homophobics believe?

We homophobics are concerned for those who practice sexual sin—not only homosexuals, but adulterers and fornicators as well (whom God will judge, Hebrews 13:4). With many homosexuals, we agree that sodomy is natural to those who practice it. However, we deny that nature provides a standard for ethics. (Paedophiliacs and rapists practice what is natural to them, but we don't therefore believe that they have a right to their practice.) The only standard for ethics is given by God in the Bible. The biblical overtures against homosexuality are well-known and plain, despite the attempts of many to defuse their severity.

The Bible also tells of sinners who are freed from what comes naturally to them—freed from the bondage of sin. "For when we were still without strength, in due time Christ died for the ungodly...Perhaps for a good man someone will die. But God demonstrates his own love toward us, in that while we were still sinners, Christ died for us. Much more then, having been justified by His blood, we shall be saved from wrath through Him. For if when we were enemies we were reconciled to God through the death of His Son, much more, having been reconciled, we shall be saved by His life And not only that, but we also rejoice in God through our Lord Jesus Christ, through whom we have now received reconciliation" (Romans 5:6-11).

Some advice from a homosexual man

Editor,
My God, what a fuss. A bunch of people get together for a dance and suddenly everyone's in an uproar. Rodney Ristow, I appreciate your concerns for homosexuals even though you have no idea of what you're talking about. I spent 20 miserable years of my life battling between conservative Christianity and my own homosexuality. I felt "different" and lived with guilt and self-hate everyday. I would probably have welcomed your advice then because I was afraid of who I am. I was afraid because I, like you, was taught that homosexuals were evil and twisted and pitiful. I knew I wasn't any of those things so I denied that I was gay until I learned that being gay didn't change who I was. I find happiness and a reason to live not in a restrictive religious code, but through honest soul searching and self-questioning.

Your amazingly intimate knowledge of gay relationships is nothing but the same old set of fallacies we hear all the time. Saying that gays can't establish meaningful long-term relationships ranks right up there with the idea that all gays are hairdressers or artists. Gays are not doomed to a "miserable life of loneliness and rejection" as you so gloomily claim. The people I know are just as happy with or without partners as are their heterosexual counterparts. While we can end a bad relationship more easily than married couples, we experience excellent long-term relationships just as straights do. And you don't seem to realize that there are even people both straight and gay who prefer not to settle down. It has nothing to do with having a "miserable life." I have a wonderful man who loves me very much and whom I adore. We share a commitment to each other based on love and total honesty and I'm proud of that.

What I'm not proud of is people like yourself who go beyond deciding what is right for them and try to decide for everyone else while they're at it. I believe it's healthy for people to hold a variety of views. But having views and forcing them on others are two different things. Did you ever notice that gays don't pick fundamentalist churches and they don't go to the malls and scream "flagrant heterosexuals" at straight couples holding hands. We don't need to disturb others to find validity in our own lives.

For those of you who agree that homosexuals should be converted, or at least kept quiet, ask yourself how they have harmed you. Regardless of all the hot air about morality, every code of law is based on preventing and punishing injury to members of society. How has any gay person injured you? What threat is posed by leaving alone thousands of people whom you don't even know.

I don't need to change your views. My life had the same meaning to me regardless of what you think. But don't try to judge my life from that tiny steel-walled chamber you call your mind. I'm doing just great, thank you. Leave me and mine alone.

—Monte Lee Abbott

Corgatelli's commentary is sexist, weak & offensive

Editor;

Over the past few months I've been quite interested in reading Brandy Corgatelli's commentaries. Not only are his arguments disgustingly sexist and weak, but they border on offensive. This morning when I read "Say no to the morning after" commentary of RU486, I felt it was my duty to respond.

First of all, one thing that RU486 would do would be to nearly eliminate the debate over when life begins i.e. before the Second Trimester, when the moon is full, when God says so, etc. This "morning after abortion" pill is not as easy as popping a Tylenol for a headache as Corgatelli claimed in his article. Women must still visit an abortion clinic and receive counseling plus a 10 day waiting period. Women who want RU486 must still go through all the harassment and possible violence caused by abortion protestors. They must also go through the pain of a miscarriage.

Second of all, Corgatelli's claim that this pill would do a "disservice to women" is outlandish. Corgatelli, if I may remind you of something, you are a male. How do you think that you can decide what is a disservice to women? You are just as guilty of overstepping your boundary as the decrepit, conservative old men making our abortion laws. This would be like a woman telling you that watching your football game on Sunday afternoon is a disservice to you as a male. You might ask her, "How do you know?" It's the same thing.

I can't help but wonder if being a sexist male attempting to uphold the patriarchal power structure in this country ever "pricks your conscience," Corgatelli? Maybe when you've walked in the shoes of a pregnant woman for a day you can speak with some authority on this subject.

And last, but not least, I'd like to propose a question to all males who are anti-choice. Have you ever had worms, or lice, or a tick living off your body? You want to find the simplest, most painless, way to get rid of it, don't you? When a woman is pregnant they use enough energy each day to climb a mountain. It's women's choice whether or not they want to go through this, not yours as males. I know that many will respond to this question and say they don't choose to get worms, or lice, or a tick, but women don't choose to get pregnant, either. A woman's impregnation is just as much your fault as a male; remember she couldn't have gotten pregnant without you! Maybe if there were a few more sexually responsible males out there, our abortion dilemma wouldn't be as severe as it is today.

Lightfoot named conference MVP

Staff and wire reports

The University of Idaho men's basketball team may have fell short of preseason predictions to win the Big Sky Conference Tournament but Orlando Lightfoot fulfilled his.

The 6-7 junior was named the 1992-93 BSC Most Valuable Player by helping the Vandals to a 24-8 record and regular season championship. He averaged 22.3 points and 8.6 rebounds a game and had two games where he eclipsed the 40-point mark. One game in particular, a home match-up with Boise State University, the Chattanooga, TN native rained in 44 points and pulled down 17 rebounds while on his way to being named Sports Illustrated Player of the Week. His other 40 point game came in a road contest at Eastern Washington where he had 27 points in the first half and 13 in the second.

well as climbing up to No. 3 on the all-time scoring list at Idaho Lightfoot also had 715 points this season to break the old single season scoring record of 701 set by Vandal Riley Smith in 1990.

The forward added to his award of last season's BSC Newcomer of the Year and was joined on this year's first team by teammates Marvin Ricks and Ricky Wilson.

Ricks, a 6-0 senior shooting guard, averaged 15.0 points this season and broke the all-time 3-point record at Idaho by hitting 104 triples in just his one-and-a-half seasons at Idaho. Ricks had his best game of his career also in the Boise State game as he hit for 32 points.

Wilson, Idaho's do-it-all senior point guard, had 176 assists this year (5.5 per game) to place him second all-time behind Otis Livingston's 262 for a single season. The tenacious perimeter defender also committed just 61 turnovers and averaged 4.3 points a game.

Also named to the first team was Boise State center Tanoka Beard. Beard, BSU's inside threat for four years, became just the ninth player in Big Sky history to be named to the all-conference team three times. With his 27 points against Idaho in the BSC championship game in Moscow he became the all-time leading scorer in BSU history. He averaged 21 points and 7.8 rebounds a game this season while shooting 58.7 percent from the field and blocking 1.4 shots. He ended his career at BSU by notching 15 points and carousing 11 boards in the Broncos 92-72 loss to Vanderbilt in the NCAA Tournament last week.

The third unanimous selection on the first team was Newcomer of the Year Stan Rose from Weber State. Rose, a 6-7 senior who transferred to WSU from Alabama-Birmingham, led the conference in scoring with a 23.2 point per game average and grabbed 8.3 rebounds a game. He also led the league in field goal percentage with 61.8 for the season.

Also named from WSU was senior Al Hamilton. The 6-7 slinky forward dropped in 20 points a game and was third on the team in rebounding with 6.5 boards a game.

Others on the first team included sophomore forward Jim Potter (18.0 ppg) and senior guard Erin Cowan from Idaho

A HUGHmongous chance for change

His resume speaks for itself when it comes down to his ability to coach the game of basketball.

His record of 152-38 in six seasons as head coach at Hiwassee Junior College talks of the success he has produced in 25 years of coaching.

But through all the statistics, championships and personal accomplishments that can do all the talking for him, Hugh Watson still has plenty to say.

And he wants to say it at Idaho. Watson, the 43 year-old talkative and personable assistant for the Idaho men's basketball team, has been waiting restlessly and patiently on word of whether or not he will become the Vandals 25th head coach in the school's 88 year basketball history.

"I'm getting calls from people I don't even know," Watson said of the support he's receiving concerning the position. "I'm from the south and we're supposed to be big on hospitality but when I came here (three years ago) people in the community took us (he and his family) under their wing and they've been just unreal to us over the years."

As soon as the call came that former Idaho coach Larry Eustachy was moving on to Utah State next year, the support came rolling in for Watson. Everyone from the mayor of Moscow to UI students to people across the country began voicing their strong support for Watson.

However, the most notable support Watson has seen has come from an ex-Idaho player.

Mike Gustavel, who played as a Vandal for three years before leaving the squad to concentrate on his future as a medical student, sent a letter to Idaho president Elisabeth Zinser supporting Watson for the job.

"That means more to me than anything else," Watson said of the letter. "To have someone take the time to write that and also see the way I've been supported on this job has just overwhelmed me. The calls, letters and now being on four or so reader boards at businesses around the town really just blows my mind."

Loren Roberts

Before coming to Idaho in 1990 to be an assistant under Eustachy, Watson was winning an average of 25 games a year at the Tennessee based junior college. His teams advanced to the second round of the National Junior College Athletic Association Tournament twice, won four Tennessee JCAA Eastern Division titles and Watson was named TJCAA Coach of the Year three times. With such a knack for success in the Volunteer State Watson saw no reason to leave the area and had plans to never leave the state in which he was born and raised.

"I had a house with a pool, my wife was a school teacher there and we were settled for life," Watson said of his life in Tennessee. "When I took the job at Idaho all I thought it was (the state) was potatoes and rocky hills. But when I flew in here I just knew that this was a place where I'd like to stay."

And for the committee of seven persons who are in the process of selecting the new head coach they should make sure he does stay.

As excited as Watson is to put more points on the board with an uptempo pace, he's twice as focussed on putting up more grade points on his players report cards.

"I'm a believer in the transition game," Watson said of his desire to bring a more run-and-gun style of play to Idaho. "I don't mean bringing the ball down court and flinging it up but if the shot is there and there's a man in rebounding position then I would like to see the team score 90 points a game."

"One thing you can say about my teams is that they give 110 percent and they act like a family," Watson continued. "No embarrassment to the school, the

The way the ball bounces

There are greater injustices in the world than not getting invited to post season basketball tournaments.

Like being forced to spend Spring Break in Moscow just because the amount of money in your checking account is roughly the IQ of an average Big Sky referee.

Still, it would have been nice to watch the Vandals get a chance to redeem themselves in the National Invitational Tournament after a pathetic effort against Boise State.

Give the Broncos all the credit in the world. After spanking the Vandals in the Kibbie Dome, they went down to Salt Lake and promptly offered themselves up as human sacrifices to Vanderbilt University.

The selection committee for the NIT explained its snub of Orlando, Marvin, Ricky and the rest of the team very well.

The Vandals had a 19-7 record against other Division I schools. They didn't fill the Dome to the gills for the Big Sky tournament they hosted. Their pre-conference schedule wasn't exactly chockful of Top 20 teams.

Or Top 60 teams, for that matter.

Pete Gomben
Editor in Chief

And Idaho suffered an embarrassing loss to Elizabeth City State, a podunk school from back East with a name that sounds more like a mental hospital than an institution of higher education.

You can rattle off the reasons Idaho shouldn't have gone to the NIT like a grade schooler reciting the alphabet, but one fact remains. Idaho deserved to play in the tournament.

The Vandals 19-7 record against Division I schools included an 11-3 mark in the Big Sky Conference, which put them in sole possession of first place. With most every collegiate conference holding its own post season tournament, it seems winning the league title outright unfortunately doesn't hold as much weight as it used to.

Please see NIT page 9

►NIT from page 8

So Idaho's thrilling double overtime victory against BSU here in Moscow meant nothing. The Vandals' stomping of the Broncos down in Boise was meaningless, as was every other conference game they played. Factor in the close losses against Montana and Weber State and Idaho was two baskets away from a 13-1 conference mark. Assuming they lost the Big Sky tournament, would that record have guaranteed them an NIT berth? It's anybody's guess.

Vandal fans and players will now stew for another year, wondering what would have happened if the team had received an invitation to the NCAA's junior prom.

They might have bowed out gracefully in the first round to the likes of Jackson State, or they might have caught fire and fought their way to the finals in Madison Square Garden.

No one will ever know.

Don't sweat it. Like I said, there are greater injustices in the world than not getting invited to post season basketball tournaments.

But still...

►WATSON from page 8

community or the state. I expect them (his players) to act like young men should."

Opposed to the three previous head coaches at Idaho (Tim Floyd, Kermit Davis and Eustachy) Watson has made it quite clear that if he is to get the job he has no other intentions than to stay at the helm of the Vandals for awhile. Due to an Idaho state law a new coach can only be initially signed to a one year deal, but after that Watson said he'd be looking for something around a four or five year contract.

In fact, Watson had the opportunity to go back to his alma mater of Lee College last summer to serve as the athletic director and head coach but didn't send in his resume because he had visions of head coaching at Idaho someday.

"If I get the job I'm here to stay for awhile," Watson said with his characteristically gleaming smile. "I'm definitely not in it for the money because there are a lot of (coaching) jobs out there that pay more than Idaho does."

Another change that Watson would look to if he was given the job would be putting some tougher schools on Idaho's schedule. In the past, teams like Georgia Tech, Tennessee and Memphis State have approached the Vandals about having Idaho travel to their court and play them for a large dollar amount. Watson would like to see stronger basketball teams on the Vandals schedule but do so by installing a home-and-away system.

"I want to build the program and I'm one never to turn down the competition," Watson said. "If it's a big time school and if they'll play us at their home as well as ours then I'll do it. The competition you play directly helps your recruiting."

Recruiting is something that Watson also possesses that leaves competitors for the coaching vacancy far behind. He brought Calvin Ward to Idaho (who was recruited by Florida State, Cincinnati, Kansas and Tennessee), Orlando Lightfoot (who Watson didn't recruit but who came to Idaho instead of going to Oklahoma after playing a year under him at Hiwassee) and Marvin Ricks and Frank Waters (both of whom played with Georgia Tech star James Forrest in high school) to name a few. But with those many athletes from the south, Idaho has often been criticized for not taking local products. In the mind of Watson he believes in players, not geographics.

"I want to recruit basketball players first," he said. "I don't think you can compete on the national level or the Big Sky (Conference) level by saying you have to zero in on one spot. (If selected head coach) we'll scan this area first and go after those players who could play for us."

At Idaho Watson will bring his enthusiasm and southern charm to a position that he undoubtedly deserves to fill. His resume says more than enough for what he could do for Idaho's players, his personality shows what he can accomplish with the fans and boosters, and his determination represents the direction he'll take the program.

"I've got to be Hugh Watson and I can't be anyone else," he said. "I'm just what I am - an old farmboy. My father said before he passed away 'son, be careful when you pass people on that ladder because you don't know who you'll need for a push.' "

It's time Watson got that push he deserves.

Biking event this Sunday

The University of Idaho campus recreation department is sponsoring a Mountain biking event this weekend.

This Sunday at 1:00 p.m. will be the Mountain Bike Rodeo. Anyone 14 years of age or older is eligible to compete in the event. All entrants under 18 must have a parent or legal guardian's signature to enter.

The Rodeo will consist of three individual timed events in which the cyclist will be racing the clock. Overall winners will be the cyclist in each category with the lowest combined time. The three events are an obstacle course, a hill climb and a 2.5 mile circuit race.

The location of the race is on the UI campus at the Animal Science Farms. Helmets are required for the event and the entry deadline is this coming Thursday at 5:00 p.m. The entry fee is $5.00 for UI students with a valid I.D. card and $8.00 for the general public and can be paid at room 204 at UI's Memorial Gym.

State. Cowan tied Lightfoot for game-high scoring honors with 37 points in ISU's 91-87 loss to Idaho in the conference semifinals.

From Montana State Art Meneff was named to the team as he averaged 16 points and 8.7 rebounds a game for the 9-18 Bobcats. He was joined by teammate and this year's outstanding freshman in Scott Hatler. Hatler, a 6-2 redshirt freshman, led the conference in assists with 6.2 a game in becoming the first freshman to lead the league in that category since 1977.

Topping the list of those receiving honorable mention was Idaho forward Chauncey McBride. He was joined by John Rondeno and Demetreus Robbins from Northern Arizona, Jeremy Lake, Matt Kempfert and Travis DeCuire from the University of Montana, Sherman Morris, Darnell Woods and Lance Vaughn from BSU and Robbie Johnson from WSU.

Loss doesn't dampen UI spirits

By DOUG TAYLOR
Assistant Editor

It's over now, but the optimism remains.

Although Idaho's 57-43 loss to Montana State on March 13 gave them some unwanted spring vacation time, the Lady Vandals' coaching staff still has to be upbeat about the 1992-93 season.

After limping to sixth place in the Big Sky Conference during the latter portion of the season, the Lady Vandals suddenly caught fire and won five straight games, including last minute wins over Boise State and Weber State. The hot streak enabled Idaho to earn a spot in the Big Sky Conference basketball tournament.

Entering as the fourth seed, Idaho gave top-seeded MSU all it could handle before the Bobcats' Cass Bauer began hitting key shots down the stretch to help put the Lady Vandals away.

Bauer, who was named the conference's player of the year last week, finished with 19 points and 15 rebounds. She was also part of a defense that clogged the middle and prevented Idaho's inside players from making a difference in the contest.

The most prominent player to have trouble with the MSU defense was Idaho's second-leading scorer Brenda Kuehlthau. The 6-foot senior scored just two points before fouling out.

Keeping the Lady Vandals close was guard Jennifer Clary who would score a game-high 21 points. Forward Kortnie Edwards contributed 14 more.

While Bauer's contributions were certainly important, Idaho assistant coach Sherry Peterson said that MSU reserve Steph Spencer was every bit as important. She hit two critical second-half 3-pointers that enabled the Bobcats to claim the double-digit victory.

One factor that the Lady Vandals couldn't control was the free throw situation where the Bobcats shot 21 free throws to just four for the Lady Vandals.

"They went to the free throw line a lot, and that was probably one of the big differences in the game," Peterson said. "We made some costly fouls."

Though the Vandals checked out in the tournament's first round, the signs weren't all bad. Perhaps more important than the tournament berth was the shot of confidence that the five wins gave Idaho heading into next season. In a season marked by a month-long road trip and slumps from several of the Vandals key players, confidence wasn't always in abundant supply on the team.

Ever mindful of this, Turner said that her two seniors, Kuehlthau and Edwards, had to step up.

That call was answered in those last five regular season games as both players turned up their offensive games and became noticeably more vocal on the court.

Peterson could think of a specific example that illustrated the surge in the two senior's leadership abilities.

"Their leadership was especially vivid in that last Boise State game," Peterson said. "You could just tell by looking in Kortnie's and Brenda's eyes that we were going to win that game. There was no way that they were going to lose that game."

Edwards end of the year performance was capped off by her recent selection to the first-team all-Big Sky squad while Kuehlthau and Clary were named to the honorable mention team.

Clary, who was responsible for the winning shots in three of those last five games, was also named to the all-tournament team.

Peterson said the team's improved sense of confidence was the biggest improvement she noticed.

"The biggest improvement on this team was their confidence in themselves," she said. "This team had to undergo a lot of obstacles this year. That road trip took a little bit of a toll, and we struggled at times."

Fellow assistant coach Robyn Stewart echoed those sentiments.

"The road hurt us as far as our overall record, but the real problem is that we weren't exhibiting any consistency," Stewart said.

With Idaho finished now at 12-15 and only the recruiting trail left to be hit, Stewart said this season can also offer next year's team some real positives.

"I think that our younger players started to realize that you have to be committed and keep intensity constant during the season in order to have a chance of going to post-season play," Stewart said.

Baseball team drops four

By DOUG TAYLOR
Assistant Editor

While most University of Idaho students were pondering warm climates and beaches over Spring Break, a small group of Idaho students contemplated the national pastime.

Yes, baseball has begun in spite of the rainy Palouse weather, and the UI baseball club took to the road in hopes of starting the 1992-93 campaign.

Upon arriving on the west coast, the bad weather caught up with the Vandals as six games were rained out. The par normal Seattle spring weather limited the Vandals to just four games.

The Vandals suffered four defeats in a pair of doubleheaders with Centralia and Western Washington University. Western Washington University did the initial damage on March 13 as WWU downed Idaho 13-5 and 7-5 in the nightcap. Centralia finished matters with a 6-2 and 12-4 sweep this last Saturday.

Although 0-4 is not a slightly opening record, coach Daryl Reiersen said the deck was a little stacked.

"We were supposed to play 10 games in seven days, but we only got in four games," Reiersen said. "It was tough for us to stay up."

A lack of proven pitching arms also proved costly as only a few pitchers made it to Seattle. Additionally, Reiersen is out with a season-ending knee injury suffered before the season started.

"Our pitchers are pretty green," Reiersen said, "but I thought that some of our guys threw pretty well. (John) Konrad didn't even have much practice, and he came over and threw well against Centralia on Saturday."

Despite solid hitting from Outfielder J.B. Blessinger and infielder Aaron Anderson, a lack of plate experience proved detrimental to the Vandals. The second game with Western proved to be a good example as the Vandals didn't strike out, but they popped out 11 times.

Tracksters shine at invitational Many runners achieve personal bests

By MISSY WILSON
Staff Writer

The outdoor track and field season got underway Saturday as a few Idaho athletes traveled to Richland, Washington to compete in the Tri-City Sports Invitational.

Womens head coach Scott Lorek said the invitational was a good start for the season, since many of his athletes achieved high marks and personal bests.

The Idaho women had a strong showing in the 200-meter dash while capturing three of the top five spots. Tanya Tesar led the Vandals, placing third with a time of 25:82. Teammates Kristi Becker and Sheri Marlatt were close behind, finishing fourth and fifth respectively.

Becker and Tesar were also stand-outs in their other events. Becker finished third in the 100-meter dash with a time of 12:59 and Tesar placed fifth in the 100-meter high hurdles with a time of 15:64.

Idaho freshman Lani Bachman had an impressive showing in the 400-meter dash, placing second behind Washington State University stand-out Camisha Gix.

The womens 5000-meter run was another good event for the Vandals. Robyn Slate finished fourth running 18:12.2, followed by Laura Moore and Angie Falk who finished in the seventh and eighth place spots. Moore got a personal best in the event running a time of 18:34.7.

Moore was one of the many Idaho women who achieved personal bests at the invitational. Tara Hamilton ran 4:49.7 for a sixth place finish and personal best in the 1500-meter and Althea Belgrave ran the 65.90 for an eighth place finish and personal best in the 400-meter high hurdles.

Another Idaho freshmen, Jill Wimer, got two personal bests at the invitational. Wimer finished third in the shot put with a throw 39 feet 9 inches and seventh in the javelin with a throw of 110 feet 9 inches.

Francie Rapier, also of Idaho, placed seventh in the shot put with another personal best of 38 feet 1 inch.

Lorek said his team's emphasis has always been on the outdoor season, and that he is proud of their continuing progression since September.

Lorek is also looking forward to the return of senior's Karen McCloskey and Jackie Ross. The two were absent during the indoor season and plan to begin competing at the Washington State Invitational on April 3.

G.T. Noah's original rock to hit the Alley

By RUSS WOOLSEY
Staff Writer

Psychedelic, funky blues, improvisation inspired G.T. Noah, a band from Bellingham, Wa. will play at John's Alley this weekend.

The five man band played at John's Alley twice last year and has well established hip swinging crowd. They are danceable and are a constant night club draw in the Seattle, Bellingham area. They have been known to come out on stage dressed as spotted mushrooms and give "complete sensory experience performances."

The band played in a tribute last year in Seattle to Jack Kerouac, renowned literary nomad that died of an alcohol related death in 1969. G.T. Noah has also joined the stage with some of the Northwest's finest bands including Tough Mama, Little Women, Zero and Jumbaloassy.

G.T. Noah has one album called Dance of the Planets that was released last year. The Bellingham Herald describes their style as, "original music with a 60's influence."

G.T. Noahs two guitars work together to produce long jams backed by a hypnotic keyboardist and drummer. Their lyrics such as these from G.T. Noahs "Beware": "In the morning when I awoke, nothing to find around this ole house/But some glass and old dried mustard seed/A little bit of that outdoor Mexican weed," reflect the crowd they often find themselves playing to.

President Zinser to narrate staged reading of Shakespeare's women

By RUSS WOOLSEY
Staff Writer

A staged reading of Infinite Variety: Shakespeare and Women will be presented by the UI theatre department on Friday, March 26 at the E.W. Hartung Theatre.

Penn State University English professor Joseph G. Price's reading will include dialogue from Shakespeare's tragic women figures.

The dialogue will come from some of Shakespeare's most renowned works such as "The Taming of the Shrew," "Hamlet," "As You Like It" and "Julius Casear," which will be arranged by theme in different scenes.

The performance will be presented by UI theatre arts senior, Quimby Lombardo and faculty member Kim Bouchard. UI President Elisabeth Zinser will narrate the reading.

The presentation will also include special guest June Hansen from Washington D.C., who has been nominated five times for the prestigious Helen Hayes Award. Hansen is a native of Southport, Lancashire, England. She began her work on the stage at the Royal Lyceum Theatre in England and has been critically acclaimed for her performances at the Folger Shakespeare Library Theatre and the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts.

All ticket proceeds will benefit the Rex Rabold/Oregon Shakespeare Festival Fellowship Endowment. Each year a UI theatre arts student is picked to join the Oregon Shakespeare Festival Company in Ashland Ore.

Rex Rabold earned his Master of Fine Arts in acting and directing from the UI in 1976. He played with the Oregon Shakespeare festival company for 9 years before he died of AIDS related complications in 1990.

This year's first selection for the Rabold endowment is Mike Behrens, a senior pursuing a degree in theatre at the UI.

The reading will be offered one time only March 26. Curtains will rise at 8 p.m. at the Hartung, and tickets are $8 for the general public, $5 for students. For more information about tickets call 885-7212.

Father's advice leads to two books

By CHRIS MILLER
Lifestyles Editor

With a range of simple truths such as "Think big thoughts, but relish small pleasures," "Compliment three people every day," and "Don't major in minor things," H. Jackson Brown captured the hearts of millions of Americans with his book, Life's Little Instruction Book, published in 1991. A small paperback with a red plaid cover, it has sold over 5 million copies.

Now Brown is back with Life's Little Instruction Book, Volume II, a list of more "suggestions, observations and reminders on how to live a happy and rewarding life."

Life's Little Instruction Book, Volume II is not so much a sequel as a continuation of a father's conversation with his son. "Shortly after completing the list that became Life's Little Instruction Book and presenting it to my son, Adam, on his first day of college, I began to think of other suggestions and observations I wish I had included in the list," says Brown. "So, I started another list that grew into this second volume. Life is a constant learning process and as I discover more of its secrets I long to pass them on to my son."

In between the first fatherly hint in Volume II, number 512 — "Believe in love at first sight," and number 1030 — "Call your

Washington author to read

John Keeble, author of four novels and a nonfiction work on the Valdez oil spill, will read from his work at 7:30 p.m. March 25 in the UI Law School Courtroom.

Keeble, who is the director of creative writing at Eastern Washington University, is a graduate of the University of Redlands and holds an M.F.A. degree from the University of Iowa Writer's Workshop. His best known novel, Yellowfish (1980), deals with the intrigue surrounding the smuggling of Chinese immigrants into the U.S. and involves settings in the Idaho panhandle, eastern Washington and Canada. Rick DeMarinis describes it as "a novel of self-discovery disguised as a thriller."

Keeble's most recent novel, Broken Ground (1987), has been described as a "labyrinthine" novel dealing with the complex ulterior motives underlying construction of a prison in the Oregon desert. Out of the Channel: The Exxon Valdez Oil Spill in Prince William Sound, his most recent book, was the winner of the Governor's Award from the Washington Commission for the Humanities in 1992.

The reading is sponsored by the UI English department and is open to the public, free of charge.

Food booth space available

Applications for food booths at the Moscow Renaissance Fair are now available.

Only non-profit organizations are eligible to sell food at the fair. Ed Clark, chair of the fair's food committee, said it is a wonderful opportunity for them to make money. In past years groups have raised up to $4,000 at the fair.

In return for the fundraising opportunity, groups selling food must offer unusual food—something other than the typical burger and pop.

To insure the uniqueness of the food, all prospective menus are judged by the fair food committee. This process includes a taste test. Foods that have been sold and judged before will not have to undergo the taste test.

Clark added that all the foods must be prepared in health-department-approved kitchens.

Food booth entry applications are available by mail by writing Clark care of the fair at P.O. Box 8848, Moscow, ID 83843. Clark can also be contacted by phone at the Upper Crust Bakery at the Moscow Food Co-op at 208-883-1024.

The Moscow Renaissance Fair will be on May 1 and 2 in East City Park. Admission and entertainment are free.

Judging of the entries will be on April 13. During the Dogwood Festival in Lewiston, the
