Authorities discuss how to prevent bogus fire alarms

By GREG BURTON
Staff Writer

The recent rash of fire alarms at Wallace Center has brought together campus, police and fire officials with the goal of preventing future false alarms, not to mention trying to assure students some peace and quiet.

On Wednesday Moscow Fire Chief Phillip Gatlin and acting Campus Police Division Commander Jim Kouril, met with University of Idaho Director of Housing Roger Oettli and Fire Safety Specialist Matt Oulman to offer their prevention suggestions.

Oettli, housing director since January, discussed alternative alarm systems and the possibility of instituting more severe punitive damages, as well as introducing himself to fire and police officials.

Reacting to increased fears from two recent campus bombings, campus officials said they wanted to bring all concerned parties together as soon as possible.

Gatlin said there have been 12 false alarms in the past month in Wallace complex alone, and 21 on the entire campus. "We talked about the possible elimination of the pull stations, and relying on the heat and smoke detectors, but Oettli wanted to discuss all the alternatives before instituting a specific plan."

Oulman said there have been more false alarms this semester than in any one semester in the last three years. "From our standpoint we are worried about people getting too lethargic

Campus facilities manager demoted

By JEFF KAPOSTASY
Staff Writer

With efficiency being the key word, facilities management is set for a major reorganizing effort.

Although the final plans for the restructuring have not been laid down, several changes are set to swing into action. Ken Hall, in charge of facilities management for the past 12 years, was handed the new position of construction manager and shop operations last week. Hall had no comment on the move.

A nationwide search is being conducted to find a new facilities manager.

Facilities management, formerly called the physical plant, is responsible for a plethora of duties on campus, from construction projects, to recycling, to nearly all custodial work.

The restructuring is largely the brainwork of Financial Vice President Jerry Wallace. Wallace said the reorganization will better equip facilities management to handle the tremendous amount of jobs and projects on campus.

"Right now, we're looking at ways of restructuring the entire system, to make it more efficient," Wallace said.

Several changes have already been secured, Wallace said. Information services will now be overseen by computer services. University events and construction will report to Jeff Eisenbarth, financial vice president for auxiliary services.

Also, the construction team may now be up against construction companies in the private sectors for campus projects. This, according to Wallace, will help UI accomplish its projects better.

"One question that has always arisen is if it is less expensive to do projects with companies outside (the university)," Wallace said.

Despite construction competition, Wallace said it is unlikely any construction crews will get bored. Over 300 items are under construction with more on the way.

Despite the restructuring, Wallace said none of the plant workers are in danger of losing their jobs. It had been rumored that some in the plant have been given a pink slip.

"All the people we have are in-line," Wallace said. "There's no indication that we have more people than we need."

UI has been in contact with Servicemaster Inc, which could provide management services for facilities management. Dave Schmitt, speaking from the Servicemaster office in Irvine, Calif., said they could provide management for the various custodial crews, redirecting current management "to do other things."

Schmitt said improved quality, reduced costs, higher worker morale and reduced administrative load could all be benefits to bringing in Servicemaster.

Wallace said there has been dialogue, but nothing is set yet.

Idaho's salmon problem discussed

By DAVID JACKSON
Staff Writer

With the changing of the guard in Washington D.C. and the "new generation's" focus on cleaning up the environment, questions have been raised about the costs of such a cleanup.

According to University of Idaho Professor Larry Makus, those questions are not just limited to highly visible, environmentally hazardous areas.

"The Pacific Northwest and Idaho will not be immune to these environmental questions of economics," he warned.

Makus, an associate professor in agriculture economics, spoke at the third presentation of the UI's Roundtable. His lecture, entitled "Economic Impacts of Idaho's Environmental Concerns," addressed the problem of cases unique to Idaho.

Makus started by talking about the Endangered Species Act, a bill passed by Congress in 1973 protecting certain species once they were determined to be endangered. Once a species is placed on the list, he said, the act will provide a program to preserve them.

While people may think salmon runs are limited to the Columbia River in Washington, Makus said that is not so.

Typically, salmon are hatched in freshwater and then return to the ocean to mature. Once they mature, they must return to the freshwater of a river to spawn.

At first, that doesn't seem so difficult. However, due to the need for cheap hydroelectric power, the salmon's trip has been blocked by numerous dams on the Columbia and Snake Rivers.

"The dams affect the salmon both upstream and downstream," Makus said. "When they are coming upstream, their main means of getting through are fish ladders. Coming downstream, they run into lakes which can sometimes double their migration time, leaving them open to predators and disease."

Makus said a better way of avoiding the downstream problem is to barge the fish downstream after collecting them at various spots along the rivers.

The economics of dealing with these problems, however, will prove to be much trickier. Makus identified three ways of cost analysis for dealing with these species, depending on their label.

"If a species is not immediately threatened or in danger, we use a basic benefit cost analysis," he said. "We measure the value of a situation, figure out the cost of fixing it, and see if it's worth fixing by looking at the ratio."

"If a species is threatened, we look at the cost effectiveness of the program. Preservation is a high priority, so we see which solution is the least costly while still being able to accomplish our goal."

"If a species is endangered, we use something called cost oblivious, which means economics may not play a large role in solving the problem," Makus said.

The problem is certainly real, as the data furnished by Makus suggested. At the height of its run, 10 to 16 million salmon came down the Columbia each year. Today, that number rests around 2.5 million. The solutions, he argued, will not come easy.

about leaving the building, thinking an alarm is false."

Campus officials stressed the need for increased awareness by all students. Oulman said a significant reduction in false alarms would be possible through residents watching out for themselves.

"No one wants to be awakened by a fire alarm every two hours," said Kouril. "What I can do is offer suggestions, but the university will have to establish a set plan of prevention."

University officials met again on Thursday to formulate a specific plan of action.

Crime on campus slowed considerably over break but two thefts were reported relating to the springtime student exodus.

The Wallace Complex storage room was once again the scene of thievery. Sophomore Jaynee Cavaness told police her Syslink Computer System was stolen sometime over break.

In her police report Cavaness indicated the possibility the door was left ajar or someone with a key to the storage room took the computer. Police found no evidence of forced entry.

Kouril said the computer and related hardware were all marked with Cavaness' social security number. Value for the system has been placed around $1,200, which would constitute grand theft.

Also stolen over break was the gas tank from a 1983 Honda 750 Interceptor. Junior Rob Lewis said the tank, valued at $600, was taken sometime between March 12 - 22, when he parked it off of Sixth St. in Lot 12, when he returned from break.

In the continuing Gault Hall bombing investigations, Sgt. Neil Odenborg said he has received the Federal Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms report on the recovered bomb fragments, and he is preparing to arrange interviews in Moscow next week.

Odenborg said ATF reports indicated the type of powder used, the type of fuses and how the bomb was assembled.

One bomb detonated inside a Gault Hall toilet and one which ripped through the interior of a car in the Hall parking lot. The two bombings, although feared to be the start of a serial bombing, have not been followed with any further threats or copy-bombings.

Police are still searching for two male suspects seen fleeing the scene immediately after both bombings. Odenborg said there were no positive suspects at this time.

Fraternity bikes to Boise for charity

By SHARI IRETON
News Editor

Riding a bike over 300 miles may not be the ideal way to spend a weekend, but it is if it's for a good cause.

The Delta Sigma Phi fraternity is riding a tandem bicycle to Boise at this very moment, raising money for the March of Dimes. The men started the ride for their philanthropy Wednesday morning.

According to Eli Perry, the men switch riders about every 30 miles and "everybody who wants to" will ride down. The bike is a two seater, Perry said, and looks like is from the 60's. "We tried to rent one or get one donated, but that fell through," he said.

Perry said the riders who braved the Lewiston grade had an interesting experience. "Well, they were going about 45 miles an hour."

So far the group has raised $2,500 in "per mile" donations and will present the money to the regional March of Dimes representative when they arrive in Boise.

A place for students to climb a wall

When the pressure of college comes down on students, they feel as if they are about to climb the walls.

Well, they can now that the university unveiled a new climbing wall in the Memorial Gym.

Mike Beiser, Assistant Coordinator of the Outdoor Program, said that while the University of Idaho may not be the first college to have a climbing wall, it is on the leading edge.

"I'd say it's unique for college campuses, but eventually there will be many, many more."

The idea started about three years ago, when some students and instructors came up with the concept of the wall, and the final design was done by Ray Pankopf, an architect for Facilities Management. "The concept," said Beiser, "was borrowed from existing climbing walls from other schools."

"I think that the beauty of it was...the total cooperation between so many departments," he added. Beiser said the seed money originally came from ASUI, but "nobody really knows the final cost of the thing."

The room the wall is housed in was formerly a raquetball court, donated by campus recreation, and is now titled the Adventure Educational Facility. Beiser said the facility combines two activities into one room, rock climbing and rope climbing.

"The outdoor program has been teaching rock climbing and mountaineering for 20 years now," said Beiser, but they were always limited by weather and daylight. Now, the group can go rock climbing or practice belaying 24 hours a day and seven days a week.

"People will be more prepared for the real thing when we go out in the field," he said.

Although students, staff and faculty can climb for free, the university will not let just anyone start making their way up the wall. "No matter what their experience," said Beiser, "they have to go through an orientation. Orientations will be held within the first hour of the climbing time."

'Lead ... or Leave' wants Congress to do just that

Just when students were starting to feel completely powerless about the fate of our country, along comes an organization that offers a glimmer of hope.

Sort of.

"Lead ... or Leave" is a national, non-partisan group that has come up with an interesting strategy for battling the federal deficit.

The deficit, as Americans of all ages know, is continuing its upward spiral. The deficit is currently in the range of $4.2 trillion, which, according to Lead ... or Leave, is enough to pay Michael Jordan's salary for 1.3 million years.

Or buy 200 billion copies of "The Way Things Ought To Be" by Rush Limbaugh.

Or roughly 2.4 trillion hot dogs at the Kibbie Dome, providing someone could be harangued into cooking that many.

Lead ... or Leave, which bills itself as a "political voice for younger Americans," has initiated a campaign designed to mobilize high school and college students, with the purpose of forcing the U.S.

Congress into reducing the deficit.

"America's ... debt is destroying our future," say the group's co-founders, Jon Cowan and Rob Nelson.

"Every younger American has a stake in pressuring Congress to make the tough choices that will lower our rising debts and save our generation from economic catastrophe."

Their plan is so simple it is almost devious.

Lead ... or Leave is asking younger Americans to sign a pledge to commit themselves to a half day of volunteer community service if Congress votes to cut the deficit in half by 1996.

Judging from history and the pork barrel spending tendencies of our congressional representatives, that seems like a pretty fair bet. No one expects Congress to buckle down and attack the deficit anytime soon.

But that should not detract from the goals of Lead ... or Leave. As students, many of whom are just beginning to develop a political awareness, we have the opportunity to let Congress and the powers that be know we have them under close scrutiny.

Politics is something we will be called on to deal with on a daily basis. We can no longer afford to remain silent while other people decide our future.

While signing the pledge is largely a symbolic action, it may be one way to get our message across.

In the time it has taken to read this editorial, the deficit has increased more than $600,000. That is approximately 342,857 and one-seventh hot dogs.

Just because we didn't start the problem doesn't mean we should wait around for someone else to solve it. This is the chance for students and young Americans to shine.

There is no reason not to take the Lead ... or Leave pledge. For information, call 1-800-99-CHANGE.

Idaho's burning timber issues

We live in the Gem State, but mining isn't too popular among the politically correct crowd. We grow "Famous Potatoes," but many of our own people complain about the acres of land used for farming.

We live not in glass houses, but wooden ones. Yet, we are throwing the proverbial rock at our glass homes by cutting-off the timber necessary to build houses at affordable prices. Lumber costs have risen so rapidly that a typical house costs $5,000 more than it did just last fall.

No, that reasoning is all wrong and stilted.

Here's what is really happening. To build our individual houses (and many houses overseas) we are tearing down our state home through deforestation. We are urbanizing land to live and work on but not leaving any land to recreate on. We are boxing our animals into small wilderness areas when they need room to roam. While we take care of ourselves we are recklessly endangering them.

As abortion, health care, and the economy take center stage in national politics, perhaps no other issue is more volatile state-wide than wilderness. In Idaho, it's a battle for the land. And backpackers, loggers, environmentalists, developers, motorcyclists, and just plain opinionated people are clamoring with different views. Sometimes it's plain

Separation won't bring equality

I wanted to stay away from this hot potato. After all, it is always fun to watch people argue over an issue in which both parties have no intention of changing their ideals.

The topic here is homosexuality, and the rhetoric has reached a stagnant stage where both sides are now in a tug-of-war to gain the momentum back. Words like lifestyle choice are thrown back and forth to make matters look like a wrestling match for the last morsel in a cookie jar.

Thankfully, Bill Clinton's administration has chosen to get involved in the issue and make some resolutions.

A recent wire story about the matter took a new angle, though, and it proved too attractive a piece of bait to pass up.

In the piece, a group of Cornell University students in New York are jockeying for housing that would exclusively shelter gay people. The Cornell Student Assembly has already proposed that a dormitory wing be reserved for homosexuals or heterosexuals who want to promote "gay, lesbian and bisexual awareness."

The push for this proposal stemmed from the experiences of one gay woman who saw a piece of sidewalk graffiti that read "1-800-Die-Homo."

Rather than roll her eyes and dismiss it as the rambling of an idiot, this woman has attempted to seek the all-gay housing project.

If she thinks the harassment is bad now...

The faultiness in such a plan is the assumption that such housing would harbor some of these people from the gay bashers who make life tough for them.

Wrong. What would most likely happen is harassment intensifying because gay groups would be receiving special privileges that other groups on campus don't enjoy. Such a notion of separate but equal is nonsense because it opposes the very idea of equality that gay groups want for themselves.

To make a parallel, look at the efforts of blacks to push for an equal society. Ranging from Martin Luther King, Jr., to filmmaker John Singleton, blacks have made the apt point that they are as big a part of the melting pot as white Americans.

At no time, though, have any of these activists pushed for separate living quarters. Segregated conditions, in fact, were the core essence of why many black Americans were chafing. Being pushed away from society was the reason why blacks began their cause.

Suffering from no less an indignation have been gay groups who have had to suffer through years of criticism and now even discriminatory legisla-

Moscow no longer tolerant & caring

Editor;
My heart is truly and deeply disheartened by the incessant opinions of extreme hatred expressed by our so-called liberal and accepting community. Just a few weeks ago, some members of our "tolerant" community directed vindictive emotions towards the participants of a dance that was aimed at broadening the dialogue between the homosexual, bisexual and heterosexual communities as well as dissipating society's homophobic ideologies. The dialogue that ensued, however, was nothing more than a conglomeration of hateful words.

Subsequently I have observed in both simple conversations and local letters to the editor attitudes that enthrone bigotry, hate and self-interest. Beliefs in tolerance, love and genuine concern for humanity have sadly disappeared in this small college town. I have heard several people say, "Idaho is what America used to be." If that statement is referring to the America before Civil Rights, Woman's Rights, or the basic respect of "human rights," then it reflects nothing more than the bitter reality.

Possibly just as unfortunate is the fact that university students seem more interested in beer and parties than in helping stop hatred in our community. They could perhaps elect a Klansman, Hitler youth or Mussolini brownshirt to represent them without realizing what that representative truly stood for (that is, if they DO vote). Moscow seems to have lost any love it used to have -- at least a voice for that love. I hope that Moscow can find a voice for the tolerance and respect for human dignity that disappeared so long ago. This community seems to have forgotten Martin Luther King, Jr.'s insightful words: "Hatred and bitterness can never cure the disease of fear; only love can do that. Hatred paralyzes life; love harmonizes it. Hatred darkens life; love harmonizes it. Hatred darkens life; love illumines it." Sadly, this community has replaced thoughts of love with those of hate.

Cooper needs to purge his own evils

Editor;
This is an open letter to Lyle E. Cooper. In response to your letter on page 4 of the March 12, 1993 Argonaut addressing why you believe homosexuals are the way they are, it seems that you might not have completed the task of purging yourself of your own evil spirits when you claim that "Evil spirits can be cast out. I know because I have cast them out." I suggest that you return to that day's issue of the Argonaut and read the juxtaposed article on page 5 entitled "Take the test: Are you a homophobe?" You appear to have an enormous stand of old growth timber in both of your eyes. It is the selective application of "God's word" that drove me from the prejudices of organized religion twenty five years ago. Religion should come from within and should be something very private, kept only between you and your God. Try it. You might find that you are a better person for it.

Guest Commentary

Fifteen minutes before the bomb went off in the garage between the World Trade Center Towers, someone called in a bomb threat, and identified themselves as members of a Serbian support group. Since this was the only call about the bomb before it went off, it gained a certain amount of credence as to being from the people who did the dirty deed, but the question came to my mind: "If the Serbs did indeed plant this bomb, why would they want the credit? Wouldn't it make more sense for a bomb-planting Serb to call in ahead of time and generously give the credit to a Croatian or Muslim support group? Why hog all the credit? Then, when the bomb went off, we'd be mad at the Croats or Muslims, not the Serbs. Why would you a Serbian terrorist want an American "smart bomb" down his chimney?"

It appears that my basic premise may have been correct, and it was a Muslim in Serbian sheep's clothing, and, boy, is he in deep doo doo. If he thought it was hard to get sympathy for Muslims before...

I think this dingleberry is lucky that the Ayatollah Khomeini is a confirmed kill, otherwise he might be joining Salman Rushdie on the Iranian Hit Parade.

Go for it girl

Wednesday (March 10, 1993) at 12:30 I went to the Law School Courtroom for what I thought would be an interesting learning experience. It was indeed. I saw and heard Ida Leggett speak her informal speech basically about how she became the Honorable Ida Leggett, a district court judge in Idaho. Her experience and wisdom brought tears to this poor white girl's eyes. She spoke of growing up in Alabama under segregation, attending law school, graduating early with honors, and having her classmates who were of lower class standing (grades) not think she deserved to be the conference champion (as far as the best brief presented, etc.) because of her skin color. She accomplished all this while being a then-single parent of three small children. She worked hard for every 'A' she earned, to support a family of her own, and every ounce of recognition she may have received, but she didn't deserve it because of her skin color?!? (Let's not mention the fact that she happens to be a woman.)

But despite all this she stressed the idea of being able to do whatever you desire, and having life lead you in whatever direction you wish to go IF you are willing to work hard enough for it. I think this is a very important point because many members of my own family and friends did not think I could make it this far with my lack of funds, lack of monetary support from my parents, and lack of social standing. It hasn't been easy, but bitter and ugly. The arguments in the land debate often center on three different fronts: What's best for the animals, the people, and the forest itself.

Animals share Idaho with us and they must be considered in any land use plan. Most of these animals need more space to live than we do. We can't give a herd of elk their one thousand acres and expect them not to leave it.

We must also consider how our actions impact a species' health. Mankind has almost single-handedly endangered certain animals. The buffalo were annihilated on the fruited plains in the 1800's. California Condors have been shot down to the point where I have more immediate relatives living than they have in their species.

But animals throughout history have died out without any help from people at all. It's rather egotistical to think we are always the sole cause endangering species. Nature itself factors in more than we sometimes like to admit.

Those arguing for what's best for the people of the state are generally arguing for what's best for themselves. Loggers say Idahoans favor economic prosperity and lower lumber costs over preservation and recreation. Environmentalists claim people desire the opposite.

Forest well-being is the most nebulous element. The forest must be looked at from a micro scale of the immediate area and also at a macro level of the regional and global forest. Forest well-being has an immediate and a future dimension also. The forest has shown great resiliency at recovering from natural disasters for thousands of years, but what we take from the forest we should plant back.

Until we find a direction, we will continue to play the game with clear winners and losers.

Winners: Lawyers. Don't they seem to win at almost everything. The headlines are so frequent that newspaper editors have fill-in-the-blank forms for them. (Environmental group) sues Forest Service over logging policies in (Wilderness area) or (Timber group) appeals logging ban in (Wilderness area). The lawyers capture most of the cash in these long and costly suits.

Losers: Loggers and farmers. The loss is only slightly economic, but mostly in respect. Too often these workers are berated for trying to make a living. The living they make keeps us all living. They provide our nourishment and shelter. Their work is noble even if their methods aren't always so.

I won't pretend I'm wise enough to know the wilderness allotment solution. It's almost as difficult as bringing peace to the Middle East. I do see enough problems of disrespect and hostility to hope for a wise solution soon. On this one I'm with you President Clinton, "The paralysis now gripping the lives of people out there (the Northwest) is totally unacceptable."

tion in states such as Oregon (was rejected by voters) and Colorado (was okayed by state voters). They have begun to push back, saying they are as vital to society as heterosexual members.

While that activism is admirable, the concept of creating a separate society is asinine. It indicates a weak platform where gay people want equality but are too sensitive to go about forcing some.

Tell that to Rosa Parks, the black woman who stiff-armed her way through white criticism many years ago and faced arrest for refusing to sit at the back of the bus.

She thumbed her nose at mainstream conventions and was part of the changing process that has forced society to give blacks their due recognition.

Using similar logic, opponents of the Cornell plan have noted that gay housing would essentially create a segregated environment that could exacerbate hostile relations between gays and heterosexuals. Critics argue that instead of making themselves part of campus, gays are making their own.

Certainly, gays are as deserving of equal rights as everyone else in this country. However, they are not deserving of special consideration. Running away from a controversy simply makes matters worse.

Gay people should follow Parks' lead and push for their seat at the front of the bus. They do not, however, deserve their own bus.

Player of the Week, Orlando Lightfoot.

With a winning percentage of .750 and a 24-8 record, the Vandals are one of the top teams in the West. Of the 32 teams you selected, only Pepperdine (22-7, .750), has a better winning record than the Vandals.

We fail to see how you justify leaving a team like the Vandals caliber out of your tournament. The NIT is supposed to be an athletic event. Not a political fundraiser.

You have prostituted this event. And the lack of integrity in your selection is deplorable. We would appreciate a written explanation.

Thank you for your time.

nobody said it would be.

But why should it be even harder than usual for some people just because they're a different color or sex than the person in charge? It makes no sense to me.

But here's to the women like Ida Leggett who are role models for the rest of us (even though she feels uncomfortable being called a role model). They are proof that with enough hard work there is hope. You can make it despite all the people (let's not mention esp. white males) who try to keep you down and tell you you can't do it and make you doubt yourself. YOU CAN accomplish anything with hard work and determination. Go for it, girl.

NCAA tournament stirs memories of past

■ UI veterans reflect on monumental sweep 55 years ago

By LOREN ROBERTS
Sports Editor

Of the 16 teams still remaining in the 1993 NCAA Tournament, the Idaho Vandal men's basketball program has had the opportunity of playing seven of them (Kentucky, Michigan, Western Kentucky, California, Indiana, Louisville and Kansas) at some point in the school's history.

And in the 88 year existence of the black and gold on the hardwood, Idaho has faced such national champions of the past as Duke, Georgetown, Nevada-Las Vegas, UCLA and San Francisco.

But quite possibly the biggest games and most talented team that an Idaho squad ever faced was 55 years ago against an unfamiliar champion.

The University of Oregon Ducks.

Idaho, which at the time played in the Pacific Coast Conference, faced league competition that included Washington State University, the University of Washington, Oregon State University, the University of Montana and Oregon. The teams would play each other four times a year along with some non-conference competition.

On Friday, February 11, 1938 Oregon travelled over to Moscow to face the Vandals in the first of a two game weekend series. The highly touted Ducks, who came to the Palouse with a 10-3 record, were ready to take control of the conference race with a couple wins over the 7-5 Vandals.

Roy Ramey, a sophomore who was a reserve forward for the Vandals, knew how good the Oregon team was that Idaho was to face.

"In Oregon the team was a legend," Ramey said. "Everyone was aware of how well that team played."

Oregon, led by highly acclaimed junior forward Laddie Gale, confused the Vandals early with a zone defense. But both teams began the game cold as neither team took a shot for the first two minutes of action. Bill Kramer finally got the ball rolling for Idaho by hitting an open shot and getting the near capacity crowd in Memorial Gym behind the team.

Numerous teammates of Kramer's then got into the action as center Bren Barrett, Steve Belco and captain Don Johnson got on the board to help Idaho to a 16-10 lead. Unlike basketball today, there was a jump ball at midcourt after each team scored. This slowed the scoring down significantly, so at the break it was Idaho 24, Oregon 16.

To begin the second half the Ducks began strong as they mounted a drive to bring them within one of Idaho. The Vandals scored a deuce with eight minutes remaining to go up 30-27 and then both teams folded offensively. Neither squad found the cylinder for five minutes until Barrett and Gale exchanged free throws. Lyle Smith then tacked on two more from the charity stripe to give Idaho a thrilling 33-28 upset over their league rival.

The excitement was just beginning for Vandal fans, however.

On Saturday night Idaho looked to expand its record as a new sense of confidence brewed within the players and head coach Forest Twogood. A win would pull Idaho within a half game of the Ducks and keep them in contention for the Northern Division Championship with only about a month left of play.

But Oregon, looking for a split on the trip, jumped on the Vandals early as they took a 22-14 lead into halftime. Idaho didn't fold, though, as it stormed its way to a 9-1 run to knot the score at 23 apiece just five minutes into the second half. Neither team could mount a run after that as the score was tied on five occasions at 27, 28, 30, 32 and 34.

Willis Bohman, a reserve center for Idaho, noted the inability of either team to shut the door on the game.

"It was neck and neck all the way," Bohman recalls. "No one had gotten an advantage towards the end."

Then, with one second to play, Idaho got an advantage.

With the score tied at 34-34, Bohman entered the game for Johnson who had committed his fourth foul and subsequently fouled out. Oregon then attempted a game winning shot in the closing seconds and as the miss came off the rim, Bohman pulled down the rebound and was fouled by Gale. With 3,200 fans in Memorial sitting on the edge of their seats, Bohman calmly sank the free throw to give Idaho the sweep and send the crowd into hysterics.

"I'd say it was one of the biggest wins ever," Bohman said. "They were a good team."

Despite the two victories, Idaho went on to finish about .500 on the season. Oregon, on the other hand, finished a strong 21-8 against collegiate teams and amassed an overall record of 25-8.

But the most remarkable aspect of Idaho's triumphant weekend wouldn't come for another year.

In the 1938-'39 season, after returning all five starters from the year before, the Ducks went on to win the first ever NCAA Tournament. Idaho didn't fair as well against the national champion Oregon team, though, as it lost all four of its meetings that year to a team that went 26-5 that season including a 3-0 record in the "Big Dance." Oregon defeated the University of Texas and the University of Oklahoma in San Francisco and then beat Ohio State 46-33 in Evanston, Illinois to win the title and make history.

And for the Vandal squad of 1938, they too share a small, yet memorable part of history as well.

Alaskan excursion may be UI's first time to the top

By TRACIE BRUNO
Associate Editor

This May, four University of Idaho students are setting their sights toward "the high one" — the summit of Denali.

As part of a UI climbing expedition, brothers John and Tom Rust, Amy McGeachin and Rob Haggart will be leaving for Denali (the original Indian name for Mount McKinley, which is in Alaska) on May 10. Denali, which is the highest mountain in North America at 20,320 feet, has been previously attempted by three UI Outdoor Program expeditions. The last UI group reached 18,000 feet before turning around.

This year's group has been preparing for the expedition by intensively conditioning their cardiovascular systems.

"We've been doing a lot of physical conditioning trying to get our lung capacity up and conditioning our legs," said senior Tom Rust.

His brother John, a law student, is not a stranger to intense physical training. John was a former linebacker for the UI football team.

The May expedition will not be the first time the group has worked together. The mountaineers climbed Mount Rainer last week for some extra training. The trip, however, turned into more of an adventure than expected.

"We got involved in a rescue on the way down," Tom said. "The previous night on the mountain there was a bad storm. Coming down the mountain we spotted some people who had not dug a good shelter for themselves the night before, and hypothermia had set in."

Tom said they sent Haggart up the mountain to find the Rainer Mountain Services while they tended to the people.

"It was very fortunate that we were there, otherwise they would have been another mountain statistic," John said. He said it was also fortunate that the Service was on the mountain. Normally they are not.

The challenge of climbing Denali will not be without its own dangers and formidable difficulties. Positioned in the Alaskan Range, it is the largest single mountain mass in the world, rising from almost sea level to 20,320 feet. Additionally, being located 35 degrees latitude further north than Everest and less than 200 miles south of the Arctic Circle, Denali is one of the coldest mountains in the world. Its spring and summer temperatures range from 40 degrees to minus 40 degrees. With accompanying winds of 80 to 100 mph, it presents one of the most hostile climates on earth. This, claims the group, is their challenge.

However, the experienced climbers will be taking more than a few safety measures to insure that their 30-day trip is risk free.

"The route we are taking is not a big risk compared to some of the others," John said. "The risk of fall is not tremendous and the trails have fixed ropes on them...you still have to be cautious it's not an easy excursion."

University of Idaho golf course set for new season

By DOUG TAYLOR
Assistant Editor

Don Rasmussen probably isn't much of a snow fan.

Rasmussen, the assistant golf pro behind head pro Don Bails, has seen the UI links buried in snow this winter, but as is obvious to most students, that snow cover has evaporated.

With that out of the way, Bails and Rasmussen opened the back nine holes of the course last Sunday. Rasmussen indicated that all 18 holes are now fully operational. Hours are 7:30 a.m. until dark Monday through Friday and 7 a.m. until dark on the weekends.

With the new season has come a steady promise from Rasmussen.

"I can guarantee pricewise that it is a great deal," he said. "We're considerably less expensive than Spokane area courses."

Specifically, golf zealots can play nine holes for $7 and $9 for 18 holes if they are Idaho students. Public prices are $9 and $11 for nine and 18 holes, respectively.

The hardcore golf fan can save some decided cash if a season ticket is purchased for the semester ($95) or for the full 12-month season ($230).

The beginner who is still trying to cure that troublesome slice can hack away at the course's driving range where a small bucket of balls can be purchased for $1.25 and a large bucket for $2.50.

Lessons are also available for the beginner. Prices are $20 for a 30-minute lesson or $90 for five lessons. Rasmussen said that both he and Bails handle the tutoring sessions. According to Rasmussen, second assistant pro

University of Idaho assistant golf pro Don Rasmussen watches as his first drive of the year floats onto the fairway. (JEFF CURTIS PHOTO)

Bob Breidenbach might be handling some lessons in the future.

Don't have your own set of Pings? Not to worry said Rasmussen. The pro shop has been completely remodeled, but it still offers a full set of rental equipment.

Rasmussen said there have been changes outside of the pro shop as well.

"We will be putting new tees up on the 13th hole, and we will also be improving our ponds because we have had some trouble in the past with algae and other scum," Rasmussen said. "We are shooting for the day that there is a constant flow of water in our ponds so that algae can't build up."

Using the recently opened facilities will be Bails and his men's and women's golf teams. The women's squad was recently assembled by the UI athletic department to meet Title IX gender equality mandates.

Bails said that the men's team has completed all but one of their matches, which will be held April 19-20 in Boise. The Vandal men will be one of several teams participating in the Boise State University Invitational.

He mentioned that qualifying rounds will be held soon, and he expects 10 members of the men's team to be competing for a chance to be in the BSU meet.

One of the favorites in the qualifying rounds should be junior Craig Stotts, who is the captain of the men's team. In evaluating the team's overall performance, Bails said that this has been a so-so season.

"We're young this year with only one senior, and I would have to say that we have had a middle of the road season," Bails said.

The women, meanwhile, will test their skills April 3-4 in Boise. Seven women are competing for the five spots allotted the team in the April match.

Bails said that golf isn't like many collegiate sports where teams are organized into conferences. This year, however, is the last time this will occur as next year will bring conferences for the region's collegiate teams.

"Next year, we have a conference for both men and women, and the conference championship for both will be held here in October," Bails said.

John added that there are compass bearings to guide them up the glacier.

"The toughest part about the trip will probably be the weather because it's something we can't control," John said.

As far as food and clothing?

"We have to keep a high calorie intake...light foods with a lot of carbohydrates," John said. "Once we get above 14,000 (feet) our bodies will not be able to burn fat, so we'll pack some freeze-dried foods."

"We'll also pack warm clothing, Gortex, polypropylene, fleece and down," Tom added.

As far as shelter goes, the group will pack tents. However, because of the high winds they will need to build five-foot walls around them. Due to the freezing temperatures, on some nights they will need to build igloos. John said the igloos should take them between an hour to three hours to build, depending on the condition of the snow.

"The igloos will usually stay about 30 degrees inside," John said.

Nonetheless, climbing Denali in this day and age is not unique.

"As many as 1,000 attempt the summit each year. What is unique about our climb is that we are undertaking this challenge independently and self-guided," said Tom.

With only four members on the team, John, Tom, Haggart and McGeachin will be able to attack the mountain with much more mobility than UI's previous 10-member expedition teams.

The group's cohesiveness should take them to the top. John admits that the group's strengths lie in the fact they all work well together.

"Everything we do is a group decision, and we use everyone's knowledge to make the decisions," John said.

Unlike other collegiate sports, to the dismay of this group, mountaineering receives no funding. The lack of funding is probably due to the fact that mountaineering is not a spectator sport.

The group has gathered sponsors to help defer the costs. In addition, they are selling "Denali '93" T-shirts. The T-shirts, which are $10, are available at the Outdoor Programs office in the basement of the SUB and at the UI Bookstore.

Rain wipes out games

By DOUG TAYLOR
Assistant Editor

University of Idaho baseball coach Daryl Reiersen is ready for some spring weather. Besides rain that is.

The Vandals should have 18 games under their belts so far but have emerged with just four completed games and a 0-4 record.

Traveling to Seattle over Spring Break provided a small capsule of the UI season as six of the 10 games proved to be washouts.

At least they played. Before that stretch, four doubleheaders had been wiped out because of rain. In fact, the Vandals haven't even been able to practice at Guy Wicks Field.

"We haven't stepped foot on our infield as far as practicing," lamented Reiersen. "I've never seen a spring like this in my time here at Idaho. Last year, we were on Wicks in the second week of February."

As Reiersen certainly knows, however, Mother Nature doesn't bend for anybody, and so it is with baited breath that Reiersen will take his club to Cheney for doubleheaders Saturday and Sunday against Eastern Washington.

"It has been frustrating and hopefully, we can get some games in this weekend," he said.

The Eagles and Vandals are tentatively set to tangle at noon for both sets of doubleheaders. Reiersen is not sure who he will be starting on the mound, but John Konrad figures to see some action after throwing well in one of the Spring Break losses.

Although rain has proved detrimental to Reiersen's patience, the delays have given some of his pitchers a chance to heal their sore arms. Reiersen mentioned Dan Broyles as one of a couple of starters who have experienced fatigue and minor soreness.

At the plate, Aaron Anderson and J.B. Blessinger both enjoyed strong outings on the Seattle trip, and Reiersen hopes to get more players involved in the offensive attack this weekend.

"We've done what we can given the circumstances, but there is no substitute for live action at the plate," Reiersen said.

Despite the lack of game experience, Reiersen said he is pleased by the execution of his team in situations such as hit-and-runs and baserunning.

Play explores family life of AIDS victim

By MICHELLE BARGEN
Staff Writer

"Patchwork," a play by Ariana Burns, will be performed March 29 at 9 p.m. in the Gault Party Room in Gault Hall and next April 2 at 8 p.m. at the Collette Theatre. The first performance was last Wednesday at the Unitarian Church.

The Palouse AIDS Network commissioned the play as part of a program to increase AIDS awareness, and Burns chose to dedicate it to David Henson, a Moscow man who recently died of AIDS this year.

"Patchwork" is an intricate weaving of the lives of one family, over the generations, as they deal with situations that arise when one family member develops AIDS. Fears, embarrassments, denials and love are explored as the family members confront each other and their own emotions.

The reactions of the outside world, though unseen on stage, are also woven into the story. The cast is composed of area performers. Troy Sprende plays the grandmother who gives universal advice to her grandson. Gerry Cortwright, a Moscow High student, portrays the AIDS victim at a younger age. Meg Gibson is the ex-wife who must face her own denials. Amy Ulen portrays the sister who must deal honestly with her brother's life. Alvin Berg plays the brother-in-law who is painfully honest, and Jon Sprende portrays the brother who has contracted AIDS.

Ariana Burns, who is a Moscow author, also directs the play. As a University of Idaho graduate, she is involved with the Collette Theatre and the Moscow Community Theatre. Her first play, "A Stick in the Spoke", took her to the finals in the American College Theatre Playwright Competition.

Jesus Jones

and their latest sound...

Perverse

CD - ALBUM - CASSETTE

By JASON UHLMAN
Staff Writer

Hot off the presses and ready to please, Jesus Jones' new album Perverse is really a sure thing.

It's a better album than their last album Doubt, which has sold over two million copies. Perverse is a fast paced run through the world as we know it, or actually the world as Jesus Jones sees it. It's the same type of sound that put Jesus Jones on the top of the charts in the first place, only this time they took a good thing and made it phenomenal.

In the album "A Perverse Conversation with Jesus Jones," (which, by the way, is not available to the general public) the band talks about their feelings on making Perverse and the myriad of influences that helped the new album take shape.

"Perverse was a very difficult album to make. There was an element of having a lot of pressure from the success of Doubt. We desperately wanted to be an alternative band and help overthrow that corporate rock thing."

In trying to hit home with what the youth of today are feeling about the problems they face, Jesus Jones wrote songs like "Idiot Stare," which is about the "complete and total apathy you feel when you face a serious depression."

On a lighter side, the tune "Get a Good Thing" tells you just what the title suggests.

"It is simple and straight forward. You've got to get a good thing when you see it. There is really nothing beyond that. It is something that goes by in a flash and is hugely enjoyable as it goes by," Jesus Jones said.

They also talked about the focus and inspiration for their hit album Doubt.

"Our music does reflect what's happening around us. People still consider Jesus Jones to be a brash, hyperconfident, breezy, jolly pop band. They never stopped to wonder why the album was called Doubt."

Perverse is a dynamic, high strung, power punch album that could be described as the climax of alternative music. Jesus Jones is one of the few alternative bands that put in the time and effort to produce an album of this quality.

Perverse consistently reflects their attitude and talent and is definitely worth a listen.

Athletes will swim, bike, run in tenth annual race

By RUSS WOOLSEY
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho Palouse Triathlon will swim, run and cycle into its 10th season on April 18.

Jeff Kuhl, race director, said the Palouse Triathlon is a middle distance event compared to other events such as the ironman and ultra distance triathlons, which he referred to as "getting drastic."

Kuhl came to UI from Houston, where he was involved with similar events. He said he was excited to see how this event turned out.

The Palouse Triathlon is an international standard distance event that features a 1.5 kilometer swim, a 40 kilometer cycling segment, and a 10 kilometer run. The race is in the same format to be used in the 1996 Olympics in Atlanta and is roughly half the distance of an ironman or ultra distanced triathlon.

Triathletes begin heats at 7:30 a.m. in the UI swimming pool. After the swimming leg of the event, competitors will change into their cycling attire and pedal through the Palouse on a course which traditionally features headwinds the entire way.

The second transition will take place next to the Kibbie Dome outdoor track and then the running section of the triathlon will take competitors out the old Pullman highway and back to finish on the outdoor track.

The Palouse Triathlon started as a local event that drew competitors from the surrounding area. But this year as many as 100 competitors will compete from all over the Pacific Northwest.

Wade Grow, competitor and organizer of the event, said, "In the past (the event) was a college thing, but this year (the event) could have 20 to 25 competitors from Spokane."

Grow said Spokane has one of the largest concentrations of triathletes in the country, next to San Diego and other more populated areas.

The Palouse Triathlon will be a "triathlete's dream," Grow said referring to the organization of the event. "You've got to have fairness; we will not tolerate any exceptions to the rules."

Twenty-four-year-old Scott Scholes of Pullman is favored to repeat as men's champion of the event. Scholes has been training for the event this year and believes he has a good chance of finishing under the two hour mark.

In the womens division 36-year-old Kristi Kinkade of Spokane is expected to repeat as women's champion. She is the two-time winner and current record holder of the Palouse Triathlon with a time of 2:30.22.

The record for the Palouse Triathlon was set in 1990 by Allan Wright, with a time of 1:59.43. Wright has since gone professional.

This year the event will add a pre, and post Triathlon function at Branegan's Restaurant on the Pullman highway for competitors and volunteers.

Entry forms can be found at the Intramural Office located at 204 Memorial Gym, or at Northwest Mountain Sports located at 1016 Pullman Rd.

Ancient Chinese method finds way into modern medicine

By LANAE EMPEY
Staff Writer

Ancient Chinese mystery has found its way into Moscow's medical services, in the form of acupuncture.

Acupuncture is between 5,000 and 7,000 years old. Its success is dependent upon the belief there is an energy network traversing just below the skin's surface. This network is thought to communicate from the exterior to the internal organs. There is believed to be over 1,000 acupoints on the human body.

These points lie on meridians or vessels. The Chinese describe these as the vessels that carry life-energy.

The Chinese believe stimulation of these acupoints can repair blocked or weakened points on the body. At least it can't hurt, according to Moscow acupuncturist John Sandell.

"It either helps you or does no harm, so it can be used for any condition," Sandell said.

It is used for a multitude of conditions, Sandell said. His practice commonly uses it for sports injuries, headaches, backaches and arthritic pain. Many athletes come in for relief from tendonitis, Sandell said. He estimates 20 percent of the clientele are students.

"I would only suggest it after the traditional methods have been tried," Barry Steele, a University of Idaho athletic trainer, said. He attributes his caution to the fact that the Americas and Europe have not conducted many concrete studies on acupuncture. He knows of students who have undergone acupuncture for injuries, but it has not been through UI.

Acupuncture is truly finding a place in the medical society, however. It is used for anything from smoking to drug addiction to weight control, with startlingly good results.

In May 1987, the Hooper Center for Chemical Dependency Intervention in Portland, Oregon, opened an adult acupuncture program. Since then, more than 1,000 people have quit drinking or using drugs, Hooper statistics show.

Homeless teens are also receiving help. Approximately 125 teens have benefitted from the free program. "It get's rid of the urge," one 17-year-old girl said.

Each treatment costs $1.66 and can be performed on an outpatient basis. This is one of the cheapest medical treatments available.

Sandell said at recent professional seminars, nearly half of the medical doctors were also acupuncturists. "A lot of this is being done in drug addiction," Sandell said.

In some instances, acupuncture does use needles. However, more and more practitioners are turning to electronic stimulations, laser beams or pressure massages. However, the acupoints are still the key.

In Sandell's treatment for addiction two treatments of laser acupuncture a week are used in conjunction with the placement of small BB's on the ear. The BB's are taped on points of the ear specifically related to addiction.

Along with the laser treatment, patients stimulate the BB's with a firm circular motion for 5-10 seconds before and after meals, when they get up and when go to bed or anytime the patient craves drugs, alcohol or nicotine.

'Falling Down'

By DOUG TAYLOR
Assistant Editor

William Boston has had a bad day.

Having lost his job with a California defense contractor, Boston (Michael Douglas) is now stuck in a hellish Los Angeles traffic jam on a scorching summer day. The idiot behind him seems oblivious to the gridlock and persists in blaring his car horn. Then there is that fly that keeps landing on poor Boston's neck.

Boston's eyes swirl around the cacophony until the nightmarish collage of images overwhelm him and force him out of his car. One of the stranded motorists subsequently asks him where he is going.

Wandering the bleak landscape of the cluttered highway, Boston mutters that he is "going home."

Yet there is no home for Boston in this rollercoaster of a movie deemed Falling Down. Starring Douglas in perhaps his most arresting role ever, we get a disturbing peek at the implications of trying to unravel life's complexities.

While he ends in a whirlwind of conflict, Douglas certainly doesn't give initial indications that he is anybody but Joe Average.

With a conservative tie, glasses and crewcut, he looks like any other person trying to put food on the table. His one eccentricity is a set of personalized license plates that read D-FENS in honor of his former job.

This turns out to be an apt name for Boston as he becomes justifiably more defensive in trying to reach his nonexistent home. Along the way, he runs into an odd assortment of urban characters who present him with the mind-numbing little vagaries that modern-society has created.

Examples? How about missing the breakfast menu at the fast food restaurant by five minutes and having a gleeful employee tell you that only lunch is being served.

At first, Boston is amazed at such scenarios, but he shakes that in favor of good old-fashioned hostility. He soon picks up weapons and woe to any fool who crosses his path. Boston pauses only to call his terrified ex-wife (Barbara Hershey) to ominously indicate he will be visiting her.

Opposing Boston's intention is a self-admitted pacifist cop known as Prendergast, played by Robert Duvall. He loves his desk job and just wants to get through his last day of work in one piece before retiring. Boston, however, soon shakes him from his vapid state.

He beats Prendergast and the other cops to his ex-wife's home but in a somber moment of introspection, he stops to Moscow reggae offers 'high'

This Saturday KUOI will sponsor a night of Reggae and dance at the Moscow Community Center for those students who feel like they're still stuck in winter.

Mark Patterson from KUOI, organizer of the event, said they have sponsored Reggae before at the community center over the last few years. He said if this one goes well, there will possibly be another before school is out.

Merlene "Marley" Forde, another organizer of the event said everyone can come out and enjoy good Caribbean music, "You can get high without the alcohol or the ganja."

She said people who have never experienced great reggae should come out and get away from the rap and top 40 music for once.

Patterson said they would like to collect donations at the door, but will not turn anybody away. The Music will start at 8 p.m. on Saturday and go into the early morning hours. No refreshments will be served and the dance is for all ages.

The Moscow Community Center is located on 3rd St. and Washington.

Visiting poet offers workshop

Distinguished Visiting Writer Pattiann Rogers, author of five books of poetry, will teach a writing workshop at the University of Idaho the week of April 19. The class will meet Monday, Tuesday, Thursday and Friday evenings from 7 p.m. to 9:30 p.m.

Enrollment is by manuscript submission and is limited to 15 students. The class is one credit, and those wishing to be considered should provide up to ten pages of their poems to the English department by 5 p.m. Monday, March 29. Writers should submit three typed copies of their work along with their name, address and phone number. Prospective students will be informed by phone if they are selected. Manuscripts will not be returned.

Rogers holds a master's degree in creative writing from the University of Houston and is currently teaching poetry writing at the University of Arkansas in Fayetteville. She has won several prizes and awards, including Pushcart Prizes for several years, and prizes from both Poetry and Poetry Northwest magazines. Ms. Rogers lives in Castle Rock, Colorado.

UI student writes musical

For those in the mood for a musical, there is a local piece opening April 1.

Go! Fight! Win! will run through April 3 in the University of Idaho Administration Auditorium at 8 p.m. nightly.

This work was written by Luke Henderson, a Lionel Hampton School of Music student. Go! Fight! Win! is Henderson's third musical, but the first he has written since high school.

Go! Fight! Win! is a story about school spirit which involves all the usual high school melodramas. Conflict with the administrators, conflict with a rival school, and a love story or two are all musts when telling a high school story.

Charles Walton, the musical director, said the play is supposed to seem like the typical high school with all its common problems.

The cast is filled with Henderson's fellow music school students who are all in the UI Opera Workshop.

The show is open to all ages and is free of charge.

Benefit to dress up and get down

The 2nd Annual Benevolent Blues Ball, presented by The Benevolent Friends of the Palouse (BFP), to benefit Paul Santoro will be held on March 27 in the 4-H Building at the Latah County Fairgrounds. Too Slim and the Taildraggers, a blues band from Spokane, will provide the musical entertainment.

The BFP began in 1991, feeling that the Palouse needed an elegant dress-up and get-down ball. The original pure fun focus was enlarged, changing it into a party with a purpose. The BFP decided to raise money, through an admission charge and an auction of local works of art, to benefit Rhonda Hanson, who was recovering from both cancer and a dose of medical bills.

A soiree is planned as a chance to drink (no-host cash bar), bid, and mingle while a jazz combo plays. Only people over 21 will be admitted.

Everyone is expected to wear "their most elegant attire." The soiree and auction begins at 7:30 p.m., followed by the band cranking out the music at 9 p.m. Tickets are $7.50 in advance and $8.50 at the door, and they are available at Moscow Goodwill or at Ric-O-Shay in Pullman.

"Laser acupuncture uses helium neon laser, it is cold and it does not cut the skin," Sandell said. "Either that or we would use electro-needle acupuncture. Those tiny needles are not painful. We run a tiny current through the needles. We also use needle therapy."

For the needle therapy, four Acupuncture needles could easily be inserted in the hollow tube of a hypodermic needle. Most patients say it feels similar to a typical mosquito bite.

Acupuncture is just a tool, Sandell said. It is not a cure-all and can be productive with other types of medicine including drugs and physical therapy. For drug addicts, along with the acupuncture, involvement in Alcoholics Anonymous is prescribed.

"It took a long time for many, many doctors to recognize chiropractors," Christopher Eskeli, a psychotherapist with the alcohol and chemical dependency program at St. Vincent Hospital and Medical Center, said. "Now it seems more and more physicians are recognizing acupuncture as a legitimate treatment program."

consider how far he has descended. Putting this moment into its proper perspective is director of photography Andrzej Bartkowiak. His image of Douglas sitting alone in the shadows of Hershey's living room is the starkest scene in the film.

While contemplating matters, Boston watches a videotape of himself during a more innocent time. He silently realizes that he has been branded the bad guy for society's misgivings.

Director Joel Schumacher has highlighted this by carving a powerful fable that is only part fiction. He somehow puts Boston's violence into context and shows that Southern California's problems are only a small microcosm of how far society has fallen.

Boston finally screams rage, but wouldn't anyone when held down by wires that smile and insist that everyone have a nice day?
