False fire alarms annoy studying students

By GREG BURTON
Staff Writer

As finals approach, UI students living on campus are bracing for bedlam and hoping for a little peace and quiet.

The semester long battle waged by most campus residents against the few vandals who have set new campus records for false alarms will end May 15, but the final two-week Waterloo is leaving some students frazzled.

"I'm probably going to spend most of the rest of the semester away from the dorm," said UI sophomore Chauncy Elliott. "Between the bombs and the alarms things have just been too bothersome around here."

Despite several meetings and numerous calls to action, university officials have not come to the fore with a definite prevention policy.

Recently hired UI Director of Housing Roger Outtli has used the past two months to acquaint himself with police, fire and safety officials, but he has run out of time for any specific action this semester.

Of the plans discussed in meetings arranged by Outtli with Moscow Fire Chief Phillip Gatlin, UI Fire Safety Specialist Matt Oulman, and Campus Police Commander Jake Kershnik, a system of bringing the campus more in line with city ordinances has emerged as the front-running plan for next year.

Gatlin said similar policies were instituted at Eastern Washington University with some success. "Essentially we would levy fines against those responsible. In the case of Residence Halls made up of occupants fees, out of their own collective pockets, would be charged for false alarms."

In the month of March alone there were 13 false alarms at Wallace Complex, almost one every other day.

"Residents would be literally hurting themselves," said Gatlin. "It would be a situation where people would be responsible for their own actions."

Meanwhile the false alarms on campus continue - three more last weekend, and another last Thursday just past midnight at Shoup Hall.

"Another thing people don't realize is our staff is made up of volunteers," said Gatlin. "So when an alarm sounds at dinner time or past bedtime, people from the community are leaving their homes and families to respond. Even if it's every two hours."

Oulman said his worst fear is students becoming complacent about the alarms thinking they are all false. "It's my department's duty to make sure everybody gets out and the building is secure. But as the number of alarms goes up, that job becomes more and more difficult."

And still students are forced to deal with the onslaught of finals mixed with the bother of false alarms.

"I guess they gave up on us this semester, and with the heavy increase in fees next year, I can't see myself living on campus anymore," said Elliott.

Oulman said he hoped this semester was just a fluke. "There have been more false alarms this semester than in any of the previous three years."

But students grow up and move on, and others are preoccupied with finals, and are looking for peace and quiet around campus.

"Do you think they would let me sleep at the library for a week?" said Elliott.

Library construction nears completion after hassling students

By JEFF KAPOSTASY
Staff Writer

Soon the dust, noise and shouting construction workers will be a thing of the past.

The library construction is 80 percent finished.

But don't breathe a sigh of relief just yet. Renovation will still be in full swing through finals week, the summer and well into fall semester. Completion is expected in October of next year.

"Everything's in good shape," said library Associate Dean Monte Steiger. "We're real satisfied with the progress."

Currently, construction

crews are renovating the fourth floor in the old building, which will open up in Oct. Asbestos is also being removed. Renovation of the third floor is also set to begin. After that, the huge task of shuffling and cataloging books will begin. This time, the move will be permanent.

Steiger said full service of the library will remain over the summer.

"We're just regular folks doing regular jobs," Steiger said.

Several weeks ago, students were in a constant state of frustration trying to use the library's IDA system to locate books. Due to bad wiring and a tremendous amount of dust, only a few were operating. Now, however, Steiger said 10 of the computers are up to par. The library is also set to purchase new furniture for the computers.

This semester also marked the noisy process of taking the central staircase out. Only the fourth floor stairs remain.

One librarian, who wished to remain anonymous, said she wonders if the construction crews could have planned for the heaviest work between terms. She said the noise and dust have been nearly intolerable.

"It's been pretty bad," she said. "Students have really suffered through this."

She added perhaps the library administration could have had more clout in saying when the heaviest work would take place.

But library Dean Ronald Force said the construction schedule has been driven by the strict budget constraints. Not being on schedule could mean massive fines. Steiger said the construction is on target, both in terms of budget and schedule.

"Fortunately, most of the demolition work has been done," Force said. "December and January were the worst. The staff is looking forward to getting the construction done."

She said the noise and the dust have been nearly intolerable.

After the construction is done, the library will continue raising money to buy new furniture and have landscaping done. Force said the library dedication ceremony will take place one year from now.

■ Field school in archaeological methods will be held June 14 through July 3 in Granite, Oregon and July 12 through July 31 at Centerville, Idaho. Both sites were used by 19th century Chinese immigrant miners. For information contact Roderick Sprague at 885-6123.

Items for Campus and Community Events must be submitted to the Argonaut editor-in-chief's office by Sunday at 6 p.m. for Tuesday's issue and Wednesday at 6 p.m. for Friday's issue. Due to space limitations, earliest dated material will run first.

UI offers recycling to students leaving

Last year, students living on-campus tossed away cinder blocks, furniture, television sets, barbecues, hazardous liquids, books and many other items.

This year, the UI Recycling Program is working on changing these grim statistics.

According to Rebecca Rod of the UI Recycling Program, four tons of cinder blocks, one and a half tons of newspaper, one ton of cardboard and 500 pounds clothing were diverted from dumpsters last year. The total amount saved from the dumpsters was 10 tons.

Rod stresses the need to reuse and recycle.

"Reusable items can be redistributed to people who can't buy new stuff," she explained. Recovered clothing was donated to the Nazarene Church and Goodwill. School supplies were donated to the Sister City program bringing school supplies to Nicaragua each year. Books went to the American Association of University Women for book sales.

The UI Recycling Program has initiated a program to make recycling and reuse easier for students. During the last two days of dead week and May 10 - 14, a large full-service recycling/reusables/refuse collection station will be set up in the parking/walkway area between Shoup and McConnel Halls on Rayburn Street.

All types of recyclable items will be collected here, as well as reusable items. A large dumpster will also be available for trash. This program will continue through the weekend after finals.

Students living in Steel House, Alumni Residence Center and Targhee can leave their recyclables/reusables outside their halls for pick-up.

Before the fire in the halls, there were areas in the halls to discard newspapers to be recycled, but it is no longer allowed due to it being a potential fire hazard. "Since the fire in the dorms, students have contacted us on recycling," said Rod. "If students participate in the drop-off station, that can show Housing Services that there is a need for a recycling program."

Students: Don't abandon your pets

By NATALIE SHAPIRO
Staff Writer

According to Yvonne Herman, president of the Companion Animal Aid and Placement Society, 10 million cats and nearly as many dogs were killed in shelters and pounds in 1991 in this country.

Herman's goal is to reduce these numbers by encouraging people to be more responsible pet owners, and to spay or neuter their pets.

In addition, she asks students to think twice before abandoning their pets. "People will be leaving WSU and UI soon and some will abandon their pets," she explained. "If you talk to the pound, they will tell you that it gets overcrowded at this time of year."

Sue Trottier, manager of the Moscow Humane Society, agreed. "We do get a big increase in strays in the spring," she said, "95% are strays. We need people to be more aware. We are the only humane society out here, and we're very small. Make arrangements before bringing them in. Be responsible."

Herman explained abandoned animals get diseases, get hit by cars, starve and are killed by other animals. To help reduce the number of animals abandoned, the CAAPS has a unique program.

"Our highest priority is adopting animals at the Pullman pound before they get destroyed," explained Herman. CAAPS volunteers visit the pound twice a week to adopt pets. They advertise in local newspapers, and have a 24-hour telephone hotline. People can call to request information about advertised pets, or about abandoned or abused pets. CAAPS staff return phone calls, screening requests for adopting animals. The hotline number is: 883-5080.

Class explores life of Chinese woman in Idaho

By SHARI WETON
News Editor

A class to be offered this summer will explore the life of one of the most famous women of the Inland Northwest.

Polly Bemis, a Chinese woman sold into slavery, came to Idaho in 1872 and her life will be discussed in a UI class this August. Priscilla Wegars, who has a PhD in historical archaeology, said Bemis came from Northern China, which was rare for Chinese slaves.

"Most of the Chinese that came to this country came from the Canton country, but she was different," she said.

In North China, said Wegars, "evidently, at that time there was a great deal of famine," and Bemis' father sold her for two bags of seed corn.

What makes Bemis stand out from the countless other slaves brought to the West was her final emancipation. "At that time Chinese women were owned by men," said Wegars, "But she managed to get out...and become independent. That was very unusual for a Chinese woman at that time. They were not able to make those choices."

Wegars said Bemis' life has been very romanticized, with folk tales told of her winning independence in a poker game. A book and movie titled Thousand Pieces of Gold were written about her life in the mining camps of Idaho.

While working with Asian American history in Idaho may sound like a strange profession, Wegars said she has been "working with an Asian American comparative history collector here (UI) for about ten years."

Wegars will be teaching the class on Bemis, along with two field classes in archaeological methods. The two classes will explore the remains of Chinese mining towns in Granite, Ore. and Grangeville.

Registration deadline for the class, which can be taken for enrichment or credit, is June 22.

Conservationists discuss legislation

By NATALIE SHAPIRO
Staff Writer

Melinda Harm, legislative director of the Idaho Conservation League, discussed the 1993 session of the Idaho Legislature.

The first year the ICL had a year-round legislative program was 1992. "The timber and mining lobbyists work year-round. We feel that it's important to have a presence to strengthen legislative effectiveness," explained Harm.

ICL, according to Harm, is the oldest statewide conservation group, with 2700 members and 12 chapters throughout the state.

Harm discussed bills that passed, and bills that will be likely to be re-introduced.

"Protection for Henrys Fork River and the Upper Boise River Basin were passed," she said. "The Snake is likely to come up for protection next year."

ICL members at the Beanery shared Harm's concern over the Regulatory Taking Bill. "This would force taxpayers to compensate for the loss of values from environmental regulations," explained Harm. An example, she said, could be a farmer who owned 1,000 acres next to a school. A law says he can't spray a certain pesticide. The farmer could then argue that he'll lose a given amount of money per year. The taxpayers could be forced to pay this.

This bill passed through both Houses, but was vetoed by Andrus. Harm said it will be back next year.

Another bill Harm discussed was an Idaho Fish and Game bill already passed. The original language of this bill required before Fish and Game acquire land for riparian or wildlife habitat protection, county commissioners had to approve it. An amendment to this bill changed it so Fish and Game would ask the commissioners if there might be problems with such land acquisition. If so, a public meeting must be held and, added Solomon, "the commissioners have no veto power."

On a local level, Section 16 on Moscow Mountain, which includes the old growth cedar grove, is moving through Congress. This bill would exchange Section 16 from the Idaho State Lands to the Bureau of Land Management.

Harm stressed the importance of working with agriculture, forestry and political groups in order to get bills passed. The ICL has worked with the Idaho Rural Council and the Idaho Citizens' Network.

Past ASUI political events

By DAVID JACKSON
Staff Writer

It has been a busy year for Mike Edwards and the ASUI Political Concerns Board.

This group of students deals with political items, primarily on the state level, effecting our campus. And, in the year 1992-93, that means an active year and hectic schedule.

"This board exists for the students," Edwards said. "Everything we do here on campus will affect the students in some way."

Indeed, there have been many events on campus recently that the Political Concerns Board has been involved with.

On Feb. 6, United States Senator Larry Craig, Idaho's senior senator, paid a visit to campus to discuss the federal budget deficit.

Craig received a good turnout, and most appreciated hearing about those concerns from our representative in the U.S. Senate.

In March, the board distributed and tallied ASUI Senate evaluations. Those evaluations helped students voice their opinions about their ASUI representation. Also in March, the board assisted the ASUI with several issues handled by the State Board of Education, such as the fee increase hearings, and the equity bill.

On April 3, the board co-sponsored the lecture presented by leading conservative voice William Buckley. Buckley, whose conservative attitudes are tailor-made for Idahoans, spoke about the new Clinton Administration, and about which of his ideas would and wouldn't work.

On April 15, the board sponsored the ASUI Senate Candidates' forum, and assisted with the ASUI elections.

During the week of April 19, the board co-sponsored two forums concerning international politics. One dealt with the Palestine-Israel question, the other dealt with the former Yugoslavia.

Due to requests about the latter forum, it will be shown on channel 8 May 5 and May 12 at 9 p.m. Both forums are also available on videotape from the ASUI. The Israel tape will cost $13.40 and the Yugoslavian tape will be $10.90.

Despite the busy year, Edwards hopes to keep it going next fall. He said they will try to capitalize on the more popular events from this past year.

"We want to bring in (Congressman) Larry LaRocco, and we want to have another popcor forum," Edwards explained. "Possible topics for the forum could be the Pakistan/India problem and the E.C."

Argonaut's restructuring means change for next year

Friday is the final issue of the Argonaut for the semester. It may also be the last Argonaut as we know it.

A committee of various Argonaut employees and ASUI leaders has been formed to discuss restructuring the paper. The committee is debating on whether or not the Argonaut should break away from the ASUI and become self-supporting. As it stands now the paper receives all of its funding from the ASUI.

If the paper were to break-away it would no longer be under the umbrella of the ASUI. However, the paper would still be funded by students and would still be under the eye of the administration. But the decisions on the budget, content of the paper and wages would be decided solely by the paper and its leaders, not the ASUI.

The problem with the Argonaut as it stands now is that all of the hiring decisions are done out-of-house, not from within, so to speak. The paper doesn't choose its editor-in-chief, a committee called the Communications Board makes this recommendation. The downfall with this is that the board doesn't understand the daily operations of the paper or its employees. It would make more sense for the staff or people who work directly with the paper to be involved in that selection process.

Another problem which currently surfaces is the idea of objectivity. Because the paper receives its funding from ASUI there may be a pressure to give additional coverage to the ASUI Senate and their activities. How sensible is it to go in front of the ASUI and beg for funding and then turn around and try to cover them objectively? Every student newspaper should be free to report without pressure, and this unwanted pressure could be erased through the restructuring.

If the Argonaut remains shackled by the constraints of the ASUI (budgets, hiring decisions, etc.) the hands of the journalists that work here may remain tied and strained. And because of this, freedom of expression may be threatened, and the paper may never be able to fully serve the students.

These are problems that face next semester's staff and Editor-in-chief Shari Ireton. However, Ireton, a senior in journalism, possesses the leadership skills and the keen judgment it will take to make these decisions. She also possesses the strength it will take to make a good editor. Ireton has worked at the Argonaut as a reporter, an assistant news editor, and as a news editor.

And as Ireton faces the uncertain future of the paper she should keep in mind the words of Edward R. Murrow who once said, "We will not be driven by fear into an age of reason if we... remember that we are not descended from fearful men, not from men who feared to write, to speak, to associate and to defend causes which were, for the most part unpopular."

Talkin' about the weather & politics

That last sundown after four years of school should drip over the Palouse horizon like a tropical wine cooler broken over a curb and streaming down the gutter to the end of Blake Street.

But that's not what you get. Sometimes Mother Nature and the rest of humanity could care less about giving turning points in a graduate's life proper lighting or even proper weight.

From Mother Nature we're getting a gun metal gray sky and a constant drizzle. From the rest of humanity we're getting the usual cease fire gunfights, back-room machinations, and broken Capitol Hill promises.

Well, if I don't miss my guess, I've pretty much shot my wad. Let's see. Did I talk about the weather? Check.

Did I talk about the government? Check.

Well now I can breathe a little easier, and my ex-roommate Pappani can wear his Phillies hat a little further down his forehead and closer to his eyebrows while Hunter S. Thompson said it best when he complained that the Book of Revelations never said anything about a plague of vengeful yahoos. But we have them and they're everywhere. Even in the Argonaut's memory banks.

Criticize all you want, but not even on your best day will it make a difference. Just turn thirty gracefully, go back to your forest, and leave the little green monster at home until after finals.

Life doesn't have to be Kafkaesque

Here's a warning to any student who will be graduating in less than two weeks. Enjoy your freedom while it lasts. If you don't practice eternal vigilance, you may become a meaningless cog in an organizational wheel quicker than you can say "gray flannel suit."

Or for you forestry majors out there, "blue flannel shirt."

After graduation most of us will trade our youthful idealism for a heaping bushel of reality. Many of us will allow ourselves to be poked and prodded into discrete categories, losing our individuality in the process.

We will be forced into an ever-narrowing chain of pigeonholes with no way to escape.

During job interviews, employers will ask questions carefully constructed to separate the wheat from the chaff. Some of us will answer in firm, confident and extremely misleading tones so that we'll have a better chance to land the jobs we covet.

When an interviewer asks us what our most important qualities are, we will crack a wide smile and lie through our teeth. They expect us to. That's the way the game is played.

Just watch. We will submerge our creativity and spirit to become part of the establishment merely for the sake of pursuing success.

If we get jobs and stick with them for any length of time, and especially if we get married and start producing kids, our freedoms will slowly disappear.

Our options will be whittled down. Soon it will be impossible for us to escape to Baja for three months, or head to Reno with a few hundred bucks to risk at the black jack tables, or any of the other crazy things we dreamed of doing when we were college students.

We will run headfirst into that brick wall known as Responsibility. We will become — gasp! — just like our parents.

The shadowy powers that be have already begun whispering seductive phrases in our ears.

"Pursue your own satisfaction," they say. "Success lies just around the corner."

What these voices don't tell us is that prosperity these days seems to come less from emotional well-being than from financial comfort. We can't really be happy until we all have Gold Cards and the ability to spend thousands of dollars we haven't even earned yet.

Unfortunately many of us can never achieve lasting success. At least not in the eyes of others. When we think we have finally arrived at the front porch of the Good Times, a neighbor will step forward and tell us that they just moved.

 The next two weeks I'm running an academic gauntlet trying to get out of here on time. And if that wasn't enough, Mickey Rourke is making a new buddy movie with Marky Mark. For the next little while life is throwing its full court press at me and my transition game needs some work.
 Maybe it's possible that the Armagedon came and went and we all missed it. After all the hoopla of the last election, I'm ready to believe anything's possible. Usually we spread our messiahs out over ten year periods (Jim Jones, Sun Myung Moon, Rajneesh). This year we've got a false one for every season of the year.

 I was happy when the Hobbit came out of his shell, started telling jokes, trying to spread cheer and what not. Now I'm seeing it as the mixed blessing it probably is. The Hobbit only comes to ground zero or above when something's up. He definitely knows more than the rest of us. (Don't be alarmed if only two of you can make heads or tails out of this second to last column, my ten faithful readers.)
 Now Sweaty Betty is bound, but definitely not gagged, rolling around on his belly on second deck while Chad Piquet violates the Geneva Convention. So what if my friends are all lunatics. At least I'm making friends with some of my professors, why else would some of them be working so hard to keep me around an extra year? But I guess you've gotta have friends.

 Barry Johnson will probably be disappointed with this column because I didn't start with a definite plan, but I only had an hour's notice on this one. He's gotta admit that I have gotten better, even though I don't have a Stetson so I couldn't hang out with him at the North 4-D.
 The only safe place is the Desert (not Matt), but I don't have the means or the time to do the trip right. Besides the mysterious and beautiful female companion is going to pull her own disappearing act in five days.
 So it looks like another desperate bout of booksales, clawing nails and motherscratchers while I wait for dreams of the Armagedon. I'll keep you posted.

 So we will keep pushing ourselves for decades, raising our kids, working at our jobs, dining occasionally with our old collegiate chums until we retire.
 As we lie on our deathbeds, with our lives flickering dimly before our eyes, we will think of all the opportunities we squandered in life. Then it's lights out.
 Kind of a downer, isn't it?
 Life doesn't have to be as depressing as a Kafka novel, you know. It may sound like the kind of pop sociological advice found in the self-help section of your local bookstore, but the road to success begins when we make the commitment to live our lives on our own terms and ignore the dictates of society.
 Those of you who believe life consists of working an excruciating 50 weeks a year for 40 years before enjoying the lazy days of retirement can do as you please.

If you think you can be truly happy chasing such a lifestyle, no one has a right to get in your way.
 Go on, smoke two packs a day and kick off from cardiac arrest before you turn 45.
 If, however, you feel life entails much more than blind adherence to someone else's traditions and the ruthless pursuit of a better tomorrow that never comes, you have just as much of a right to be left alone as the typical workaholic.
 When you graduate, don't feel an obligation to follow anyone else's footsteps. Holding back your natural inclination for individuality just to go along with society's flow is a recipe for unhappiness.
 So if interviewers ask you how much money you hope to be making or which rung of the corporate ladder you hope to be perched on in 10 years, tell the truth. Tell them that you want only to be happy.
 And if they had any sense at all, they'd hire you on the spot.

Everyone has right to their opinion

Editor;

I'm writing "to register my dismay over the" letter from James B. Gardiner which appeared in the Tuesday, April 20 issue of the Argonaut. I want to know what makes Gardiner's opinion so important that he thinks it is worthy of being published but no one else's is (if Gardiner doesn't agree with it).

Whether I (or anyone else does) agree with Charles Brown or Tracie Bruno's comments is not the point. The point is that they were printed on the OPINION pages of the STUDENT paper. Everyone has their own opinion which may or may not

(and shouldn't have to) be in agreement with what you or I think or feel.

Hey Gardiner!! The last time I checked, this was America where I'd like to believe the First Amendment of the Constitution (i.e., the freedom of speech and press) is still applicable and in full effect.

Now Gardiner, if you want to continue to keep your mind closed to the idea that someone else's opinion may actually have some relevance, especially without checking the sources they have freely offered you, that's your prerogative.

However, that doesn't mean that your opinion is the only one that should be voiced in our school publication or any other. If you hadn't noticed, the term "student publication" implies that it's for the students as a whole to use and to have their opinion be voiced in; I wasn't aware that my (or anyone else's) letter to the editor (i.e., personal opinion) had to meet up to your standards of whether it's "worthwhile to publish" or not. If that's the way it is, I'd rather form my own student paper.

Are cannibals next?

Editor;

In response to Natalie Shapiro's ultra liberal propaganda article recently appearing in the Argonaut, I would like to submit a brief parody. Following the insidious reasoning of extremist liberals will lead inevitably to an abyss of grotesque and hideous amorality. In the Argonaut, circa 2003:

Marilyn Chuter, the director of the Idaho Human Rights Commission, spoke to an audience at the Women's Center last week on the dangers of the Idaho Citizens Alliance anti-cannibal initiative.

"This initiative will hurt Idaho," said Chuter. "I don't understand what there is to gain." The initiative is for an amendment to the Idaho Criminal Code that prohibits protection against discrimination towards cannibals.

Yet another behavioral group comes "out of the closet" demanding societal recognition and acceptance of the things they like to do. They already enjoy all the normal protective rights as American citizens, but should they also receive special treatment through some sort of contrived public acceptance of their highly peculiar and generally repugnant dining preference? Yeah, right.

Give me a break! Is "discrimination" always such a horrible thing? Don't we reasonably "discriminate" to some degree against those who refuse to practice basic hygiene, or against those who eat without the benefit of utensils, etc.? So a pre-emptive initiative to discourage the proliferation of special treatment legislation, and to guarantee the right of citizens to reasonably favor or disfavor various kinds of unusual behavior is not so outlandish as the humanistic religious left would like to brainwash people into believing.

The anti-cannibal initiative would also prohibit schools from teaching that anthropophagy is acceptable. Chuter explained this would suppress knowledge in schools. "Schools would have to remove material from the library that suggests that anthropophagy is acceptable."

Imagine that! A branch in the wall of the ultra liberal, humanistic, indoctrination program for public school children. Otherwise absolutely no one is allowed to interfere with the process of "education" so carefully engineered for America's young people by long series of left-wing "stealth" hypocrites fixed in office for the last 25-30 years or more, and secretly associated with humanistic, far left organizations like Planned Parenthood, NOW, NARAL, PAWS or the ACLU.

Chuter felt the anti-cannibal initiative represents much more than just a cannibal issue. "Anthropophagy is just a hook," she said. "People need to ask 'who's next?'"

You said it! Who, or what is next on the agenda of the religious left, the ultra liberals, atheists, materialists, and secular

Free Idaho homosexuals from discrimination

Editor;

Is it fair to penalize people for being gay when no one really knows if it is a choice or genetic - or a combination? And even if we did know the "cause" does that give us the right to judge them? Homosexuals are different from mainstream America. Being different isn't, in itself, illegal or immoral. Far right Christianity isn't, in itself, illegal or immoral, either, although it, too, is out of mainstream America.

The ICA and their supporters are trying to legislate their interpretation of morality and what is normal for 10 percent of the population. That is, however, in itself, illegal and immoral.

But let's face it - homosexuals are a part of our American society. And they wish to be treated as everyone else is treated, without discrimination in employment, housing, marriage tax/inheritance/insurance benefits, legal family issues, and harassment. These are not "special" rights at all. These are rights that all American citizens (except homosexuals) are guaranteed. (It is interesting that religious groups do have "special rights", i.e., no taxation, freedom of expression, military exemptions, protection from harassment/discrimination.)

The saddest injustice of all is that the ICA anti-gay initiative creates more homophobia leading to increased prejudice and hate crimes. Families, neighbors, friends polarize; respect and dignity for others erodes. Intolerance, lack of acceptance and discrimination of other human beings creates narrow limits and hinders human diversity and uniqueness. This attitude dangerously has the potential to spread, affecting any one for any reason that the "group" feels is "for the good of society."

Some Christians say the Bible encourages them to discriminate (have prejudice with action - "love the sinner, not the sin") against gays/lesbians. That is arguable. What isn't arguable is the position the Bible takes against the greed of power, self-importance, unkindness, and judging others. Christ said, "Above all things, love one another as I have loved you."

I guess He hasn't loved some of His people (the anti-gay zealots) very much. —Kath'ren Bay

Sensitivity training for Zinser?

Editor;
The recent comments by the newly-hired basketball coach about the cripples and ugly women reportedly had University of Idaho President Elisabeth Zinser "immediately aghast," with some sensitivity training hastily arranged for the coach. What makes Zinser think the people of Idaho weren't "immediately aghast" when she, an unelected official, demanded a higher paycheck than our state's governor? What makes her think that some weren't "immediately aghast" when she demanded that the citizens finance a housekeeper for her? And what makes her think that some weren't "immediately aghast" at how the new coach was hired, or how she's now asking for a lobbyist at taxpayer's expense to lobby our own legislature? What makes her think that students aren't "immediately aghast" when they're drowned out in their concerns over higher dorm rates--and indeed aren't even told of meetings soliciting their input? What makes the President think that citizens aren't "immediately aghast" when she campaigns plaintively for higher deans' salaries "for parity's sake," then ignores the needs of faculty, students and staff?

How about some sensitivity training for you President Zinser? We common people are getting awfully tired of eating cake.

Bring back Crisis Line

Editor;
Thoughts came to me how little the University of Idaho cares about students. The number one priority is money. Moscow used to have a Crisis Line. I directed it for eight years. The UI kicked us out of their building because they decided, "It was a waste of office space."

The Northwest has the highest suicide rate per capita in the U.S. Live with that.

The UI also allowed the yearly Blue Mountain Festival. The highest incident of suicides, worldwide, is the first warm day of spring. This is when 80 percent of high school and college suicides are. It coincides with spring finals.

Nightline would get around 120 calls per week. Blue Mountain hit the Sunday before finals. Last Blue Mountain in 76 Nightline only received two crisis calls during finals. If students were ready to "jump ship," they normally thought, "I'll go to Blue Mountain." They blew it out of their system and another life was saved.

It's surprising how Big Brother cannot except so easy a solution for so complex a problem. I guess there's no money in it.

Confidentiality denied for AIDS test

Editor;
I hope you never have to go through what I did today. I just ran into the most arrogant ideologies I've ever seen. This view thought it had such a grasp on the world that it had the right to control others. What, or who I am talking about is the policy at the clinic here on campus.

Today I went in to get my results from an AIDS test. Something everyone should do, but not enough are because of arrogance like I witnessed today. Don't let my story stop you from getting tested. The intent of this letter is to stop the policy at the clinic here on campus. Here's how the story went. First you go in and have blood drawn, of course. Then they tell you the results will be back in a couple of weeks, and they assign you a number. This number I was told, was to insure confidentiality. Sounds great; this is what it should be. I was misled, however. There was nothing confidential about my test. This is why I'm writing this letter.

So today I go in to find the results. I honestly thought I was going to pick up a sealed envelope with my number on it. And that would be that; I would go off to a private place and read the words that could change the rest of my life. Something that should be personal wouldn't you say? This is not what I was confronted with. After waiting for two weeks, contemplating what I would do if I received a positive result, I was told to check in and sit down and wait. Fine, I thought, this is how they do it. They make you wait, and wait and wait. Then, you know the old story, they put you in the room with all those metal poking things. And there you wait, and wait and wait. Just give me my sealed confidential envelope and I'll be out of here. Out of your world and back to mine.

In walks the physician, the person with my folder. The person who is reading my results. Who is this jerk? This person starts talking some crap, and then sees I didn't come here for it, so the doctor slips in, "Oh, by the way your results are negative." I'm blown away. Some person I've never met, who personifies my exact opposite world view is reading what could have been the most personal thing in my life. "What are you doing?" I asked. "This was confidential, you know, the number thing."

"You can only be so confidential, someone has to know," the doctor claims. What I want to know is why this person? Where does this person come off, telling me that this doctor and the other people in the clinic have the right to see my results before me. Who made up my file? I didn't even want a stupid file! Who typed it?

I cannot completely share what I felt, but I can tell you, this ideology thought it knew so much that it knew what was right and wrong for me. Can they see through my eyes? Can they feel what I touch? Why did they feel they were in the grand position to read the results to me.

If a person has made the mature decision to be tested, then that person has the right to be the first to see the results. The person who should never, under any circumstances, be the one to see the results is the one who feels they know what's best for others.

This clinic scared me. They honestly believed they were the right people to be reading someone else's life to them. I never want anything that important to end up in a file ever again. I'm not paranoid; I have nothing to hide, but I want it to be my choice to walk into the clinic and tell everyone my results. I want the first look at my life to be mine. I want the support and courage, if needed, to come from within. Not from someone who knows me from a file.

Go out, get tested. But if you do it here, understand it is not confidential. And also understand that I've talked to people who have been tested at other clinics and it was truly confidential. In other words it is possible for you to be the one who puts the number and the results together with your name.

Final spring scrimmage produces no winner

Idaho quarterback Doug Nussmeier would have liked to see his gold team win Friday night's final scrimmage of spring football.

But there was also a side that wouldn't have minded losing.

But a tie?

"My first year (1990) that I played in the final scrimmage we won and that next season I broke my ankle," Nussmeier said of his scrimmage history. "The next season I also won and the team went 6-5 (1991). Last year I lost for the first time and we ended up winning the Big Sky championship so I don't know what a tie will lead to."

Nussmeier, Idaho's 6-4, 210 pound Division I-AA Player of the Year candidate, threw his second interception in the closing minute to end the game in a 7-7 tie. Second string kicker Ryan Woolverson had a shot to give the silver team the win but missed a 53-yard field goal as time expired.

"It was a freshman mistake," Nussmeier said of his interception. "I was flushed out of the pocket and forced it. We were in field goal range and instead of swallowing the ball or throwing it away I tried to make something happen."

Nussmeier, who rated his performance as right around mediocre, connected on 15-of-27 attempts for 146 yards. His sole touchdown pass was a 32-yard hook-up with freshman Chad Berry in the first of four 12-minute running quarters.

"It wasn't exactly the way I'd like to go into the summer but this gives me something to work on for next season," Nussmeier said. "I think definitely as a team as a whole we've made some great progress (since spring football began April 6)."

The biggest question mark for next year's young Vandal squad is going to be the play of the defensive line and the secondary. Idaho lost three four-year starters off the front line as well as losing four defensive backs that started at one time or another during the 1992 season. In the scrimmage, however, redshirt transfer Cedric West recovered a fumble and was the cornerback that picked off Nussmeier's final pass. Nussmeier also noted that the four defensive linemen that he faced (Spencer Folau, Brian Strandly, Barry Mitchell and Ryan Smith) pressured him all day.

"I think the d-line was the most improved overall for the past month," Nussmeier said. "I mean, they lost three starters there and those guys are just getting better."

John L. Smith, heading into his fifth year as Idaho's head coach, is impressed with the players up front but will still be concerned about how they'll do next season when fall roles around. Idaho is expecting to start six sophomores and five juniors on defense as the only three seniors are not projected to start.

"I'm a little nervous going into fall camp with our youth, especially on defense," Smith said. "We have some talent but we're just so young. We'll have some success on defense again this year but it may take awhile."

After Berry's grab in the first quarter, backup quarterback Eric Hisaw hit receiver Dwight McKinzie on a 60-yard toss that tied the game up. Both teams then proceeded to turn to their defense in the fourth quarter and both sides came through in allowing no points for the opposition.

Offensively for the gold squad junior running back Sharriden May ran for 35 yards on 10 carries and his backup, sophomore Lavoni Kidd, picked up 15 yards on six plays. Nussmeier credits the time that he has and the holes the backs have to one of the strengths in next year's team—the offensive line.

"I feel so comfortable back there behind those guys I have no concerns about how they'll do next year," Nussmeier said. "We're (as a team) young but we've got to get better and continue to work harder as a team."

Idaho running back Sharriden May will be giving opposing defensive units an awful time this season. In 1992, he rushed for 1,111 yards in the Vandals' one-back set. He had 35 on 10 carries in Friday's annual spring game. (JEFF CURTIS PHOTO)

UI offense starts with Nussmeier

By DOUG TAYLOR
Assistant Editor

University of Idaho quarterback Doug Nussmeier is ready to deliver the kind of numbers that seems inherent to Vandals' signalcallers.

With a position held by former greats Ken Hobart, Scott Linehan and John Friesz, the expectations at this position might run higher than any on the team.

As of now, though, this pressure has caused Nussmeier to thrive rather than shrivel.

All Nussmeier has done is pass for 3,000 yards twice in his career, including an amazing 3,300 yards during his sophomore year. He could conceivably break eight career Idaho passing marks by the end of this year and enters the season as the nation's second-best quarterback according to The Sporting News.

Last year was typical Nussmeier as he capped the Vandals' 9-3 year by throwing for 3,028 yards and 22 touchdowns. Of his 333 attempts, only nine were intercepted. His efficiency rating of 154.1 was lofty enough to give him the career efficiency record for NCAA I-AA quarterbacks.

Nussmeier has silenced any skeptics, but now he's set to temper his own doubts.

Only a few months removed from a difficult home loss to McNeese St. in the first round of the NCAA I-AA playoffs, Nussmeier is on a red-eyed mission according to Linehan, who is now the offensive coordinator on UI head coach John L. Smith's staff.

"There's nobody on the team that hates to lose worse than Doug does," Linehan said. "He worked harder in this off-season than in any other. You always remember your senior year of football and he wants to make his senior year a memorable one."

Should UI opponents grin too broadly about the thought of Nussmeier entering his final year of eligibility, there is always the thought of immensely improved back-up quarterback Eric Hisaw to quiet them.

Hisaw, a sophomore from Cheney, Wash., is a returning letterwinner for Smith and his staff, and he showed in Friday's annual spring game that he will be ready next year.

The 6-2 sophomore completed 9-of-16 passes for 126 yards against a defense that included some starters.

With Nussmeier firing away and Hisaw ready to step in, quarterbacking duties aren't a concern. The same couldn't be said for wide receiver.

Idaho lost its top two pass-catchers from last year, most notably Yo Murphy who snared 68 passes for 1,156 yards and nine touchdowns. Walter Saunders, who was second on the Vandals with 40 catches for 501 yards, is also gone from the team. He also came in second in receiving touchdowns with four.

Those losses will leave the Vandals with just Alan Allen as the only wide-out to have seen considerable playing time last year.

Allen is expected to fill one of the three spots while junior college transfer D'Mitri Baptist and sophomore Dwight McKinzie will probably be starting in the other two slots.

Chad Berry, who snared the only touchdown in Friday's spring game, will push these three for time as will Kimiko Bandy, Jason Maxwell and Dereck Minnatee.

Not to be undervalued in the Vandals' offensive scheme is the tight end, which was also hurt by graduation as starter Paul Burke and reserve Ronnie White are now gone.

Filling those spots does come as a matter of some concern to Linehan and the rest of the UI coaching staff.

"It's a definite concern of ours right now because we just don't have anybody back there who has any experience for us," Linehan said.

Despite any anxiety, he does have some indication about who will fill the vacant spot.

"Tracey Thomas gives us a big target who has great hands," Linehan said. "If he puts his mind to it, he could be one of the best we've had here because of his physical tools."

Now in his second year as offensive coordinator, Linehan isn't that concerned about who his leader is.

"I would say Doug is the most complete quarterback we've had at Idaho," Linehan said. "He's got those intangibles like toughness and the ability to play hurt that guys in the next level look for. His best years are yet to come."

Bandwagoners ready to wear Laker hats again?

Yeah, you know who you are.

For the past two years you're the ones out there that have donned Chicago Bull hats, shirts, sweats and shoes.

You have posters of Michael Jordan dunking, shooting, jumping, passing, blocking, rebounding, drinking, eating, sleeping, mowing his lawn, fixing the car, doing the dishes, mowing Will Perdue's lawn, vacuuming the den and any other household chores that can be thought up that will help you "Be like Mike."

You claim to have loved the team from the windy city and the oh-so "Airy one" since the beginning of time when in fact it would be difficult for you to name who the head coach was before Phil Jackson. Okay, how about before Doug Collins?

At any rate, it's now time for those pseudo-Bullites to get out those shirts that your old man has been using to wipe wax off the El Camino that you once wore with pride in the sixth grade.

Those Los Angeles Laker shirts.

For those who haven't sunk to the level of hiding behind Chicago garb ever since the Lakers were swept by the Detroit Pistons in four games in the 1989 NBA Finals, this has been a good past few days for the "Forum faithful."

Those Los Angeles Laker shirts.

A very good few days. The Lakers will attempt to make history tonight in first round action as they hold a 2-0 game lead over the favored (and overrated) Phoenix Suns. No team seeded eighth has ever defeated a No. 1 in the history of the playoffs and the Lakers are 48 minutes away from doing that in the Forum this evening. Los Angeles, the only team out of 16 to enter the playoffs with a losing record, has proved to the rest of the league the past two games that the regular season means absolutely nothing once the playoffs role around.

But how can a team that has lost Magic Johnson, Kareem Abdul-Jabbar and Pat Riley all in the past four years be in the driver's seat against the high powered and high flying Suns?

By turning "showtime" into slowltime. This season has seen plenty of changes within the Laker organization that have had a direct affect on the team posting its worst record in 18 years. To begin with, two-year head coach Mike Dunleavy, who proceeded arguably the greatest basketball leader ever in Pat Riley, decided to move on to greener pastures by taking the head coaching vacancy at the Milwaukee Bucks. Laker owner Jerry Buss brought up assistant Randy Pfund this year and put him in little more than a no win situation as he had to incorporate new players into the line-up but at the same time keep veteran leadership as the core of the team's decade of success.

Then, four days before the beginning of the regular season, Earvin "Magic" Johnson decided that being HIV positive was a good reason to retire and thus did for the second time in a year. Now Pfund was in even a bigger mess. The point guard play of Sedale Threatt had improved over the '91-'92 season but for the Lakers to be back up to the title contenders they were throughout the 80s, they would need the passing, shooting and all-around all-star abilities that Magic could give.

But without him, Laker magic would have to come out of some other hat. Unfortunately, for the better part of the season, it didn't.

Threatt not only ended up being L.A.'s leading assist man this past year with 6.9 a game, but also had to carry the scoring burden as he led the team with 15.1 points a game. Veterans James Worthy and Byron Scott both saw their scoring drop considerably as Worthy fought injury and Scott's name has continually popped up in trade rumors as he'll be a free agent at the end of the season.

But, as has been said before, it's a whole different season once the playoffs begin.

This, however, hasn't gotten through to the Suns' new self-proclaimed god, Charles Barkley. The "Round mound of rebound" as many find cute to refer to him as, was quoted in the most recent Sports Illustrated as saying he'd love to play to the Los Angeles Lakers because Phoenix would beat them in four straight.

Ha! Ha! Right about now the Suns are wishing the first round was four

Vandals' special teams set for '93

By DOUG TAYLOR
Assistant Editor

During a radio interview recently, one college football coach suggested that strong play from this group of players can assure a team of one extra victory of the year.

That particular group would be the special teams, which encompasses a wide latitude of duties from kick-off returns to punting to coverage teams.

At Idaho, coaching these large groups is divided among several individuals with head coach John L. Smith leading the staff. Running backs coach Paul Petrino is also heavily involved, and Smith said new secondary coach Eric Jackson may be a decision-maker as well.

Smith may not see special teams in the same light as the aforementioned coach, but this aspect of football merits important consideration in UI game plans.

"We figure you have to win two out of three to win football games (offense, defense and special teams)," Smith said. "So if you do well on say offense and on special teams, then you will probably win the game."

According to Smith, the selection process for special teams revolves around who is playing well at game-time. Although he isn't opposed to using starters, Smith said he prefers to save them for their positions.

"If they're doing a good job, we try to keep the same guys in there," Smith said. "We try to keep the starters off the field, but we're not opposed to using them. Robby (Jeff Robinson) was on them all last year and Sirmon (John, the Vandals standout defensive tackle) too."

Leading the coverage teams will be Dave Longoria, a 6-foot, 215-pound linebacker from Everson, Wash. As a freshman, Longoria was voted the special teams player of the year in the year-end Idaho team awards.

He will lead the coverage unit, and kicking the ball skyward for that unit will be senior placekicker Mike Hollis, whose 90 points a year ago placed him second on the team in scoring to running back Sherriden May.

Hollis finished the year with 54 successful extra-point attempts and also converted 12 field goals.

Smith felt that Hollis could set the tone for the entire special teams.

"Hollis is coming back, and he did a pretty job for us last season," Smith said. "Usually, if the kicker is strong, the special teams are strong as well."

Handling the punting duties is anybody's guess according to Smith now that two-year letterwinner Tom Sugg has graduated.

Erich Gaedeke, a 6-2 sophomore from Pasco, Wash., is one player who may replace Sugg.

On the punt receiving and kick-off receiving duties, May could see extensive action as he did last year. He didn't commit that many gaffes as evidenced by one scamper which went for a 96-yard kick-off touchdown.

Kmiko Bandy, who is also fighting for a spot among the three starting receiver spots, is expected to handle some punts and kick-offs as well.

games but unluckily for them it is only the best three out of five and the team that everyone used to love is just about to prove that a name isn't the method used to determine the winner of a game—the scoreboard is.

So dig out those purple and gold shirts you used to wear in the 80's and get rid of that over-worn and too commonly seen Jordan attire. The Bulls, as is the case with the Suns, are too easy to hop on the bandwagon for a quick ride.

And besides, you don't have to eat all those Wheaties to be a true Laker fan.

Meet prepares Vandals for Big Sky Championships

By MISSY WILSON
Staff Writer

Track and field marks have steadily improved all season for Idaho and last weekend's Bigfoot/Pelluer Invitational in Spokane was no exception.

With only one weekend of competition remaining before the Big Sky Conference Championships, the Vandal women are still adding to their list of conference qualifying and seasonal best performances.

Among Idaho's latest conference qualifiers are two freshmen. Both Jill Wimer and Bethany Hopkins had javelin throws that helped Idaho take three of the top five places in the event. Junior Jessica Puckett captured third with a throw of 134-10, Wimer followed in fourth with a throw of 133-8 and Hopkins slid into fifth with a throw of 130-3. Puckett had already qualified in this event early this season.

Also among Idaho's top finishers were Tanya Tesar and Karen McCloskey. Tesar, the UI heptathlon record holder, had one of her best jumping weekends of the season, according to head coach Scott Lorek.

"Tanya broke out of her long jump rut last weekend," Lorek said. "She is still working on her triple jump, but I am sure it will all come together by the conference championships. I have no doubt."

Tesar had two explosive first place finishes, with a 18-10 mark in the long jump followed by a 38-9 mark in the triple jump. She also finished fourth in the 100-meter hurdles with a time of 15.91.

McCloskey, a senior hurdler for Idaho, finished first in the 100-meter hurdles with a time of 15.08 and third in the 400-meter hurdles at 1:04.03.

Despite both top performances, Lorek said it wasn't one of McCloskey's best weekends.

"Karen was running into the wind during her races," Lorek said. "It was a decent weekend weather wise, but that wind made it tough on the runners."

Idaho's Tara Hamilton switched gears this weekend, running the 1500-meters rather than the 800-meters. Her seasonal success continued as she captured second place with a personal best time of 4:39.03.

The Idaho women dominated the 400-meters, grabbing three of the top four spots. Sheri Marlatt captured first with a season best time of 57.85, followed by teammates Amy Frank in second and Nikki Viersen in fourth.

Idaho's Francie Rapier led the way in the shot put with a second place throw of 39-5 3/4, followed by Wimer in third and Shannon Russell-Shaw in fourth. Rapier is edging closer to a conference qualifying mark of 40-0. Wimer and Russell-Shaw have already conference qualified in the event.

Idaho had a few other season best performances at the invitational, including Eva Obernolte's second place finish of 2:19.10 in the 800-meters and Heidi Bodwell and Traci Hudson finished third and fourth in the 200-meters, respectively. Only four-hundredths of a second separated the two, as Bodwell came in at 25.96 and Hudson followed at 26.00.

Kim Slate in the 3000-meter steeplechase, Eversley Linley in the 400-meters, Lance Olsen in the 400-meter hurdles and Jerry Trujillo in the triple jump.

"It was a decent weekend weather wise, but that wind made it tough on the runners."

— Scott Lorek
Women's track coach

Other individual Idaho standouts include Jason Uhlman, who finished second in the 8000-meters, Calvin Harris, who captured third in the 200-meters and Ty Koellmann, who took third in the 800-meters.

In the field events, Idaho's Charlie Wheeler finished second in the high jump and Pat McFadden finished third in the pole vault. Scott McCarty captured fourth in the discus and Devin Olson finished fourth in the shot put.

The 400-relay was another high point for Idaho as they had a second place finish and season best time of 47.99. Hudson, Marlatt, Bodwell and Jackie Ross competed in the relay.

Idaho's last meet of the outdoor season will be in the Kibbie Dome on Saturday. The Idaho Invitational will include competition from both Eastern Washington and Seattle Pacific. The Big Sky Conference Championships are being held May 19-22 in Spokane.

Renaissance fair a diversion from reality

By LANAE EMPEY
Staff Writer

A lady on high-heeled stilts with a huge gown overlooked a packed Renaissance Fair Saturday and Sunday in East City Park. There, she could see everything from egg rolls to flower wreaths.

Artisans selling pottery, watercolors, carvings and body lotions lined the park as spectators devouring ethnic food poked through their wares. Wandering around were clowns, jokers and wizards. In the background, bands performed all day.

For many of the artisans, fairs are a way of life. For Joyce Simplot of Boise, they are a family event. Simplot, who makes wizard dolls, takes her 11-year-old daughter, Lirrah with her to all her fairs.

"I wanted to make a doll for my girl," Simplot said. "I made one and I got hooked." She has been making them for nine years. Dressed in a long black cloak with her brown hair covering her shoulders, Simplot said she likes the idea of a Renaissance Fair.

"It's a time for people to get together and have fun and associate on a good level," she said. "It's about not being totally restricted to this reality."

Simplot travels to fairs, especially at Christmas time, to sell her dolls. She makes Santas, but her favorites are old people and wizards.

"I like wizards and fantasies," Simplot said.

The favorite at the fair were little fairies. They are stuffed dolls with bright, glittery clothing. Simplot said that one of the small fairies would take her four hours to make. One of the larger wizards with white beards down to their knees takes up to two days.

Business boomed at Simplot's booth as well as booths throughout the fair. Favorite items were dried-flower wreaths and pottery. The prices ranged as much as the personalities of the vendors.

For the children, a big favorite was face painting and animal balloons.

Jumbalassy offers a variety of music

By LANAE EMPEY
Staff Writer

Jumbalassy, a Caribbean band, must have been running on Caribbean time, but dancers didn't seem to mind as ASUI productions presented a 15 minute late concert May 1.

Lead singer, Alex Duncan from the island of St. Kitts in the Caribbean sang in a Spanish dialect as well as English, but neither were intelligible. In both slow and fast songs, Duncan sang extremely fast, putting current rap artists to shame.

When the band finally started to play, only about 20 people were seated at 10 tables strung on the edges of the Student Union Building Ballroom. The band, however, is not a sit and listen to band. After only two songs, many couples and singles were out in the middle of the floor dancing.

Duncan, dressed in an all blue, African style shirt and pants, didn't have a whole lot of stage presence. His voice was great, but neither he nor his band were fun to watch.

The dance band did have great variety in their music, however.

Although all had a Caribbean beat, offered by acoustic drummer Doug Anderson and Philip Nakano, who played auxiliary percussion as well as a saxophone and flute, each song was different.

Jumbalassy's free concert Saturday night gave students a wide diversity of danceable Caribbean music. (JEFF CURTIS PHOTO)

The concert was definitely a change from the traditional blues or jazz of night clubs. Jumbalassy makes regular appearances at Seattle clubs like the Ballard Firehouse and the Backstage.

They have opened for Reggae/Caribbean acts such as Ziggy Marley and The Melody Makers.

Musical diversity brings smiles at fair

By RUSS WOOLSEY
Staff Writer

The 20th annual Renaissance Fair kept the rain away last weekend with food, crafts and most importantly music.

Highlighting the music performances were several bands including Reggie Garrett and the Snake Oil Peddlers, who set the mood for Sunday evening's musical line-up at the main stage.

One long-haired spectator said, "This has been a musical torture session," before this three man Seattle band took the stage and jammed into a blues-based set that included a guest performance with Laura Love, playing "Me and My Uncle."

Other songs in their set included tunes from Eric Clapton, Jimmi Hendrix and The Grateful Dead song "New Speedway Boogie," which got the crowd swinging with the lyrics, "One way or another this darkness got to give."

Next on stage after the Snake Oil Peddlers was the Laura Love Duo who impressed the crowd with their vocal harmonies.

After Laura Love left the stage the Seattle steel drum band, The Toucans, played their soca, samba, calypso and reggae based music that kept the crowd warm even though the sun was going down.

This was the fifth year that The Toucans have played at the Renaissance Fair. They performed for most of the day away from the main stage that gave the fair a fun and lively feeling.

Other bands that played at the main stage through Sunday were The Physical Scientists with their funky sounds that could compare to an older B-52's sound, the acoustic Nosotros, and the spacey performance by Choda Music and Dance which incorporated rhythm and percussion with a new age dance.

Replacing the cancelled Twist of Fate from Moscow was Seattle's Hungry Young Poets who sounded similar to the band English Beat. They kept the crowd alive with horns and danceable cuts and lyrics that brought a smile to many-a-face.

Native American writer to read from her work

By HALO DeWITT
Staff Writer

Wednesday evening at 7:30 p.m. Janet Campbell Hale, a Native American writer, will read from her most recent book as part of the English department's visiting writer's program.

Bloodlines: Odyssey of a Native Daughter is Hale's third book of Native American prose. Her two previous books are The Sailing of Cecelia Capture and The Owl's Song.

"It is powerful and unusual," said Ron McFarland, of the UI English department, "because there are not very many Native American women writers. Those women who do write generally have male protagonists, but Janet

The wall brings back the climbing kid

By CHRIS MILLER
Lifestyles Editor

A Review

Everyone at one time or another has felt the irrepressible urge to climb. As children we were seduced by the songs of trees, fences, and water towers calling to us, singing out their need to be climbed. Time and time again we felt the exhilarating rush of accomplishment at reaching mind-swaying heights.

And as our perspective changed from four to six feet, so did our need to climb and see the very tops of things, like Mr. Neighbor's bald head, for instance.

But the moment I wandered into the renovated raquetball court, I heard it calling again, faint at first then growing louder into the appreciative shout only a child can hear clearly. "Climb me," the climbing wall in the University of Idaho's Adventure Education Facility said to me. "Climb me now and feel the exhilaration."

As I turned over my I.D. and signed away my life by the sound of all the clauses and agreements in the user's contract, I watched the real climbers stroll in with the harnesses, straps, hooks, funny little bags that held white dust and hung down behind their rear-ends, and rubbery shoes with laces that went all the way to the toes.

I idly wondered what I was getting myself into.

In the first hour of every open-climbing session, a person will take newcomers through a quick instructional course designed to keep the novices from falling, breaking themselves wide open and bleeding all over the safety mats. My partner and I were given a tangle of nylon strapping, a hooky-thing, and a round tube with a bar inside. I twirled my harness around in my hands for a moment, looking for a knot to untie and sure everybody's laughing eyes were on me as they watched me fumble with the simple gear.

Julia, our tolerant instructor, got us together and taught us how to tie a "figure-eight" knot with the patience of a mother teaching a child how to tie his shoes. We learned key rock-climbing equipment names like "tuber," "locking beaner," "harness," and "rope."

Once my partner and I were tied together and ready to climb, we heard other climbers using important rock-climbing jargon like "Dino" and "Thrasher." As near as I could ascertain, the words refer back to ancient cave-man days where the humans were chased up sheer rock walls by dinosaurs and were thrashed into a billion meaty chunks if they didn't make it.

Next we learned the indispensable code-words to begin climbing. The guy holding the boring end of the rope is called the "belayer" (derived from the French word "belay" which means, "I'll likely catch you if you fall") and the person on the business end of the rope is, of course, the climber. In sequence each must say their bit, or they must abort their climb and start all over.

Climber: "Belayer ready?" (means: Buddy, get your finger out of your mouth, I wanna climb.)

Belayer: "Belayer's ready." (means: Get your butt in gear before I fall asleep.)

'Requiem' to be performed

The University of Idaho Symphony Orchestra, University Chorus, and Vandaleers have come together under the direction of Dr. Robert Billups and Mr. Tim King, and will perform the magnificent "Ein Deutches Requiem" by Johannes Brahms. The performance is May 4 in the University Auditorium at 8 p.m. Admission is free to everyone.

The Requiem, which is one of the most moving and personal expressions of Brahms' musical talent, will mark the fourth year of the UI's spring extravaganza. With approximately 200 people performing, this concert promises to deliver a magnificent evening for music lovers.

"This piece is really one of the monuments of all music literature. It requires a great deal of work, concentration, and solid musicianship on everyone's part," said Billups, conductor of the orchestra. "Brahms went beyond himself to compose this piece, and we must go beyond ourselves to perform it."

This is the last opportunity for concert-goers to hear the orchestra and chorale departments perform this school year. Soloists for the Tuesday night performance are King, baritone, and Dorothy Barnes, soprano. Both soloists are faculty of the UI Lionel Hampton School of Music.

IFA holds last meeting

The International Friendship Association will be holding a farewell tea for the international women who will be leaving Moscow at semester's end. LuAnn Bechtel is hosting the tea in her home at 1523 Borah Avenue, on May 8 at 2 p.m. Interested international women are invited, including women students and student wives, as well as American women and any foreign women living in the community. These meetings provide a good way to become acquainted with women from all over the world, and everyone is urged to attend. Suggestions for programs and hostesses for next year will be solicited. Rides will be available for those needing transportation from the SUB parking lot starting at 1:50 p.m. For more information, call the IFA office at 885-7841.

Climber: "Climber's ready." (means: Are you really really ready, 'cause if you're not I could die, and then I would have to kill you.)

Belayer: "Climb on." (means: If you don't quit horseing around, I'll never get a chance to climb today myself!)

Like with the figure-eight knot, it took us several tries to get the sequence down right, but with our helpful assistant's care we committed it to memory and were allowed to climb.

I attacked the wall with all the ferocity of a tentative kitten and slowly worked my way up the sheer stucco-wall searching for the largest hand-holds. My mind fell back into the old, familiar intensive mode that allowed me to climb in the single-minded pursuit of a kid. With reckless disregard for my body, I stretched dangerously outward for a tiny handhold, and heard Julia instruct me to fall.

Fall? I thought. You don't fall when you're climbing — it's just not part of the equation. I had unknowingly reverted back into a climbing kid.

With a touch of reservation creeping into the back of my mind, I fell, reasonably sure that my belayer would catch me and the rope would hold.

My feet lightly touched the mats, so I spouted the code words and headed for the top once again. The sense of accomplishment was still there as I looked in vain from my precarious perch at the top of the twenty-foot high wall.

Everybody had a full head of hair.

The AEF offers about six different routes to the top with varying methods of difficulty and can be modified much faster than it takes a tree to grow. Everyone who could once climb a tree and feed on the adrenaline possesses the skills necessary to climb the wall.

And oh yeah, it's safer than a tree.

Hale's writing has a female protagonist."

"Hale joins other Native American women writers, like Leslie Marmon Silko and Louise Erdrich, in defining a voice that speaks to Native American women," McFarland said.

Hale was born in Los Angeles but is a member of the Coeur d'Alene Indian Tribe. She was raised on the reservation in northern Idaho and on the Yakima reservation in Washington.

She received her B.A. from the University of California at Berkeley and her M.A. from the University of California at Davis.

Currently she lives in New York City. During the school year she teaches creative writing at Eastern Washington University.

Hale also writes poetry, some of which is anthologized in Songs from the Earth on Turtle's Back.

The reading will be in the UI Law School Courtroom. The reading is free to all, including the public and is co-sponsored by the UI English department and the Office of Minority Student Services. There will be a book signing reception at BookPeople on Main Street in Moscow following the reading.

>LETTER from page 7

humanists? Have we included the necrophiliacs and pedophiles? And don't forget those who wish to make incest, bestiality and coprophilism socially acceptable as well. OK, all these will eventually come under the purview of "sexual orientation," now all we need is special protection to prevent discrimination against people with different "culinary orientation." So what's wrong with providing fresh aborted "fetuses" to the cannibals, anyway? The have a right to their own type of cuisine don't they? As long as they don't hurt anybody, what does it matter?

Let no one falsely accuse me of hate mongering. I feel nothing but compassion for those sadly caught up in the blinding and deceitful web of moral corruption and degradation. God help us all.
