Pledge's accident provokes questioning into alcohol policies

Tim Helmke
 Staff Writer

Changes in policy dealing with on-campus alcohol consumption at the University of Idaho have come to head.

The fall and consequential paralyzation of 18-year-old Rejena Coghlan at the Alpha Phi house Aug. 19 has prompted questioning regarding the underage drinking of UI students on campus.

Individual chapters of the UI Greek system had begun to take steps to ensure the enforcement of the established policies. Policy changes deal with underage consumption of alcohol and how to control the distribution of the alcohol at chapter functions.

Marci Hyatt, chapter president of Alpha Gamma Delta, said her chapter has had strict guidelines to follow for at least three years in connection to functions involving alcohol.

Hyatt said AGD must fill out forms with their international headquarters to be allowed to attend a function where alcohol will be served.

"The forms and approval usually take about two weeks so we must know ahead of time to be able to formally attend a function," said Hyatt.

Hyatt said even with the approval from the international offices, no one under the age of 21 is allowed to consume alcohol. She said her officer team which consists of

Andrus pushes investigation

The hunt is on in the wake of one of the most tragic school-year openings in University of Idaho history.

In a prepared statement issued on Monday Governor Cecil D. Andrus demanded to know the events surrounding incoming freshman Rejena Coghlan's intoxicated fall out of a third story window Aug. 19.

"I want to know where a minor such as Ms. Coghlan obtained alcohol, who procured it for her, who made it available to her, and every last detail of the events leading up to her fall from the roof," said Andrus who immediately empowered state officials to act.

Richard Cade, Director of the Idaho Department of Law Enforcement, began organizing an investigation into the abuse of state liquor laws preceding Coghlan's fall. To this task Cade sent two special investigators to Moscow on Monday to assist the Moscow Police Department.

Detectives Lyle Bolin of Lewiston and Thomas Beale of Boise met with Lt. Dan Bruce Monday afternoon, detailing a plan to reconstruct Coghlan's move-herself, the chapter social chairperson, the chapter treasurer, and the chapter advisor, is then responsible to make sure the minors are not drinking.

"I am confident my officer team is conscientious enough to know what goes on and also knows how to handle themselves in the situations which may arise," said Hyatt.

Tom Cuthbert, chapter vice-president of Alpha Kappa Lambda, said his chapter has already taken some steps to control the consumption of alcohol by minors. AKL has begun to card people as they come into a party, and if they are of age they receive a card enabling them to get alcohol from the bar. Those who are under 21 are not served alcohol.

AKL has also been offering non-alcoholic beverages to both groups so the pressure to drink alcohol is eliminated in some proportions.

"AKL made some positive changes in the spring semester to control the distribution of alcohol at parties," said Cuthbert.

A Burlington Northern train hit a car at Sixth St. and Deakin Tuesday afternoon. Driver Wendy Wilson, a student, suffered extensive bruising.

Student escapes car-train wreck with bruises

Staff Writer

A crowd gathered Tuesday afternoon when a train crashed into the side of a car stopped on the tracks just west of Taco Time on Sixth Street.

At 12:50 p.m. University of Idaho senior Wendy Wilsey was stuck in traffic heading west when the Burlington Northern Engine began heading toward her.

Sgt. Dale Mickelson of the Moscow Police said Wilsey panicked when she was unable to get her Dodge Colt in gear.

Witnesses said Wilsey tried to jump out of the car just before the train barreled into the side pushing it 30 ft. down the track.

Wilsey, 20, was taken to Gritman Medical Center by ambulance where she was placed under observation in satisfactory condition with extensive bruising, but no fractures.

"The train was going way too damn fast," said Tim Hawkins, of 323 S. Asbury, who was at the scene.

"The train just kept coming and coming," he added. "She couldn't go forward because there was a car in front of her and a car in back."

"She kept blasting her horn and blasting her horn, but the train wouldn't stop," said Laura Curtis, a Moscow Junior High student. "I ran to call 911, but the police were already on their way."

Just minutes prior to the train/car collision Moscow Police and Fire units had responded to Xenon nightclub for a fire alarm. Mickelson, who was directing traffic on Main Street rushed to the wreck and arrived just before the ambulance.

A bystander who refused to identify himself said the train was going less than 10 mph and the train had a recorder on board to prove it, but Hawkins was adamant.

"No way that train was going 10 mph. He was going way faster than that," Hawkins said.

"She was there the whole time, he just never stopped."

Class enforces women's self defense

Ariel Plywaski

Staff Writer

Safety on campus has always been an issue, but lately it has come to the forefront in national and state news.

A recent study conducted by Ms. magazine on sexual assault on campus stated one in four women were victims of rape or attempted rape. The study further said 84% of those women knew their attackers.

Students can learn to defend themselves by taking a class offered by Continuing Education. Amber Thiemens, instructor, has been teaching self-defense for 14 years for Northwest Dojos. Last year Thiemens was on the advisory board for the Sexual Assault Task Force at WSU, which, with the help of local people, campus police and campus maintenance, improved campus security in all aspects.

Thiemens teaches a form of karate known as Kokondo and a form of jujitsu known as Jukido. The classes are run in a traditional Japanese manner, which means that students call Thiemens "sensei" and bow into their partners, or ukes, as they are called. Japanese terms are used for all things in class, such as "sensei," which is the Japanese word for teacher, and is a term of respect.

Thiemens said classes concentrate on teaching self defense against all types of attacks, from assertive behavior to holds, grabs, chokes and weapons. Classes also include kata, which is a series of moves which can all be used to defend oneself.

"Women need to depend on themselves for safety and defense," Thiemens said.

Jim Kouril, community affairs officer for the campus police, suggests women walking at night should be accompanied by another person, or carry a flashlight or a whistle when walking alone.

Thiemens disagrees.

"A woman can't be walked everywhere, it limits her freedom," Thiemens said. "I don't teach whistles and I don't teach mace," she explained, saying whistles and mace are never on hand at the right time, and they lead to a false sense of security.

Beginning classes start Sept. 14. For more information, call Amber Thiemens at 882-7896.

Flood of underage drinking hits Moscow, MIPS total 23

By sheer numbers and impact, crime stats has been replaced by alcohol stats.

A total of 23 minor in possession or open container citations have been issued by the Moscow Police since Aug. 10.

The week started in a flood when Russell Branhan, of 720 Idaho Ave. was cited for passing 16 cases of Keystone beer to 18-year-old Shane Vaughan, also of 720 Idaho Ave. Vaughan was cited for minor in possession.

Campus Police Commander Jake Kershnik said officers spotted Branhan, 23, and Vaughan purchasing the $179 worth of Keystone at Jeff's Foods on Third St. with a Delta Tau Delta fraternity check and followed them until the exchange was made. Cpl. Dan Bruce issued the citations, and Kershnik said all of the beer was seized and emptied.

At 12:15 Saturday morning Julie Sharp, 20, was also cited for minor in possession, but she was further cited and taken into custody for obstructing an officer after she falsified her name, address and date of birth to police. Sharp was taken downtown and later released.

Also cited for passing Keystone to a minor was UI junior Chad Moore. Nineteen-year-old sophomore Jill Barth was cited for minor in possession.

Police also are investigating a reported assault to a Washington State University student. A friend of the alleged victim told WSU police the assault took place over the weekend at an on-campus UI party. Officers from WSU notified the Moscow Police who are currently investigating.

Kershnik said at this point they have been unable to contact the alleged victim.

Campus child care moves to new building

Teah Jones
Contributing Writer

With a new building, a new director and an old motto, the University of Idaho's Early Childhood Learning Center is ready for a new school year.

The preschool, which caters to children of UI faculty, staff and full-time students, recently completed the move to a new building located at 421 Sweet Ave.

Previously, ECLC classes were scattered across campus, often in cramped, inadequate classrooms, said Jan Reed, new ECLC director.

Many teachers supplemented their meager teaching materials with supplies, toys and books they purchased themselves, and many parents with two or more children had to travel across campus from one classroom to another to drop off or pick up their children, Reed said.

The new school, which can hold up to 135 children, features updated classrooms and playgrounds designed to meet the requirements of each specific age group, Reed said. There is also a multipurpose room, a conference room and a staff lounge included in the new building.

Reed, who previously headed a private, non-profit preschool in Seattle for four years, added that each class received new toys and playground equipment including sandboxes, books, balls and tricycles.

Reed is quick to point out the school, who's motto is "Don't do for a child what he can do for himself," has never sacrificed its quality teachers and aides. Each classroom has a lead teacher who is assisted by 2 or 3 full-time aides as well as several work study students and helpers.

All lead teachers and a majority of the aides have degrees in child care, child development or a related field, said Reed. Three lead teachers also hold masters degrees in the child care field.

"We have a very professional staff and a very professional environment," Reed said. "I like to call all our employees 'facilitators' instead of teachers, because I feel that we are here to observe and learn right along with the children," Reed added.

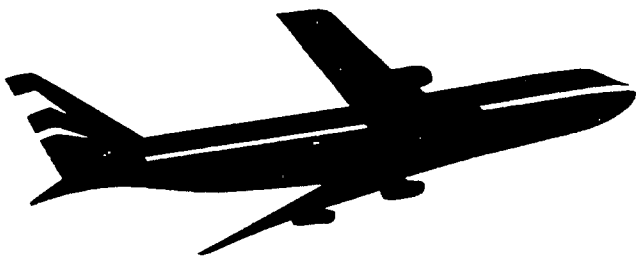

The school is open year-round and has seven classes divided by age group: six weeks-12 months, 12 months-24 months, 24 months-36 months, two classes of three, four and five year-olds, a kindercare class for children in kindergarten for half a day and an after-school class for children in first grade and over.

Each class is served breakfast, lunch and a snack each day and have plenty of free time to play with their friends and teachers as well as some pointed learning activity time, Reed said. Currently, the school hours are 7:15 a.m.-5:30 p.m. each day.

Environmental Science degree new at UI

Sasha Stevens
Contributing Writer

The University of Idaho is now offering a new degree in environmental science, an area that specializes in hazardous waste.

After fifteen years of discussion and two years of planning the program is finally available to students.

The Environmental Science Degree is a new interdisciplinary program which means that many disciplines are involved, giving students a broader area of study.

Margrit von Braun, environmental science program chairwoman, said the degree is expected to give breadth and depth, and students are able to obtain bachelor's and master's degrees in this field.

Environmental Science 101, the introductory class to the program, is also new to the University. This course covers the basic principles in the biological, physical, and social aspects of environmental science.

The course will discuss "ethics and values, sociology and politics, law and business, and motives and responsibilities which impact the environment," said instructor Bob Mahler.

Mahler said such a wide range of study should be interesting to most students and he hopes to have a good turnout in the class once word gets out.

"I think the course is one that most college students should be exposed to," said Mahler.

The course is being held on Monday, Wednesday and Friday in Forestry Building 10.

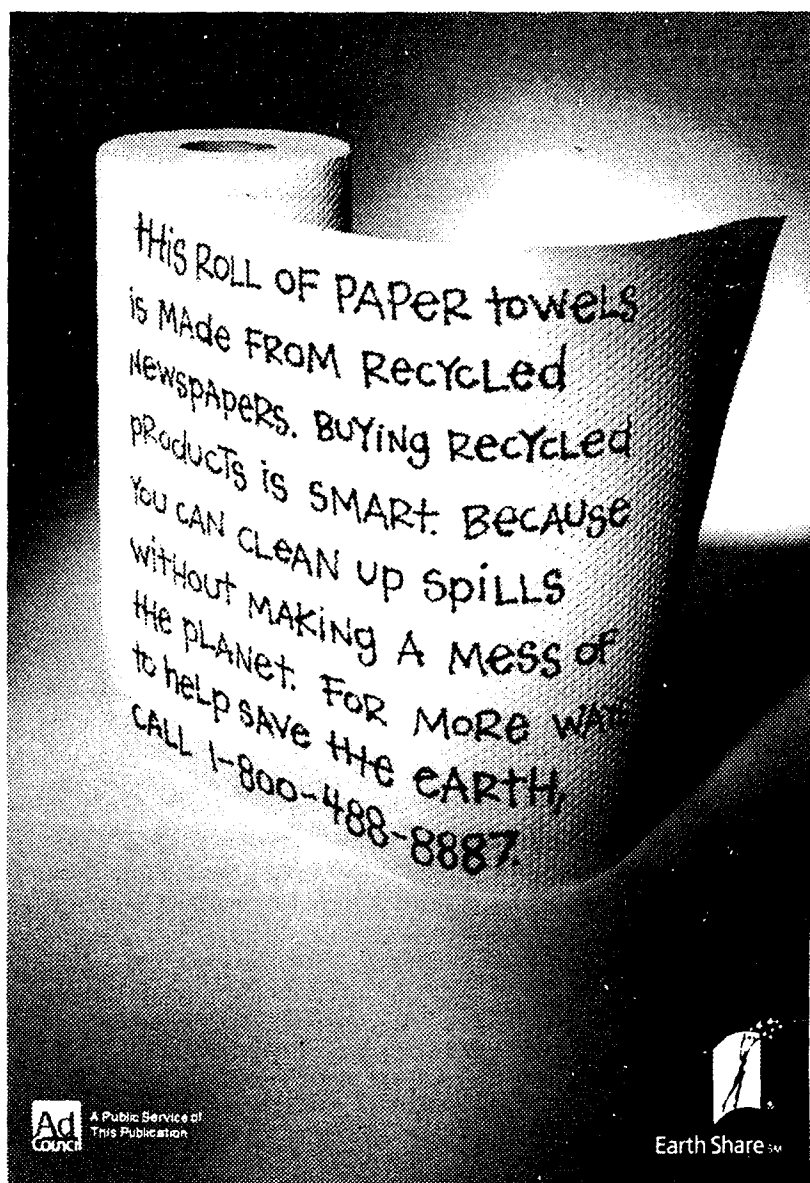

Mahler said there is still plenty of room for students who want to sign up. For students who want to find out more information about the Environmental Science Degree program, von Braun will be a guest speaker in ES 101 Monday at 2:30. All students are welcome to attend even if they are not enrolled in the class.

Senior killed in motorcycle accident, friends mourn

Darin Crisp
Staff Writer

A University of Idaho senior died as a result of a motorcycle accident Aug. 6 which left his friend and passenger with only minor injuries.

According to the Idaho State Police report, alcohol and fatigue were contributing factors in the accident.

Jeffrey Dean Bever, 21, majored in English. According to his former advisor, Kerry McKeever, Director of Graduate and Undergraduate Studies for the UI English department, Bever was a young man with a purpose.

Working for the last two years with his brother, Bever was writing a comic book. According to McKeever, he excelled at such a mix of art mediums.

"He had a grasp of, oh, I don't know how to say it...maybe an ability to visualize would be the way to put it," McKeever said, adding that Bever had a very good grasp of multi-media art forms, and he was very literary.

According to his friend and passenger, Larry James Farnam, Bever was a man who was very easy to know. Farnam said Bever was likeable and pleasant to be around. Farnam knew Bever from working with him at the University 4 theatre, located behind the University Inn.

Others who knew Bever listed such attributes as individualistic and creative when referring to him.

Bever was due to graduate this year, said McKeever.

Farnam was thrown from the motorcycle when it went off Mountain View Road. He was treated at Gritman Regional Medical Center with minor bruising, and was released.

Bever was initially treated at Gritman after the accident, but was not admitted, said a Gritman spokesperson last week. Bever, with massive head injuries, was flown to Sacred Heart Medical Center in Spokane on Life Flight, a helicopter ambulance service. He died there Aug 17.

Memorial services were held Aug. 21 at St. Thomas Moore Catholic Church in Spokane.

ASUI creates three new sophomore scholarships

Missy Wilson
Contributing Writer

A bill creating three new scholarships for University of Idaho sophomores was signed by ASUI President Richard Rock Wednesday night.

The bill will use interest off the ASUI's $160,000 dollar general reserve to fund the scholarships.

According to Rock, interest from the general reserve has gone back to the university in the past.

"This bill is kind of a safeguard," Rock said. "We wanted to put the money into something the university wouldn't take away later. A scholarship is the perfect way to help students and safeguard the money."

The scholarships are in recognition of Dean Vetrus, a past UI Student Union Director of 31 years who retired spring semester of 1993.

Director of Financial Aid Dan Davenport said Vetrus is deserving of the honor.

"Dean Vetrus contributed a lot to this university," Davenport said.

"He's worked with many student government leaders and he practically built the Student Union Building and many of the activities that go on inside."

In deciding how to allocate the scholarships, Rock and Davenport targeted sophomore students.

Davenport said there is a deficiency in scholarships for sophomores because freshman often get the bulk of one-year scholarships from the UI and their hometowns.

"Sophomores have been through the system for a year and have contributed to the ASUI and student body," he said.

"They are a very deserving group of young people."

The only criteria for the scholarships, according to Rock, is that applicants must have sophomore standing and carry a 3.2 to 3.7 grade point average.

"These scholarships are perfect for students who perform well, but are not top of the line," Rock said.

The Dean Vetrus scholarships will be available for the first time during Fall Semester 1994.

Rock pushes for UI Habitat for Humanity chapter

Tim Helmke
Staff Writer

Helping other to make the best of their situation is one of the foundations of Habitat for Humanity which is setting up a chapter at the University of Idaho.

Richard Rock, ASUI President, is taking an active role in the process to form a chapter of Habitat for Humanity on campus. Habitat for Humanity has about 200 student chapters nationwide as well as community chapters, according to Rock.

"We have begun the application process which is quite extensive so we can have a chapter here at UI," said Rock.

Habitat for Humanity was founded in 1968 by Millard Fuller, a business man and lawyer from Alabama, and Dr. Clarence Jordan, the founder of Koinonia Farms in Americus, Ga. Koinonia Farms began to eliminate substandard housing in rural Georgia and the group began building houses. These houses were sold to low income families at no profit and no interest.

In 1973, Millard and Linda Fuller took the idea to Africa where they launched a similar program to build over 160 houses. In 1976, they returned to the United States and Habitat for Humanity was formed to expand the work. Habitat is headquartered in Americus and has over 700 affiliates and projects in 35 countries.

Rock got involved in the local Palouse affiliate of Habitat for Humanity in June when he read an article in a local newspaper about their plans to build a home in Pullman. He said the project sounded like the type of service area he was interested in so he made a few phone calls and became an active volunteer.

There is a chapter organizational meeting Sunday in the SUB Ee-da-ho Room at 7 p.m. Rock said all students interested in getting involved should attend the meeting so the application process can be completed.

"I invite anyone who is interested to attend so we can get a feel for how many people want to get involved," said Rock.

The UI chapter will, if accepted, work closely with the Palouse Habitat for Humanity chapter but will be totally independent from them, said Rock.

He said there is no membership fee to join. "The only cost to join is the time and commitment you put into the group and its efforts," said Rock.

The UI chapter would also assist the local chapter to build the home they are currently building.

Rock also said the family for whom the home is being built must put in 400 hours of work on the construction of the house as a sort of "sweat equity."

EPA's regulation slows million dollar clean-up

Darin Crisp
Staff Writer

New Environmental Protection Agency regulations have resulted in a slowdown in the final stages of cleanup at the former PureGro site, located across Sweet Avenue and the new family housing units.

The regulation, in effect since May 8, triples the cost of disposing of the small remnant of contaminated soil left on the site, said Jerry Lee, an outside consultant working for TerraGraphics. TerraGraphics is a Moscow-based environmental consultation firm.

The new rule, called the land ban regulation, was not unexpected. It requires hazardous waste contaminated soil to be run through an incinerator before being placed in a hazardous waste landfill.

The site cleanup has been hurried, said State of Idaho

Department of Environmental Quality (DEQ) spokesman Gregg Teasdale, so the cleanup effort wouldn't be affected by Land Ban.

So far, 7600 tons of soil have been hauled away to hazardous waste disposal sites in Oregon and elsewhere. However, unexpected bad weather starting May 4 caused a slowdown of work, and the project didn't get finished by the May 8 deadline.

The land belongs to Burlington Northern and the University of Idaho has an interest in it. Potentially, the UI stands to gain 12 acres of land valued last year at about $1 million dollars, for a $300,000 initial investment in the cleanup process. Before it could be purchased, however, it needed to be decontaminated.

ments Aug. 19 in hopes of identifying the exact locations where she was served.

On Tuesday Bruce drove to Deaconess Hospital in Spokane where he interviewed Coghlan in her hospital bed. Preliminary reports indicate she does not remember the fall or the events after the fall. Police refuse to comment on Coghlan's memories of events earlier in the evening.

In the light of the statements coming out of Boise, Idaho's Board of Education has organized a formal review of UI policy toward alcohol on campus.

Vice President of Student Affairs Dr. W. Harold Godwin, who personally contacted Cade on Tuesday, said he welcomes any discussion on review of the policy.

"Alcohol abuse is a problem on campus, has been a problem, and is equally a problem all over America."

Godwin said the UI dilemma arises from the relational aspects of Greek housing.

"Since the houses and the land where they stand are privately owned, our policy has always been to leave these kinds of decisions up to the individuals involved. To a large extent the Inter-Fraternity council and National Fraternity headquarters institute rules with regard to alcohol in the houses," Godwin said.

The university informally stands on the rules of the law. As in similar cases the Student Affairs Board allows any civil or criminal action to be taken before they proceed with University sanctions.

Hyatt said her chapter is limited to attending three functions where alcohol is served in a semester. Those three functions include both parties and house dances.

"Our international offices require us to have one free weekend each month as well," said Hyatt.

Cuthbert added the Greek system on the UI campus must accept the responsibility regarding alcohol and realize problems arise from under age consumption of alcohol.

"Changes in policy cannot be overlooked by the Greek community, they have to be taken seriously by the chapters. The alcohol policy changes can be taken serious and we can still have fun as long as we are responsible," said Cuthbert.

Hyatt said she doesn't view her chapter as being different from any other chapter on campus as they all have similar guidelines to follow in attending functions where alcohol is served.

In regards to the alcohol policy changes after the Alpha Phi incident, Hyatt said, "Something good always comes out of something bad. Changes will be taking place and they will be accepted by the UI chapters as none of us can afford to be irresponsible."

University needs to crack down on alcohol policy

College should be a party, but this is ridiculous.

It is ridiculous the University of Idaho has not been cracking down on their own student alcohol policy. It's like Mom used to say, "It's all fun and games until someone gets their eye poked out." Or, in this case, falls from a third floor fire escape.

Now, the blame can be put on many different groups in the area. The Interfraternal Council should be enforcing their alcohol policies aggressively. Each Greek house should abide by the rules set for them by international or national fraternities or sororities. Each individual student should be responsible for his/her own actions and follow the rules set before him/her by his/her place of residence, whether it be a house, hall or apartment.

But the fact remains all of this controversy has taken place at the university. Campus officials will be quick to point out they have set rules and regulations concerning the nature of alcohol consumption, but they lack any language in student guides dealing with on-campus Greek residences. In fact, the UI Student Code, Article VII, simply states:

"Sale or illegal possession or illegal consumption of alcoholic beverages is prohibited in facilities owned, leased, or operated by UI and on campus grounds. Alcoholic beverages may not be possessed or consumed under any circumstances in any areas open to and most commonly used by the general public...UI's primary role in handling matters involving the use or potential use of drugs or alcohol by its students is that of counseling. However, in appropriate situations, the full range of sanctions may be applied."

The above statements could easily cover the Arboretum, Administration Building lawn, Kibbie Dome parking lot or countless other places. After all, these are all areas of campus owned by the university and used by the general public. These places, however, are all pretty lame spots for a party.

Instead the university has left much of the alcohol policies up to individual Greek associations, whose houses may be privately owned, but the consumption is still taking place on campus.

As an educational institution one would assume campus officials would take time to watch out for their students by laying down the law.

Whatever is not written or understood is beside the point. Accidents, such as what happened last Thursday night, reflect badly on the university, and in the end, reflects badly on all UI students.

This wasn't the first time a sad situation arose due to the consumption of alcohol on campus, and the university even recognizes this. In their Policies and Information guide, it states "Alcohol consumption causes a number of marked changes in behavior." So instead of cracking down to reduce the amount of "marked changes in behavior" last weekend, the Moscow Police Department doubled patrols. Meanwhile, the parties continued to rage Friday and Saturday nights, with little or no recognizable intervention on behalf of the university.

If a problem has been recognized by the governor of our state, why on earth has it not already been dealt with by Bruce Pitman and the rest of the staff at the UI Student Advisory services?

The problem with alcohol abuse on campus must stop and it's about time the university gets its act together.

Earth First!ers driving down a wrong way road

The Earth First! environmental activists protesting logging in the Nez Perce National Forest (NPNF) are a misguided lot.

The Earth First!ers, or Tamaracks, Sequoias or Dandelions as they sometimes go by, have spent most of the summer camped in Dixie, Idaho near the national forest. Their goal is to stop road building and logging in the Cove/Mallard area, the largest tract of roadless land in the lower 48 states. While their message has some sound aspects, their means of distributing it is ineffective and juvenile.

Despite "direct action" attempts like chaining themselves to Forest Service vehicles, burying themselves in roads and climbing trees destined to be cut and refusing to come down, the Earth First!ers have succeeded in accomplishing little except building an impressive list of nearly 150 arrests and citations, including a racketeering suit against them which could cost them bucks easily into the six-figure range.

In mid-June $60,000 worth of vandalism to construction equipment by unknown persons occurred in the Cove/Mallard area, prompting a closure to much of the NPNF.

COMMENTARY
Chris Miller

Earth First!ers repeatedly violated the closure and played their games with Forest Service employees and loggers, maybe hoping a Forest Service employee would not notice a protester chained to the axle of his pick-up and drive-off while they video-taped the fiasco from vantage points in the brush for future use in activist propaganda.

And through all the hindrances, they have failed to stop logging in the area.

What the Earth First!ers don't realize is that if they put the same amount of energy it takes to dig a 30-foot trench or play tug-of-war with a

Not all conservatives are neurotic white males

Welcome to my column! This is where the truth about conservatism and conservative beliefs can be found. Contrary to popular opinion, not all conservatives are neurotic white males. Some are actually students and professors at this university. Conservatives are not cruel and heartless with no pity for those who are less fortunate. They are compassionate people who believe in personal responsibility and basic moral values. They believe in people pulling their own weight and taking responsibility for the consequences of their actions.

Speaking of consequences, I became a "Mrs." 17 days ago. When my maid of honor asked me if I was going to hyphenate my name or keep my maiden one, I was shocked. All the women in my family have taken their husband's name. But it wasn't only tradition that convinced me to do it. I felt it was a way to show my husband that I believe our marriage will last forever, and that I am willing to become part of a whole. Besides, it was a fair trade—I took his name, and he gave me the checkbook.

He and I have had to do more compromising than that, though. He's a Canadian socialist—oops, I mean citizen—by birth, and our politics don't seem to agree very often. He sees nothing wrong with socialized medicine, and I think the fewer things the government sticks its nose into the better off we'll all be. But at least we agree on the important things: gun control (absence of), the death penalty (increased use of), and hiding in the mountains picking Huckleberries is a great way to spend the weekend.

Last weekend my husband and I helped my mom move my dad and brothers to their logging camp above Elk River, Idaho, which is about 50 or so miles East of Moscow. The trip might have been boring were it not for tourists driving in the middle green pick-up into working with in the system in a reasonable and safe manner they might accomplish their goal without putting activists and honest workers in dangerous positions.

For instance, a coalition of 10 conservation and sporting groups sued the Clearwater National Forest last February alleging the Forest Service's 1987 forest management plan inadequately protected water quality and did not set reasonable sustained-yield logging goals, which it did not. The coalition agreed Monday to drop the suit after forest service officials offered to fully revise the plan. The new plan specifies protection of old-growth forests, roadless areas and water quality. The environmental coalition got what they wanted without driving spikes into trees or chaining themselves to large objects.

Earth First!ers, on the other hand, prefer to camp out and destroy public roads by digging trenches. They keep men from going to work to feed their families and demand Forest Service personnel to spend more time baby-sitting than actually doing the work their paid for. Earth First!ers also don't seem to realize their constant theatrics alienate them from both other environmental activists and the general public.

After 25-30 trees were found spiked in the Grouse timber sale area (Earth First!ers have not claimed responsibility) 30 state and federal officers searched the camp early this month and found clues they will probably use to prosecute activists for various acts of vandalism that have occurred on Forest Service vehicles and road building equipment.

As they realize their tactics aren't working they've started grabbing for straws by trying to pull wolves into the scenario in hopes the endangered species will be relocated or allowed to naturally reproduce in the area. Suzanne Laverty, executive director of the Wolf Recovery Foundation has advised Earth First!ers several times to leave the wolf out of their fight. Public resentment toward radical Earth First!ers could also destroy years of wolf recovery work that is heading in the right direction and has followed the more difficult channels of diplomacy.

Instead of sympathizing with the cause, many people are paying more attention to activists' daily escapades simply for the entertainment value and not the message activists need to send. Many of the activists' goals are easily agreed upon by rational people, and many agree it would be nice if the largest tract of roadless land could stay that way. But if indeed their argument is mainly based on the aesthetic beauty of virgin timber minus roads they'll have to come up with something more logical to carry the public.

While most people are aware of the activists in Dixie, they lose sight of the cause when the activists' goals get consistently lost in the shuffle of their antics. Unfortunately, the Earth First!ers are hindering their goal by their own illogical acts of defiance.

Activist say, 'We have enough tree farms already'

TO THE EDITOR:

The sign says "National Forest," not "Elk City Private Logging Reserve." That's right, the National Forests belong to you and all U.S. Citizens, not timber barons such as Weyerhauser, Louisiana-Pacific, Georgia Pacific, Boise Cascade, Bennett, and Plumb Creek.

You may have heard of the controversy in the Nez Perce National Forest this summer. Activists have been attempting to halt logging and road building in two controversial timber sales called Cove and Mallard. These sales are located in the largest roadless area in the continental. The Forest Service is using your tax dollars to build roads for the ruthless timber barons to go in and destroy your public land! In Cove/Mallard, 145 new roads are planned.

Activists are not trying to stop all logging. That makes no sense at all. What activists are trying to say is that we have enough tree farms already, and the little road-less land should stay that way. The timber harvest rates of the 1980's are clearly not sustainable.

Those of you who came to Idaho from points East may be able to see more easily the jewels Idaho holds, since very few, small wild places exist back East. Native Idahoans can ask yourself these questions: "Do I want to wake up one day—thirty years from now—and find Idaho as raped and scarred as Oregon and Washington are now? Do I want to tell my children stories of how Idaho was, or do I want to take my children and show them Idaho as it was and is?"

Currently a bill—H.R. 1164—is in Congress. This bill would end road building in places where there are no roads. This bill has dozens of congressional co-sponsors waiting for calls and letters of support from you. Call 202-225-3456 for your copy of this bill.

A non-traditional student's introduction to UI

To the Editor:

Dr. Bruce Pittman, Dean of Students, was there to greet us as we filed nervously into the Student Union Building to attend what was billed as "The Non-Traditional Students Orientation." Most of us weren't even sure what a Non-Traditional Student was, but since we were all pretty apprehensive and thoroughly disoriented we attended anyway.

The agenda listed Student Health Care Services, Off Campus Housing and Child Care as a few of the topics and areas of concern we would be covering but we had more important questions on our minds as we sat fidgeting in our seats. This group, who had come from as far away as New Jersey and Miami and were former stock brokers, ex-hippies, vets and displaced homemakers all wanted to know was, "How will we old fogeys fit into the university? What can we expect from staff and faculty? How will our fellow more 'traditional' students accept us and where in the heck are we gonna park?"

If Dr. Pittman is correct in his assurances that our diversity of experience and our mature perspectives will be accepted and appreciated by faculty and students we are all fortunate to have chosen UI as the place to begin or continue our academic careers. However it goes this semester, we salute Dr. Pittman for the empathy and encouragement he imparted as we all left the orientation feeling a little more positive and confident and, oh yes, with a really good parking map.

In America no less, and although I have trouble including Colorado as part of the lower 48, some people I've talked to insist it is.

But anyway the Pope was in Denver telling millions of families with 5 kids and rental payments not to put a silly little sheath on their vital parts. Personally I would think he had better things to do.

Like for instance traveling to Bosnia where he could tell another large group of Catholics not to artificially cover their vitals, as well as trying to persuade them to stop pointing their guns at their Muslim neighbors.

However priorities are priorities and Pope J.P. has his, and I have mine. Personally I've tried to tell my neighbor not to point his gun at me, but his name is Matt and he's only four and every time I tell him no he rears back and pummels me with 30 feet per second of water out of some contraption I saw Darth Vader wear in Star Wars.

Still I feel down about missing the Pope. If I had seen him maybe I could have shared some thoughts with him. Like why on earth

No one under 18 allowed in SUB dance

On August 28, 1993 Associated Students is sponsoring a dance at the Student Union Building with Renegade Saints and Big Time Adam. The official policy is no one under 18 years of age will be admitted. As a University of Idaho alumni and a mother, I find this policy totally out of line and probably illegal. My friends and I have taken our children to these dances at the SUB for years. The SUB has always been a great place to have family dances because alcohol and tobacco are not permitted.

I could tell you why we left Vietnam when we did Thoughts came over this summer on my article on the U.S. creating the AIDS virus. I directed Crisis Lines for 11 years. I have sources still that Woodward and Bernstein might be envious of.

My sources know it will never get beyond me.

My original sources on AIDS were government. I decided to verify further over the summer. I wrote to friends in the Peace Corps in Africa. The article may have opened their ears. They approached the natives with the facts. A

Additionally, this policy is discriminatory to minors. If Associated Students is allowed to deny persons under the age of 18 to enter this dance, other discriminatory policies are sure to follow. Associated Students could say "no one over the age of 40 should be admitted" or "no one with blue eyes should be admitted."

UI is part of the Community of Moscow and the community of Moscow should be allowed to be part of UI. People under the age of 18, like everyone else, need healthy activities that do not involve drugs such as alcohol. After the recent events at UI, I think Associated Students should realize this point.

—D. Kate Schalck

fairly uniform reply went along the lines of, "Didn't you know? We've know all along."

I could also tell you the three times we were condemned for war atrocities during W.W.II.

I could tell you why we left Vietnam when we did, highlighted by the two times I know of that we were condemned for war atrocities.

I make this information available for two reasons. "When we forget our mistakes, we have a tendency to repeat them." And of course follows, "Know the truth and it shall set you free."

Would be nice if most people weren't born with blinders on.

"Hey John what do ya think about publicly funded abortions for rape or incest victims?"

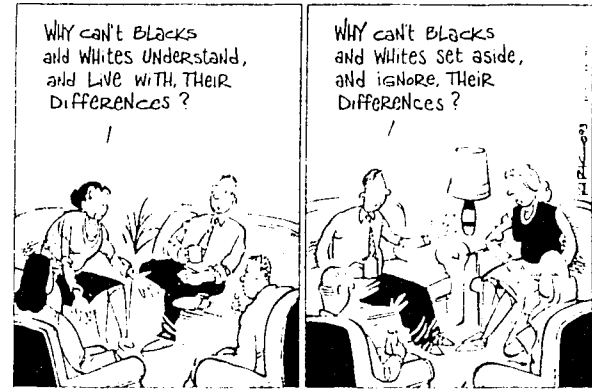

"Well, Holy God forbids it."

There goes some 100 years of progress.

If I was in on this conversation my question would be, "Hey John, what do you think about making all the Cardinals and Bishops accused of sexual misconduct and subsequently sheltered by the church wear a chastity belt?"

"Well Greg, how's Notre Dame going to do this year?"

Anyway the Pope came to the mile-high city (to be closer to God?) and led millions in prayer leaving behind millions of blessings and billions of goodwill and trillions of tons of litter costing hundreds of thousands of dollars to clean up. And I missed him.

of the road, kids on all-terrain vehicles trying very hard to get run over, and range cattle. For those unfamiliar with the great phenomena known as the range cow, let me explain.

In the early summer, when the grass is green, ranchers take their cows to the mountains and let them loose. By this time of year they can be found on almost every mountain road. It wouldn't be too bad, except they don't move. On Saturday we drove at about three miles hour for 15 miles (any faster and the cows would have dented the front of the pickup when it shoved them out of the way).

We finally battled our way through the hoards of burger-on-the-hoof and set up my dad's camper. While this was going on my mother and I set of in search of the elusive huckleberry. They grow in the sunlight, usually in old logging trails and road banks. Wild animals also love huckleberries, especially big, hungry, bears, so we were careful as we made our approach. We should have been paying more attention to the hill we were climbing.

The first hint we were in trouble came when we realized even though we were standing upright, our noses were only inches off the ground. The second hint was when the men drove up in the pickup to see how we were doing, and we were looking straight down at the top of their heads. We didn't let this bother us, though, because to the women in our family, sliding down a hill on one's face is a small price to pay for a chance to pick huckleberries. My mom's theory on falling down a hill is to sit down, figuring the added friction will stop her fall. We both ended up going down on our rears.

All things considered, my husband and I thought it was a good way to spend a Saturday. But as we sat around the campfire later that evening, with the sun going down, the smoke blowing in our faces while we burned on one side and froze on the other I decided it was time to go. Just like it is now.

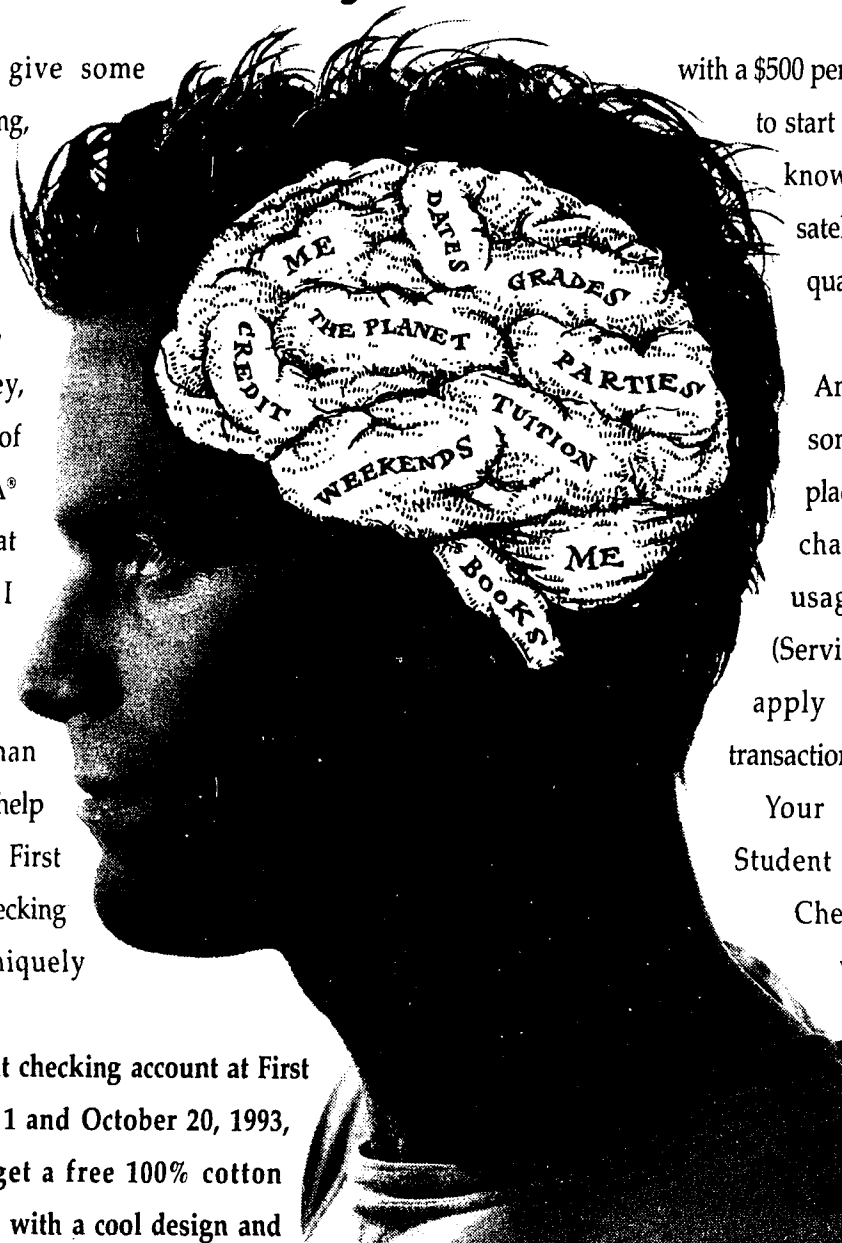

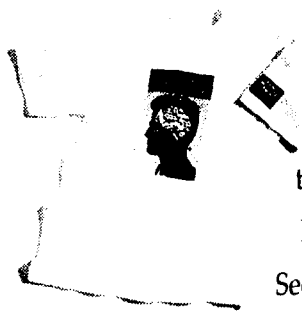

Introducing The Student Checking Account Designed Specifically For The Way Students Think.

Take a moment and give some thought to what you think: passing, flunking, does my apartment get cable?, relationships - does he or doesn't she?, global warming, cool checks, MTV, Is grunge for me?, money, money, money, the mysterious powers of chocolate, will I ever own a VISA® card?, where's the free stuff?, that ozone thing, tuition's due when?, I need an ATM?

Obviously, there's a lot more going on in your mind than your professors might think. To help alleviate some of your concerns, First Security Bank offers a student checking account tailored to fit your uniquely hectic lifestyle.

When you open a student checking account at First Security Bank between August 1 and October 20, 1993, you'll get a free 100% cotton T-shirt¹ with a cool design and the name of your college. (And while you're there, enter to win a 13-inch Hitachi TV.²)

In addition to a free T-shirt, you'll get a First Security Cash Card that gives you 24-hour access to your money. with a $500 personal line of credit³. Which is a great way to start establishing credit for your future — you know, spouse, kids, house, two-car garage, satellite dish, etc... Plus, when you apply and qualify, you'll get a free VISA Banking Card.

It's a VISA card that works like a check. And it can be pretty handy when you find something you really, really want and the place won't accept a check. Your first ten no-charge transactions each month include usage of this card.

(Service charges may apply to some ATM transactions.)

Your First Security Student Checking Account also includes free Check Safekeeping so you don't have to worry about canceled checks. A detailed statement will be sent to you each month to help you balance your account. And if you need a copy of a particular check, we'll provide up to three copies each month at no charge.

Renegade Saints to play at SUB Saturday

Leave your beginning -of-the-semester blues at home and come out and boogie with Renegade Saints and Big Time Adam Saturday at 8 p.m.

Although they have played in Moscow and Pullman several times before, this will be the first time they have played on campus, a treat for those under 21 that haven't seen the Saints.

Renegade Saints are noted for their patented "Bohemian Boogie Grind" stemming from the long guitar jams, and play extended vocal harmonies, improvising tunes as they go.

The Saints will be debuting new tunes in addition to the nearly one hundred original tunes they already have.

Opening the show will be the local favorite band, Big Time Adam.

CougFest '93 set for Saturday Day

The 3rd Annual Associated Students of Washington State University will sponsor CougFest '93, featuring five Northwest bands this Saturday from 4 to 9 p.m. at the intramural field next to Martin Stadium in Pullman.

CougFest 1993 is a concert to start the first semester of the new school year with some fun. Western Family, Green Tribe, Inflatable Soul, Paperboys, Jumbalassy will all be on the bill for the five hours of live music. Each band will play for about 45 minutes.

The concert is free to everyone in the area. There is space to dance and mingle with the crowd.

Black Happy celebrates new CD with Royball and Laynes Driver

• The Moscow Social Club to host bash

Halo DeWitt

Staff Writer

Black Happy recently released their new CD "Peghead" and will celebrate the release tonight at The Moscow Social Club at 8 p.m.

Royball and Laynes Driver will be opening for Black Happy this evening.

Black Happy is an eight-man band from Couer d'Alene who play horns as well as guitars, drums and other percussion instruments.

Greg Hjort said at first there were two bands in Couer d'Alene. The band Hjort was in "looked up to the other because they were older," he said. After those two bands joined forces they picked up the horn players from North Idaho College. They have been together ever since.

Hjort explained their style of music best when he said, "Throw everything in a blender and what comes out is us (Black Happy)." Their style is not really grunge, not really big band, in fact not really anything, but a bit of everything.

Of their new CD "Peghead," Hjort said it is a lot more polished and more thought out. Neil Keron, the producer of "Peghead," has some big names under his belt such as, Peter Gabriel, Dokken, Queensryche and Elton John.

Hjort said, "The biggest difference between the first album, 'Friendly Dog Salad,' and 'Peghead' is that the second is not as raw as the first." Black Happy writes all of their own songs and they play only original material.

Sometime before the first album was put out Black Happy changed from a heavy metal act to what they are now. Hjort says the change was made mostly by accident. After they picked up the horn section they were not sure if it would go over well, "but the people seemed to like it," said Hjort.

Their current single from the album is "3 Day Weekend," and so far it seems to be doing very well. Hjort says the band attributes their success to the people who listen and buy their music.

He added, "good luck and the good Lord" had a lot to do with it. He also said to them it does not seem as though they "have hit a plateau," instead it has kind of spread out gradually and so far does not appear to be stopping.

Their new album "Peghead" came out Saturday, and all the copies sold very quickly, according to Hjort.

For the future they are planning to play at the CMG Festival in New York and are trying to get a eastern-loop tour set up to coincide with that date.

Laynes Driver is also playing at the Moscow Social Club tonight. They are a five-man band from here in Moscow. Lead vocalist Arron Miller, bassist Jeremy Newberry, drummer Pete Lindahl, and guitarists Wes Gilliland and Eric Matuzack have been playing together for about seven months. This summer they opened for Nazareth and Rick Wakeman. They plan to have a ten-song demo tape out in about two months.

Miller said people will "have a good time, hear good music," and have a chance to dance.

Also playing tonight will be local rockers Royball playing tunes from their album "Slices" which was released last February.

Royball has been playing in the Moscow/Pullman area regularly and are worth the time and effort to see. This summer Royball played shows through the west including show in Seattle and in Hood River, Ore. Their album "Slices" was tied with Pearl Jam in the Seattle magazine The Rocket for top albums in the Pacific Northwest, at number eleven.

Be looking for Royball's new tunes. Chris Pfeiffer of Royball said, "We have a bunch of them," referring to new songs they have been working on. "Dave (of Royball) has been working on this 'agent orange surf tune'."

Pfeiffer said they have a bunch of new material which will be played tonight and at The Cavern in Pullman on Sept. 10, and at John's Alley in Moscow on Sept. 11.

Royball, seen here last year, has gained a large Moscow following.

Artists featured at Lewis-Clark Gallery

Charla Hoppins
Contributing Writer

A summer show is now open at the Lewis-Clark Center for Arts and history, 415 Main St., in Lewiston.

The show features local and regional artists in the second floor gallery. The show will run through Aug. 27, with gallery hours Monday through Friday from 10 a.m. to 4 p.m.

The Center for Arts is hosting the works of two artists from the region. The Holbrook group will be featured in this show. The Holbrook group are artists formerly associated with the Holbrook Gallery, Lewiston, who have joined together to design a large exhibit of their work.

The Holbrook Gallery, an association of fourteen artists, was housed in the Bollinger Building from 1987 until its closure in 1991. Since then, the artists have been exhibiting individually. The exhibit at the center offers the artists the opportunity to exhibit as a group again.

According to Leslie Esselburn, Center Director. "We are frequently asked where to find art work for sale by local artists, and it seems particularly timely to feature regional artists in the gallery during the summer when we have so many visitors to the valley. Since June we have had guest book registrations from seventeen states, Canada and Australia, with many visitors requesting information about local artists."

The show is featuring 130 works by 15 artists from the region, including Lewiston artists Sandra Colley, Rosemary Hoyle, John Patterson, Linda Scott, Sharon Taylor-Hall, and Gloria Teats. Artists from Moscow include Kay Montgomery, Melanie Sieve, Genevra Sloan, Bill Voxman, and Linda Wallace. Lois Backus of Clarkston, Junette Dahmen and Jennifer Stabler-

Holland of Uniontown, and Nicole Taflinger of Pullman are the Washington artists featured in the exhibit.

The show includes a wide range of art media such as oils, pastels, acrylics, water color, ink, photographic art, bronze sculpture and mixed media. All work exhibited will be for sale.

Black Widows spinning rugby web after three years of play

Ariel Plywaski

Staff Writer

Quick and dirty is how the University of Idaho's women's rugby team describes their game.

The Black Widows, whose motto is "we mate and kill," have started their third year of playing in the rugby union, which competes in a stritly amateur league.

This year, they have more new players than returning and the interest in the game is growing. Seventy-five women showed up to the first meeting three years ago. Twelve of them are still part of the team, and they have about 25 new players for their fall season.

Meeka Fraser, one of the returning players, said she had watched the guys playing rugby for three years, and started to get interested in playing herself. She talked to some of the girlfriends of the men's rugby team and put an ad in the paper for a women's team.

"We started out with some pretty dedicated players, because the girls already knew how rugby was played by watching the guys," Fraser said.

Sig Johnson, another returning player, described the game as a fitness-based, fast moving, aggressive game that requires a lot of teamwork.

"Some people don't understand that this game involves tackling," Johnson said. "We're definitely not powder puff football."

Johnson became involved three years ago.

"My boss said that if I didn't come to a practice, I was fired. So I played twice, and I was hooked," Johnson said.

Johnson also said rugby is a social sport. After games, it is traditional to host a party for the other team, with food, drink and talk.

"In rugby, you can knock down (your opponent), throw them around and talk about it over beverages after the game," Johnson said.

Johnson said that while the game is very competitive during the match, afterwards there are no winners and losers.

Johnson explained women's rugby teams tend to be closer than other sports teams because the game takes so much team work.

"Everyone plays a part. If one person is slacking, the whole team play suffers," Johnson said.

The Black Widows are a club, funded partially by the UI Recreation Board, earning their funds by cleaning up the Kibbie Dome after football games. These funds help pay for tournament fees and road games, Fraser said. They usually play about 12 games in a season, with six home games.

The Black Widows are always looking for new players. The ideal number of players is 35, with 15 on the field at once.

"We have never had to make cuts, so whoever shows up can play," Fraser said.

Practices are Mondays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays at 5 p.m. on the Guy Wicks field across from the University Inn.

started in 1989 with an initial survey that indicated an unknown amount of fertilizer and gasoline contamination in the ground. Since funds weren't available at the time to pursue a cleanup operation, the project was tabled.

Unocal, the corporation that owns PureGro, voluntarily restarted the process in 1990 by approaching the DEQ with an offer to initiate a cleanup without a state order.

By placing several dozen monitoring wells and bore holes into the two layered but separate aquifers that lie under the site, officials were able to determine extensive groundwater contamination which had occurred over a long period of time, and soil contamination also posed a problem.

Further investigation revealed two pesticides, Dinoseb and Lindane, as the primary contaminants of the groundwater. The soil contamination consisted of 19 different herbicides and pesticides, but DDT levels were consistent with background levels current around the Palouse. DDT was not a factor in the groundwater contamination.

Unocal's cost to date has been over $1 million dollars.

When queried about risk management by Diane French, Chair of the Moscow Commission on Health and the Environment, Teasdale explained the contractor controlled the dust hazard by keeping the site moist when work was underway. Teasdale said the greatest danger was a 70 year cancer risk.

According to both Teasdale and Lee, the PureGro site cleanup is just the latest of seven in the Moscow area since 1988. The UI's West Farm area is one of the seven and is being used by UI researchers as a test area for alternative site cleanup techniques.

Teasdale and Lee also explained that the site cleanup efforts were necessary because Paradise Creek, which flows through campus, is at risk from all of them.

Dixie: Visit the controversy

By [Name]

There is a growing controversy in the South regarding the Dixie Motel. The motel, located in the heart of the city, has long been a landmark. However, in recent years, it has become the center of a heated debate. Some believe it is a symbol of the Old South, while others see it as a relic of a discriminatory past. The motel's future is uncertain, and the community is divided on the issue.

The Dixie Motel has a long and storied history. It was built in the early 1900s and has since served as a meeting place for many notable figures. The building is a prime example of early 20th-century architecture. Despite its historical significance, the motel has fallen into disrepair. Many believe it should be restored to its former glory. Others, however, argue that the motel's name is a reminder of a dark period in American history and should be replaced.

The controversy surrounding the Dixie Motel is a reflection of the broader debate about the South's history. It is a question of how we remember the past and what we want to build for the future. The motel's fate will likely be decided by the community's collective voice. It is a decision that will have a lasting impact on the city's identity.

Outdoor program paddles, climbs into 1993

Chris Farnsworth

Staff Writer

If you think you've had a rough time getting ready for school, talk to Mike Bieser. "People have been running in and out of here for weeks," he says. The Assistant Coordinator for the UI Outdoor Program has been working non-stop to disprove the standard freshman complaint: That there's "nothing to do in Moscow."

"This is the largest indoor /outdoor health club in the United States. Between Outdoor Program, the golf course, the weight rooms, the gym, the climbing wall....you could do something every day of the year and never repeat an activity... But surveys show that at the end of the year, only 20% of the freshman class knows about Outdoor Program. It's amazing how many people don't know about it," Bieser says.

For his part, Bieser has been putting together a schedule of activities to keep even the shortest attention spans occupied in several areas. "I'm real excited about this year," he says. "This year, we're going to have more activities and more diversity than ever before at the UI."

WATER PROGRAMS:

Outdoor Program's "water series" will try to schedule 2-3 trips per weekend, according to Bieser. Two kayaking trips are planned for September, a one-day swift water expedition for beginners, and a two-day white water trip over Labor Day weekend for more experienced kayakers. A three day raft trip is scheduled for September 4-6 for the lower Salmon. Another upcoming trip will take UI students to Upper Priest Lake to canoe on October 2-3. And over Halloween weekend, a sea kayaking trip is planned to the Oregon Coast for experienced kayakers. "The end result of this trip, after you've been crashing around in the waves, is to make you a stronger and safer paddler," Bieser states.

However, not all water programs have to take students away from the campus. Kayaking pool sessions are scheduled every Wednesday night. There will be three instructional sessions (the first two are scheduled for September 1 and 15) for beginners. There will be open sessions for experienced kayakers or for those who, in Bieser's words, might not be as experienced but "are just crazy and want to go for it."

CLIMBING PROGRAMS:

Last spring, a ten-year effort was culminated for Bieser with the construction of a climbing wall on campus in the Memorial Gym. There were questions about liability, Bieser says, but "there are more injuries on the tennis courts than on the Wall." The Wall has met with enormous enthusiasm by the students, Bieser said. Everyone who wants to use the Wall must go through a mandatory one-hour Orientation session, a schedule of which will be announced. In just six weeks last year, 250 people were oriented. The Wall will be open Mondays and Wednesdays from 6-10 PM, Tuesdays and Thursdays from 11 AM -1 PM, and Saturdays, 12-5.

The Wall is also the site of Intro to Rocks, training sessions for outdoor rock climbing, August 31, September 7 and 21, and October 5 and 19. The difference between this and the orientation, according to Bieser, is that "the Intro courses teach you applications for the real world as well as give you the training for the facility."

Two trips, Basic Rocks 1-2 and Intermediate Rocks 1-2 are planned for later in the semester. Intro to Mountaineering, a 2-day trip to Kokanee Glacier in Canada, is also planned. Several backpacking trips will be announced, Bieser says, including a four-day trip over Labor Day weekend to the Seven Devils.

RENTAL PROGRAM:

"We get requests to buy everything. Mountain bikes, rollerblades...one guy even asked us to buy telescopes. We can't meet everybody's niche," Bieser admits, "but we do serve 8,000 people a year. You can get a $4,000 dollar raft for thirty bucks and all the equipment you'll need for a full scale expedition." Bieser and the manager of the Rental Program just returned from an outdoor products convention in Reno, NV. "We made some great contacts," he says. "We found a lot of ways to get more bang for the buck for the rental program." The rental office is located in the SUB basement.

Dixie: Visit the controversy

Russ Woolsey

Before you become opinionated about the Cove/Mallard roadless area, try a quick trip to Dixie, Idaho to get a feel for what is happening.

It is a perfect time of year to visit Central Idaho's most pristine and untouched mountains, especially with all of the controversy over the Cove/Mallard timber sale.

Cass Davis, of the Moscow based environmental group Inward, said, "We would like to see people checking out the area," referring to the environmental camp located outside of Dixie.

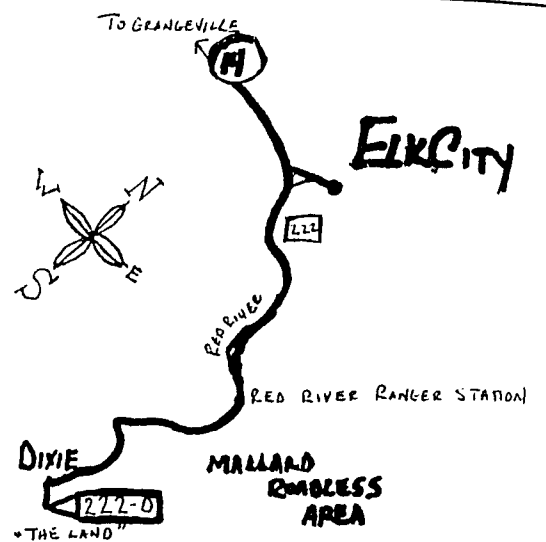

Driving into the Dixie area puts people the farthest away from civilization you can get in the lower 48 states. The area is surrounded by four wilderness areas which includes the Selway-Bitterroot Wilderness, the Frank Church River of No Return Wilderness, and the Gospel Hump Wilderness.

The views and scenery are some of the best Idaho has to offer. Davis said, "Plan for spending a lot of time and head to Selway Falls," which is located outside of Elk City.

Things to take on the drive should include a more extensive map than the one provided, food, water, a good pair of hiking boots, a camera and a full tank of

Idlers Rest offer quick getaway

• One of Idaho's first Nature Conservancies preserves is located just minutes away

The possibilities are endless for a day trip in the Moscow area. A days drive to North/South Ski bowl can offer great day hike, and a drive to Elk River can offer scenery and back roads at your disposal. But, many don't realize what awaits with-in a short drive or even bike ride from Moscow. Specifically many don't realize where Idlers Rest Nature Preserve is located and what it has to offer.

Located just out of Moscow off of Mountain View Road is one of the first nature preserves bought and managed by the Nature Conservancy in Idaho. Purchased in 1966 by citizen contributions, Idlers Rest Nature Preserve is the home to a massive stand of Western Red Cedars.

Two trails, the Heritage trail, and the Highland trail take hikers through 36 acres of cedar forest. Many hikers often call Idlers Rest the "Cathedral of Cedars" because of the large trees that shoot straight up from the trail, and also because of the relaxation and solitude that can be felt while walking up the trails.

Getting there:

Take Mountain View Rd. from the East end of Moscow, north until it turns into a gravel road. Continue on the gravel road towards Moscow Mountain. The road will come to a fork. Once at the fork go right and stay on the main road for approximately one mile. Idlers Rest trail head is located on the right side of the road and the parking is located on the right.

If riding on a bicycle beware of dogs that usually come and greet anyone passing just before Idlers Rest. They usually don't lick and wag their tails but do run back to their ambush positions after a swift kick to the head, or tire track over their back.

(Top) Two trails offer an opportunity at Idlers Rest for an escape.

Other special activities being planned include: the Annual Sale and Swap on October 28, where U of I students can buy and trade outdoor equipment; an early season ski trip to the Canadian Rockies; and another sea kayaking expedition over Christmas, this time to Baja.

One thing that Beiser emphasizes: Sign up early. "We planned a trip for new U of I students for Saturday, August 28. It filled up in a day." Many programs fill up in hours, Beiser says. "They don't sleep here, but we've almost had fist-fights before." Sign-up is also important because "there are at least two, if not four dates associated with the actual trip, when we tell you what you need. We've had people show up and ask, 'You mean you don't pay for food?'" Sign-ups start Monday two weeks before classes and trips, at the Outdoor Program Office, also located in the SUB basement. Getting There:

Start by heading south to Grangeville past Lewiston on Hwy. 95. Take State Hwy. 13 from Grangeville until it connects up with State Hwy. 14. Going south on Hwy. 14 will lead to Elk City. In Elk City take service road 222 to Dixie past the Red River Ranger Station, heading south.

After arriving in Dixie take service road 222-D to the environmental base camp. The base camp is under five miles and is located by the abandoned Comstock Mines.

Davis said, "I advise those going to the camp not to hang-out in Grangeville, Elk City, or Dixie because trouble often will find you," he said pertaining to students and those men with hair to their shoulders.

The drive takes about five hours from Moscow and can be done in one long day, but is best saved for a two day adventure.

Huckleberries offer fine reward for day's work

Shari Ireton

Editor-in-Chief

New students, are you bored already?! One option is to do some physical activity and indulge in a sweet reward.

Now, it can be riding a bicycle and then eating ice cream, but I was thinking of something a little more adventurous...like berry picking. Due to the rainy summer up here in the Inland Northwest, the hills are alive with edible wild berries of all sizes, colors and flavors.

My first warning, however, to the novice berry picker. It is not a good idea to start tromping around in the bushes and stick just anything in your mouth. In fact, it's a very bad idea because unless you are suicidal, your chances of surviving such acts of stupidity are pretty low.

However, with a good field guide or a little passed down family knowledge (which is how I became part of the Berry Picking Guru Group), the only other thing you need is a four wheel drive, bug spray and a bucket.

It is also a good idea to make sure you are on public land, and not crashing through someone's back yard.

The local favorite berry to be harvested this time of year is the huckleberry. It is very similar looking to the blueberry and to make sure you know what you have, look for the bullseye on the bottom. They grow on bushes which average about three to four feet from the ground. The berries are easy to miss because they tend to hide under the leaves.

Look for well lit areas of the forest, places where the sunlight would hit most of the day. That's where these sun-thirsty plants thrive. You can easily end up walking a good quarter of a mile without knowing it just picking from bush to bush. If you are planning on some good jam or pies, you'd better hurry because the season is almost over.

Another tasty treat, compliments of Mother Nature, is the thimbleberry. The thimbleberry grows on large blackberry-looking bushes. These berries are ruby red and a little fuzzy, but have a deliciously tart flavor. They practically fall off into your hand when they are ripe and can fit over the top of your finger like a thimble (hence the name).

They are great refreshers during a hike, or tasty is you are camping next to a bush and want to put some on your cereal

If you aren't ambitious enough to go in search of the wild berry, travel to the town of Elk River to Huckleberry Heaven. According to Andre Moslee, Huckleberry Heaven has homemade huckleberry jams, syrups, doughnuts, and, the local favorite, ice cream.

These berries aren't imported, either, said Moslee. "They're picked right around here locally, by our local people." They also sell a huckleberry cookbook which is full of delicious ideas for those berries you picked.

Located on the corner of First and Main, Huckleberry Heaven boasts a lodge and condominiums, which can accommodate up to 148 people. All the meals at the lodgings are home cooked and Moslee reminds students the area around Elk River offers plenty of things to do and see.

"You gotta come up and see us in the winter," said Moslee.

Rumor has it an ROTC cadet drew the original Vandal, the University of Idaho mascot, but the ROTC cadets in the Chrisman Battalion have their own mascot. They are known as the Chrisman Raiders in their competitive circle.

The Raiders are a letter sport team on the UI campus, competing in events pertaining to military training which rival the Iron Man. The seed of the present schedule of events originated here at the UI campus. "Rendezvous" was a regularly scheduled contest between local ROTC Battalions originally hosted by the Chrisman Battalion.

"It's like the whole history lies right here," MSG Charley Rennaker said.

In 1985 BG Robert Wagner took the local competition and advanced it to a regional level. From there the local competition has evolved into a national ROTC annual event.

"Robert Wagner saw what we were doing, loved it and made it army-wide," Rennaker said.

The Chrisman Raiders refer to the event as the Rucksack Challenge. This contest combines skills, effort and stamina.

In competition nine-member teams compete in six events. The top eight scores are combined and averaged to attain the team score.

Events are arranged to save the most difficult for last.

The contest finishes with the most grueling event of all. The 10K Forced Road March and the day begins with the Army Physical Fitness Test (APFT). The APFT consists of three timed events. Cadets have two minutes to do push-ups and another two minutes to do sit-ups. They must then run a two mile course.

"If you enter the competition with a score below 287 combined you're not even competitive," Rennaker said. "You just might as well hang it up."

To be competitive men must do at least 82 push-ups, women 58 the sit-up competition is just as demanding. Men need to do at least 92 sit-ups, women need to do 90 in the two minutes. The two mile run should be done in at least 11:54" for the men and 14:54" for the women. These scores will net each competitor 10 points. The minimum for competition is 70 in each event.

"Some do that with no problem," Rennaker said. "I have some real studs and studettes."

A one rope bridge is then constructed by the team.

The team must then cross the bridge as quickly as possible, a time of 1:15 is considered competitive. The team is allowed two attempts for time.

The bridge is constructed over a 40-foot obstacle, like a stream. The "far man" and the "near man" are usually the two tallest on the team. The "far man" will run across the obstacle and secure the rope as high as possible. The "near man" ties the rope off where the team is waiting. The team members secure themselves to the rope and hold on with hands and knees to cross.

Penalties are harsh in this contest. The rope must be secured as high as possible because if it sags and a member touches the obstacle a 10 second penalty is levied.

"Everything is a penalty," Rennaker said.

Forty-five seconds is added to the team score if a cadet drops anything while crossing. Thirty seconds is added to the team score if knots are present in the rope after the team calls time. If a cadet drops his/her weapon he/she is disqualified.

Twenty-seven grenades are then thrown by each team. The cadets must run 50 m. fall behind a stack of sand bags and accurately throw three grenades each into a target area. The target area is a circle with a 15 m radius. The Chrisman Raiders practice this competition on the football practice field, so grenades which release smoke are used.

An ROTC OriginalKaté Lyons-Holestine

What was once the search and rescue team of Chrisman Battalion's practice drill has evolved into a national ROTC competition.

It all started in the years between 1970 and 1977 when SGM Gene Neff began training a team comprised of University of Idaho ROTC cadets in basic and advanced search and rescue techniques. This group of volunteers practiced skills ranging from climbing techniques to orienteering to rappelling. Soon, the combination of advanced skill levels and human competitiveness the practice came to be a contest.

In 1977 SGM John Shearin arrived at UI and with the cooperation of local ROTC Battalions a competition started between the UI, Washington State University and East Washington University. UI began hosting these competitions, called "Rendezvous."

The original event consisted of competition in the APFT (or the Army Physical Fitness Test), orienteering, squad tactics, litter carry, a road march, marksmanship and rappelling. A rivalry grew and a trophy emerged along with streamers for team flags denoting championships.

The idea eventually caught on across the Pacific Northwest.

In the 1980's the Chrisman Raiders continued the tradition of hosting "Rendezvous," but the name of the competition had changed. They were called "Ranger Challenges."

In 1985, the fourth Commander of the UI ROTC BG Robert Wagner added another dimension to the competition. He originated the Region Ranger Challenge wherein two teams from four brigades from the Pacific Northwest competed.

The 1980's were a time of maturing for these contests. Some individual competitions were deleted, others were added and some just redesigned. In 1987 the Chrisman Raiders were introduced to head-to-head matches. Here they would practice the events against other area teams to better prepare for regional competitions.

Today, the competition is comprised of six events. The official events are the APFT, a one rope bridge event, grenade throws, M16 marksmanship, M16 and M60 weapons assembly and the 10K forced road march.

The UI ROTC Departments Chrisman Raiders are a prestigious group of individuals. To be a member of the Chrisman Raiders physical effort and stamina, time and heart must be devoted. The Chrisman Raiders were given a unique UI Varsity Letter Award at least five years ago. This Letter is grey with gold trim and the I is set below and in the center of the U. For each year a teammate letters, they are awarded a set of cross rifles to embellish the letter.

"John L. Smith wouldn't be happy with craters out there," Rennaker said.

The next two events involve M16's and M60's. During the marksmanship competition the cadets fire ten rounds at ten targets from a prone unsupported position. The silhouette targets increase in size they closer they are to the cadet to simulate depth and distance.

"We teach them to hit the farthest first because as the eye tires the 50' one looks really good," Rennaker said.

The cadets are given three minutes to complete the firing and are awarded five points for a hit inside the target circle.

"On our range we use a sub-caliber device that allows us to shoot .22 bullets," Rennaker said. "If we win and go to Ft. Lewis they have to shoot actual amo."

Weapons assembly is the point of the next event. An M16 and an M60 are disassembled down to the trigger mechanisms and all the parts are put into one box. The cadet must do a 50 m sprint to the box, assemble both weapons and make sure both operate safely and properly before returning to the start area.

"There is a gal from Gonzaga that does this in two minutes," Rennaker said. "I hate her - she gets the individual trophy every year."

The Forced Road March requires the cadets to run 6.2 miles in full battle dress.

"This is a smoker," Rennaker said. "The fun of this event is it can be any six miles of terrain you choose (when organizing the race route)," Rennaker said.

For example, when the Chrisman Raiders competed at Gonzaga University the run was on a track. Here at the UI it starts on Perimeter Drive and turns left under the grey UI water tower. From there the course climbs for one mile to a dirt road.

"Gonzaga finished our course in 57:33. They were real horses on that," Rennaker added.

The cadets must carry a full ALICE (All-Purpose Lightweight Individual Carry Equipment) Pack. In this they must have all the necessities they would carry in war-time along with a pair of athletic shoes.

"They put them on after the Ruksack run to give the old feet a break after running in boots," Rennaker said.

Last year Rennaker had two teams to compete. The first team was all

12 team categories added to annual race

The third annual Hammer and Cycle Duathlon has added a new competitive twist to try and attract local participants.

Twelve different team categories have been added to the Hammer and Cycle competition this year. Teams of two from a campus living group and faculty/staff members are eligible for the team category.

The event is coordinated by University of Idaho Campus Recreation, and was originally the brainchild of two local students. Allen Wright a pharmacology student at WSU, and Wade Grow, a UI biology graduate student, are the founders of the race.

The Hammer and Cycle Duathlon has collected national sponsors. Power Bars, a maker of energy bars for athletes; Northwest Mountain Sports of Moscow; and Pepsi's All-Sport drink will be listed as official sponsors of the event.

There will be a prerace meeting at the Borah Theater on Saturday, Sept. 18 at 4 p.m. If participants do not attend this meeting the race packet must be picked up at 6:30 a.m. the morning of the race.

The race begins and ends across Stadium Drive from the UI outdoor track. This parking lot will also serve as the transition area between running and cycling events. A detailed map will be enclosed in the race packet.

The race is organized with competitive international distances. Both run portions of the race begin at the transition area and wind around campus, along the bike paths, Greek Row and finally Perimeter Drive. The final run ends on the UI track. The bike course follows the Moscow-Pullman highway to Airport Road. The course follows the airport loop and upon returning to the highway, it turns toward Pullman for approximately 3 km. Police officers will oversee the highway portion of the bike circuit.

Fees for the race are $20 for individuals and $40 per team. The entry deadline is Sept. 3. More information can be obtained from the UI Campus Recreation office in Memorial Gym.

Amy Hanks and Jessica Puckett dive for a ball during a tight match last season.

UI volleyball two-year starter, Amy Hanks, gets bench perspective this season

Dan Eckles
Staff Writer

Amy Hanks dished out 85 assists last fall in the border battle against the Washington State Cougars, breaking her own match assist record for the Vandal spikers last fall in her senior season, but with her athletic eligibility gone Hanks will watch the 1993 Vandals from the bench as a student assistant coach.

"I wanted to still be involved with the team," Hanks said. "It will be hard for me to sit on the bench, but it would be harder for me to sit in the stands."

The adjustment of replacing Hanks won't be easy for the defending Big Sky champions either. Hanks holds the single season record for assists per game average with an 11.64 clip over 77 games in 1991, her first season as a Vandal after playing two years at Ricks' Junior College.

The Rexburg, Id., native proved '91 was no fluke averaging 11.63 assists over 110 games last season. Hanks is a 2-time First Team All Northwest Region and was named the Big Sky Conference Tournament Most Valuable Player last year. The consumer foods major is no slouch in classroom as she was twice named to the Big Sky all-academic team.

UI Campus Recreation lists activities for fall

Are you sitting around watching television because you have nothing better to do? Do you wish you could get out meet people and have fun but don't know where to look? If you are interested in recreational or competitive sports check out University of Idaho Intermural Sports. You can enter a team or join other singles and become part of the team.

UI Campus Recreation is offering 15 different activities at little or no charge. The only requirement is that you are a full time student, faculty or staff and desire to have fun.

The activities being offered this semester range from the ordinary basketball and football to the more unusual such as ultimate frisbee and rifle shooting—that's right, UI has a rifle range. For those interested in firing US Military hardware, it is your best opportunity short of joining the armed forces.

Michael Barth is the new Director of the intermural activity center. Micheal spent last year as the Graduate Assistant to Intermural Sports. Micheal took over from Judy Hammersley who resigned last semester.

When asked what his advice would be to incoming freshmen or returning students who have never been involved with sports, he replied, "You can join a free agent list for singles, if you wanted to play football for example. Or you could get together an independent team."

There are few fees. The only costs are for off-campus activities. For example, expenses for greens fees and ski lift tickets would need to be paid for by the participants to cover additional costs.

For more information about intermural sports and activities contact the Campus Recreation Office in room 204 of Memorial Gym. Entries for all events will be available from the Campus Recreation Office one week before the event is scheduled.

is no slouch in classroom as she was twice named to the Big Sky all-academic team.

"It's going to take me a year or two to find out if I want to do this (coach) as a career," Hanks said. "This is a good place to start rather than going to a new place where I don't understand the coaching philosophy and what is expected of the players."

After a career that saw Hanks climb all the way to third on the Idaho all-time assist list in only two years, Hanks is spending a lot of time with the setters.

"I enjoy coaching the setters, but right now I'm having the most fun helping with the things I didn't do like passing and hitting. It's a whole different perspective sitting on the bench. By watching you can see what they (players) do right and what they do wrong, but when you're playing you don't see those things because you're on the court."

Fifth year coach Tom Hilbert guided the Vandals to their first ever NCAA tournament appearance in 1992 and league coaches think the success will continue, picking the Vandals to successfully defend their Big Sky crown in preseason polls.

"I think I will learn a lot under Tom Hilbert, that's what I want the most is to learn," Hanks said. "I can't coach a team I just played with a tell them what to do. They don't know how to react to me on the court. I can't think I'm a year older and I know everything now."

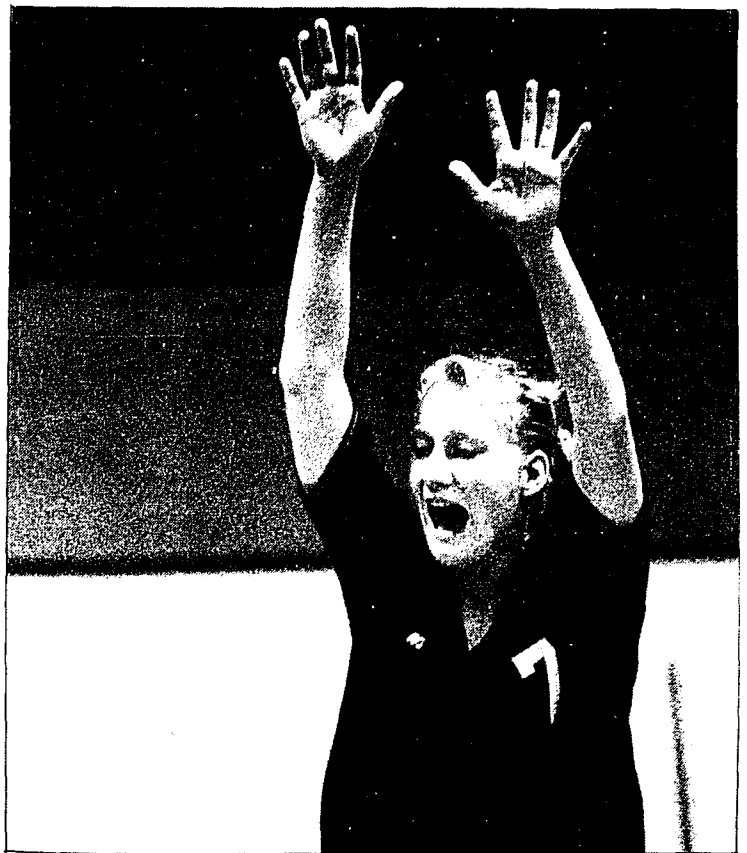

Volleyball wasn't always in Hanks' blood. In fact she claims she was not confident in her ability to compete at the Division I level until just before her senior season. The 22-year-old reflected back on eighth grade when she says the only reason she wasn't cut was because she was an inspirational leader. The summer before Hanks' freshman year of high school saw Hanks put in hours of work and her skills vastly improved.

Hanks setting profession did not begin until midway through her freshman year at Ricks' when the starting setter went down with an injured knee and Hanks was thrown to the wolves. The next season Hanks was moved back to hitter.

"I didn't think I was going anywhere. The first day (at Idaho) I walked in to practice and I thought there was no way I'd play. It still blows my mind how it all happened," Hanks said.

"I don't know if coaching is in my feature. It's just something I'll have to take year by year. I really enjoy my major. Coaching is something we'll have to see about. I think I could be a good motivational coach, but I need more time on skills coaching."

Hanks says she misses the competition of playing the Montana Grizzlies and the Boise State Broncos in the big games more than anything else. The highly emotional athlete sees her student coaching position as a chance to give something back.
