'Lucky pennies' add up to big bucks for UI

Stacy McGuire

Contributing Writer

A penny here and a penny there does add up to real money. At least it does to University of Idaho Professor of Secondary Education Terry Armstrong.

Armstrong is the founder of the Found Money Fund of Idaho for Academic Excellence (FMFI). FMFI is primarily funded by people donating the money they find.

"If someone finds a nickel lying on the ground, it doesn't really belong to them anyway," said Armstrong.

The fund traces its roots back to 1981. Armstrong recalls how the country was in a depression and people were into saving money. Armstrong and some of his colleagues were joking about how they should save all of their change. On his way to work the next day, Armstrong was passing by the Alpha Gamma house when he found three pennies on the ground.

He saved the three cents, and the next day another co-worker found a nickel and gave it to Armstrong with the agreement they would save all of the change they found and at the end of the year would have a party with their money.

By the end of the year however, they had only accumulated around eight dollars. They decided to keep saving and see what they had by the end of the next year.

In the meantime, other people had been contributing money in hopes of a great party. By 1983 the money had increased to $44 when they were told petty cash in the offices was not allowed (Armstrong kept the change in a jar on his desk).

The group decided the money should go to create an endowment for the university. Armstrong said the university did not want to open an endowment with $44.

"We were hurt that they didn't want our money. They said the auditors would have a fit," said Armstrong.

The fund was eventually opened and since then, the original three pennies has grown to $27,163.42.

Armstrong said the fund is stronger than ever, with anywhere from three to 10 contributions received daily. People bring in money found on campus, along with the numerous letters Armstrong receives from people who have heard of the fund and wish to contribute their found money.

"It's just a great feeling," said Armstrong.

Two-year library project reaches completion Oct. 1

Valerie Williams

Contributing Writer

Light is visible at the end of the tunnel.

Construction on the University of Idaho Library, a project which began during the spring of 1991, is scheduled to be completed Oct. 1.

Over the summer, workers remodeled the library's third and fourth floors. In the next few weeks, students will see books from the third floor move up to the fourth.

"The budget for this project is right on schedule," said Ronald Force, the Dean of Library Services. The cost for the addition will total $12.7 million.

One situation which will affect students is the money for furniture which is being raised privately. The UI Foundation is raising money to furnish the library, said Force.

"We have $300,000 in pledges right now, but that money will come in over the next three years," said Force.

Students can expect furniture to gradually appear in certain areas during the year.

As the third and fourth floors are rearranged, there will be more open space. There will also be more study areas which will include group study rooms accomodating up to four or six students. Graduate students will have the luxury of using private study rooms for writing their thesis.

The library experienced many problems during construction.

An air conditioning system was installed, but it is not operating at the moment due to plumbing problems.

"It dumped a shower of water onto our fourth floor because one of the drains was not hooked up right," Force said.

Last winter, after a storm, a hole in the roof was discovered causing the fourth floor to get wet.

The reason for not using the new laser computers at the check out desk last year was due to construction which tempered with the wiring. They pulled out some temporary lines.

"When they started putting in new lights in the building, the electrical interference from the lights started being picked up by the wiring and knocked the terminals off line," Force said.

Now the terminals are on their permanent wiring.

Wolves return to Idaho

Melinda Branscum

Contributing Writer

In an effort to promote public opinion of reintroducing wolves to central Idaho, Suzanne Lavery, director of the Wolf Recovery Foundation, visited the Moscow Community Center last Tuesday.

Lavery said while Idaho's habitat is capable of supporting at least 250 wolves, it is estimated only 15-20 of the animals currently live in this state due to the killings since the 1930s.

The Wolf Recovery Foundation supports the US Fish and Wildlife Service in relocating several packs of wolves from Canada to Idaho and Yellowstone National Park in order to rebuild the population.

Since Idaho allots only $30,000 a year to wolf recovery the main problem with this program is the lack of funds. These funds would go to such things as radio collars to track the wolves' movements or a biologist to study their habits.

"Funding is the real key," said Lavery.

A second problem with reintroducing the wolves to Idaho is the public's own fears. Lavery said society has an unhealthy fear of wolves which leads to the illegal killings. In reality there has never been a reported attack on a human made by a healthy wolf in U.S. history, Lavery said. While wolf killings of livestock are a concern among ranchers, in areas with high wolf populations, such as Minnesota and Canada, wolves account for less than one percent of livestock deaths.

"The biggest thing (in a successful reintroduction of a wolf population in Idaho) is public education and law enforcement," said Lavery. "The best education of wolves is having wolves."

A public hearing on the reintroduction of wolves into Central Idaho will be held tonight in Lewiston by the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service.

Class offers language help for ESL speakers

Those who want to improve their ability to speak English can get help during an upcoming class offered by the University of Idaho Enrichment Program.

"English Conversation for Non-Native speakers" begins Sept. 7, and is held Tuesdays and Thursdays through Nov. 18. Sessions are from 7-8:30 p.m. in UCC 302 and 303.

The class is specifically designed for people learning English as a second language. Students get an opportunity to work on grammar, vocabulary, pronunciation, conversation skills. All levels of ESL speakers are welcome. For details or to register, call the Enrichment Program at 885-6486.

College Republicans to meet tonight in IU

Mike Burkett aims for better education

Janna Dwelle
Contributing Writer

Although most Idahoans only recently removed shreds of last autumn's political stickers from their cars, Mike Burkett already looks ahead to another campaign, making plans to grace next year's bumpers with his own name.

Preparing for his fast-approaching gubernatorial campaign, Burkett met and spoke with the ASUI Senate last Thursday.

Burkett laid out goals he hopes to achieve as Idaho's next governor. Burkett plans to improve Idaho's educational standards, support agriculture and restructure Idaho's bureaucratic government.

Burkett began with issues of interest to his student audience

"If there's a reason I'm in politics, it's education," said Burkett.

Burkett offered enhancements for Idaho's educational system, including class-size reduction, year-round schools and academic standards within the schools, so diplomas would signify a consistent, specific level of education.

Burkett emphasized his rural Iowa upbringing, claiming empathy with Idaho's farmers. Comparing Idaho to a recently over-developed stretch of Colorado's Rocky Mountains, Burkett does not wish to see Idaho's agrarian lifestyle destroyed.

Burkett aims to redesign Idaho's bureaucratic government to increase efficiency. He said former presidents Teddy Roosevelt and

Earth First!ers found guilty

Natalie Shapiro

Seven Earth First! activists arrested for protesting the Cove/Mallard timber sales in the Nez Perce National Forest were tried Wednesday in the US District Court in Moscow.

All defendants were found guilty of trespassing in a closed area. The area, comprised of 15 square miles near Dixie on the Red River Ranger District, was closed last June after road equipment was found vandalized. No one has been arrested for the vandalism.

Jacob Bear, Michael Vernon, Lawrence Juniper and Michelle Pflaum were involved in an Earth First! action July 15 in which activists entered a portion of the Noble Road in the closed area.

Some buried themselves in the road, sat in tripods and built slash piles blocking the road. Pflaum was also found guilty of interfering with an officer. Plaufm locked her neck with a Kryptonite bicycle lock to the axle of a Forest Service vehicle.

Activists are protesting road construction and logging in a roadless area wedged in between the Frank Church River of No Return, Selway-Bitterroot and Gospel Hump wilderness areas. These areas together constitute the largest roadless area in the lower 48 states.

Beatrix Jenness and Peter Leusch were arrested for being in the closed area July 21 after they were found buried in slash piles on a spur road off the Noble Road. Megan McNally was arrested after being seen in the closed area by a Forest Service employee Aug. 8.

The defense questioned the legalities of closing the area to the public. The closure order was signed by Joe Bednorz, the acting Forest Service Supervisor while Supervisor Mike King was gone.

"There's an irregularity of closure law. The closure law was authorized only by a few people, one of whom didn't sign it," said Vernon.

Michael Henegen, Jenness' attorney, was concerned with Bednorz's authority in signing the closure.

"Did you know of any Code of Regulations that authorized you to sign that order?" he asked, to which Bednorz replied, "No." Bednorz then stated the Forest Service Manual provided such legal authority.

Howen asked for two years probation for most of the activists to prevent them from coming back to the Cove/Mallard area next year.

"We have the same defendants coming back within days on other charges," Howen said. Howen sought restitution of $150 each by Pflaum, Bear, Vernon and Juniper for time lost by Highland Enterprises, the construction company contracted by the Forest Service to build the roads. Boyle refused to impose the restitution.

Don Bluett, owner of Highland Enterprises, was disappointed with the Judge's decision.

"I don't think he understands the magnitude of the problem," Bluett said.

Bear, Vernon and Juniper were each fined $250 and six months probation, and Pflaum was fined $500, one year probation and a suspended 90 day jail sentence. Jenness and Leusch were fined $300 with six months probation. Judge Boyle gave them higher fines because they were college graduates. Charges of resisting an officer and creating a barrier which could cause damage were dropped. McNally was fined $250 with six months probation.

Boyle, upon sentencing Pflaum said, "I'm concerned that a young woman would chain herself to an axle. Whoever put you up to that didn't care about your moral safety."

"It was completely my own idea," Pflaum said later. "The illegal activities of the Forest Service prompted me to do it. There have been over 140 wolf sightings in the area. Under the Endangered Species Act, they should be protected, but they're not being investigated by the Forest Service."

Howen questioned Jenness and Leusch about their employment status. Howen said he thought they were intentionally unemployed so they had no money for paying fines.

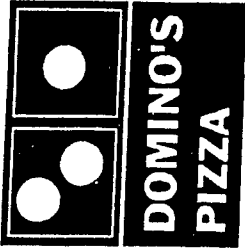

"I have been employed by protecting the forest. He's (Howen) not seeing this as employment as it doesn't pay, but we work hard," Jenness said later.

Law school refuses to pay debt to Argonaut

The Argonaut has a bone to pick with the University of Idaho College of Law.

It seems our future lawyers of this country refuse to pay their debts.

Three years ago, an ASUI Senate resolution was passed which read the students of the UI College of Law would form an autonomous and independant parallel organization to be known as the Student Bar Association. This meant the student activitiy fees coming from each law student would not go to the ASUI, but to the SBA (which includes all law students) instead. These ASUI activity fees cover such items available to students as the Outdoor Program, new computers and also, the Argonaut.

Some guidelines in the resolution, however, were unclear on how law students would have access to ASUI programs, since the SBA was no longer funding these. It was decided because the Argonaut was a student newspaper, and assumed to be read by all students the SBA should pay the ASUI for the Argonaut.

A few months later, in a memorandum to the dean of the College of Law, Sheldon Vincenti, Hal Godwin, informed Vincenti of certain points of understanding in the resolution. Among others, Godwin, the Vice President of Student Affairs, said the SBA President would use "good faith and diligence" in appropriating money from the SBA for a subscription to the Argonaut.

It was agreed in 1991 that the SBA would pay the ASUI

$1,000 per school year for a subscription, since the fees no longer were going directly to the ASUI funds. This was considered a more than fair amount, since each full-time ASUI student is paying $3.75 per year for a subscription to the Argonaut. Since there are 649 law students, they are only being charged $1.54 per student for this school year. If they were charged the actual $3.75, like the rest of the student body, the amount would be more than $2,400.

The SBA paid the $1,000 subscription for the '90-'91 and '91-'92 school years, but still has not paid for '92-'93 or '93-'94.

After this payment problem was recognized, a memorandum was sent to the Argonaut from Perry Waddell, the current SBA President. The memo read "First off, thanks for delivering the Evergreen (sic) to the University of Idaho School of Law everyone really enjoys reading it," and went on to give directions to where the bundle of papers should be dropped off. This was after the SBA had declared on a Post-It note that no one in the law school read the paper and therefore should not pay for its services.

In a memo this summer from David Mucci, the new Student Union Director, to Steven Graviet, of the SBA, Mucci pointed out after reading Waddell's memo, even though he mistitled the paper, he did indicate the paper was read by law students. Mucci asked Graviet for payment for the '92-93 fiscal year and pointed out when it becomes convenient for some campus associations to "withdraw from their obligations to the community we risk becoming little more than a collection of unrelated colleges and schools with no common interests."

Mucci's statement has hit the nail right on the head. If more UI colleges follow in the footsteps of the Law School we lose sight of what the university actually stands for. Instead of trying to bring together students of all disciplines, majors and age as a student body, we may instead become "The College of Engineering, The College of Letters and Science, etc., etc." in Moscow, Idaho.

The main point, however, is how much faith should we have in the future lawyers of the US if they can't even bother to read the student newspaper? If they don't pay their subscription, circulation will be dropped from their building and the Argonaut will not be easily available to read. Of course, there is the possibility they don't read the paper anyway, but keep this in mind: Do we want uninformed attorneys defending us in court some day? Law and court battle coverage takes up a large space in newspapers, but it's obvious they weren't written for the lawyers from UI because they don't read them anyway.

This was just a friendly reminder to the student body who has paid to read this paper and the rest who haven't.

Individuals need to quit whining, grow up

Commentary Ryan Patano

Editor's Note:
Ryan Patano is the Gem of the Mountains Yearbook Editor.

Our nation is crumbling. This deterioration of the very foundation of our American society has infiltrated nearly every aspect of life. We have become a society of victims. Everybody has some reason they should get preferential treatment. The few that have made it to the top despite their many hardships are expected to pay for those "less fortunate" or "disadvantaged." Everybody has their sad story to tell about what kept them from their best. At the drop of the hat they can list 100 reasons why the pressure is just too great.

It is time to wake up and start taking responsibility for our actions. It is time to realize nobody is forcing us do anything. It is time for people in our society to quit whining about their bad childhood or bad marriage and shut up and get on with life. Take what life deals you and go. There is no use in complaining about it.

Everybody thinks somebody should be responsible for helping them. I am referring to the millions of people bringing lawsuits up for no good reason. I am talking to immoral people who want to sue and bloodsucking attorneys who show them the loophole. If you fall on ice, don't sue the university, go out, and buy a pair of boots and get on with it. If somebody backs into your car in a parking lot is it necessary to sue for thousands of dollars for emotional duress? Give me a break. If you have a rough childhood or low self-esteem, 20 years of psychotherapy is not the answer. Get your act together, move on.

The problem with all of this is, our parents have been teaching us to do this for the past 20 years. We think it is acceptable and productive and it is not. If something happens to a student here at the UI our parents come screaming for whose "fault" it was when they should have to look no further than their children. We are considered adults and thus should be responsible for our own actions, but that is not the way we have been brought up. Instead of saying, "sorry my fault," it is time to blame, blame, blame. If you go out and do something stupid one night, don't blame the people you went out with, blame yourself and learn from your mistakes.

Our country is a sorry place right now because it seems like every citizen has their own story about why they couldn't cut it in the real world. It is time for change, it is time to grow up America—and take responsibility for your own actions. You control your destiny and nobody is forcing you to do anything.

So quit whining and grow up.

Christians infiltrating school boards with their own agendas

I didn't believe it at first. No way. I thought the only kind of people who believed this sort of thing chained themselves to trees and ate hash brownies while meditating.

But then I saw it first hand. And now I'm scared.

It all started towards the end of last semester. Natalie Shapiro, a friend of mine and co-worker wrote a column about the religious right and how it is infiltrating our schools, media and government, trying to further its own biblically-based agenda.

Specifically, she made reference to Pat Robertson's Christian Coalition, which was founded in 1989. The column seemed to make the point religious fanatics were trying to weasel their way into positions of power to try and replace the Constitution with the Bible.

At the time, I chuckled and thought Natalie had gone fanatic and was subscribing to some radical conspiracy theory, which sometimes seems present in leftist groups.

I remember arguing nastily with Susan, our receptionist, saying the column was way off base. A secret army infiltrating our schools? Give me a break. Next thing I thought they'd be telling me about how the water fluoridation is a secret communist conspiracy intent on destroying our precious bodily fluids.

I'll Tell You Why Jeff Kapostasy

But then it happened.

I was covering a school board meeting for my summer reporting internship in Ohio. A graduating senior in this particular class was not only valedictorian but also a born-again Christian. This bright young lady wanted to read a passage from her Bible in her valedictorian speech to deliver the class meeting. Not a prayer, mind you or a gospel sing-a-long, but a simple message. She received overwhelming

Chemical ride a path to Hell

I felt shocked and sad upon hearing that a young woman, poised on the edge of discovery and adventure, i.e. college, should suffer a tragic fall. At 41 years of age I am a non-traditional student who can remember my early college years and of course curiosity.

Unfortunately this also meant marijuana and alcohol.

Ashamedly these experiences also meant driving under the influence of cheap wine. Maybe there is nothing, short of bringing back prohibition, that will keep young and young at heart from experimenting with booze, sex and that occasional free ride to and from hell.

To those of you that seek a chemical escape from life please consider this. I live here in downtown Moscow. I also have family living on the Palouse. Think of us when you need to escape into a chemical fog. Also think of your friends and family and how they would feel at your hospital beside or even attending your funeral.

If you must ride that chemical stallion, remember that it can buck you off the road of life as easily as you ride the future.

Don't end up on the front page of a newspaper as a fallen star. Don't be like my friend and roommate Stuart James Woodworth who was an addict, a musician and transsexual.

Stuart also took his father's rifle and shot himself dead in the chest. I miss knowing a person with the depth of experience like him. I'm not cautioning against experiencing life. Just don't end up like that poor young woman and a poet I knew as Stuart.

Adults accept consequences

I am writing this letter in response to the article concerning campus alcohol policies. As of now, there is no alcohol allowed on campus or at any campus events. The drinking age is now 21 and despite all of those measures, an Alpha Phi pledge paralyzed herself after some heavy drinking.

There are those who think that the campus as a whole should be punished for her mistake and I disagree. It was her decision as a young adult to drink and she should accept the consequences.

People come to college to get away from their parents and learn to be an adult; they do not go away from home to be treated like spoiled children.

If the university takes stricter measures, there will be cases of students drinking and driving more often because they want to get away from the police-state environment.

Young people, as well as old, are going to drink if they feel like it. They will resent anyone trying to regulate their lives. If one suffers for their stupid actions, they should be the only ones to pay for their suffering.

That is part of being an adult.

—Matt Forman

Earth First! draws attention

In response to Chris Miller's Aug. 27 commentary:

Mr. Miller states "Earth First! is... misguided... ineffective... accomplishing little." I disagree. Of course EF! is not going to stop road building alone. The courts and legislators will decide that. EF! has been very effective in drawing attention to the systematic rape and slaughter of our public land.

Mr. Miller backs this up in one way by writing about the situation in the Nez Perce National Forest and with his statement, "many people are paying... attention to activists." Even bad press is better than no press.

EF! has effectively forced an issue. The more mainstream enviro groups are being listened to much more now because EF! has very effectively forced the media to pay attention. Letters and press releases would not have done this in such a way as blocking a road has.

It's a shame that the media and public need what Mr. Miller calls "juvenile antics" to warrant their attention. Would the Boston Tea Party fit into the category of "juvenile antics?" Think about it please.

Mr. Miller says that EF! is "grabbing at straws" when bringing up the Endangered Species Act. The Chinook salmon, gray wolf, and peregrine falcon are all endangered species that live in and will be affected by the Cove/Mallard timber sales. Grizzly bear are threatened as well as the bald eagle. This is not "grabbing at straws."

"But if indeed their argument is based on the aesthetic beauty of virgin timber minus roads."

The EF! argument is based on the fact that the sign says "National Forest" not "Elk City Private Logging Reserve."

Timber corporations have been allowed to use your tax dollars to rape your public land for far too long!

Cove/Mallard is a symptom, and I applaud EF! and anyone else who attempts to halt the massacre of Idaho's priceless gems.

"People come in with money they have found and they are just so excited."

The FMFI is to remain inviolate until the year 2089, the bicentennial of the UI. If not another cent is added to the fund, it will then, at current rates, be approximately $32 million.

At that time, it will be used to help individuals or organizations who will use the money to "enhance the image of the university," said Armstrong.

A High-Low committee will then be formed to decide how the money is to be distributed. The nonpolitical committee will be composed of such people as the oldest and youngest members of the university, the shortest and tallest, and so on.

Approximately $25 of the fund is to remain inactive, such as a 1941 two dollar bill given as a token of good luck. The fund also has $15 in silver dimes in a time capsule to be opened in the year 2039, at which time the coins will be sold and the money contributed to the fund.

Armstrong is currently working on the Found Money Fund of Idaho Chronicle and Guide. The chronicle records the history and the future plans of the fund, and also describes the different "levels" of money finding.

The first level is the most common, which includes finding change in a pay phone or just finding a nickel on the sidewalk. The second level is when a person goes someplace where they know there is more of a chance of finding change, such as a carnival.

If a person is so lucky as to spot a corner of a dollar bill in a pile of green leaves, that person has reached the third level of money finding, but it takes finding money under ice and snow to reach the fourth level.

A person on the fifth level is what Armstrong describes as the "Zen masters" of money finding.

"They have reached the highest state," said Armstrong. "They have a way of sensing impending funds."

People who find change are encouraged to take it to either Lorna Wofford on the third floor of the Dean's Office or to Armstrong's office on the fifth floor of the Education Building.

"This fund is a gift to Idaho's unborn," said Armstrong. "It's a great thing."

INFILTRATE

support for her actions not only from the school board but also the community.

The American Civil Liberties Union was notified, but said they really had no problem with her simply picking out a class message. After all, she was not trying to push her religion on others. It was a simple message.

But this wasn't good enough for a member of the school board to be left alone. Instead, they decided to try and pick a fight with the ACLU, almost daring them to try a lawsuit. It seemed like the ACLU was playing fair, but some members of the school board had to take a few cheap shots at the ACLU.

After the meeting as I was trying to nose my way up to the front to talk to some of the administrators and I saw them.

There they were and that was that.

Decked out in blue and green suits and looking mighty, uh, conservative, a troop of about five middle-aged men stalked to the front of the room, shaking hands with the school board, the audience, and themselves.

Forgive me if I stereotype, but the term "good 'ol boys" seemed to fit the scene.

After nosing around like a good reporter, I found out these guys were indeed members of the Christian Coalition and had come to show their support for this bible reading. To that I say, "fine." But after hearing them talk, I wanted to dump a truckload of Bibles down on their heads.

Posing like I was really on the side of these guys, I struck up a conversation with one of these convert-the-world-to-Christianity dudes. He spoke openly about his plan to re-introduce school prayer, religion and a general plan to teach Christian ideals in public school.

And their plan was devilishly clever. By not drawing attention to themselves, they were able to slither into school board positions.

This is mighty scary. If this stealth army manages to get into school boards and such, we will see some major shifts away from "the high wall of separation" some of our Founding Fathers had in mind.

So watch out. The next sport coat-clad man at your child's school board meeting might have an agenda all of his own.

Cougfest not rained out, moved indoors

Cougfest '93 rocked long and loud despite being pushed inside the CUB Ballroom due to Saturday night's rainy weather. Bellingham, Wa. based Jumbalassy's reggae/ska/ska music shook the floor with deep bass grooves. Their fast-moving rhythms and rapid-fire lyrics got the young and old a-moving. Jumbalassy conveyed an upbeat message and positive vibe with tunes like "Don't Forget Yer Condom" and Bob Marley's "Irie Up Yourself." Pullman's own Western Family and Green Tribe played hard jams like demons possessed. Green Tribe came to play with energy levels high and their amps turned UP.

The strumming, jumping, drumming sound of Inflatable Soule from Seattle energized the crowd early on. Aside from their own exciting material, Inflatable Soule also played a crowd-pleasing cover of Temple of the Dog's "Hunger Strike." Born-again Irishmen from Vancouver, B.C., The Paperboys played their unique style of head-banging jig tunes, featuring an accordion and bag-pipes. They treated the crowd to an accordion solo of Van Halen's "Jump," followed by cover tunes including "Pump Up the Jam" and "2 Legit 2 Quit." As for next year's Cougfest: pray the weather cooperates because it is an event better suited to the out-of-doors.

The Dirt Fisherman, a band from Boise, will play this Saturday at the Combine in Pullman with Sicho and Buttercup. Cover will be $5 and bands should start at 8 p.m..

Black Happy, Royball, Layne's Driver pull shirts off for Peghead bash

Tim Schreiner
Staff Writer

Black Happy celebrated their latest release, "Peghead," for Moscow on Saturday night, entrenched in a crowd of half-naked bodies, and the rough and horny sounds that put them into a new realm of musical spread.

A capacity crowd of 600 people jammed the Moscow Social Club for the noise that still transcends definition. Paul Hemenway, lead singer for Black Happy, said that regardless of the name you put to it, they are pleased they are doing stuff they can call their own.

Hemenway said that the clean-shifting vibratos of "Peghead" were a step they had to take. "We shifted gears on this album," Hemenway said. Mixed in with familiar tracks from "Friendly Dog Salad," the crowd either sang along or moshed, and never put down. "Tonight was so damn flattering with the sing along and stuff," Hemenway said.

Greg Hjort, of Black Happy, said in a recent interview, "The biggest difference between the first album, 'Friendly Dog Salad,' and 'Peghead' is that the second is not as raw as the first."

Of their new CD "Peghead," Hjort added it is a lot more polished and more thought out. Neil Kernon, the producer of "Peghead," has some big names under his belt such as Peter Gabriel and Elton John.

An even complement came in with the company of Royball and Laynes Driver, who easily primed Moscow's energy supply. The nervous moshers added up into the twenties right from the start, minus a couple who fell into the hands of the security guards.

Laynes Driver went off with a musical medley that demanded attention, with generous cuts from the guitar mixed with a regular tease of sound bites to tie it up. Aaron Miller, lead singer for Laynes Driver, came clean with a full vocal attitude to finish the punch. He said after seven months together, they now have 20 original songs and expect a demo to be out within the next two months.

When Royball came to the front, it was time to hold on to your boot straps or get out of the way. The bouncers inked the same hands over and over again, with the liquid nerve ever presently washing it away. The fire continuously rising. Royball's malicious groove broke with the rifts of Carlos Lantz in no more than a motor slide and a whining feedback. As the lyrics paused to the beat of the strobe light, Royball beckoned the masses to look inside their heads and yelled. "We can't let you slow down yet."

Dave Terhark, Royball's bass and vocal guru said, "This was the best show I've played in Moscow. The crowd response was more than what we pictured."

If body-tossing in a friendly manner has its attraction, Royball and Laynes Driver have upcoming shows in the works for the Palouse area, while Black Happy is off to New York with "Peghead." Also, the Moscow Social Club will continue to turn up the heat with full bookings for the next two months.

Black Happy heated up the Moscow Social Club to a near melt down last Friday night. Their new CD "Peghead" can be found in area music stores.

Lentilfest '93 a gas

Poor weather failed to dampen the spirits of about 2,000 attendants of the fifth National Lentil Festival this weekend in Pullman.

In spite of the rain, people gathered in Reaney Park and along the streets of Pullman to watch the parade, witness the changing of the Little Lentil King and Queen, listen to music and of course consume millions of lentils.

The Lentilfest's signature attraction was the parade through the center of town. 20 floats decked with ribbons and waving lentil royalty made their way through the rainy streets.

Ann Kennedy has attended the parade and festival for three years. A Pullman resident and researcher at WSU, she says the festival "is a great way for the community to come together...it's a fun thing for everybody. It gives everybody something different to do."

Jason Taylor, a Pullman police officer, said this year's festival was "great... the people have been great. Their fun to be around." This was Taylor's first year patrolling the Lentilfest. "(The crowd) has been real receptive to the police on bikes...it's been easy to talk to people."

Taylor noticed that the festival draws a lot of out-of-towners. "I've seen a lot of people from Moses Lake, Astoria, Central Wash., Central Ore., It's starting to get bigger and bigger. It's an event Pullman is kind-

Workshops, forums scheduled this fall by UI Gradstudies

The University of Idaho College of Graduate Studies is sponsoring two forums and four workshops this fall semester.

The September 14 forum, "Ethics of Multiple Authorship," will address the practice of assigning authorship responsibility to various people. Marc J. Klownden, from the entomology department, will act as moderator. Elizabeth B. Brandt of the UI Law School, Arthur W. Rourke of the biological sciences department and Donald E. Tyler of the sociology and anthropology department will be on the panel.

The second forum will be on September 21 and will discuss the ethics of the research release. "Ethical Considerations of the Development of University Technology Transfer" is the title of the meeting, and it will address issues like the delay of a possible cancer cure in order to allow time for the creator to obtain a patent. Laurence C. Bonar, Director of the Idaho Research Foundation, will lead the discussion.

The workshops are open to anyone who wants to attend, but are mostly geared toward current and potential graduate students.

September 28 is the first workshop scheduled and it is titled "Student Spouse Workshop." This workshop has been held before but is being offered again this semester. James D. Morris, Director of the Student Counseling Center, and Roger P. Wallins, Associate Dean of the College of Graduate Studies will discuss job opportunities in the community and day care opportunities. Morris will also discuss the stresses that arise when one or both partners are students.

The second workshop will be on October 5 and is titled "Choosing the 'Right' Graduate School." This one is geared toward juniors, seniors and other potential graduate students. Valerie M. Roberts, Administrative Secretary of the College of Graduate Studies and Wallins will cover the resources available when searching for a graduate school. The discussion, however, will not be limited to those areas dealing with the UI Graduate School. It will also cover other graduate schools and will mostly focus on helping students choose the graduate school that is right for them.

The October 12 workshop, the third in the series, will cover the financial aspects of getting into graduate school. "Financial Assistance for Graduate Studies. Holly J. Bauer, Assistant Director of Student Financial Aid will cover loans; Marilyn J. Root, Grant Support Services Assistant at the University Research Office will cover granting agencies and other external financial assistance; and Wallins will discuss assistantships.

The final workshop, "Career Planning Assistance for Graduate Students," will be on October 19. Dan Blanco, Director of Career Services and Wallins will discuss how to find and prepare for a career after graduate school.

The forums, as well as the workshops, are open to all those who would like to attend.

All of the forums and workshops will be held in the UI Student Union Building Galena Gold/Silver Room and will begin at 7:30 p.m.

Fin, Feathers opens Sept. 1

Three gray rockets streaked low over the desert landscape toward the safety of the de-militarized zone where they would be safe. They flew low, hoping to avoid detection by ground to air installations hidden in the sparse cover of the arid canyons. In this canyon alone they had been fired upon twice. Two hundred yards from the safety of the zone, the low flying streaks caught a tail wind from a larger adjoining canyon and nearly doubled their speed. In the twinkle of an eye they would cover the remaining 100 yards to safety.

But suddenly, two ground to air guns, alerted by distant gunfire that signaled the approach of zone bound missiles, emerged from a small brush patch bordering the n shooting zone and opened fire. The airborne trio responded by flaring, gyrating, and clawing for altitude. The two guns barked once, twice, and even a third time just before the gray blurs blazed over the line of safety. Disgusted, the smooth-bore battery reloaded and returned to their vigil, vowing to lead any wind-aided rockets another 10 feet.

While hunting Latah county doves on opening day isn't the war it's made out to be, there are certainly some parallels.

Outdoor with... Nick Brown

If you find the extremely short cropped grain that local mourning doves prefer, you'll probably also find a small army of hunters. In this area, there isn't a lot of good dove habitat. Doves, either for that matter. These two factors have a tendency to concentrate the tiny migratory birds and the first guns of the season in small areas. The result is often a small scale smoothbore war the first couple days of September. Doves wise up quick and learn to stay on private land or city limits.

Contrary to what many sportsmen believe, most birds shot are raised locally. Normally a pretty high percentage that are hatched here migrate before the traditional September 1 opener which begins tomorrow at 5:38 a.m. However, some decent hunting opportunities exist the first week of September if you can find barren ground with scattered seeds. After time, most doves have migrated and upland bird hunters will be concentrating on the September 15 partridge and quail opener. Until then, all you'll need to hunt doves is a valid hunting license and a gun capable of holding only 3 shells. One of the most common opening day citations handed out by patrolling wardens is hunting without a plugged gun. Idaho limits hunters to 10 doves a day.

Sportsmen should also keep in mind that tomorrow is also the steelhead catch and keep opener for the lower Clearwater below Memorial Bridge and the Snake River. The Clearwater upstream from the bridge won't open for catch and keep until October 15. Steelhead numbers counted at Lower Granite Dam - the last counting station before Idaho waters - shows the third highest returns of the big sea run rainbows since counting began at Lower Granite in 1975. Anglers will need a valid fishing license and fall 1993 steelhead punchcard before heading out. The fall season limit for the Snake and Clearwater will be 10 fish.

Saints play enthusiastic crowd

Rebecca Lukas

Students crowded into the SUB Ballroom Saturday night to enjoy The Renegade Saints and their opening act Big Time Adam.

Big Time Adam, a local band of six UI students started the concert with a song they called "Guts." This first song got the crowd rocking and as more people came in, the atmosphere became one of energy and enthusiasm.

Big Time Adam played an hour and 15 minutes of music they described as "improvisation with a lot of long solos." The band informed the crowd that their first album, "Pudge", will soon be released.

After the opening act, The Renegade Saints took the stage. "We are really siked about playing at the SUB. It is a great setup," said Dave Coey, who play bass and vocals. "The SUB has more of a concert atmosphere with good sound and room to dance."

The Renegade Saints played their first all ages show Sat.

Coey added.

The Saints described their music as "original rock, with improv and vocal harmonies." Or as Coey and Adam Zacks, the band's manager, put it, "We are Ne-Vo-Retro or just hot rocking brain food."

As this "Ne-Vo-Retro" band started rocking, the students joined in. The SUB was jamming with The Renegade of founded on." Rebecca Short, a Mortar Board volunteer from WSU, assisted at the microbrewery tasting, said, "So far it's been a lot of fun... We do service projects like this throughout the year. (We) basically do whatever the school and the community asks." Short, a speech pathology major, was one of the many WSU student volunteers.

"We've got student volunteers in all of our areas. We've had really good luck in getting support from all areas," says Ginny Boyle, a member of the Executive Committee of the Lentilfest and a 15 year Pullman resident. She thought the festival was accomplishing what it set out to do. "It's a real community event and we try to bring in all of the region. We're here to celebrate lentils, but also bring people together. I think it's doing a great job."

Despite the bad weather, Boyle said, "I think this year is our best year ever. The word is out... we hoped that waiting until August we'd get the weather... but it's possible to enjoy these festivals no matter what the weather."

Before the show started The Saint's minister, Craig Opperman, helped them get in touch with their spiritual sides. "They guys are really spiritual, and I am their spiritual consultant," said Opperman.

The Saints have just made a new demo tape at Bad Animal Studio with

The band is not just sticking around the Northwest. They are headed for other cities where they can share their music. In the near future the band will be playing at North Dakota State University in Fargo, ND and then heading for Minnesota.

Introducing The Student Checking Account Designed Specifically For The Way Students Think.

Take a moment and give some thought to what you think: passing, flunking, does my apartment get cable?, relationships - does he or doesn't she?, global warming, cool checks, MTV, Is grunge for me?, money, money, money, the mysterious powers of chocolate, will I ever own a VISA® card?, where's the free stuff?, that ozone thing, tuition's due when?, I need an ATM?

Obviously, there's a lot more going on in your mind than your professors might think. To help alleviate some of your concerns, First Security Bank offers a student checking account tailored to fit your uniquely hectic lifestyle.

When you open a student checking account at First Security Bank between August 1 and October 20, 1993, you'll get a free 100% cotton T-shirt<sup>1</sup> with a cool design and the name of your college. (And while you're there, enter to win a 13-inch Hitachi TV.<sup>2</sup>) In addition to a free T-shirt, you'll get a First Security Cash Card that gives you 24-hour access to your money. The card is free and allows unlimited usage at any of our 125 ATM locations in Utah and Idaho. You also get your first fifty checks free. And you can write ten checks a month without a service charge. Plus you can apply for your own VISA card with a $500 personal line of credit<sup>3</sup>. Which is a great way to start establishing credit for your future — you know, spouse, kids, house, two-car garage, satellite dish, etc... Plus, when you apply and qualify, you'll get a free VISA Banking Card.

It's a VISA card that works like a check. And it can be pretty handy when you find something you really, really want and the place won't accept a check. Your first ten no-charge transactions each month include usage of this card. (Service charges may apply to some ATM transactions.)

Your First Security Student Checking Account also includes free Check Safekeeping so you don't have to worry about canceled checks. A detailed statement will be sent to you each month to help you balance your account. And if you need a copy of a particular check, we'll provide up to three copies each month at no charge.

So there you have it. The First Security Bank free T-shirt, maybe a free TV too, fifty free checks, VISA Credit Card, free VISA Student Banking Card, free Cash Card with 24-hour access, free Check Safekeeping, Student Checking Account. Definitely an offer worth thinking about. First Security Bank.

The UI Bowling Club is starting from scratch this fall. Last year was the first time in 20 years there wasn't enough interest to form a team. Leo Stephens, coach of the bowling team, is looking for all interested parties to attend an organizational meeting on Sept. 11 at 10 a.m. in the SUB Underground.

"They'll all be new here, everybody has a chance," Stephens said. Remember the SUB Underground bowling lanes are open from 8 a.m. to 11 p.m. Monday thru Friday and 9 a.m. to midnight Saturday and Sunday. Cost to play is 10 cents a frame and shoes rent for 30 cents a pair.

The University of Idaho Vandals will premier their season this week, Sept. 2, with live television coverage. The Vandals will appear on Prime Sports Northwest, Cablevision channel 40, beginning at 5 p.m. as they take on Stephen F. Austin University in Nacogdoches, Texas. The Vandals return home on Sept. 11.

Broncos still have him

Former Vandal standout Jeff Robinson makes final cuts

Tim Piehl
Staff Writer

The Bronco's. Blue and Orange. Jeff Robinson. No this isn't some Boise State dream of recruiting past. This is for real, and according to most football analysts, so is Jeff Robinson.

After harassing Big Sky offenses for four years, the former Vandal standout and three time All-American was drafted in the fourth round by the NFL's Denver Broncos. He also becomes the highest pick of an Idaho player since John Yarno was picked by the Seattle Seahawks in 1977. However as any rookie will say, being drafted doesn't guarantee a spot on the final roster. NFL teams will make several cuts to trim their roster to 53 players plus a five man practice squad. Robinson has impressed both Bronco coaches and Denver media enough to have won a job for his first regular season.

The Spokane native pass rusher has plenty of reasons to be confident. Robinson holds the University of Idaho's all-time sack record with 57 and a half. In addition he was a first team all-Big Sky selection three consecutive years and a Sports Illustrated player of the week.

The statistics helped Jeff become drafted, but it is his work ethic and determination that has coaches in the mile high city so excited. Vandal coaches aren't surprised by his success.

University of Idaho defensive line coach Nick Holt believes Robinson's reason for success is obvious.

"Jeff is a very intelligent football player," Holt said. "Most rookie defensive ends have to learn how to rush the passer, but Jeff went into camp with strong pass rushing abilities."

As the Denver coaches have taken a liking to Robinson's work ethic, the media has also been caught up in the skills of the little known fourth round pick.

In a Denver Post feature article, Bronco defensive coordinator Greg Kragen to Karl Mecklenberg.. "he's got that quick first move and he goes right to the ball every time."

Both the local papers and defensive experts predict Robinson will see time in key pass rushing situations.

Robinson's weight which has gone up fifteen pounds to put him at 265 is a slight concern for Denver. Although he is lighter than most NFL defensive ends, the coaches feel he will get stronger.

Speed and agility will give Robinson playing time in Denver's nickel package. While he fights for playing time, Robinson will be performing the long snapping duties for punt situations and possibly on a kickoff return team.

Once on the team Robinson will join three other Vandals who are currently active in the NFL. Mark Schlereth of the Washington Redskins, Marvin Washington of the New York Jets, and most recently John Friesz of the San Diego Chargers are all former Vandals who have made the successful jump to the "Big Leagues."

All four players seem to have benefited from the style of play in the Big Sky. Anyone who watches the conference knows that protecting the passer and rushing the passer are keys to winning championships.

The Denver Broncos are hoping that their investment in the pass rush and in Jeff Robinson also translates into winning. So far it has worked out well, and everyone is happy.

The Broncos are happy.
The fans are happy.
The media is happy.
Jeff Robinson is happy.
And, the Big Sky quarter backs are breathing easier.

Golfers persevere in poor conditions

Rain, wind, thunder and lightning intrude on Dan O'Brien Golf Scramble Fund Raiser

Andrew Longeteig
Staff Writer

Despite the rainy weather, the golf participants' spirits weren't dampened at the first annual Dan O'Brien Golf Scramble.

O'Brien himself even described it as the "Best tournament for a bad weather tournament I've seen."

Forty-one four man teams entered the competition with handicaps ranging from 9-28. However, it didn't matter who had what handicap because it is formulated to be fair to all golfers. The golfers' scores are computed by taking 1/4 of the teams' combined handicap and that number was subtracted from their score to achieve the overall net. Unsimply said but simply done.

The tournament was cut short (15 holes) due to precipitation and lightning. It's not easy to golf when the course is one large water hazard.

In spite of the cumbersome weather, the golfers were satisfied with kegs of beer and a complimentary barbecue awaiting their wet return.

Let's forget about mother nature and beer, the champions of the tournament were the foursome of Brady Olson, Sean Brogan, Glen Landrus, and Jack Kidd with a net score of 28.8.

Landrus had one thing to add follownig the victory. "Thank God for handicaps."

The players were awarded four cellular phones for their accomplishment.

O'Brien, who is a 12 handicap golfer nonetheless, had just returned to Moscow from Stuttgart, Germany where he placed first in the World Track and Field Championships, defending his Decathlon Championship.

One wonders if O'Brien would rather relax on the golf course than being the most heralded decathlete of our time.

He states, "One's a job and the other is for recreation, so it's hard to compare the two. It's a serious game (golf) but there's no bearing on it. If I don't win at golf it's no big deal, but if I don't win a decathlon, its a bigger deal."

Proceeds will go to UI track and field. The conditions of the tournament couldn't have been worse, nevertheless, O'Brien says "If we could do this every year it would be great for U of I athletics."

UI Students in Camouflage

Technology increases personal, environment safety

Katé Lyons-Holestine
Sports Editor

Large groups of people dressed in camouflage run through the wooded areas of Moscow Mountain hunting one another down every weekend.

No, they're not members of the North Idaho Aryan Nations, nor are they survivalists. They're just the everyday University of Idaho or Washington State University student taking part in a spirited game of paintball.

The sport, considered dangerous by many, is exciting and safe. Technology has inspired many safety features for both players and the environment.

Many students, both graduate and undergraduate, take to the mountain every Sunday. In all weather conditions. The sport has many loyal followers.

The object of the game changes with the game format in use. The most commonly used format splits the players into two teams, one team goes out onto the playing field and "hides" in wait for the other team. The second team follows the first. The object of the game is elimination. Other game situations include capture the flag scenarios, "Predator" and attack and defend.

The perception of most is paintball is a dangerous sport derived from survivalists' games. The truth is it was developed by United States Forest Service workers in the early 1980's.

The paintball guns originally were used by the forest service to mark trees that were to be removed. One day a forest worker shot another person instead of a tree and a game ensued.

From that point, the game has evolved at exponential rates with the advancements of technology. Early guns were pump action and resembled pistols. Today's guns are leading edge, they are semi-automatic and records have been set with someone shooting 540 shots a minute.

Safety is the name of the game on Moscow Mountain.

Measures have been taken to regulate velocity, personal safety gear has been enhanced and rules have been adopted.

When playing with the "regulars" on Moscow Mountain, gun velocity must be chronographed before entering the playing field. The guns may push the paint balls forward at a maximum velocity of 300 feet per second. If the gun is shooting "hotter" than that it must be turned down. If the gun is shooting lower than that the velocity may be turned up.

In addition to the velocity regulation personal safety gear has become more elaborate in the past 10 years. At one time, lab goggles (such as the ones worn in chemistry labs) were sufficient. Head protection gear today covers the entire face and neck and wraps around the ears. Some masks come equipped with small fans to reduce the amount of fogging inside the lenses.

Contrary to popular belief, the environment is not damaged by paintball. The paint is completely biodegradable. It is a combination of corn starch, water and food coloring (not too tasty if you get hit in the mouth).

Graduate students, Bryan Brooks and Cliff Marr have taken their interest in the sport to a business level. The two combined efforts and built Dye Hard Paintball Supply, a small business which retails paintball guns, ammunition and equipment.

In order to stress the safety taken while playing paintball, players who rent equipment must sign agreements to use the equipment in the proper way and always wear eye protection.

Some UI students have taken the sport very seriously and have tried their hand in tournament action. They named their team "White Flag" and traveled to a tournament in Scappoose, Oregon last spring. Team members include Dan Zink, Chris Myerchin, Paul Myerchin, Pat Olsen, Rick Holestine, Doug Wood and Katé Holestine.

Pat Olsen, a sociology major, takes cover in the brush during a paintball game. Head gear is mandatory for safety.

BURKETT

Woodrow Wilson extolled bureaucracy as a problem-solving mechanism; they spoke of breaking the government into bureaus so they could control it from the top down. Burkett insists instead that in this "information age" the government could be redesigned and controlled through information services, speeding up political processes considerably.

As he puts his campaign together county by county, Burkett hopes to organize university campuses behind his cause.

"The reason I'm asking people to support me and the Democratic party is because I think I can win," Burkett said.

Burkett said he can count on the base support of the floating district for which he served as senator until the latest legislative reapportionment obliterated the district. He also claims skills developed during his experience in the senate, such as gathering political support, raising campaign funds and debating opponents.

SUB Underground bowling lanes ready to roll

Katé Lyons-Holestine

Sports Editor

For the first time in twenty years, the University of Idaho Bowling Club couldn't form a team last season. There were three members listed on the roster, but it takes five to make a team.

"It was one of the most discouraging times of my life," Stephens said.

The team had been lost to graduation and the four-year eligibility rule.

"If people are interested in competition, this is the place to be," Stephens said. "We can teach you to bowl, we need people with that drive."

Stephens has been active with the UI Bowling Club since college days. In 1972, his sophomore year, he was injured in a flag football game and couldn't take part in the bowling season. His junior year, 1973 he made the team and also worked behind the machines of the bowling lanes. Since his four-year eligibility had expired he became active as the coach.

Bowling is a club sport, not a varsity sport so scholarships aren't available. But, the team travels the country and competes with college teams that are able to provide scholarships and the rivalry is tight.

Bowling is the No. 1 participation sport in the world and the UI has one of the larger college centers in the country. The Student Union Building Underground boasts 14 lanes, while most college centers have six to eight lanes.

"We are able to host tournaments here," Stephens said, "

We don't need the lanes for the team, but for activities."

The SUB Underground bowling lanes are utilized for many different activities. The center is operated by student crews only to keep costs at a minimum.

In addition to hosting the annual Moscow High School all-night graduation party, the SUB Underground has tournament type competition offered for students. Student involvement has been sporadic in past years, but Stephens is hopeful changing attitudes on campus will spark interest.

"The general attitude on campus has moved from alcohol and those functions," Stephens said. "We've become a more popular place to come, and we can put together a pretty good exchange."

David Mucci, SUB Director, is trying to rally student activities and Stephens is cooperating in the Underground.

"The excitement is generated by Mucci. He has people excited about doing things," Stephens said.

Stephens referred to possible activities to include a Monte Carlo Night. Here one evening a week would be dedicated to Monte Carlo bowling. Prizes are awarded for certain strike and spare combinations using the colored pins.

"In the commercial world cash prizes seem to be the most prominent," Stephens said.

The Underground also offers regular game and shoe rates. Shoes can be rented for 30 cents a pair and bowling is 10 cents a frame.

"But, I know as long as the weather stays nice outside the Underground stay empty," Stephens said.
