Mr. Greek

19 compete for honor and title

Tim Helmke

Staff Writer

It wasn't the Miss America Pageant Tuesday night in the SUB Ballroom but someone received the honor and title of Mr. Greek 1993.

The fourth annual Alpha Gamma Delta Mr. Greek contest brought out a field of 19 candidates. These men each represented their respective house in the Greek system here at the University of Idaho.

Ed Lodge of Sigma Chi was crowned as Mr. Greek for 1993.

Eric Julian of Theta Chi and Rey Turner of Pi Kappa Alpha were named first and second runner-up, respectively.

Lodge was crowned by Lisa Jolley and Jill Pittmann, organizers of the event. All contestants received flowers for participating.

The men opened up the program with introductions in which they offered their names and a little bit about themselves.

The audience was particularly impressed with Sigma Chi candidate Ed Lodge who said he hopes to host "The Tonight Show" someday.

A question and answer period was next up for the contestants. The questions included "What are the benefits of a dry Rush?" "How could you convince a prospective UI student to go through Rush?" and "What can the Greek system do to benefit the community?" Candidates took different approaches to their questions.

Phi Kappa Tau, UI Interfraternity Council join others tightening alcohol policies

Tim Helmke

Staff Writer

Alcohol policy changes are coming to more University of Idaho fraternities as a result of pressure from the university and state.

Phi Kappa Tau is considering a number of policy changes. Two of these include limiting alcohol to certain areas within the house and a total ban of alcohol from chapter property.

Phi Tau Vice President Tyson Berrett told the Moscow-Pullman Daily News the house hopes to have a decision made by next week.

At the same time, UI Interfraternity Council has proposed a stricter alcohol policy which chapters are currently discussing. The proposed policy includes limiting the number of beers distributed to those 21 and older to six and not allowing anyone under 21 access to the beer.

A special IFC meeting will be held next Wednesday night to vote on the proposed policy.

Last week Tau Kappa Epsilon became the first UI chapter to take steps to control alcohol consumption in house. The Tekes now limit drinking to members' rooms who are of age.

FarmHouse has the strictest national policy in regards to alcohol. FarmHouse nationals require all chapters to be dry.

The UI Greek system came under fire in August when an 18-year-old freshmen was paralyzed from the waist down. The UI sorority pledge had been drinking at two fraternity houses before falling from a fire escape, said police.

UI Vice-President for Student Affairs Hal Godwin and UI President Elisabeth Zinser have invited representatives from the national offices of the UI's 27 Greek chapters to come to Moscow Oct. 10 and 11.

While here, these representatives would meet to discuss alcohol policies and reasons why the Greek system should remain here at the UI.

This comes after a policy proposal made at the Idaho State Board of Education meeting earlier this month which stated the UI should consider taking steps to bankrupt fraternities and sororities.

This would then free up the land for the university to buy and build residence halls, as said in the proposed motion made by the board.

Godwin's office reported over 10 national offices have confirmed they will be here for the meeting. They also expect to hear from more as the meeting draws nearer. This meeting will be held right before the board meets here on campus on Oct. 14 and 15.

Thieves cancel math test

Prof finds tests missing, file erased and exam cancelled

Gregory H. Burton
Staff Writer

Thieves came in the middle of the night Aug. 15 and stole all the tests to a Mathematics 160 class.

Professor Erol Barbut arrived at his office Thursday morning, the day of the test, to find the tests missing from his office in Brink.Hall.

Not only did the intruder steal the tests but the computer file where the test was stored was erased. In addition, announcements listing the exam class period canceled were attached to the classroom door, all without Barbut's knowledge.

Campus Police Commander Jake Kershnik said the initial investigation will be restricted to the 40 students registered for the class.

But the severity of the crime is what may be the biggest surprise.

"The knowing destruction of computer information is listed as a felony in Idaho," said Kershnik.

"The theft of the physical exams is a misdemeanor but the computer tampering is much more severe," said Kershnik.

In other crime news UI student Kran Allen reported a compact disk player was stolen from his car Sept. 10.

Crime Stats

Theft	1
Destruction of Computer Information	1
Malicious Injury to Property	1

Allen listed the value of the player at $365.

In conjunction with National Crime Prevention Month, Kershnik said his department will be holding a Bike Rodeo Oct. 15.

The rodeo will be held on the limited access pavilion at the new campus family housing center.

Kershnik said the rodeo will be targeted for students with children who live either on or off campus. Food and games will be provided and community celebrities, including McGruff the crime dog, will be on hand to entertain.

For more information, contact the Campus Police Substation at 885-7074.

Direct deposit available

Students with on-campus jobs no longer have to wait in long lines to pick up paychecks.

The Controller's office and payroll have made it possible to have paychecks for Irregular Help and Work Study deposited directly into checking accounts.

"This is something we've been wanting to offer for a long time, but we couldn't because of our computer system," said Lindy Stockton of Payroll. A recent software upgrade has made the direct deposit system possible.

Stockton said there is a large incentive on both sides to change over to a direct deposit system.

"For the students who can take advantage of this, it will mean more time for them," Stockton said.

Every payday University employees clog payroll office waiting for checks, only to stand in another long line at the bank waiting to cash or deposit their checks. Stockton said the lines are inconvenient and prevent other things from being done.

Students can sign up for direct deposit with the payroll representative, near the paycheck distribution window in the Administration Annex today.

Bring a deposit slip or voided check to set up direct deposit. Applicants will receive a buy-one-get-one-free coupon for the Vandal Cafe in the SUB.

Cripe receives scholarship

ROTC in action

Army, Air Force, Navy ROTC prepare for active service, careers

Darin Crisp

Navy ROTC

Sailing south along the Southern California coast as far as Ensenada, Mexico, was all in a day's work for one University of Idaho naval midshipman.

Assisting in the embargo in the Adriatic Sea on a destroyer was standard for another, as was finishing out the tour in Paris.

Cruising on an aircraft carrier and flying a variety of jets and other aircraft in the South Pacific was the norm for a third.

These midshipmen have one thing in common: this past summer, they participated in a cruise. Organized by the Naval Reserve Officer Training Corps, the summer cruise is a vital piece of a naval officer's education.

The summer cruise is related to what the participant will do upon graduation, such as Sea, Air and Land (SEAL) training in a mini course in basic underwater demolitions.

By learning to travel and seeing foreign lands, women and men are training to become part of the nation's protective force.

Naval officers undergo the most rigorous required academics of any military training program on the UI campus.

Regardless of major, they take math through second semester calculus. They also take two semesters of science-bound chemistry and engineering physics.

They also participate in physical fitness programs and periodically take trips to a local lake to learn to sail the unit's own sailboats.

Other training they receive in class includes navigation, shipboard and personnel management and naval engineering.

During the spring, the air option midshipmen go to Miramar Naval Air Station, Calif. to become familiar with aircraft (Miramar is the site of Top Gun School, and where the movie was filmed.) The Marine option people go to Quantico, Va. for Marine training. The nuclear submarine sailors go to Bremerton, Wash. to become familiar with submarines.

The Navy provides many students in the program with full ride scholarships which pay for tuition, books and give a paycheck at the end of the month. In return, members are expected to go on active duty when they graduate.

Groups file suit against the Nez Perce National Forests

Natalie Shapiro
Contributing Writer

The Idaho Sportsman's Coalition, Alliance for the Wild Rockies and other groups have joined the Cove/Mallard timber sale issue by filing a lawsuit against the Nez Perce National Forest on grounds of state and federal violations.

The lawsuit was filed Sept. 14 in the U.S. District Court in Boise.

It's not the first time this roadless area has been fought over in court. Ten years ago, as the Jersey Jack Sale, environmentalists sued the Forest Service.

"The Forest Service was supposed to look at any conceivable environmental impact. They concluded erroneously that there was no significant impact," said Mike Bader of the Alliance for the Wild Rockies.

According to Bader, the main issue in the current lawsuit is the impact of logging and road building on threatened Chinook Salmon.

"As it's a threatened species, the Forest Service is required to enter in a formal consultation with the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service and the National Marine Fisheries," said Bader. "They never did that, which constitutes an illegal taking of salmon."

"We alleged in our lawsuit, that they are violating the Clean Water Act, the National Forest Management Act, the Idaho Water Quality Act, the Endangered Species Act, the Administration Procedures Act and the National Environmental Policy Act," Bader said.

Nez Perce National Forest Supervisor Michael King was unavailable to comment on the lawsuit.

The groups are seeking a preliminary injunction on any road building or logging in the Cove/Mallard area. They also want the Forest Service to obliterate the Noble Road, which was completed this summer.

"It's an illegal road; they haven't followed procedural requirements," asserted Bader.

"They were supposed to request a list of endangered species from the Fish and Wildlife Service but they didn't. In addition, they haven't analyzed the area as a wildlife corridor. They are severing that link," Bader said.

Bader also said Cove/Mallard isn't suitable for large-scale logging.

"It has steep soil runoff with a short growing season. It's not the place for a tree farm. We need smaller sales that are labor intensive. Machines have replaced sawyers out there," Bader said.

Bader also observed that protecting areas like Cove/Mallard enhanced the overall prosperity of the state.

"Elk City is timber dependent; how long with sales like this will they prolong their prosperity? One year? Five years? The state isn't dying, but local communities die if they are built around unstable economic bases," Bader said.

Meanwhile, the Earth First! camp near Dixie, Idaho has closed down for the winter. "We'll still be going back and forth to camp to do wolf surveys throughout the winter," said Robert Amon, owner of the camp.

The focus of the activists' campaign is now more national, said Amon.

"People are going home (from the camp), taking it to their states and working on wilderness issues and bills such as the Northern Rockies Ecosystem Protection Act," Amon said.

Amon is going to take the message of Cove/Mallard across the country via the Native Forest Network Road Show early next month.

"They raise awareness for temperate forests and indigenous people," he said. The Road Show began last weekend, and will be in Moscow Oct. 8. From Moscow it will move on through Montana and on to Chicago, Ill.

sports activities, organize food drives for needy families and help organize POW/MIA week.

These AFROTC students also take orientation tours to various Air Force bases for training and exposure to jobs they might hold while on active duty.

AFROTC on the UI campus started soon after WWII. When it suffered declining enrollment after the Vietnam War, it was retired and students who wished to pursue an Air Force career commuted to Washington State University.

The program at UI came to life with a non-host teaching agreement with the Washington State University Detachment. Under terms of this agreement, members of the UI can take AFROTC on the UI campus without the necessity of traveling between campuses.

Students in AFROTC can get up to a four-year, full-ride scholarship which includes books, tuition and a paycheck. All students in AFROTC go on active duty after graduation.

The unit participates in POW/MIA day at UI with Army and Navy detachments. Mountain Home Air Force Base provides a fly-by at the height of the ceremony.

AFROTC also provides a color guard detachment at university and community events.

Additionally, the AFROTC honor society, named the Colonel Galileo Bossio Squadron, performs philanthropic activities around the area, including annual visits to the Shriner's Hospital in Spokane and assisting with the annual Easter Egg hunt in local parks.

Army Rotc

The Fort Lewis Leadership Reaction Course (LRC) is a combination puzzle and obstacle course.

The person chosen as leader for a station is given items, such as two barrels, two eight foot planks and a short piece of rope. The leader may then be told to get the team across a washed out bridge with two footings nine feet apart. Further requirements may be safe crossing of equipment, and no one gets wet.

The goal is to develop a sense of readiness and confidence in one's ability to meet a seemingly insurmountable obstacle and beat it. Each station on the LRC has different ways to win.

This is one activity planned this semester for Army ROTC cadets in the UI Chrisman Battalion.

The Army on campus offers Adventure Training to all of their cadets including white water rafting, rappelling and snow skiing.

Each semester the unit plans a camping trip/training exercise to expose the group to small unit tactics, to teach them the methods of a fighting infantry unit in combat.

This year the ROTC unit will provide an opportunity for about 30 freshmen to visit the military base at Fort Lewis, Wa.

some answered seriously and others took them a little more lightly.

The talent portion of the competition was next and there was a wide variety offered.

Phi Gamma Delta candidate Jeremy Boyd opened this section with a roller blade demonstration. Other highlights of this competition included Julian who played the piano and sang "After All," Demian Hommel of Alpha Kappa Lambda played his guitar and Turner performed a mime about a man dreaming of being in the decathlon.

A dance routine involving all 19 contestants was done then to John Cougar Mellancamp's "Hurt So Good." This portion of the competition allowed the men to show off their physique and was choreographed by AGD member Susan Vollmer.

This concluded the competition portion of the Mr. Greek contest and the audience and contestants waited for the judges' decision. Door prizes donated by local businesses were given away while the judges made their decisions.

Judges for the event were: Judith Wriska, House Director for AGD; Kiley Nichols, 1993 Greek Woman of the Year; Chris Wuthrich, UI Assistant Greek Advisor; and Marci Hyatt, Chapter President of AGD.

The AGD's raised $425 for their philanthropy, the Alpha Gamma Delta Foundation, which raises money for research in the fight against juvenile diabetes.

Emcees for the event were Jim Johnson of Hot 104 KHTR and Amy Michelle Ridenour, vice president for scholarship at AGD.

Service Act offers students chance to make it

Finally, good news from our nation's capital for college students.

In a ceremony under a tent on the White House lawn, President Clinton signed the national service act Tuesday. The act will go into effect in 1994 with $300 million planned for around 20,000 participants in the first year. The act amounts to $4,725 for each participant to apply towards their college costs and in addition they will receive over $7,000 annually for living expenses.

In return for this financial aid, each participant will be required to perform more than 1,700 hours of community service. The service can be completed before, during or after college.

There has been some concern expressed over whether or not the students will pay back the money in service hours. But university students have been paying back college loans for years, with few defaulting on the payment. Hopefully, future students won't let our president down in paying back what they owe.

This act does not come too soon, either, as college costs are still on the rise. Even though financial aid forms may be more user friendly, the money isn't going as far. In fact, the increase in cost has far surpassed the rate of inflation.

According to the College Board, inflation has risen 2.8 percent in the last year. Public university tuition rose eight percent, and that figure doesn't include the climbing cost of room and board.

The rise in costs at the University of Idaho reflect the national trend, also. This semester's student fees were nearly ten percent more than last spring.

On top of that, UI housing increased prices up to 15 percent in some cases, and rent in Moscow has slowly been on the rise. With more students crowding the Palouse, the cost of higher education and living is rising. But, it looks as if our president is trying to help financial aid catch up with those costs.

Not, however, without some stumbling blocks.

In a time when our nation's leaders insist on education for the youth, the GOP still refuses to increase the amount of aid for students. Clinton's original policy act sought about $9.5 billion for a five-year program, but Republican opposition slashed it down in their usual can't-spend-more-tax-money-on-stupid-social-programs idiocy. Now the program is planned to run only three years, with a budget that allows for a total of 47,000 participants in the third year.

Don't our elected policy makers realize more and more students are avoiding college or dropping out because of costs? Do they understand not only do students take out tens of thousands of dollars in loans, that they work part time jobs to pay for bills and groceries?

Well, if the New Right doesn't see it, at least our president does.

Three cheers for Greeks going cold turkey with new alcohol policies

The Way It Is Shari Ireton

Three cheers for the University of Idaho Greek system.

Yes, cheers, not jeers, for the three fraternities who are strengthening their alcohol policies. Alpha Kappa Lambda, Phi Tau Kappa and Tau Kappa Epsilon have all taken steps to try and tighten up their alcohol policies.

It's just too bad these changes had to be made after State Board officials have already nailed UI students to the cross. We've always had the reputation as a party college, but this is a little ridiculous. The latest problems with alcohol on campus may lead to an infringement of our student rights.

On one hand, it's about time UI Greeks cleaned up their act. The following night after Regena Coghlan's accident you could hear the wild parties taking place all over campus. Last year, several stories of attempted date rape and assault stemmed from on campus parties where heavy drinking was taking place. Parties raged on campus after three Kappa Sigmas died. Parties raged after a Beta Theta Pi fell off of his house.

But after this latest incident, the subject is getting to be a sensitive one.

With little or no prior knowledge of the past few week's incidents, a man from the Canadian Press Wire Service was visiting the UI campus. Commenting on the large number of fraternities and sororities, he said, "I expected to see John Belushi flying out of a window." His statement hit closer to home than he realized.

On the other hand, is it fair to point the finger at an entire campus because of one individual's actions? Threats such as Joe Parkinson's suggestion to bankrupt Greek houses so the university can purchase them and turn them into residence halls may be ridiculous, but it scares the hell out of me.

If the members of the Board are thinking about such actions as an alcohol ban, who knows what other sanctions are going through their scheming little minds. After years of hard work to give students rights, they may just decide to set the clock back 50 years.

As with all changes, I've already heard complaints about the fraternities' actions. Some are complaining they won't be able to have parties anymore (usually someone not from the three hous-

Man-In-Infinite-Rut, or 'MIIR': A true reflection of our ancestry

It's a yearning, a compelling drive no male can resist, and it goes by the name of Competition. You see it every day. It's in the media, on the field, around the corner hiding within every man like a symbiotic worm.

It all started long ago when hair still grew all the way down the back of our necks and our mono-eyebrow shaded our sunken eyes from the glare of the rising sun. The rules were simpler then.

The biggest guy with the most testosterone clubbed everyone else into submission and kept the gene pool strong. When the fittest proclaimed his superiority, the best of man was transported down the evolutionary line, which leads us more or less directly to modern man.

Today the rules are more complex and the game requires subtle nuances of pursuit and evasion thick-skulled mono-brows couldn't fathom. True glory in competition has been hobbled by a weakening thing called civilization, and men are often confused and overwhelmed by the new methods involved in achieving prowess.

Coming Up For Air Chris Miller

Now modern man must turn to other wild diversions to proclaim his superiority and maintain his position in this weeding-out process. I call him "Man-In-Infinite-Rut."

Like a bull elk in perpetual autumn, MIIR must continually quest for something to be superior in to attract females and gain respect from other MIIRs, whether it's a little one-on-one basketball or vicarious football or trumpeting the biggest belch.

Simple sports requiring brute force or fast-twitch muscle fibers relate most directly to our mono-brow ancestors.

New admission standards unfair to Idahoans

It is inherently unfair to deny Idaho citizens — whose parents and great-grandparents have paid state taxes to support Idaho education — access to their state universities.

Admission is already much harder than it was when I entered the university in 1982. My entrance would not have been jeopardized, but those of many of my classmates would have been. Some of them finished; some did not.

But at least then, all Idaho high school graduates had a chance.

Let the still higher admissions standards apply to those taking places which should be available first to those whose families have supported this and other state institutions for generations.

Letters to the Editor

Why are all children's problems blamed solely on the Mother?

I have often read things in the Argonaut which I disagree with, but I have not felt compelled to write until reading Valorie Stricklin's Sept. 21 column "The Right Way." It's no wonder that it is still so hard for women to succeed in the workplace when there are, of all people, young female college students with attitudes like these.

Isn't it equally important for children to bond with their fathers? Isn't it terrible that a father might miss his child's first smile, or first step? Why is all the "damage done to our children" still solely blamed on the mother?

I am not revolting against men or the kitchen, but I still believe that women should receive equal opportunities and equal pay in the workplace.

When I graduate, it is very likely that the job I obtain will pay a higher salary than the job my husband holds. The field that he is in is not notorious for high salaries. If we decide to become a one income family when our children are born, why can't that income be mine?

I must agree with a letter in the same issue written by Meyla Bianco. Thanks to Val Stricklin for continuing to "enlighten" and entertain the rest of us.

And through civilization, MIIR has been forced to learn to release tension in a way that doesn't always leave his weaker counterpart without important elements of his body intact.

He issues his challenge by bugling more or less the same thing, depending on the tightness of his jeans. Tight-jeaned guys are more direct in the issuing of their challenge—they are acutely aware of the pressure of the evolutionary need to be on top or face loneliness.

"Betcha I can wup your butt at arm-wrestling, you skinny-armed mama's boy," is a prime example of a tight-jeaned MIIR's challenge.

When they win, they run around spouting a new title such as "I am the Huge Defender!" or for our less imaginative counterparts, simply, "I'm the Winner!" And since men have no colorful feathers to raise, a little dance designed to attract females usually follows.

Loose-jeaned MIIRs, on the other hand, still feel the need to compete, though due to nature's natural selection they do not stoop to the tight-jeaned MIIR's level, and so must invent new games to gain prestige among his less-fit peers.

Here is where contests like non-contact sports, video games, and pizza-eating contests come in. Wagers on the outcome of tight-jeaned MIIRs' competitions are used to pump up the prestige of the weaker MIIRs who look to impress their peers with a little-understood and rarely recognized attribute called superior knowledge. Loose-jeaned MIIRs rarely shout, and never dance, but sometimes have been known to pump a fist or two in clumsy gyrations.

When a man wears both kinds of jeans, he is called the All-American Male. He's the MIIR who, perpetually infected by the rut, challenges all with both the big and little things.

He races and chases, fights and bites, and is inspired to do a dance and shout about his superiority after he wins a Betcha-I-can-keep-from-biting-the-center-of-a-Tootsie-Pop-before-you-do contest.

Men have no more control over their competitive instinct than a baby cow has over its need to suckle from its mother's breast.

And so men search continually for new challenges, new video games and new toys that will give them advantages over their competition.

It's uncontrollable, perfectly natural, and has everything to do with testosterone and genes.

CHEERS

es). I say to them "Party at a bar." If you need alcohol that desperately, then you need to seek counseling or professional help. No one needs alcohol, especially to have a good time.

As a result of the proposed ban and individual houses taking action, the Greeks are banning together for support. But we're at a point where all students need to ban together.

If, God forbid, a policy such as the one proposed by Parkinson is passed, it will not just affect fraternities and sororities, but all Idaho students. The Idaho law which allows anyone of 21 years or older to consume alcohol may not apply to Idaho college students anymore.

This frightening thought has led to not so subtle hints from all different sides to drastically change the existing standards.

My advice to all student organizations, not just fraternities, is this: Don't let them push you around because of some over-exaggerated knee-jerk reaction in our state capital. Make policies and rules because you want to, not because you feel you have to.

Don't help them take away your rights, but if you feel there is a problem to be addressed, take care of it.

What's happening with fashion?

Lisa French in fashion merchandising wears her flannel top which used to be "street" fashion but now is main stream.

Campus fashion reflects trends

Tim Schreiner

Staff Writer

What's the latest in fashion? For women, individual style is the key, and for men, look to the basic elements of earth, wind, fire and water.

So according to the fashion industry, what does all of this mean? Jarma Jacobs, of Jay Jacobs in the Palouse Empire Mall, said "Last season was kind of scary with bell-bottoms and mid-riff blouses, the scary thing is that they sold so well." Jacobs said "Vests are hip, very hip, for men and women both," and she said it's now popular to wear "not so much the huge, huge stuff, but still relaxed."

According to a recent Spokesman-Review article, "The Season of Choices," "women are more confident and that means everyone is expressing an individual style. They dress the way they are comfortable."

Flannel still fits into the fashion scheme. Heather Storey, of Maurice's, said flannel and colored denim is still popular. She added that flannel is popular all-year-round because "it hasn't really been hot this summer." The word is the grunge look hasn't burnt out, which goes well with the reliable Northwest weather.

In the business department, Storey said for men "suits are still the standard for business, and long, tight dresses or short dresses for women."

"The two strongest statements for fall are worlds apart," according to the Spokesman-Review article. "At one end of the pole, there are the romantic, feminine fashions epitomized by the equestrian-influenced Edwardian look.

Over 100 voices sing the jazz

Elizabeth Powell

Contributing Writer

Ever try to work with 110 voices doing a new rendition of Patsy Cline's all time favorite 'Crazy,' while trying to get the choir not to sing like Patsy Cline did? Well Dan Bukavich, director of the Jazz Choir, rehearses this every Monday, Wednesday, and Friday when he works with the largest choir in the United States, which boasts approximately 110 voices.

The choir, now in it's 26th year, will begin this 1993-94 season on September 24 at 7:30pm at the Recital Hall at the Lionel Hampton School of Music. They will be performing pieces old and new, and promise to light up the evening with some soulful music-making.

The Jazz Choir was first founded in 1967 by Professor Emeritus Norm Logan, who retired in 1981. He worked for the University for 30 years, and during his career taught voice and was the conductor of the University Chorus as well as founding the Jazz Choir. Logan is amazed at how large the choir has grown since Bukavich has taken over. "The Jazz Choir wasn't the major jazz medium here on campus, but we prevailed," commented Logan. "I never envisioned the jazz choir would grow to this size. I saw it maybe reaching 30 students, but the choir is so popular. I am truly amazed at the precision, cleanliness, clarity of the voices. It is very exciting."

The choir has received many invitations to sing in cities throughout the United States. Last year, the choir traveled to Montana to perform for the Montana Music Educator Conference, a prestigious honor for the choir, which was once only 17 voices. This year, the president of the United States extended an invitation to the choir to sing at the Music Educators National Conference in Cincinnati, Ohio.

"It is a challenge to run a rehearsal with this many voices in the room," Bukavich admits, "but we can use a great variety of styles in the large group; we are making choral music using popular song material—sometimes a tough job."

"Patchwork" to debut

"Patchwork," a play written by University of Idaho graduate Ariana Burns, will open tonight at the St. Mary's Catholic Church's family center at 7 p.m.

The play is a drama that looks at the agony of one family when a member contracts AIDS.

"Patchwork" was commissioned by the Palouse AIDS Network as part of AIDS education.

The cast includes actors from all over the Palouse region including a 17 year old senior at Moscow High School, Joshua Lifton. Lifton is the son of a faculty member of the UI, Alan Lifton.

Two performers that were a part of the original production of Alvin W. Berg, Paige Marie Tracy and Joshua Lifton rehearse.

"Patchwork" will return again. Meg Gibson will once again play the comic, and Alvin W. Berg will play the role of "Curtis."

The rest of the cast includes

Sandy Lambacher as the "Old Woman," Joe Probasco who is also cast in the show, and Paige Marie Tracy, and will play "Gwen."

Coop turns 20

The Moscow Food Coop celebrated its 20 year anniversary with a colorful parking lot party last Saturday, complete with food, music, face painting and raffle prizes.

Tabitha Simmons extolled the virtues of Flourgirls organic flour, from Unifine Milling Company in Pullman. "Flourgirls is unique; instead of grinding wheat, the wheat is dropped on a high speed turbine and it implodes." The result, said Simmons is a finer structure of flour with no rancidity and more nutrition.

"We're the only buckwheat grower in the area, and the only mill with a dehuller," explained Mary Meacham of Meacham Mills in Clarkston as she dolled out samples of cornbread and buckwheat pancakes. Dehulling the buckwheat produces lighter flour, she added. The Coop presented samples such as organic garlic salsa, corn chips, Paradise Farms falafel, and a Southwest black bean salad made in the Coop deli.

Skott Larsen, one of the organizers, said that the Coop wanted to do something for the community. "Without the community, we wouldn't be here," she explained.

Later that night, the Center was packed with people boogying to The Cartel, Twist of Fate, Big Time Adam, and Royball.

Striking who?

Halo Dewitt

In the mood for some well-done predictability? Then it's time to see Striking Distance, the latest Bruce Willis movie.

Striking Distance has an action-movie-soap-opera-like predictability. In some ways it is a no brainer, but it makes an attempt not to be one. It is one of those movies where you think you know who-did-it, but you are never quite sure until the end because the plot's main purpose is to make you wonder.

One good thing is that the female character—the only female character to speak of—is not a ditz! She has a brain and she uses it, amazing huh?

There is also some stunning cinematography. Every now and then the camera people make you sit back in your seat in awe.

The body count could be added on two hands (give or take or couple) but the action was spectacular just the same. Amazing!

Bruce Willis does not necessarily "make" the movie, but when he goes limp someone else is always there to pick up the slack for him. He is also not the only big name in this flick. Almost all of the actors in the movie seem to have been type-cast. The uncle cop has been a cop in most of his recognizable roles. Above and beyond the type-casting, Willis' lack of something, and the predictability, it is a very good film to see anytime. Don't wait to see it on video! It is one of those movies that is best seen in the theater.

Alaska climbing dangerous, fun

Katé Lyons-Holestine
Sports Editor

Spending 18 days in the same itchy, smelly clothing would be unthinkable to some. But to four University of Idaho students it was the best time of their lives.

John and Tom Rust, Amy McGeachin and Rob Haggart embarked upon a journey few would attempt.

The planning took months and the preparation took years, but Denali, more commonly known as Mount McKinley, loomed in the distance as a goal to all four climbers.

"It's impossible to express the feeling, to help someone grasp the experience. The mountains are huge, it just blows you away," T. Rust said.

"It was definitely an amazing experience," McGeachin said.

Preparation for the trip took at least one year. The climbers had to register with the park service, raise money for travel and food costs, plan the climb and make sure they had the proper equipment.

An Alaskan bush pilot took the climbers to base camp on the Kahiltna Glaciers, North of Anchorage. They then began an 18 day climb and descent of the largest mountain in North America.

Then the only thing ahead of them was their assault of the mountain. Many problems arose. They had to pack everything necessary for survival on their backs or on sleds they pulled.

"Amy was easily carrying her body weight all the way up," J. Rust said.

Each person carried a 70 to 80 pound pack on his/her back and pulled a 100 pound sled. Tipping sleds was a daily dilemma.

"It took us three to four days to find the most efficient way to carry it all," J. Rust said.

On the climb, they witnessed many avalanches. Snow breaking away burying climbers is a danger on Denali, and any other mountain.

"The powder burst just kept getting closer and closer to us and the noise was unbelievable. But, I finally saw an avalanche," McGeachin said.

"Avalanches were just ripping on both sides of us and we could feel the snow dust," J. Rust said.

Avalanches, freezing weather and crevasses were only a few of the problems the climbers encountered.

"You get sick of the food day after day," J. Rust said.

"That was our biggest mistake, not enough variety," T. Rust said.

At 16,000 feet a storm hit, the climbers had to find shelter. Luckily they found an ice cave and spent a sleepless night there.

"The ice cave was a point where as a climber you say to yourself why am I here and why am I doing this," Haggart said. "You're tired and cold, freezing your butt off in a cave."

"We stayed with a Romanian and a Holland guy who were climbing independently," McGeachin said.

Summiting, the climbers met a team from Washington State University and simultaneously summited with them on May 29, 1993.

"The view is just grand. The mountain just drops off from 20,000 to 300 feet," J. Rust said.

The team then traveled 17 hours without stopping to reach the bottom.

Contributed photo
Roped together for safety, Amy McGeachin, Rob Haggart and John Rust climb Motorcycle Hill from 11,000 to 12,000 feet.

"We went all night. I wanted pizza, a beer and civilization," T. Rust said.

As the descent came to a close, the climbers reached Heartbreak Hill, the final two miles. At the bottom of the descent there was a small hill they had to go over before the climb was over.

"It was beautiful. I got real emotional. The mountains just tower over you and I didn't want to leave," McGeachin said.

"This was just the beginning," McGeachin said. "This was very non-technical as far as placing the climbing equipment. But, the objective dangers can kill you at any time. Physically it was the hardest challenge I've ever had."

"This was like a stepping stone," Haggart said. "Being a climber it was part of the maturity process to go through different levels of climbing and learning."

There will be a slide show featuring photos from this trip Nov. 16 at 7 p.m. in the SUB Borah Theatre.

Poaching: festering anachronism or protein starved natives?

A light beam, radiating from a 200,000 candle power spot light pierced the darkness, methodically scanning the remote rape field. In the corner of the field, where black timber met the yellow crop, the light stopped, focusing on a host of luminous, green eyes. Two rifle shots shattered the evening stillness. Two pairs of eyes blinked out.

Several men slipped from a car. The driver continued down the road, looking for any sign of trouble. Before entering the field, one of the men plucked the spent rifle brass from the dirt road. A "night's work" was underway.

The .270 was enough gun to break the necks of two bull elk but not loud enough to wake nearby farmers.

Keeping the barn between the farmhouse and the rifle shots helped muffle the report.

The trio jumped the fence, careful not to snag any clothing on the rusty barbed wire. In the field, they walked on hard ground, taking pain not to step in mud.

Once, someone who used to poach left a boot print near a gut pile. A sheriff photographed the print and on a hunch, matched the photo to custom made boots. Because of this, the thieves wore a popular hunting boot impossible to distinguish from a thousand other treads. Getting rid of evidence was an important part of their job description. The thieves were smart.

Everything was done without light. Efficient poachers learn to work as well in dark as daylight. But tonight's "work" was not difficult. Tonight's work was strictly what they called a "horn hunt." It was six weeks before any legal hunting season and they had freezer full of illegal game. One thief scanned the horizon with binoculars while the other two sawed antlers from skulls.

They left the field carrying only the beautiful, mahogany antlers. 1,400 pounds of prime elk meat would rot in the late summer heat before sun up.

The thieves moved quickly through the timber bordering the field.

In the mile of timber between the killing field and the pick up point, they froze several times. All false alarms. But their philosophy was that a dozen false alarms was better than being negligent and getting caught.

Nearing the predetermined pick-up point, the thieves were even more cautious. The experienced thief was moving 50 yards ahead of the antler and gun carrying thieves.

When on point, it paid not to have any equipment or illegal game in possession. If suddenly confronted, the thief on point would proclaim he was lost while target shooting; giving the two behind time to meld into cover.

At the road, they listened for two way radio transmissions. Two cars passed by. Finally, a well dressed woman (one of the poacher's wives) pulled up in a non-descript vehicle. They could tell it was her because a small flashlight was placed on the dashboard. The thieves left the antlers just inside the woods. It would not be wise to take them out tonight. The car slowed quickly and they all jumped in. The guns went into boxes and were locked in the trunk. This was not the vehicle they killed the elk from. They began to relax. They would not hit this area for another year.

The elk horns were worth much more mounted on a good cape and sold to a wealthy executive in a large, western city. The exec wanted a nice elk head on the wall but didn't want to bother with actually traveling to Idaho and hiking those God-awful hills for an elk. Hopefully, this time, their "work" wouldn't show up on the front page of the local paper again. People in Latah County would love to see them raked over the coals in court. Citizens Against Poaching had already put two of his poaching buddies out of business. As the car sped down the highway, the thief began to worry.

Note: If you have any information about any poaching activity (particularly the three bulls killed for their antlers and left to rot near Moscow last week), call the Citizens Against Poaching hotline at 1-800-632-5999.

Learn to swim classes offered

Katé Lyons-Holestine

Sports Editor

The University of Idaho Swim Program is offering learn to swim classes for people of all ages.

The Water Babies class is for infants over three months and under a year old. One parent must accompany the baby in the water and the class is designed to orient the baby to the water.

Classes for children from the ages of 13 months to preschool age are offered at varying ability levels.

Children over six years of age and 4-foot tall have another collection of classes to choose from. Children with no previous swimming experience and children with advanced swimming abilities will find the correct class.

The adult's program offers beginning and intermediate evening classes for teens and adults. These classes are designed to develop confidence in the water and build stroke development.

In addition to the basic learn to swim program, the UI Swim Center offers many other classes for many different interests.

Water aerobics, swim fitness, scuba, emergency water safety and lifeguard training all return to the regular list of classes offered. New classes this fall are being offered for seniors who are interesting in developing swim skills and a for children with disabilities who need constant attention.

Class sessions began Sept. 13 and the final session begins Oct. 29. All classes are held in the UI Swim Center and range in price from $25 to $70 per class.

To obtain more information contact the UI Swim Center at 885-6381.

Backup QB instrumental in UI success

Andrew Longetoig

Staff Writer

O.K. Vandal fans, picture this scenario. Doug Nussmeier runs in for a touchdown and simultaneously attempts to hurdle the crossbars overtaken with excitement.

Nussmeier, unfortunately leaps only nine feet in the air, catching his shin, ultimately flipping himself over, causing a serious left pinky injury.

"Oh, darn it," the crowd moans as Nuss is carried off the playing field. "Who will play quarterback now?" the fans ponder.

Suddenly alerted, a 6-ft-2-1/2-in. 195-pound quarterback begins to warm up. This virtually unknown backup Vandal quarterback for the past two seasons is sophomore Eric Hisaw.

In addition to being University of Idaho's emergency quarterback, Hisaw performs the long snapping duties, and is the placeholder for kicker Mike Hollis.

Hisaw was raised in the nearby town of Cheney, Wash. Logically, Eastern Washington recruited him, as well as Montana State, Montana and quarterback-starved Boise State. But why attend the friendly confines of the UI?

"The winning tradition — the family atmosphere it has up here," responds Hisaw. "Everything is done for the team. And I also want a couple more rings before I get out of here."

While also competing in football, last year Hisaw ran the 55m hurdles for the track team.

When one thinks of a long snapper, the general consensus is often the chunky 6'2" 260 pounder, sporting his warrior eye black, with a somewhat bulging (and noticeable) stomach region. When Hisaw is among the offensive linemen in punt formation, he's as out of place as dijon mustard on a peanut butter and jelly sandwich.

"One day coach said, 'Hisaw, give me a snap.' I've been stuck with it ever since," he said.

This apparent malfunction is actually a Vandal tradition. Before Hisaw, quarterback Pat West, who backed up both Nussmeier and John Friesz, performed the duty, with pride nonetheless.

As the possible starter for next year, Hisaw will be breaking the mold of past Vandal passers. His predecessors, Nussmeier, Friesz, Scott Linchan and Ken Hobart all started either as freshmen or sophomores. Hisaw will be picking gray strands from his short blond hair as he enters the world of juniors.

"Hopefully, I'll go into spring ball number one. I've got a lot of work cut out for me. I have to earn it — it's not going to be given to me. I've learned a lot from Nussmeier. He's been a great friend and has helped my game considerably," Hisaw said.

The two other quarterbacks competing for the starting nod are freshmen Greg Johnson and Brian Brennan.

In comparison to last year, Hisaw explains, "As a player, I'm a lot more confident with my ability. I'm stronger and have more chances to prove myself."

Ryan Slaton, No. 5 on the University of Idaho tennis team, takes practice seriously.

UI ski team starting early

Despite the absence of snow, the University of Idaho ski club is starting practice now.

Like other non-varsity club sports at the UI, the ski team is not funded by the ASUI. Limited funds are available to the team from the ASUI Recreation Advisory Board.

Skiing is a very expensive sport and the participants are responsible for all food, equipment, travel costs and clothing needed.

"All our races are in Western Washington or British Columbia," UI ski club director Dave Gray said. "Every weekend we're in our cars driving somewhere new."

Races are sanctioned by the United States Collegiate Ski

Association. The UI club competes against teams from Eastern Washington, University of Washington, Simon Frazier and Pacific University.

"Most of those schools have fully funded ski programs and full scholarships for skiing like some schools do for football," Gray said.

The team competes in three regular season events and then must qualify for conference and regional contests.

The No. 1 seed for the men returns this fall. Mark Wedeking will compete for a second year for the UI. Nikki Nielson and Angela Coleman return as strong contenders for the women's team.

Presently he wishes to "become more accurate and stronger."

"My reads are getting better. I'm always learning so there's always something to work on everyday," he said.

Despite football, Hisaw has a 2.85 GPA and will major in physical education or sports science.

"I'd love to be playing professionally, but there's only so many that make it. I really like the idea of coaching and teaching and working with kids," he said.

Hisaw has simple and unselfish aspirations.

"Personal goals aren't really important. We have goals as an offense, not as an individual. I really want to bring home a national championship if the opportunity arises," he said.

Hisaw has been playing football since seventh grade. He loves outdoors, especially water skiing.

The Vandals appear to be well on their way to a conference title. However, Hisaw says EWU, Montana, and even Boise State will give the Vandals a run for their money.

"Everybody in the Big Sky has greatly improved over the past two years," he said.

Who in their right mind would want to live up to the expectations of previous Vandal greats?

Hisaw says, "There's an incredible amount of room to fill. I think the pressure is not to be the next great quarterback at Idaho, but to continue the winning tradition."

Dual-sport student athlete still has time for important things

Katé Lyons-Holestine

Sports Editor

She admits to not being able to play tennis, but her natural athletic ability has led to two Big Sky Conference Championship titles.

Jessica Puckett holds titles in both a team and an individual sporting event.

Last spring, she managed to throw a javelin farther than any other competitor in the Big Sky and wrapped up a championship. Last fall, with the rest of the University of Idaho volleyball team, she fought through the Big Sky ranks and claimed the volleyball title.

"When I won the javelin, it wasn't as much of a big deal," Puckett said. "There was no one there to share it with."

Team unity is important to Puckett, who has competed in sports since early childhood. She grew up in Gresham, Oregon and attended Mount Hood Christian High School.

"Oregon is my favorite place to be," Puckett said, "it's beautiful there."

As a senior in high school, her volleyball team wrapped up the State B League Championship in 1989. From there she came directly to the UI with the help of head volleyball coach Tom Hilbert.

"Tom is an excellent skills coach," Puckett said. "Academics are stressed. He's real intense and that clashes with some personalities but I've learned to take his intensity and put it into my performance."

At the opening of the 1990 Big Sky Conference volleyball season Puckett was a starter for the UI.

"I came in, I thought I was really cool," Puckett remembers. "I hit the ball as hard as I could, as many times as I could. I was a cocky little snot."

All this hitting led to an injury.

"There were no overhead activities for four weeks for me, I became a back row specialist," Puckett said.

At that time, the Argonaut published a feature article on Puckett.

"Right after that he benched me," she said laughing.

During her sophomore year, Puckett turned out for the track team in hopes of obtaining a fifth year scholarship after her volleyball eligibility ran out.

"My hopes were reaffirmed. Scott (Lorek) is giving me a track scholarship," Puckett said.

Because of the size of her legs, the track coaches wanted her to throw the shot also.

Puckett blames the size of her legs on speed skating when younger.

"My legs are huge, but it's a cross I'll have to bear," she said.

"They thought since my quads are so huge I'd be good, but I'm not," Puckett explained.

Puckett is currently pursuing a degree in graphic design and carries a 3.5 cumulative GPA.

"If anyone were to come to me and say 'I'm going to play volleyball and be an art major' I'd say 'you're crazy.'"

When the team travels, they are given study time. Puckett claims art majors have different needs.

"Books you can take with you, but for art you need your whole studio," Puckett said.

Many students and instructors think student athletes have an easier time getting out of homework and classes. Puckett challenges this common belief.

"I used to think I had to do everything to make people like me, but I found out that's not what's important," Puckett said. "Family, friends and a relationship with God are what's important."
