PETA documents animal research

Natalie Shapiro
Staff Writer

Graphic films of animal experimentation were shown to an audience of about 100 in the University of Idaho Law School Courtroom Monday night.

"Animals are not objects; they aren't a means to an end," said Kathy Snow Guillermo, Education Coordinator for People for the Ethical Treatment of Animals.

Guillermo wrote Monkey Business: The Disturbing Case That Launched the Animal Rights Movement, which chronicles and documents the Silver Spring, Md. monkey case.

In 1981, Alex Pacheco, a PETA member, took a job in the Institute for Behavioral Research lab in Maryland to see what went on in research labs.

Edward Taub, a researcher at IBR, studied monkeys who had undergone a procedure called "dorsal rhizotomy." Here, explained Guillermo, the nerve connecting the monkey's arm to his brain was snipped, cutting off feeling to that limb. Taub then tried to force the monkey to use the limb through electric shock and food deprivation.

"Alex found filth he didn't imagine would be allowed," said Guillermo. "There were 17 monkeys in cages less than two feet wide each."

"From the stress of confinement, the monkeys mutilated their deadened limbs and there were no medicines provided for this," said Guillermo.

One night, Pacheco brought in a group of people, including a primate researcher and a medical researcher, to observe what he saw. This exposed the lab, said Guillermo, leading to a police raid, and severing of Taub's funding from the National Institutes of Health.

"The reaction of the research community was to defend anything done to animals," said Guillermo.

Guillermo showed part of a videotape of the IBR lab taped and narrated by Pacheco. "...his hands are reduced to a bloody stump ... the bandage is rotting," said Pacheco of one monkey.

Guillermo also showed a film about research in a head trauma lab. The film documented a hydraulic device slamming into the head of a baboon squirming against restraining straps, its head encased in cement.

"This simulates an auto crash," explained the narrator. "The baboon was given PCP, which isn't an anesthesia."

Guillermo said the Health and Human Services director pulled the project's funding within 15 minutes of watching the film.

In another film of an infectious disease research lab, a primate infected with hepatitis was kept in an iron cage, in solitary confinement for years.

Today last day to register to vote in election

Tim Holmke
Staff Writer

Let your voice be heard, register to vote. Today is the last day to register to vote for the Nov. 2, 1993 election. Students interested in registering to vote here in Latah County have until 8:00 p.m. tonight. Students need to go to either the Auditor's Office at the Latah County Courthouse or to Moscow City Hall.

To register, students need to bring some sort of proof that they have lived in Latah

County since at least Oct. 2. This proof can be such items as a driver's license with a county address, a piece of mail with a physical address on it (not a post office box) or any other forms which could verify their residency in Latah County.

City Hall and the Auditor's Office open at 8:30 a.m. and will remain open later than usual office hours to allow students and other county residents more time to register. Students need to be sure to have their proof with them to verify county residency.

If a student is registered to vote in their home county, they can go ahead and register here in Latah County. These students then can only vote in one county, not both.

Three University of Idaho students are running for city council seats in the Nov. 2 election. Moscow residents will also be voting on mayoral candidates as well. If students have any questions about registering to vote, they can either call the Auditor's Office at 882-8580 or Moscow City Hall at 882-5553.

Vandal breaks into ASUI offices

Gregory H. Burton
Staff Writer

A burglar with a key and an attitude vandalized the ASUI Senate office Wednesday morning.

The vandal overturned a chair, reversed posters on the wall and destroyed a calendar sometime between midnight and 7 a.m.

Allison Lindholm, Senate Protém, had the pictures and posters in her office turned upside-down, and senator John Marble had his desk messed up.

A note left on senator Sean Wilson's desk read in part, "... Homosex, you like it in the a--."

"I'm in no way a homosexual," said Wilson, whose calendar was torn apart with what appeared to be a pen.

Office secretary Cathie Alonzo said she noticed the overturned chair when she came to work at 6:50 a.m., and Wilson noticed his calendar and the note when he came into the office later.

"It could have been somebody around here," said Alonzo, "but I just can't imagine. The office is locked and usually the front office lights are left on. This morning all the lights had been turned off."

Michael Riekema and Travis Hertel were stopped by police, who received reports of gunfire by the SUB. The pair was found to be in

"This one went mad," stated the narrator, "The only noise he heard was the hum of the mechanism pumping in air."

Guillermo said it's difficult to tell if the Silver Springs case was typical of research labs, as PETA hears about abuses from people working in labs.

"We need to find other ways to do things," said Guillermo of research.

Most audience questions challenged Guillermo's viewpoint that animals shouldn't be used in experiments or for food or clothing.

Dr. Robert Speth, a biomedical researcher at Washington State University's veterinary school, later said there was no tangible evidence there was torture going on in the IBR lab.

"I want someone objective looking at that film," he said. "She (Guillermo) isn't objective." Regarding the experimentation on the baboons, Speth said "As unpleasant as it is, look at the alternative—someone spending the rest of their life in a wheelchair."

Moscow City Council Elections

Peterson offers urban planning

Pamela Peterson believes her urban planning background makes her an ideal candidate for the Moscow City Council.

Peterson received her undergraduate degree in urban planning and her master's degree from the University of Idaho in a home economics independent study in historic preservation. She's also served as a City Planning staff member in two cities and a County Planner for Whitman County, Wash.

Pamela Peterson

Regarding growth issues in Moscow, Peterson said there needs to be more affordable housing.

"There's not enough affordable housing in Moscow. We need to take care of the needs of those who live here first before jumping in and getting more in," Peterson said.

She opposes a flat development fee for residential construction. She said developers could be given an incentive to build affordable housing by allowing them to exceed their housing density if they build a certain percentage of affordable housing.

"We need to entice developers to give Moscow what it needs," Peterson added she was a founder of Habitat for Humanity and is their board president.

Peterson supports a bicycle Greenbelt along Paradise Creek.

"It works in Yakima and Lewiston why not here?" Peterson said. "Bike paths would encourage people to use bikes." She also supports an education program for bicyclists regarding bicycle rules and safety.

Concerning pollution, Peterson said Paradise Creek water is cleaner after it passes by the waste treatment plant than before. She considers the pollution to be a problem, but currently has no ideas on solving it.

Peterson supports a curbside recycling program.

"Currently, the Revolutionary Curbside Recyclers are picking up my stuff; I like the convenience."

Peterson said the time isn't right for a bus system within Moscow, as it isn't cost-effective due to lack of ridership. She added a bus system needs to be subsidized by the community.

"In Moscow, it would be more practical to do things about bicycles," she said. Peterson supports the current Moscow-Pullman transit system.

Transportation issue for Hodge

Larry Hodge contends City Council is not a part-time job.

"You need to be in the position to put in that amount of time, as well as to be an effective listener," Hodge is running again for City Council.

Larry Hodge

Hodge said one way to plan for Moscow's growth is to address transportation issues.

"We need to develop a regional transportation plan to address traffic coming in from Troy, Potlatch, etc. and traffic moving through town," he said. Widening Highway 8 to the Washington line would solve many problems, he added.

"People from Pullman would come in with four lanes of traffic and there would be areas to peel off," he said.

Additionally, Hodge opposes removing trees to widen Third Street. As far as addressing Moscow's growth issues, he said the economic base should be expanded beyond the University of Idaho or agriculture.

"We need smaller businesses to come in—those with 10-20 employees that could develop a more stable economic base."

A member of the Sixth Street Pedestrian Path Committee, Hodge wants to improve bike paths in Moscow. However, he opposes elimination of the current bike path on Sixth Street to make bike lanes in the street run both directions.

"I'm concerned about little kids riding in the street," said Hodge.

Regarding a curbside recycling program, Hodge believes the new recycling center on Jackson Street should be tried first.

"Education and the new facility should make a big difference, so I'm not in favor of curbside recycling yet."

Hodge wants a landfill in Latah County.

"Transporting waste miles away is ridiculous." He said a waste transfer station is necessary for the short term. Hodge also supports volume-based garbage fees.

Hodge is pleased with the commuter system between Moscow and Pullman.

"There is room for a bus system in Moscow. There is value in a commuter system on the campus itself."

UI grad student runs for council

Jeff Almeida, a University of Idaho graduate student in mathematics, is running for City Council, partly to integrate student input into the community.

Almeida said his experience as the vice president of the Graduate and Professional Students' Association helps him understand community issues.

"I'm involved with GPSA to help students. I found that the issues adversely impacting students were community issues,"

Jeff Almeida

Almeida said.

The two biggest issues Almeida said are important to students are housing and jobs.

"I aggressively promote new industries in the area, such as electronics and plastics, two stable and high growth industries." He said tax breaks are the best way to give developers incentives to build new apartments.

Almeida would like to see Highway 8 bypassed to south of Moscow, and linked with Palouse River Drive as a major thoroughfare. In addition, he said Moscow needs a more effective intra-city transportation system. He added both Moscow and Pullman should subsidize the inter-city commuter system.

"Then it could run longer hours, like until 3 a.m. It's the best way to cut down on drunken driving," he explained.

Although not a bicyclist himself, Almeida sees a need to promote bicycle use in Moscow.

"We need to be wary of bikes on the same thoroughfare as pedestrians," he warned. "Bikes should be on the road. We need to promote them as vehicles." Almeida supports more bicycle paths in Moscow.

Almeida also supports curbside recycling in Moscow.

"Our landfill costs are increasing," he explained.

Almeida also supports a volume-based garbage fee.

"We shouldn't sock people with a lot of money who don't produce a lot of garbage." Almeida said a waste-to-energy plant would be a good way to solve solid waste problems.

Almeida said some of his strengths are he is methodical, persistent and a logical leader.

"I know what works. I've seen what hasn't worked."

Costa Rican couple brings perspective to the Palouse

Gregory-H. Burton
Staff Writer

Nestled perilously between two of the most tumultuous countries in Central America rests a tropical paradise with a history of democracy rivaling any in the world.

With a democratic tradition nearly unbroken in 150 years, Costa Rica has come to epitomize peace and justice in the southern hemisphere. It is a country about the size of West Virginia, with more than three million people, bordered by two oceans and squeezed between Panama and Nicaragua.

As husband and wife, José Courrau and Nidia Durán have come to Moscow as emissaries of these three million.

Courrau is a Fulbright Scholar working on a master's degree in Resource Recreation and Tourism at the University of Idaho College of Forestry Wildlife and Range Sciences. Durán is on a leave of absence from the Costa Rican Biological Documentary Center.

"Family is really important in Costa Rica and we believe in the individual," said Courrau. "That is why women do not change their name when they get married."

Like many other international students, Courrau and Durán bring a fresh perspective on politics to the Palouse. And unlike most Americans, meals are followed by conversation, not television.

"Most of the students do not have a good understanding of the U.S. involvement in Central America," said Courrau. "In Nicaragua, the United States promised to ease the transition for the Violetta Chamorro government, but they are not helping."

"The Contras burned crops and destroyed much of the industry, and now Nicaragua has become the second poorest country in Central America, after Haiti."

The Contras, funded by — among other things — U.S. arms sales to Iran, still roam the country preaching opposition to the new administration.

"Some people will complain about everything and never be satisfied, like the Contras," said Courrau. "Our country has not had a good history with Nicaragua. The former dictator, Somoza, once threatened to bomb San José (the capital city), and now we have about a quarter of a million Nicaraguan refugees."

Costa Rica's democratic history has been broken only three times, the last time in 1948 after a brief conflict. In 1949 a new constitution was drafted and the army was permanently disbanded. To this day the government remains uninterfering.

The current president is Rafael Angel Calderón, who replaced Nobel Peace Prize recipient Oscar Arias Sanchez in 1990.

While the National Liberation Party and the Social Christian Unity Party are the most populous parties, an average of 10 parties participate in Costa Rica's multi-party elections, held every four years.

"It is a tradition of the people to elect a different party every other period," said Courrau, "and each of our presidents must wait three periods before they can be elected again. So far it has never happened."

When the army disbanded in 1948, the government tried to organize a police force to monitor internal problems, but until recently they were undertrained.

"I can remember in the 1970s they carried only a screwdriver," said Courrau. "When the police stopped a car for a violation, they would unscrew the license plate and take it to the station with them. It was pretty funny, but now they are much better."

But when the humor subsides it is the international perspective brought by Courrau and Durán that is the most poignant.

"Our countries rely on the cattle business, and coffee and bananas, and when Americans decide not to eat beef we are affected," said Courrau. "Do you know who is eating most of the cows now? It is made into cat and dog food. They are processing more beef than McDonald's and Burger King."

Deforestation has affected Costa Rica, as well as most of Central and South America. In Costa Rica, trees are removed in favor of cattle ranching.

"But we are trying to come to grips with the problem, and there has been political support to find a solution," said Courrau.

Durán said most of the damage was done 500 years ago "with the Columbus invasion."

Costa Rica was once on the trade route between the Maya Indians from what is now Honduras and the Incas who were in what is now Peru. Today natives make up only one percent of the population.

"We are used to a peaceful and beautiful land," said Durán. "The big cities in America are too scary."

"Moscow is very safe though, and in an interesting situation sociologically," said Courrau. "It is in the middle of farmland, but there is a lot of intellectual thinking, and also a past of the conquering West with a native influence. Although it looks really boring and quiet, there are so many influences here."

Including two very good ones from Costa Rica.

PAM PALMER FOR MAYOR

Attention

University of Idaho Students: TODAY is the last day to register for the Nov. 2 city election.

You are eligible to vote if you are a U.S. citizen, 18 or older and a Moscow resident since Oct. 2 or earlier. If you have moved since the last election, you must re-register at your new address. To register go to City Hall, 4th and Washington, or the Latah County Courthouse, 6th and Adams. Both Offices will be open until 8 p.m. tonight for registration.

Vote PALMER for MAYOR

Paid for by Palmer for Moscow Committee, Judi McKetta treasurer.

Registering easier than getting financial aid

Many students complain about the ails of the Moscow community — everything from the cost of gas to the lack of housing.

The funny thing is, many University of Idaho students have not exercised their right to voice these opinions in a way that will turn the heads of government. Many are not registered to vote.

Today is the last day for residents of Moscow to register, for the Nov. 2 elections. There are still quite a few UI students, some fresh out of high school and the rest who don't care, who haven't bothered to perform this little task. Some might think it is a hassle, but it's easier than getting financial aid.

First, a student needs to have some sort of proof they've lived in Latah County since Oct. 2, which could be a driver's license or a piece of mail. With that proof, drive up to the Latah County Courthouse (the parking lot is on the corner of Van Buren and Fifth Streets) or Moscow City Hall (on Washington Street).

To accommodate for busy schedules, both places will be open until 8 p.m. tonight.

If a student has already registered in their home county and voted in the last election, they need to re-register to vote in Latah County.

It is important students register to vote so we can have a voice, too. Every day, Moscow city government officials make decisions which affect our lives. Increasing costs of living, including housing and utilities, can break a poor student's check book. And it's all fine and dandy to sit down and complain about it, but it doesn't do much good.

The best way to make our 10,000 plus voices heard is to vote for the candidates who will make a difference for the campus. With thousands of dollars to spend on the Palouse, it is important local businesses know how the student wants to spend their dollars.

The usual attitude in a non-presidential election year is there is no need to vote. Sometimes elections will pass citizens right on by, until they realize there is a new person in the mayor's office. By then it's too late, and their inalienable right has been thrown out the window.

We of this twenty-something generation, deemed Generation X by the media, should have learned from our parent's mistakes. They believed either someone would make the decisions for them, or protest, sit-in and complain. This may attract a lot of attention, but it is not always the most effective way to make a change.

Moscow students have to avoid those two stereotypes and exercise their right to vote. Many will say "One vote doesn't make a difference," and in a way they are right. A vote doesn't count anymore, because no one votes. In fact, in the 1988 Presidential Elections, more people watched the Super Bowl than voted. What that fact says about the state of our nation is pathetic.

But we at the university are not pathetic. We are intelligent adults who can make decisions for ourselves. All we need to do is let the world know what we want.

Let's bring the point home and register to vote.

'Intellects' really Satan's helpers

Some students just don't know when to shut up. When I was in high school, I always felt like a nerd when I answered a question or brought some insight to the discussion. I always got groovy smiles from my teachers, but always got roughed up in gym class by the drug addicts and football players who were too cool to be smart. OK, I'm exaggerating, but it was hip to be stupid.

So when I left, my peers asking me why I was leaving the country to go to college, I was plenty excited about students actually being interested in class. As I flew out here, I pictured myself wowing the professors with my vast knowledge of the world. OK, I'm exaggerating again, but I was glad to be at a place where people were allowed to ask questions without being a prime cut of nerd meat.

But then I met those kind of students. Yuuuuuck! You know exactly what kind of students I'm talking about. They share their precious little views on everything, whether they know what they are talking about or not. It's even worse if they do, because then they share all their little experiences with the class, even though no one in the class would give an

Advertising is an insidious monster

Is nothing sacred from the insidious and clandestine monster who goes by the name of Advertising?

This creature called Advertising is everywhere — in our own newspaper, on television, radio, coffee mugs, pencils, pens, brochures, coupon books, paper cups, billboards, blimps, buses, benches, boats, trains and planes.

From all facets of America it implores you, me, the impressionable consumer, to buy, buy, buy. It gets inside your head and rearranges your values. It's big, like in billboards that jump out at you and scream their wares. But it's small, too, like a two-by-four-inch advertisement that whispers in all newspapers' ever-present ad stack.

Advertising is also secretive. Hiding in dark nooks and crannies, it subliminally claws its way under our consciousness. Take, for instance, movies. Now, most people assume movies don't prey upon their senses since subliminal popcorn flashes on the movie screen stimulating us to buy more popcorn were outlawed. Now, it's worse.

Remember E.T.? Reportedly, M&M's were supposed to be used to lure E.T. in, but M&M-Mars didn't want to pay for the privilege and Hershey Foods Corp. jumped on it, proclaiming to the world that Reese's Pieces candies were the best alien bait. This has been followed by Teen-age Mutant Ninja Turtles in which a Domino's pizza box was shown, and in Terminator II where a Subway restaurant got the privilege of exploding sandwich guts in front of millions of viewers.

But it doesn't stop there. Remember when you shelled out hundreds of bucks for books earlier this semester and stared at the dwindling numbers in your checkbook? Credit card applications were nonchalantly tossed into your bookstore bag, practically begging you to notice them. And since your checking account had dropped down into the two-figure range, you might have even been happy it was there.

Letters to the Editor

Agreeing to disagree agreeably

I'll bet a lot of people are getting pretty sick of hearing Ralph Nielsen whining and complaining about the Bible. Since, in his Oct. 12 letter, he has declined to debate publicly, and he is hardly in a position to denounce anyone else who may choose not to debate.

Public debates are not often very productive anyway. Trying to get one's point across can seem like beating your head against a wall sometimes. I guess that's how Ralph feels with all these letters he writes. No Ralph, we don't all believe in your view of the Bible. The overwhelming amount of evidence which supports inerrancy is enough to lead some of us to conclude that the comparatively few difficulties that occur can be resolved if they have not been already.

Remember the Hittites and how the liberal critics used to say that they were fiction and the Bible was in error? Well you know how that went after archeological research; the critics with an ax to grind were the ones in error! They used to say Moses could not have written the Pentateuch because people couldn't write that far back? Well, that certainly turned out to be a bunch of double bunk. Well, this sort of debunking higher critical myths has occurred so many times that most of us aren't listening anymore. You're sounding increasingly shrill, Ralph! It's getting old. Misleading little newspaper snippets just don't provide enough space to really do this kind of topic justice.

If you want a harmonization of the resurrection accounts, then consult with J. Cheney's Life of Christ in Stereo, Multnomah Press (you can send Cheney the $1,000, please). Then, recognizing that most of the Biblical accounts of anything are usually just bare outlines which don't provide exhaustive details, you could work at harmonizing the nativity accounts yourself. Be careful, though, not to misconstrue the information provided simply because a number of pieces are missing (you wouldn't do that, would you Ralph?). Oh, and don't get all confused by the fact the New Testament writers often paraphrased quotes and ideas from the Old Testament, everything doesn't have to be verbatim, you know.

I think you're just scraping the bottom of the barrel at this point, Ralph. So let's dispense with all the acrimony, okay? We'll simply agree to disagree agreeably. Otherwise this kind of argument can go on and on ad nauseam.

—Phil Berreth

Try debating by mail

I have a proposal for your newspaper, and for Mr. Ralph Nielsen. In his most recent creed, Ralph said that he declined a public debate with me because he is not a trained speaker, and he prefers the written word. Good.

This, therefore, is my proposal. The Argonaut should publish 500 words from Mr. Nielsen on a debate concerning "the moral necessity of believing in Christianity," Mr. Nielsen (probably) taking the negative. I will respond with 200 words, and Mr. Nielsen will counter with 100 words. I will then make a statement on this topic in 500 words, Mr. Nielsen will respond with 200 words, and I will make a final statement in 100 words.

Now what does the Argonaut get in exchange for this? Well, apart from avid reader interest, Mr. Nielsen and I would both promise not to write into the Argonaut for at least twelve months following the publication of the debate. This would give the readers of the Argonaut a real rest.

And I am sure Mr. Nielsen could use the rest too. Chewing on Christianity's ankle all the time must be exhausting.

—Douglas Wilson

Editor's Note: While 12 months is indeed appealing, the Argonaut declines the offer. The Argonaut politely suggests Wilson and Nielsen resolve their differences through the U.S. Postal Service. Letters will continue to be accepted and printed on a space-available basis.

Bible completely reliable

In response to Ralph Nielsen's Oct. 5 comments: He simply writes another in a long series of tendentious letters which demonstrate that he fails to recognize or understand some basic facts.

1) Based on the available manuscripts, one can clearly demonstrate the transmission of the Biblical text has been astoundingly accurate in comparison to any other ancient writings. 2) With respect to specific content and claims of authorship, one does not necessarily "prove" the inerrancy or errancy of the Bible, either way. It is often a matter of opposing theoretical paradigms. In weighing the currently available evidence, it is possible to come to different conclusions, depending upon the assumptions involved initially.

It should be noted all of the theories ever offered claiming errors in content or specified authorship have been answered with alternative theories of equal or better plausibility. Nielsen, and other liberal critics have proved nothing. They begin with a world view mindset which does not allow for inerrancy in the first place. Any pertinent evidences are then interpretively filtered in order to generate support for the humanistic concept of an errant Bible. There is no reason to be impressed by the endless stream of alleged errors or inaccuracies concocted out of this world view. In truth and in fact, when objectively tested, the Bible has been, and continues to be vindicated on a regular basis. By inductive logic, we may reasonably conclude that as potential uncertainties arise, the Bible should be given the benefit of the doubt. It may be asserted that truly substantive difficulties are only temporary.

As in the past, further research and consideration without the prejudiced assumptions of philosophical naturalism, will time and again show the Bible to be completely reliable.

BUY ME

"Here I am, buy me," it whispers like a seductive mistress.

I would not be surprised to catch a fish someday and find an Idaho Fish & Game tag on it with the inscription, "Funded by Outdoor Outfitters: 'We stock all your needs.'"

Recently, I found a fly swatter. It appeared innocent enough, other than the fact it was a neon pink — never trust anything in neon pink, I always say. On one side there was a neat gold inscription for company's funeral services.

I mean really, who spawned that demented idea? How is this advertisement supposed to target the consumer? Do you kill a fly, and in doing so, remind yourself that 80-year-old Auntie Ida is going to "drop dead like a fly" soon. Handily enough, you then notice the name and number of a funeral service in your hand. Embalming and burial plot sold on the spot. No expensive network air time here.

Advertisement is also annoying. For example, notice those little plastic chrome car dealership stick-ons which promote the car dealership that sold the car. The things are impossible to get off, and if you manage to pry it off, you're left with an ugly gluey smudge.

I suppose this type of advertisement is most effective in that split-second before the front-end of your car embraces the rear-end of another. The driver's eyes focus completely and totally on the dealership logo, storing the information for near future use.

Some producers also team up together to advertise. Take for example, the symbiotic relationship Pepsi and Doritos have developed. Pepsi advertises Doritos during the Halloween season on Pepsi's packages, and vice versa. Pepsi and Doritos really do go well together — I never would have thought about that myself.

Politicians advertise too. Take Sen. Larry Craig, (R-Idaho). He said of a Congressional decision to phase out wool and mohair subsidies, "I'm one of the nation's most frugal legislators, and even I wouldn't allow Congress to terminate..."

Oh gag. In a time of governmental streamlining, Craig is advertising himself. It's a continual process and it's everywhere.

Take a look, open your eyes, Advertising is blatant and at the same time so subtle your eyes just sort of float over it, subliminally taking it all in. We eat it up and spit it out in the form of a simple choice — what to buy.

with kids, and I guess they feel they have more insights to share. But in all fairness, many of these students are your normal, everyday, general-purpose annoyers.

Most professors, unfortunately, are all-too-kind and receptive to these little windbags. I'm still hoping for a teacher who will say either, "That's a stupid question so shut up," or "No one cares about your little personal experiences. Now pipe down." But alas, most of the professors nod their heads and give a look of pseudo-concern. They probably don't want to get fired.

If a prof told a student just how stupid their question really is, they'd catch all hell. These annoying students are the kind who would go whine to the dean of the college. And they were probably the kind of kids who used to cry during recess when they got hit with the kickball.

At best, these students are simply the students we wish would get some stifling sickness which would keep them out of class for the rest of the semester.

At worst though, they impede true learning. When we all plunk down our money to get an education, we come to hear professors talk and hear intelligent questions and points of view, not certain students who blab on about nothing.

I'm certainly not trying to turn the classroom into a class full of stiffs and a frustrated teacher. On the contrary, I ask probably more than my share of questions, and I enjoy hearing students share their opinions and questions. That's what college is all about. It is not about these pizza-heads interrupting the flow of a good class discussion.

Unfortunately, this column probably won't have a smidgen of effect on these people. They don't even realize they're doing it. But on behalf of all us little people not in your intellectual league: Please,

Rush is a jester

Valorie Stricklin's worshipful defense of Rush Limbaugh was sad praise indeed. Her elevation of this media buffoon to the level of prophet worries a sincere progressive like me. Limbaugh, with a long string of failures behind him, finally developed a 'schtick' which has earned him a niche on the public airways.

Entertainment, even when it's crude and predictable in the fashion of a clown, does have its place. Limbaugh's slap-stick style of unbalanced and colorful commentary lies in this vein. Audience size does not confer respectability or legitimacy to pretended abilities, and I fear many in Limbaugh's audience mistake his rude prejudices for reasoned analysis.

In this country, we encourage dissent and criticism of public policy and public figures. Lots of comedians rely on public figures as the source material for their jokes and routines. I believe Stricklin errs in perceiving in Limbaugh anything other than a public jester.

Floyd Cochran used clever speaking abilities last Thursday.

Cochran vows against racism

Halo-DeWitt

Staff Writer

The Christian Identity Movement saves by race not grace, according to Floyd Cochran, former Aryan Nation officer and recruiter who spoke last Thursday at the SUB Borah Theater.

The CIM is a driving force behind racist movements in the United States, such as the Aryan Nation in Hayden Lake and the Ku Klux Klan.

On July 7, 1992, Cochran left the Aryan Nation compound in Hayden Lake after grappling for several months with doubts about the racist movement. Earlier that year Cochran had been told that his son, born with a cleft palate, would be euthanized if the Aryan Nation was in power.

After Cochran, who was the fifth highest ranking person in the Aryan Nation community, kept asking his superiors about his doubts he was told, "Go find something to do, you think too much."

Cochran, a clever, smooth talker, was in charge of recruiting young people into the organization. His job "was to make hate palatable, to make it an extension of mom, dad and apple pie."

Cochran would find out what people's pre-existing fears were, and play off those fears.

The only trick was to agree until they thought he thought the same way they did, and then he could convince them of anything.

One of the biggest mistakes people make about racists, according to Cochran, is assuming they are part of the lunatic fringe. They are not the fools many people believe them to be. More racists have moved to one Montata county than have moved into Hayden Lake. Now they are starting to elect members of the racist movement into political office. "I was ignorant, not illiterate," Cochran added.

Cochran got involved in the racist movement not because of a bad experience with anyone in particular, but because of the small-minded views of the community where he was raised in upstate New York. Cochran did not actually come into contact with a person of color until he was in his twenties. It wasn't that he was taught to hate by anyone; it was more that he wasn't taught not to.

At age ten Cochran read The Rise and the Fall of the Third Reich. In his own words, "I taught myself to hate." He was interested in history and Hitler. At age 12, he contacted the Ku Klux Klan, in Atlanta, Ga. From there he became a "mail order" member of the Aryan Nation.

In 1989 he moved to Hayden Lake. He "just wanted to be with other people who thought like (he) did." He enjoyed Hayden Lake because he no longer stood out as a racist. All through high school he stuck out because of his views, but he just considered everyone else uninformed.

Within six months of moving to the compound, he went from mopping floors and milking cows to organizing the political image and heading recruitment for the Aryan Nation. He said he realized he could be successful as a hard-core racist.

When he heard the comment about his son, he realized the things he was preaching to everyone else did not seem so appealing when applied to himself. He said it took something up close and personal to open his mind to the hypocrisy of his views. He never really considered his son different, much less defected.

COCHRAN

Now that he has left the racist movement, he spends time deprogramming other skinheads and exposing the message and tactics of the Christian Identity Movement.

Cochran said, "I can't take my actions back, but I can take responsibility for them."

In fact, he feels guilty about the incident that happened a few months ago when the NAACP building was bombed in Tacoma. He said, "I am as responsible for throwing that bomb as (Jeremy) is. I didn't teach him how to build the bomb, but I taught him how to hate."

Cochran says he now knows what it is like to feel the effects of hatred. Since he left the movement his answering machine has been filled with threats. Even his parents are getting calls now.

During his speech Cochran showed several slides and a video of Aryan life.

One slide shown was of two little boys standing in front of a sign: "Welcome Aryan Warriors." They are children being taught to hate. They are not teaching themselves as Cochran did, they are learning it from birth. These children are the future and they are learning to hate from the cradle.

Everyone would like to think racism is in somebody else's backyard but in reality, it is nearly everywhere. Richard Butler is a racist and he looks like a grandfather.

This is also how the members of RAACE (Recognizing African-American Concerns in Education) feel. Some of them were present, in the front row, at Cochran's speech. Afterward they said it is good the university is taking steps to stop racial ignorance.

They would like everyone to educate themselves about other cultures. They do not believe America was built to be separate. They are upset that "the only diversity on this campus is for sports." They challenge the University of Idaho and President Zinser to give more than lip service to the diversity policy.

After the lecture, several of the members went to dinner with Cochran in an attempt to feed his racial education.

There is hope.

Outdoor equipment swap Thursday

Russ Woolsey
Lifestyles Editor

The ASUI Outdoor Program will be sponsoring an outdoor equipment sale and swap this Thursday between 7-9:30 p.m. in the SUB Ballroom.

The outdoor program will be selling cross country skis and telemarking skis, among other used equipment. In addition to the outdoor program's equipment, students are encouraged to bring their own used equipment to sell.

Mike Beiser, assistant outdoor coordinator said, "We provide space and tables, kind of like a big flea market."

No fees or commissions will be charged for those who are selling equipment. It will be the responsibility of the owner to sell equipment. Everyone is encouraged to come for the great deals. Beiser said, "The biggest advantage will be: no commission."

Last year Beiser said there were between 400-500 people that came to the equipment sale, "some people selling and some buying."

This year the sale should draw at least that many people or more.

The sale will also include equipment from local retailers such as Northwest River Supplies, Follett's Mtn. Bikes, Hyperspod Sports, Northwest Mtn. Sports, Alpine Designs, and Bike and Ski. They will be selling new equipment at bargain prices.

Also at the Swap will be promotional booths from Silver Mountain Ski Resort and Schweitzer Mountain Ski Resort. They will be giving 1993-94 lift ticket prices and information about the two resorts.

The doors will open for the equipment swap at the University of Idaho SUB Ballroom at 7 p.m. for those who are selling and buying equipment.

Health fair offered massages among its many booths Thursday.

Health Fair a success

Tim Schreiner

Staff Writer

Yesterday's fifth annual University of Idaho Health Fair reached record levels in attendance this year, with the SUB stocked upstairs and down with health and nutrition tips.

Many guests compared their athletic conditioning in competition with decathlete Dan O'Brien's scores for various tests. O'Brien listed a 6.2% body fat level, 19" flexibility for sit and reach, 52 sit-ups per minute and rated 5.58 liters in the lung test.

Competition winners included Paul Thompson with a 4.2% body fat level, Dusty Sabo with a 24.5" sitting reach, Nate Diaz with 62 sit-ups per minute and Dan Lemet rated 7.15 liters on the lung test.

Heidi Ziegele, a registered nurse at Gritman, was available to give cholesterol checks. She said there had been over 100 participants by noon. "Usually the older you are, the higher it is, but a cholesterol rating depends upon your inheritance in conjunction with what you eat." She said, "You need to be more aware if there is a tendency for high cholesterol levels in the family, so it's a good idea to get tested."

Bill Gibson, a licensed psychologist from the Student Counseling Center, said the center now has an eight-day waiting list. And he added that counseling has become a lot more acceptable in our society because people used to think they had to have serious problems to see a psychiatrist.

"We are busiest this time of year because of the stress of winter and mid-terms," Gibson said, "and people have a hard time with not being successful." He said that the Student Counseling Center sees about 10 percent of the UI campus every year, including people with "current grief or long-term problems."

The response to the flu virus injection was also reported to get an overwhelming response this year. The booth had run out of medicine by 1 p.m. and was waiting for more of the vaccine to arrive.

Environmental park offers educational opportunities

Katé Lyons-Holestine
Sports Editor

The Palouse area has much to offer for outdoor recreation. Now the Palouse has a facility devoted to serving citizens who are looking for an outdoor setting for functions.

The Virgil Phillips Environmental Park, a mere four miles out of the Moscow city limits, is a large contained outdoor recreation area with a predetermined function of serving the youth of Latah County.

The park has yet to be widely advertised, and it is hidden in the fields of the Palouse farming country.

"We're avoiding calling too much attention to it because people come and they aren't always interested in doing good things to the park," Brecca Stauber said.

Stauber is the President of the Board of Better Living Inc. Better Living Inc. devised the idea of constructing a park for children and youth in the Palouse area. The company is the overseeing organization of the park.

"The aim of the park is a broad goal," Stauber said. "It is to help in the growth and development of youth. We would like to serve the purpose of being a compliment to a child's formal learning."

Learning is one of the main functions of the park. It is utilized by the Moscow School District, home schoolers, Boy Scouts and private groups.

A number of various projects have been scheduled and undertaken at the park in its three year existence.

The park has sponsored summer day camps, inservice training for teachers in the Moscow School District, University of Idaho enrichment programs and day care programs.

"We work closely with the University Enrichment Program and try to be a part of the offering to the general public," Stauber said.

The park acts as a natural environment for learning and teaching.

"We hosted an inservice training for school teachers to equip them with technical knowledge of natural resources and ecology systems," Stauber said. "It also provided them with graphical projects to assist with the children's learning."

The day care programs were invited to come to the park and enjoy the outdoors or take part in organized activities.

Local Boy Scout troops have advanced their learning through activities at the park.

"The Boy Scouts undertook earning of their Eagle badges through development of the park," Stauber said. "The gate is a product of an Eagle project, the cross country trail is also a Boy Scout project."

The park is applied to the school programs also.

"During the school year we host a number of field trips to compliment school learning," Stauber said.

The Moscow Jr. and Sr. High School cross country teams, as well as the University of Idaho cross country teams, train on the trails at the park.

Families who choose to teach their children at home are not excluded from park activities. There was a session for home schooling families a few weeks ago.

"Parents and children attend and we provide the resource people, we cover math to science to art," Stauber said.

The park is located off Highway 95, north of Moscow. Better Living Inc. became aware of the property in 1989 when the farmer leasing the land indicated he was retiring.

The Moscow High School cross country team practices Wednesday at the Virgil Phillips Environmental Park. The trails, products of Boy Scout projects, are used for cross country meets.

Better Living Inc. applied to lease the property from the city of Moscow at that time. "Since that time we've been developing a number of programs," Stauber said.

The Moscow Mountain Madness Race this fall raised funds to benefit the park. Bikers and runners completed the 12 mile course starting at the foot of Moscow Mountain to the old Tamarack Ski Lodge.

Deer meat or venison?

It all depends upon the methods of bringing it home, is it whole or quartered?

Someone once said that the difference between deer meat and venison is how far the deer is shot from a road.

Deer meat arrives home in the form of a whole deer. Venison leaves the woods quartered, boned out, or, at best, in halves with the help of several friends and some strong legs.

Deer hunters who ply the steep, arid canyons of the Palouse for whitetails and the occasional mule deer seldom dine on deer meat.

Yet, these hunters are often rewarded with a good supply of venison - usually a heavy weight buck. What canyon deer lack in ease of packing the meat out, they more than make up for in table quality.

The difference is in the feed.

Most deer on national forests are restricted to a diet of whatever native plant species they can scrounge up.

Canyon deer on the Palouse eat crops: Soy beans, wheat, lentils, rape, barley, peas, and oats offer a veritable deer smorgasbord.

The difference between the diets is like eating a steady course of brussel sprouts or gorging on cheese burgers.

Canyon deer grow big and fat and their venison is far superior to the garden variety deer of the deep forest. The meat is well worth the toil of packing them out.

To find crop/canyon deer, begin by searching the canyons that drain into the Clearwater. The Kendrick area is good as are any other canyons cutting through the Palouse, hidden from the roads. A little map-work and eavesdropping will pay venison dividends.

These canyons are characterized by few trees, thick brush patches, and steep canyon walls, making them an ideal place to glass.

In general, the strategy is to glass much and walk very little. Concentrate on the heads of canyons near cultivated fields. For some reason, evenings are more productive. In open country, two pairs of eyes are better than one, so hunt with a partner.

Once a buck is sighted, a spotting scope is invaluable in deciding whether or not to invest a half day on a stalk.

If he's a keeper, work out a system of handsignals and designate one person as spotter. The spotter watches the deer and follows the route of the stalker, offering hand signals whenever the stalker indicates.

For example, the spotter would take his hat off if a bedded deer gets up. If you'll keep signs simple and check with each other often during the course of the stalk, the system will work well for you.

This can be difficult country to get a deer out of, monster buck or toe-head, boned out meat or not.

A grain fed heavyweight that falls in the bottom of a canyon will be a collection of your worse nightmares for years to come.

I'll never forgive my friend, Alan, for shooting a two-

Outdoors with

point mulie in the bottom of an especially nasty canyon.

The deer rolled down hill after what seemed an eternity, finally coming to rest on one of the lowest levels of hell. In deer packing terms, it was a day that would live in infamy.

By the time we struggled to the canyon rim with the deer, who had achieved venison status hours ago, I was ready to choke Alan with my bare hands.

And I would have, if I had the strength.

All I could do was plot a similar punishment - like shooting a moose in the bottom of the Grand Canyon and making Alan pack it out.

Any thoughts of revenge were dispelled when we tasted the venison later that week.

The finest veal couldn't compare and I can honestly say that I remember the taste of that perfect meat more than the hellish pack out.

In deer terms, it was venison all the way.

University of Idaho quarterback Doug Nussmeier scrambles out of the pocket during last weekend's Big Sky Conference matchup with Eastern Washington. Nussmeier was named the Cenex/Land O'Lakes Big Sky Player of the Week for the third consecutive week.

The 1993 Vandal football team

Could they be the best team in Vandal history?

Vandal football fans have become so acquainted with their good friend Victory in the past decade, with a number one ranking and 6-0 record, the 1993 team seems as significant as picking out eye-boogers in your daily morning routine.

We are spoiled and not afraid to admit it.

Our well-earned accomplishments have been taken for granted. We want more than another dinky Big Sky title—we supporters want the coveted national championship—the only retaliating comeback mindless and spineless Boise State alumni can boast.

Clearly, we have fielded the teams to accomplish this attainable feat. We just simply haven't had the luck of the leprechaun. We came the closest to the ultimate exaltation in 1988 and 1990.

In 1988, the Vandals qualified for the semifinals, but without their All-World quarterback, John Friesz, who suffered a leg injury in the previous playoff game. Backup QB Andy Beitia, a tight end the next season, started and Idaho rightfully lost 38-7.

In 1990, the Vandals' hearts were on crutches for the remainder of winter as they were narrowly defeated 28-27 by perennial I-AA team Georgia Southern in the quarterfinals, nixing a chance to play forever-loathed Nevada.

We are in good hands this year disregarding the recent playoff futility.

The Vandals are realistically fielding the best team ever to don the Black and Gold.

Even better than the 1988 number one ranked team?

Well, that is hard to conclude, for both teams have excelled in their own little ways.

The 1988 team prided itself with its superb offensive line that allowed Friesz

Fourth Quarter

Andrew Longeteig

to throw to whomever he wanted, whenever he wanted. The 1988 defense was led by lineman Marvin Washington and defensive backs Brian Smith and Richard Carey.

The 1993 squad, albeit, sports a more well-rounded team. Starting with quarterback Doug Nussmeier who is hands down the finest signal-caller to play at Idaho.

Don't bark at me, Friesz-fanatics, but excluding arm strength, Nussmeier has uncanny instincts, a feisty competitiveness, running ability, and overall athleticism that Friesz couldn't parallel.

Nussmeier is only helping his stock in the April draft as he sports 21 touchdown passes versus two interceptions, both surrendered the last two contests.

The passing game is counter-balanced by Sherriden May's relentless running style. May leads the Big Sky in rushing and the nation in scoring.

The always-excellent receiving corps features Kyle Gary, Alan Allen, and Dwight McKinzie, who all run like a nine year old boy chasing an ice-cream truck (which is very fast, mind you).

The defense, although talented, has not been as effective as in prior years. This is mainly due to the departure of defensive end Jeff Robinson to the Denver Broncos of the NFL.

The Vandal defense is currently last in rush defense (which is misleading, due to the fact they played run-oriented teams).

And, the secondary is somewhat inexperienced.

It's probably the least recognized defense in the past decade, a legitimate "no-name defense"—without a true leader and/or superstar.

The defense will eventually achieve greatness on a given sunny day, as only one starter will be lost to graduation.

Allow me to reiterate: no dedicated Vandal fan really gives a Gonzo about the conference title.

A Big Sky title in, let's say Northern Arizona, would induce their fans to dress up as Lumberjacks and dance merrily atop the Walkup Skydome, beer in one hand, Bible in the other.

Vandal fans, nonetheless, would rather sleep in, watch "Oprah" and eat soggy Corn Flakes.

The question looms: can we do it? The answer: "Why, of course!"

But initially, we have to defeat the Vandal Factor. This issue has existed since the dawn of Vandal football. Holding three-touchdown leads and blowing them in the fourth quarter. A clipping call on Doug Nussmeier on a game-winning punt return against Nevada, Scott Dahlquist's fumble deep in Georgia Southern territory as the Vandals drove for the game winning kick, are just a few.

We have to seize this Vandal factor, turn it upside down and spank it until it

Cougs crush Vandals

Washington State defeats Vandals 36-18 in team tennis

Andrew Longeteig
Staff Writer

A cold, demeaning sun nestles in the hills of the Palouse as temperatures dip near the freezing mark — seems like swell conditions for...tennis?

Unfortunately, this was the case for both the U of I and Washington State tennis teams as they endured the Arctic fall weather of Northern Idaho in a team tennis tournament Wednesday.

Actually, the weather conditions were tolerable with a legitimate sighting of the sun, yet most players were still clad in warmup pants and thermal underwear.

The team tennis format is a rather new concept in tennis, involving both genders and fan-enticing rules. It involves women's and men's doubles, singles and two teams of mixed doubles. The first team to reach six games wins the match and deuce games are non-existent. There is a catch, though. Similar to many "team" sports, substitutions are allowed at any point in the set, but the substituted player may not return in that particular match. The winner is not determined on how many matches were won, but the overall game total.

This aspect was not on the Vandals' side, however as Washington State solidly triumphed 36-18.

UI player Keith Bradbury, freshman, added, "It's a great format — it gets the fans involved. And thanks to the Betas for your support." The fraternity members made up the majority of the sparse, yet spirited cheering section, politely taunting the WSU team.

UI Junior Emily Walpole explained, "It was nerve-wracking being the first one on. But I thought it (the tournament) went all right. We should do it more often."

"I went out there and tried my hardest," stated Ryan Slaton, fifth ranked on the UI team. "We weren't a unit today."

Saturday, the UI tennis team travels to Eugene to take on the Oregon Ducks. Action begins at 9 a.m. at the University of Oregon.

stops pestering our quest for prominence.

What if the fans were presented with the proposition of either beating BSU or winning the championship?

As much as I hate to say it, I would sacrifice a year of losing to the Bozoes in order to claim a national title. But it would be cool to live through life never experiencing an agonizing loss to the Broncos, which might very well be the case.

Glad to be a Vandal. Ecstatic, actually.

I am unable to conclude the 1993 team is the best in Idaho's illustrious past. But if they win the national title, there will be no doubt in any rational fan's mind that they have witnessed none greater.

Diligently continue praying to the Vandal gods and our long-heralded wish will someday become reality — let's just hope it's this year.

Rice, a threat on the court and in the classroom

Dan Eckles
Staff Writer

Vandal Volleyball player Mindy Rice says getting her college education is the most important aspect in her life, followed by volleyball. But you wouldn't know it by watching the junior outside hitter on the court this fall.

After seeing only limited action in 20 of Idaho's 31 matches in 1992, the Grandview, Id. native has earned a starting job.

She was named a tournament all-star in both the Washington State Cougar Challenge and the Safeco Classic, making it look as though all her time is devoted to the sport.

"Volleyball is pretty high on my priority list, but I take my academics seriously. Tom (Coach Tom Hilbert) really stresses that. School is at the top of my list, then volleyball," Rice said.

Rice is a big reason the Vandals are undefeated for the first time in team history at the halfway point of the Big Sky Conference schedule.

The team's list of superlatives is lengthy: a 10-match win streak, a 16-game win streak, nine three-game sweeps, and 7-0 record at home.

"A lot of the success has to do with maturity. We are old as far as years go," Rice said. "We have played together a lot and we know each other."

Idaho (13-4, 7-0 Big Sky) enjoyed its most successful season ever in 1992 when they won the Big Sky Conference and earned an NCAA tournament bid.

With four returning starters and eight letter-winners back this year, expectations were high, but the UI spikers have lived up to their billing.

"This year is different as far as the team goes. We have more confidence and we're older and more experienced," Rice said. "This year is great for me. I am finally playing and enjoying every minute of it."

Rice said she is having more fun playing volleyball this fall than ever before, due in large part to her increased playing time and the high level of competition.

"I love playing at this level. Having the crowd and everything is great," Rice said. "It's a great feeling to kill the ball. It's just a rush. There is nothing like it. I can't explain it."

Rice credits part of her success to the fine play of middle blockers Brittany Van Haverbeke and 1992 Big Sky MVP Nancy Wicks.

"At the beginning of the year we weren't connecting well in the middle, but now that we are it makes my role easier," Rice said. "I feel I've improved a lot just since the season's begun. My hitting has improved. I have a lot better vision of where the block is."

Three years ago Vandal fans had not heard of Mindy Rice. But, once she visited the campus, the meeting with Memorial Gym fans was eminent.

"I really liked the school and the size of the town. I am from a small town and I really liked the team. Everything clicked so well after I came up I knew I was coming here," the physical education major said.

teach and coach volleyball and basketball at a small high school.

"I really don't like big cities. I like smaller schools. I think it's more personal," Rice said.

Rice earned 11 varsity letters in high school in volleyball, basketball and track. She was recruited directly out of high school for both her volleyball and basketball prowess.

She says she doesn't know what made her choose the net game.

"At the time I felt it was the right thing to do. I don't really know why, but now I know it was the right decision," Rice said.
