Alcohol, a community problem

Gregory H. Burton
Staff Writer

Members of the student body and community were conspicuously absent from the audience Thursday during "round-table" discussions about alcohol abuse on campus and in Moscow.

The open meeting was arranged earlier this year by Vice President of Student Affairs Hal Godwin, Mayor Paul Agidius and Chamber of Commerce and Gritman Medical Center President Bob Colvin in response to criticism of the community's alcohol policy, which some say led to the tragic fall of University of Idaho student Regena Coghlan.

"We're here to talk about the health of the community," said Godwin as he opened the meeting in the council chambers of the Moscow Community Center.

Police Chief William Brown, ASUI President Richard Rock, ASUI Senator Kristen Bennett, Dr. Lon Miller from the Gritman Emergency Room, Cathy Mabbut Rn., also from Gritman Emergency and a group of 12 others offered suggestions and discussed possible solutions to what was collectively agreed to be a community-wide problem.

But it was Dr. Miller who took the offensive against what he characterized as pervasive inducement for young people to drink, and a city-wide laissez-faire attitude about control.

"Establishments in town hang signs outside inviting people to come inside to drink as much as they can until they fall down," said Miller.

Miller estimated 50 percent of the patients he sees in the emergency room are suffering from alcohol-related injuries.

"The thinking goes: this is what's always been done," said Miller. "What it amounts to is tacit approval."

Moscow Superintendent of Schools Jack Hill called for student role models to lead the fight against abuse on campus, and also supported a plan to have UI students come into the Moscow schools to talk against alcohol abuse.

"There's a ripple effect from the university to the high school in Moscow," said Hill.

UI fraternity representative Trent Matson said campus organizations had already begun a wide-range of programs to fight alcohol abuse, including non-alcoholic functions, in addition to many already in place.

But Matson said he was pleased to hear the call for leaders within the campus student community.

UI lecturer discusses homosexuality

Natalie Shapiro
Contributing Writer

On National Coming Out Day, some lesbians and gays come out to their family, or to friends.

For Susan Baumgartner, that wasn't enough.

Baumgartner, an English lecturer at the University of Idaho and columnist for the Moscow/Pullman Daily News, came out publicly in the newspapers.

Her Oct. 7 Daily News column said "... I am also gay. Some of you already know. Some of you have probably guessed ... First, I want to apologize for lying to you, for pretending all this time that I was straight. But that's the way most lesbians and gays survive in America today — we lie, we pretend to be something we're not ..."

In her column, Baumgartner discussed her coming-out process, both to herself, and to her family and friends, adding that she hoped people won't treat her differently now that know she is gay.

"I hope that you won't feel uncomfortable with me now just because of this one facet of my identity," Baumgartner said.

After coming out to herself, she said she finally felt peace and happiness.

"Almost every aspect of my life has changed for the better. I'm not an outcast anymore. I finally fit in."

Baumgartner said the Idaho Citizens' Alliance's anti-gay initiative is partially responsible for her decision.

"Everything I read says that someone who knows a gay or lesbian person finds it harder to sign the initiative. When I first decided to do this act of inspiration, I felt that my only defense (against the ICA) is to come out."

A week after the column, Baumgartner came out to students in her two section of English 104.

"I handed them a copy of my editorial, then asked 'Are there any questions?'" "In the first class, no one appeared to want to discuss it, although they still seemed positive about it, said Baumgartner.

However, in the second class, they discussed it for half an hour. A student who had attended Meridian High School talked about her frustrations with the response to students bringing in two lesbian mothers in a social sciences class.

Angry WSU student with rifle storms UI fraternity, arrested

Gregory H. Burton
Staff Writer

A 22-year-old Washington State University student was arrested Wednesday for aggravated assault against members of a University of Idaho fraternity.

At 1:15 a.m. on Monday, Raymond Chamba burst into the Beta Theta Pi fraternity with a rifle after reportedly hearing obscenities.

Beta fraternity members told police Chamba came in through the front door, pointed the gun, and yelled, "Did you say f--- me?" but then two of Chamba's friends dragged him back out of the house.

Members of the fraternity said they didn't know who Chamba was, but police apparently tracked him to WSU. Chamba was arrested in Moscow.

Mayoral candidates reveal similarities

Gregory H. Burton
Staff Writer

Every four years, Moscow citizens line up behind their pick for mayor, eschewing all others for their radical differences, right? Wrong.

This Nov. 2, the Moscow mayoral race has come down to two candidates who appear to have many more similarities than differences.

The incumbent, Paul Agidius, stresses his leadership in forming citizen's committees to address housing problems, the Mountain View improvement project, the need for a bicycle path and tree management in the city.

"My philosophy is to have city solutions devised by the citizens, and then have the city council and the mayor try to implement these solutions," said Agidius.

Agidius, 42, graduated from UI in 1978 with an accounting degree, and in 1984 he received his law degree from the UI. Except for a eight-year stint in the Navy, he has lived in Moscow all his life, and has a private law practice. Agidius is vice president for the Association of Idaho Cities.

The challenger, Pam Palmer, has completed two years of a four-year term on the Moscow City Council. She stresses her involvement with the low-income housing project, the Moscow Police Department's bicycle patrol, the Mountain View improvement project, and her attempts to create a linear park from one end of Moscow to the other.

Palmer, 40, moved to Moscow in 1979. Besides her duties with the city council, she is a childbirth educator and mother. She is active in the Palouse-Clearwater Environmental Institute, the Moscow Co-op, and she is on the advisory board of the Moscow Care Center.

"I would like to create an environment where public participation is encouraged, welcome, and easy to take part in," said Palmer.

How do you perceive your relationship with the University of Idaho?

"It's important that the university and the city work together as much as possible," said Palmer. "They influence each other and their planning efforts down the road need to be compatible."

"I think it is a major responsibility for the mayor to work with these other entities like the university or Latah County, and Pullman and Whitman County," said Agidius. "We need to build coalitions because what one entity does affects all the others."

What are your feelings about the perceived alcohol problem on campus?

"Underage drinking is a concern at all levels," said Agidius. "I think we need programs that reinforce responsibility at home. I've supported the DARE (Drug and Alcohol Resistance Education) program in Moscow and I'm pleased by the response the community has had to alcohol awareness."

"I think students should come up with their own solutions," said Palmer. "The problem of alcohol on campus isn't necessarily just a problem there. We need education whether you're a student, or teenager, or parent."

What can you do about high rental costs?

"The rental rates change so much, but it's great the city council started the low-income housing project," said Palmer. "What we can do is check to make sure rental properties aren't substandard, and enforce rental equity."

"Three years ago I met with the chamber of commerce to tackle the housing problems in the area," said Agidius. "We formed a coalition that created a model for the whole state, and now Idaho has a $10 million fund to support housing and building loans."

Agidius left Moscow High School in 1969 and enlisted in the Navy. Although he has gone on to acquire two professional degrees, passed the bar and earned his CPA, he has never graduated from high school.

"A high school diploma is so doggone important, I would hate to give the impression that this is the thing to do, because it isn't," said Agidius. "I had a plan when I left school and it worked out for me, but I would encourage everyone to finish high school."

Before her interview, Palmer finished a meeting with her Brownie Girl Scout troop. Prior to settling in Moscow, Palmer earned her Bachelor of Science and completed two years of graduate study in geology at the University of Toledo.

"I plan to implement a period for an open mike during the first half-hour of each council meeting," said Palmer. "With no set agenda and a time limit it would give people in the community a chance to address their questions and concerns directly to the people who can answer them."

What do you think of the other candidate?

"I think he is a nice man who facilitates meetings well," said Palmer, "but he has been low key and not real visible as far as presenting ideas in a public forum."

"I think Pam gave good balance to the city council," said Agidius, "because you need different viewpoints, and she brought a different viewpoint."

One key issue the candidates disagreed on last year is the funding for three extra Moscow police officers. Under a proposed grant, the government would fund most of the officers salaries while the city contributes $12,500 a year for three years. After three years the city would assume all of the funding.

"I broke the tie on the city council for the grant application," said Agidius. "It is a great idea, and I think it will enable the police force to provide more community policing, and in three years I think the extra officers will be well worth the low price now."

"I thought hard about the reasoning, but it wasn't proven to me that we needed three more officers right now," said Palmer. "People are always saying we need to control costs. Two years ago I fought hard for two new officers and a bike patrol, but I felt that this time it wasn't necessary."

"I'm concerned about Moscow's quality of life," said Palmer. "I want to be certain we are going in the right direction for everybody, especially our kids."

"I want to address the needs of our youth," said Agidius. "I hear people consistently say we are at a turning point, but this is an excellent place to live. There is a great future for Moscow."

Johnson wants to see community input

Natalie Shapiro
Contributing Writer

Tony Johnson believes his job experiences make him an ideal candidate for Moscow City Council.

"My job experiences include working with Johnson Trucking and in the construction field, so I build things in relationship with the community, such as the new Indian Hills development," he said.

Johnson wants to see the community involved in issues dealing with its growth.

"It's the people that make the city. We should call them up and ask them for input."

Johnson would like to see more coordination between the Moscow community and the University of Idaho. He wants to see student housing be affordable and built by private developers.

"I'm not in favor of government student housing; with private housing, it gets on the tax rolls."

Johnson said once the housing supply increases, the demand will drop, making prices stabilize.

Regarding the Third Street congestion problem, Johnson said a bypass won't work.

"They laugh at you in Boise if you mention it," he said of the Department of Transportation. "It would cost too much, and where would you put it?"

Johnson believes the A Street Project, making A Street a main arterial, will help keep traffic off

Tony Johnson

Highway 8. Johnson supports bicycle paths on new and reconstructed roads. He said bicycles on sidewalks are dangerous, and bicyclists should be required to obey traffic laws.

Johnson supports a bus transit system in Moscow as long as it's a private bus company.

"It's not the government's business to transport people," he said of government subsidies.

Regarding Paradise Creek pollution, Johnson thinks the city should look at the costs of cleaning it up as well as the extent of the pollution.

"It seems that Mother Nature is doing a good job keeping it clean," he noted.

Johnson said the issue of curbside recycling in Moscow needs studying.

"Now, recycling is more expensive than solid waste pickup. We need to look at Pullman's plans; should we copy them? Implement them?"

Johnson said input from the community is needed to determine the need for volume-based garbage collection fees.

Former ASUI pres runs for council

Natalie Shapiro
Contributing Writer

Tom LeClaire wants to be a City Council member in order to give something back to the community he has lived in for 22 years.

While at the University of Idaho a decade ago, LeClaire served as ASUI President, and graduated with a B.S. in Political Science.

In 1989, LeClaire worked for Senator Steve Symms on energy and natural resource issues. During his four years with Symms, he worked on issues relevant to the University of Idaho, such as raising money for the Vandaleer tour fund. Currently, he works in his family business, Deranleau's.

Regarding current issues with the university, LeClaire says "economic development is a natural issue that the university can help the city with."

LeClaire supports a research park like the one Pullman has.

"We need to find economic niches that are spun off the university and a supportive infrastructure in Moscow."

Regulations and taxes would put the brakes on Moscow's growth, asserts LeClaire.

"We need incentives for new housing. With regulations and taxes, rent and property taxes would increase, and the demand would be unmet."

LeClaire said Third Street should be widened from Line Street to the Washington state line.

"It's more complex in town; trees, businesses, parking. There's more to lose between Line and Jackson." He said the city should consider widening

Tom LeClaire

A Street. "By extending A Street, we can get traffic off from Third."

LeClaire contends a bike path would be an enhancement to the community.

"Idaho has a lot of money for transportation issues." He said the focus of bicycle paths should be on safe paths in town to move bicycles away from interstate trucks.

LeClaire supports a bus transit system in Moscow.

"We need to make sure the demand is there. A regional transportation plan would be a good idea."

Non-point source pollution is a problem for Paradise Creek, contends LeClaire.

"It's hard to regulate what goes into (storm) drains. When someone puts oil down drains, we should prosecute them, but it's hard to know who did it." LeClaire suggests engaging the community to help enforce it.

"The Household Hazardous Waste Collection Day could help prevent such dumping. It raises community awareness that it's a serious chemical that affects the environment."

LeClaire also supports the construction of a pedestrian trail by the creek.

"It has the potential to be a park winding through the city." He said volume-based billing is a classic incentive approach.

"We need to make sure we charge the right amount," he warned.

English lecturer Susan Baumgartner came out to the public and her students on National Coming Out Day. "I'm not an outcast anymore. I finally fit in," says Baumgartner.

"She was frustrated because the students wanted to bring in a Catholic priest the next day to present the other point of view," explained Baumgartner. "That didn't happen because the parents panicked at the word 'lesbian'."

Baumgartner's students asked her questions about the stereotype 'butch/femme' roles.

"I said I thought that there was a period where there was a tendency to mimic straight relationships, but now lesbians are in equal roles." She added "I don't even have a leather jacket."

Baumgartner said students should be exposed to new ideas.

"You go to college, and are terrified that you'll see or hear something new, so you don't hear or see new things. I talked about experiencing new things and then deciding if you like it or not. If you decide that you don't, then at least you tried it. I'd feel bad if some of you are not willing to learn about or experience this."

Baumgartner said her classes' overall response had an atmosphere of acceptance.

"People were nodding and smiling." She said there is a mix of students—conservative, religious and liberal.

"Some were startled when I talked about LDS and other denominations being represented in the Seattle Gay Pride Parade; they were startled that gays stay in their religions. I think they assumed we're all pagans!"

University officials and Moscow leaders discussed how the community could help improve alcohol problems.

ALCOHOL

"Most of the time we are perceived as the problem and aren't called to help find a solution," said Matson. "We're a little gun shy, but we would be very interested in helping at the schools and in the community."

Praise went to the Moscow police for their Drug and Alcohol Resistance Program being presented to schools in Moscow and surrounding communities.

Agidius suggested the creation of a "blue ribbon community committee" composed of members from UI, city, business community and police, established as an on-going body combating alcohol problems.

Godwin said his office could be the starting point for any of the campus-city joint ventures.

"Call me and I can get you in touch with anybody on campus."

In the audience were Moscow Hotel proprietors Nick and Bill Bode who said Moscow tavern owners were committed to helping, and urged they should be included in creating solutions.

"We need to break the notion of the Saturday night Vandal program being followed by going out and drinking as much as you can," said Miller. "I want to be able to encourage them (my kids) to continue to college without their feeling that's an invitation to drink."

Moscow ignoring student voting population

Free speech, an education and voting are rights guaranteed in the Constitution to citizens of the United States of America.

The City of Moscow is welcoming all registered voters to come out and cast a ballot on Nov. 2 — all registered voters except University of Idaho students.

In the beginning, the only people thought capable of making decisions involving the governing of the land were white, land-owning men. Throughout the years, the right to vote and choose our leaders has been extended to women and minorities.

During the 1992 presidential election, American voters turned out in droves. The popular vote should reflect the public's choice when deciding between candidates.

At that time, many University of Idaho students were granted the opportunity to vote here on campus. A polling facility was set up in the Kibbie Dome.

Next week, students interested in voting for Moscow City Council seats will be forced to travel to the Latah County Fairgrounds, approximately 1.25 miles—as the crow flies — from the UI campus.

Many students who have registered to vote in Latah County live on campus. A campus voting location would serve two purposes. First, students would be more accommodated in the voting process. With the only polling facility located across town, many students are hindered in feeling involved or welcome to participate.

A polling place located on campus would also allow more student involvement in local elections.

With UI students running for City Council seats, the city of Moscow might realize students do want to take an active role in city politics. With this indication of a rise in interest, the city should actively support involvement of UI students.

The UI student population is more than 10,000. This is a large percentage of the approximately 18,000 population of Moscow. The city should be doing all it can to involve students in local government. UI students are affected by city government just as much as any other resident.

Pullman has realized the importance of involving Washington State University students. There will be four locations on the WSU campus Tuesday to facilitate student voting.

Maybe it's more pertinent for students to vote for the President of the United States than for local politicians. Maybe it's unreasonable to ask the city to conveniently place voting booths on campus. Maybe the city should think of the elections as more than just a city election.

One drawback to putting voting booths on campus, according to the city, may be the necessary hiring of additional people to conduct the voting there. The city may also argue that not enough students turn out to vote for city elections to make it worthwhile.

I think Moscow is not considering the many students who want to vote.

But, don't worry. The polling facility at the Latah County Fairgrounds in the 4-H Building will be open from 8 a.m. to 8 p.m. to oblige all those with busy schedules.

Men can't fathom female oppression

My mom was a feminist. All five feet of her. She raised three boys and a husband all over six feet tall, buried her alcoholic father, nursed her alcoholic brother, and explained it all in understandable terms to her old-fashioned Scottish mother.

But my mother, in a flaming redheaded, stubborn PTA-preaching, den mother-leading, church choir-singing, wave of love and care, was a fierce warrior for women's rights.

She was a lifetime member of the American Association of University Women, the League of Women Voters, Phi Beta Kappa, Kappa Kappa Gamma, and the National Organization of Women.

Now, the National Organization of Women has come under recent criticism for allegedly focusing on a lesbian agenda.

Its past president, a declared lesbian, and its new president carrying on a lesbian relationship, while functioning in a heterosexual marriage, were said to be sending mixed messages.

While I may squirm a little about the dichotomy of the marriage mess, all the while retaining full faculty of the percentage of straight married men carrying on innumerable straight affairs, the fact she is a lesbian leader of a women's organization is of little bearing on NOW.

All the mouth-flapping by Rush Lumpy and his minions should do little to misdirect the focus of the total agenda of this organization — namely, equal job opportunities, equal pay for equal work, more significant punishment for rapists, more work security for women's maternity leave, women's freedom to choose to have a baby or have an abortion, and equal rights for lesbians.

Ah, but most of you will be blinded by that last one. So distraught by the probability of gays crashing your missionary position values, you reject anything else of concern.

The real problem here is the ludicrous notion that just because the president of NOW is a lesbian every member of NOW is a lesbian.

Moscow faces tough growth decisions

I come from the Land of Rust. A place where heavy industry dumped its manufacturing leftovers in Lake Erie and bumper-to-bumper traffic could rival anything seen in L.A.

Don't get me wrong. I'm proud to be from the Cleveland, Ohio area, and much of the time I get mighty angry when ignorant people depict it as industrial wasteland with burning lakes and losing sports teams. (Uh... the Browns are now in first place.)

But still, arriving in Moscow was shocking. I remember getting off the mammoth Horizon Dash 8 superjet at the main terminal of Moscow/Pullman International Airport. After I fought my way through the crowd of Hare Krishnas and homeless people, I stepped outside into pure heaven.

I didn't think God made places like this anymore. No sprawling subdivisions. No busy intersections where you can swear at lights. Just miles of open farmland until it meets a great little town called Moscow.

And great it is. The University of Idaho is one of the most beautiful campuses I've ever seen, but it's also located in a beautiful town. Downtown reminds me of the setting for a Jimmy Stewart movie with a happy ending. Fall is especially nice, as the leaves fall and give Main Street a delicious color. Where I come from, there are no quaint towns, just one suburb spilling over into another. On the Palouse, once you get past Pullman, you're pretty much on your own.

But the times are indeed a-changin', and Moscow is changing right along with it. I must not be the only one who thinks Moscow is so beautiful. A lot of people obviously have the same idea. Blame it on the Californians, or blame it on Idaho's healthy, stress-free lifestyle... Moscow is growing.

The growth is all around us. When I first moved here, Wal-Mart was an empty field. Now it's the busiest store in town, and even I shop there. What can I say; the selection is good. Tidyman's will soon be opening a new behemoth of a store on the Troy highway. Plans for subdivisions branching into College or kindergarten?

I feel compelled to add my two cents worth to this little fiasco of discourse concerning alcohol and the University of Idaho.

I'm going to get right to the point: What's going on? I thought this was the University of Idaho; the operative word here being "university." College. An institution of higher learning; not a school filled with people who think they are my mother.

Walking around campus, I've noticed a few things. A smashed up car with the words, "Don't Drink and Drive," plastered all over it. Fliers ad infinitum proclaiming things like, "How Drunk Are You?" I don't know. How drunk am I? Please tell me, I can't bear to think for myself. I need you to tell me what is good for me.

Give me a break folks. I have much more important things to do with my time, like get an education, than be inundated with proclamations of what other people think is the best way for me to live my life. If I don't know what can happen when someone drinks and drives, I don't belong here. If I drink too much, let me. I am an adult. If I can vote, go to war, and all other associated adult responsibilities, the last thing I need is to be told what is in my best interest.

So some girl acts stupidly, drinks too much, falls out a window, and is paralyzed. Yes, it's terrible. Yes, it's sad. Yes, it's tragic. But what is even worse is that some people have gone ballistic over the incident, and now are compelled to make sure it never happens again, even at the cost of treating those of us who are responsible adults like children.

I hope this letter offends a few people. This entire situation is offensive. I've been very offended that so many people think that they are my mom. Personally, I can't tell if this is college or kindergarten. I think that some people ought to make up their minds which one it is, and start acting like it.

'Little windbags' won't shut up

I read with interest Jeff Kapostasy's Oct. 22 commentary, "Intellects really Satan's Helpers," particularly since I happen to be a non-traditional (i.e. old) student who has two kids and who has been enrolled in three or four different courses with Kapostasy over the past few semesters.

For those readers who missed it, Kapostasy cites students of my demographic profile (old, with kids) as prime culprits in what Kapostasy sees as an emerging problem in the classroom: "little windbags" who monopolize everyone's learning time by endlessly dishing up unwanted accounts of personal experiences, presumably to provide relevant real-life examples of whatever principles happen to be under discussion.

My issue with Kapostasy's comments doesn't so much concern his stated disapproval of long-winded students as it does his "admission" that "a majority" of these students are old. I concede that I do indeed participate more in class discussions than do most of my fellow students.

What Kapostasy doesn't realize, however, is that half of my college career occurred during my late teens and early twenties (yes, even I was "traditional" once), and that during those semesters I participated in class just as much as I do in these, post-waxing years.

So don't go blaming it on my age, Kapostasy. At all costs avoid drawing casual connections between physical characteristics, (e.g. age, skin color, what-have-you) and behavior, for this is but a recipe for stereotype.

To Kapostasy's central contention — that a few inconsiderate students are ripping off their fellows by over-participating —

I'll forego response other than to confirm Kapostasy's belief that he'll get no relief by asking me and the other windbags to shut up.

No, Jeff, I won't shut up.

Come to think of it, I've encountered your kind before.

As I recall, it was back in '77. Or was it '78? Anyway, there was this carping little journalism major who drove a blue Mustang — or was it a green Corvette? And he never appreciated it when someone else had something to say.

I ran into him one morning in the cafeteria. Coffee there was only 15 cents, can you imagine that? A daily newspaper was still only 25 cents. A local phone call, 10 measly pennies. And postage? Shoot, don't get me started on postage...

This equates to assuming because Barney Frank is a homosexual, every senator is a homosexual or even every senator from Massachusetts exclusively supports a gay agenda.

And since Elisabeth Zinser is a woman, UI is one big, bureaucratic godzilla waiting to pummel everything male that gets in its way.

And of course this isn't so. It's this institutionalized Freudian male thing that assumes if a woman is a lesbian, she rebukes our saintly maleness and would just as soon stab us in the back as look at us. Or conversely, if she's heterosexual, she is awed by our gleaming testosterone maleness, and would melt at the chance to share bliss with us.

Phooey. Half the men on this campus don't have the intelligence to fathom the years of oppression women have withstood, and the other half are repulsive to lesbians as well as straights, so they don't count.

The NOW agenda is full of explosive issues, most of all abortion rights, and they admit this issue repels men and women with equal force. And some women who support abortion rights can't come to grips with lesbian rights.

Fair enough. But Giant isn't any less of a great movie because Rock Hudson was obviously fibbing a few of the romantic scenes.

William Faulkner isn't any less of a brilliant novelist because he shared his house with an occasional male of the species, and NOW isn't any less of a worthy political organization because its president has equal emotional ties with both men and women.

And my mom was no less a feminist because she cooked, cleaned, changed diapers, and slept with my father.

Heck even I've done all that, although I stopped that last part when I turned six.

New technology for disabled

The Idaho Assistive Technology Project (IATP) is here for YOU! Assistive Technology is any device or piece of equipment that increases the independence of people with disabilities, for example, phone amplifiers, hearing aids or power wheelchairs.

Our project is funded through a grant from the National Institute on Disability Rehabilitation and Research (NIDRR) with the U.S. Department of Education and has the goal of increasing the availability of assistive technology devices and services to ALL Idaho citizens who have disabilities.

We have just begun our second year of operation, and are excited with the successes we have made during our first year.

The staff of the IATP is proud of the progress made in establishing five regional assistive technology resource centers around Idaho.

These centers will provide services which include technology-related assessments and evaluations, information and referral of services, training to consumers and service providers, and public awareness and education.

Anyone who is interested in finding out about our project can contact us by calling 1-800-IDA-

TECH (800-432-8324).

Through our 800 number we can provide you with information about assistive technology, and refer you to the regional center closest to your home.

Persons with disabilities, their family and friends, and service providers for persons with disabilities can be assisted by our project to meet needs and create independence.

We look forward to talking with you!

the wheatfields abound.

With all these plans floating around, Moscow faces the possibility of losing itself to development, a thought that rightly scares native Muscovites. Moscow residents are mighty proud of their little hideaway, sheltered from many of the problems that plague our cities. We don't have crack dealers on the street. I sometimes jog at 1 a.m. without fear of getting assaulted.

According to my knowledgeable sources (a.k.a. instructor Kenton Bird), Moscow is growing at a rate of 3 percent a year, and shows no signs of letting up. More tangible signs of growth are the plans for building new houses; Moscow Heights, if you will. All this means less of that lovable small-town feeling and more of that congested suburban feeling.

Students are somewhat guilty too. It's no secret there is a lack of affordable housing off-campus, where the biggest percentage of students reside. Students camp out and pray to the good Lord to give them an apartment and then bitch that the place is a dump. I know; I've been there. So we are left asking for more apartments. There is no doubt we could use a few more.

But where do we draw the line? It would be nice to have lower rent and an abundance of apartments to choose from. But are we willing to forsake Moscow as we know it for large, look-alike apartment complexes with a few flowers and no yard? This writer is not.

I am not saying Moscow shouldn't grow. Well actually, I am saying that, but realistically I can't believe it.

But because I love Moscow and want it to remain in its pristine state, I may take the advice of those bumper stickers and go home.

PRINCIPLES of SOUND RETIREMENT INVESTING

IF YOU THOUGHT COLLEGE WAS EXPENSIVE, TRY PUTTING YOURSELF THROUGH RETIREMENT.

Think about supporting yourself for twenty-five, thirty years or longer in retirement. It might be the greatest financial test you'll ever face. Fortunately, you have one valuable asset in your favor. Time.

Time to take advantage of tax-deferral. Time for your money to grow.

But starting early is key. Consider this: if you begin saving just $100 a month at age thirty, you can accumulate $154,031* by the time you reach age sixty-five. Wait ten years and you'd need to set aside $211 a month to reach the same goal.

At TIAA-CREF, we not only understand the value of starting early, we can help make it possible—with flexible retirement and tax-deferred annuity plans, a diverse portfolio of investment choices, and a record of personal service that spans 75 years.

Over a million people in education and research are already enrolled in America's largest retirement system. Find out how easy it is to join them. Call today and learn how simple it is to put yourself through retirement when you have time and TIAA-CREF on your side.

HALLOWEEN HORRORS

Carving holes and cramming candles into innocent vegetables is an interesting tradition — one that falls somewhere between painting eggs and inviting trees into homes.

But apart from painting eggs, why would someone carve a face into pumpkins and light it up with a candle? Why not rutabagas or turnips or zucchinis? After all, there's always a healthy crop of zucchinis.

In actuality, pumpkins weren't the first choice for jack-o'-lanterns — turnips were.

It all started somewhere around the year 1900 when people in England had run-ins with eerie lights that appeared over bogs and marshes. The spooky lights bobbed and flickered like a lantern in someone's hand and became known as the Lantern Men, Hob-O'-Lantern, Will-O'-the-Wisp or Corpse Candles, if they happened to appear over graves dug in marshy places. It was warned that if someone followed a Will-O'-the-Wisp, he would be led to a watery death in the deepest and most dangerous part of the swamp.

The strange flickering light became known as the souls of sinners condemned to walk the earth till the end of time, but probably comes from the spontaneous combustion of methane, a marsh gas which frequents swampy areas and leaps into flame with the intention of congealing people's blood.

So how did the "Jack" get into Jack-O'-Lantern?

An Irish story tells of a never-do-well man, Stingy Jack. Seems Stingy Jack bested the Devil twice on Halloween by tricking him to spare Jack for one and 10 years, respectively.

But when Jack died of natural causes and was turned away at the gates of heaven, he headed to hell. The Devil, of course, wasn't too thrilled to see the man who tricked him and told him to go away. Jack replied, "But it's dark, how can I see my way?"

The Devil threw him a glowing coal, which Jack put in a turnip. Ever since, Jack has been roaming the face of the earth.

At Halloween, Scottish children find the largest turnips, Irish children use potatoes, and in parts of England, children use "punkies" or large beets. They hollow them out, carve faces to act as windows and place candles in them.

When Scotch and Irish immigrants came to the United States, they found bright orange pumpkins growing all over, perhaps thinking, "All right! These stand up better than turnips, are soft on the inside, and boy do they glow. I hate wasting good turnips every year when I could use an orange pumpkin instead."

Or so the story goes.

Halloween Costume Crusade

Ins and outs of spooky attire

Jenifer-Kooiman

Copy Editor

One of the most sacred Halloween traditions is dressing up in costume. I used to do this, when I was young, but now it's just a great big old pain in the butt, in my opinion. However, I know there are people out there who enjoy it. So, here are some guidelines for costuming in style.

WHAT'S OUT: Wayne and Garth. These are the two coolest guys around, and they're easy to imitate, but it's just been done too much. Let's face it, the movie's over and the sequel doesn't look too promising.

Beavis and Butthead: They weren't even around last Halloween, but I get this awful feeling that we're going to see about 100 Beavis and Buttheads running around the bars Saturday night. And they're all going to be doing really bad "huh-uh, huh" imitations. Perhaps we should alert the Moscow Fire Department.

Marsha Brady or anything even remotely similar. Enough with the polyester. I know we are fortunate to have Goodwill around, but disco is dead. Let sleeping dogs lie. Don't beat a dead horse. You can't get blood from a stone. Stop while you're ahead!

Pumpkins. This one is for the uncreative like myself. You get one of those pumpkin trash bags, fill it up with balloons, and presto! A pumpkin. Boring. Boring. Boring.

Condoms. Many people try this one but no one ever really gets it right. Cool idea, if you can make it look realistic.

WHAT'S IN: Demolition Man characters. I haven't seen anyone in Moscow with Sly Stallone's body, but if you think you can pull it off, more power to you. Do it this year, before it gets old.

Pat: I never saw anyone really do this right. Pat is one of the best characters "Saturday Night Live" has ever come up with, so let's see this one done well. Other good SNL characters are: Cajun Man, Opera Man, Nat X and Lyle the Effeminate Heterosexual.

Real-life costumes. The Pope (try a Pope-on-a-rope, you decide on the rope part); and high-ranking officials are always good. Firemen, policemen, etc. are good, but only if you can steal the authentic costume.

Cross-Dressers: Easy and fun too! Just talk to your girlfriends, if you're a guy, and borrow some makeup and clothes. However, if you're looking to score, you might run into problems.

Hideouts for outlandish outfits

Russ Woolsey

Lifestyles Editor

Scaring off the evil spirits on Halloween has been a custom for centuries, and rightfully so. Letting it all "hang out" once a year behind a mask should be considered nothing less than relaxing.

Here are a few tips on where to go to find the perfect costume for even the most outlandish costume ideas.

• For the creative and the imaginative costume seekers, the Goodwill Industries, located at 504 Main in Moscow, offers a wide assortment of clothing, jewelry, shoes, belts, hats, wigs and more. Eric Jacobson from Goodwill industries said, "We put out (Halloween) stuff out on the ninth and it has been busy ever since."

Several racks are available to rummage through, which contain Halloween accessories ranging from old lingerie to a variety of wigs, to dresses which reek of tackiness.

Jacobson said, "Already the stuff has been picked over; the earlier you get here, the better."

• For the extravagant and the ghoulish, Sun Rental Center, located at 624 Jackson in Moscow, offers over 200 costumes to choose from. Kevin Goodwin of Sun Rental said, "It's starting to just pick up now. By about mid-next week we will see a steady flow of last minute costume seekers."

Sun Rental has a wide range of costumes including costume ideas for the Grecian woman or barbarian man. A picture board has photographs of all the costumes Sun Rental carries, which includes one of their most popular costumes, "The deluxe Pope outfit." Goodwin said, "Every year the same guy comes in here and rents that costume for two days. It's very popular."

To rent a costume requires reservation and a damage deposit on the costume. In addition to the rental costumes, Sun Rental also has face paints, and accessories including swords, axes, bow and arrows and more. They also have a big assortment of rubber masks that are grim, ghoulish, sad, and fun.

If you still have a hard time finding the right costume after checking Sun Rental and Goodwill Industries, try the Army-Navy Store, located on Main, for camouflage apparel, scarfs, wool, and hunter oranges for creative costumes.

Drug stores and supermarkets usually carry the generic costume ideas for those who feel uncreative and who may be out of time.

Hall sponsors annual haunting

Janna-Dwelle

Staff Writer

The night before Halloween, residents of Targhee plan to scare people for profit, raising funds for the Wishing Star Foundation.

From 7 p.m. to midnight Oct. 30, Targhee will host their annual Haunted House.

Ali Khan, Targhee hall president, said families usually make up the greatest percentage of guests, although students also get thrills from the tour. He added residents throughout the house are warned before small children come through so "they can tone down the 'scary' a bit."

Participants will wind their way through a maze built from closet doors and tour various rooms of the house, which will display assorted horrific scenarios.

Resident Shawn Collins shared memories of last year's event. He said they filled their showers with leaves and twigs, even covering the walls with foliage. Then they plugged the drain and flooded the showers to create a humid swamp, complete with a "dead" body chained to the wall.

Khan told of standing, dressed in black, by a black wall in a dark hallway. Practically invisible to passersby, he surprised them by offering comments as they walked past. One startled girl, however, reacted by hitting him.

"I had to run away from her!" he recalled, laughing.

Khan emphasized, though, their Halloween extravaganza offers a safe and fun entertainment option for children as well as adults.

"We want to make sure it's safe. We don't want any accidents," he stressed.

Targhee residents will spend Saturday decorating and preparing the haunted house, along with members of their "little sister" hall, Steel House.

Saturday they also plan to host a softball tournament open to teams from all over campus. Targhee encourages residence halls, as well as Greek houses, to enter teams in the tournament. Anyone interested may contact Khan at 885-8679.

Khan said he hoped participants would notice the haunted house under construction and come by later in the evening.

Every year Targhee uses their haunted house to raise money for a charity. Wishing Star, the organization of choice this year, helps fulfill wishes for terminally ill children.

Targhee welcomes everyone on the Palouse to stop by and, for a $2 admission fee, experience their Halloween horrors.

Horrors give life to dead party

LaNae Quast

Halloween night, a crowd of adults nestle into the basement of a pitch-dark house. The windows are cracked and a slight chill spreads through the room. They begin telling the old tales of demons, madmen and ghosts which have been passed from generation to generation.

"Top it with blood red punch," said Leonard Perry, area manager of TR Video. He said a perfect Halloween party has all these elements, with the entertainment of a perfect horror movie.

For those who watch a horror movie only on Halloween, if forced to, the first or third in a horror movie series is a best bet, Perry said. All of the Halloween and Nightmare on Elm Street movies are good, though.

The Shining, and It, as well as any other Stephen King film, are sure bets, Perry said. Rhonda Goebel, manager of Howard Hughes Video, said The Exorcist is an all-time favorite, as well as Near Dark and Entity.

For the more loyal horror fan, Perry suggests The Horror Show, Candy Man or Phantasm. "Phantasm is a new film many horror fans may not have heard of," Perry said.

The best Halloween movie, however, is undoubtedly Pumpkinhead, Perry said. It is based on characters from American Folklore. A backwoods community is invaded by big-city bikers. An accident leaves a child dead and a father demands cold-blooded revenge. He invokes a demon, but never dreamed of the consequences.

Another highly requested video is The Rocky Horror Picture Show. It is a mad mix of classic horror and sci-fi. An "ordinary" couple and an unforgettable night at the castle of Dr. Frank-N-Furter, a mad scientist from the planet of Transsexual, make this film a hit, Perry said.

A group party can die a slow death with a cheesy horror movie. Avoid at all cost Slumber Party Massacre. A slumber party and an escaped mental patient with a portable drill will bomb any party. Other party killers include Brain Damaged and Grave Secrets.

Goebel said the worst horror movies at Howard Hughes are Chopper Chicks in Zombie Town and Auntie Lee's Meat Pies.

Instead, good group movies are Friday the 13th, Silver Bullet, the Halloween series and Creep Show. Creep Show is a series of short skits which keep interest.

The good videos go fast, so reservations should be made starting about a week before Halloween. October 27, Stephen King's new movie, Dark Half came out and will go fast, Perry said.

Trick or Treat offers delights

Tim Helmke

Knock-knock! Who is at the door but a little kid dressed up as their favorite character and yell "Trick-or-Treat" to get some more candy for Halloween.

The Towers will be the site of another safe place for parents to take their children to trick-or-treat. Residence coordinators chose to not organize this year's event so Student Action Team Network stepped in to ensure the event would continue. SATN is headed up by ASUI Senator Kristen Bennett.

Bennett has organized the event to take place on Sunday, Halloween night.

Parents can bring their kids to the lobby of the Tower and then residents will take them through the building to rooms where they can get candy and such. After they go to all the rooms which are handing out candy, the children will be taken to the basement for a haunted house.

In the haunted house, kids can experience in a safe way the spooks and thrills offered at most others. Organizers in the past have said this part of the evening is as much fun for the residents of the Tower as the kids.

Genaura Lee, resident of French Hall, said residents of the Tower look forward to this event every year. She said many residents were disappointed to see the event canceled and then pleased to see it brought back to life by SATN. "We tell out freshmen on the halls how much fun it is and then everyone gets excited to get involved in it," said Lee.

Parents can wait in the lobby area where they can munch on refreshments and talk to other residents of the Tower while their children are guided through.

It doesn't take too long to go through the whole route of rooms and the haunted house, so parents who wish to take their kids elsewhere to trick-or-treat can plan accordingly.

Snaut from Australia will bring their wackiness to the Moscow Social Club on Halloween.

Snaut to give Halloween treat

Russ Woolsey

Lifestyles Editor

Some say there is a time and a place for everything, and this Halloween night will be the time and place for Australian band Snaut, who will be playing 18 and over show at the Moscow Social Club at 9 p.m.

Snaut's music and stage performances go beyond the routine, the industrial or even the shocking.

Lead singer "Willie the f#@!ed Wallabic" from Brisbane, Australia is known for coming on to stage and violently wielding a chain-saw while wearing a diaper covered in mud.

Their stage performances are often judged by the amount of trash left on the floor after they leave. After a Snaut show one can expect everything from popcorn to meat products left on the floor.

Band member Tub said in a phone interview recently, "Our music may be music to some, but it is a religion to us."

And rightfully so.

Snaut often comes just short of sacrificing animals on stage. Their theatrics complement their music and can only be truly understood after seeing them perform.

Their first album Live in L.A., speaks for itself.

After leaving Australia the band found themselves in San Diego, Calif. where they recorded this uninviting rage about American society.

Snaut has since released Piss in Your Ass, which was recorded last summer. The album contains songs such as "Protein Spray," "Blow Me" and "In the Hole," all of which are

Our music may be music to some, but it is religion to us.

—Tub, member of Snaut

designed to pull the nerve cord of contemporary American society.

All songs contain a style only found in Snaut's repertoire. This style could be compared to music performed by Kiss who would be managed by Alice Cooper, while forced to sing Black Sabbath cover tunes.

In other words, Snaut has music tastefully their own.

While residing in Spokane Snaut has been punished by the press. In a St. Patrick's Day parade Snaut entered a float and threw dog food and chicken parts to waiting children, who ran and picked it up as if it were candy. Angry parents wrote letters to the Spokesman Review, outraged with "such entries" in the parade. Snaut's unique stage performances has them banned from all the bars in Spokane except for The Big Dipper and Outback Jacks.

But this banning has not slowed the steady following they

Something different at John's Alley

Russ Woolsey

Lifestyles Editor

Swayze Largo, a band from Portland, Ore., will be playing at John's Alley this Saturday at 9:30 p.m.

Swayze Largo's music is a groov'n unique blend from four Portland guys that sounds as if they are determined, cynical acoustic musicians on their demo tape, These'll be the Daze.

These'll be the Daze takes the listener back to the days of the early Mighty Lemon Drops.

Fast strumming acoustic guitars blend in with the soft but insightful voice of lead singer P.W. Wallace. Other elements add to the freshness displayed throughout their music such as a mood-setting french horn and a keyboard that offers even more calming yet upbeat elements.

Many don't often listen to lyrics while in a bar, but the lyrics of Swayze Largo ring with thought with such lines as, "She tells me that it is finite, and I tell her that it's fine, but I have never learned to walk that line," from the song "Baby with the Bath Water."

The thought-provoking turns to reality in the tune "Hippie with an Uzi" when they sound-off the lyrics, "Yeah, I'm a radical's nightmare, who needs the NRA?...I am a hippie with an uzi, don't tread on me, and don't talk about the loss of my short term memory."

Swayze Largo is P.W. Wallace, voice and string box; The Mad Splatter, Percussion; Daddy Dog, keyboards; and Woody Larger Bass strings.

Their sound is easy listening for those who are used to the loud sounds that usually come with the Alley. It's easy listening for temperamental minds and all who enjoy quality acoustics.

Cost will be $3 at the door.

Also playing at John's Alley this weekend will be local bluegrass band Ridgerunner on Friday night. The show should begin at 9 p.m., $3 at the door.

Bash at the SUB

Russ Woolsey
Lifestyles Editor

ASUI Productions will be celebrating Halloween as it presents Masquerade Madness, the sequel, this Saturday night in the SUB from 2 p.m. until midnight.

Bill Weppner of ASUI Productions said, "Booths will be set up from various living groups. The hockey team will have a shooting booth for kids, and other groups will have things like bean bag tosses."

The children's events will take place between 2-5 p.m. in the lobby and halls of the SUB.

Other entertainment will be provided, in addition to the booths set up for the younger folks.

A "Moonlight Bowling" extravaganza will take place in the SUB basement, and a costume party and dance will begin in the Ballroom at 9 p.m. and will last until midnight.

Music will be provided for dancing by KHTR from Pullman and should include a wide range of goulash sounds for Halloween-goers.

Weppner said, "Door prizes will be given away (including) pizzas, t-shirts, movie passes." He added that there will be prizes also given away for the best costume, but don't expect "a trip to the Bahamas or a new car."

This will be the second annual Masquerade Madness sponsored by ASUI Productions in conjunction with a number of other campus and community organizations.

Tickets are free for University of Idaho undergraduate students with identification, and $2 general admission.

have gained all over the Northwest.

Currently Snaut is ranked number ten on music charts in Walla Walla with their cut "Fist Full of Love" which is a song about masturbation.

Snaut has recently been in the studio recording a new album.

"Two or three of the songs on the new album will be played; a tribute to Wesley Allen Dodd," Tubb said.

They are also featured on a CD compilation titled East of Eden. East of Eden is a compilation of 20 Eastern Washington bands including Snaut with their cut "Chickoree Chick."

Snaut's music is driven by their five members that play a variety of instruments including guitars, off-the wall percussion, a horn section, and special effects.

Also featured on East of Eden is a band out of Spokane band called Beast of the Plow.

Beast of the Plow will be playing with Snaut this weekend. They will take the stage with their heavy duty music, a perfect primer for a twisted evening.

Beast of the Plow takes a hard, fast angle with their music, and have played with such notable bands, D.R.I., and Sweaty Nipples.

Music starts at 9 p.m. on Sunday night for those over 18 years of age. A $3 cover will be required at the door, and alcoholic beverages will be available in an adjacent bar for those over 21 years of age.

How to avoid Grizzlies

"There are basically two types of game: those that instinctively run away when you shoot at them and those that instinctively run toward you when you shoot at them."
—Ernest Hemingway

The hunter who nearly became lunch for a grizzly family in southwestern Montana on opening day added a third category to Hemingway's list: game that chases you regardless of what you do.

Recently, a father and son killed a female grizzly with four cubs as it chased the father from a timbered area into a clear cut. The pair was hunting in the upper Galliton canyon when he apparently surprised the bear, which charged. The father ran from the timber with the bear chasing him, then wheeled and fired one shot from less than 10 feet. The son then fired a shot, and the father fired again.

The incident occurred in an area of increasing grizzly-human encounters.

If Idaho succeeds in re-establishing grizzly bears into their former range in the Bitterroot Mountains, the likelihood of such encounters will increase. Some will argue this point, pointing to the Bob Marshall wilderness as an example of how grizzly and humans co-exist without conflict.

However, unlike black bears, grizzlies never benefited from sharing cramped quarters with man. Soon after one of the great bears mauls someone, kills livestock, or becomes a garbage junky, the bear(s) often wind up on the business end of a magnum rifle.

Outdoors with...
Nick Brown

Sneaking silently through heavy cover in Silvertip country never lowered anyone's life insurance premiums but often, it is the only way to effectively hunt elk.

In Idaho, there are three animals that will infrequently consider Homo sapiens as a source of protein: black bear, grizzly bear, and cougar.

Black Bear

The average person, when told a black bear will occasionally consider humans a nutritious meat exchange for elk calves, typically reacts with astonishment and disbelief.

Man's primitive ancestors probably furnished food for beasts with fangs and claws on a regular basis. Whatever could overtake man ate him. The invention of black powder changed that. Still, many outdoorsmen don't own firearms and enough black bears attack people each year (two so far in '93 that I'm aware of) that it warrants knowing how to respond when attacked.

Records show that when a blackie attacks, he is probably short of food, and probably considers you an easy meal. Do not play dead, unless you want to wind up in the bear's stomach. In the case of black bear, fight back with every ounce of strength you have and perhaps the bear will realize that he is attacking a human and not his regular prey.

Grizzly Bear

Playing dead has saved more than one camper from a grizzly attack, but in certain situations, might not be the best hand to play.

If you are spending much time in grizzly country, I would suggest reading Bear Attacks by Stephan Herrero, available at the University Library. Herrero has spent a lifetime documenting grizzly attacks, their causes, and victim responses.

A camp-raiding bear accustomed to feeding on garbage is responded to a lot differently than, say, a sow with cubs surprised at 30 yards in thick brush.

In fatal attacks, a bear kills its victim by disembowlement or by crushing bites at the base of the skull. If an attack is eminent, drop to the ground, curl into a tight ball, with the face drawn between the legs, and

Award winning beat at WAZZU

Russ Woolsey
Lifestyles Editor

A percussionist who co-produced an album with Mickey Hart of the Grateful Dead and won a Grammy for his album, Rhythm Experience, will be performing at the Beasley Performing Arts Coliseum this Sunday at 7 p.m.

Zakir Hussain, who has gained an international reputation for his performance on the classical tabla (Indian drum) will join world-renowned violinist Dr. L. Subramaniam for the Halloween performance.

Hussain's performances on the tabla have established him as a national treasure in his home country of India. Critics mark Hussain for his uncanny intuition and masterful improvisational dexterity.

He came to the United States at the age of 12 and embarked on a career which now includes more than 150 concert dates a year.

He has composed and recorded many albums and soundtracks, that he has gained widespread recognition as a composer.

In 1988 Hussain became the youngest composer to ever be awarded the title of Padma Shri, a title given to civilians of merit by the Indian government.

In addition to this award, Hussain was awarded the Indo-American Award in recognition of his outstanding cultural contributions to the relations between the United States and India.

Hussain co-produced with Mickey Hart the 1992 album Planet Drum, which won a Grammy for Best World Music Album, among other awards.

Playing with Hussain will be Dr. L. Subramaniam, also from India.

Subramaniam has a long history of music experience as well, not as a percussionist but as a violinist.

He has produced more than 75 recordings, including a five-volume "Anthology of Indian Music."

A reviewer for the Los Angeles Times wrote, "Violinist L. Subramaniam proved to be a peerless virtuoso. (His) poetic imagination formed inexhaustible permutations."

This will be the second time Subramaniam has performed at WSU; at the first performance Subramaniam highlighted International activities last spring.

The performance is sponsored by the International Relations Committee of the GPSA.

The performance is free and open to the public.

Symphony plays

The Washington Idaho Symphony has invited soprano Juli Holland Bauer to perform in Summer of Knoxville 1915 for this weekend's two performances.

This performance will mark Bauer's second appearance with the Washington Idaho Symphony. Bauer, an Idaho native, has been the Northwest Regional winner and national finalist for the Metropolitan Opera Auditions.

Bauer recently played the role of Mimi in Boise Opera's 1991 production of "La Boheme" and Gilda in the 1993 production of "Rigoletto" with the Metropolitan Opera.

Throughout her prominent career, Bauer has performed leading roles with Seattle Opera, San Diego Opera and Portland Opera, as well as with other regional companies.

Bauer will accompany the Symphony for the piece, written by Samuel Barber, and the music "promises to take you back to a quiet summer evening, reflecting its sounds, smells and thoughts," according to a recent release.

The first show will take place Saturday, Oct. 30, at 8 p.m. in the Lewiston Civic Theatre in Lewiston. A second performance is scheduled for Sunday, Oct. 31, at 3 p.m. in the Gladish Auditorium in Pullman.

Additional pieces to be enjoyed are La Gazza Ladra Overture, by Gioacchino Rossini, and Symphony No. 3 by Johannes Brahms, a piece described as "thoughtful and quietly emotional."

For ticket information, call (208) 882-6555 or 1-800-949-ARTS.

BEAR FROM THE WEST

arms locked across the top of the head and base of the neck. The objective is to protect the head, neck, and abdomen, as much as possible.

Perhaps the safest precaution of all, wherever grizzlies are encountered, is to carry enough gun for what it may be called on to do. I know of one Montana elk hunter who would vouch for that!

Cougar

I've seen more cougar than bull elk this fall. Two of them were stalking the same spike bull I had designs on. Across the West, cougar numbers are increasing due to increased protection and an increased prey base. This area is no exception. In Elk River this year, cougars have boldly walked into town and killed livestock. Cougars in North Central Idaho have stalked hunters and entered campgrounds to chase screaming campers. A couple of years ago, a cougar killed a Colorado jogger, consumed part of the man's flesh and partially buried him—the same way the cat would prey on deer.

If attacked, do not play dead. Resist the urge to run, face the cat, and try to appear as large and threatening as possible. Like a black bear, the cat might be considering you as dinner. Resist the attack to your utmost.

Bears require more caution. One Alaskan guide offered this rule of thumb: never surprise a bear if you can help it and don't let a bear surprise you. Above all avoid a kill or something the bear has claimed as its own, such as freshly killed elk or gut pile.

Lumberjacks, the next UI victims

After a disappointing loss to the Montana State Bobcats last week, the University of Idaho Vandals take on the Northern Arizona Lumberjacks this weekend.

Saturday the Vandals meet the Lumberjacks in the Skydome. Kick-off is scheduled for 6:05 p.m.

Eastern Washington recorded a 38-36 victory over the Lumberjacks last week. Last season, the Vandals pummeled the Lumberjacks 53-14 in the Kibbie Dome.

Vandals no longer leading the pack

The University of Idaho's loss to Montana State last Saturday dropped the Vandals a few notches on the Sports Network Poll.

Idaho dropped from the No. 1 position in the I-AA poll to No. 7. Montana State, on the other hand, improved their standing with the win. They move up the ranking ladder to No. 24.

The Vandals aren't the only team in the Big Sky Conference occupying a spot in the top 10. Montana went from No. 8 to No. 4 with a decisive victory over Jacksonville State.

Washington State University nabbed a double victory over the University of Idaho in hockey action last weekend.

WSU took meager 3-2, 4-3 victories over UI at the Eagles Ice Arena Saturday and Sunday.

"The goal tending all around was great," UI team captain Scott Squires said. "These were some of the lowest scoring games we've played."

Saturday, UI held a 2-1 advantage at the end of the first half and WSU tied the game with 4 minutes, 39 seconds remaining in the third period. The game was taken right to the wire as WSU and UI were tied at 3-3 as the final minute began ticking off the scoreboard.

"WAZZU got the goal when they needed it," Squires said. "They scored the winning goal with 32 seconds left, it was just good heads up play."

Chuck Edwards turned in an exceptional performance defending the UI nets.

"Considering it was our first game he really held us in there to the very end," Squires said.

Sunday's game was just as close.

WSU jumped to an early 2-0 lead, but UI tied the game in the second period. Chad Hash, assisted by Squires and Chad Christopher, put the UI on the scoreboard. Mike Smiley on an assist from Squires knocked the second UI goal into the net.

"That got us back into the game," Squires said.

WSU scored the final goal to win the game in the third period.

Tomorrow evening UI takes on WSU again. The game is scheduled for 9 p.m. Sunday at 10 a.m. UI meets the University of Montana. Both games are in the Eagles Ice Arena.

Pizza and soda, an enticement to any student, were available to all who attended the first Student Booster Luncheon Wednesday.

Interested students were welcome to the Multi-Purpose Room amidst the University of Idaho Athletic offices to learn more about the Student Booster organization.

"We're here to get the ground swell going and get people excited," UI Athletics Marketing and Promotions Director Tom Burman said.

Students with a wide range of interests attended the meeting. Architecture majors, communication majors in journalism and public relations and business majors all showed up.

"I really think that the source of power on any campus is the students," UI head men's basketball coach Joe Cravens said.

The Athletic Department was represented by Pete Liske, Burman, Mindy DeGroot, Laurie Turner, Joe Cravens and John L. Smith.

"It will take people with all levels of time commitment and interest to do this," Burman said.

Jackson accepts coaching challenge at Idaho

Eric Jackson, first year Vandal secondary coach, discusses defensive strategy with freshman Chris Waddell (54) during practice Thursday.

Andrew-Longeteig
Staff Writer

The Vandals' first loss of 1993 shouldn't have been all that surprising to the fans and media.

The offense decided to arise from their slumber in the third quarter, and the defense was scorched for a season-high 40 points against a respectable but not usually dominating Montana State attack.

Many critics say it was the defense that lost the game, maybe even the secondary.

"We were very flat," states secondary coach Eric Jackson. "You've seen it before. There's a lesson to be learned whether you're number one in the country or number 80 in the country. Everybody's got to be ready."

Nevertheless, every one of the Vandal coaches and players were outplayed and plain out of luck. Jackson's secondary was unfortunately a part of this.

Jackson is in his first year of coaching at Idaho. The last two years he served as defensive coordinator at Division III Alma College in Alma, Michigan. In addition, he has coached at Cincinnati, Cornell, and a spring professional team, the Nevada Aces. Jackson actually turned down a job offer at the University of Michigan soon after accepting the position at Alma College.

Jackson, 29, played collegiately at Eastern Michigan, lettering twice. He graduated in 1987 with a major in history and is fluent in three languages.

So what attracted Jackson to the friendly confines of Moscow?

"You never want to go someplace where you're not comfortable," he said. "I'm especially impressed with John L. (Smith). The program has set standards. A lot of people don't know how hard our guys work. That's our edge—hard work."

Jackson has coached all over the United States and saw the coaching opportunity at Idaho a worthy challenge.

"In the Midwest, all the people do is run the ball. All the people who throw the ball are from the Southwest and the Big Sky Conference. I wanted to come to a conference that throws the ball."

He has seen plenty of passing, as the Big Sky is once again the most prolific passing conference in I-AA. Luckily, he doesn't have to face the Vandals' offense.

"Everybody's kind of putting pressure on us," adds Jackson. According to him, the secondary has "peaked and valleyed" this season. "We always talk about consistent play. Even in last week's game, guys were in position to make plays," in which Jackson deems to be the most important—the secondary's lack of speed is countered by anticipating where the receiver and ball are going.

His secondary is led by safeties Cole Wilson and Miregi Huma, and cornerbacks Tommy James and Cedric West.

During the second quarter of last week's game, Wilson suffered an injury that sidelined him for the rest of the game.

"He's a very consistent player," says Jackson.

The Vandals take on the improving Northern Arizona Lumberjacks Saturday.

Jackson declares his secondary will remain, "Pretty basic. They have to know what their assignments are. Sometimes they get antsy and that's gonna cause a bust. They see the front seven making big plays and they want to get into the action too."

Idaho's schedule doesn't soften after NAU, as they will battle first-place Montana. The Idaho defense will face quarterback Dave Dickinson, averaging 352 yards in total offense per game.

The Vandals' secondary should be improving each week, though. The relationship between Jackson and his players began in the spring and will continue through next year as they lose just one player, backup corner Mike Greene.

Jackson explains his first year as being nerve-wracking, "I'm gonna have some gray hairs after this year. This is a challenge I want."

UI cross country prevails

Kate Lyons-Holostine
Sports Editor

HAYDEN LAKE — Angie Mathison and Jason Uhlman led the University of Idaho women's and men's cross country teams at the North Idaho College Invitational Cross Country meet last weekend.

The men's team finished second behind the Eastern Washington Eagles and the women's team finished first.

In addition to pacing the UI women's team, Mathison broke the standing course record. She crossed the finish line in 18 minutes, nine seconds.

Robin Betz and Laura Moore finished second and third respectively at the Vandals. Betz finished in 18:25 and Moore crossed the finish line at 18:48.

EWU finished first in the men's competition with a team score of 22 and UI followed with a score of 36. Spokane Community College and NIC finished third and fourth, respectively.

Jason Uhlman was the first UI runner across the finish line and the second finisher of the race.

Uhlman's finish time was 26:13.4.

EWU's Greg Kuntz, the first place runner, paced the pack with a finish time of 25:37.9.

Dave Czajka finished 6th overall, second for UI, in 26:32. Adam Vargas and Chris Tarabochia finished in the top 15 runners for the Vandals.

Scott Spear was back on the cross country trails this weekend, after recovering from a bicycle-car accident earlier this semester.

The UI ran without the services of top runner Frank Bruder, who is out with bronchitis. Kienen Slate is also missing from the UI roster. He is also ill.

Bruder will be back for the Big Sky Conference Championships next month. The championships are scheduled for Nov. 13 in Salt Lake City, Utah. The team runs 5 mile courses throughout much of the season, but the conference championship course is 10 kilometers.

If interested in joining the UI men's cross country team, call graduate assistant coach Dave Smith or head coach Mike Keller at 885-0200.

UI's Black Widows record 26-0 win

WALLA WALLA, Wash. — Carrying momentum from a tournament championship in Boise last week, the University of Idaho Black Widows shut out Whitman College 26-0 Saturday in rugby action.

Sig Jensen initially scored for the Black Widows on a penalty play at the one-yard line.

Quickly, a second score came off a switch play in the backline.

Then Kim Gortz-Reaves executed a double fake and passed to Kirsten Cornell for a third scoring try. Cornell scored again in the second half.

Black Widow, Jen Hopkins kicked for three conversions.

The Black Widows return to action Saturday at 1 p.m. on Guy Wicks Field.

Anyone interested in joining the team and learning to play rugby are welcome to attend practice.

The team practices on Guy Wicks Field Monday, Wednesday and Thursday at 4:30 p.m.

For more information call Sig at 883-0152.

Burman envisions developing a core of student directors along with a supporting general membership.

"We want to have a lot more kids to be close to and involved in the program," Liske, UI Director of Athletics, said.

"We'd love to hear from as many people as possible about how they can get involved...it all enhances what we do here at the UI," Liske added.

Students are offered opportunities in marketing, promotions, sales, event management and public relations. Involved students would work directly with local businesses, UI Alumni, UI Athletic Dept. administrators and other student organizations.

"Every person would have a function," Burman added. "We don't want to make it so it's like your working yourself into the ground. We want to make it worthwhile, fun and exciting."

The organization was formed last spring under the direction of Liske. Anyone interested in becoming involved should contact John Marble in the UI Athletic offices at 885-0200.
