Marble shakes Sheikh by 70 votes

While half-torn election flyers still cling precariously to buildings and sidewalks, their purpose is at an end.

Wednesday's fall ASUI and GPSA elections have brought new student leaders to University of Idaho government.

Only 15 percent of the undergraduate student population showed up to the polls as 1,558 out of more than 10,000 registered students voted. This number is up, however, from last year's total voter turnout of 1450. In a press release, current ASUI President Richard Rock attributed the low number of student voters to their satisfaction with the way the ASUI Senate was run this past year.

Undergraduates chose published teacher evaluations and lower ASUI student fees as the majority placed their vote for ASUI Presidential Candidate John Marble. Amtul Sheikh came in at a close second place with only 70 votes less than Marble's 709. Candidates Robert Mendenhall and Christopher LaPaglia received 69 and 39 votes, respectively.

Allison Lindholm ran unopposed for the vice-presidential slot, garnering almost 70 percent of the votes. Write-in candidate and KUOI Station Manager Shea Meehan received 19 votes. Other write-ins included Jay Craig and Will Hart who received 17 and 9 votes, respectively.

Leaving the rest of the candidates 37 votes behind, Laura West will join the ASUI as a first-time senator. As the only female in the senate race, West wants to focus on women's issues on campus. Incumbent Sean Wilson will return to his seat and lend his experience to next semester's ASUI Senate.

Jeremy Winter, also a newcomer, captured the third highest number of votes with his campaign emphasis on safety programs and campus recycling. Ian James and Scott Wimer rounded out the list of new senators, each hoping to lend fresh political views to next year's Senate.

Greg Hurn and Chad Moore failed to achieve their goals of becoming ASUI Senators as they finished the list with 555 and 436 votes, respectively.

In Moore's fourth campaign for a senate seat, he made the students his focus, deriding the Senate for "looking out too much for their futures."

Students made their choice clear as 86 percent of the voters marked the Student Union Building as the preferred name of the building which is in the midst of a name game. Over the course of the semester, the SUB Board and SUB Director David Mucci have been trying out the new name of Idaho Union - The Student Center. IU captured 70 votes (1147 less than the SUB).

IU is currently used as the building's name even though the final decision has not been made. As a result of student opposition to the name change, a referendum was placed on the election ballot.

Although the final decision will be made by Mucci, students hope their opinions will affect Mucci's choice.

Other name options included Vandal Union Building, Idaho Student Union and Idaho Student Union Building.

GPSA election results revealed Michael Brennan will take the helm as the next GPSA president, defeating candidate Shaun Maxey.

The vice president position went to Bill Owens, who was running against Ted Munsch.

Mirzab Baig pulled the top spot to become the next GPSA secretary. Baig was running against Maria Lourdes Chacon.

Roger Adams ran unopposed for treasurer and Jim Gardner also was the single name on the ballot for Faculty Council Representative.

Bike thefts race through campus

Gregory H. Burton
Staff Writer

Over $4,000 worth of bicycles have disappeared on campus over the past two weeks.

Over Halloween Tyler Stevens of Delta Tau Delta fraternity said his red and white Mountain Goat bicycle, valued at $1,250, was stolen.

The bike, which was locked with a Kryptonite Lock, was taken from outside the fraternity. Both the lock and the bike were missing.

On Nov. 2 Greg Iverson, of Theta Chi fraternity, reported his Silver Trek Mountain Bike was stolen from the bike rack at his fraternity.

Iverson said the bike was worth $900 and was locked with an anti-theft weave cable lock. The lock was also missing.

Thane Twiggs, of 303 Sweet Ave., said his Specialized Rock Hopper was stolen from his apartment Nov. 11.

Twiggs' bike, valued at $450, was not locked.

Three other stolen bicycles were listed in last week's crime stats.

Nickolas Kuhlmann, #6 Central Syringa Trailcourt, reported he was battered Monday at 7 p.m.

Kuhlmann said while he was attempting to turn on Deakin Street, he exchanged pointed glances with the driver of a white Honda CRX, who then followed him to Lot 17.

When Kuhlmann exited his car and tried to walk away, he said the other driver yelled, "Hey I'm talking to you," and then came up from behind Kuhlmann and hit him in the side of the head.

Kuhlmann said when he turned and started to fight back, the passenger of the CRX grabbed him, and then both men got back in the CRX and drove away.

Kuhlmann reported losing a contact lens and school books valued at $110.

Several people reported a white compact hatchback car with a strobe light was attempting to pull over other cars on Deakin Street Saturday morning at 12:15 a.m.

Witnesses reported several "college age males" were responsible.

Snow removal improves time, planning

Helen Harshbarger
News Editor

As the Moscow winter approaches, icy roads and sidewalks present a danger to students, whether they are walking or driving on campus.

Facilities Management's snow removal and ice control program is based specifically on meeting the transportation needs of the campus community with the least possible disruption to its schedule.

With this goals in mind, priorities have been set to make the removal efforts run more effectively.

When one inch or more of snow accumulates on the campus sidewalks, the sidewalk crew will be dispatched to begin removal operation. Main arterial sidewalks and walkways are cleared by the crew first. Secondary and tertiary sidewalk clearance follows. Steps, entryways, ramps, disabled parking spaces and other areas are cleared in an order of high use to low use.

The street and parking lot crew will begin removal operations once two inches or more of snow fall occurs. It is important to first clear the main arterial campus streets.

Once the street and parking lot crew open these roadways, they will begin to clear snow from gold lots, lateral campus streets, and green lots, respectively. Red, blue and silver lots then follow.

Given a two-inch snow fall and the current resources, it may take several days to fully complete snow removal in all areas and follow-up sanding, rocking and other ice control measures.

It is helpful for the campus community to be aware of the sequence of snow operation and give the crews time to complete their work in the most efficient manner. Plans need to be worked out on a formal basis in advance, but it is understood that contingencies will be needed as well.

Improvements to the overall snow removal program have been developed this year to enhance response time and field checks.

The improvement which should have the largest impact in this season's operation is the earlier response times which have been scheduled. Crews may begin operation as early as 3 a.m. during the workweek.

Also, a higher priority will be given to snow removal during the weekends, especially in campus housing areas.

More effective use of de-icers and sand will be made on sidewalks, steps and other pedestrian areas. Sand containers will be placed around campus to be used by anyone having a need for additional traction.

Ice buildup on buildings will be monitored and corrective action taken when necessary to prevent hazardous conditions.

Field checks of walks, lots and streets will occur more often to ensure adequate travel routes remain as open as possible.

Most all the crews involved with the program are now centralized within the Facilities Management Ground Department, which will better facilitate coordination of the various aspects of the program.

For more information or question and concerns, call the Facilities Management service desk at 885-6246.

Council amends anti-discrimination policy

Natalie Shapiro
Staff Writer

There were no dissenting votes Tuesday evening as the University of Idaho Faculty Council voted 12-0 to adopt changes to the amendment, adding sexual orientation to the UI anti-discrimination policy.

This spring, the Faculty Council voted to add sexual orientation to the UI anti-discrimination policy. However, there were concerns about the language, so Council Chair Molly Stock created an ad hoc committee to address changes.

The proposed draft states "Practices or regulations that discriminate on the basis of sexual orientation are neither condoned nor permitted. This policy applies to only the following University of Idaho operations: personnel decisions, student admissions and evaluation, student disciplinary regulations, student housing, use of dining halls, classrooms or other facilities, and in the provision of educational services by its employees."

Elizabeth Brandt, a member of the Affirmative Action Committee, which developed the proposal, said there is a need for such an amendment.

"There are many gay and lesbian members of the university who live in total fear that they may be discovered and retaliated against. The university needs to put its money where its mouth is, that it's bad to discriminate, and it's willing to put the institution on the line to do this, to make sure it doesn't happen, and if it does, there is a remedy," Brandt said.

Mark Anderson, chair of the ad hoc committee, said the university was legally responsible for monetary damages.

"It's legally binding and enforceable in court. It would bind the university with faculty, students and staff," Anderson said. Brandt noted about 100 universities have adopted such provisions and she isn't aware of any litigation cases.

Anderson said currently there is no state or federal law to allow gays or lesbians to petition for redress if they are discriminated against.

Brandt noted later that the policy change wouldn't affect free speech or affirmative action. She made an analogy with race: "Nothing prohibits anyone from saying racist things. However, when acting on the university's behalf, one couldn't say racist things, and they couldn't discriminate on the basis of race."

She added UI affirmative action policies only applied to race and gender.

"There is no program for disability, religion or national origin. The university would have to amend the affirmative action code to add any of these," Brandt said.

One Council member said students have inquired about the section on housing. The proposed section on housing states that although discrimination on the basis of sexual orientation is not allowed "... this policy shall not affect the discretion of the university housing office to reallocate rooms and room assignments based on the needs of individual students, nor UI housing policies which offer housing on the basis of parenthood or the existence of a legally recognized marriage."

James Bauer, Director of Residence Life, said later "currently there is no policy for same-gender couples. The criteria is that people be full-time students." He noted the new amendment wouldn't change how they allocated housing.

Brandt added later that the language on housing would enable the existing housing policy to continue.

"The housing policy is based on parenthood, full-time student and married. The highest priority is two married students that are full-time with kids. That is the highest on the list and that won't change. Next comes single with kids, two people co-habiting, etc," Brandt said.

She added that there are currently unmarried students in family housing; students co-habiting or single parents with grandparents. Same-gender couples would be treated the same as heterosexual co-habiting couples.

The proposal next will go to the rest of the faculty for a vote, and if they approve the changes, it will be signed by President Elizabeth Zinser as an amendment to the current anti-discrimination policy.

1% Initiative

Ron Rankin returns with a new hope for lowering property taxes in Idaho

Darin Crisp
Staff Writer

The 1% Initiative is back, changed and ready for a new year, a new election and a new hope of lowering property taxes in Idaho.

Ron Rankin, leading proponent, answered questions at a session of Professor Landon Curry's State and Local Politics class yesterday morning. While introducing his stance, he claimed since the 5 percent budget/levy cap in place since 1983 had been removed, the skies had been "raining money" on state and local government.

Once into his discussion, Rankin advocated funding schools entirely out of the state general fund in order to relieve the burden of property taxes. His argument: the general fund has increased to $148 million, with most of the increase unexpected by state officials.

Rankin said whatever shortfall in necessary funding may arise could be offset by dropping the rest of the exemptions in the sales tax. At this time, he said, 60 percent of all sales are exempt.

When asked why he chose the initiative process, effectively circumventing the normal diplomatic process of give and take in solving problems, he claimed a lack of resolve on the legislature made the initiative process the only method available.

When his proposal was examined, it was found to advocate:

- adjusting the maximum amount of tax so it did not exceed 1 percent of the assessed value;
- ensuring that property currently taxed at a rate less than 1 percent shall not experience an increase in tax;

- provided for a grandfather clause for special levies that went into effect before the proposed tax limitation takes place.

The initiative requires local governments to maintain all emergency services at a level as good as or greater than those in effect as of Oct. 1, 1994. If there is not enough money to do this, funding will be obtained from less essential activities.

The initiative calls for a two-thirds majority of votes in the election to pass any tax over 1 percent of property value. The initiative claims the two-thirds majority is needed to offset the potential voter turnout of over 61,000 students from university and high schools around the state.

The requirement to revert responsibility for funding of public schools to state and federal sources, as well as a requirement to reduce less essential programs should funding fall short was also included, though maintaining full authority of local school boards.

Finally, the initiative is set to go in effect Jan. 1, 1995, and states that if any portion of the initiative falls under legislative or legal onslaught, the rest will stand in full force.

Rankin was asked the difference between California's Proposition 13 and the proposed 1 percent initiative, and why, if California now cannot support its services because of the enforced tax ceiling, Idaho won't experience the same problem.

Rankin explained California had a surplus with their system of billions of dollars for about five years, but ate into their surplus with welfare state support programs.

He also said California's system allows an uneven tax assessment, based on property sales price. Under their system, Rankin explained, a house sold 10 years ago for $100,000 will be assessed for that price, while a house right next door, sold recently for $200,000, will be assessed at that price. When asked why Idaho won't experience the same problem, his reply was that the constitution won't allow it.

Rankin is currently engaged in an attempt to prosecute two UI professors for conflict of interest. The two agricultural economics professors from the Agricultural Extension office led an education program around the state at taxpayer expense in order, claims Rankin, to combat the 1 percent initiative. Neither Dr. Neil Meyer or Dr. Stephen Cooke, the two professors in question, were available for comment yesterday evening.

ROTC battalion best in West

The University of Idaho's Chrisman Battalion has received the 1993 General Douglas MacArthur Award as the best battalion in the 4th U.S. Army ROTC region in the medium school category.

"The MacArthur Award is the most prestigious unit level ROTC award given nationally," said Lt. Col. Lloyd Scoot, chair of the UI Department of Military Science and professor of Military Science for Army ROTC.

The MacArthur Foundation and ROTC Cadet Command present the MacArthur Award annually to Army ROTC units with the best overall performance in terms of production of quality lieutenants. Selection is based on scores at ROTC Advanced Camp, on overall unit training programs and on the unit's ability to retain cadets who show leadership and excellence in both their military training and university performance.

UI's Chrisman Battalion received the award in recognition for their outstanding performance during the 1992-93 school year and at 1992 Advanced Camp at Fort Lewis, Tacoma, Wash. The 4th region consists of all units west of the Mississippi.

Major General Darrell Manning, adjutant general for the Idaho National Guard, presented the award at the ROTC formal Dining-In dinner Nov. 6. Accepting the award were UI President Elisabeth A. Zinser and Cadet Patrick Devine, the cadet battalion commander.

Scott said the award serves as an incentive to encourage recruitment and retention.

"Success breeds success. This award shows the quality of our training program here at the University of Idaho. We have 94 cadets this year who are working hard and having fun as they try to earn the award next year. The whole ROTC experience is about developing leadership. In all of our activities, whether rappelling or white-water rafting, executing infantry squad tactics or physical training, the cadre here at UI teaches leadership and the confidence to exercise that leadership."

Student severely attacked

A University of Idaho student was severely attacked last Friday night after the JudyBats concert.

Shane Lambing was returning home with his roommate Steve Hanchett around 1:00 a.m. when a Toyota pickup passed them and someone shouted out the window.

"As we walked into the parking lot of our apartment, the truck stopped, and the passenger went straight to Shane," said Hanchett. The assailant then started hitting Lambing. "He asked Shane 'What did you call me?' but Shane hadn't said anything. It was completely unprovoked."

Hanchett said the assailant called the driver over by name, and then proceeded to kick Lambing in the head. Hanchett said the driver didn't join in the attack.

Lambing was hospitalized with a concussion, swelled-up eyes and a dislocated thumb. When interviewed Tuesday, he said he was at the point where he could have a conversation.

"I couldn't think in straight lines. It's screwed my classes up too."

Moscow Police Detective Neil Odenborg said there are no suspects, although they have found a person they are questioning.

Dean of Students Bruce Pitman said as the incident occurred off campus, the assailant cannot be expelled if he is a student.

Cockroaches bring insect appreciation

The Madagascar hissing cockroach, a big bug with a hard red and brown shell, is the insect ambassador to students in University of Idaho Professor Marc Klowden's beginning entomology class.

"To internalize something, you've got to make something important to you," said Klowden. The first assignment in the class is for students to take a cockroach home and take care of it for a semester.

This cockroach is perhaps most noteworthy because of its name — hissing.

"They hiss. It seems like they're communicating with you and that makes it a little more personal," Klowden said.

The hissing sound is used for defense and courtship and can be spurred by just touching the cockroach, he said.

Klowden chose this particular roach for several reasons.

"They're nice because they're large and they're slow," he said. They also can't become established because they come from a tropical climate, he said.

"I get call from the dorms all the time," he said about when students

I didn't realize cockroaches could climb Tupperware.

Entomology student take their pets home with them, "asking if the cockroaches are going to take over."

For most people, a cockroach would not be their first choice for a pet, even among insects.

"They're dirty and gross," said Cathlin McGee, a UI senior taking Klowden's class.

While McGee grew accustomed to the idea of living with a cockroach, her housemates were not so quick to accept it, she said.

Only five hours after being settled in its new home — a plastic container with a waxed paper cover — the cockroach, Bertha, had escaped.

"I didn't realize cockroaches could climb Tupperware," McGee said.

"The cockroach went down to our room, we could smell it," said one housemate, Marci Houston.

The smell the Madagascar hissing cockroach emits can be very strong. Not all of them smell, said Klowden. It depends on age and whether the cockroach is in a mating stage, he said.

Three months after her disappearance, Bertha turned up again.

Klowden said when classes in elementary schools learn about insects, the kids are enthusiastic, but the teacher will shiver in the corner. People soon lose their early acceptance of insects, he said.

And if somebody can learn to love a cockroach, maybe it won't be so hard to look at all insects more respectfully.

McCall rest stop encourages safety

Tim Helmke
Staff Writer

Encouragement to University of Idaho students returning home to southern Idaho for the holidays will be available at a Vandal Rest Stop in McCall Sunday morning.

The Vandal Rest Stop is geared towards students on their way home and people working at the station will provide a subtle message to students, encouraging them to be safe in their actions, according to coordinator Chris Wuthrich, who also serves as UI Assistant Greek Adviser.

Students will have an opportunity to meet with other Vandals and alumni as well as enjoy a break during the long drive home, said Wuthrich.

Free refreshments, including coffee, soft drinks and cookies, will be available to those students interested. From 9 a.m. - 2 p.m. Sunday at the Rotary Park in McCall, students can stop and enjoy these treats provided.

"We wish to increase awareness regarding alcohol and other drugs and promote safety in the students trip to and from school," said Wuthrich.

The Vandal Rest Stop is co-sponsored by Student Advisory Services, the UI Alumni Association and the UI Parents Association.

Staff members, parents and alumni will all be on hand in McCall to meet with the students and encourage safety in their travels.

Wuthrich explained as well that this Vandal Rest Stop is the first of a series of them to be held around vacation times.

"We are trying to organize a series of these rest stops as to reach all of our UI students. We hope to continue as long as the grant lasts, which is for two years, and maybe eventually be taken over by the alumni and parents groups," said Wuthrich.

The Vandal Rest Stop is part of a $100,000 grant Student Advisory Services received in June from the Department of Education.

The grant came from the FIPSE Drug Prevention Programs in Higher Education and is one of the largest and most prestigious grants ever received by student services, said Wuthrich.

"To receive $100,000 in a grant for student services offers us an opportunity to educate students on important issues. That amount in research is only a drop in the bucket, but for us in student services, it opens a lot of potential," said Wuthrich.

Wuthrich explained the overall goal of the grant and the efforts provided through the funding to encompass several areas.

"We need to change the culture on campus. Drinking isn't the focus as there are other activities to involve students in rather than thinking they need to focus on alcohol all of the time," said Wuthrich.

ASUI Ride Program needs riders, drivers

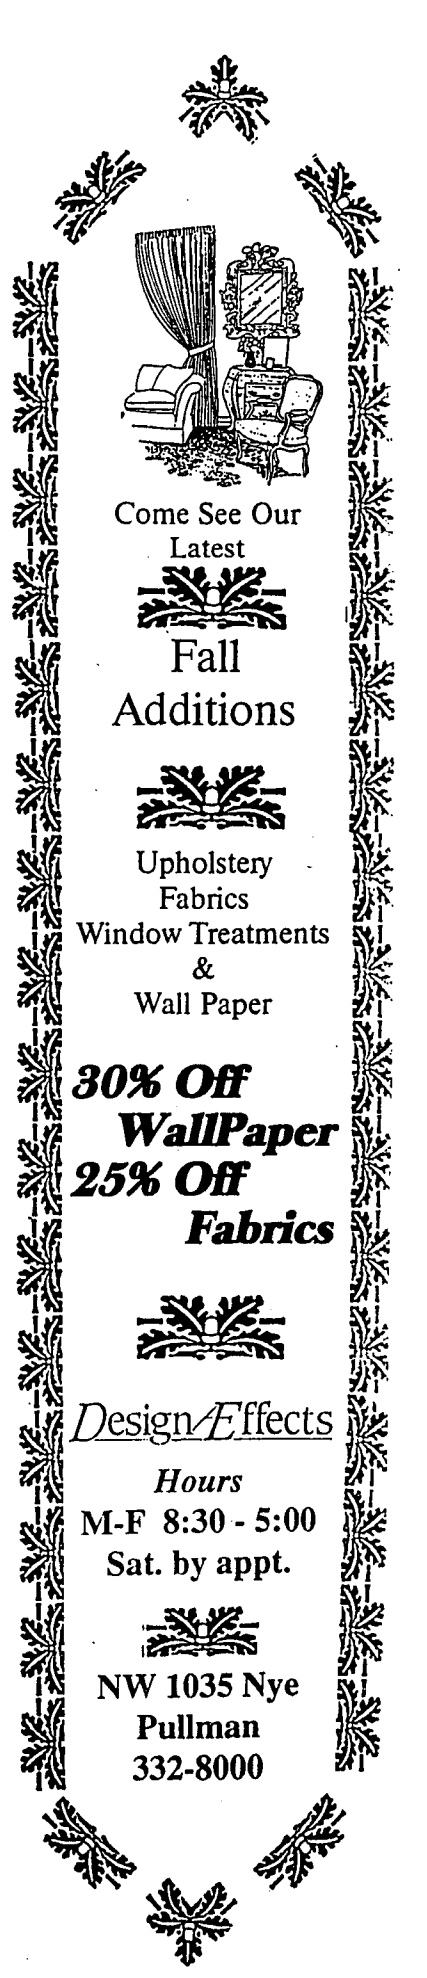

About this time every year, students ponder how they will get their bodies and belongings home for the holidays.

Thanks to the ASUI Ride Program, this question is being answered for UI students.

In its third year of operation and gaining steam each year, the Ride Program links drivers and riders together heading in the same direction for the holidays.

"There are a number of students searching for rides home this Thanksgiving and Christmas," said ASUI Senator Sean Wilson, a coordinator of the effort. "If more students knew about the program, it would be used to its fullest potential. It is an efficient and economical way to travel home."

Wilson encouraged those willing to share their automobile with a students passenger or those in need of a ride to participate. Interested individuals may visit the ASUI Senate Office on the first floor of the Student Union Building or call the office at 885-6331 to sign up.

Students should consider transferring to UW

It may be in the best interest for University of Idaho students to pack their bags and enroll in the University of Washington.

Seems students there get better grades.

About 70 percent of the grades handed out at UW are A's and B's. Compare that to 54.8 percent at UI. Maybe UW students are smarter. Word has it their admissions standards are higher, and coupled with the fact that larger schools tend to attract high school students with higher grade point averages, they just might have a few more working brain cells.

Perhaps.

A national accrediting body stated in a recent report that in 1992 UW undergraduate students received 70 percent A's and B's, giving them an average grade point average of 3.1. The report also pointed out that the percentage of A's and B's was up significantly from ten years ago, despite the fact that students failed to score higher on standardized tests.

The students at UW certainly don't think their grades are inflated, that is, puffed up for work they haven't done — just as UI students would hate to admit that maybe they didn't work hard enough to justify that last A or B.

It is interesting, though, to compare UW's grade inflation, so to speak, to UI's. In 1983, UW's A's and B's were given to students 60 percent of the time, leaping to 1993's 70 percent. UI students, on the other hand, earned 49.5 percent A's and B's, rising to only 54.8 percent in the fall of 1982 and 1992 respectively, with a grade point average of 2.79 in 1992, as figured by Registrar Matt Telin.

UW experienced a ten percent leap while UI rose only 5.3 percent; UW's grades have risen twice as fast as Idaho's, probably because Washington students are twice as smart. Washington State University, another land grant institution, also has a higher percentage of A's and B's than UI — 59 percent in 1992. That's only 4.2 percent higher, as compared to 15.2 from UW. Either, though, is enough of an edge for UI students to envy the last time an A barely slipped from their grasp, or for that matter, a C.

The higher-end grades aren't the only factor here. There might be more students receiving C's than the failing grades they deserve. So now they have a diploma that says they're ready to work.

However, there's many factors involved with these numbers. For instance, school administrators and instructors may have changed their teaching strategies away from the Bell curve to a scale that measures if the student has mastered the material. Or take a raise in admission standards, and also with UI, a new chance to nail an A in English 104 classes where the grading system is now A-B, Pass-Fail.

Maybe UW students have gotten exceedingly nasty with teacher evaluation forms, in turn causing instructors to do what's necessary to hang on to their jobs. UI instructors sometimes admit the power of the poor evaluation, but strive to maintain a certain level of integrity — illustrated by the 5.3 percent raise.

Idaho's new admission standards, coupled with the new English grading scale might explain the higher percentage of A's and B's at UI; as similar factors might explain some UW grades. However, it sure seems UW students have a significant edge over UI students. At a higher percentage and double rate, UW can't explain an important little factor in itself.

UW students didn't score higher on standardized tests.

So essentially, UI students should consider transferring to UW, where in an increasingly competitive job market, a free A will go a long way.

Wrestling offers super role models

I just don't understand it. When the World Series was on last month, thousands of people flocked to their television sets, beer in hand, to hail for their favorite team. Football is the same way. Come Super Bowl time, beer companies and car manufacturers will spend enough to feed a Third World country for a few precious moments of advertising.

These sports aren't real sports, they're wimp sports. Football players wear pads and aren't even allowed to fling someone down by their face mask. Then why have the face mask? Even hockey is for wimps. Goalies wear enough armor to stop stray AK-47 gunfire — all to stop a fuzzy little hockey puck.

If you want to watch a real sport, where wimps are weeded out and there are no pick-up games to give the sport an amateur status, it's time for something new.

It's time for pro-wrestling. Now these are today's real men, the kind of true athletes that should be making big bucks endorsing Nikes, not snapping into beef sticks.

After all, just look at the punishment these brutes can take. In a match I saw on the biggest wrestling venue, the World Wrestling Federation, bad-ass muscle-man "Mr. Perfect" beat the living sense out of his arch-enemy opponent, "The I.R.S." But he didn't just beat him with his fist. He beat him with a steel chair repeatedly in the ear. Your average man would be lying dead with vultures circling overhead. But not Mr. Perfect. In a brilliant twist of courage and strength, he knocked out the referee, fought off the chair, and took him to the canvas with one swift kick to the face. He then turned the chair on his opponent and hit him repeatedly on the spine until the ref staggered to his feet and disqualified both of them.

I'm amazed. I'm stupefied. I'm impressed. What strength. What determination. Gosh, what amazing athletic ability. Imagine surviving a guy jumping off the turnbuckle down to the canvas and planting a fist in your neck. Wow.

Now if there were justice in this world, wrestling wouldn't be relegated to second-rate cable stations. Instead of Monday Night Football, we should have Monday Night Wrestling, where the family can gather around the tube for wholesome entertainment, right before "Beavis and Butt-head" comes on.

And what entertainment it is. Big, sweating guys representing the good and evil of the universe are interviewed by "Mean" Gene Okerlund or Jesse "The Body" Ventura. Usually, the interview involves wrestler A telling the audience how he's been training 29 hours a day to beat the crap out of his opponent on the next pay-per-view event. If he oversteps his bounds and makes his enemy angry, the enemy immediately emerges from the dressing room in his tights, already sweating up a storm. Probably due to holding all that anger inside. He then proceeds to smash in the bad-mouther's face, sometimes using the announcer's microphone for good measure. Wrestling fans can count their blessings when such an awesome spectacle occurs.

I'll Tell You Why

Another thing that astonishes me is pro-wrestlers' inability to bleed. I once saw a guy get smashed in the head with piece of glass 19 times and not even drip a tear, or an ounce of blood. They must have skin made of Teflon. Actually, I may suggest that as a name: Teflon Man.

Obviously, television stations have their priorities a little frazzled. Wrestling offers superior role models for America's youth. No longer would we yell at Charles Barkley when he spits on a kid. We would instead expect that behavior from a wrestler, thus showing our kids not to hide their emotions.

Now that you've had a chuckle, enjoy Thanksgiving.

Who would want to remember the infamous night?

Science is a powerful tool. It has created life-altering technology to help us lead more enjoyable, stress-free lives.

It has given us liposuction. Got a problem with those thighs? Those copious love handles your mate can't get her hands around? Slurp, suck, and more cherry cheesecake for you — Consequences schmonsequences, as Daffy Duck would say. Science has deleted consequences.

Take alcohol. Not to mention the caloric factor, alcohol has long threatened to attack and kill brain cells. Drink a beer, kill a cell. Most people have been able to ignore those consequences, with the exception of wondering exactly what events led up to that fuzzy night that alienated you from your friends for two weeks.

Now, contrary to popular belief, Danish scientists have completed a new study that shows alcohol consumption does not kill nerve cells in the brain.

It only disconnects them. They're alive, just isolated. Sorry, the number you have dialed has been disconnected. Unplugged really. The "white matter" fibers that carry nourishment and transfer signals are cut off from the real world hidden in your brain.

Who cares?

Isolated brain cells work just as poorly as dead ones, so why split hairs when the outcome is the same?

The white matter can regrow and reconnect the brain cells, provided the drinker doesn't continue swilling down enough beer to undermine the effect. Someday scientists may be able to jump-start these cells with a magic potion or high voltage electricity or some device in a black box that I will be quick to use, though never understand.

One question: Since most alcoholics accept the "fact" they're killing brain cells, will they be able to accept or handle rejuvenated brain cells? (Considering the study's claim that an alcoholic's white matter is reduced by 30 percent in the memory center of the brain.)

I'd say not. It stands to reason that those cells, whose plugs were pulled on the infamous Friday night, will suddenly remember the complex series of events that led to the morning after (explaining in frightening detail just how you came to find yourself with that amorphous person of the opposite sex, a four-poster bed, the neighbor's parrot and a half-gallon of Neapolitan ice cream.

Coming Up For Air

Scary thought, that. Do people really want to remember those things? It's obvious the cells weren't working so well before they were unplugged, so why would anyone want them back. Good riddance.

But what if the brain cells don't return to their original condition, complete with all the capacities they exited with? Do they simply revert to a flashing 12 o'clock noon status, like alarm clocks do after a brief power outage?

Hate to have to start fresh. Goo goo, gah gah.

Suppose, though, that reconnected brain cells are like extra RAM in a personal computer. And as the cells regain their power, boom you can suddenly do long division again, calculate snowball trajectories and delude yourself into finishing research papers in half the time while maintaining twice the quality. Heck, I've been functioning well-enough all these years, now I got more Power! you might say. Really, we might end up gaining brain space by drinking, if you can imagine that.

Consequences schmonsequences.

Marriages are unhappy, failing

Did you know that six out of ten marriages are failing, and many of the rest are unhappy? This fact makes a mockery out of marriage. This nation has the worst record of broken marriages in the entire world. Since 1960, divorces have tripled. Cohabitation has increased six-fold since 1960, and now precedes the majority of all marriages in America.

"Marriages that are preceded by living together have 50 percent higher divorce or separation rates than marriages without premarital cohabitation," reports the National Survey of Families and Households. Those hurt the most are the innocent — the children. Before the age of 18, three-fifths of children will lose a parent to divorce, while another million children a year are born out of wedlock, most into lives of bitter neglect and poverty.

What is so frustrating about all this is that the churches are a silent accomplice to this galloping tragedy. When was the last time you heard a sermon on chastity, cohabitation or divorce? Most pastors/priests don't want to confront the problem. It might cause bad feelings or someone might get mad. Surely, scripture is clear on the issue (see I Cor: 6:18)! Did you know that three-quarters of all marriages were blessed by priests, pastors and rabbis. Sadly, however, most houses of worship are only "blessing machines," preparing couples for weddings, not life-long marriages. Gallop Polls reveal less than a fifth of marriages had premarital counseling.

Almost a million teenagers are getting pregnant every year. Sexually active teenagers are not learning discipline needed for life-long marriage, but habits that lead to divorce and welfare.

Wake up America to a disease that is tearing the heart out of our country. We concentrate our efforts on AIDS, tobacco, alcohol, but we ignore the most endemic problem of our society. The issue is far broader than divorce. The American family itself is splintering.

What is the answer? The answer is society in general, and that includes religion's needs to make the divorce problem number one. Marriage and family values need to be brought back from the archives. Teach in the schools and churches that marriage is important. The media should reiterate this and make having a family a number one importance. Look at history. Why was the divorce rate so low? Why don't we ever learn from our past?

University place to open mind

What is a university? A dictionary will give the answer to the above question. I suggest to you, my fellow classmates, that this question, as well as many other questions, does not have just one answer.

I will present an answer to the question posed above. Actually, let me write that I will present a response, since as students we are misguidedly trained to think of "answers" as falling into two types: Correct or incorrect.

A response to the question, "What is a university?"

University. Universe City. A place where people from a multitude of diverse backgrounds can come together, and share with each other, and learn from each other, and grow to love each other. A place where one would learn not only from others, but about oneself. A place where one would learn not only about others, but about oneself. A place where one would be allowed (and yes, even encouraged) to change and grow. A place where one does not just passively consume information, but a place where one questions the sources and validity of information. A place where students are actively engaged in learning. A place where students have choices. A place where students are openly encouraged to think for themselves. A place where students are encouraged to analyze issues with an open mind. A place where students are able to ACT for themselves. A place where students are active decision makers and participants in the operation of the university.

Lastly, I believe a university should be a place where the three questions, "What is a university?", "Are we at a university?" and "What should our university be like?" are the three most discussed questions among students from the day of one's arrival until the day of one's departure. For if we don't ask these questions, how will we ever know if we are really gaining an education at a university?

Finally, I ask each and every one of you, what is a university? Are we at a university? And, most importantly, I ask you to dream wildly, openly and freely in considering your response to the question, what should our university be like?

Quast slaps sex abuse survivors

I would like to thank Ms. Quast for slapping every survivor of sexual abuse in the face. Her commentary mirrored the ignorance that forces survivors into silence. Society would rather believe a child is lying instead of facing the reality that adults molest children. Unfortunately, Ms. Quast shares society's myopic view on the subject.

Child molesters are not convicted on the mere words of a two-year-old. Yes, medical reports can not always confirm sexual abuse unless an examination is done soon after the abuse, the tell-tale wounds heal. Of course, there is no eyewitness; child molesters do not put their abuse on display for everyone to acknowledge. It is an ugly act that denotes privacy.

In the real world, I wished that juries convicted a molester on the simple premise that "no child could lie about things like that," but they don't. A single study done by unknown psychologists with unknown qualifications should not be accepted as authority on the subject.

Children already have a difficult time coming forward and telling of the abuse. Labels, like liar, will not help them. The children are the victims. Ms. Quast's shared beliefs only promote the silence that protects the child molesters. Society should realize that the abuse occurs and then refuse to permit it to continue. Ms. Quast's attack rewards silence. Chalk one up for the child molesters. Thank you Ms. Quast.

Do haters get special feelings?

Why must people hate? Is there a special warm feeling that people get from absolutely despising someone whom they don't know, or even care to know. Someone, whom they are sure is "evil" and unworthy of life. Such a situation exists in the constant abuse of homosexuals. Why is there such an immense flow of hatred toward ones fellow human beings? Enough questions, time for some facts.

Fact: One of the mightiest fighting forces in history, the Romans, were primarily bisexual. Fact: Many of Western culture's greatest composers, playwrights and artists have been homosexual. Fact: Heterosexual sailors from Columbus' expeditions were the direct cause of millions of indigenous people's deaths. Fact: Homosexuals are persecuted primarily by "Christians." Let's examine some other, less publicized facts.

Fact: Religion (Christianity in particular) has been the cause of over half of the major wars since 500 A.D. Fact: Christianity gave us the Spanish Inquisition. Fact: Religion is now the cause of the war in Sarajevo. Gee, it seems that one's religion is more dangerous than one's sexuality. And so, let us try something entirely different for a change, and I know this is a difficult thing, but, go find someone who is homosexual, and TALK TO HIM! Strangely enough, I think that you'll find that he is also human, and little different from yourself. And then, just maybe, the stupidity and hatred can stop. So please, for the sake of humanity, be a little more decent towards your fellow human beings, and STOP THE HATRED!

—David Camden-Britton

Gamers thank Hodgins Drug

On behalf of the gamers and hobbyists of the P.S.I. and P.A.G.A.N. game clubs here at UI, I would like to thank Hodgins Drug of Moscow for their support of our activities.

The people at Hodgins have been extremely helpful and supportive in all areas of gaming and modeling. They have established a room for gaming activities, which is available for use at no charge to any gaming group. They have also installed display cases for modelers to display their work inside.

The employees at Hodgins are really wonderful. John Tokle, also known as "Grog," is a hobbyist with many years experience. His specialty is detailing scenes from World War II, particularly tanks and other vehicles. Wally Bigelow is another modeler and gamer whose interest lies in the historical area.

Wally is also the person who orders model kits, games and miniatures. He is willing to make good deals to hobbyists who are looking for a particular item. Hodgins will also special order for those who desire items not in stock.

Thanks for all your help, guys!

First!ers Civil Disobey!ers

Like "ragtag Christians entering into the lions' den." Maybe.

But whoever called in a bomb threat to the courthouse on Wednesday during the Earth First!er trial was acting more like the lion than the Christian.

When Donavan Powers tried to throw his lot in with the Christians, Forest Service agent Russ Newcomb countered by suggesting the First!ers were more like "Roman Gladiators." Pleeze.

And you thought this trial would be as flat as a board.

No way. From the moment Ma, Pa, Sis and Little Bro First!er set up camp outside the courthouse this trial was destined to be long on entertainment.

What is at issue though is whether the First!ers are criminals, or whether, as Defense Attorney Michael Henegen would have us believe, mere citizens exercising their 1st Amendment rights.

And the Earth First!ers would also have you believe they are the philosophical descendants of Thoreau and Ghandi — Civil Disobey!ers, as it were.

I'll make a not-too-bold prediction for you; one or more First!ers will be convicted.

Why? Because if you break the criminal laws of a society and are caught, you should be convicted, and there is no doubt the group of 15 entered the Cove-Mallard reservation against federal mandates.

That doesn't mean I do not agree

Commentary
Gregory H. Burton

with their cause, but if they really feel an affinity for Thoreau, they should be willing and able to go to jail for their offenses, and that is the point of having a cause.

It is the fine line between the First!ers 1st Amendment freedom and everybody else's, though, that has come into question.

Just as it is somewhat queer to murder a doctor in favor of the right-to-life, it is wrong to endanger loggers in favor of trees.

Endanger yourself by chaining yourself to a tractor — yes, but endanger an innocent citizen simply trying to eke out a living by spiking trees — no.

And then if you do chain yourself to a tractor, or trespass on closed property, expect to go to jail.

What is truly sad is the number of people expecting this trial to provide a solution to the Cove-Mallard controversy. It will not.

In fact, loggers have already begun to work their landscaping magic on the forest reserve, as was originally approved by the Forest Service.

And U.S. District Judge Edward Lodge, who is presiding over this case, has ruled out any 1st Amendment issues being decided in what now amounts to a trial against campers-gone-bad.

But if you do side with the First!ers, expect them to go to jail and rejoice in their adherence to a greater cause, and if you side with the Forest Service and the sawyers, be glad for justice being served.

But if you are for responsible management of what remains of our environment, take heed that these 15 are waging a war for your children.

And then again, if someone connected to the Earth First! contingent called in the bomb threat, they should not liken themselves to Christians, or Thoreau, or the saviors of our forests — snake would be a better analogy.

Only a slithering and cowardly excuse for a human would endanger hundreds of lives just to make a point.

One in four women raped

I would like to thank the Argonaut for its coverage of the Rape and Sexual Assault Education program run by the Women's Center and executed by the hard-working students who take Health and Safety Class 404 and present to nearly 2,000 students per year.

I do want to clarify four points in the article:

(1) One in four women will be raped or experience an attempted rape during her college years. One in three women will be raped or experience an attempted rape over a lifetime.

(2) The Women's Center does not offer counseling, we do crises intervention, options listing and clarification and advocacy. The Counseling Center located in UCC 309 provides excellent counseling for both the victim and the victim's friends.

(3) Despite the large sounding staff when they are identified by name, there is only one full time staff member, and that is the director.

All the named individuals plus work study students work at the Center and are wonderful staff without whom the work the Center does would be impossible. And only the receptionist is board-appointed.

(4) Professors Joan West in Foreign Languages and Literature and Kathryn Paxton George in Philosophy and their committee members are the ones who deserve credit for any work toward the university obtaining any coordinated Women's Studies classes or a program.

I have done no work toward establishing any Women's Studies program for over two years and I know of no plans to develop a program in any way as comprehensive as the long-established program at Washington State University.

Sigma Chi helps public television

Hi, from Idaho public television station, KUID/KCDT, channel 12 on your television dial. I have been working with the station since early Sept., 1993, so you can tell that I am still learning about the Idaho Public Television system.

Among the things I have come to know is the fact that we are responsible for fund raising activities to pay almost 45 percent of the costs of providing public television. For this reason, we are delighted when volunteers come forward to help with fund raising.

I had the great privilege of working on just such a fund raiser in Oct. with the great guys in the pledge class of Sigma Chi. They gave almost 40 hours in administrative work for a very important semi-annual event for the station. These guys were dedicated to seeing the work through to the end even though I had underestimated the time involved with the project. They arrived promptly as a work team, stayed overtime and even continued to volunteer through mid-terms. We were able to achieve our goal of lowering the overhead costs in fund raising because of the volunteer actions of the men in the Sigma Chi pledge class.

I look forward to getting to know more of the students at UI through volunteer projects during the rest of the year. If your group wants to help KUID/KCDT in an enjoyable volunteer activity, just ask the Sigma Chi pledge class what they thought about it and give me a call; Pam Peterson, 885-6723.

Ode to Thaddeus R. Mosey

Ode to Thaddeus R. Mosey
(The author of that sparkling gem of prose which brightened my day with a delightful tidbit of Hellfire and Brimstone.)

O Mosey, thou art wise and strong
As are they grand opinions.
What choice have we but believe?
We are thy humble minions.

I strive to follow thee in vain
Because I don't possess
The Blind Faith which maketh thou sure
Of all thou dost profess.

"The greatest Sin of all," thou say'st,
"Is plain enough to see:
"To have an open mind makes one
The worst that one can be!"

Have pity on me, then, O God,
Because I use the mind
Which thou gavest me for to use
Lest I should be confined

To only those beliefs which Many others have enslaved!
O, pity me, for ne'er exists
A chance I might be saved!

O Thaddeus, though I am not
A "fag," nor am I "bi-,"
Condemned am I by thy wise words
Because I heave a sigh

Of deep remorse for those whose lives
Have been a battle fought.
O Mosey, Christ-like compassion
It seems that you forgot.

O Thaddeus, thou knowest all,
For thou art wise and strong!
God preserve the man who dares
To say, "Thou couldst be wrong."

—Luke R. Henderson

Sad display of homo-hatred

In response to Thaddeus R. Mosey's Nov. 12 letter: Oh Thad, how sad it is that your revolting display of hatred, vomited on the pages of the Argonaut, cannot be tossed aside as the ramblings of one who is young and stupid.

See Thad, I did some checking, and you are not too young, and obviously you do not lack intelligence as you are a grad student. You do, however, lack logic and objectivity.

You dislike homosexuals, as they don't fit into your religious/moral standard, thus they are "pagans." Obviously, you are uninformed about paganism. It is a religious movement quite like yours, in that it is comprised of many different types of people, all of which are not homosexuals, as your religion is not made-up entirely of heterosexuals. Secondly, it is an extremely Hitleresque statement to say that: "All homosexuals are pagans." Does this mean all pagans are homosexuals? Are all Jews unclean flaws in the master race?

C'mon Thad, it's a stretch to claim that lesbians and gays possess no Christian belief in God because they do not choose to deny their identities.

Furthermore, it seems common place for fag-bashers to constantly cite passages from the Bible that damn homosexual behavior (i.e. your Sodom shepeal). However, it is also a trend of such writers to neglect other passages of the scripture that pertain directly to them, (i.e. "judge not lest you be judged," Luke 6:37).

I will leave you with one more thing, Thad: It is a traditional Christian belief that all sins are weighed equally, and also, that man is sinful by nature, thus, if you are in any way transgressing at this point in your life, you are just as much of the evil outcast you claim Susan to be. Time to ask forgiveness Thad. Time to lay down those stones and stop judging, Thaddeus.

Mike Rainey, University of Idaho faculty member, views the opening day of student graphic and still life art at the Ridenbaugh gallery. The exhibition will be open until Dec. 3.

Ridenbaugh exhibits student art

The University of Idaho Ridenbaugh Gallery continued the exhibition of College of Art and Architecture students yesterday with the opening reception for the BFA presentation of graphic design students Martie Shelman and Barclay Day and still life photography of Beth Schmillen.

The two graphic design displays use computer-generated imagery to capture the viewing audience, though each with their own unique approach.

Martie Shelman refers to herself as an activist graphic designer. As an activist designer she uses her work to shout anger towards her audience.

Her work portrays emotion felt by those who are unable to achieve the American dream. She does it with large billboard style designs. Shelman said, "Through my designs I hope that you can come to experience or understand the pain, humiliation, and frustration that those of us less fortunate feel and who will continue to feel until we as a society change the way we have been programmed to look at people, and instead look at them for who they truly are."

In contrast to Shelman's work, Barclay Day's is directed towards more of a consumer-based audience. Her designs are based on her views of what a company needs to market themselves. Day said, "With today's fast pace, people need to be able to recognize a sign or symbol and relate it to the name of a company quickly."

Day uses bright colors to create her logo designs, concentrating on line, form and color.

Rounding off the presentation will be the still life photography of Beth Schmillen. Her still lifes are gathered objects from "her things."

These still lifes become visual fiction. Schmillen said, "It is the tactile nature of relics, we are visually beholden to these personal icons. There is the tugging of our tactile awareness of art, of the world, that I feel is always reaching out through our sight, that grounds the visual dominance of our realities."

Smokers try to go cold turkey for a day

Commentary by Tim Schreiner

Health care is now one of the top issues in the United States. AIDS is the leading cause of death among males between 25 and 40. The United States has the largest proportion of overweight people anywhere in the world. Teen pregnancy, crime and drug use are forever on the rise. The American lifestyle needs help.

State and federal governments have been whispering in our ears about health for some time now. Cancer and emphysema are painful and costly, and 3 percent of the deaths in the United States are due to second-hand smoke, according to an Environmental Protection Agency estimate.

New legislation is being passed regularly to protect non-smokers' rights. Smoking has been banned on all domestic flights in the continental U.S. 35 states have enacted laws that address smoking in public workplaces and 15 have enacted laws that address it in private workplaces.

There are those who are skeptical about statistics due to the regular hypocrisy of everyday life. Many of us watch violence on television and ask why we see bad news in the paper every morning. Some religious institutions tell us to prepare for the end of the world on such and such a date, but if it doesn't happen they fail to question the rest of their beliefs.

Many people wonder why we need an official North American Free Trade Agreement. Why not just lower the costs added to international trade, and if things don't work out, then put the damn tariffs back up. If the government is broke, maybe it's a good thing, then they couldn't afford to screw anything else up.

In the Mother Earth News for March of 1990, Douglas Lea said, "Attention: Need Orientation Soonest. To be alive on this planet is to be oriented. A hospital patient, after regaining consciousness, will always ask, 'Where am I?' Good question."

Lea said that the recent acceleration of cultural evolution has brought "confusion and dislocation in its wake "...and the result is wholesale retreat into mental illness, obsession, addictions, brutality, indifference — anything that escapes the chaos of disorientation," he said.

The problem with Lea's article is that it doesn't give any prognosis to the current "United State" of affairs. He doesn't mention patience or fortitude, and so now everyone is expected to follow the laws that are available, and on an individual basis either live it or leave it. As a result, the UI Student Counseling Center has recently had as much as a seven-day waiting list, according to Bill Gibson, a licensed psychologist at the center. Yesterday's national "smoke-out" asked that all the smokers and tobacco chewers, men and women alike, give up the habit for a day. It can be inferred from this campaign that this poor and disoriented percentage of the population is asked, not told, to help themselves.

The idea behind the message is that those who are not oriented to the ideas of the mainstream have to step outside, either to the ash-tray on the front porch or to the forests of

Huh-huh, this book does suck

Russ Woolsey
Lifestyles Editor

Huh-huh, huh-huh cool new book dude. Uh, yeah huh-huh, huh-huh just in time for the Christmas coffee table.

Yes, Beavis and Butt-head have now stepped over the air waves and into homes without television with their new book, This Book Sucks, released on Nov. 10.

Their immature, beyond distasteful humor is now infiltrating homes all over, taking over the highway of bad taste that The Simpsons and Ren & Stimpy have paved in recent years.

So what is so appealing about this bloody gummed, pimple-axed duo?

Could it possibly be they are a reflection of a society which is ironically laughing into this mirror with the distinct shape of a television?

Maybe so, but what is for certain — since the series was first launched in March of 1993 it has gone on to become one of the most popular programs MTV has ever produced.

Their trademark "huh-huh, huh-huh" laugh has been proclaimed the voice of a new generation by Rolling Stone magazine.

The moronic duo's wacky humor has already stirred lawsuits against MTV after a family had their son burn down their home who thought "lighters are cool huh-huh huh-huh."

But avoiding homes being burned to the ground should be as easy as determining who the audience is for this beyond adolescent humor.

From the beginning "Introsuction(huh huh)" the book looks at humor which should be taken lightly, and parents should undoubtedly use their best judgment to determine if their kids can take this material lightly.

MTV is directing the book to an audience as young as 12 years old. I don't know if I would want my 12 year old reading "Guaranteed Effective Pickup Lines" which starts off with "Uh, Hey Baby. Uh, Do you like come here often, Huh, Huh. I said Come."

I do however take this book lightly, as I know it was intended, and find the creative humor to be very appealing. Most can relate to many of the chapters including "Free Guitar Lessons" to the "Inside of Beavis's Pocket" which I found out contains everything from a Megadeth concert ticket autographed, "Dear Beavis, Kiss My Ass. Dave Mustaine," to a knife given to Beavis by a "Fil Lapeeno." The "The Critics Choice, like if we ran TV." and "Instant Band Names" are also both repulsively captivating.

This Book Sucks does what the creator of the series, Mike Judge, undoubtedly wanted to do; capitalize on the generations of short sound-bite MTV heads, of which I'm proud, huh-huh, to be a part.

Anthology of women's travelling to be released

Halo DeWitt
Staff Writer

Women and the Journey, a collection of essays on various aspects of women and travel, will be released by the Washington State University Press on Dec. 1

The book was written by a collaborated group of faculty members from WSU and the University of Idaho. It was originated by WSU faculty women who met for interdisciplinary research and discussion in the spring of 1987.

The women who wrote for the book span both campuses in disciplines and their essays range in specific content.

"What drew us all together was that many of us were doing research on women and travel," said Susan McLeod, WSU associate dean of the College of Liberal Arts. She edited the book along with Bonnie Frederick, WSU Foreign Languages and Literature professor.

There are a total of 11 essays, ranging from the travel costumes of Victorian women to captive women in Argentina and Uruguay to women's travel in the Dar al-Islam. One essay, titled "Another Lady's Life in the Rocky Mountains," is based on the 1873 journals of the author's great-great-aunt.

"There is almost nothing on women and travel," said history professor Sue Armitage.

McLeod and Frederick, in their prologue to the book, talk about how the authors all worked together on the collaboration of the book. They shared ideas and critiqued each others' essays in a situation not unlike how women used to make quilts, all sitting around the quilt talking, sharing and working. "Each of us had some say in how the final product was put together... all decisions were made through consensus, rather than by a single editor... still, we all felt that the final product is a piece to be proud of," they said.

WSU Fine Arts professor Jo Hockenull drew a series of illustrations which appear throughout the book.

The book will officially be released at the annual Holiday Book Fair. The fair will run from 11:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. The authors of Women and the Journey will be at the fair from 12:30 p.m. to 2 p.m. to sign books. All WSU Press publications will be available for 20 percent off.

Other features at the fair will be other recent WSU Press releases. Those who attend the fair will receive free mailings of gift books, refreshments and a free book with each purchase of $30 or more.

Shooting Stars opens Saturday

Washington State University Theater's production of the modern comedy Shooting Stars opens Saturday in the Tri-Cities with special prices for students.

Tickets for the 8 p.m. production, planned for the Hanford High School Auditorium, will be $6 for adults and $4 for students and seniors.

"We want to encourage students from grade school to the university level to attend the performance," said George Caldwell, director of the traveling WSU company.

The Molly Newman play is a fun-filled, fast-moving depiction of a day in the life of a woman's basketball team on tour in small town Mid-America in the early 1960's.

The play takes place Christmas week 1962 in a locker room where the Shooting Stars, a touring women's team, is getting ready to face off against a local men's team. The girls quickly emerge as distinct personalities, and, amid the funny banter and horseplay, the audience learns about the players' personal hang-ups and the lives they left behind, Caldwell adds.

Buddy Guy, Junior Wells provide 'down home' blues

Tim Schreiner
Staff Writer

With the onslaught of cold weather, the pall of dark, foreboding skies and final exams, comes the time when the "blues" are as prevalent as four o'clock headlights. Walter Lininger said of the immortal "Red House Blues," by Jimi Hendrix in the summer issue of Blues Revue Quarterly, "There was something so direct and honest in his two voices (vocals and guitar); it diffused my hunger for angry action and tormenting thoughts." The blues comes in many versions, but always has the familiar beat of a front porch swing bumping the handrail. It is an honest, emotional, but in a narrative tell-it-like-it-is way. The truths spoken through blues music are directed internally, to soothe the beat of the soul.

It's not meant to thrash or sing "tra-la-la," but is a mantra to inner "cool." As a quote by Robert Browning on the Lionel Hampton School of Music Building says: "There is no truer truth attainable by man than comes of music."

This is not to imply that women are erased from the Blues scene. Toshi Reagon, in the Revue, said, "Music has been my mother's profession forever, as well as her weapon of choice."

One album worth a listen is Alone and Acoustic, released in 1991, by Buddy Guy and Junior Wells. Guy plays a messy and somewhat disjunctive guitar, a perfect mix to Well's sweet and pulsing mouth-harp. The lyrics tell of lost love; "Don't Leave Me," pretty women; "High Heel Sneakers" and all that is distinctly human.

As a forewarning to prospective listeners, this album is not the clean blues of Eric Clapton. Also, it isn't representative of the cameo appearances usually, but necessarily hidden into most of today's top-sellers of any style. This stuff is strictly "down home." Guy and Well's style is rooted into the weighted-down freight train that perpetually comes and goes. The rhyming of the lyrics often give way to the simple short sentences that come out and say, "Hey, I'm broken-hearted, and if I talk about it too much I'll fall apart."

One song which may touch deep into the hearts of Idahoans is "Diggin' My Potatoes." Wells cries out that "somebody's diggin' my potatoes, trampin on my vine. Lord, you know I feel bad baby. People all their achin' - a cryin' shame."

The team's paternalistic owner-manager, Cassius, played by Aaron Malek, parcels out the assignments. When Cassius is felled by a sudden, fatal heart attack, the team must, for the first time, decide its own fate.

The production blends the excitement of sports with humor and is appropriate for all ages. Harold Rhodes, WSU women's basketball coach, is a consultant for the play.

Charlie Brown no blockhead; trees need love

Katé Lyons-Holestine
Sports Editor

Everyone loves a Christmas tree.

Many families opt for fake trees. But they don't offer the same opportunities for enjoyment as a real tree.

The perfect tree should be cone-shaped, with no gaping holes or errant limbs. The limbs should be close but far enough apart to hang ornaments graciously. It should have the pine essence that lingers in the house and brings about the Christmas spirit. It must have delicate yet firm needles which allow you to get close enough to inhale the aroma.

The Charlie Brown Christmas tree may be cute on the seasonal cartoon special, but it is a pathetic excuse for a beautiful Christmas decoration.

The holidays are fast approaching. Thanksgiving is just around the corner. Many families like to enjoy their Christmas tree for as long as possible. Many believe Christmas-time begins the day after Thanksgiving — you know, the day the sales begin.

This is the perfect time to begin thinking about your Christmas tree.

How to obtain your tree is a very important decision and should be thought of carefully. You can take a nice, leisurely drive to the country and cut your own tree, you could visit the street vendors that line the grocery store fronts and intersections selling trees or you could visit local tree farms and choose your own.

Visiting a tree farm entails paying for the tree you choose from acres of standing fir. It is then cut for you or you can often times cut your own.

Visiting the street vending tree sellers can sometimes cost more than other methods. Many vendors charge by the foot and trees can end up costing from $6 to $30.

Historically anyone could drive to the mountains and chop down their own Christmas tree. Christmas tree "hunters" had the freedom to cut any tree that pleased them as long as it wasn't on private property.

This year, "hunters" must purchase Christmas tree cutting permits. These are now available for $3 at all Clearwater and Nez Perce National Forest offices. Families are also limited to two trees.

This change is being made in response to regional policy, according to Dallas Emch, Clearwater National Forest Ecosystem Management Staff Officer.

In the past there have been some national forests that required paid permits, some required free permits and others had no permit requirements.

"The Northern Region is one of the last to implement a uniform, region-wide charge permit system," Merrill Davis explained.

Davis is the Special Products Forester for the Northern Region. The Northern Region includes the Idaho Panhandle, Clearwater and Nez Perce National Forests and all National Forests in Montana.

"The permit system is designed to assist those coming to the national forests to cut Christmas trees," Emch said. "With the permit system we can better assist people with maps and information about the selection and cutting of trees."

The Nez Perce National Forest Supervisor's office will be open from 7:30 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. Dec. 3 and 8 a.m. to noon Dec. 4 for the convenience of those wishing to purchase a permit.

The Clearwater National Forest offices will maintain their regular hours Monday through Friday.

With Christmas just around the corner, the perfect tree needs to top all your gifts.

'Life without guns' not realistic in violent United States

America is a violent nation. Blame it on too much t.v., too many guns, decaying values, growing godlessness or whatever, the fact remains that We The People are the most senselessly violent nation on earth.

And nobody is more aware of this than the parents of Yoshi Hattori, a Japanese exchange student living with a Baton Rouge, La., host family. Yoshi was gunned down on Halloween night in 1992.

Since that senseless killing, the Hattori family launched a crusade to curb American's access to guns. "In Japan, we live life with no guns. We hope that you, too, can live life without guns," Masaichi Hattori said. The grieving family has collected nearly a quarter of a million signatures on Japanese petitions to make their case. They recently met privately with President Clinton to make a case for the reduction of guns in the hands of private citizens.

Until their son's killing, the Hattoris had no idea that guns were so widely available in the United States. "Daily life without guns is a matter of course in Japan," Masaichi Hattori said.

You can't blame the Hattori's for their reaction to the loss of their son. And you can't blame them for crusading to stop senseless violence in America. However, you can find fault in the misdirected target of their crusade: guns.

Gun laws do not reduce crime. Period. Time and time again, it has been shown that gun laws enacted in the past quarter century do not show a positive effect in reducing crime. To the dismay of prohibitionists, such laws have actually been shown to produce a negative effect. That is, in areas having lower levels of private firearms ownership, the robbery rates are almost invariably higher because criminals know that their victims are less likely to have the means to defend themselves. Bullfeathers? Let's look at Washington, D.C.

When D.C. banned handguns in 1976, the violent crime rate rose 43%, and the murder rate rose 14%, while the national rates were rising 20% and 3% respectively. Criminals in Washington have no trouble getting prohibited handguns. Washington's 1990 homicide rate of 80 per 100,000 population was the highest ever recorded by an American big city, marking a nearly 200% rise in homicide since banning handguns. Little wonder former D.C. Police Chief Maurice Turner said, "What has the gun control law done to keep criminals from getting guns? Absolutely nothing...[City residents] ought to have the opportunity to have a handgun."

So we see the net effect of such gun bans is more violence. Still, you may be wondering, why can't America be more like Japan or England: nations with low crime rates and stiff gun control laws? First, foreign style gun control is doomed to failure in America because it depends on search and seizure methods too intrusive for American standards. America is not a police state. An authoritarian style of government - which makes "life without guns" possible in Japan - is at odds with the individualist American ethos.

Part of Japan's low crime rate can be attributed to the sheer efficiency of its criminal justice system, coupled with fewer protections of the right to privacy, and fewer rights for criminal suspects, than exist in the United States. Further, widespread respect for law and order is deeply ingrained in the Japanese citizenry. Compare that to the U.S.!

By now, if you're rabidly anti-gun, you're likely foaming at the mouth and shaking uncontrollably, ready to fire off a scathing tirade to our "letters" section. Go ahead, send your letters - I'm training a puppy. In all likelihood, I've probably not convinced the Hattori's of the world that the solution to our criminal violence does not lie in powerless gun bans.

The more I live, the more I'm convinced that some folk's minds are "reality proof."

So before you fire off another letter, demanding me to consider if my "fun with a gun" (as if the constitutionally guaranteed right to keep and bear arms is based on mere, whimsical fun) is worth the pain people suffer because of guns, think for a minute.

Responsible, law abiding gun owners aren't death and destruction mongers, blindly, selfishly championing gun rights while people are murdered. We just realize that gun bans don't work, and in fact, lead to more innocent people suffering.

What is needed are laws aimed at criminal misuse of firearms. These are the proven crime deterrents; focusing on the criminal, not the gun, and realizing that we are a unique nation, a free nation, where an all-out gun ban is not only unreasonable, but constitutionally forbidden.

Our challenge, pro-gun and anti-gun is to reform and strengthen a criminal justice system that has failed us, and bring about a sharp reversal in the trend toward undue leniency and "revolving door" justice. We owe that to the Hattori's of the world.

Doug Nussmeier, quarterback, prepares to pass the ball in practice yesterday. Nussmeier and the rest of the Vandals are preparing for the biggest game of the season against the Boise State Broncos tomorrow.

Turf warrior readies for final game

Katé Lyons-Holestine
Sports Editor

After slipping a tremendous win under their belts Saturday, the Vandal football team was having a relaxing practice Monday.

The players removed their pads and set them on the sidelines. Head coach John L. Smith walked toward the sidelines and the frisbees came out. Smith incorporates Ultimate Frisbee into practice on slow days to keep the players conditioned and competitive.

"We struggled. Early in the year Sherriden, Lavoni and I couldn't play for a while, we lost our edge," Vandal quarterback Doug Nussmeier said. "Now we beat them all the time, Alan Allen always loses the game for them."

Nussmeier's competitiveness has carried his Ultimate squad to multiple victories in practice and lead the Vandals to successive winning seasons.

His final season as a Vandal is coming to a close. The closing game of the regular Big Sky Conference season is this weekend. Tomorrow the Vandals take on the Boise State Broncos — the biggest rivalry of the season will be hashed out in the Kibbie Dome.

"It's the last time to put on the black in the Dome in front of a full house," Nussmeier said. "This one game is the biggest game of my career. The biggest game you always remember is the Boise game your senior year. I don't think a lot of people outside the state understand the importance of this game. It may be the most intense rivalry in the country."

The Vandals hold an 11-game winning streak over the Broncos and are looking to make it an even dozen. Idaho has a 13-8-1 lead in the series history.

The Idaho offense is centered around the quarterback. Nussmeier is the team leader on the field and sometimes is forced to make decisions at the line of scrimmage.

"In this offense if you're quarterback you have to be a leader. You aren't able to hide on the field, if you're having a bad game it's blatantly obvious," Nussmeier said.

Luckily for the Vandals, Nussmeier has had very few bad games in his capacity as Idaho's quarterback. In fact, last weekend he topped the charts with the most touchdown passes completed in Big Sky history. Against the Lehigh Engineers, Nussmeier threw four touchdown passes to increase his career total to 89. He surpassed Jamie Martin of Weber State who previous held the record with 87 completed touchdown passes.

"I really don't think the records are all that important," Nussmeier said. "I just enjoy playing. The point is to go on the field to play."

Even though he doesn't believe they are weighty at the moment, he keeps making strides to break standing records. Since his first season with the Vandals he has been considered a very valuable asset to the team.

He was named 1990 Big Sky Conference Pre-Season Newcomer of the Year his freshman season. As a sophomore he passed for more than 3,000 yards and was given honorable mention honors by Football Gazette (All-America) and all-Big Sky selection honorable mention. Last season Nussmeier led the Vandals to a Big Sky Championship and was named the Big Sky Conference offensive Most Valuable Player. Currently he is looking forward to playing in the 1994 Senior Bowl in Mobile, Ala.

Traditions are very important to Nussmeier and the rest of the Vandals. The Boise game is as traditional as Idaho football can get.

"Just because it's the Boise game I'm pretty sure it will be close to sold out," he said.

Nussmeier's family travels from his hometown of Lake Oswego, Ore. where his football career began. There at Lakeridge High School he was named starting quarterback his senior year.

"I was a defensive back until then," Nussmeier said. "When I got recruited, basically it was just as an athlete. They said I'd start out a quarterback and 'if it doesn't work we'll move you to defense.'"

Leading the offense is where Nussmeier found his talent to be on the football field.

When Nussmeier came to the University of Idaho there were at least 25 other freshmen on the football team. Currently two from that incoming group remain, Nussmeier and senior offensive tackle Jody Schnug.

"It's hard to get to be a senior in this program. You earn respect on this team because of your dedication to the program," Nussmeier said.

Nussmeier, who has earned Big Sky all-Academic honors twice, will graduate with a degree in marketing in May.

Late comeback not enough

Katé Lyons-Holestine

The Vandals managed to challenge TTL Bamberg for the win despite the fact their ace-in-the-hole fouled out in the second half.

TTL Bamberg grabbed a meager 87-82 exhibition victory to initiate the University of Idaho men's basketball team into the 1993 season.

"We played in peaks and valleys, they played at the same tempo all the time," Vandal head coach Joe Cravens said.

Early in the first half the game was tied 8-8, but TTL Bamberg controlled the game throughout the remainder of the first half.

Opening the second half the Vandals found themselves trailing 42-29. Idaho battled back to within two points when Lightfoot hit a jump shot and drew the foul for a three-point play. Then freshman Jared Mercer assisted another freshman, Nate Gardner, to bring the score to 51-49.

Cravens attributes the Vandals' comeback in the second half to the players "loosening up" on the court.

Nerves were tight on the court. Eight new players line the Vandal roster and new players take time to integrate into a system.

"We're not a smooth team right off," Cravens said. "We've still got a long way to go in terms of chemistry, timing and a rotation."

Memorial Gym breathed a sigh when Lightfoot fouled out. In addition to his leadership expectations, he was the 1992 Big Sky Conference Player of the Year and is expected to lead the Vandals.

"I was impressed after Lightfoot went out," TTL Bamberg head coach Terry Schofield said. "The last two or three minutes I saw a lot of talent on the team."

Lightfoot fouled out with the Vandals trailing 74-71. Benjamin Johnson and Ryan Halliday combined to bring the Vandals within five at 83-78.

Todd Spike then hit a 3-pointer and from the right side and in the process was fouled by Jens-Uwe Gordon. Spike hit the free throw and the Vandals trailed by one point, 83-82.

"We came back and made it a game," Johnson said. "We rushed things a lot. We've got to take

We just came up short. We should have been more patient ... When we got down we tried to come back too fast.

— Orlando Lightfoot

that one little step.”

“We just came up short,” Lightfoot said. “We should have been more patient ... When we got down we tried to come back too fast.”

TTL Bamberg had a definite advantage over the Vandals. They have already played 32 games. They began league play in September.

“We haven't even scrimmaged for 40 minutes in practice,” Cravens said. “It was kind of a mess, to be quite frank.”

TTL Bamberg is also a more mature, taller, more experienced team.

Arne Alig, a 7-foot-3 center, caused problems inside for Idaho, but the Vandals held his scoring to a minimum. Alig only managed six points despite his height advantage.

Mike Jackel led TTL Bamberg with 27 points, followed by Gordon with 16.

“He (Jackel) has been the primo player for a while,” Schofield said. “Idaho did a good job at not letting us score inside.”

Lightfoot led all scorers with 33 points, hitting four 3-pointers in his effort. Johnson added 11 points for the Vandals. Halliday scored nine points, all from the three-point line.

The Vandals shot 33 percent in the first half while TTL Bamberg was over 50 percent. Idaho improved in the second half, hitting 19 of 40.

“We took good shots, I don't know how many easy ones we missed,” Cravens said.

Ryan Adelman, No. 25, watches from the sidelines in practice Thursday.

Adelman named 12th Man

Katé Lyons-Holestine
Sports Editor

The last time he wore a football uniform it was green and yellow and his mascot was a Buckaroo. Last year he entertained his athletic ambitions and talked about walking on the Vandal football team. Now he's playing for Idaho.

Ryan Adelman is the Vandal 12th Man scheduled to play what some fans consider the biggest, most important game of Idaho's season. Adelman will take to the field Saturday against the Boise State Broncos.

"I always wanted to have a shot at it and I thought I had a pretty good chance," he said. "I was nervous when I first went in, but there were only about 12 people that tried out."

To add interest to the game for Adelman, his former Pendleton High School teammate Tony Hilde is the starting quarterback for Boise.

"It'll be fun to watch him play," Adelman said.

Adelman was originally scheduled to play in the Nov. 6 game against Montana, but was put against Boise State because of his performance in the Vandal 12th Man Contest.

Adelman, a 6-foot-2, 205 pound sophomore, lettered his final two years at Pendleton High School. He was also an All-State A-4 Oregon player on defense and played in the Shrine game.

"The people were pretty big down there and I thought I wasn't big enough to play at the college level," Adelman said. "I wasn't quite ready yet."

Adelman looked into playing football for the Vandals and the Eastern Oregon State College Mounties.

"I'm thinking about walking on in the spring," he said. "I talked to one of the coaches when I first came up here about recruitment and just decided not to on the last day."

Adelman began practicing with the Vandals Monday. He will play on the special teams kickoff team on one of the ends, he will be responsible for containing the kick return at the sidelines.

"I'm kind of nervous," Adelman added. The Vandal 12th Man Contest was held Oct. 9. University of Idaho Athletics Department, in cooperation with Intramural Sports sponsored the contest.

"The football team came to us with the idea of a 12th man contest," Intramural Director Michael Barth said before the contest. "They asked Intramurals to screen for possible players."

To be a possible player, contestants not only had to be able to play football, they had to meet eligibility requirements set by the UI, Big Sky Conference and the NCAA. Skills tests were also administered to the contestants.

Adelman is a civil engineering major.

Mathison claims cross country title

Angie Mathison holds the Big Sky Conference women's cross country title after sweeping the competition last weekend.

Mathison finished first in the Big Sky competition and fifth in the NCAA District VII Championships.

With the victory Mathison qualifies for the NCAA Championships.

The Vandal women's team placed second overall in conference finals.

The NCAA Championships are in Bethlehem, Penn. Monday.

Mathison and teammate Robin Betz, who finished ninth overall, were named to the Big Sky all-conference squad. The top ten finishers were given this honor.

The Idaho men finished seventh with a team score of 180.

Frank Bruder led Idaho. He finished 15th in a time of 31 minutes, 36.20 seconds.

Jason Uhlman, Idaho's second runner, Adam Vargas, Chris Tarabochia, Dave Czajka and Eric Nuxoll also competed for the Vandal men's team.

Regular season comes to a close

Idaho's most intense rival will be in the Kibbie Dome for the final game of the regular Big Sky football season. The Boise State Broncos are scheduled as the Vandals' final regular season opponent.

Idaho has claimed victory in the past 11 meetings of the two teams (dating back to 1982) and the Vandals are looking to make it 12 wins in a row. Game time is 1:05 p.m.

Oregon falls on ice to Idaho

Shari Ireton
Editor-in-Chief

The University of Idaho hockey club continues their three-game winning streak, defeating the University of Oregon last weekend with a final score of 6-3.

The team started out this past Sunday with Oregon scoring the first three points against them, but according to co-captain Scott Squires, the Vandals "finally started getting the game together." Squires attributes their comeback to experience.

"The team's played enough, they know what they're doing now."

Although Idaho has practiced and has a few games under its belt, the Oregon team had one advantage over the Vandals.

"U of O has their own rink. They get one hour in the morning and one hour at night on the rink," Squires said.

UI, on the other hand, is forced to travel to Spokane to practice on ice.

The hockey team may outdistance other teams with traveling, but the players also outplay them as well. Goalie Tish Terachandra, a UI law student, "played really well," said Squires.

Each player proved they are as good at scoring as they are defending their own net, as five out of the six goals were scored by different players.

Squires, Todd Washburn, Vince Ingalls and Fred Jean all outsmarted Oregon's goalie with one goal each. Trevor Norenberg managed to do it twice, scoring the fourth and sixth goals.

Now that the team is 3-3-1, they are warming up to play the University of Washington this weekend.

"They have a really good team this year," said Squires.

The UW coach is currently spending time training a Mexican hockey team in hopes for the next Olympics.

Students traveling to western Washington can catch UI at the Kirkland ice rink at 9 p.m. Friday and Saturday nights.

The hockey club is part of an informal league made up of club teams from all over the Northwest.

The schools UI plays include Gonzaga, Montana State University, Washington State University and a few others. In February, the teams will play in Wenatchee, Wash. for an "informal championship," according to Squires.

UI will play again in Spokane after Thanksgiving break, during the first weekend in December.
