Marble requests ASUI fee increase

J. Richard Rock
Staff Writer

ASUI President John Marble released a memo Tuesday which outlines a request by the ASUI to the University of Idaho administration for an ASUI general fee increase for both full-time and part-time students.

According to the memo, which was addressed to Vice President for Student Affairs Hal Godwin, the ASUI is requesting a $1.50 (4.6 percent) increase for full time students for each of the next two years. Part-time students would be asked to pay an additional $0.75 per credit this year and $0.50 per credit more next year.

Currently, ASUI fees are $32.75 for full-time students and $1.25 per credit for part-time students. The proposed increases would bring next years totals to $34.25 and $2.00 respectively, and increase fee revenues approximately $36,000.

Godwin explained that UI President Elisabeth Zinser will review the ASUI request and determine whether or not to include the increase in the administrations fee proposal to be presented to the State Board of Education in March, but adds that no final decision will be made for some time yet.

Marble points to general inflationary pressures and a new policy adopted by the university as reasons behind the requested increase.

Starting next year, the university will begin charging the student government for accounting services which were previously free.

According to Sandra Gray, ASUI Business Advisor, the new charges could run as high as $20,000. "The big thing that is hitting the ASUI is the new accounting and administration fee," said Gray.

"It was my understanding that there was supposed to be a three year phase in, but I don't know if that is going to happen."

If the entire charge were to be billed to the ASUI next year the result could be significant considering the ASUI already has been budgeting in the red for the past several years.

"Without any significant [fee] increases since 1985, the ASUI has deficit spent for the past few years. In the days that we had a large reserve account, this was acceptable, but that is no longer the case. We are no longer able to deficit spend," said Marble in his memo.

Steve Stroschein, Chair of the Senate Finance Committee agrees. "If we want to try and cut the deficit, and in light of the $20,000 accounting cost, I think the fee increase is inevitable. I think that once this is all laid out the average student will understand. At least I hope so."

The ASUI general reserve, which has been as high as $400,000 in years past, has been declining, due in part to budgets which subsidized programs with the funds and off budget items which the ASUI funds through special appropriation bills throughout the year.

According to Gray, the general reserve is now down to about $158,000. Good business procedures suggest reserves should be maintained in the amount of 10-15 percent of the operating budget. With an operating budget of nearly one million dollars, the ASUI reserve is approaching its ideal level. The problem is that continued deficit spending will erode the reserve further and reduce it below the recommended amount.

Even if the administration and

State Board approve the fee increase, the ASUI will be hard pressed to balance the budget which is already $38,000 in the red from last year.

The previous deficit, combined with the new accounting charges and expected State mandated increases in some ASUI employee wages, have ASUI officials scratching their collective heads as to the best way to deal with the situation.

President Marble expects there will have to be some difficult cuts in some departments. "We'll examine how efficiently departments have used the funds we have already given them and try to cut the fat, but with these unexpected charges we may need to look at a more fundamental reduction in some services," said Marble.

Without an adequate idea of how much will need to be cut, no one is yet prepared to talk about what may be cut from the nearly $1 million budget.

Prior to last year's $1.50 fee increase, the ASUI had not seen an increase since 1985 when ASUI President Jane Freund requested and received a 92 percent increase from $16.25 to $31.25.

Shark Club business practice brought under question

Shari Ireton
Staff Writer

Editor's Note: This story is the first of a two-part investigation into the Shark Athletic Club. One source was granted anonymity.

Though Moscow's new athletic club is celebrating their grand opening, some people claim they have had problems with the Shark Club for months.

"You can't trust anything they say," said club member Jane Doe.

Jane said problems began for her concerning the club last September. Her and a friend decided to join after talking to another girl in their sorority, who had paid a $50 membership fee for one month to take advantage of the 40 aerobics classes the club promised.

"We paid a $250 membership fee. That was to pay for a whole year plus two free months," she said. When they paid the membership fee, Jane and her friend also signed a contract with the club.

David Mortensen, a Shark Club Manager, said prospective members are charged differently, depending on the type of service they want from the club and the length of membership.

At that time, the club was still under construction, but Jane was reassured by a Shark Club sales representative they would be opening in two weeks. The representative also promised Jane they would call her once the club had opened.

Several weeks passed, the Shark club still hadn't opened and Jane "still hadn't heard anything. So, I called and called, but I couldn't get a hold of anybody, so I finally decided to just get a refund." Jane repeatedly went down to the gym to talk to someone, but said the doors were locked despite the "open" sign on the door.

When asked about the refunds and date of the club's opening, Mortensen replied "We don't guarantee openings. There are always two sides to every story, so we go on what was written...Sales reps have been let go if they are not telling customers the whole story." Mortensen said the club was delayed in opening due to construction.

"We were screwed out of $250 and we didn't know what to do," she said. Finally, over Thanksgiving break, Jane read an article in the Moscow-Pullman Daily News which said the club would have their grand opening on Jan. 1. By that time, however, Jane said she just wanted to get her money back.

O'Brien cited by city

World champion decathlete Dan O'Brien has been cited by the city of Moscow for an unlawful entry incident Jan. 11.

Shari Ireton
Staff Writer

World champion decathlete Dan O'Brien has been served with papers by the Moscow Police Department naming him as the suspect in an unlawful entry.

Moscow Police Chief Bill Brown said O'Brien, had walked into the Boyd Avenue apartment of Nicholas Labedzka at 1:30 a.m. Jan. 11. Labedzka is a University of Idaho student.

"O'Brien had been drinking and had entered Labedzka's apartment," said Brown, "He was ostensibly looking for friends who lived in that area."

Labedzka said O'Brien was in "the general vicinity" of his friend's, but "he found the wrong place." He attributed the athlete's mistake to the fact O'Brien was drunk.

"You've knocked on a wrong door before," said Labedzka, "you've called a wrong number."

Brown said there was no evidence of a forced entry, and Labedzka confirmed this, saying O'Brien entered through the unlocked downstairs door.

"If he had rang the doorbell, I would have heard it," he said, "but I didn't."

Labedzka signed a complaint against O'Brien, said Brown, which was served on Jan. 18.

"It's in the hands of the city attorney and they'll be taking care of the rest details," said Labedzka.

The case was forwarded to City Attorney Gary Riedner.

O'Brien, who had been arrested for drunk driving in 1988, is best known for holding the 1992 decathlon world record; failed to make the 1992 Summer Olympic Trials. UI President Elisabeth Zinser has proclaimed him the "greatest athlete in the world."

Ron Landeck, a Moscow attorney representing the decathlete, said he and O'Brien had no comment.

Incubator welcomes three new companies

J. Richard Rock
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho's North Central Idaho Business Incubator has accepted three new businesses to participate in its program.

The Incubator, located on Sweet Avenue, is designed to assist new businesses in early growth stages, which is typically the most difficult stage for businesses to survive.

Absearch develops and markets comprehensive databases of citations and abstracts for professional and scientific journals on specific topics such as ecology, wildlife, and fisheries. Absearch is a partnership founded by Dr. E.O. Garton and Dr. John T. Ratti, both in the Fish and Wildlife resources department at UI.

Landis and Gyr Powers, Inc. manufactures and installs computerized energy management systems. This firm joined the Incubator in November after originally operating out of the garage of resident sales engineer Bill Kissinger. While the company did not meet the Incubator's criteria of being a new firm, it was admitted as a tenant in order to retain the business in the Moscow area after an unsuccessful search for alternative office space.

Manning Applied Technology moved into the Incubator Dec. 15. Chris Manning, owner of the company, provides technical consulting for the modification and operation of special types of instruments such as Fourier transform infrared spectrometers, which are used in scientific research and for quality control in manufacturing.

The Incubator provides quality office space at a reduced rental rate. According to Carole Helm, executive director for the Moscow-Latah County Economic Development Council, the occupants of the Incubator share services such as secretarial assistance and copy and FAX machines.

The most notable success story to come out of the Incubator is Advanced Hardware Technologies in Pullman. This business started in the UI Incubator and now employs more than 50 people in the high technology industry.

According to Helm, most businesses stay in the Incubator for two to three years, and no business is allowed to stay for more than five. Rental rates are gradually increased over time to minimize rental shock for occupants when they move out of the Incubator.

Helm also outlined some specific criteria that prospective occupants must meet before being accepted. The Incubator looks for businesses that: 1) will diversify the economic base in Moscow, 2) plan to stay in the region or at least in Idaho, 3) are technology based businesses that will generate jobs, 4) demonstrate interaction with the University, and 5) hire students or provide student internships.

The Incubator, is owned by the university, was started with grants provided by both the federal and state government. Most occupants are related to the UI and stem from research conducted at the UI.

Open house shows off architecture

The Moscow-Latah County Economic Development Council Board of Directors held an open house Thursday evening at the North Central Idaho Business Technology Incubator.

The open house featured Business Office Park Final Projects designed by University of Idaho Architecture and Landscape Architecture students. Fifteen of these projects were designed to meet the needs of the Incubator graduates and other technology-based companies.

These projects will remain on display for public viewing at the Incubator until Feb. 4 from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. Monday through Friday.

Eastland made presence known in governor's race

Tim Helmke
News Editor

A Nampa native has been on a statewide sweep announcing his candidacy for the Republican nomination to be the next Idaho Governor including a stop on the University of Idaho campus.

Larry Eastland stopped at the Student Union Building Thursday afternoon to make his announcement to students and community members present. Eastland began his statewide trip Wednesday in southern Idaho and was to wrap up last night in more stops in north Idaho.

In his announcement speech, Eastland said it is time for a Republican to take office after 24 years of Democrats in the position. "It's like the old Idaho saying 'Ya have to dance with the cowboy that brung ya,'" said Eastland criticizing the role of the Democrats in the Governor's seat.

Eastland has campaigned throughout Idaho for the last year and he said he learned what needed to be done to run a successful campaign. "I saw a need for the people of Idaho to have a leader who can pass on to the next generation the best of today's Idaho and the best of tomorrow's world," said Eastland.

One issue Eastland spoke on is tax policy. He said as Governor he would direct the Attorney General to challenge the Federal Government in the United States Supreme Court over federal mandates. "If the federal government mandates some measure, make them pay for it. The same thing goes for the state, if the state mandates something, the state should pay for it," said Eastland.

Reformation of the Idaho system of government is also something Eastland would like to see done. He said it is not enough to cut the budget or to change the agency heads if the same system is in place which has driven up costs and decreased success in the past. "We as a state must change the way we do business so that the good people we have in government can succeed," said Eastland.

Eastland also commented on the issue of educational reform. He feels we are entering a world of

Alcohol Poisoning

French Hall resident takes trip to Gritman after party

Shari Ireton
Staff Writer

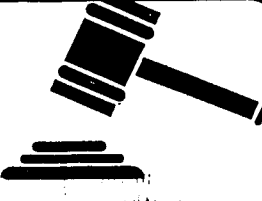

A University of Idaho student was taken to Gritman Memorial Hospital last week for alcohol poisoning.

The 19-year-old French Hall resident was helped back to her residence hall after attending a party last Thursday night, probably on campus, said Lt. Jake Kershisnik. At 12:57 a.m., the woman's roommate called police, said Kershisnik, and indicated she had found her in "real bad shape."

The investigating officer has indicated she is still gathering information, and no minor consumption charges have been filed yet.

Kershisnik said he recently solved a vandalism case by using a handwriting analysis. A cryptic message, he said, had been scrawled on the bathroom walls of the Administration

Annex. After comparing handwriting samples, Police identified the suspect as the spouse of a "disgruntled employee of the university who had been recently let go," said Kershisnik.

"It's good that we can make this kind of comparative evaluations and draw successful conclusions," he said.

Because the couple no longer resides in the area, no charges will be filed.

Back in the residence halls, the Christmas Grinch who made off with electronic equipment from Campbell and Snow Halls, also hit Troy Woodbury's room. Woodbury reported his CD player, valued at $154, stolen from his Whitman Hall room, during the holidays. The culprit apparently entered through the window, said Kershisnik.

Monday last day for registration

The last day for late registration for the Spring 1994 semester at the University of Idaho is Monday, Jan. 24. Beginning Jan. 25, students who wish to register will be required to obtain course validations, pay the $50 service charge and pay the $50 late registration fee.

After Feb. 7, registration will require successful petitioning to the UI Academic Petitions Committee, filing of course validation forms, payment of the $50 service charge and the $50 late registration fee. There is a $5 fee charged for each petition submitted to the Academic Petitions Committee.

January 24 is also the last day to add courses, change course sections or to change from pass-fail to regular-grade basis.

The Registrar's Office would also like to remind students that class drop/add via computer or touch-tone ends at 5:30 p.m. on Jan. 24. After that day, students will be assessed a $5 drop/add fee.

Students who have question should call the Registrar's Office at 885-6731. Office hours are 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. on Monday through Friday. The Registrar's Office is located in the Administration Annex.

Wildlife prof made grouse presentation

Kerry Reese, a UI associate professor of wildlife resources, recently presented "Efficiency of Sage Grouse Translocation Efforts" at the Sage Grouse Conference.

American Nuclear Society, Woodall presented "Impact of Quality Concepts on Nuclear Engineering Accreditation" and "Infiltration of Quality Concepts in Nuclear Engineering Education."

Godwin awarded Army badge in Dec.

Peg Godwin, University Bookstore manager, received a Army Recondo Badge in a ceremony in December. She earned the badge last summer during ROTC summer camp at Fort Lewis, Wash.

Cassetto rewarded for support efforts

James Cassetto, assistant professor of industrial technology, was awarded the Support Person of the Year for the 1993-94 school year by the Idaho International Technology Education Association. This award honors support and service to technology teachers in Idaho.

Hallaq discusses his marketing paper

John Hallaq, marketing professor, recently presented a paper at the national meeting of the Fourth Symposium on Cross-Cultural Consumer and Business Studies. Hallaq presented "Profile of Socialist Economic Systems" at the Honolulu, Hawaii, conference.

Fendorf awarded for soil chemistry work

Scott Fendorf, a UI environmental soil chemistry assistant professor, received an award at the annual meeting of the Soil Science Society of America in Cincinnati, Ohio. Fendorf won the Emil Truog Award which is given to a Ph.D. who made an outstanding contribution to soil science as shown in their Ph.D. dissertation.

Van Over talked of information systems

David Van Over, an assistant professor of information systems, chaired the "Issues in IS Development" at the 14th Annual International Conference on Information Systems (IS) in Orlando, Fla.

Hughett appointed to three year board term

Harvey Hughett, director of instructional media services, was appointed to a three-year term on the Steering Committee of the Western Cooperative for Educational Telecommunications. This group, established by the Western Interstate Commission for Higher Education, brings together educational institutions in western states with other consumers and providers of educational telecommunications.

'93 Top Hand Award given to Mosley

Jeff Mosley, an associate professor of range resources, was awarded the 1993 "Top Hand Award" at the annual meeting of Idaho region of the Society of Range Management.

Woodall presented two papers in Calif.

Associate Dean of Engineering, David Woodall, presented two of his papers at a conference recently in San Francisco. At the Winter Annual Meeting of the technological advances which lead the students of today into the future. "We have so many students who are prepared to learn. We have to ensure that they are getting the most advanced technological education they can," said Eastland.

Eastland received his masters and doctorate from the University of Southern California after he graduated from Brigham Young University with bachelors degrees in international relations and political science. He was on the White House staff of former President Gerald Ford. Eastland directed operations for the Summit of Industrialized Nations in 1983 at President Ronald Reagan's request.

Eastland was an Idaho delegate to the 1992 National Republican Convention in Dallas, Texas. He served on the Rules Committee while he was there. He also attended the state convention in 1992.

Then, last week, Jane went down to the Shark Club after they had opened, over five months later than she had originally been told.

"I went down Tuesday with a friend to get my money back, but the guy who helped us pointed out what the contract said," said Jane. The contract, Jane said, stated she had only three days after signing the document to ask for a refund.

Jane added the contract did have some conditions for refund, such as if the club member moved more than 50 miles away or was injured.

Jane told the Shark Club representative they had falsely advertised by claiming the club was to open months before January.

The employee again pointed out a clause where it said the contract had precedence over any other agreements or promises made by sales representatives.

"So, we can't get our money back," said Jane, who has decided to use her membership after all.

However, she pointed out the club does not have all the services they originally promised their customers.

"They were supposed to get five Stairmasters and they only have three," she said, "They were supposed to have 40 aerobics classes, which is why my friend joined. But, they haven't figured out the lighting on the dance floor in Xenon, which is where they are going to have it." such as the lighting.

"What equipment they do have is nice," she added, which is the point Mortensen, wants to make. "We brought in the most high quality equipment," he said, pointing to the rows of new Flex exercise equipment. "Moscow really needed a nice facility."

The Shark Club is owned by WWR Corporation, according to Mortensen, which "owns a lot of different businesses." WWR also runs the Xenon night club, upstairs from the club which was the site for a near riot and the arrest of former Xenon owner, Barry Tassler.

Mortensen said the Shark Club is working on an internship program with the University of Idaho for students interested in getting credit. They are also currently interviewing prospective instructors, who will be employed as personal trainers for the almost 400 club members.

Professors should remember student wallets

Students are in a position of little control in the classroom. Teacher evaluation forms often seem more of a token form of student input than any tangible way of seeing concrete changes. Things like tenure and the attitudes of individual professors also seem to propagate this feeling of helplessness. Just get through the semester and it'll all be behind me, students often say.

Professors, on the other hand, can essentially do what they want within the realms of their department and the university, which, in the hands of particularly able professors, may seem altogether too small.

One such way professors are the dictators of the classroom is through their choice of textbooks. Some professors make the much appreciated effort to require only one, inexpensive book, with a student writing a painful check over $200 in their minds. They were students once before; they remember.

Others simply require students to purchase textbooks written by themselves.

This requirement bears some facets that need consideration. For instance, in a classroom situation where most professors say they wish the textbook was better suited to students, a textbook written by the professor who is teaching the class would seem a huge bonus, and in some cases is. However, what makes one professor's book any better than all the other textbooks written in the field? Students often hear about the inadequacies of other textbooks. Why would this book be any different?

In all honesty, it might. Aside from personal bias, it could be horrid. So what's a student to do? Buy the book and just get through the semester. A different perspective from the professor is not offered (most of the UI professor-written textbooks are used in 3-400 level classes — classes in which students typically are more questioning). Where can a student go to get a slightly different take on the material, especially if the professor's strategy isn't working for this particular student?

Then there is the money factor. Currently, no professors on this campus are getting rich off of forcing students to buy their books. Professors are, however, dancing on the ethical edge by making approximately $2 a sale, depending on price and percentage as dictated by publishers.

While "monopolizing schemer" as the cartoon below suggests may be a tad strong for UI, professors find themselves in a position of raised power — now over the pocketbook.

If indeed professors aren't getting rich (and they could, given the right circumstances—say a core class textbook or a department head requiring use throughout numerous 100-level sections) why don't they try doing something that'll really help their students and boost respect for themselves? With a call to their publisher, professors could have profits from their textbooks subtracted from the sale price and have the money sent to their department for scholarship use.

This suggestion in no way infringes on their right to write a book and make a little money, especially in this "publish or perish" educational system. It would, however, remove any opportunity for student exploitation.

Try that, perhaps by the honor method or a university-wide policy, and students will respond with an instant step of respect. So the professor remembers what it is like to be in my place. This could be the start of a good semester.

Token holiday equates sleep

Monday, January 17th found Moscow (yawn and stretch) welcoming the morning a bit later than usual. Human Rights Day meant a well-deserved recollection of lost sleep. Something as seemingly unimportant as sleep can be shuffled. Wasted. Spilled and collected later.

And so too, it seems, can the dream of Dr. Martin Luther King, jr., be spilled and left dormant until sometime after noon. It can wait until the kids have watched their cartoons and enjoyed their bleached white Wonder Bread. All those trivial details dealing with so-called oppression in America can wait. Perhaps even until tomorrow. Because today is finally a day to rest.

And with few exceptions, the entire town, the entire state, the entire nation spent Martin Luther King's Day, 1994, not milking each hour and packing each moment with, "What can I do to help?" but with sleep and cigar smoke.

Perhaps there is a better way to acknowledge the dream of Dr.

Commentary Ted Burton

King and to assert our role in the fight for its materialization in a way other than by closing schools and locking the windows in post offices everywhere. Are we, as a collective whole, committed to the fight for human rights, or is our intention simply to shush another token group with another token holiday?

Curing a disease requires more than a diagnosis. More than a tsk-tsk and a sigh of, "That damn racism, you know... What do you do?" More than a $25 check made payable to the NAACP. It means education, immersion and the willingness to accept a few cultural slaps.

How about changing the policy of scholastic shutdown and replacing it with ethnic dance and readings of essays by Audre Lord? Education need not always involve the abstracts of math and the aesthetics of sculpture, it can be inter-active and lively.

Let's acknowledge those who do make efforts to educate and congratulate organizations like the Women's Center, Phi Beta Sigma, and Recognizing African American Concerns in Education.

Let's accept responsibility as a society for our active role in the perpetuation of racism, homophobia, and sexism.

Absentee husband means slim thighs, long phone bills

Since my life fell apart two weeks ago, I've decided to dedicate it to doing things which need to be done, not necessarily important things, just things. I want to lose weight, fill my empty time and graduate. Those are my current goals.

A year-and-a-half ago I decided to lose weight. I lost 40 pounds. I've decided to try and lost 15 more, bringing myself back to the size I was my first two years of college. When I initially decided to lose weight, I asked my husband for a step aerobic workout tape and a step. I wanted to work out at home instead of at a gym where others could watch my jiggle become firm. I thought it was a great idea to work out in the comfort of my own living room, but we have two very large picture windows facing a major street. The curtains of my home are almost permanently shut. Now, I do my aerobics three times a week behind closed curtains. I need something to fill my time.

Time is almost all I have since Rick moved away to do his student teaching. The past two weeks have flown by — I hope the remaining 18 of his student teaching stint do also.

He called me last night and informed me he was going to take a martial arts class to fill his time. There is a karate school near and he seems pretty "gung-ho" about the whole thing. I think he'll look funny in his gi. He's about 6-foot tall and weighs about 150 pounds. He's only skin and bones and that gi is just going to hang from his shoulders. He'll probably be the only student with suspenders instead of a belt.

Like many of you, I'm trying to complete my graduation packet and make sure I jump through all those administrative flaming hoops like a trained poodle. Rick also has to finish his, but he lives 200 miles away. So, I called him the other night and read him the questions. He relayed the answers and I completed the forms.

Not only do we have to fill out the same forms three times so they can have original signatures on all three documents, we must fill out a silly survey. The Graduating Senior Survey, Class of 1993-94 from the University Assessment Office, Academic Affairs. At first this questionnaire seemed a little silly and a waste of time. On second inspection, my first impression hadn't changed.

Rick, my husband, and I transferred here to complete our degrees. The colleges we were attending were no longer offering the degrees we were seeking. The UI offered both and we qualified for in-state tuition. We came here.

The majority of the questionnaire is supposed to be answered using Lickert scales. We are supposed to grade our impressions of UI on scales denoted by "Very Satisfied," "Satisfied," "A Little," "Moderately," "Good" and "Poor." This seems fairly subjective on the part of the student. It also doesn't seem to be a very scientific or useful survey.

The only question, other than the ones I was allowed to answer in essay-type form, which I felt was worthy of answering was D-11. It states: What were the most intellectually stimulating and challenging courses you took at UI? You're asked to fill in two classes and include the instructors' names. This is the most worthwhile question because it gets right to the point — what was the best class and who was the best instructor.

I'm ready to embark on another week alone. It's not so bad, I just get lonely for someone to talk to about my day and now I have all of you. My need is filled.

Letters to the Editor

Animals created for human use

The University of Idaho supports slavery according to Ted Burton. In a recent opinion article, Mr. Burton casually equates the use of research animals to slavery of humans. In essence, he equates African-Americans (to be politically correct; people to be sensible and realistic) to bunnies.

Animals rights believers always assume this sort of equation to be true. Whether you believe in evolution or creation, however, both place people in far more importance than other animals.

In the sense of evolution, we, as humans, won the race by evolving higher than any other species.

In the aspect of creation, the world and all its life were created solely for man. Either way, we are dominant. Does this give us a right to cruelty? No. It does, however, give us the right to use plants and animals to our own benefit even if it means their death. Experimentation leading toward the benefit of mankind is warranted. Granted, it would be better if such experimentation wasn't necessary, but until such a time, don't feel guilty for being human and not a rabbit.

The animal rights activism bases itself around guilt. People feel bad because animals don't have the same rights that we do. Face it, animals don't have the same capabilities that we do. They have no conceptual thought. A cow in a pasture will do what? Graze. A cow in the same pasture with the same rights, freedoms and obligations as people will do what? Graze.

I love animals. They are literally the focus of my life as I study Dairy Science. Maybe sometime animal rights activists will take as much time to study the animals they supposedly are so concerned about.

Maybe then, they will learn that even they are of greater value than a rabbit and learn to appreciate animals in the sense they were created for — our use and pleasure.

Orleman story an inspiration

I was very pleased to see the article in the Jan. 14 Argonaut regarding Jane Orleman's journey through childhood sexual, physical and mental abuse, with the help of expression through painting.

I feel that what Jane Orleman is doing is wonderful. If she is able to reach even one abuse victim (and the abusers, too) it's worth it.

Abuse victims, either physical, mental or sexual, are always entrapped in a world of unrevealed shame, disgust, confusion and loneliness. Coerced into silence by the abusers, victims feel that they are the only ones in the world who are going through this.

In order for any type of abuse to end, we need to break the silence. Victims need to know that it is all right to tell, and be believed. I cannot understand why disclosures of so many victims are subject to doubt and speculation.

Jane Orleman's courage to go public and speak of her abuse is truly an inspiration. I hope and pray that more abuse victims will break the silence and seek help from a therapist, 12-step group, school counselor or anyone else they feel comfortable confiding in.

This is not an easy road. I know, I am traveling it.

—Mary K. Deane

Animals simply aren't humans

I have come close to responding to several of the editorials presented in the Argonaut over the period of the past few years. In each case, I refrained from comment with the final understanding that the writers are students trying to learn a difficult craft and doing so in one of the most public forums. I admire the effort, but frequently disagree with the methods used in Argonaut editorials. I always hope that thoughtful students will take up the cause and argue against misinformed opinion.

The recent editorial (Jan. 14) written by Ted Burton is too insulting for me to trust that someone else will respond. Although the theme is not perfectly clear, my reading of the piece indicates that Burton equates laboratory use of rabbits to pre-Civil War use of African slaves.

Mr. Burton, the African slaves were humans and rabbits are animals. The difference should be obvious to all but the dull. Perhaps Burton was trying to relate his ideas to our current national celebration of the life of Martin Luther King Jr. The historic American document most relevant to King's goals reads "...all men are created equal..." We all agree the contextual interpretation includes women but animals are not mentioned.

Laboratory use of animals is an issue worthy of discussion, but it is quite separate from the rights granted human beings living in our country. Burton's attempt to equate the two implies a lack of value for the African people brought to this country against their will. I believe it is this subtle and thoughtless lack of value that modern day African Americans put forward as one indication of racism. It will not continue without challenge.

Mr. Burton is responsible for what he writes, and Editor-in-Chief Katé Lyons-Holestine is responsible for the editorials printed in the Argonaut. Lyons-Holestine cannot hide behind a freedom of speech argument and should not confuse the sentiment of this letter with a desire to be politically correct. Mr. Burton has full right to express his opinion. My complaint about his opinion is that it is a stupid opinion. The offense in this case lies with the editor who chose to print such an opinion.

Allowing children to hear complaints about the "special rights of minorities" and the "new victimization of the white male" brings nothing but confusion. With parents' prodding, kids condition themselves to resent others. And when justification for their resentment is unable to be found they replace their premature intellectualizations with a bitter refusal to even try to love.

Let's accept the value of releasing anger. Society demands special interest groups present themselves in a way that makes us comfortable, and so doing asks that they suppress their anger. Otherwise we'll just refuse to listen.

Let's embrace the worth of self-expression in all its manifestations. Radical gay rights activists from Queer Nation possess a role quite different, yet no less worthwhile, than more conservative organizations. However, they must both be celebrated. For instance, the powerful language and the blasting visibility of the gay rights cause could never have been accomplished without the shock of drag queens and the scandal of pride parade theatrics. We must accept not just activists who speak as we do, but also those who refuse to hide their passion.

And most importantly, let's stop chit-chatting and start applying our own ornery ointment to whichever social scab each of us finds most annoying.

Today is Friday, January, 19th, and, as usual, we all would prefer to chase lost sleep than attempt to manipulate reality.

Perhaps today I will forgo napping and do something more worthwhile than whine with editorials. Liberal opinions shot by Middle-class white college students like myself are a dollar a dozen. (That's a cliché with inflation.) Perhaps today I will actually sweep up that which left to settle could soon become rancid. With a muzak background and with sequins in my snaps I say, "Perhaps today will be

Moscow resurrects barter system

Remember the days of the barter system? No? O.K! Here's a chance to participate in this once popular form of commerce.

The fourth annual Extended Post-Nuclear Family Post-Holiday Barter Fair will be in the basement of the Unitarian Church on Sunday starting at 3 p.m.

The church is located at 420 E. 2nd Street. The fair will run until about 9 p.m.

Every one is invited to participate and there is no charge.

This is a chance to trade in the sweater from your 80-year-old Aunt Martha in Nebraska that just does not quite fit your style or body.

In return, you get to choose something from what others have brought to the fair.

This is far better than going to the department store to return the item, no lines, no hassle, no temptation to put all of the other eye-catching items on your credit card.

Crafts you made, items you were going to sell in the yard sale or things you have out-grown will also be accepted in trade.

Even if you have nothing to trade in, you can come and buy anything you like.

A potluck dinner and musical jam will start at 6 p.m. For the potluck, everyone should bring a covered dish to share and enough complete place settings for everyone in their party/family.

This is the kind of hometown, country event that causes the warm fuzzies.

For more information please contact Kate Schalck at 882-9309.

Graduate to sing in Recital hall

In the previous issue the Calendar of Events reported that the Graduate Voice Recital featuring Rob McIntyre would be Sunday in Ridenbaugh Hall.

It will actually be Sunday, Jan. 23 at 4 p.m. in the Recital Hall of the Lionel Hampton School of Music.

This recital is open to the public and free of charge.

Luzzo advises, listen to mother

Tristan Trotter
Staff Writer

A university campus is more than just a location. It's more than a bunch of classrooms, offices and people attending and teaching courses. It's more than just a culmination of individuals who happen to be in the same place at the same time.

There are people who work on campus who are not necessarily directly related to classes, grades and diplomas, but who are nonetheless vital to its functioning and deserve recognition.

At the University of Idaho library, I had the pleasure of getting to know Frank Luzzo, one of the night custodians, during my late Tuesday evening shifts.

Luzzo comes in from 5 p.m. to 2 a.m., five nights a week, to maintain the third floor. It's a brutal schedule, and Luzzo would like to someday work more regular hours. For now, however, his spirits and enthusiasm betray this desire.

Luzzo was born and basically raised in Idaho. His father was 16, and his mother 15, when they got married. A "good Catholic couple," they started having kids right away...and they didn't stop until they had thirteen. Luzzo is the second oldest in this clan.

With the exception of one brother in Japan and another in Turkey the rest of his siblings have remained in the Northwest—as have his parents, who are now in the Tri-Cities.

After high school graduation in the Tri-Cities, Luzzo went immediately into the Navy and served for twenty-two months in Vietnam. After that, he started growing his hair and attending classes at Columbia Basin Community College in Pasco.

At the end of one year of college, he left for Bunker Hill, where he worked in the mines for three years. He went from job to job with various labor organizations like the Corps of Engineers and Parks and Recreation. Finally, when Luzzo felt his hair was long enough, he bought a motorcycle and developed a passion for mechanics.

Luzzo's life was not always smooth or healthy, however. His past has been plagued by drug and alcohol addiction, dating all the way back to his days in the Tri-Cities. In fact, his move to Moscow in 1982 was essentially an attempt to escape all that.

Now, one large intestine less and a whole lot wiser, Luzzo has "found Jesus," made a home for himself in Troy and splits his time between a hundred different things.

Luzzo is the president of the Troy City Council. "So if the mayor leaves...or dies...I'm the mayor!" he says. He does the books for the Troy High School basketball games, served on the Nazarene Church board for six years and was a Cub Scout leader.

Frank Luzzo, janitor on the library's third floor, still follows his mothers' advice.

He loves traveling and camping and still owns his motorcycle. He hopes one day to take some kind of a mechanical position at the UI and plans to stay here until he retires. That is, he says, "Unless they fire me...or shoot me...or put me out to pasture."

An avid reader of Louis L'Amour and Chuck Dobson, Luzzo keeps his mind active, as a trivia buff and by writing poetry.

He's probably written over five hundred poems and has been published several times for contests in the past. He also wrote a song, which he produced and wanted to sell to radio stations.

He loves listening to classic rock and roll, but also enjoys Black Happy, Nirvana, and the Eurythmics. Tammy Wynette and Johnny Cash give a country flair to his musical preferences, and he even has a fondness for the acoustic scene, with Eric Clapton at the top of his list of favorite guitarists.

Luzzo is someone who is best to experienced first hand because he is a complex man. He left me with a few words of wisdom. "Having lived life to its fullest, my suggestion would be to stay on top of your bills, attend the church of your choice, and (he smiles) always listen to your mother."

Catch a Falling Moon tattoo downtown

Dave Lewis
Staff Writer

University students, or anybody who wants to decorate their body, can get a tattoo in Moscow.

I rode the escalator in the West One Bank building, turned left and found Falling Moon Tattoo Studio.

If I didn't have such a macho attitude I would admit that I was a little scared as I went inside.

Falling Moon was my first tattoo studio experience. The pictures on the walls, by themselves, were enough to make me edgy.

Fiery-eyed skulls with German W.W.II helmets, ghastly ghouls riding Harleys and posters printed with "Ride or Die" were not soothing.

I imagined the proprietor of such an establishment would not take kindly to a timid guy like me bothering him.

For a moment, I wished I had a tattoo so I would fit in to this tattooed society. The next moment

I was petrified that I would soon get my wish, like it or not.

Thankfully, all these fears vanished when co-owner Bryan Hughes stepped into the lobby and greeted me with genuine friendliness.

He offered to tell me anything I wanted to know about tattoos and even let me watch two young ladies get their first tattoos.

Bryan took me into a side room, where artist Jeremy Hogan was just beginning to work on the calf of Keesha Ochsner, a junior at Washington State University. She was getting what would soon be a beautiful multi-colored sea shell.

Keesha laughed at my obvious reaction upon learning she wasn't a freshmen.

She said "I would have done it sooner, but I didn't want to be a copy cat, and I took a long time to make up my mind to do it."

Keesha didn't seem to be in any pain, but admitted to feeling some discomfort. I could see her leg twitched sometimes when the needle touched her.

Hygiene is important at Falling Moon. Jeremy wears rubber gloves and used a lot of antiseptic.

The needle that injects the ink is sterilized and makes a cozy little buzzing noise, not the unnerving industrial racket I expected.

The artist's demeanor did a lot to calm my nerves if not Keesha's. She didn't seem at all upset.

Once calling to her friend, "Hey, come here and look, its bleeding. That's cool!"

Keesha's friend and tattoo partner preferred to remain anonymous because her father doesn't know about her tattoo yet. I'll bet he never finds out unless she tells him.

When asked where she was going to have her tattoo, she pointed to a place on her anatomy that even her father isn't likely to see.

Falling Moon doesn't as yet do body piercing. While in the studio, I met a woman, she too will remain anonymous, who is considering going back into that line of work. However, she plans to get certified before doing any more navels.

Bryan and Jeremy can use any two dimensional representation as a pattern for a tattoo. A picture from a magazine or an advertisement will serve as a guide.

The photo album on the reception desk at Falling Moon is filled with finished tattoos that Jeremy Hogan has done in his almost three years in the business.

It shows some of the creativity people have. Both in content and placement.

I didn't get a tattoo while at Falling Moon. However, I am now thinking about it.

Considering the feelings I had walking in to meet Bryan and Jeremy, that says a lot about these men who run a body art business in Moscow, Idaho.

ASUI Outdoor Rental better than expected

Chris Miller

The ASUI Outdoor Rental Center isn't as good as most students think it is.

It's better. With new top-of-the-line purchases, the center's outdoor recreation possibilities have shot up to a new level of high quality for a low price, giving students the opportunity to try an expensive outfit otherwise out of their reach.

"Most students don't have $1,000 to plunk down on Telemark gear," said Steve Mims, manager of the Outdoor Rental Center. "Now you can rent the outfit for $10."

To a neophyte, the differences in the new equipment are mind-boggling. "Things have been this specialized in the real world, but we haven't had the money or the priority..." said Mike Beiser, Outdoor Program Coordinator. "Now we've put ourselves on the cutting edge."

With the new purchases, the Outdoor Rental Center is better able to provide excellent service for the 10,000 students that take advantage of low rental rates each year. Students who don't know exactly what they're doing, but have a healthy lust to learn can simply describe the terrain they plan to ski on, and they'll be able to rent the equipment that'll best suit their needs.

Some skiers, however, know exactly what they want, and are interested in trying new gear, which often assists them in personal purchase decisions.

"We have a fairly educated population — they come in and they'll want a single cambered ski with a lot of side cut... and we got it," Beiser said.

The winter outdoor rental equipment isn't limited to cross-country, Telemark skis or $100-retail Italian avalanche ski poles, but also includes equipment such as snowshoes (which happened to be entirely rented out last weekend), alpine ski outfits, snowboards, ice axes, climbing gear, camping gear, winter clothing — if a student doesn't have it, the rental center does.

In addition to winter recreation equipment rental, the ASUI Outdoor Rental Center sells tickets for the ASUI ski bus to Schweitzer and Silver Mountain ski resorts on Saturdays near Sandpoint and Kellogg, respectively.

Tickets for each 45 seat bus sell for $23 and cover the price of the lift ticket and transportation. The normal student price for a Silver Mountain lift ticket is $24. The bus leaves from the front loading area of Student Union Building promptly at 6:30 a.m.

Beiser said the goal of the ski bus is to maximize the time spent on the slopes. "The service is bang, bang, bang," he said, emphasizing the efficiency.

Those interested in equipment rental or ski bus can rent equipment and purchase tickets in the Outdoor Rental Office located in the basement of the SUB.

Schweitzer offers small town 30th anniversary

SANDPOINT — In addition to great skiing, you can enjoy the friendly small town celebration atmosphere this week. Schweitzer Mountain Resort is celebrating its 30th year of operation in conjunction with Sandpoint's Winter Carnival this week.

Schweitzer Mountain Resort offers almost 50 runs over 2,350 ski-able acres ranging in difficulty from easy to most difficult (indicated by a double black diamond). This coupled with the accommodations can lead to a wonderful getaway.

Schweitzer Mountain Resort is friendly to anyone who wishes to use its facilities. In addition to student discounts and free skiing and lodging for children 12 years-old and under, Schweitzer offers a guarantee to customers. Schweitzer's "Skier Guarantee" promise is if snow conditions do not meet the skier's expectations — for any reason — the skier simply returns the lift ticket within one hour of purchase to receive a "snow check" voucher to come back and ski another day.

Children are welcome at Schweitzer, Idaho's fastest growing family ski resort. Children-stay-free packages are offered on a one-to-one basis (one child per paying adult). A variety of hotels, motels and condominiums at Schweitzer and Sandpoint participate in this program. Children's programs offered at the ski resort include a daycare, Kinder Kamp On the Mountain and Mogul Mice. In these programs children are monitored throughout the day for a cost of $18 to $45.

Students can purchase a lift ticket at any Tidyman's for $21. An adult one day ticket at Schweitzer costs $32, a student (ages 7-17) lift ticket can be

Sun Valley

Most dependable snow in world

Darin Crisp

With over half the 1994 ski season over, and with temperatures rising, skiers and their non-skiing hangers-on are still flocking to Sun Valley for the excellent opportunities provided by this recreation Mecca.

Located almost on the geographic center of Southern Idaho, the resort lies somewhat north of Ketchum, Idaho, and boasts a total of 2000 ski-able acres.

With over 70 runs dropping 3400 vertical feet, and a 9150 foot summit elevation, the place has a lot of downhill, with a good mix of skill levels.

Though the level of skiing difficulty is primarily aimed toward the intermediate skier, the resort maintains about 38 percent of its runs for the less capable and about 17 percent for those foolhardy, death wish-holding individuals who insist on adrenaline for breakfast.

If the sun's been out just a little too long, and the snow starts packing, don't worry. According to the resort's public relations people, the place has the biggest acreage of automated snowmaking capacity in the free world. They call it the most dependable snow in North America, with 600 acres covered by artificial snow, for hassle-free skiing without waiting in a lift line.

Speaking of lifts, the resort has 16, on two mountains, for a total lift capacity of over 26,000 people.

If you'd like to ski, but don't know how, want to improve your skills or learn a new one (like snow boarding), then the place to go first is the Sun Valley Ski School.

Offering instruction ranging from private to group, hourly to five full days of instruction, the school provides clinics for adults, children, racers and even breaks the instruction down to gender specifics.

If you're bored of the standard fare, want to see some new country from a different perspective, and aren't afraid of heights, try the one of the heli-skiing tours offered.

Nothing beats the feeling of close-to-the-earth flying over a brilliantly white landscape with powder below and a clear, blue sky overhead. The view forward is of a mountain with an untraced run down its pristine flank.

Silver Mountain's ski runs offer it all

Chris Miller

Affordable prices or great service are not what makes Silver Mountain one of the most appealing ski resorts in the area.

(Nor is it spectacular snow.) But what does make it one of the best is a balance of ski runs that can more than accommodate all skiers — the "new and terrified," the hazy classification of "intermediate," and the "expert."

Most importantly, skiers of varying skill levels can ski all day without losing each other and still enjoy themselves. The layout strategy of runs allows more experienced skiers to find jumps and bumps, or split-off to tackle challenging runs. Covering 1,500 developed acres, Silver Mountain manages to hold 50 named runs, but never is so large that skiers can't meet at halfway points or deal with the excessive waiting that often stifles ski time at other resorts.

Expert skiers, snowboarders and their counterparts — the I-got-guts-but-no-skill-skiers — will find the more difficult runs on the back side of the mountain near chair #4. The runs are steeper and tend to contain more jumps, usually several in succession.

The slopes are an important part of a resort, but Silver Mountain also excels in the little things that separate the good and great. Most useful and used is their complimentary ski check and free ski wax. The lift operators are so friendly, skiers can't help but smile, as is everyone in the lodge.

Perhaps the most interesting anomaly is the 16,366 foot long Silver Mountain Gondola. In about 20 minutes it raises skiers from the base of the mountain in Kellogg to 5,700 feet elevation at the lodge (the highest peak is 6,300 feet).

The eight-person capacity cabins move quickly up 3,400 vertical feet, and provide a beautiful view on clear days. However, the image-touting gondola can also be slow and painful for skiers who just want to get on the slopes. In reality, the trip is much faster than driving up the mountain would be, but the perception still remains of a long wait.

Every day at 10:30 a.m. and 2 p.m. Silver Mountain offers free two-hour classes on Learn-To-Ski or snowboarding with the purchase of a $20 (student price) "Easy Chair" lift ticket. Workshops for novices through experts are offered at the same times on groomed snow, powder snow, moguls, ice or crud for $15. Private lessons are also offered at $38 per 1-1/2 hours for all ages and abilities.

Daycare is available, including an introduction to snow play.

Lift ticket prices for students are $24 with a current student ID. Silver Mountain has teamed up with area Rosauers stores to sell lift tickets, which cost $21 for students.

These helicopter ski lifts can be had on a one-lift basis, multiple lift basis, or on an overnight basis. You don't have to be a great skier, because they'll teach you.

What to do after you're done skiing? Or maybe you took one run too many, and the rest of the group's left you to recuperate and mend while they finish their ski vacation on the slopes?

Well, Sun Valley, Ketchum and the surrounding areas offer some of the finest dining available anywhere, and the variety isn't to be beat anywhere else in the Northwest south of Spokane or east of Seattle.

Fine food is served to titillate the tongue in styles ranging from French to Thai. And once the stomach is satiated, the next step is some entertainment.

The Sun Valley Village (the company-owned and apres ski center) yields not only food, but offers three different music festivals, performing arts by the local repertory company year-round, performances at the opera house year-round. Should you happen not to be in a classic cultural mood, two movie houses exist to provide the most up-to-date modern cultural experiences possible.

Sun Valley is to skiers what Spring Break is to weary students. With opportunities such as six great special theme package deals offered throughout the season, the kids-stay-and-ski-free program, the ski school, and the heli-ski program, skiers have more choices about where to go and what to do than at anytime in the past.

Tomorrow is the fudge makers contest at Foster's Crossing. This continues throughout the day. The Torchlight Parade and fireworks will begin at 5:30 p.m. and the Gala Ball "White Ties and Black Diamonds," featuring outdated costumes, starts at 8:30 p.m. at Schweitzer Mountain Resort.

Fishers wait patiently on the frozen surface of Spring Valley Reservoir. Just one of the many winter activities available in Idaho, ice fishing can be enjoyed by anybody. With just a short pole, ice auger and several days of sub-freezing temperatures, the angler's itch can be appeased in the dead of winter. Caution: Make sure the ice is thick enough.

Ski club competes this weekend

Bridget Lux
The University of Idaho Ski club will compete in their second meet this weekend at Snoqualmie Summit.

David Grey, head coach, said, "I think our women's team has a good shot at regionals," but the team as a whole could do better. Their first meet was last weekend at Mount Bachelor.

U-I's team is a club team while most of their competition are varsity teams from universities all over the Northwest including Eastern Oregon University, Albertson College of Idaho and Western Washington University. Teams from British Columbia also compete in these meets.

Not being a varsity sport has the disadvantage of funding problems, Grey said. The team receives funding from ASUI Recreation Advisory Board and it also showed a Warren Miller film earlier this year to raise money. Through ASUI and the film, the team made approximately $2,100, said Grey. Scholarships are not given out to these athletes, instead they personally finance the remainder of the costs.

This year the ski team trained at a "Christmas camp" from January 2 - 9 at Brundage Mountain near McCall. Grey is now looking into training during the week at the North South Ski area near Pottlatch, but is concerned with the amount of snow they have received.

Three more meets are scheduled for this year, including this weekend's meet and conference championships. Qualifiers then go on to regionals.

This year's team is made up of about 35 members with a "nucleus" of 13 - 15 skiers on the race squad said Grey. Anyone is welcome to join the team and their are "no cuts" he said, "If you just want to learn to ski better, you can be on the team."

Brundage Mountain

Powder hounds, beginners welcome

MCCALL — Powder hounds, boarders and beginners are welcome to ski Brundage Mountain near McCall, Idaho.

As you climb to the top of the mountain on one of Brundage's three chair lifts a breathtaking view is exposed. The mountain overlooks the Salmon River, beautiful Payette Lake, Oregon's Eagle Cap Wilderness and the Seven Devils which tower over Hell's Canyon.

From the top of the hill, skiers have the option of taking more than 30 runs down the hill. Brundage offers runs for the beginner, like "Easy Way," and runs for the more advanced skiers, such as "Upper Slobovia" and "Race Course." Brundage Mountain boasts the driest powder in Central Idaho and predominantly sunny days with clean crisp air to ski through.

Brundage Mountain Ski School is accredited by the Professional Ski Instructors of America. If you're a beginner, you're welcome. The better your skills, the more fun skiing is. Former Olympian and member of both the U.S. and Northwest Ski Halls of Fame, Corey Engen, is Brundage Mountain's Director of Skiing.

Brundage Mountain is also a member of Ski Magazine's successful SKIwee program which teaches children to ski. Bunny Bumpers is Brundage's ski school for four and five year-olds. For younger children, The Bunny Hutch, a state licensed day care facility, is available for families.

Snow Cat skiing, lodging accommodations, video and photography of your ski trip, shopping centers, gift shops and dining establishments are also available at Brundage Mountain Ski Area.

McCall, an historic frontier town, has been nicknamed "Ski Town USA" because it has been represented numerous times at the Winter Olympic Games by local skiers.

McCall also hosts the First Security Winter Games of Idaho and the Annual Winter Carnival. The Winter Games of Idaho are an amateur sporting event in the Olympic tradition. February's Annual Winter Carnival is famous for its incredible ice sculptures.

Adults ski at Brundage Mountain for $23 a day, lift tickets for children are $16 a day. Brundage's ski lifts operate from 9 a.m. to 4 p.m. on the weekends and 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. during the week.

McCall is 192 miles from Moscow over Highway 95.

Sleigh rides offer romantic experience

For a slower pace and a quiet romantic ride, the Quad-L Sleigh Rides offer an experience from the times before snowmobiles. Located at Schweitzer Mountain Resort, the Quad-L Ranch offers an old-fashioned sleigh ride featuring Norwegian Fjord Horses pulling an old-fashioned sleigh.

Your hosts, Chip, Kim, Brandy and Josh Lamb take you on a 40 minute ride through beautiful glades of old growth hemlock.

They serve hot cocoa, hot cider and popcorn. Remember to dress warm and bring your camera.

Selkirk snowmobile tours relieve cabin fever

Once, snow shoes were the quickest way to traverse snow covered areas. Then came cross country skis.

Today technology has given us the snow mobile.

Snowmobile tours are exciting, fast paced treks across the wilderness. Nothing relieves cabin fever quicker than an exhilarating romp across a mountain ridge or gliding across a pristine meadow.

Selkirk Snowmobile Tours offers groomed trails through spectacular countryside.

The views you will experience of the Selkirk and Cabinet Mountains are spectacular. Plus, you'll ride with a guide who will do all they can to ensure you and your friends have an incredible snowmobile tour.

A one hour tour begins at $35 and a full day tour can cost $200 — depending upon your preferences.

Warm waterproof clothing, boots and gloves are recommended. Helmets and instructions are provided.

Herman jazzes up ASUI Coffeehouse performances

Tristan Trotter
Staff Writer

With everything from jazz, to ragtime, to the blues on tap, ASUI Productions will bring Gordon Neal Herman to the Vandal Lounge in the Student Union Building on Saturday.

For most students and staff, seeing Herman perform will be a new experience; but for Herman himself, the University of Idaho campus is a familiar place — a place he called home as a graduate student in the early 80s.

Herman received his masters in composition from the UI, and established a history of performances and appearances in various locations around Moscow. The Cafe Libre (now closed) was where he made his debut and became a regular musical attraction. He also played for the Sunday Champagne Brunch at the Moscow Hotel for two years.

But Herman's talents were not confined to the performance aspect of music. He was the Fine Arts Program Director for KUID-FM from 1981 to 1984, host of a daily classical show and a weekly program featuring keyboard music called the Ivory Hour. Jazz programs also received his attention during his employment at the station.

After graduation from UI, Herman tried his hand at teaching at the University of Wisconsin-Waterloo as the visiting lecturer in American popular music. This career move, however, was not permanent.

Herman wanted to focus on performing, and in 1985, he moved to Portland where his solo career took off. Now, Herman travels to colleges, festivals, and nightclubs across the Pacific Northwest, presenting his varied and "virtuostic" art to audiences. In fact, 1988 saw him here in Moscow, where he appeared at the Renaissance Fair.

Herman recently released an album called "High Tide at Klamath Falls," engineered by Billy Oskay of Windham Hill, which has already received praise.

The performance Saturday will be casual and comfortable, with the audience seated around the grand piano in the Vandal Lounge. Come experience this Alumni's unique and varied presentation from 8 p.m. to 10:30 p.m.

The good, bad of Suzy Boggus

Mark McReynolds
Contributing Writer

To really grasp the spirit of Something Up My Sleeve, the latest release from country star Suzy Boggus, one needs to recall a story of great nihilism, a story about amoral people doing nefarious things on purpose, a story like ... The Good, The Bad and The Ugly.

First, The Good. Suzy's a babe. Just take a look at the CD jacket pictorial. Notice the prominence of the wedding ring? The coy "look, I'm standing by my man" smile on her face. You're probably wondering, "what's that got to do with the sound of music in Moscow?"

Well, it has everything to do with it. Modern music is as much about image and attitude as it is about music. Otherwise, how could you explain Madonna? Suzy's a sex symbol- '90's style-with a ring on her finger and monogamy in her heart.

Second, The Bad. This is, of course, country music. The obligatory explanation about how the phrase "country music" is in fact oxymoronic will be saved for a later date. To sum up, there's a depressing song, another depressing song, another depressing song, and then, for a change of pace, there's one more depressing song. Does he love me? Will he leave me? Will we change? What's gonna happen when we change? It's a virtual Oprahfest set to music. Grab some tissue and put on this CD. By the fourth song, "You Will Never," you will probably be sobbing uncontrollably. By the eighth song, "You Wouldn't Say That To A Stranger," all the booze in your room will be sopped up. By the last song, the title track, you will probably want to kill yourself. Painfully. Slowly. Because you deserve it and it doesn't matter anyway. It's just one depression after another—you'd think Suzy was a French novelist.

Finally, The Ugly. This is, of course, country music. But what's worse, it's ordinary. There's nothing here that you haven't heard before. Put on a Garth Brooks CD, add estrogen, and viola—Suzy the French cowgirl. She sings of predominately passionate subjects, but dispassionately. We've all heard Bonnie Raitt. We're all friends of Bonnie Raitt. And Suzy is no Bonnie Raitt.

But what can you expect? According to the CD jacket all of the vocal tracks were recorded in the Bahamas. Who's got time to be depressed when there's so much fun outside. If she wanted to sing passionately about depression, she should have come to Moscow.

Perhaps this ugliness, this badness, is not completely her fault. After all, one cannot make beautiful that which is intrinsically ugly. Just look at Bauhaus architecture, Tammy Faye Baker, or, of course, country music.

Jason fearful of chrome dudes

I have been having trouble resolving some differences with a professor of mine. No matter what I say, he doesn't see my point. When we wake up together in the morning he likes to immediately hop out of bed, whereas I like to hit the snooze six or seven times. He doesn't seem to care about my needs. Do you think sleeping at my own house most nights will jeopardize my grade?
—Tired in Moscow

Jason would have to say, go for the A and tough it out. I assume you are only "nocturnally co-habiting" with this sleaze for the grade. Jason would hope so. I think that cutting the prof. off could certainly be disastrous to your grade. Did you even consider the fact that you might have this professor again? What do think would happen then? We are here to earn grades, not learn.

Jason says, if you've found a method that works for you, go with it. Jason would have to suggest humoring your professor to the fullest extent in order to get the A. Good luck, and best wishes.
— Jason

Dear Jason

Why do men who own big trucks need to post big busty chrome women on their mud flaps?

—Sick of all the chrome

Ah yes, Jason knows the infamous "naked lady mud flap syndrome" all too well.

I have no idea what the whole chrome nipple fetish is.

I know a few truck drivers and I am quite sure these are not likenesses of their wives. Perhaps you've heard the old adage, "it doesn't matter where you get your appetite, as long as you come home to eat." Jason is in full support of this wise old saying. I say, if these dirty old truck-driving geezers like to have the busty chrome babes prominently displayed on their mud-flaps, more power to them.

Jason, however, is fearfully awaiting the arrival of the anatomically correct chrome dude edition. Have fun out on those roads, and remember, a few busty babes is better than a few smoking guns.
—Jason

"Dear Jason" is an advice column open to questions from persons and students from all walks of life. Questions concerning your life problems or dilemmas may be submitted to Jason for prudent advice. Your questions must be in written form and you may stay anonymous.

Neo-nazis found guilty of attack

Two neo-nazis were convicted and sentenced to jail for leading a beating on a U.S. luge racer after insulting his black teammate.

On Oct. 29 an attack was made on Duncan Kennedy in the resort of Oberhof, Germany. Tino Voelkel and Silvio Eschrich were found guilty of causing grievous bodily harm after a one-day trial. Eschrich was sentenced to two years and eight months in jail, while Voelkel to one year. They both could have received five years. Both have long records of offenses.

Kennedy was not badly injured and was able to identify the two men.

T and T head to Winter Olympics

Trinidad and Tobago bobsleigh driver, Gregory Sun, works out in the Kibbie Dome. He hopes to compete in the Winter Olympics. This week he and his teammates will be preparing in Italy at a track in Cortina, "the second biggest death trap in the world." This will be his fifth race in the driver's position.

Trinidad, Tobago has first winter sport ever to compete in 1994

Matthew Andrew
Sports Editor

Think you know what one of the world's most dangerous sports really is? Think it's American gridiron (that's Aussie for football)? Try again. It's over 100-years-old, and lasts less than a minute. How about bobsledding?

Bobsledding. In the Argonaut. At the University of Idaho. What's going on? Many of you are probably aware of the fact Christian Stokes and the Jamaican bobsled team practice in Moscow. But there's more. Ever hear of a little country down near Jamaica called Trinidad and Tobago? Well, they have a bobsled team. They practice here at the UI in the ASUI-Kibbie Dome, and they're going to the Olympics.

The team got started a couple of years ago when one man was brought to a bobsled track by the Jamaican bobsled founder Stokes, who many of you see in the dome practicing and is currently at the European Championships before dashing off to the Olympics. This man is now the founder, president, secretary, treasurer, you name it, he fills it and gets the job done. No it's not Superman, but rather Gregory Sun.

The first time Sun went down a track, he sat in at the brakeman spot. The brakeman is the one who pushes from the back and goes along for the ride. What he is in for he doesn't know. What he does know is that he better hang on, because he can't see where they are going, what's going to happen, and when the heck to pull the brake. All he knows is that when he hears his driver yelling, it means, "pull the brake," which he'd gladly do. Why? The brakeman sits in a crouched position with his knees to his chest and his head tucked. He doesn't know if they will ride the turn high, skid out of control, or quite possibly—flip. Sun commented on his remembrance of the first time he went for his first run, "you get out there and you don't even know what just happened."

The team is very inexperienced. The first time they raced together was last week. The first time the driver, Sun, ever drove the sleigh in a race was last week. Don't picture a steering wheel either, although at one point in bobsled history steering wheels were tried but not preferred. Instead it is two bungee cords attached to the axle on which the runners are connected. There is one cord for each hand.

The driver who steers the least will usually win. That's where experience becomes necessity. When traveling at speeds which reach near 80 miles per hour and pressure is four G's, it becomes very difficult to know whether or not you are out of control and better do some steering or your doing just fine.

"It is all or nothing. I wouldn't risk my life for the last couple of years to see if I could do it. I know I can do it. It is a sport where either you can drive or you can't, and if you can't I wouldn't hang around," said Sun about his attraction to the sport.

There are 12 tracks in all of the world. Sun raced on the Calgary track when he attended driver's school, which is a requirement for all drivers. Other than that it has been Lake Placid which Sun described as it is known as one of the "biggest death traps." When Sun and team were there last week, he was one of 12.

Why? All the other teams including the Jamaicans are not going to risk it this close to the Olympics, especially when they can afford to go elsewhere. However, T and T is young and has not received any funding from outside sources besides loans. When they travel to Placid, they receive room and board for $40 a night per person plus free coaching from the U.S. team. Don't worry, the team will gladly offer assistance. Why? Because, T and T poses no threat to the U.S. team.

Believe it or not, there exists a certain strategy behind bobsledding, and its more than shoot and run. The most important part of the race is the start. There is nothing the driver can do once the race is past this point to make up time that could be lost in the start. However, the driver can prevent losing time. Certain things that need to be done are crucial on the turns.

A driver will usually walk the course before the practice and race runs begin. Here the driver will stop and take a look at all the turns and scrutinize them severely. The driver will plan the line he hopes to take when entering the turn. It is usually assumed that if the turn is entered poorly, the exit will be three times as bad when the sled crosses the finish line.

The driver must also prevent the sled from skidding left to right as this will result in friction being added between the runners and the ice. Much attention is placed on reducing the friction. The sleds are used to apply rubbing alcohol to reduce friction. Nowadays a jelly is used.

Ice conditions and temperatures are also crucial. The track is fast, pushing 80 mph in a two man sled when it is cold out. This causes the ice to solidify more, thus when the weather is warm, the track becomes slow. When the track is slow, the drivers are usually more willing to take chances because their speed is reduced.

Also playing a factor is weight. The maximum weight in a two-man is 858 pounds. A crew tries to bulk up their bodies with as much muscle weight so that the sled becomes light and easier to push, especially with their strength.

Many crews will press the weight limit to the highest possible degree, where others will be cautious and drop a few pounds. Of course, the weight is important because bobsledding is a gravity sport, more weight equals more speed, which will in turn produce a greater speed and a better placing.

The sport is very expensive. The running joke is, "$34,000 and I still I have to push the damn thing." Of course that is just a for an average sled. The Germans have their sleds made at airplane factories where some of the lightest but most enduring compounds are put together in a sleek, aerodynamic form.

Lodging, travel and food have yet to be accounted for and the team is probably pushing over $10,000. Travel for the year, which includes getting their practice runs in, will press $10,000 and room and board will exceed that much.

Sun never imagined this and still has trouble picturing it.

"The federation has been established for one year and I'm off going to the Olympics. It really scares me. The hardest thing is learning to deal with it." Sun has had much assistance from the UI where he has been seeing a sport psychologist. Here he has been learning to control his emotions which will be useful when on the course and also some visualization techniques.

T and T has developed it's own strategy. For the meantime, it has been getting down the track. It all comes back to the Dan O'Brien syndrome. They won't go to the Olympics if they can't qualify, but once at the Olympics, look for the team going all out, because this might be their only chance. And you'll find it all right here.

Nussmeier to play in Senior Bowl game

By Rance Graveley
Contributing Writer

After being pulled during last week's East-West Shrine Game, Idaho quarterback Doug Nussmeier can now put that performance behind him and further entertain pro scouts when he plays for the South in this Saturday's 1994 Delchamps Senior Bowl All-Star Classic at Ladd Stadium in Mobile, Ala.

Nussmeier, one of only two players from the Big Sky Conference invited to play in the last game of the college football season, has the chance to end his collegiate career on a winning note and further boost his projection as a first round draft pick in the National Football League.

In starting last Saturday's game, the Walter Payton Award winner threw 18 passes, completing 11 of them for 92 yards while playing in the first and third quarters before being replaced by Jeff Garcia of San Jose State in the second and fourth, who led the West in a 22-point comeback to give them the win, 29-28.

Two days later, Sports Illustrated named the I-AA All-American as the third best quarter back in the country, behind Trent Dilfer of Fresno State and Heismann runner-up Heath Shuler of Tennessee, but ahead of Glenn Foley of Boston College and Heismann winner Charlie Ward of Florida State. The magazine also predicted that he would be chosen as the 13th pick overall to the New Orleans Saints, who are in desperate need of a talented quarterback.

What makes this game extremely special for Nussmeier is the influence by the NFL in this game. Since the first All-Star game in 1950, all of the game's head coaches have been from professional football.

This year, Nussmeier will be coached by none other than the legendary Don Shula of the Miami Dolphins, the winningest coach in the NFL who led the South to victory in 1987. Philadelphia Eagles' Rich Kotite will coach the North.

With the exception of Nussmeier, other noted players participating in this game are Rob Waldrop of Arizona, the All-American defensive tackle who led the "Desert Swarm" defense; Marvin Graves of Syracuse, who set most of Syracuse's passing records; LeShon Johnson of Northern Illinois, who led the nation in rushing; and Bryant Young of Notre Dame, who anchored the Fighting Irish's defensive front four.

Nussmeier was invited to play in the game last summer after he led the Vandals to a Big Sky Conference title after grabbing the honors of being the Big Sky's Most Valuable Player in 1992. Nussmeier was not only named All-American by both Kodak and the Associated Press, but he became the second Idaho quarterback in four years to win the Walter Payton Award, given to the most outstanding player in Division I-AA.

The game will be shown on ESPN with kickoff scheduled at 11 a.m. PST.

BSC comes home to face Eagles

Cravens looks forward to home court advantage after road trip

Andrew Longeteig
Staff Writer

The men's basketball team, previously plummeting in the surf of mediocrity, has been riding the wave of success after their road sweep against the Montana Grizzlies and Montana State Bobcats.

Tonight, the Eastern Washington University Eagles (4-9, 0-2 Big Sky) and the Vandals (9-4, 2-0) tip it off in the Kibbie Dome at 6 p.m. This will open up the Big Sky Conference play at home.

The Eagles have just come off the same hellish road trip, but instead of sweeping, the broom got the best of them. They were whisked away by Montana State 84-52 and Montana 77-51, sending EWU to their fifth loss in six games.

Eastern Washington has only one victory against a Division-I school, beating Southern Utah (in their second contest of the season) 69-65.

This situation doesn't bode well for the talent-lacking Eagles.

University of Idaho head coach Joe Cravens has the Vandals playing stifling defense this season, and the offense appears to show signs of solidification.

EWU, unfortunately, hasn't done too well offensively or defensively this year. They are shooting 44 percent from the field while their opponents are shooting close to 50 percent.

The Eagles, however, are a very young team, with only one senior starter and two others who are contributing bench players.

Their lone senior starter, EWU's best player, is point guard Brad Sebree. He leads his team in scoring (16.8) and assists (3.0).

They have a very respectable forward tandem with sophomore Chris Artis and (10.7 ppg, 5.2 rpg) and 6-foot-7 junior Craig Stinnett who averages 10.3 points per game and leads the Eagles in rebounding at 6.5.

In order to stop the Vandals, EWU will not only have to stop Orlando Lightfoot, who leads the Big Sky Conference in scoring at a 24.5 clip, but Ben Johnson who dishes the ball to him, and Deon Watson who often keeps a possession alive with offensive rebounds. Don't forget about talented guard Mark Leslie and the unselfish Frank Waters.

Johnson is first in the BSC in 3-point shooting percentage at .419 and Watson is first in rebounding at 10.5.

Idaho, which has not been out-rebounded to date, is second in the entire nation with a 11.2 rebound margin.

Indoor track begins

Amy White
Staff Writer

Saturday, the men's and women's indoor track teams will meet in Cheney, Wash. This will not be a scoring meet for the University of Idaho.

Sheri Marlatt, who will run the 400 meters, and Karen McCloskey, who competes in the high jump, are the only two women who will represent the Lady Vandals in Cheney.

Last Spring, the Lady Vandals finished fourth at the Big Sky Conference Outdoor Championships. As for indoors, they finished seventh. Head Coach Scott Lorek said, "as a whole, indoors is our low emphasis, and we are not expecting much." Coach Lorek expressed a definite emphasis on the outdoor season as opposed to indoor. The two women, Marlatt and McCloskey, participating in this weekend's indoor meet have had different training than the rest of the team. Coach Lorek said the rest of the women's team is not ready to begin the season quite yet.

The women's team has a top scorer returning from the 1993 indoor season. Tanya Tesar won the triple jump and finished fifth in the long jump. Outdoors, she finished second in the triple jump, third in the heptathlon, and fourth in the long jump. Currently, she has been ranked 46th in the nation amongst all other American women heptathletes.

The men have a higher percentage of their team participating in the indoor meets. Assistant Coach Jim Wharton said that this weekend's non-scoring invitational will basically be a routine for them, looking at a tune up for the preparation for the rest of the year.

Last year, the men's indoor track team finished sixth in the BSC Indoor Championships. They have three scorers returning from that 1993 championship, including 800m champion Ty Koellmann; Jerry Trujillo, who finished second in the triple jump and fifth in the long jump; and Charlie Wheeler, a fifth place finisher outdoors and a second place finisher indoors in the high jump.

Next week, the Vandals will host a meet of five other teams including Eastern Washington, Washington State University, University of Washington, University of Portland and Western Oregon in the University of Idaho Scoring Invitational. This will be the a scoring meet and held in the ASUI-Kibbie Dome on Saturday.

Paper trails link Harding to Kerrigan attack as ex-hubby is arrested

Matthew Andrew
Sports Editor

An affidavit released Wednesday from Multnomah County Sheriff's Deputy James McNelly has linked Tonya Harding to the plot to try and remove Nancy Kerrigan from competing in the upcoming Olympic games.

Also on Wednesday, Harding's ex-husband Jeff Gillooly, with whom she has been living with before the divorce was finalized, was charged and arrested for conspiracy in the attack on Jan. 6.

Gillooly is the fourth man to be charged. He has denied involvement in the case but surrendered at the FBI office in downtown Portland shortly after the warrant was issued. Gillooly was released after posting bond.

Harding has been linked to making two calls to Tony Kent Arena in South Dennis Mass. to try and determine Kerrigan's practice schedule. The telephone company has confirmed after viewing records that calls were made from the Harding-Gillooly home in the Boston area.

It has been determined that Kerrigan was being stalked by the attacker, Shane Minoaka Stant, in Boston before carrying out the attack in Detroit. Two other men, Eckardt Stant and Derrick B. Smith, already have been charged in the case.

Gillooly, 26, was named in a warrant issued Tuesday by Circuit Judge Donald Londer. The warrant was unsealed shortly after Harding's 10 1/2 hours of questioning Tuesday by law enforcement agencies. Harding also issued a statement saying that she was separating from Gillooly, but maintained her belief in his innocence.

In the affidavit, Eckardt first said Harding had no knowledge of the incident but then went on later to recall that Harding made two telephone calls regarding Kerrigan's practice schedule. Eckardt also said that Harding was concerned about having made those calls, and stated that if she was ever to be questioned about those calls she would simply say that it was regarding Kerrigan signing a poster for one of Harding's fans.

Phone company records show that two calls were in fact made from the Harding-Gillooly home to the arena. Records also noted that a call was placed from the same phone to the arena on Jan. 3. A worker for the arena said that he remembered the call, and that it was a man's voice asking for the practice schedule.

The affidavit also states that when the couple returned from Detroit to Portland, they were met by Eckardt and later plotted for three hours to come up with a legitimate alibi. The alibi dealt with Eckardt and Smith setting up a security service for ice skaters. Harding was concerned with having left a paper trail of both telephone calls and wiring money and was why she wanted to establish an alibi.

According to the affidavit, Gillooly's bank account records shows that he withdrew $9,000 in three transactions between Dec. 27 and Jan. 6. The affidavit details wire transfers from Eckardt to Smith. It also said that Kerrigan was specifically hit on the right leg because it was her landing leg for jumps.

Officials for the U.S. Olympic Committee and U.S. Figure Skating Association continue to discuss Harding's Olympic future. The situation has been brought to the attention of the International Olympic Committee. The USOC has asked the IOC to look into the possibility of allowing the United States in having a third berth in women's figure skating, which would allow for 13-year-old Michelle Kwan on the team if Harding is removed after the Jan. 31 deadline for naming the U.S. figure skating team.

The Economics of the Citibank Classic Visa card. How no annual fee, student discounts and Price Protection create upward growth.

A variety of factors have been suggested as contributing to the economic growth of students, including (1) more lottery winners between the ages of 18 and 22, (2) a 37% increase on earnings from bottle and can returns, (3) more students doubling earnings in the lightning round of game shows, and (4) the Citibank Classic Visa® card. It's this last one, however, that affects most students. ¶ The Citibank Classic Visa card offers immediate savings to student cardmembers. You can now receive the Citibank Classic card with No Annual Fee. You can

One might even have enough savings to reinvest in a CD or two (the musical kind, of course). ¶ On the way to the record store, or any store for that matter, take stock of the 3 services concerned with purchases made on the Citibank Classic card. Citibank Price Protection assures one of the best prices. A question about your account is only an 800 number away. (Panic of the sort experienced the night before Finals is something else again.) ¶ Needless to say, building a credit history with the support of such services can only be a boost. You're investing in futures—that future house, that future car, etc. And knowing the Citibank Classic Visa card is there in your wallet should presently give you a sense of security, rare in today's—how shall we say?—fickle market. ¶ To apply, call. Students don't need a job or a cosigner. And call if you'd simply like your photo added to your regular Citibank Classic Visa card. Here's the number: 1-800-CITIBANK, extension 19. (1-800-248-4226). ¶ The Law of Student Supply and Demand states, "If a credit card satisfies more of a student's unlimited wants and needs, while reducing the Risk Factor in respect to limited and often scarce resources—with the greatest supply of services and savings possible—then students will demand said credit card." So, demand away—call.
