Board raises tuition to $7000

Katé Lyons-Holestine
Editor-in-Chief

Contrary to popular belief, the administration at the UI doesn't want to pilfer students pockets — the State Board of Education does.

Tuition and fees for nonresident students will be $6,300 next fall and $7,000 in the fall of 1995. Nonresident students are currently paying $1950 in tuition and $713 in registration fees for a total of $2,663 a semester. The Board voted 6-2 to approve the increase.

Members of the Board discussed the issue of raising nonresident tuition and fees at their last meeting, at that time no decisions were made. Idaho colleges and universities were asked to provide the Board with impact statements at Thursday's meeting. The statements were seemingly ignored.

"Each of the institutions filed with us a prediction that it will (affect nonresident student attendance)," Board member Roy Mosman of Moscow said.

"The board took action in their best judgment after asking us to do impact statements on the proposal and then they modified it to the point where they asked it be introduced over two years rather than have the whole thing introduced this fall," UI President Elisabeth Zinser said.

Zinser and the UI administration proposed an extended multi-year, phased plan for the nonresident tuition increase. Instead of overnight, UI would implement the plan over four years.

"The state board is looking at things from an administrative level. The institution is closer than the State Board is so they view things from a more practical level than the State Board does," ASUI President John Marble said.

UI was resistant to the tuition and fee increase because it would not be conducive to nonresident enrollment and it would also be unfair to those nonresidents who have already applied and been accepted to UI.

"The way it is now they (new students who are already accepted) are going to get a letter saying, 'Hey you owe us another $2,000 on top of what you thought you were going to pay as an out of state student.' It's not fair to them and it's really abrupt," ASUI Senator Sean Wilson said.

More than a quarter of the UI's enrollment is made up of nonresident students and it has actively sought higher numbers of nonresident students in previous years.

"The UI will have the hardest time of any of the institutions because 25 percent of our enrollment is made up of out-of-state students because we are a land grant university and that is a characteristic of land grant universities. As a function of that we are going to have a real challenge in trying to alert new students coming in that their tuition and fees will be much higher than they are anticipating," Zinser added.

Although new and incoming freshman nonresident students will be forced to pay the higher tuition rates, out-of-state students already enrolled at the UI won't be impacted by the increase in tuition.

"I think some new students

Zinser chooses Yost as provost

UI President Elisabeth Zinser has named John K. Yost as UI provost and was approved by the Board of Regents.

"Dr. Yost is a distinguished teacher-scholar, possesses keen intellect and strong academic values, and brings an unusual breadth and depth in leadership service to higher education," Zinser said Wednesday in announcing the appointment in a prepared statement. "Throughout his career, he has provided leadership for multidisciplinary education and research covering all areas of knowledge and professional fields. He also has developed and strengthened outreach programs and distance learning to meet societal and cultural needs and to address strategic economic priorities."

"His record shows he has succeeded in blending teaching, research and public service. Dr. Yost has lived on the Palouse and knows Idaho. He is the right person to help lead the University of Idaho into a new century, and I am delighted to have him on board," Zinser added in her statement.

Coming to the UI is a homecoming for Yost and his wife, Linda. He spent his early childhood years in Moscow, where his father, John F. Yost, was executive editor for The Star-Mirror, the predecessor of today's Daily News.

The elder Yost also helped found newspapers in Rathdrum and Sandpoint. At age 5, John K. Yost moved to Pullman where his father worked for a time at the Pullman Herald.

"Some of my earliest childhood memories are of visiting my father at the newspaper office in downtown Moscow," Yost said.

The UI Board of Regents considered Yost's appointment at its meeting Thursday at Lewis-Clark State College in Lewiston. With board approval, the new provost will assume his duties July 1.

Currently, Yost is special assistant to the president and former provost at University of Alabama in Huntsville, and a professor of history there.

Previously, he served as chief academic officer and vice chancellor for research and dean of graduate studies at the University of Nebraska-Lincoln, always emphasizing the primary importance of undergraduate education.

He took the lead in developing centers for research and education that pooled resources cooperatively across traditional disciplinary boundaries in the sciences and technology as well as in the liberal arts and professional fields.

These endeavors promoted efficiency and quality in institutional programs.

In Nebraska and Alabama, Yost renewed the university's relationship with business, industry and government. He made regular presentations to the governing board for academic and related programs, testified before legislative committees and met with public officials.

Yost earned his bachelor's degree in history from Washington State University and a master's in history from Stanford University.

News Briefs

Genes presentation to be this afternoon

"Molecular Genetics of Speciation" will be the topic of the UI Department of Biological Sciences Seminar today from 12:30 to 1:20 p.m. in Life Sciences Room 277. The speaker will be Dr. Francisco Ayala of the Department of Ecology and Evolution at the University of California at Irvine. He is currently president of the American Association for the Advancement of Science.

Copy centers plan to be open special hours

The UI Media Center Annex Copy Center will be open the weekends of April 23 and 30 from 11 a.m. to 4 p.m. The SUB Copy Center will have regular weekend hours from 10 a.m. to 5 p.m.

Residence halls plan different fund raiser

In a departure from more traditional means of selecting a raffle winner, a UI student project to raise money for Special Olympics will use a cow to make the decision.

At 2 p.m. April 24, a crowd of tense spectators will wait in the UI Animal Pavilion as a cow saunters across a grid, selecting the perfect spot—and the winning ticket—to benefit from a deposit more commonly found in pastures. If a cow is unable to decide on a single square, all squares she designates will share in the prize of $250 cash.

The "cow patty" raffle, as organizers delicately term the project, is expected to raise about $2,000 for this year's Special Olympics through the sale of 2,500 $1 tickets. Tickets are on sale now through resident advisors in UI dormitory buildings. Anyone in the Palouse can buy a ticket, right up to the time the cow begins her work.

For more information about the event or how to buy a ticket, contact Dawn Esau at 885-7867.

Women's Center offers Garbage 101 session

The UI Women's Center is sponsoring "Garbage 101: Reshaping the Way We Handle Trash at the UI" Tuesday at 12:30 p.m. at the center. Recent federal mandates impact how people will handle solid waste in the workplaces. Jerry Martin, UI coordinator of the Recycling/Solid Waste Program, will talk about new programs and long term plans and goals for recycling on campus.

The presentation is free and open to the public.

Weins's presentation to have botany focus

Reproductive capacity in plants and why it is important is the subject of a UI Biological Sciences lecture at 12:30 p.m. today in Life Sciences South Room 277.

Delbert Weins, a UI faculty botanist, is studying fecundity in plants with a special interest in how plants become extinct and the influences that bring about extinction. The work can often be applied directly to agriculture, since reproductive capacity in many crop plants is important. He is also an international authority on the identification and classification of mistletoes.

Audobon Society holds meeting Wednesday

Kas Dumroese, research associate in the UI Forest Resources Department, will present a program on "Local Birds and Birding Spots" at the April meeting of the Palouse Audobon Society. This meeting will be Wednesday at 7:30 p.m. at the Moscow Community Center. This event is free and open to the public.

Resident managers applications due today

Applications for Resident Manager positions for University Housing apartment complexes are now available. Applications can be picked up at the University Residence Office on the second floor of Wallace Complex.

Applications are due April 15. Call Nancy Sue Chase at 885-6571 for information.

Women's Center brings in recycling speaker

The UI Women's Center is sponsoring "What's New at the New Moscow Recycling Center" Wednesday at 12:30 p.m. at the center. Carrie Lipe, Latah Sanitation Waste Education Program coordinator, will give an overview of solid waste issues in Latah County and the changing role of recycling.

The program is free and open to the public.

Herb presentation to be tomorrow for women

There will be a Herbs for Women Workshop tomorrow from 10 a.m. to noon. Herbalist Linda Kingsbury will offer a workshop at Inner Vision at 118 E. Third St. in Moscow. Women can discover herbs for coping with monthly cycles and promoting self confidence in their natural ability to build their own health.

Kingsbury will discuss herbs for pregnancy, menopause and common health care issues. She will provide supplies for an herbal facial steam and bath blend. Call 883-1037 to pre-register and reserve a space.

The workshop costs $20.

Copies of convocation program now available

Copies of the 1994 Honors Convocation program are available at the Honors Center in the Psychology Building Room 102. These are available to anyone who was unable to attend the convocation or would like additional copies.

Gier presentations to be on campus next week

"Images of Eastern Deities" will be the topic of slide-lecture programs on the UI campus Tuesday.

Nick Gier, professor of philosophy and coordinator of religious studies at UI, will present "The Life of the Buddha" Tuesday at 3:30 p.m. in UCC Room 112. Gier also will present "Hindu Gods and Goddesses" at 7:30 p.m. in the SUB Borah Theater.

Gier has just returned from sabbatical leave in Asia, five months of which were spent in India.

The slides for the presentation are a mix of his own taken from museums and temples and new slides taken from art books, posters, cartoons and other aspects of popular Buddhist and Hindu culture.

Baseball star to visit campus Tuesday night

Baseball great Harmon C. Kilibrew will visit the UI campus Tuesday to deliver a lecture, "Alcohol, Drugs and YOU!" or "I Just Wanta Be One of The Big Guys."

Brought to campus by the UI chapter of Beta Theta Pi as part of their campaign to increase awareness of the dangers of irresponsible consumption of drugs and alcohol, the talk is billed as having "something for everyone."

The presentation begins at 7 p.m. in the University Auditorium.

His presentation is free and open to the public.

Increased awareness goal of week

Tim Helmke
News Editor

Sexual assault awareness will be in high gear next week at UI.

The ASUI Safety Task Force is sponsoring a week of events to "inform the community of how to get involved in preventing sexual assault and how to be sexually assault aware."

ASUI Senator Laura West serves as chairperson of this task force which is comprised of other ASUI Senators, UI students, staff and administration.

West said the week has been set up to increase the overall awareness of sexual assault.

"We have tried to establish a week to get men and women involved. It is an important issue that should involve both genders," said West.

This nationwide problem of sexual assault is one which is frequently ignored, said West.

"There is a lot of embarrassment surrounding rape and sexual assault. College campuses tend to keep it quiet because it may reveal an unsafe campus to future students," said West.

The task force has established a week of activities on sexual assault to teach people more about this issue. The week starts off tomorrow with a session on the fundamentals of self-defense.

The session will be from 12:30 to 3 p.m. in the small gymnasium of the Physical Education Building. Shepherd Reale, head of the Sanzuryu Martial Arts Association, will conduct this seminar.

The seminar will cover a number of self-defense techniques including front and rear attacks, choke holds and wrist grabs.

The seminar is open to all UI students and the general public. Cost for the seminar is $5 for UI students and $8.50 for the general public (general public must purchase a day pass at Memorial Gym).

On Monday, Jackie Grimsey from Alternatives to Violence will speak in the Student Union Building Vandal Lounge at 7 p.m. She will speak about college campus safety. There will also be a short video presentation. This session is free and open to the public.

Grimsey will speak again Thursday at 12:30 p.m. in the SUB Gold Room. This session will speak about family safety issues. This session is free and open to the public.

Residents of Shoup and Gault Halls will present a mock rape trial Thursday from 6 to 8 p.m. in the UI College of Law. The case is extremely controversial and the audience will act as the jury.

On Friday, the task force is encouraging people to wear a purple ribbon to show their support for sexual assault awareness. The ASUI Senate will be distributing these ribbons to living groups earlier in the week.

There will be an additional self-defense seminar and lecture next Saturday. This presentation will be made by the Martial Arts and Fitness Center in Pullman. From 1 to 2 p.m. there will be a lecture by a local police officer about their program, A.W.A.R.E. From 2:15 to 3:15 p.m. the Martial Arts and Fitness Center, lead by Ryan Pratt, will begin a three part seminar on self-defense. Section A will be a general survey of the body's natural impact and body weapons. Section B, lasting from 3:30 to 4:30 p.m., will be how to escape from common holds. Section C, lasting from 4:45 to 5:45 p.m., will be a review of all sections. This session will also show how to mentally prepare for a violent encounter.

All three of these sections will incorporate an aerobics style of learning of the techniques to self-defense.

The staff of the Pullman center is volunteering their time and energy for this cause.

Greeks shine

Jill Pittmann
Staff Writer

The UI Greek System has finally received positive and well deserved recognition after a year of being continuously tested and challenged.

The Western Regional Greek Conference held in San Francisco April 7-9 honored outstanding Greek Systems from 13 western states and two Canadian Provinces.

UI received five awards as well as the honor from the announcement that Tricia Durgin, member of the Delta Delta Delta sorority, will serve as the 1995 WRGC co-chairperson.

"We are lucky to be able to claim Tricia as a Vandal and now the Co-Chair for the 1995 Conference. Everyone should be proud to have Tricia representing our university," said Linda Wilson, UI Greek advisor.

This is the second year a UI student has received this honor. This year, Delta Tau Delta fraternity member Russ Branham held the position.

UI received an award from Gamma Phi Beta International Sorority for having a positive program within the community.

"The crossing guard program at the University of Idaho is an excellent example of positive programming within the community," stated the letter accompanying the award.

Interfraternity Council and Panhellenic Council each received awards for scholarship achievement and risk management.

The joint councils also received an award for community service and Panhellenic Council received an Outstanding Panhellenic Council Award.

Panhellenic President Missy Wilson said, "I am thrilled for our Greek System. The awards represent the fact that the Greek System has worked really hard this semester. It was interesting for those of us who were fortunate enough to get to go to see that our Greek System is leaps and bounds ahead of other systems.

"A lot of the Greeks we encountered are still living Greek Life 1980. They are involved in activities that we have realized are not conducive to having a positive Greek System."

Those who attended the conference were able to attend a number of workshops where they received information that will hopefully be useful to Greeks at UI.

That information will be shared at the next Panhellenic and IFC meetings.

Increased bicycle thefts leave owners searching for new activities

Katé Lyons-Holestine
Editor-in-Chief

With spring on the way people want to spend more time enjoying the outdoors.

Many are being forced to find new recreational activities due to the rising number of bicycle thefts.

Christopher Bornhoft, a Wallace Complex resident, reported the front wheel of his 1993 Giant Iguana stolen March 18. It is valued at $150. Bethany Irvine, also a resident of Wallace Complex, reported her 1993 blue Giant Iguana stolen March 28. Her bicycle was valued at $500.

On May 14, 1993 Jeremy Casterson realized his mountain bike missing from the bike racks near Wallace. He was leaving for the summer and decided not to report the theft to the Moscow Police. He has recently seen the aqua colored bicycle parked outside the Forestry Building and made a report to the police on April 1. The bicycle is valued at $350.

Paul Coffelt's motorcycle was vandalized April 4. The motorcycle was parked in front of the married student housing complex on Sweet Avenue. The fuel lines from the gas tank to the carburetor were poked with holes. The damage was valued at $5 to replace hoses.

Jeremy Newberry reported wires to the distributor of his Jeep station wagon were loosened and items inside the car were strewn around on April 5. His car was parked on Railroad Street.

A CB radio was stolen from Shane Dickard's pickup while it was parked in Lot 39 on the UI campus. The Midland radio is valued at $50.

may change their minds about coming, we hope that many of them won't and we hope we can offer them some financial assistance if that's needed," Zinser said.

High school and transfer students who have decided to attend the UI will be mailed a notice about the increase from the UI.

"Those students who were making decisions to attend college here are now seeing those plans being altered because assumptions they thought were valid are no longer. I think it's unfair. I think it should have been implemented a year from now if anything," Marble added.

Implementing the program in the fall of 1995 would have elevated the problem of changed tuition rates forces on prospective students who have made the choice to attend the UI this fall.

This decision, although final, lacks reasoning, according to Eaton and Marble.

Karl Shurtliff and Curtis Eaton voted against the increase.

Raising nonresident tuition has spurred two different messages. Higher tuition costs could either be implemented to dissuade out-of-state students from attending Idaho educational institutions or they could be used to increase revenues.

"I think the records show that the price of education in Idaho for nonresidents is lower here than it is anywhere else in the WICHE system," Idaho State Board of Education member Roy Mosman said.

WICHE, the Western Interstate Commission for Higher Education, encompasses 14 states and their respective educational systems.

"Is Yale better than Stanford because Yale has the highest tuition in the nation? I think the funny part of this is they want to use a WICHE comparison. The average tuition at our peer institutions is $6497," Marble said.

Marble believes comparing and setting UI tuition at a rate comparable to peer institutions, other land grant institutions of the same or similar size, would be more effective in achieving a reasonable tuition amount.

"Why should we base our programs and our costs on the states around us? Why should we base our programs, our costs and what we charge on the inefficiencies of the states around us? Why should we charge what Oregon does when we don't do what Idaho does, not what the states around us do," Marble contended.

Much of the demands set on Idaho educational institutions has been caused by the increase in nonresident enrollment. Enrollment increases force a greater need for faculty, buildings and equipment on campuses.

"Are we charging the out-of-state people an amount that pays for those expenses that are being incurred?" Eaton asked.

"We have a lot of students from out of state, which is fine until you get to the point where you have to require facilities, both buildings and equipment and that kind of equipment and facilities have to be paid for primarily by Idaho taxpayers," Mosman said.

The cost of education is the real question which needs to be addressed.

Eaton voted against the increase because he felt the real reason for the increase hadn't been addressed or discussed adequately by the Board.

"They showed signs that all they are concerned about is limiting the numbers of students on one hand, but on the other hand they say that our tax payers shouldn't subsidize them," Marble said.

"Are we trying to increase tuition in order to have an increase in funds or are we trying to raise tuition in order to tell some outsiders from other states they are not welcome? I don't think we sorted that out particularly well," Eaton commented.

During the discussion Eaton suggested to the Board that if they were trying to reduce the number of nonresident students attending Idaho institutions there was a better answer, one which "has an immediate and drastic effect on classroom size," he said. Eaton suggested putting a cap on nonresident students would solve the problem "almost overnight."

Eaton thought the Board could have taken better steps to clarify the reasoning behind the increase.

"Moving to $7,000 in two years will have an effect on the UI and what the exact effect is is unknown at this point. I think the dollar amount is a little bit arbitrary and moving to it in two years may be a little fast and it still doesn't answer the question of what are we trying to accomplish by raising it to that. Are we trying to get the cost base, are we trying to get adequate funding or are we trying to reduce the number of students coming in from out of state," he said.

The associated student governments of all Idaho school attending the meeting opposed the increase, except Idaho State University.

Habitat for Humanity holds house tours

Six residences in the Moscow area will be open to the public as part of an annual fundraising event for Palouse Habitat for Humanity. The tour day will be Sunday from 1 to 5 p.m. All six residences are in Moscow or the immediate surrounding area.

The featured residence is the new home of Dan O'Brien. It is a contemporary home with great views, recreational areas, a designer kitchen and unique items to suit Dan's lifestyle.

Karl Johnson and Carol Pochardt-Johnson's home on the Old Pullman Road is another stop on the tour. This 4000 square-foot home sits on 26 acres of hilltop with stunning Palouse views, a pond with a pair of nesting geese, decor of family antiques and a spacious master suite.

Bill and Marilyn Emerson's 1936 Tudor brick home is full of extras like the many stained glass windows, the hidden room, original light fixtures and great wood workings and built-ins.

Dennis and Tricia Horn's home also commands great sweeping views of the rolling Palouse hills. This large new home has a telescoping architectural floor plan starting in the kitchen and gradually widening the whole length of the house until the room bursts full of southern light from a wall of windows and French patio doors.

Jan and Pete Brown's circa 1905 remodeled farm house is in Moscow's historic Fort Russell neighborhood. This lot was created when this was still the Idaho Territory. Take a step back in time by seeing this home that has stood the test of time and character.

The tour also includes the "home" for area residents who are living at a homeless shelter. There are large numbers of people and families on the Palouse that have no place to call their own. Many of these are families. Without the Sojourner Truth House operated by the YWCA of the Palouse these people would be out in the cold. This is a very well kept area, a safe haven for residents and guests. It is an invitation to see a local facility like this. It is the only one around and it only serves women and children.

There will be refreshments and a map provided for each ticket holder. The tickets are $10 for adults, $8 for students with ID and $5 for children age five and under.

All proceeds go to the building fund for a home for a local low income family which is operated by Palouse Habitat for Humanity.

Tickets are available in Pullman at the Combine Mall and Simpson United Methodist Church; in Moscow at the Peppermill, the Moscow Chamber of Commerce, Bennett Realty, Brown's Cooperstown, First Interstate Bank, Northwest Showcase and Ticket Express; in Genesee at Maiden America; and in Troy at the Food and Clothing Bank.

Tickets will be on sale the day of the event as well.

Other attractions on the tour will be artful house pins of O'Brien's home with his autograph by local artisan Christiane Dechert for $15 each and a bright house-theme quilt made by Genesee Quilters for $1 a ticket.

Ed board's tuition hike asinine

As a collective body designed to address tough issues, one would think the Idaho State Board of Education would have a vague notion about the impact an astronomical fee increase for nonresident students would have on UI.

Apparently they don't.

At the Board's previous meeting, they were unable to come to any decisions over proposed tuition increases. They requested Idaho colleges and universities provide the Board with impact statements at Thursday's meetings in Lewiston.

Somewhere in the interim, evidently they made a decision.

They might as well as have met in Lewiston for a little fishing on the Clearwater River instead of considering a fee increase. UI President Elisabeth Zinser and her administration proposed a four-year plan that would phase nonresident increases into student budgets in a manner UI students might be able to handle.

The Board ignored it, slopped in a 2-year proposal to boost tuition to $7,000 by fall of 1995, then didn't bother to clearly explain their reasoning, as if the Board could be counted on for clear thinking.

The Board felt concerned Idaho citizens were essentially paying for nonresident student's education — a valid concern. Here's the problem: how will shoving students off this campus help UI?

It won't. A stiff two-year plan will encourage incoming students to attend other schools, alienate returning students and simply force others to drop out. True enough, though, if a few hundred nonresident students had to bail from UI, Idaho taxpayers would certainly not pay any money to subsidize their education at other schools. All it would accomplish is a cutesy-little nonresident enrollment drop that might convince taxpayers they're not paying for some traffic-snarling out-of-stater.

Two or three students less per class will not benefit current UI students and it will not gain the university much, if any, revenue in two years. What possible harm would come by helping out an extra student or two?

Then there is Roy Mosman's ridiculous reason we need money now for buildings, equipment and facilities. Who will fill these buildings if nobody attends UI?

We might as well not fund all the great new cultural diversity programs UI is trying implement if nobody is going to be able to afford attending UI.

If playing with nonresident/resident enrollment ratios is what the board is after — dropping UI's current 30 percent nonresident enrollment status — then their reasoning for increasing tuition to match nearby schools is misdirected and outright asinine.

—Chris Miller

THE MEDIA EXPLAINS HEALTH CARE

Kurt Cobain not 'Pied Piper'

Kurt Cobain swallowed a shotgun and now a lot of people are digesting some pretty tough issues.

Why do we care? This is just another dead rock star. What's the point with talking about something that happened over a week ago? Well I liked Cobain's music, but my interest lies in the issues that have arisen concerning suicide. I'm tired of all these instant just-add-water psychoanalysts determining why suicide happens and how to handle the repercussions.

Our generation knows who Cobain was, yet what does our parent's generation know about him. The older generations have always misunderstood the message of their children's music. From Morrison to Hendrix to Joplin all of these musicians never really got a chance to explain themselves. Perhaps their deaths were their explanations. One thing is certain, they all gained a bandwagon full of fans. They died and all of the sudden it was cool to be a "fan." The ironic thing about it is Cobain will most likely gain all the mainstream fans he so adamantly wanted to repel. If any of you have decided it's cool to all of the sudden be a Nirvana follower, forget about it, the music doesn't get better just because he's dead.

Commentary Mike Cole

Whenever a public figure dies, speculation is spewed all over the media. MTV runs a marathon of Nirvana videos supplementing them with Kurt Loder preaching against suicide. I was glad to get the opportunity to see previously unseen footage of vintage Nirvana, but Loder pointing at the screen preaching "just don't do it" was what made me want to shoot myself out of sheer rebellion. Does MTV realize how asinine they look bringing up the concept of "copy cat" suicides when millions of kids haven't even thought about it? Give me a break! I understand suicide spawns thoughts about suicide but not automatically a need to commit it.

While I was in High School I had a friend commit suicide in much the same manner as Cobain. His death really caved me in. I was rocked with anguish and overcome with confusion, but it never consciously crossed my mind to follow in his steps. Never crossed my mind until Mr. out-of-touch high school counselor called me into his little office to inform me that I was a potential "follow up." Follow up? What am I, some sort of aftershock?

Yeah, I appreciated someone letting me know they were thinking about me, but not someone putting ideas into my head by predicting my future. For a long time after that I had to wrestle daily with why I didn't just follow suit. Anger swelled as speculation propagated.

Like that counselor's speech, it was almost a satirical suggestion to hear anyone so far removed from me telling me what to do with my life! Let's get a little perspective here. A person's life is their own. If someone decides to smoke until they get cancer, it's that person's right. If someone

Any mom can raise Cougars, takes real mom to raise Vandals

It seems UI has stepped into a new age of sexism.

There is a Dad's Day in the fall and Family Weekend in the spring. But when does UI celebrate Mom's Weekend? It seems to me the university doesn't deem mothers worthy of their own weekend.

Let us consider for a moment what a mom does and why she deserves a weekend at UI.

None of us would be here without moms. They go through great amounts of pain to bring us into this world and then UI cannot bother to honor them. They spend hours changing diapers, feeding the kids, car pooling and making doctor and dentist appointments. It seems to me UI should honor moms for their contribution at the university level.

Moms are those people who are there to do our laundry and to cook meals when we go home for a break — a getaway from the hectic schedules we must endure. They are always there with an open heart and an open mind. It doesn't matter what you do, they are always proud of you.

Moms are there when it seems as if you don't have a friend in the world. They are always willing to offer their opinion and their support. They know when to say what and how to say it. They can make even the best out of the worst experiences in life.

Moms come to visit often and are usually calling when you least expect it. Sometimes they call at the most inopportune times — when students are busy, if you know what I mean. Not that I'm that busy, you know, but we'll save that for a later column. Anyway, moms are great to be innocent around — they have no idea what you may be up to. At least that's what you'd like to believe. Moms were young once too and they know better.

Moms know when something is bothering you and you haven't even said anything was wrong. They offer their comfort and kind words that always make the world look much brighter than before.

Moms are there when you need to ask a favor and when you need someone to do something for you. They don't care how tedious or annoying it may be, they just do it without complaining. They give and give and give without expecting too much in return.

Moms are always on campus when new students are here for the first time. They involve themselves in their children's choice of college. They help their kids move to school and take them shopping for whatever they need. Moms are here to support us in living group activities and are here for such campus events as Homecoming and Commencement.

Moms are those people who put in the long hours at work to add more income to the family so their kids can go to school. They often let their dreams go so the dreams of their children can come true. They are unselfish and caring in everything they do. They are there to offer a welcome with open arms and a hug.

Where would we be today if it were not for our moms? We would probably not be here or anywhere we should be. Moms are the guiding forces in our lives and it seems UI doesn't see them as vital parts of the students' life.

I say this is wrong and there has got to be some justice done so we honor moms. It is only fair and decent to allow moms to be on equal ground with our dads.

If it were not for these mothers, none of us would be here today to attend this fine university. Our neighbors across the state line are preparing for their annual Mom's Weekend festivities and they are expecting hundreds of moms to flood campus. I think similar events at UI could be just as successful.

I mean really, if moms are good enough at Washington State University to be celebrated, I think that is reason enough for UI to start one up. Any mom can raise a Cougar, but it takes a special kind of a mom to raise a Vandal.

else wants to live in a garage and reject society, it's that person's personal freedom. If I wanted to kill myself, that is nobody else's decision but my own.

I would consider the feelings of my family, the feelings of my friends and religious issues but whatever I decided my decision wouldn't be determined by Kurt "puckered spincter" Loder.

Our parents, most likely, had no idea who this Kurt Cobain was. It wasn't until earlier this week when their capitalist condescending news mediums gave their ignorant upper class perspective of who Cobain was. My Dad, who is a well-read college teacher, was under the impression Kurt Cobain was some strung-out, washed-up, little-known punk. Well yeah, maybe he was all of that but more too. People were trying to heap the responsibility of "generational voice" on Cobain.

Bob Dylan wouldn't even accept such a responsibility, and he was much more widely known. I have a serious problem with people who force someone to take on the responsibility of a whole generation. Who could possibly maintain that performance?

O.K. what it comes down to is Kurt Cobain is dead. He killed himself and left behind a wife and a baby daughter. I feel bad for his wife and kid, but I don't really feel bad for Kurt. He's gone and there's nothing that can be done about it. I'll remember him and the music he wrote, but he's no model for how I'm going to conduct my life. Maybe the press and fans should remember Kurt Cobain was just an innocent messed up kid like the rest of us. He's not the pied piper leading the masses to the grave. He was tired and wanted out. Just let it be man, let it be.

Gilbert clear senate choice

I have know Bill Gilbert for quite some time. Fact is, I have been friends with Bill for five years now. It would be easy to write a book on our friendship and the good and bad times we have shared. However, to spare you drudgery, boredom, pain and suffering, I will limit this to a few statistics that will hopefully change your mind and make Bill a clear and sound choice for ASUI Senate come April 20.

Currently, Bill is completing a semester-long internship for Larry Craig in Washington D.C. His decision to run for ASUI Senate, from our nation's capitol, is testament of his courageous and determined character. Through the years, if there is one thing Bill has always been, it is true to himself and others. Seldom does he allow things to interfere with his ambitions and desires.

A wide-array of positive descriptors come to mind when thinking of Bill. Passionate, respected, diligent, dedicated and intelligent are but a few.

Having previously served on ASUI in the capacity of Senator and on ASUI Productions Board, Bill has proven himself by action, well-worthy of the position of ASUI Senator. His passion to lead has always leant him success.

Bill's entire campaign was the brain-child of everyone with the exception of himself. One would be hard pressed to find someone here on campus, who does not both know and respect Bill.

Besides being active in ASUI, Bill holds leadership positions in my fraternity and has made it a practice to serve others first. Hard-work has, and will continue, to pave a path of success for Bill.

Though highly involved on campus, scholarship has never taken a back seat for Bill. He has a 4.0 cumulative GPA and it really doesn't get any better than that. His intelligence explains a lot, including his decision to run for ASUI Senator.

Your first instinct should be to vote on April 20, then you should do what comes naturally; vote for Bill Gilbert.

Joki doesn't blame teachers

I was pleased to see Jean Nutile's letter in the March 25 issue of the Argonaut. For our education system to work best, all educators should communicate with each other. However, Nutile's letter requires me to clarify some issues.

First, let me explain my position relative to high school education. It is true that I have never taught at the high school level; however, I see the results of high school education everyday in my college composition classroom.

I have students, products of the public education system, who enter my classroom unable to distinguish a period from a comma, unable to construct a complete sentence, unable to compose a paragraph, let alone a critical essay. I fail to understand how these students graduated from high school.

Not only are they ill-prepared for the rigors of a college education, they are ill-prepared to negotiate in our complex, communication-oriented society. If the students we have in our college classrooms are the "best and the brightest," then what about those who do not go to college? How is that student going to compete, fill out a job application, compose a resume?

Second, I am surprised a professional teacher would take bits of a complex conversation (to which she was not privy, but only received a non-contextual quoted version), and use her interpretation to accuse me of self-glorification at the expense of others.

Instead of attacking colleagues, we should all attack the real problem: our public education system is failing our students.

Nutile says I am "supplying a simplistic solution to a complex problem," but I did no such thing. The comments made by the interviewer (not me) regarding teachers who "find fault" are based on interpretations of my own personal experience as a student in the classroom and the stories related to me by my students.

I have no interest in self-glorification and I do not believe and did not suggest there is a simple solution. However, I do believe there are problems and I am willing to assert that belief in print.

My intention was never to blame high school teachers for the deficiencies in the public education system. I think most high school teachers are unhappy with overcrowded classrooms, lack of funding and unreasonable demands on them. And I think all educators — primary, secondary and college level — should have a vested interest in improving education.

It is too bad we waste energy "finding fault," when our efforts could be put to better use looking for solutions.

A productive exercise might be for college and high school teachers to participate in some type of exchange. I would like to gain a clearer idea of what is taught in high school so I could restructure my composition classroom to take up where high school left off.

Also, I think a few sessions in a college composition class might help high school teachers gain a clearer perspective of what is required of their students.

After reading Nutile's letter, I assume she is a dedicated teacher and we could certainly be more productive as a team. I welcome suggestions from Nutile or her colleagues; perhaps we could collaborate on a transitional high school composition class that prepares graduating students expressly for college-level writing.

Multiculture affairs ignored

Conflicting interests have been, and always will be, of strange unity between American Indians and the United States. I respect the positive actions of my friend, Brian Ashapanek, towards his efforts to the American Indian students here at UI, which includes my wife.

The Mount Graham conflict, pertaining to the Apache Tribe of Arizona, is yet another struggle in the plight of the American Indian (Argonaut March 31, 1994). After all, there has been warfare, broken treaties and the accidental genocide called a disease that has caused the displacement of a people, a way of life. From the onset of colonialism, the revolving door of domination deemed necessary a privileged position of best interest in local policies ... and so, the American Indian people are still disturbed of the U.S. in their pledges from "utmost good faith Indian Tribes" (Northwest Ordinance, 1789), to "I support the fulfillment of Indian Treaty Rights" (Ronald Reagan, 1980 Presidential Campaign Speech). Unfair legislation toward followed these pledges and affected all areas of good management toward Indian Tribes.

I made 46 jumps with the smokejumper program in Grangeville, Idaho. Brian Ashapanek and I received our smokejumper wings in 1990 at rookie training in Missoula, Mont. As I "stepped out into the sky" I saw the land of my maternal ancestors, the Nez Perce. Fighting the wildfires brought me to the plight of the people — the Wallowa's, White Bird, Salmon River, Northern Yellowstone, Bitterroot and Lookingglass areas. When one speaks of their ancestors and their suffering, Mount Graham could be added to Wallowa Lake, Black Hills and Big Mountain areas that were lost without consent from the Tribe.

These incidents bring about a deep resentment inside the Indian people. We can only move forward, but it does not take years of denial to realize we all are responsible for our tougher tomorrow from the Timber Industry, Agriculture, Overharvesting and Columbia/Snake River Basin Dams. The deterioration of our natural resources is evident today.

I feel UI is at a crossroads. Multicultural affairs are definitely in the future, but there is little substance of its importance on campus. Where is the American Indian Advisor or the American student center? Furthermore, the multicultural affairs offices? Washington State and Lewis-Clark State have all these programs and so does the college I attended at Oregon State in Corvallis. OSU also has an Educational Opportunities Program to help minorities and students from 60 foreign countries adapt and interpret higher education. I do not feel it has to do with right or wrong, but more to the benefit of respect.

The area tribes around UI have treaties. These treaties, the supreme law of the land, guarantee the tribes the right to education, health and housing. From this comes the importance of the out-of-state tuition waiver, which is just because the area Indians ceded millions of acres to reside on the reservations. Finally, the result is the conflicting interest each Indian individual has to go through. It is hard to adjust, but it takes cooperation and the need of understanding toward each other. The college here will hopefully adhere to the growth of multicultural affairs ... the minority students are waiting.

—Mitch Pond

Profs have bad semesters too

I was saddened that Chris Miller decided to single out a single professor, Michael J. Dinoto, as an example of a professor with "low" student evaluations in his April 5 editorial.

In my travels at UI, I have taken two classes from Mike Dinoto, Labor Economics and Regional Urban Economics. The material taught in these courses was enjoyable and directly relevant to my later studies, which assisted me in many subsequent economics classes. I found Mike Dinoto to be a highly intelligent, dedicated and hardworking professor who genuinely cares for his students.

It is indeed ironic that the one professor Miller singled out for low evaluations, cares so deeply for his students. Mike Dinoto is generally top on the students' list for being their major professor.

Student evaluations are valuable tools for improving instruction at UI. These evaluations, however, have their limits and do not convey the full measure of a professor's performance. Furthermore, as hard as it is to believe, even professors can have bad semesters.

Finally, Miller did not need to single out a "victim" to make his point in the article. Responsible journalism calls for a higher standard than found in that editorial.

—Steven Peterson

'Best' teachers may be bad

I have just seen your editorial, "Student can hunt down lousy profs" in the April 5 edition. Your viewpoint further confirms my long-held worst suspicions about faculty evaluations: that is, how, if not used properly, they can degenerate the educational process.

My immediate concern, however, is your extremely poor judgment in singling out my faculty colleague, Professor Michael DiNoto, as having "low" ratings last semester. I believe responsible journalism, even at the student level, requires greater maturity (I am also thinking of the recent "plagiarism" charge against our writers by regional newspapers; your response: we are "just students" and also your former editor, Ms. Tanya Madison's letter to the editor. Professor DiNoto is a well-respected, highly knowledgeable and dedicated faculty member, with many years of service and numerous valuable contributions. I personally know that his "low" rating was the result of special factors, having nothing to do with his otherwise highly regarded teaching effectiveness and contrary to the norm. Obviously, your concept of the "best" professor is one with the "best" ratings — as though a university is a supermarket! And if a student "drowns," that must be the professor's doing! Remember: teaching and learning effectiveness must combine for all to succeed.

And, you recommend, "... if the professor seems worthy, stop by his office and ask for a sample syllabus. If there are too many tests and lengthy research papers, hit the road and keep searching." Great suggestion! Your "keep searching" option tells the students to look for courses where minimum is asked — and that is a disservice. Now, does that not provide some clues to "low," or even "high" ratings? And what does that mean for content and quality? Incidentally, your second sentence, "there's too many..." also tells me why there must indeed be more writing, research papers, tests, etc.!!

I sincerely hope the Argonaut and others in advocacy roles would insist on improving the quality and content of education; and, please do know, high "ratings" do not ensure that. Best wishes.

Jesus created everything

In regard to a letter from Ralph Nielson, I would like to comment. Jesus claimed to be God the Son. He was charged with blasphemy. See Matthew 26:61-64.

Jesus claimed to be one with the Father and Spirit, all of which are Persons of the Godhead. Read John 17, The High Priestly Prayer and John 7:39.

The resurrection was mentioned in the Old Testament. See Isaiah 26:19 and Daniel 12:2. Also, references to Hell can be found in Deuteronomy, II Samuel, Job, Psalms, Proverbs, Isaiah, Jonah and Habakkuk.

Faith was reckoned to Abraham as righteousness, making him worthy of heaven. See Genesis 15:6 and Romans 4:9, which refers back to Genesis. References to Heaven can be found in Leviticus, Deuteronomy, Judges, II Samuel, II Kings, II Chronicles, Psalms, Proverbs, Isaiah and Daniel.

All scripture is inspired by God (Timothy 3:16). It might also interest you to know there is a Bible translated from the Aramaic language published by the A.J. Holman Co. of Nashville, Tenn.

Yes, Jesus did create everything. Read the first five verses of John.

Sheikh 'a vote for students'

DEDICATION, DEVOTION and DETERMINATION are the essence of Zahrah Sheikh. Zahrah Sheikh is running for her second term as an ASUI Senator and deserves to be elected. Having been a past Senator myself, I have worked very closely with Zahrah and know just how dedicated she is to the ASUI student body. She takes her position very seriously and is always looking out for the students' best interests. As a Senator for the past year, Zahrah has been involved in some major projects. See for yourself how she has already benefited us, "THE STUDENTS:"

- 1) She was the Student representative for organizing and producing the Community Service and Learning Satellite Conference. This conference was designed to help benefit both students and faculty.
- 2) She helped re-establish the Circle K Organization, which is a student volunteer organization on campus. This club participates in and teaches the importance of student volunteering. It gives students hands-on experience.
- 3) She is right now helping to write and develop, along with UI faculty, a grant that will help benefit the students of Idaho. This grant is in conjunction with the AMERICORP Plan that President Clinton has installed.

4) She has investigated and come up with plans for more efficient parking on campus. These are only a few of her accomplishments.

It is easy to see that Zahrah is a huge benefit for all students at UI. These are the types of results Student Representatives need to have. Zahrah has had results and will continue to have them. A vote for Zahrah Sheikh is a vote for the students!!! VOTE ZAHRAH SHEIKH FOR SENATE.

ly blind to his obligations and responsibilities as paid ASUI Lobbyist when he took it upon himself to lobby Idaho legislators not for, but against funding for the UI Women's Center.

The fact that gay as well as straight women are helped and welcome at the Women's Center also blinded him to the excellent and important work that is being done there. His outlook is reminiscent of the attitude of southern states that closed down their public schools rather than have them teach black and whites together.

Mr. Whiting has objected to the fact the UI Gay Lesbian Bisexual Association was meeting at the Women's Center. GLBA is recognized by the ASUI, so it could meet at the Student Union.

The video program he objected to was made by a black, gay man to tell his life experiences and discuss problems of those who get a double whammy of discrimination. It was shown nationally on Public Television. Would Mr. Whiting close down Public Television?

GLBA advertises their meetings in the Argonaut. Would Mr. Whiting cut off funding for the paper as well?

tion, health, safety, environment, human rights and international culture. These subjects are covered in classes as well as during Diversity Week, International Week and Martin Luther King Human Rights Day. What would Mr. Whiting do about all these?

I am not being sarcastic asking these questions. Mr. Whiting has given us a taste of a possible future. The Idaho Citizen's Alliance is working to pass an initiative that provides that "no state funds shall be expended in a manner that has the effect of accepting or approving homosexuality."

This could be interpreted by Mr. Whiting and others as banning the GLBA and any university class, organization or program that would dare to welcome gay people to discuss the pros and cons of gay rights or even to object to gay bashing and discrimination based on sexual orientation.

Projects, programs and courses could be canceled, jobs jeopardized, discussions prevented and organizations abolished. And we are talking about just one of the six provisions of the ICA initiative. Is this what we want for UI? Is this what we want for Idaho? The decision is up to us.

Women invited to Persian New Year

The International Women's Association invites all interested women in the community to come learn about Naroose, the Persian New Year, Saturday at 2 p.m.

Liz Khosravi will host the meeting at her home at 416 N Lincoln Street. The IWA is a part of the International Friendship Association which is jointly funded by the International Programs Office and the ASUI.

IWA's primary audience is the international student wife who often feels isolated and estranged from other women. Through special interest groups and monthly meeting hosted by local women, much of the loneliness disappears as new friends are made.

Those needing transportation should come to the Student Union Building parking lot at 1:50 p.m. For further information please call the IFA office at 885-7841.

Fjell, Reeves sing for human rights

Singer/songwriter Judy Fjell will perform for Latah / Nez Perce Voice for Human Rights Sunday at 7 p.m. at the Unitarian Church of the Palouse.

Crystal Reeves, a violinist / vocalist will join Fjell in this performance.

It is said, when Fjell steps on stage it's like a longtime friend has come to visit. She spins stories and songs of her life, inspiring both riotous laughter and touching sentiment.

Her songs are thought provoking and uplifting, while her gentle wit provides the audience with a healthy release of laughter and warmth.

Invite your friends and neighbors to witness Fjell and Reeves' powerful, hysterically funny and gentle music.

You will also be supporting the work of Voices for Human Rights and its campaign to maintain everyone's civil rights in Idaho.

Tickets are $6 and available from Bookpeople in downtown Moscow, or at the door.

Week of the Young Child

Preschoolers play in the spring sun in a yard outside the UI Early Childhood Development Center. The Center is located on Sweet Avenue in the new married student housing complex. The Week of the Young Child is focused on the national issue of childcare quality and the causes of the system's downfalls because the children are literally the future.

The Early Childhood Center fights for a future

Tristan Trotter
Staff Writer

"Our children are the future." How rhetorical this phrase has become. We drop it in conversations as easily as "Hello" and "How are you." But just as society has cared increasingly less and less exactly how you are, it has also managed to drill away, with over-use, the meaning behind the essential children-future correlation.

This is poignantly demonstrated in the current lack of attention to and funding for child care in the United States today. According to a 1993 study conducted by the Child Care Employee Project, teaching assistants, the fastest growing child care work force, has experienced a decline in wages since 1988 to $5.08 an hour. And wages for the highest paid teaching staff have improved only minimally: about 66 cents an hour over the last four years.

As a result, turnover of teaching and child care staff has jumped from 15 percent in 1977 to 41 percent in 1988, revealing an essential link between decent staff wages and ability to provide quality care.

Are we willing to entrust our own children, as well as our nation, to adults who are the products of pitifully inadequate child care?

The UI Early Childhood Center is not. April 18-22, it will participate in a 5-day event called The Week of the Young Child designed to bring attention to, and encourage change in, the failings of child care in our communities. Amy Kaiser, lead caregiver at the center, has played a major role in planning and promoting the week.

"Child care is really misunderstood," she says. "It's taken for granted. People think they don't have to take care of it .... But as a nation, we do."

The more Kaiser has researched the issue, the more convinced she is parents need to rally behind child care givers and centers, write to their legislators, support the plea for higher wages and fight for tighter regulations and standards in the child care industry.

At the UI Early Childhood Center, care givers provide 122 children ranging in ages from 1 month to 18 years with supervision and a learning environment in which to develop social skills and a healthy emotional condition.

"We want kids to come out confident, to function well in a group ... so they can feel comfortable with adults and in school later on," Kaiser says.

During the Week of the Young Child, daily bulletins will provide the UI and Moscow communities with information on what child care workers do to foster development in young children. Children's art on display all week at the Palouse Empire Mall and banners outside the center itself will call visual attention to the issue.

On Wednesday, child care providers throughout Moscow will participate in "Handprint Day." Parents will be given cut-outs of their children's handprints and asked to wear them all day — an illustration of how many people in the area rely on child care. Parents who wear their handprints to Hardee's will receive a free soft drink.

Friday, the focus will be on "cost and compensation," with information available addressing the actual price tag on child care and what parents can do to help cover it adequately.

Kaiser's own experience with poor child care has fueled her dedication to the industry and the children affected by its down-falls: "I worked at a program in town where kids weren't respected or allowed to explore and create on their own .... they were shouted at and mistreated." After two months of trying and failing to improve the program, she had to take a position somewhere else — too

Latest 'Issue' has non-prostituted sound

Mike Cole
Staff Writer

I found myself in a smoke-hazed bar at 1:30 a.m. in Portland, Ore. Material Issue took my mind those several hundred miles with the fresh non-prostituted sounds of Freak City Soundtrack.

Material Issue would fall into the "alternative" genre if I were forced to drop them somewhere. The lead singer, Jim Ellison, also plays lead guitar.

Ellison's voice has a slight European accent, perhaps British, which reminded me a little of John Lennon on the slower tunes.

The part which impressed me the most about Ellison was his ability to move from a six-to-a 12 string guitar and then to a sitar. Ellison's voice hovered across the accompaniment but it was the upbeat tempo of the bass and drums which kept the spirit rising.

The bass player, Ted Ansani, proves that he's just as talented as Ellison in that he sings and plays four, six and eight string basses.

Mike Zelenko, the drummer, provides a driving upbeat tempo bringing the better sounds of Black Happy to mind.

Moving from the accompaniment to the lyrics, I wondered exactly where these boys were coming from. Songs such as "Going Through Your Purse," revel in the lighthearted breaking of a Cardinal Rule; never go through a women's purse. The sixth song "Very Good Thing," sounded like the Spin Doctors singing their version of a Trent Reznor composition.

Angry post-relationship lyrics censored by optimistic charm was how Material Issue chose to express themselves. "I Could Use You," the seventh track, reeked of Lennon. The vocals were melodic and the acoustic guitar hypnotic.

Alternative musicians have been unfairly stereotyped as a bunch of college-aged-flannel-wearin'-heroin-smokin'-whiskey-drinkin'-oily-haired-Satan-worshipin'-obscene-speakin'-shotgun-swallowin'-no-talent-losers.

Well 'nevermind' these guys falling prey to the expected dark melancholy of Generation X's band, Material Issue seems to grasp the concept of what it's like to be immaterial and still be happy.

CHILD

emotionally exhausted to continue the fight.

"I still think about those kids," she says. "If there's one program like that in a town this small, how many must there be in Boise? Or Portland? Chicago? New York ...? Cities with larger populations and so many more children?"

At the UI Early Development Center, Kaiser discovered a high quality, concerned environment that has continued to grow since she arrived in mid-October. "The program has really come a long way. It's very exciting."

Changes initiated by The Week of the Young Child will be especially important for the UI EDC as it now works on getting accreditation from the National Association for the Education of Young Children, a premiere child care leadership organization.

Kaiser says the center, as a university program, tries to set a good example for other organizations. She hopes through events like The Week of the Young Child, awareness will lead to drastic improvements in the wages, standards and overall quality of child care in America. She warns, "These kids will be teaching our children ... taking care of us ... running our nation."

The bottom line: there's more than just 1994 at stake if current trends in child care continue. We're talking about our future.

Tiny Lives: collage of dark colors, emotions

Tristan Trotter
Staff Writer

Enter the Collette Theatre. Enter a macabre, Beetlejuice-ish world with soaring blue arched doorways, black and white photo wallpaper on paint-streaked walls, snarling bear rug, antique furniture displaying roses, a CD player, a cordless phone and stacked photographs.

This is the world of Tiny Lives, Ariana Burns' original production, which went up in the little black theater last week and ran Thursday through Sunday.

The show, directed by graduate student Jonathan Sprenke and cast entirely with undergraduates, was a dark, dreamlike, sometimes confusing but always intriguing collage of colors and emotions and choreographed chaos swirled together within the framework of a play. Burns' fantasy realm, where human emotions were played out by a host of extreme characters, existed on a constantly furious level that kept the audience a little bit uncomfortable throughout the progression of the play.

Tiny Lives opens with Myrtle, played by Bevin Flynn, who is hosting a party for her recently deceased friend and obsession, Jim. Next comes a friend and party attendant, Cleo, played charmingly by Darcy Hughes, who still has not accepted Jim's death and spends most of the play creating a sculpture to ease his unpleasant hospital stay.

Thirdly, we meet Ursula, portrayed by Carolyn Hitt, in a dark, seductive ensemble of leather straps and crimson sashes that emphasize her raw sexual and magnetic power. Orson, Cleo's agenda-driven, power-hungry brother (Paul Erwin) comes in and soon reveals his desire to take Jim's place. Finally, we meet Death, brought to the stage by Jodie Parsley, whose purpose in the play is to claim the wandering soul of the deceased Jim, who appears continually throughout the show as a ghost (Rama Lash).

All of these characters are incorporated into a highly symbolic, expressionistic fantasy that addresses the basic human difficulties and discoveries involved in the death of a loved one, as well as the relationships that develop, are destroyed, or change in the process.

This world, however, had a ten-endency to exist on such an extremely symbolic plain that it occasionally lost sight of the human emotions it attempted to represent.

There were a couple times when I was confused. I struggled with the symbolic depth so much I lost focus on the message and aim of the script. Burns has an amazing talent for word-crafting and imagery. It just becomes a matter of not allowing that talent to undermine itself with confusion.

However, the overall effect of the show hit home. The cast was superb. The incredible amount of time spent with the script, coupled with each member's obvious dedication and skill, led to a dynamic play in which everyone moved and spoke as if there was no thought — only instinct and raw emotion — behind their actions.

Costumes, make-up and the set were essentially flawless. Sprenke was able to stage Burns' symbolism so its passionate essence literally encompassed the dark and driving rhythm.

Tiny Lives is an emotionally charged show that skillfully points a finger at aspects of the human psyche we are sometimes inclined to want to forget and that finger can, and should, hurt.

Green groups to clean Paradise

Environment Idaho Education in conjunction with Palouse Clearwater Environment Institute will clean a section of Paradise creek.

As part of the Adapt-a-Creek program, members of the new UI environmental club known as ENVIE will meet at the Administration building under the clock at 10 a.m. April 16.

Kayak skills class offered April 20

Sea Kayaks have been around for thousands of years. The sport of Sea Kayaking is an offshoot of the original use of kayaks — the pursuit of wild animals. Today, Kayak enthusiasts slip silently within viewing range of animals without disturbing them. As Mike Belser of the UI Outdoor Program says, "The only impact of a sea kayak is the trailing wake."

UI is offering an instructional class allowing students to learn skills necessary for the safe participation and enjoyment in the sport of Sea Kayaking. The class session will be followed by a day trip to the Snake River for fun and practice.

Class will begin at the ASUI Outdoor Program office at 7 p.m. April 20. The trip to the Snake River is April 23. The cost is $20 and includes kayak rental, instruction and transportation. For more information contact the UI Outdoor Program office.

Foresters accept student applicants

Student chapter of the Society of American Foresters is accepting applications from students interested in joining the resource conservation organization.

SAF at UI has a history of success. Their activities range from cleaning up a two mile section of highway 95 to escorting 60 grade school students through the UI experimental forest as part of the Walk-in-the-Woods program.

If you would like to start building your career and have some fun at the same time fill out an application today.

Big game hide in boondocks

Dave Lewis
Assistant Editor

Opportunities to photograph or simply enjoy watching wildlife abound in the boondocks of Eastern Latah County.

Deer and elk can be seen feeding in the green wheat fields morning and evening. All interested in seeing big game without having to get out of their car should drive east on Highway 8 to Deary. Groups of up to 50 elk and nearly as many deer have been found. However, smaller groups are more common.

Where to search for feeding big game animals must be decided at Deary. A gamble of sorts is taken. Wild game animals might be feeding in the fields of Avon, or maybe chances are better at Park or on Texas ridge, or all three.

The Avon area is located northwest of Deary on Highway 3. Passers-by have seen elk all along the highway and on county roads. Crossing the arched bridge over the railroad tracks and proceeding north, deer seekers will find two graveled loop routes. By keeping to the left, they will find their way back to Highway 3. For a longer and somewhat more scenic route, turn to the right at the Vasser Meadow road. This road returns to pavement near Bovill on Highway 8 again. Deer and elk are both common on both Avon loops, as are coyotes.

The Park area is reached by driving east of Deary to Helmer on Highway 8, then turning south on the county road. The fields where elk feed is five miles out, but the drive through the timber is beautiful. The county road follows the old logging railroad grade after crossing the Pottlach river. With a little imagination the old steam locomotive's whistle echoes in the canyon.

Texas Ridge is accessed by taking Highway 3 south of Deary by taking any of the first three county roads. All three roads connect, so loop excursions are possible. Deer are more common on Texas Ridge.

Spring is a good time to view big game because they are under no stress from hunters or biological needs and will feed even while in close proximity to people. For those who having a spring craving to get outside, a 45 minute drive from is all it takes.

Deer may be found at Avon Park, Texas Ridge, 45 minutes from Moscow. Contributed by Olen Lewis

Horn hunting saves gene pool

E.H. Jennings
Contributing Writer

Each year buck deer and elk bulls shed their antlers, scattering them throughout the forest. Working last summer in the Idaho forests with a timber marking crew, I was introduced to horn hunting.

Horn hunting is gathering deer and elk antler sheds. It didn't take long for me to catch horn hunting fever.

Some horn hunters are interested in money. There is a ready market for antler sheds, although the price per pound varies depending on age, shape, condition and whether the antlers are elk or deer sheds. Single sheds are worth less per pound than a matched set. Another problem horn hunters face is little woodland creatures like to nibble on antler sheds, much to the chagrin of horn hunters because bite marks reduce value.

Antlers are used for ornamental purposes, such as knife handles, buttons, and various craft and novelty items.

Although there is a financial reward to finding sheds, I have yet to meet anyone who got rich horn hunting. All the sheds I found last summer, fourteen pounds worth, sold for $12.75. Not even enough to buy the gas.

To me horn hunting is a sport, a chance to get out in the woods for some good stress relieving activity. Hiking game trails is good for the soul. It is good for soul searching too.

I have found my attitude toward deer hunting is changing. I don't intend to stop deer hunting, but I have realized that finding a large shed and then its match has become more exciting than finding a trophy buck in the crosshairs and pulling the trigger. I'll harvest a deer for table fare, but without destroying what may be a dominate gene pool by killing a Boone and Crocket buck.

I soon understood the thrill the other guys were talking about when they talked horn hunting. One morning a crew member found an elk shed. It was a good sized fresh three point with hardly any chew marks on it. As I continued working, I saw antlers where there were only bleached tan or off-white dead branches.

Some of the first sheds I found were old and dried out with the points and brow tines severely chewed by rodents and were not of much value. However I'd find a shed, average sized, fresh, with little or no chew marks.

Each shed found raised my anticipation level for finding others. However, days would go by without anyone finding a shed. Then some days we'd find two or three. As habitat and terrain changed so did the anticipation level. We'd say, "This looks like good horn county. Lots of sign, both old and fresh. We should find some antlers here."

Moving across different terrain even though signs were old and scarce and it wasn't a good place to find sheds, the dead branches continued to play tricks on my

Convention makes geography history

Karin Kaasik
Contributing Writer

Classes were canceled and the geography department offices were nearly abandoned the last week of March.

Eight professors and nine students, members of the Cartography/Geography Society, spent the week far from Moscow.

The 90th Annual Meeting of the Association of American Geographers was held in San Francisco from March 29 - April 2, bringing geographers together from all over the world.

The meeting was a forum for discussing geographic research, education and career accomplishments. More than 600 sessions, including 2,200 paper and poster presentations, explored a range of geographic perspectives. The 1994 AAG meeting established a new record with 4,000 people in attendance.

The AAG is a scholarly, nonprofit organization founded in 1904 to advance professional studies in geography and to encourage geographic research in education, government and business.

Different cities have hosted the meeting through its 90-year-old history.

"It is probably the biggest meeting of geographers in the world," said Harley Johansen, professor and head of the geography department at the University of Idaho. Johansen has participated in at least 15 meetings of AAG.

During the history of the AAG, world changes have resulted in trend changes in geography. The classical concept of geography as discovering and exploring new lands has long ago been replaced with "less romantic" topics like urban and rural development, transportation, environment, space and resources studies, climatology, geomorphology, geographical information systems (GIS), social, cultural and political studies among others.

Diverse world events, ranging from climactic changes to political events, influence geographers' research topics.

The conference has become much more diverse in subject. There are much more applications in GIS. Many sessions are about Eastern-Europe and the former Soviet Union. That is different," Johansen said.

Besides presentations, the association's annual exhibit presented the latest books and tools in teaching, field research, graphic applications, computer modeling, and data collection and analysis.

Professors were at the exhibit searching for new teaching materials.

University of Idaho professors presenting papers were Harley Johansen, Curtis N. Thomson, Kang-Tsung Chang, Scott Morris, Piotr Jankowski and Sam Scriptor. Sam Couch and Bob Hickey made presentations.

"The paper went fairly well. The main problem was being nervous mind. Up to the last of October I'd acquired only a few sheds. Of the six or eight sheds I had accumulated only a couple were fresh and in good shape. However, my luck was about to change.

Cruising inventory plots, my partner ran a compass line over the main ridge onto a finger ridge next to our plot. I followed a game trail down the crest of the finger ridge. The trail forked and I took the trail leading to the right. Just a few yards from the forks, I found a shed lying tines down.

My adrenaline was flowing. I picked up my new-found shed and examined it. It was a non-typical heavy beamed shed with fresh color. The tines were in good shape with minor chew marks on only a couple of the nine total points. I took a quick look around but had to hurry to catch my partner. The crew shared my joy, admitting my shed was one of the biggest sheds they'd seen.

The next day after work I returned to the ridge where I had found the big shed. In a systematic search, I covered the area on the ridge and down the slope toward the bottom of the draw.

I was searching the area in hopes I could be lucky enough to find the other antler somewhere near where I found the big one.

I walked the game trail, 100 yards out from the spot I had found the first shed. I turned and began coming back. Off to the left of the trail, 60 yards from the first shed was a clump of Ninebark shrubs. In the middle of the Ninebark bushes lay the twin of my big heavy beamed antler. I literally jumped into the Ninebark grabbing the matching antler. It was in good shape, with only a couple of tines gnawed.

I had the matched set scored by Boone and Crocket guidelines, it scored record book size. I have a trophy rack from a record book buck that still roams the forest.

One afternoon, a buddy admired the set of antlers displayed on the bookshelf. He was impressed and I told him their story. His comment was how he would like to get that buck into his gun sights!

Later that evening I looked at the antlers and remembered what he had said. Not long ago my attitude would have been the same. Now I'd rather go back, hike the ridge line, follow the game trails and maybe end up with another trophy set of antlers from the same record book buck.

Team hosts weekend grass tournaments

The UI volleyball team is hosting a series of grass volleyball tournaments to raise money. This Saturday and Sunday will kick off the first of two weekends of volleyball hosting a tournament each day. April 16, the tournament will have men's and women's doubles, and April 17, reverse co-ed doubles. Each tournament will consist of three divisions: an open, A and novice and is open to all ages. The novice division will be left to beginners only. For $25 per team, each participant will receive a custom designed t-shirt, minimum guarantee of five matches, tournament coupon book, guaranteed playoff spot (top two teams in each pool will advance to championship Gold bracket/teams finishing third to fifth will advance to Silver bracket), fun filled day of exciting volleyball and an after tournament party at Treaty Grounds. Prizes will be awarded to top three teams in each division. The tournament will be held at the east end of Guy Wicks field. For any questions call Melissa Stokes at 885-0246 or 883-3708.

Coaching job draws familiar name

Andrew Longeteig
Staff Writer

The University of Idaho's national search for a women's basketball coach is nearly finished. Today, a new coach will be named. Heidi VanDerveer was the final coach to be interviewed last night at the Palouse Room in the University Inn. Besides VanDerveer, three other coaches are in the running to

“It's a great opportunity to build a program.”

—Heidi VanDerveer
Finalist for Women's Basketball
Head Coach

replace former head coach Laurie Turner who was "reassigned" within the athletic department last month.

Jule Holt, Gonzaga head coach, Kathi Bennett, head coach at Wisconsin-Oshkosh; and Helen Higgs, an assistant coach at University of Utah are the other three prospective candidates.

VanDerveer played college basketball at the College of Charleston in South Carolina.

She began her coaching career at the University of Tennessee where she coached for two years. For the past six years she has been an assistant at the University of South Carolina.

The first time VanDerveer came to UI, she was with her sister, Tara, who coached the Vandals for two seasons from 1978-1980. Her sister compiled a 42-12 record.

At the time she was 12-years-old and said she had a weird feeling of deja vu when she stepped into Memorial Gym for the first time.

"It's a great opportunity to build a program," said VanDerveer. "Idaho's a great school. I like the area, so it's a good mix."

VanDerveer doesn't know a lot about the team, but has met the players.

Her philosophy on entering a new program is to "look at the team you're working with and you determine the style of play that would make those people most successful."

"Ideally, I like the up-tempo style; shoot the 3 pointer. A fun style that's fun to watch for students, for the community."

The new coach will replace Turner, who coached the Vandals for eight seasons. Turner compiled a 97-127 record. Since Turner's 18-11 year in 1988-89 and 20-9 record in 1989-90, she had only one winning season.

The selected coach will only be the fifth ever in UI women's basketball. The program began in 1976.

Heidi VanDerveer was on campus yesterday for a tour of the facilities, a chance to meet people as well as an open forum.

The new coach also will inherit a young and inexperienced team. Ari Skorpik, Shannan Anderson, Jill Ortner, Kara Jenkins, Cathy Payne and Julee James are all soon-to-be-sophomores who saw a considerable amount of playing time last season.

Idaho will lose Big Sky leading scorer Jennifer Clary, Karen Poncina and Amy Deterding to graduation. The only senior returning next season will be Kerri Wykes.

"I believe in myself, I'm confident," states VanDerveer "I think I'm definitely the right one."

Pathetic winter no bearing for game

Coming from a state where the winters are real and it's cold outside, I can't help but get excited for this big hockey weekend.

Not because spring will hopefully be here and all those nice things that supposedly arrive on the Palouse.

Whatever those nice things are, I haven't been here long enough to figure it out.

No, where I was raised through my formative years just happened to be on the great Lake Superior. It actually snowed to the point where we had to put on a different pair of shoes to go outside.

More than that, 13,000 plus lakes froze up to be the originator of one of the greatest sports in the world. Hockey.

Heck, with all of that. What does this mean?

For those who don't keep up on the exciting world, it is time for the playoffs. That's right, the quest for the largest trophy in sports.

Hockey had a big year seeing Mr. Hockey's, Gordie Howe, all-time scoring record broke by the one and only Wayne Gretzky. Unfortunately, the Los Angeles Kings don't have a prayer to get into the playoffs. In fact, anyone that is not already in it doesn't have a prayer. Everything is all ready to go. Come Sunday, this will be just like the road to the Final Four.

Hockey has always been one of my favorites. I never played for any special team, just recreationally. I've yet to find a game of pick-up for hockey out here yet.

I am disappointed with one thing. That great place I've so often mentioned is Minnesota, otherwise known as the hockey capital of the world. And it truly is... was. This year I must watch the Dallas Lone Stars skate the ice. And, sure, they are doing pretty well.

Minnesota without hockey, pardon the cliché, is like a duck without water. Texas with a hockey team is like Minnesota with a rodeo. Nope. I just haven't been able to come to face the reality of what happened.

Time to look at the way things have shaped up. The Rangers have claimed the best record in the Eastern Conference and the National Hockey League, clinching the Atlantic Division with Pittsburgh ahead in the Northeast. Likewise, Detroit

Dead Writers' Society Matthew D. Andrew

clines both the Central Division with a win over Montreal and leads the Western Conference.

The San Jose Sharks pulled in just nudging out Anaheim by a game. Look at that. Two young programs both with something they want to prove. I'm sure many of you have seen the hockey classics "Slapshot" or "Youngblood," maybe even the "Mighty Ducks" - All movies where a team comes out to prove itself.

Other teams vying for this year's cup include Boston, Montreal and Buffalo. Each of these teams are one of the best in the league, all from the Northeast, all with 40-plus win seasons. Likewise, Toronto and Dallas are leading their respective divisions with a 40 plus win-year

The Rangers clear the way with a 52 win-season thus far. The only team with such a task this season. The two closest teams are six games behind.

Wednesday night, the Islanders from New York beat out the Tampa Bay Lightning securing their playoff bid - the last one. However, the team that lost theirs was the Florida Panthers. The Islanders will meet up for an all New York game against the Rangers in the opening day of playoffs at the Madison Square Garden.

All that I know is that even with the lack of winter that was experienced here in the Palouse, it will have no bearing on the way hockey season winds up for me.

Actually, I'm still waiting for it to snow.

Idaho games held in Moscow

The First Security Games of Idaho have selected Moscow as a host site for the 6th annual 1994 State Summer Games to take place July 7-10.

Competition in all activities is open to both Idaho and Washington residents. Events to be held at the Moscow facilities are: boy's/men's basketball, girl's/women's basketball, junior golf, sand volleyball, soccer and a duathlon—a three kilometer run and five kilometer bike.

Registration packets will be available at your local First Security Bank branch by April 25. Come join the fun!

For more information call 1-800-44-GAMES.

Dog Day races Saturday

The fourth Annual Dog Days will take place this weekend at the Washington State University College of Veterinary Medicine in the front yard of Bustad Hall.

The first race begins at 10 a.m. which is a five kilometer run without pets. The following race will start at 10:30 and is mile run/walk with dogs. The third race is a half-mile run/walk with an exotic pet—any pet other than a dog— or exotic costume or both.

All contestants will receive a free Dog Days t-shirt. In addition, prizes will be awarded accordingly. The first race will have prizes for the top three finishers: one man, woman and child under 12.

The second race will have prizes for the top three finishers, oldest dog to finish first, youngest dog to finish first, Golden Team Award (fastest oldest team, based on age of owner plus age of dog) and the person most likely to be pulled across the finish line. The third race winners are those who are a top three finisher, best outfitted pet and owner, most unusual exotic pet and best costume.

The cost for one race is $10 and two for $12, a late fee of $5 will be assessed. Proceeds for the event go to WSU Student Chapter of the American Veterinary Medical Association and will benefit the class of 1996.

Hall of Famer speaks Tuesday

Native Idahoan and baseball Hall of Famer Harmon Killebrew will be on campus Tuesday as a guest speaker of the Beta Theta Pi Fraternity.

Killebrew attended Payette High School in Payette, Idaho, as well as the College of Idaho in Caldwell.

Killebrew opened his major league baseball career with the Washington Senators in 1954.

He stayed with this team until 1960. In 1961 he began his 13 year career with the Minnesota Twins.

He spent his last season with the Kansas City Royals in .

In his lifetime, he has held many broadcasting positions around the country as well as vice-president of two businesses located in Boise but is no longer with.

Along with other accomplishments, Killebrew also serves his time as a motivational speaker.

On Tuesday, he will be here to present his speech "Drug and Alcohol Abuse and What It Can Do To You."

Everyone is invited to attend free of charge in the Administration Building Auditorium at 7 p.m. on April 19.

Rugby team opens at home

The UI men's rugby team will kickoff their home schedule with a match Saturday against the University of Montana Jesters.

This will be the first of three home matches the team will play consecutively. The following weekend will feature the Rocky

Sports Briefs

Mountain Rogues and April 23 will be the Nelson Grizzlies.

The game is scheduled for 1 p.m. at Guy Wicks Field.

Rodeo club sponsors casino

This weekend the UI Rodeo Club will compete in Pullman at the Washington State University's Mother's Weekend Rodeo.

As part of the event the UI club will host a rodeo dance and casino night in an attempt to curb drinking. It is also a means for the club to have members who don't compete get their chance to help out in another capacity.

The event will feature a well-known country band Blue Highway. For those who aren't able to perform the Texas Two Step and others, there will be a casino night. For a price, participants can purchase a bundle of play money to tour the different tables. For the successful people they can use the money to buy prizes, as well as the ones that will be awarded throughout the evening.

The event will take place at the UI Livestock Pavilion from 9 p.m. until 2 a.m. The event costs $2 for those not wishing to gamble and $4 for those who do.

Catch the triathlon fever

Catch the fever! Triathlon fever is spreading. Some lucky individuals have caught Triathlon Fever in the earliest stage of the epidemic and are in training now, as you read these words. The Palouse Triathlon will its 11th annual event Sunday, April 24, 1994, at 7 a.m., at the UI. It is open to students and non-students alike.

The event consists of a 1.5 kilometer swim in a 25 yard indoor pool, 40 kilometer bike over relatively flat terrain and a 10 kilometer run over rolling hills. If you feel feverish as you read about the 11th Annual Palouse Triathlon you may have caught the fever yourself.

Please call Campus Recreation at (208) 885-6381 for an entry form and start training today.
