Top stories on campus

Tim Helmke
News Editor

This past year has brought interesting stories to the Argonaut to cover. We have compiled the top ten front page stories, chosen by our editorial board, from the 1993-94 school year.

10. Lionel Hampton Jazz Festival: Once again the musical extravaganza drew hundreds of people to the UI campus. High school and college students were all over campus to participate in the competitions. Hampton himself performed in nightly concerts as well as with other groups in forums and workshops.

9. Megan Heber receives 5-year sentence: The former UI student, who gave birth to her child in her residence hall room in Theophilus Tower and then threw it down the garbage chute, was sentenced to five years for her crime. Heber was sentenced to serve her term in a Boise area center for rehabilitation.

8. Student Union Building proposed name change to Idaho Union: The Union Board and SUB Director David Mucci proposed changing the name of the SUB to Idaho Union. This name change was aimed to represent the other changes planned to be made to the building. This subject became a hot issue with tempers flaring on both sides. The issue appeared on the ASUI election ballot and was voted down.

7. (tie) Two fraternities lose recognition: Beta Theta Pi and Sigma Alpha Epsilon both lost recognition from the university and Interfraternity Council for their part in the Regena Coghlan incident. These two fraternities were found guilty of serving alcohol to the 19-year old pledge before she fell on the evening of Aug. 19.

7. (tie) Idaho Union names resolved: Mucci and the Union Board resolved their name change idea by keeping the name "SUB." Mucci and the board had been faced with attacks from different groups but always stood firm in their decisions all along. Mucci made the announcement at a February Senate meeting.

5. City of Moscow presses charges against two fraternities: The city attorney's office pressed charges against Beta Theta Pi and

Suicide on golf course

Tuesday night at approximately 8:19 p.m., the Moscow Police Department responded to the report of a possible dead body on the University of Idaho golf course.

A groundskeeper had discovered the body of an adult male laying on the side of a hill adjacent to the golf course.

On arrival, officers found the body of Tom Kim (Tae Min Kim), an adult oriental male, dead from an apparently self-inflicted gunshot wound to the head.

Kim, 20, was a student at Washington State University. He was from Campbell, Calif.

Foul play is not suspected in the case but detectives are continuing their investigation of the death

Financial aid changes coming up

In the midst of fall semester, while the students of UI were recovering from midterms and making plans for fall recess and Thanksgiving, UI administrators were quietly rejoicing at the news that had come out of Washington, D.C.

The reports from the U.S. Department of Education confirmed what had, for nearly two years, seemed like only airy hopes. On Dec. 3, 1993, when UI President Elisabeth Zinser received a letter from President Clinton congratulating her and the UI, the quiet rejoicing turned into deep gratification, for it was official, the UI had been chosen as one of the first-year elite institutions that would be allowed to implement the new Federal Direct Student Loan Program in the 1994-95 school year.

Perhaps most elated were Vice President of Student Affairs Hal Godwin and Director of Student Financial Aid Services Dan Davenport.

Finally, UI students would have access to a new, simpler, user-friendly, direct student loan program which would replace the old, burdensome and complicated, bank loan programs.

Over 2000 schools nationwide applied to be included in the first year of the new direct loan program and only 105 were selected with the UI, the University of Washington and University of Oregon being the only Northwest universities chosen.

When the U.S. Department of Education later made public the selection criteria and provided information about why only certain schools were selected out of the over 2000 that applied. Among other reasons, 105 were picked because of the university's current high level efficiency in administering student aid programs and because the Office of Student Financial Aid Services is currently utilizing and proficiently operating the U.S. Department of Education's Electronic Data Exchange software. This software is the driving force behind implementation of the direct lending program.

All students who are currently eligible under the Federal Stafford or Federal SLS programs and any parent who has borrowed under the Federal PLUS program will still be eligible to borrow under the new Federal Direct Student Loan Program.

The amounts and terms of the loans will remain the same, however, the process of applying will be much simpler and the repayment process choices will be much improved. As many UI students know, under the old program borrowers were expected to: Fill out a separate loan application in order to apply, submit the certified loan application to the Office of Student Financial Aid Services for certification eligibility, submit the certified loan application to a private lender (bank or credit union), wait while the lender requests a guarantee from a Guarantee Agency and then wait for the lender to send the loan check to the school for delivery to the student.

Direct Lending simplifies the process by eliminating separate application forms and removing banks, guarantee agencies and secondary markets from the process. For Direct Lending, the application process will be much easier because there is no longer the need to complete separate applications. As they do for all federal aid programs, the student completes the Free Application for Federal Student Aid which is used to apply for all federal financial aid and UI Financial Student Aid. For Federal PLUS, the parent borrower completes a PLUS application/promissory note. All of the forms are available from the Office of Student Financial Aid Services.

Students will receive an award notification indicating their eligibility for federal aid, including direct loans. The student will indicate on the award notification that they accept the awarded loan(s) and return it to the Office of Student Financial Aid Services. A promissory note will be sent to the student to be signed and returned. After the promissory note is returned, the funds will be made available to the student at registration or later if the promissory note is not received in time for registration.

Under Direct Lending, the same kinds of loans are available as in the past. Subsidized Stafford Loans are based on financial need and the federal government pays the interest on the loan while the student is in school.

Wishing Star to gain from golf proceeds

The proceeds from tomorrow's first annual Argonaut/Hot 104 KHTR-FM Golf Scramble at the UI Golf Course will go to the Wishing Star Foundation's local chapter of the national charity. The over 36 spots in the scramble filled up in just a few days and the proceeds are expected to exceed $400.

Graduates can pick up caps, gowns today

Those UI students who ordered caps and gowns from the UI Alumni Office for Commencement ceremonies can pick up their attire at the office through today. The office is open from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. and can be reached at 885-6154.

Help group accepting donations for victims

Alternatives to Violence of the Palouse is a private, non-profit agency serving victims of domestic violence and/or sexual assault on Latah and Whitman counties. ATVP is currently accepting donations of items for use in their emergency shelter and public office. In addition, they are working with many families who have recently left their shelter and need items to set up their new homes. So, if you are leaving town for the summer or are off to bigger and better things after graduation, consider donating your unneeded items to ATVP. Give them last year's summer clothes. Do not throw away those pots and pans. Do not throw those extra chairs off your balcony. ATVP needs them.

ATVP has a display and collection box at Seafirst Bank in Pullman for items. If anyone wishes, they may drop off their items at the office at W. 106 Main in Pullman or call 332-0552. A partial list of needed items includes: clothes, TV, dishes, filing cabinets, linens, food, VCR, housewares and office supplies.

Gritman lab offers place for people to get tests

Gritman Medical Center offers a Walk-in Lab open Mondays through Fridays from 8 a.m. to 5 p.m. This lab offers non-fasting cholesterol screens, confidential pregnancy tests and lipid profiles (12 to 14 hour fast required). No appointments are necessary and a doctor's referral is not required. For more information call the lab at 883-2227.

Farmer's Market opens tomorrow downtown

The annual Farmer's Market in downtown Moscow starts tomorrow at 8 a.m. This Friendship Square event draws people to the fresh fruits and vegetables grown regionally, and the plants and artwork of local residents. This event runs every Saturday through September from 8 a.m. to 1 p.m. The market is open to the public.

Commencement plans for individual colleges

The Spring 1994 Commencement Plenary Ceremony will be May 14 at 9 a.m. at the Kibbie Dome. Dr. Marv Henberg will give the keynote address. Individual college ceremonies will be: Art and Architecture in the SUB Ballroom at 11 a.m.; Engineering in Memorial Gym at 11 a.m.; Forestry, Wildlife and Range Sciences in the University Auditorium at 11 a.m.; Letters and Science in the Kibbie Dome at 11 a.m.; Mines and Earth Resources in the University Auditorium at 1 p.m.; Agriculture in Memorial Gym at 1:30 p.m.; Business and Economics in the Kibbie Dome at 1:30 p.m.; Education in the Kibbie Dome at 3:30 p.m.; and Law in Memorial Gym at 4 p.m.

Close of 1994 Spring semester draws near

Final examinations will be administered Monday through Friday.

The Spring 1994 Semester ends May 13 at 5 p.m.

Artifacts to be displayed at Moscow library

Artifacts from the Asian American Comparative Collection will be on display at an exhibit through May 15 at the Moscow Public Library. The AACC is housed at the UI's Laboratory of Anthropology.

Cookies on sale to raise money for Girl Scouts

Girl Scout Cookies are on sale now. When a person buys a box of Girl Scout Cookies they help provide training for volunteers, prevention programs for girls and special assistance for those in need. In Girl Scouting, no girl is left out. For more information call the Girl Scouts Inland Empire Council at 1-800-827-9478.

Bookstore to hold buy back of textbooks

The UI Bookstore will begin their textbook buy-backs tomorrow. Students can take their books to the Bookstore and no receipt is needed for money back through May 14.

GTE service packets to be returned today

Each UI department should have received a packet of information from GTE detailing what phone services the department has requested after the Aug. 5 cut-over. After a careful review of the materials, the packets must be returned with a department signature to Carrie Holman in Computer Services. Deadline for returning the material is Friday. It is important to indicate whether a department is purchasing new phones under Fiscal Year 1993 or Fiscal Year 1994 and under which budget number. All ongoing line charges also need to be identified with a budget number.

If a department has not received a packet or if there are any questions, call Holman at 885-6721.

Biology colloquium to present seminar today

The UI Department of Biological Sciences Colloquium today will feature John R. Horner, director of the Museum of the Rockies at Montana State University, who will present a seminar entitled "The Complete Trex."

This presentation will at 12:30 p.m. in Life Sciences 277. The event is free and open to the public.

Gritman offers free blood pressure tests

Gritman Medical Center will offer free blood pressure checks tomorrow from 11 a.m. to 3 p.m. at the Health Exchange. People are welcome to stop by and have their blood pressure checked by a registered nurse.

Unsubsidized Stafford Loans are available to all students, regardless of need, but the interest is not paid by the federal government while the student is in school. Instead, the interest that accrues will be charged to the student and can be repaid, along with the amount borrowed, in monthly payments upon entering repayment after graduation.

Starting in 1994-95, the old SLS loan program will be replaced with increased eligibility for Unsubsidized Stafford Loans. The PLUS Loan, which is also unsubsidized, is a way for parents of dependent students to help pay for uncovered educational costs. Interest rates will all be a variable, with Stafford capped at 8.25 percent and PLUS capped at 9 percent and the origination fees, formerly at 8 percent, will be 4 percent.

Many repayment options will be available to students once they graduate or leave school. Students who end up with both the old bank loans and the new direct loans will have the option to consolidate their loans so that only one monthly payment will be necessary. Also, several ways to repay Federal Direct Loans will be available so that students can arrange affordable monthly payments.

- A standard repayment plan has a fixed monthly repayment amount for a fixed period of time, usually 10 years.

- An extended repayment plan has a lower fixed monthly payment amount and loan repayment can be extended beyond the usual 10 years.

- A graduated repayment plan usually begins with lower payments and payment amounts increase at specified times. Payments may be for the usual 10-year period or they may be extended beyond 10 years.

- An income-contingent repayment plan, available for Direct Stafford Loans, sets annual repayment amounts based on the borrower's income after leaving school. The loan is repaid over an extended period of time, not to exceed 25 years.

If there are any questions about the new Federal Direct Student Loan Program, the Office of Student Financial Aid Services invites people to stop in their office across from the Bookstore or call 885-6312.

New Vandal Cards to be made for students

New and returning UI students need to get a new student identification card. This can be done by going to the Vandal Card office on the second floor of Wallace Complex. Students can take part in the early stages this semester and they will not have to stand in line when they return in the fall. The office staff ask that summer school students wait to get their photo taken until the summer.

Final examination to change from schedule

Students planning to take Jerry Wegman's Business Law 265, Legal Environment of Business, at 7 p.m. Monday in the Agricultural Sciences Auditorium have a few changes they need to take note of.

The final is still scheduled for 7 p.m. Monday, but has moved to UCC Room 101. Students who had a conflict with that time and planned on taking it at 5:30 p.m. that same day have more changes. The time scheduled for students with a conflict has changed to Friday, May 13, at 3:30 to 5 p.m. in Administration Room 307.

Payroll Office reminds students of paychecks

The UI Payroll Office reminds people to make arrangements for their final paycheck of the semester before they leave for the summer.

If a student has direct deposit they need to remember to leave their account open to receive their final paycheck on May 20 or June 3. These students need to leave a self-addressed, stamped envelope with their department so they can mail their final pay receipt to them. Direct deposit remains in effect until a student stops it. Students are reminded to update their banking information if any changes are made.

If a student receives a regular paycheck, they need to take a self-addressed, stamped envelope to the Payroll Office in Administration Annex Room 208.

They need to write their social security number on the inside flap of the envelope.

If a student is leaving campus permanently, they need to stop by the Payroll Office to pick up a forwarding address card. W-2 forms will be mailed using these cards. For more information on any of these arrangements, call the Payroll Office at 885-6353.

Gritman to offer their CPR course Wednesday

Gritman Medical Center will offer a community CPR class Wednesday from 6 to 9 p.m. in their third floor classroom. The course covers adult, child and infant CPR. Participants will be certified by the American Heart Association. This course usually fills up fast so call now to register at 883-2232. The next class will be offered June 9.

IFC, Panhellenic sponsor charity fundraising dance

The UI Interfraternity and Panhellenic Councils will sponsor a community dance tonight from 8 to 11 p.m. in the SUB Ballroom. Proceeds from this dance will be given to Moscow High School and the American Lung Association. Door prizes, games and dancing will all be offered. Prices are: $10 for a family, $5 for a couple and $3 for a single. Everyone is encouraged to attend.

Summer school fees to increase on May 18

If anyone is thinking of taking a course during the UI Summer Session, they should register now. Starting May 18, students will pay between $6 to $8 more per credit for summer classes. Students who register and pay by May 17 will not have to pay this increase in fees.

There will still be no additional charges to out-of-state registrants. Students should register as soon as possible. If anyone has any questions, they should call the Summer Programs Office at 885-6237.

Catholic community to accept sale donations

St. Augustine's Catholic Community is now accepting donations for their annual rummage sale which will be held Aug. 26 and 27. People can donate any usable item which they do not need anymore. Donated items can be picked up or dropped off at St. Augustines Student Center. For more information call 882-4613 from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. or 882-1946 during the evening.

Honors Six recognized by Andrus

Six UI employees were honored April 14 at a reception for Idaho Employees' United Community Campaign Governor's Club members.

Members donate one percent of their gross income.

UI club members this year are: Donald Huskey, Facilities Management special projects manager; Stephen Bradley, bacteriology graduate student; Gloria Luther, WAMI administrative assistant; Joseph Mishurda, mining engineering/metallurgy graduate student; Genevieve Long, University Communications office senior secretary; and Elisabeth A. Zinser, UI president.

Governor Andrus presented the outstanding donors with Governor's Club mugs and mug trees: "One percent is a very generous donation," said Andrus.

Andrus said people who malign state employees "don't know what they're talking about."

"State employees exemplify the giving, compassion and sensitivity humans have to have. State employees are always the first in line to help others."

The campaign started statewide in the fall of 1990 to combine the local United Way drives with the campaigns of other health and human service agencies. It offers state employees an opportunity to contribute to a variety of their favorite charities in one drive. Latah County state employees contributed almost $17,000 in gifts and pledges in 1994, up 13 percent from last year.

Latah County State Campaign Committee members include: Marilee Renfrew, KUID; Florence Jack, Health and Welfare; Rhonda Comstock, past president of United Way and Latah County state campaign coordinator; Laura Erne, UI state campaign coordinator; and Mark Boehne, West One Bank/United Way Board of Directors/state campaign coordinator.

Sigma Alpha Epsilon for their serving alcohol to minors incident on Aug. 19.

4. Greek Advisors at fraternity party: Greek Advisor Linda Wilson and Assistant Greek Advisor Chris Wuthrich were present at the Beta Theta Pi "50 Ways to Lose Your Liver" party Aug. 19. They both saw Coghlan at this party but did not see any alcohol violations while they were present.

3. Non-residents face tuition increase: Students from out-of-state who choose to attend the UI will face a $7000 tuition bill starting in the Fall of 1995. The Idaho State Board of Education approved the increase to become comparable to other states' tuition rates for non-resident students. The UI administration and students with the ASUI Senate both voiced their opposition to the increase. The only achievement from their action was a milder transition from the current tuition rate to the $7000 total.

2. Coghlan believed to be partyer: Documents and evidence seized by the Moscow city attorney's office found Coghlan was believed to be an experienced partyer contradicting the earlier image she had portrayed. In a diary written during formal Greek Rush, Coghlan wrote, "I literally (as far as I know) have partied a lot harder than some of these girls. A lot harder. And the amount of pot I smoked, jeez." Testimony Coghlan gave to investigators was contradictory. She said she was hesitant to drink and felt pressured from her sorority sisters.

1. Pledge falls from third floor of sorority: Regena Coghlan, a pledge at Alpha Phi sorority, fell from the third floor of the house after drinking at two fraternity parties. Coghlan had attended Beta Theta Pi's "50 Ways to Lose Your Liver" party and Sigma Alpha Epsilon's "Jack Daniels' Birthday" party. Coghlan fell from the third floor fire escape on the north side of the house. She landed on her feet which, on impact, snapped her back paralyzing her.

Residence halls win

Joey Wellman
Contributing Writer

The residence halls sprung into spring April 14-16. The annual Spring Fling schedule of events included everything from a water balloon toss to a scavenger hunt. The penny wars accumulated over $900 that was donated to the Red Cross.

The weekend ended with the Residence Hall Association Awards Banquet held in the SUB Ballroom. Awards and honors were given to a variety of people and groups. The 1993-94 Halls of the year are: Forney Hall, women, and Upham Hall, men. Residence halls recognized for Highest G.P.A. are Shoup for the men and French for the women.

Resident Assistants of the Year are Joni Crabbe Forney Hall; and Russ Schwandt, Alumni Residence Center. Residence Hall presidents of the Year are Aaron Mosher, Upham Hall; Jeni Tesch, Neely Hall; and Brenda Oamek, Olesen Hall.

Freshmen/women of the Year are Amy Gepford, Forney Hall; and Eric Garton, Upham Hall. Residence Hall Woman of the Year, encompassing an entire educational career living in residence halls, was awarded to Gail Hazen, a resident of French Hall. Residence Hall Man of the Year is Brian Radford of Shoup Hall.

Along with the honors was the presentation of two-year pins to residents for their services in the residence halls. The National Residence Hall Honorary, which recognizes the top two percent of residence hall members for being outstanding leaders, inducted new members to its national program.

UI President Elisabeth Zinser was the keynote speaker at the awards banquet.

AMERICORPS

COMING SOON TO COMMUNITIES EVERYWHERE

Youth Corps members with the President at the White House for the signing of AmeriCorps National Service legislation.

AmeriCorps is the new domestic Peace Corps where thousands of young people will soon be getting things done through service in exchange for help in financing their higher education or repaying their student loans.

Starting this fall, thousands of AmeriCorps members will fan out across the nation to meet the needs of communities everywhere. And the kinds of things they will help get done can truly change America—things like immunizing our infants...tutoring our teenagers... keeping our schools safe... restoring our natural resources ...and securing more independent lives for our ill and our elderly.

Summer 'Argonaut' breaks new ground

Once again, the Argonaut is breaking new — or relatively new — ground. The Argonaut is venturing into a summer production.

Wednesday mornings throughout the summer, students, faculty, staff and the population of Moscow can enjoy leafing through an edition of the Argonaut. There will be the same areas of coverage, news, sports, outdoors, lifestyles and opinion, but on a much smaller and intimate scale.

Some students have maintained that not enough happens during the summer session to support a newspaper. They are wrong. Many interesting things happen while this campus seems relatively empty and lifeless.

In the last summer issue of the Idaho Argonaut, sometimes printed as the Summer Sun, on Aug. 1, 1986 a story ran regarding the first "dry" rush. Another story depicted the historical event of the record number of degrees granted by UI during the 1985-86 school year. During that same summer the UI Board of Regents authorized administrators to request up to 20 percent budget increase and they were even fussing about a $15 fee increase that would bring the total fee cost to students up to $520.

Some things never change!

News during the summer is no different than news during the school year. The only difference is the audience receiving the information and entertainment.

The summer production of the Argonaut began as the Summer Sun in June 1977. It was about two-thirds the size of the Argonaut now. The top story of the first issue illustrated the ever-present parking issue on campus. Parking was going to remain free during the summer, but persons parking illegally would be ticketed and fined $4.

Boy, have things changed!

There are things in the summer the regular publication of the Argonaut would simply not be able to cover at all. Administrators and faculty are appointed during the summer and students complete exciting projects, not to mention summer theater and construction happening on campus.

This year, the Argonaut is in a good position to be publishing a summer edition. With the increasing popularity of the Argonaut, we see a possibility of reaching a vast audience, the opportunity for more people to gain work experience and the chance for advertisers to reach a continuing audience.

The Argonaut staff approached the ASUI Senate and President John Marble about the publication and legislation was passed providing for a more continuous publication. We owe credit to these student leaders, but also to the current staff for presenting a quality product advertisers admire and support.

Mandela fount of inspiration

Rolihlahla Nelson Mandela is carrying the weight of a nation on his shoulders. South Africa, once ruled by a white minority, has passed on the torch of leadership to the African National Congress. With the dawn of a new government, we, as Americans, must break out pen and paper and start taking notes.

The white government of South Africa held the black majority in servitude for 300 years. The government segregated blacks, ignored their housing, paid them a pittance and barely pretended to provide education. South Africa sounds much like the United States. The United States has made segregation illegal in theory, but it is still implied in many parts of the country. Housing has become an exercise in social Darwinism.

African-Americans, along with other minority groups, have been marginalized both culturally and geographically. Statistics have shown African-Americans are paid less than whites and are often charged more when buying large items, such as cars.

As far as education goes, our government feels it is more important to spend billions of dollars fighting imagined and perceived enemies internationally than investing a few dollars by giving schools the resources and the teachers necessary to provide feasible instruction.

The white government oppression has left the South African population without an education and is now claiming that whites should be left in power because of their monopoly on information. I saw an interview with a rich, white, land owner in my African-American Studies class (which incidentally should be part of the core curriculum) who made a claim that blacks should not be given land because they do not have the education to farm it successfully.

This is shocking, but it is a fine example of how the bourgeoisie has tried to keep the society stratified by denying education to the poorer class. Lack of education is not even logical when one realizes who has been working the land for generations. Strong organization is what is needed to redistribute land.

Nelson Mandela defines his own existence, but others have tried to make comparisons to other leaders in order to try to understand him. Interestingly enough, Mandela exhibits the qualities of two of our country's African-American leaders. Malcom X and Martin Luther King Jr. seem to have been dramatically different, but have been fused together into the man called Mandela. With Malcom's power and King's gentleness, Mandela has gone from political provoker to President.

Mandela will be sworn into office next week with the backing of the ANC. The ANC was a liberation movement for more than 80 years and fought its battle for equality with boycotts and protest marches. Despite the ANC's legitimacy, they were not allowed registration as a political party until last February.

With the successful political revolution in South Africa, the whole

Key to making millions is law-breaking notoriety

The Singapore cane-lashing situation is a travesty, but not because the four strikes with a rattan cane were a hideous and maiming injustice.

I'm not going say Michael Fay didn't deserve the skin-breaking lashes with a cane that was dipped in an antiseptic solution to prevent little slivers from slicing into his bare buttocks.

I'm not going to say Singapore's punishments are ridiculously barbaric and should be stopped.

I'm not going to say Clinton should have stepped in, pressured another country into submission and saved one of America's own.

No, I'm talking about stuff more insidious and damaging than open wounds or political parrying. I'm talking about buying rights — to books, to movies, to television interviews — nothing of the human kind, here.

The same opportunists who chased down Tanya Harding's ex-husband and gave America the quality made-for-television-and-people-without-brains movie, have taken to seducing Fay's mother and father hoping to capitalize on the exciting little spanking.

An Associated Press story in the Seattle Post-Intelligencer reported a photograph of Fay's lashed buttocks could garner as much as $1 million. Book and movie rights combined could also make him another couple million.

That's $750,000 per lash.

Tanya Harding isn't making quite that much, despite selling autographs for $30 a piece, which might help her pay off that $100,000 fine. If her story hadn't been so newsworthy and cranked-out in "instant" books by a few industrious reporters, she might have gotten away with making more.

This sort of money-grabbing publicity has happened before, involving mass murderers or notorious gangsters like Henry Hill, who became more famous and rich when he signed a book contract with

Coming Up For Air Chris Miller

Simon & Schuster while hiding in a federal witness protection program.

We might even consider Seattle Seahawks' Brian Bosworth, the super linebacker who amounted to an $11 million contract that allowed him hurt himself a bit, then ride the couch. This isn't even mentioning his careful marketing of himself, even going so far as sell anti-Bosworth paraphernalia. He wasn't a business major for nothing.

Consequently, what all this is telling me is that a college education isn't the best way to make it rich. No way. What I need to do is knock off a few dozen people, set it up so nobody finds the bodies, but so everybody knows I did it, but it can't be proven in my highly publicized court proceedings.

Of course, I'd have to have a secretive press agent to ensure my hair is always properly slicked-back and my eyes show the proper elements of joyous, yet intelligent insanity. I get off, sell my rights and live the life of luxury.

Or, I could spray-paint a few cars in an oppressive country, but since I'm from America I don't give up my rights to public interest, scrutiny and presidential nose-butting.

However, I have to remember to drop little hints about how repressed, depressed and stressed my early childhood was, with nice little details about bathing with mothers and shooting helpless rodents with fathers, all of which was against my will.

I won't even discuss lopping-off penises.

I suppose I could go the military route though, like Oliver North, and possibly aspire to be a U.S. Senator. I know there's some money and fame, maybe even hot, blonde women, in selling military weapons.

Essentially, the key to success is law-breaking notoriety. All of you college graduates would do well to remember that. And remember to use the oh-so-telling fact you graduated on Saturday the 14th, which is easily as awful as Friday the 13th.

Enjoyed Olsen, Art 101

I was disappointed to read that Andrea Olsen will no longer be teaching at UI. I took her Art 101 class last semester and thoroughly enjoyed it. She was enthusiastic, knowledgeable and had a genuine interest in her students. There was a lot of hands-on activities in her class and we had the opportunity to experiment with different mediums of art. We also went to community art shows and she always had extensive visual props in her lectures. She made me realize art isn't something you just hang on the wall, but something you live everyday. It doesn't have to be a grand painting, but can be as simple as creating a wonderful pizza dough. I think creativity is what makes us human and can apply not just to art majors but to all.

Her class was the only one I took in the fall semester and her class is what prompted me to return to school as a full-time student and finish my degree. I was encouraged to see that there were still good professors out there who were genuinely interested in their students and in teaching. It is too bad the university did not realize the value of this individual and treat her accordingly.

Why prove there are three gods?

When I first came to the United States, a friend of mine asked me, "Do you have Christmas in your country?" I answered, "Well, our God doesn't have a birthday."

My Christian friends, why are you trying so hard to prove that there are three gods? Isn't one god enough for you? Are you insecure with only one god? Every child knows there is only one god.

We say, "If you want to hear a truth, ask it from a child." Every child, regardless where he or she is from, knows by instinct that there is only one god. But then her parents or her church may brainwash her to make her believe there is more than one supreme being; in particular, one who roamed on Earth some 2,000 years ago.

When I went to church for the first time and I saw people were (symbolically) drinking the blood of a sacrificed god, I was disgusted; I could not believe my eyes. I felt I had gone back through a time tunnel to 3,000 years ago, to the primitive tribes of the ancient pagan civilizations. I could not believe civilized people in a country like the United States, believe in such archaic rituals and ideas!

Well, this article was a little warm up for my mind before finals. I guess I won't have the enjoyment of hearing the rebuttals of my Christian friends because the semester is almost over. By the way, I want to thank the staff of the Argonaut for their hard work. To me, the Argonaut is a very good paper, having something for everyone on this campus.

UI not above questioning

Your sanctimonious April 29 editorial on cheating did a great disservice to the students named therein and to the university community as a whole. At the outset, it seems curious that the only method by which the "student's voice" covered a lawsuit challenging the methods employed by the university in disciplinary matters was in an opinion column.

Particularly disturbing is the way you state that the students involved have "not won a major battle and been granted innocence."

Innocence is not something that is granted. Innocence is something that is presumed until and unless, after a fair hearing, the contrary is reached by an impartial decision.

While your piece is undoubtedly correct in asserting that "no student is above being questioned," a corollary to that rule is reached a priori: neither is the university above being questioned or above the law.

UI students should be grateful to those students who, at the cost of their privacy, have the nerve to question the procedures employed by UI, which seems to be becoming more of a corporate monolith than a place where fundamental rights are accorded to all.

'Rendezvous' needs volunteers

Rendezvous in the Park will be here before you know it! The 1994 concerts will include C.J. Chenier and his Red Hot Louisiana Band on July 15; "Under Western Skies," July 16; Hugh Masekela from South Africa, July 22; and the "Gems of Idaho," July 23.

Making all this happen requires a lot of volunteer help. We need people willing to sell tickets and buttons, give away printed material and promote the festival to shoppers at the Farmers Market each weekend beginning May 14.

During the Festival in July, it is the volunteers assisting with gate ticket sales and at the concession stand that make each of the four concert events a success.

Volunteering is not only a fun and easy way to give back something to our community, but also results in a free ticket to the performance of your choice. If you have some time available call Karen Lewis at 882-5531 or Pam Farmer at 885-6009.

world is looking to see how Mandela is going to accomplish his promised reforms. If Mandela can successfully handle unemployment, housing, education and land reform, we should seriously consider offering him the position of Clinton's successor. Obviously Mandela has the dedication and passion to improve his people's condition; but does he have the means?

Mandela has proposed an $11 billion economic-development program that promises to provide employment and job training for 2.5 million people in public-works projects. It aims at putting up a million new houses, providing a million others with running water and flushing toilets and bringing electricity to 2.5 million more homes.

The plan provides for free and compulsory schooling for children and adult education for millions of blacks who learned virtually nothing under the previous South African administrations. It also calls for diverting public-health funds to provide and improve clinics in the poorest areas. I applaud Mandela for his aggressive reforms.

The rich whites won't be willing to foot the bill and increasing taxes could lead to violent revolt.

Mandela is expected to borrow the money from other countries, thus keeping his country from declining into immediate debt before it can prosper. With the plethora of resources in South Africa, international trade will provide the administration with the economic base to implement their social programs and eventually pay off borrowed money.

Any changes in South Africa will be strained from extreme measures by forces such as the white-dominated business sector, the civil service, the police and army and the nine new provincial governments. The United States must do all it can to support Nelson Mandela and his brilliant healing of a wounded society. We must also look to South Africa for an example to what could be done in our own country if we could get leadership free from corrupt personal agendas.

Nelson Mandela is a man for his people. We must fight, fight, fight for the same reforms that kept Mandela in a racist, oppressive prison for 27 years.

Go home Californians

I have been a student at UI for five years and now it's time for graduation. During these five years, I have been a faithful reader of the Argonaut and I think it's about time I had my say and also give a native Idahoan outlook of what is really happening to our state.

A few years ago there was a quiet state nestled comfortably in the Northwest. This is Idaho. A state that is essentially what America used to be. The largest city had a population of less than 100,000 and the interior was dotted with small towns from the Canadian border all the way to Nevada. Life was good!

People were happy and content going about their daily obligations and essentially didn't have a care in the world. Most of the people farmed during the summer and hunted during the fall to help provide for their families.

These were the quiet days when it was safe to leave your doors unlocked at night, the garage door open and even leave the lawn mower in the front yard without worrying about someone stealing everything you have. Don't get me wrong, there still was some crime or the occasional prank pulled, but the community was still a community. This was approximately 10 years ago.

Then it happened. People discovered Idaho, the beautiful scenery, small town life, prosperous land and the low crime rate. Big cities started to drain into our state, people were escaping these cities, the crime, the pollution and everything else they had created in their society.

These people flocked to Idaho as fast then as they do now and look what happened.

You brought your stench to our society. Your crime, your pollution and the stink from your cities followed you to ours.

The towns started to grow at an overwhelming rate, population exploded, farmland was turned into parking lots and apartment buildings and streams and rivers were plowed in to make your roads. The more people that came, the worse it got and the worse it will get.

Today our pollution is increasing right along with our crime rate. All of this is proportional to the population. You didn't escape the stench of your society, you just brought it right along with you. Along with you came the crime and criminals, the environmentalists and their construed ideas telling us what to do with our land to make it better for them. You came trying to take away our rights, our weapons and essentially our way of life.

You rolled in with your pot-smoking 60's ideas, your tie-died shirts and your Birkenstocks telling us that what we have been doing for a hundred years is wrong. You try to tell us that it's O.K. to wear pony-tails and stand in a park smoking cigarettes and kicking hacky-sack, but it's wrong to drive to the mountains and shoot a Pepsi can with a .22 rifle.

Idaho is turning into California or New York or any big city and I, for one, don't want it. Take your tie-died shirts, your pony-tails, your Volkswagen busses and your city-slicking attitudes and GO HOME!

Go back to California or Chicago or wherever the hell you came from, WE DON'T WANT YOU HERE.

an entire department — devoted to teaching the new capitalism of notoriety. I'd drop my major in an instant and learn how to make real money, real fast.

We'd learn how to pick up a few government loans to invest in small businesses, find the most reliable insurance agencies and learn how to burn them down without leaving behind any damning evidence. These insurance-based courses would be targeted toward weaker students who can't stand up to the public eye.

Our more promising students, whose eyes are too close together or those who are so patently pretty they couldn't possibly be involved in evil enterprises, would get into the bigger business.

There's one saving grace in the entire caning fiasco: Fay's parents have so far had the integrity to fend off all offers. Fay's father had it right when he said Michael shouldn't be treated like a hero when he returns to the United States. But, will they be able to stand the pressure of big bucks?

Maybe. Surely, though, someone else will commit a crime and another someone will be willing to buy the story behind the bars, and what the heck, I might even watch it.

O'Brien searches for college bands

Conan O'Brien is launching a nationwide search to find the best college band in the United States to showcase on his late night show, according to a statement released today.

The Conan O'Brien Show is known for bringing up-and-coming performers into the spotlight.

To enter the contest, bands will send videos to the show's staff at NBC for judging. Bands will be judged on musical creativity, performance and eligibility. Videos should run no longer than five minutes and be recorded on half-inch VHS. All videos must be submitted by May 31. The winning band will appear on the show during the summer.

In addition, eligible bands must consist of seven or less members, and at least 75 percent of the members must be actively enrolled in a college, university or other accredited institution of higher learning as of April 3, 1994. Official rules can be obtained by sending a self-addressed, stamped envelope to Conan O'Brien's 9th Annual College Band Search Rules, P.O. Box 1616, Bensenville, Ill., 60106-8616.

Send videos to Conan O'Brien's 9th Annual College Band Search, 208 E 51st Street, Box 316, New York, N.Y., 10022-6501.

The Fever exits a master of theatre

The Fever, Theresa Baker's master's exit project, begins tomorrow and runs through Sunday.

Saturday's performance begins at 8 p.m., whereas Sunday's performance starts at 2 p.m.

Both run in the Collette Theatre. The performance is free to the public.

The show is, for the most part, a one-woman production of Wallace Shawn's script.

Amnesty International will give a short presentation at the beginning of the show.

They will also have a table set up with information about their organization. They will also accept donations at the table.

Mylar art brightens, teaches

Melissa Welsh
Staff Writer

Before you get ready to pack up and head home for the summer, you need to get over to the library to check out the huge mylar balloons.

The students in Visual Communication and the Design Process have put together some interesting pieces of art and some creative ideas in three dimensional shapes.

Professor Byron Clercx and his six graduate students, Kelly Lewis, Kerri McLaughlin, Carrie Miglothman, Tom Penrose, Kristen Smith and Elena Watson, teach students how to express themselves through different types of three-dimensional shapes and other works of art. Clercx teaches the lecture and the labs are taught by the graduate students.

The art for the library needs to be chosen very carefully. Monte Steiger, head coordinator of the library, enjoys having the students' work in the library.

He said he has heard nothing but good comments from the staff and students who have visited the library. What better place than the library to portray students' art and hard work, said Steiger.

Steiger hopes that some of the balloons will be able to stay in the library over the summer. That's only if the students are able to part with their work and if the balloons remain inflated. The library needs the art to help fill in the bare walls, and the work of students seems most appropriate. Steiger's favorite balloon is the Mardi Gras Fish on the third floor.

The mylar balloons give the library a special touch of festivity and spring as the time grows near for finals and summer vacation. Students in the library were not distracted by the balloons nor drawn from their studies.

The balloons seem to add an extra bit of glow to the room and made it easier for the students to relax and study, said students.

With the help of the graduate students, the students were able to come up with some very innovative designs. Tom Penrose, one of the graduate students, agreed that working with the students was a great learning experience for him.

In fact, all the graduate students agreed that they were simply guides for the students. The students said the class was effective, especially having the graduate students teach the labs.

They also agreed that working in groups and combining ideas was a great opportunity to find out more about fellow students and their specialties.

The art department and the library staff have worked well together to provide this campus with a feeling of unity. Next time you walk through the library take time to stop and look at all the wonderful work that your fellow students have contributed.

HOW DEAD THE WEEK?

Spain more than rumored dream land

For more than four years I have attended the UI, and for more than four years I have seen students sleeping.

Why do people think and ask if everyone in Spain takes a siesta everyday? What is the obsession with Spaniards taking naps?

The answer is: stereotypes. That oversimplified picture we make in our minds about other people is usually based on our own experiences.

Sleeping is related with body metabolism and is affected by external and internal factors. One of them is heat. Have you ever tried to sleep on a cold night, without heating and not enough blankets?

Hot weather also tends to ease sleeping during the day. That is the reason for increased nap-time during the hot months not only in Mexico and Spain but everywhere.

A recent study published in the New York Times found that about 60 percent of the adults in the USA nap when given the opportunity. The same study also found sleeping 15 minutes to two hours in the afternoon can reduce stress and improve alertness.

People also ask if we dress like matadors or flamenco dancers. Like many other countries, Spain is a quilt of different cultures. Although there is an official language, there are also three other widely spoken languages — gallego, catalan and basque — plus many dialects and archaic forms of Spanish.

Food, music, costumes and traditional dresses, customs and manners, all change from one region to another.

I have heard many different view points from people traveling to Spain. Some say we are very noisy and cheerful. I guess that the all-night parties in Spain are a big hit among foreigners who are not used to it.

Many big cities in Spain get their worst traffic jams during the weekends, around midnight and the very early morning hours.

Not everybody is like that, however. Somebody from Santiago de Compostela, in Galicia, may be different from somebody from Barcelona, which are over 1000 km away from each other.

Moscow High hosts frank discussion of safer sex

Tristan Trotter
Staff Writer

We spend too much time in society focusing on "what's wrong with kids these days!" Perhaps the real problem is with society itself and its tendency to lump kids under an apathetic, disinterested label. In Moscow, there are a number of young people defying the stereotype who deserve a great deal of recognition and respect for their efforts to make this world a better place.

Earlier this year, the Latah Health Education Network, in cooperation with health educators and school districts around Latah County, developed the idea for an educational presentation on AIDS and STD's aimed at young people. Funded with a grant from the State of Idaho Department of Education and the Department of Health and Welfare, the project began taking shape in January.

Under the direction of theater artist Kim Bouchard, 14 high school students from Moscow, Genesee and Potlatch chosen for the project will present the final product on Saturday at the Moscow High auditorium at 7 p.m.— free and open to the public.

Bouchard says there is not enough good stuff to say about the students' work on the project. "They function so well together and are so supportive and creative. They're all willing to take risks."

The group's emphasis is honesty — essential in dealing with typically controversial and uncomfortable topics like AIDS and STDs. "When we discussed their plan, the two things they wanted to avoid using were brainwashing and scare tactics," Bouchard said.

The group spent a lot of time educating themselves on the issue. "We went out to the North Central Health District, watched videos, listened to talks," said Bouchard. This included several personal connections, like that of an AIDS victim from Coeur d'Alene, whose 12 page written account has been a major source from which the group has drawn for material.

With Odyssey of the Mind students fix their future

Discovering the odysseys of their minds: that's what several creative groups of elementary and junior high school kids have been doing since last fall.

They have been preparing for an educational problem-solving competition developed in 1978 by a professor at Rowan College in New Jersey, whose goal was to give young people the opportunity to expand and explore their creativity.

He called the program Odyssey of the Mind. Here in Moscow, OM teams have been competing on the grade school and jr. high levels for years and doing wonderfully.

The OM challenge includes basically two problems: one long-term and one spontaneous. The long term problem requires students to accomplish a certain task by designing, building or developing a creative solution and then presenting that solution within a dramatic framework.

The spontaneous problem engages five of the seven members, and involves the posing of a question or hypothetical situation to which the students have a limited amount of time to respond.

First groups compete with teams from other schools first regionally, then on a state level. If a team takes first at state, it goes to the world competition.

In Moscow, at least three teams qualified for world competition, which will be held this June in Aimes, Iowa.

Unfortunately, the school district doesn't fund the elementary kids' trip. Winning teams from McDonald and Russel, after failed attempts to raise their own money, will be unable to go.

However, the qualifying team from the Junior High, backed by the district, will be traveling east in June, under the supervision of coach Kathy Dawes.

"This is the way learning should be," says Dawes of the OM program. "Problem solving is a part of our every day lives. The more kids practice, the better."

Austrian campus doesn't seem like real college

Mike Edwards
Contributing Writer

I attend Karl-Franzens Universitat in southeastern Austria. I arrived in Graz in March, after some classes had already started. Fortunately most all my classes did not begin until the next week.

Whereas the semester is almost over at UI, my semester does not end until late June. Half the summer I will probably have to force myself to go to class while the flowers are in bloom, the beautiful fountain cascades in Stadtpark and tourists flock to the sidewalk cafes on Herrengasse.

March 4, I attended my first official function at Uni-Graz (their abbreviation for the university). It consisted of orientation day for incoming foreign students.

The day began with a brief welcome and introduction by the university dean, who spoke German slowly and meticulously for newcomers. He discussed the origins of the university — how it grew from a small theological seminary into an educational body of 30,000.

He told us that Karl and Franz, which comprise the two portions of the university's name, represent two Hapsburg emperors who revitalized the university centuries ago. The history of Uni-Graz extends much further than that of UI. But that's all right, because the UI campus feels more like a university from an American perspective.

Following the introduction, new students filled out reams of bureaucratic paperwork. Fortunately, bottled orange juice, mineral water and marmalade-filled pastries appeared our palates.

At mid-afternoon a member of the Büro für Auslandsbeziehungen, the Uni-Graz version of the International Programs Office, took us on a brief tour of the campus. We went through the Hauptgebäude (Administration Building), a grand old complex surrounding a nice courtyard. We also visited the adjacent library.

Their library appears much more rustic than UI. Our German-speaking tour director pointed out most of the buildings in the central portion of the campus, including Uni-Mensa, one of the student restaurants, as well as the tall Sozialgeschichte building (social history) and Hygiene Institute.

Because most of the university's buildings are scattered throughout the city of Graz, the central campus can be crossed on foot in about five minutes. That is one of the biggest reasons why Uni-Graz lacks a university-style atmosphere.

University buildings mingle with cafes, restaurants and homes. A pub, bookstore and a grocery store lie near the Administration Building. The DolmetschInstitut or Institute for Foreign Language Studies, was once in a building operated by a convent.

Although it does have a copy center located in the Mensa (the Uni-Graz scaled-down version of a SUB), it offers no campus bookstore, no centralized student housing, no fraternities or sororities, no stadium and no cute, furry mascot to cheer on university sports teams that don't exist. It does, however, have a coat of arms.

I live in apartment-style housing near the train station. Some of my new friends live in dormitory-style housing near the river (they haven't discovered the concept of residence life yet, except for the bar on the ground floor of the Studentenwohnhaus).

Most foreign students congregate at the brand-new DolmetschInstitut about half a mile south of the central campus. Our typical after-hours gathering is a Wednesday night meeting at a local pub where we tend to congregate into our native-language groups and sing ethnic drinking songs like, "Oh, Whatever Happened to Poor Maggie Malone?" The Irish and Italians really liven up the place.

The logistics of academic programs at Uni-Graz is interesting. Rather than have a 100, 200, 300 and 400-level classification of classes at Uni-Graz, they are organized according to the style of lecture. Most of my classes are Vorlesungen, or lectures, through the DolmetschInstitut. I also have one Proseminar and one Seminar, regular university classes.

Vorlesungen do not appear to count towards one's degree at the university. They almost function as preparatory classes. You have to attend only when you want to and then take the final exam.

My Vorlesungen consist of classes such as German Grammar and German Idioms — classes native speakers obviously wouldn't need. Most of my classes do not offer syllabi and they do not offer test dates or requirements for passing. That is information you have to find on your own. Vorlesungen are a mixture of lecture and discussion accompanied by handouts.

Seminar and Proseminar are primarily lecture classes, and when the professor finishes, the students have a strange habit of wrapping their knuckles on the table politely. Most of my classes do not require texts or assign homework or provide quizzes, although in Seminar and Proseminar a reading list is given with a variety of reading options. The rest is up to the student to pursue on his or her own initiative. Come final time, it's important to be ready. I just hope I will be.

Spain is the delight with bullfights. This issue usually arises controversial points of view and plenty of heated discussions, especially during the first week of July, when the running of the bulls takes place in Pamplona.

The tradition of running the bulls the morning before the bullfight is not only from Pamplona, but instead is done in many towns around Spain.

Bullfights are a deeply entrenched tradition among many Spaniards, as well as many South American and other countries.

So next time I am asked if we in Spain take naps every afternoon, I could answer "Do you all drink coke and wear cowboy hats everyday in the USA?" I, however, am not going to, because I risk getting a stupid answer (or punched). I think I will just respond "no," and offer an invitation to visit Spain.

Clinton proposes buffer zones

The Clinton Administration is proposing mandatory no harvest buffer zones on all Idaho streams feeding the Snake River.

The proposal, PACFISH, imposes a "one size fits all" buffer designed to protect returning migratory fish. This proposal must survive public comment before going into effect. It is thought placing stream banks off-limits to logging will slow the decline in fish populations.

In 1992, UI published a report stating such buffers in harvested areas do not effect the numbers of returning fish. An industry statement says "spawning habitat is not an issue in Idaho, because thousands of miles of ideal habitat in timbered and wilderness drainages remain unused by returning fish each season."

The habitat is unused because commercial fishing, gill-netting and hydro-dams kill 90 percent of returning fish.

Fly fishing courses presented in May

Three fly fishing classes will be presented by the UI Enrichment Program in May.

The first, "Fly fishing — What's It About?" with instructor Dave Engerbretson, will discuss how to get started in the sport. Engerbretson is the western editor of Fly Fishing Magazine.

The class will meet May 16 from 7:30 to 10 p.m.

"Fly Tying: Get Ready for Summer Trout," will teach beginning fly tying of wet and dry flies. Instructor, Chuck Thompson, has 24 years of experience fly fishing and teaching. This class will meet Wednesdays, May 18-25 from 6:30 to 9 p.m. and May 22 from 3:30 to 6 p.m.

The final class, "Fly Fishing — Gear and Equipment," will explain everything about fly fishing gear to make becoming a successful fisherman easier. The instructor for this class is Bart Quesnell, a fishing guide for 13 years on many of the finest trout streams in the Northwest. The class will meet May 26, from 6:30 to 8 p.m.

White Water Adventure

Daredevil rafters complete homework on river

Dave Lewis
Assistant Editor

Fiddle Creek Rapid, lurking four miles below Riggins, couldn't defeat the intrepid white water daredevils rafting there Sunday.

Mike Kinziger's recreation class braved the icy river water but were blessed with sunshine sufficient to warm their nearly frozen extremities.

The river trip was required to pass the class, but the 21 participants had a great time anyway.

The Salmon River, according to the guide, is a pool and drop river. It runs relatively flat for several hundred feet then drops through a rapid into another pool.

It is good for beginners to practice on because there is ample time to prepare for the next rapid and recover from any problem encountered in the previous one.

There is a definite feeling of exhilaration achieved by a team of erstwhile novices after successfully maneuvering a raft through an exciting rapid like the one at Fiddle Creek.

Kinziger drilled his team into a perfectly tuned machine. After each successful descent his loyal paddlers would pull their paddle blades out of the water, point them toward the middle of the raft and rattle them together while yelling at the top of their lungs.

From the other rafts the oft repeated exercise was reminiscent of an ancient tribal ritual. It made the Kinziger raft the most feared participant in the nearly constant water fights.

Paris Nicholson served as guide on another raft. His would gain fame as the only boat to dump people into the water Sunday. Nicholson was named captain of the swim team. Although successfully negotiating the raging water at Chair Creek Rapid, a hole and standing wave in the infamous rapid at Fiddle Creek swamped them.

"We had some gung-ho, diehard thrill seekers wanting the biggest waves we could find," Nicholson said. "When we saw the froth at Fiddle Creek we paddled straight for it. When we got a little sideways everyone froze."

"After we quit paddling the raft sort of folded in the middle and four people were washed out by the swift water."

"We went on through the rapid and finally got everybody back into the raft in the calm water below. All we lost was two hats, but one

Ski rewards two-fold

Dave Lewis
Assistant Editor

Quick acceleration, wind blowing through your hair, gliding across the water on slats rubber mounted to your feet — it's water skiing.

Water skiing and helping others learn to water ski has been part of my outdoor recreation for many years. The admonition of "Keep your arms straight and your knees bent, don't try to stand up too soon and if you fall be sure to let go of the rope," was preached so much by me and others, it was as much a part of boating as engine noise.

Sometimes skiing has been frustrating, but it has also been greatly rewarding too. The day my son Chad learned to ski was a little of both.

Chad was eight-years-old when he first tried skiing. Since we owned just one pair of adult water skis, he had to use skis much too big for him. I solved this problem by getting into the water with him to steady his skis while he was getting ready.

Holding the skis straight until his mother pulled him up kept him from getting tired prematurely. It was not a fool-proof idea, but worked nonetheless. With every attempt, Chad was closer to success. He would stay up for ten or twenty yards, then fall. I would then swim after him staying afloat with the aid of a life-jacket.

Finally on the sixth try, Chad didn't fall and I was left floating

Falls, Close Calls, and the ones that got away in the middle of Dworshak Lake all alone. My wife pulled our brand new skier up the lake and out of sight, accompanied by our cheers of encouragement.

I didn't mind being left behind because the lake where we were skiing is narrow and my wife couldn't turn around without dumping our son or sending him up onto the rocky shoreline.

As I waited and watched for their return I remembered the first time I saw anyone try to water ski.

It was on the St. Joe River and the novice skier was Uncle Larry. I was young, so I don't remember if anyone made the speech about "arms straight, knees bent" and so forth but I will bet no one told poor Larry to release the rope when he fell. I do however, remember the outcome of Larry's first try at skiing.

When he called for the boat to pull him up, he got up just fine, but he stood up too fast and fell forward almost immediately. That's when the trouble started. Larry didn't let go of the rope and was pulled straight to the bottom of the river.

My dad soon stopped the boat and we waited for Larry to surface. When he did some seconds later, he was covered from head to foot with sea weed, freshly harvested from the bottom. After that he let the rope go when he fell.

As I bobbed around in Dworshak Lake waiting for my boat, another boat came up the lake from the other direction.

I figured they couldn't see me and I knew I was in danger. Much to my relief, however, the boat changed course and went to shore a short distance away, apparently unaware of my presence. Proof they didn't see me was quickly evident, because seconds after shutting off the engine someone yelled "Hey lets go skinny-dipping," and they all did just that.

I was painfully aware of the stigma attached to voyeurism in our society so I turned away from the tanned, sleek, almost otter-like bodies as they slipped out of their clothes.

As I said before, water skiing is sometimes frustrating. I don't know what I would have done if any of the skinny-dippers would have been female.

WATER

was a very good hat. It was the only one I owned."

None of the other boats had any problems although all passengers were soaked and getting cold before we reached the take out.

A warming fire and a fine barbecue provided the finale for the outing. Char-grilled hamburgers were good competition for the sausages but could not compare with Shawn Liermann's potato salad.

While standing around the fire waiting for supper, Nicholson retold his swimming experience in Fiddle Creek Rapid. Even though he claimed going through the rapid sans raft was no big deal, he admitted, "It's something that I wouldn't tell my mom about."

Campus recycling could save money, energy

Dave Lewis
Assistant Editor

Recycling could save more than money at UI. If a campus wide program is put into effect resources and landfill space will be saved.

The cost of disposing waste at UI is $21,000 every month. Yet we still recycle only 15 percent of our waste. UI student Marya George said, "A realistic goal is 50 percent. Many states, Washington for example, has a goal of a mandatory 50 percent recycling by 1995."

George believes if campus wide recycling increases from the current 15 percent to 50 percent the garbage disposal cost would decrease to $13,000 per month. "The amount would actually be less," she says, "because of money received for materials recycled."

The waste disposal bill could be decreased if the original consumption could be reduced. Students should send a message to fast food stores by buying only those food items packaged in environment friendly wrapping. According to the Yale University "Green Cup Guide," Americans use 190 pounds of plastic annually, 60 percent of which is packaging that is discarded immediately after opening.

The following are a few ideas designed to save resources.

Substantial amounts of electricity and water could be saved by shortening the length of showers. Sharing a shower with a friend is environmentally friendly, too.

Use a reusable mug for coffee. This saves energy by reducing the number of paper or Styrofoam cups used and the landfill will never miss them. A discount is given for using refillable cups.

Many pounds of paper could be saved by banning full campus mailing, using E-mail is also more energy efficient.

Another paper saving concept concerns photocopying. Copy center employees and teachers should be encouraged to use both sides of paper. George plans to personally place instructions on all copiers capable of two sided copying. If you have such a copier in your office save her the walk by providing such instructions now.

A recycling receptacle should be wherever there is a trash can and be labeled clearly. If you already have a recycling container nearby please use them. Be sure items put in it are recyclable material.

A creative way to educate the public about recycling is to place signs where a "captive audience" will read them, in toilet stalls.

Instead of filling up the landfill with waste paper, use it for animal bedding where it would be stomped into the manure and become compost and eventually fertilizer.

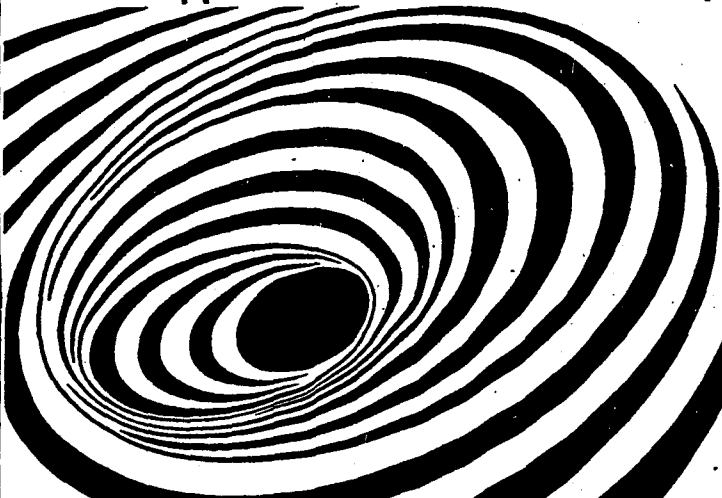

Instead of grabbing a paper towel to dry hands or to clean kitchen counters, use a reusable cloth towel.

Further energy saving could be realized simply by saving elevators for those who need them.

English instructor Ed Hughes told his class, "The world is just a big terrarium. We will never have any more water than we have right now. We should impact the process of its use with that thought always in mind."

Athlete scholarship information ready

Over 100,000 collegiate athletic scholarships are available each year to male and female high school and junior college student athletes. Contrary to popular belief, students don't have to be all-state to qualify. Much of this money goes unused. A new publication with forms, sample letters and tables of factual information is available to student athletes. It takes them step by step through the important process of getting an athletic scholarship and includes college and conference listings.

State games visit Moscow, UI campus

POCATELLO, IDAHO — Look out Moscow, here we come! This is the roar of many Idaho athletes as they pack their bags and train for the First Security Games.

This year Moscow will host five events, July 7 through July 10, as part of the First Security Games. The events are basketball for boys, men, girls and women; junior golf; sand volleyball; soccer and a biathlon.

The First Security Games are part of the National Congress of State Games as sanctioned by the U.S. Olympic Committee.

Bob Beals, games commissioner for the Moscow events, commented on the work being done in the Inland Empire area, "the committee is excited about these selected events coming to Moscow for northern Idaho and eastern Washington athletes."

According to Beals, "we are similar to Pocatello in that during the summer we have many athletic facilities available for competition."

Moscow is looking forward to hosting the athletes and wishes to extend a welcome to participants of the Games.

Inland Empire residents are encouraged to participate or watch the First Security Games events.

'School is out' for summer

Its time to get out from behind desk and stop writing about sports and instead ... Just do it.

National Park for intense backpacking.

Other quality hours will be spent on the Gallatin and Yellowstone rivers with my fly rod in hand. On the same

Dead Writers' Society
Matthew D. Andrew

There is probably not too many people around less happy than I that summer is a week away. A good portion of the faculty is probably glad the day is just around the corner, the people of Moscow are looking to inherit their town back — at least temporarily.

The only people not glad that this day is coming is probably our parents. My sister is probably not too excited for having to put up with me, my brother and her friend. I think she'll mainly have a problem with Ted and me though.

This summer I'll have the experience to live in Big Sky, Mont., where I will spend a large portion of my time participating in the sports I like instead of writing about them. That will be a blessed change.

My plans for this summer are the only thing that have been keeping me going for about the last four weeks or so.

I will be spending time in the back country of Montana and Wyoming and getting down into the heart of Yellowstone rivers I'll be practicing my white water rafting skills and hopefully learn to kayak.

The point is, if the resources are available such as these are — use them. I've had the chance to do it often and it has always been a great challenge and source for entertainment and enjoyment.

There are so many sources that are available to be maximized. Instead of sitting around this summer and, after work complaining that you are bored and drinking beer, take a change of pace. Take some risks. It will be the only way to learn things about them.

I already know I enjoy doing this but now I have the opportunity, mostly because I made it available to myself, to maximize my satisfaction.

Instead of road biking, I'm going to try mountain biking, instead of road running, I'm testing the off-road terrain.

It is a relief for me to get out from behind this desk on beautiful days — like the ones we have been having — and doing something else for a change. No more listening to people play a pick up basketball game, I'll start it. No more having to roller blade when I leave the Argonaut office at 10 p.m.

Now I'll be able to participate in these activities during the daylight hours. It will be good to get out and add to my experiences — learn more about things I know and investigate things I've never experienced.

The summer and the things it brings are superior to nothing else — except for maybe the winter and the skiing it brings. Right now, we need to get out of this transitional season and start getting things rolling.

All I can do is dream right now. Last year at the end of May, two friends and myself headed out on a backpacking trip in Yellowstone Park with our destination as Shoshone Lake. We made it through four feet of snow. That was the reward we were able to gather. We now have a memorable experience where we hiked through hell, ill-prepared because the forest ranger said there was a possibility of snow.

But hey, you probably don't care about my summer, I'm just writing this for that very reason. If you are lucky you learned something, if not, too bad.

No, this really does have some value. I've been realizing lately that it is time for me to slow down and smell the roses. I've been going to school and working to go to school. Now I just want to do something that I really want to do.

Anyway, I'm sure that there are other people who are just as excited to get away from the Palouse — whatever that word means — and start doing something other than school. Instead, take time to smell the roses, and maybe make some money for the next school year. Most of all, play things as they come.

Remember though, when the time comes and the beer tastes good — Don't Drink and Drive.

Last fall, the Vandal football team hosted an undefeated Boston University team in the quarterfinals of the I-AA playoffs.

It was a match made in heaven for sports promoters — or was it?

The game drew only 8,800 fans, and it wasn't even close to Christmas vacation where many UI athletic events are lucky to draw 25 people.

There may be a savior in the making, however.

The Idaho Student Athletic Board, originally organized by Athletic Director Pete Liske and ASUI President John Marble, has existed since the fall semester but has had little effect on UI athletics.

Times are changing.

Liske was the assistant athletic director at the University of Washington before taking the A.D. position at Idaho. He ran a similar program at UW to promote students' awareness of campus sports.

UI Sophomore Mike Nelson, the public-address announcer for the volleyball team, is now the president of ISAB, overseen by Tom Burman, Director of Marketing and Promotions for UI athletics.

"The sole purpose is to increase student involvement with Idaho athletics in all phases, particularly marketing promotions," said Nelson. "We want to know what the students on campus want to see."

"We want to know why people don't come out to the games and how we can improve the atmosphere at the games to get more people out."

Nelson praises Liske and Burman for allowing the ISAB to be an entity at Idaho.

"Next year, especially with the tuition raises, we're going to have a hard time packing people into the dome," Nelson said. "So, the only way we're really going to be able to do this is that we start catering to the students more."

Shelly Werner, choreographer and visual artist, have also played instrumental roles in the presentation's development, each offering their expertise. "But it's the kids who really did it," Bouchard said.

The presentation is a series of "pieces" that connect, or blend, together, with all 14 players on stage the entire time. "The students use dance, ritual, song, band music, creative movement and personal poetry," Bouchard said.

Saturday's performance will function, in part, as a review for administrators and the city council, and will determine whether any changes need to be made before the project travels to schools and other educational arenas.

Bouchard is positive about the prospective response. "I think they'll appreciate it on a lot of levels: the gut reaction people get from material that is handled well; the general reaction to music and words, and the intellectual reaction to the issue itself."

The most unsettling statistic relating to the growth of AIDS and STDs today, according to Barb Kirschner, a health official who worked with the group, is for years in Idaho, there were no reported cases of AIDS in the 15-19 age group — until last year, when that zero jumped dramatically to 9.

Bouchard attributes this phenomenon to our system's failure to deal openly and accurately with that age bracket. "I hope this project makes people realize that kids talking to other kids is the most effective way to handle these issues," said Bouchard.

And these 14 students have formed the perfect artistic ensemble to do just that.

daughter Molly is on the Russel team and son Michael on the Junior High team, are equally enthusiastic. John coaches Molly's team, and Lori defines her role as that of the "morally supportive gopher."

"It's been a fantastic learning experience for the kids," she says.

The jr. high team's long term problem was to design and build at least three vehicles to accomplish specific tasks and, at the end of each course, break a balloon target.

The team constructed their vehicles out of Plexiglas and super glue, and succeeded in popping 4 balloons at regionals and 3 at state. Their presentation has a medieval theme in which the vehicles become knights, jousting back and forth across the course. Elaborate scenery and costumes, also built by the kids, are part of the overall effect.

Michael Danahy, Andy Dawes, Jeremy Wolfe, Miriam Seegmiller, Jeremy Guy, Justin Horn and Brian Vandergrift are the seven Junior High School team members.

"They've really learned to work with each other's strengths and communicate well," says Dawes. "It's amazing how much they've learned."

A big round of applause to these kids, who are meeting the challenge to expand their minds and creativity.

According to Nelson, next year the athletic department is going to spend more money on students than on the regular attendees.

For example, the ISAB assisted in the quest for new basketball seats — and got them.

The new $400,000 bleachers will replace the wooden ones on the south side of the Kibbie Dome. They will seat up to 2,000 more people and create a more friendly environment for Vandal fans and a more hostile environment for Vandal foes. The old stands were sold to Lewis and Clark State College.

Nelson said the primary goal of the bleachers is "to pack" the fans.

He said the long term goal is to dramatically increase attendance, not just at football or men's basketball games, but at events like track meets and women's basketball.

"The athletes on this campus deserve a little more respect than they're getting," added Nelson.

ISAB consists of a president, vice-president and five committees for football, basketball, volleyball and men's and women's olympic sports. These people are responsible for communicating to residence halls, fraternities and sororities.

"We're here to get the student feedback as a liaison to the athletic department to see what people want to see."

Currently, there are vacancies for some positions on the ISAB. If interested, call Tom Burman at the sports information desk at 885-0200, or Mike Nelson at Kappa
