UI loses out-of-state revenue

Joa Harrison

UI students walk down the rampway in the UCC building. For the first time since 1985, UI has seen a significant decline in the number of new out-of-state freshmen enrolling in classes.

Number of new, non-resident freshmen enrolling drops by 23 percent—staggering tuition increase seen as the cause

Shelby Dopp

Even though the UI has set another enrollment record, the number of new, non-resident freshmen registering at the UI this fall has dropped sharply—by 23 percent, according to university officials.

Some preliminary figures show that, if out-of-state enrollment had remained stable and tuition had not been raised, UI could have taken in an additional $100,000 in non-resident tuition revenue this fall alone.

Numbers of new, out-of-state freshmen attending the university this fall dropped from last year's 484 to just 374.

The number of out-of-state students has been consistently on the rise since 1985 until 1993 saw a slight decline—three percent—in non-resident enrollment. However, 1994 fall registration has seen the most significant decline in many years.

"We predicted a dramatic decline in out-of-state freshman last spring when the board approved an increase in out-of-state tuition and fees to $7,000," said George Simmons, vice provost of academic affairs, in a prepared statement.

Incoming out-of-state freshmen are currently paying $5,962 this year with the remainder of the tuition increase be phased in next fall when new, non-resident freshman will be paying $7,000. UI Registrar Matt Telin also believes the decrease can be directly attributed to the tuition increases.

Continuing non-resident students, however, will not feel the tuition increases as drastically as the new out-of-state students. Students who have attended the university prior to 1992 pay $2,508 per semester while students who enrolled in 1992 pay $2,708. Students who registered in the fall of 1993 must pay $2,898 each semester. This is part of the tier system started by the university in 1992, according to Jane Button, UI administration accountant in Business and Accounting.

Non-Resident Enrollment

The longer a student attends the university the less the increase those students will face, Button said. "Eventually (all) non-resident students will end up paying the same rates."

Senate strikes back at Marble

Adam Gardels

Another blow has been struck in an apparent ongoing political battle between ASUI President John Marble and the student senate. The Senate is forcing Marble to issue an apology to all campus living groups following a closed executive meeting two weeks ago.

Marble leveled a blast at the student senate last spring when he said there would be no significant change in student representation if the senators all left the next day. Although a few senators were exempted from his remarks, most were caught off guard.

Marble also accused senators of failing to perform the jobs they were elected to do. He noted several senators who neglected to attend committee meetings, board meetings and senate pre-sessions. He also criticized senators for planning after-hours parties involving alcohol.

Students familiar with ASUI politics believe resentment remaining from last spring's attack was a strong motivation for this latest round of political bashing. Senators, however, took an oath of silence in the executive meeting and refuse to discuss anything said during the executive session.

The cause of the controversy? Marble reportedly failed to meet the number of office hours required of him this summer, but says he is sorry. "I feel badly for not making those hours," he said.

The senate was required to hold an executive session—sealed off from the public and media—to deal with Marble's apology because it was a personnel matter.

In his apology, Marble noted he was expected to "serve 64 office hours per month during the summer." Marble was required to visit his office over the summer in order to be "accessible and working on ASUI business."

Marble said he could not completely fulfill his duties as president this summer because of a chance to serve in an internship. However, Marble said he refused pay for one period he did not serve and repaid $265.63 for another period he did not serve.

Vice President Allison Touchstone reportedly noted Marble's absence and communicated it to the senate. Touchstone was unavailable for comment, but both Senator Sean Wilson and Marble deny the meeting was a result of a senatorial conspiracy.

"We dealt with everything," Marble said. "I didn't view any conspiracy at all."

Both Wilson and Marble refused to discuss any specifics of the closed session.

Living groups should expect Marble's apology to be mailed to them by Wednesday.

Wheatland Express free for students

Joey Wellman

Need to charter a limousine or trolley—or the very least, a bus? Or perhaps a way of traveling around town or to and from Pullman?

In any case, the Wheatland Express offers a variety of services to fit just about any need for transportation.

About six years ago, the number of cooperative classes offered to students by University of Idaho and Washington State University started to increase. A need for a transit service between the communities was created.

In its third year of service, the Wheatland Express—which is funded by joint effort of both universities—has opened its services to all students, faculty, staff and residents.

"One thing that needs to get out is the fact that student, faculty and staff of UI and WSU, with a picture ID, can ride the shuttle for free," said Wheatland Express owner Peg Motley.

For those not affiliated with either university, the fares are 50 cents in town or $1.50 for a lift to Pullman.

A 20 voucher booklet brings the cost for rides to Pullman down to one dollar. Booklets and schedules are available at Ticket Express, Moscow Food Co-op and the Vandal Card office in the UI Wallace Complex.

"We are just hoping students can understand that they can ride for free," said Motley. "It can give them a chance to explore towns and check out the universities without expense."

The shuttle runs from approximately 6:30 a.m. to 7:30 p.m. weekdays and from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. on Saturdays.

According to Motley, "The shuttle makes short loops around both downtown areas, but the primary basis is for the universities."

Connections can also be made with Moscow Public Transit and Pullman Transit. Bicycles are welcome on the bus and airport service is available upon request.

The Wheatland Express also charters limousines, a trolley and buses. "Say a dorm hall wants to go to a cruise on Lake Coeur d'Alene—they could charter one of our buses," said Motley. "We also have two limousines which are frequently used for weddings, birthdays and anniversaries. We even charter a trolley car." As each trip is different, prices vary for chartering.

Anyone interested in chartering can call 334-2200.

Diabetes clinics offered

Pullman Hospital hopes to curb complications

Sam Woodbury
Staff

The Pullman Memorial Hospital Diabetes Education Services holds support group meetings for those suffering from by diabetes throughout the Palouse.

The support group meetings take place at Pullman Memorial Hospital on the first Wednesday of every month from 7-8:30 p.m. The size of the group fluctuates from month to month but is typically around 20 people of all ages. The meetings are directed by Suzanne Lambeth, the coordinator for the group.

Topics are discussed in an informal manner and are at the discretion of the group. "People like to exchange articles and share information that they are concerned about," said Lambeth. "Food is a common topic."

According to Lambeth, some members of the group come regularly, others less frequently. Approximately one-fourth of the participants come from the University of Idaho or Washington State University.

The Diabetes Education Services also offers classes. The Diabetes Self-Management Clinic is held four times a year. During the course, the clinic meets twice a week for five weeks and includes a wide dissemination of information concerning diabetes.

The other class—entitled Empowerment—is intended to assist people in developing the discipline required in managing their diabetes.

"This course is intended to help people who often say 'This is what I want to do but I don't seem to be getting there,'" said Lambeth. This course is offered twice a year and meets once a week for six weeks. The Diabetes Self Management Clinic runs $375 and is covered by most insurance companies. The Empowerment course is $45.

People have been aware of diabetes for centuries. Arteus—a Greek physician who lived during the second century A.D.—was the first person to identify and name the disease. It wasn't until the nineteenth century that diabetes became associated with the pancreas after a series of experiments with its removal and a follow-on case of diabetes. Until the discovery of insulin in 1921 by Drs. Banting and Best, diabetes was essentially a fatal disease. Insulin is a chemical compound that the pancreas manufactures to break down glucose and carbohydrates.

Diabetes has two classifications. Type I—or juvenile diabetes—is the more severe of the two and is usually diagnosed in children and young adults. People afflicted with this disorder must give themselves multiple shots of insulin every day. Type I diabetes occurs when the body's immune system over-reacts when fighting a disease and destroys the insulin-producing cells in the pancreas. Most cases of juvenile diabetes, however, are believed to be passed down from generation to generation.

According to an article in the September 22 edition of the Spokesman Review, a study performed by Dr. Massimo Trucco of the University of Pittsburgh suggested that a virus may trigger juvenile diabetes. If the virus is identified, a vaccination could possibly be developed.

Type II diabetes occurs after age 30 and is often a result of obesity. Many people with Type II diabetes do not have to inject insulin and, in most cases, need only correctly manage their diets. In Type II diabetes, the pancreas still produces insulin, but the body rejects it.

Both types of diabetics have the demanding chore of maintaining their blood sugar level through an extensive monitoring process that requires the regular taking of blood samples.

Diabetics often suffer from complications affecting eyesight, the nervous system, kidneys and the cardiovascular system. Thirty percent of Type I diabetics have experienced kidney failure. Diabetes is the leading cause of non-traumatic amputations, and are also subject to a higher risk of heart disease. These characteristics are rapidly diminishing due to medical advances made in controlling the disease. Because diabetics now have a greater access to modern health care, they are often better prepared to prevent complications.

The Pullman Memorial Hospital Diabetes Education Services can be reached at (509) 332-2541.

Universities do part for planet

Zach Craig-Works

Recycling is not something new to the University of Idaho. For the past four years, the Recycling/Solid Waste Program has been reducing university waste by recycling and reusing materials.

According to program coordinator Jerry Martin, the program saves the University about $180,000 per year in waste disposal fees. This is done through on-campus recycling facilities and by checking waste for recyclable and reusable materials.

"There's also an environmental value," says Martin, adding that it is difficult to assess how much this saves.

The program started in 1990 as a student-run group. "Now," says Martin "it's grown to the point where we have myself—the coordinator—and a staff." The program has a staff of ten, including student workers.

The program also helps the community through its recycling efforts. "We gather various household-type items or reusable items that people throw away," Martin says. "The items are reused in the community."

According to Martin, the program is also collecting used coats for the "Coats for Folks" program. This program collects old—but still usable—winter coats and redistributes them to people who need them.

Last year the program recycled 406 tons of materials—up more than 100 percent from the year before which saw 198 tons recycled.

"For every ton of material you gather, that's one less ton you have lying around," says Martin.

Despite the great increase, Martin says the program is only able to recycle 30 percent of all recyclable materials. However, since Idaho does not require the University to have a recycling program, Martin says it is a very good percentage.

On the 550 stops the program's trucks make every week, about 1/3 of the recyclables are salvaged from dumpsters. The trucks have three routes they follow: office, residential and solid waste pickup.

Right now, the program is in the process of refitting its collection facilities to expand them. Martin says "They'll be out before the snow flies."

The program has 250 indoor collection sites around campus, and outdoor collection sites at Wallace Complex, Gault-Upham, Theophilus Tower and various other office buildings.

Indoor sites can be found in common locations like any copy center, the Student Union Building lobby and the first floor of the Administration Building. Each site handles different types of materials while some only handle one type.

The program's outdoor recycle containers conditions vary from cracked and broken brown wooden boxes for cardboard behind Wallace to a small concrete bunker near the dumpster with various plastic cans—each for a different material next to the Early Childhood Learning Center.

Recyclers should look for the "UI Recycle Station" logo and accompanying instructions to find out what goes where.

Washington State University has had its own recycling program in place for the past five years. According to WSU recycling director Wayne Gash, their program recycled 1055 tons of material last year. Gash says the recyclables come from the students and the normal university operations.

The WSU program is also a money-saver. Gash says it costs the university $143 per ton to have waste hauled away by Pullman Disposal but just $108 per ton to recycle it.

However, both universities' programs pale in comparison to the recycling program at Humboldt State University, in Arcata, California. Humboldt began its program in 1975 as the first university newspaper recycling program in California. In 1987, a student group started a campus recycling program and took over the university's recycling program. By 1992, Humboldt was selected to design and implement a model university recycling program for other schools across the country.

Although Humboldt is a small school—about 7,200 students—its recycling program has a staff of 12 to 15 students a year. Humboldt's program has expanded from only a material pick-up and processing to a recycling education program.

According to Mark Kennedy, recycling education director, the program educates local elementary students in recycling, prints a recycling newsletter and puts on various recycling and composting workshops around their community. The program tries to incorporate creative solutions to help with recycling. One solution is their two-man "eco-cycle"—a tandem bicycle used to pick up materials.

According to Kennedy, Humboldt University produces 1200 tons of waste per year. Forty-five percent of that total waste is kept out of the landfill through recycling and waste reduction. An estimated twelve to fifteen tons of waste are eliminated just through simple prevention practices.

Waste prevention practices include a program called CAPP (Cannot use Paper, Plastic or Styrofoam) which focuses on the financial and environmental benefits of using reusable cups. Another waste prevention program called POWER (Progressive Office Waste Reduction) involves workshops on how to reduce waste in university offices.

"We work closely with the city program," Kennedy said. The program helps the community by doing everything from using yard waste as compost for local farms to turning cafeteria food waste into hog feed. The Humboldt program also collects reusable household items from dorms, and gives the collection to local charities for distribution.

Humboldt's extensive recycling program is funded by both the university and through student fees. All revenue generated through recycling activities is returned to the students to decide how to invest it.

out-of-state freshmen, the university has counted 11,730 students registered for fall classes—a 1.6 percent increase over last fall's record of 11,543.

"The largest part of the number comes from continuing UI students," Telin said.

The university has counted 10,044 students registered here on the Moscow campus—another record for UI. The remaining number of UI students are registered at the university's resident instruction centers in Coeur d'Alene, Boise, Idaho Falls and Twin Falls.

The number of undergraduate transfer students has increased by nearly four percent. The number of minority students has also increased with 542 students currently attending the university. Males make up 58 percent of the main campus student body while females total just 42 percent of the on-campus population.

Freshmen entering the university directly from high school are showing improved statistics. The class of 1998 has an average high school grade point average of 3.32 and an average ACT composite score of 23.1—approximately three points above the national average, Simmons said in a prepared statement.

Pregnancy test targets ruminates

Dennis Sasse
Staff

Dr. R. Garth Sasser, a University of Idaho professor of animal science, is developing one of the first home pregnancy test kits for ruminates—a ruminant is a hoofed animal which chews cud.

Sasser said he started with the idea of a home pregnancy test kit for cattle.

"My goal is a paper test strip that is placed in a serum-filled receptacle, and the serum wicks up the strip. It is similar to litmus paper or human pregnancy test kits. Color forms if the animal is pregnant and doesn't if it is not," said Sasser.

The paper strips only take about three minutes to give a result. Sasser said the strips will have to be inexpensive to compete with other methods of pregnancy testing.

The test strips are under development. Dr. Sasser receives "phase one" grant funding from the Small Business Innovative Research branch of the U.S. Department of Agriculture. Phase One funding grants are used to prove the feasibility of a project.

Sasser said, "I'm in the fourth month of funding and it looks promising. We have to wrap up by mid-November. I started last fall when I got the grant. The business office is here in Moscow but the lab is in Pullman."

Sasser feels that he has proved the feasibility of his test and now needs to get "phase two" grants for research and development of the strips.

The test he markets now needs to be done in a lab. Sasser hopes to change that.

Dr. David White is a research support technician working for Sasser. White currently does the majority of the testing.

According to White, "It started as pure research—the protein used for a marker is produced by the placenta." Now the protein marker—called Pregnancy Specific Protein B or PSPB—is measured in the lab using a technique called PSPB RIA. The lab test measures radioactive iodine. The level of iodine indicates a positive or negative result.

Current pregnancy tests have drawbacks Sasser hopes to avoid. He said ultrasound tests are very accurate but the equipment is costly. Rectal palpation—or the "long-arm" test—is effective after 35 days. The "long arm" test involves a technician reaching up the animal's rectum to feel the uterus.

"We have a seven-day advantage and higher accuracy rates than a palpator," Sasser said while referring to the fact that his test is over 95 percent accurate 28 days after pregnancy.

White also said, "We do pregnancy testing on ruminates and can tell if (it) is pregnant, a majority of the samples are for elk." White said elk are raised mostly for their antlers which are shipped to Asia and used as aphrodisiacs.

Dr. Sasser moved to Moscow in 1967 and started teaching reproductive physiology as an annual course in 1968.

"Students interested in physiology with an emphasis on reproduction have lots of opportunity at UI and if you want more expertise you can go next door (WSU). We've formed a group called UI/WSU Reproductive Biology Group to meet regularly and listen to invited speakers or campus faculty," said Sasser.

Engineering expands

Joey Wellman
Staff

The State Board of Education voted last Thursday to expand the number of engineering programs currently offered in southern Idaho.

The University of Idaho will be allowed to offer four-year civil and mechanical engineering programs in its Boise extension center.

Boise-area businesses have been clamoring for more engineering programs in Idaho's state capital. Boise's recent explosion of growth in the electronics industry has left it short of qualified applicants for engineering jobs.

Boise State University currently offers only a four-year electrical engineering program.

The board's decision takes a step toward reducing this problem.

"Students would be able to earn their degree without leaving Boise," said Kathy Barnard, director of UI Communications.

UI requested an additional $930,000 for fiscal year 1996 to further expand the engineering programs offered in Boise. BSU wanted $1 million.

According to Barnard, the growth would call for eight full-time teachers, two staff positions and some part-time positions.

Smoking may help relieve depression

College Press Service
CARBONDALE, IL—Depressed people may smoke, in part, to relieve their depression, says a Southern Illinois University professor.

David G. Gilbert, a professor of psychology and nationally recognized expert on smoking, says some people find it harder to quit smoking because nicotine affects them like an anti-depressant.

Gilbert, who heads the smoking and psychophysiology laboratory at SIUC, said his studies indicate that nicotine normalizes activity in the right side of the brain where negative moods and depression seem to originate.

When depression-prone people quit smoking they lose the lift that nicotine gives them and which their own bodies can't produce, Gilbert theorizes. After withdrawal, they return to a "normal" state that is more depressed than other ex-smokers. That puts them at a greater risk for relapse, he says.

Gilbert is testing his hypotheses in a five-year study of 120 female smokers funded by a $1 million grant from the National Institute for Drug Abuse. After completing the study, which is in its second year, Gilbert will compare the data with results from a smaller NIDA-funded investigation of male smokers he conducted a few years ago.

In particular, the data will enable Gilbert to examine gender differences in smoking. "Some of the literature suggests that females may smoke more to reduce tension and depression, while men seem to do it to improve concentration and alertness," he says.

Radical pro-lifers face consequences

Last year was the 20th anniversary of Roe v. Wade, the landmark decision protecting the right of women to terminate pregnancy before the third trimester. Since then, activists on both sides of the fence have been vociferous in defense of or against the decision.

This year has brought an increased presence of radical pro-life actions. Two doctors have been murdered over the past eighteen months, along with one doctor's companion. Mail threats are on the rise. A King County police officer earlier this month was accused of pulling over a couple and then forcing them to follow him to a church compound after he learned that they were on their way to get an abortion. They were harangued for hours before they were allowed to leave, according to the couple.

Frightening incidents like these have occurred with increasing frequency, especially in urban areas. However, the tactics of a radical few have not been limited to the cities of America.

Last October, Dr. J.B. Britzmann received a threatening letter concerning his performing of abortions. Britzmann, who was the only doctor north of Boise to perform abortions in Idaho, turned the letter over to the FBI, who after a brief investigation arrested Michael Kyle Jones on charges of violating federal laws by sending threatening mail. Jones pled guilty to the charges Monday morning in Boise. He faces a maximum sentence of five years and/or $250,000 in fines.

Perhaps this case, if successfully prosecuted, will make an example of Mr. Jones and send a message to some of the extremists who bring shame to the pro-life movement. Even though many prominent figures in the pro-life organizations have denounced the actions of activists like Jones, the radical underground of pro-life movements shows no signs of fading away.

In fact, the opposite is true. The FBI has been investigating the possibility that these terrorists are communicating, and preparing to form a nationwide network to spread the violence and fear they have, to date, generated.

Abortion is a delicate issue, and was even before Roe v. Wade was decided. Passions run high on every side of the issue, and consensus is rarely reached. Whether or not it is a question to be decided politically has yet to be resolved.

However, it is quite clear that the issue will not be solved by terrorists who feel themselves outside the American system of laws. History demonstrates that violence and fear only beget more of the same.

The ends do not, and can not, justify the means. Perhaps Michael Jones' trial will proclaim that message loud and clear.

UI recycling could be better

The University of Idaho recycles about 30 percent of its recyclable waste. It could be better.

Chris Miller

I usually drink a pop in my 10:30 class. I need to, like many of my student colleagues. Last week, for some unknown, inner-conscious reason I decided to not toss the aluminum leftovers in the trash can on the way out the door. I chose to recycle it.

I packed the can to my next class, looking for a recycle bin as I went. I didn't find one. I went to my next class, still packing the can, but still didn't find a receptacle. I almost threw it away in a trash can—it seemed everyone else had, judging by the cans already in there—but held off and packed it to the Student Union. There, I found a recycle bin.

My point is, on three different occasions, I nearly trashed the can.

After I started looking, I found several recycle bins for aluminum in the Student Union, two near the Vandal Cafe and several in the basement area. There was a paper recycle bin on the second floor study area and I saw three pop cans in one garbage can. The golf course has a recycle bin at the 19th Hole. At least half of the contents were trash and the receptacle looked like it had at one time been garbage itself. There's one aluminum recycle bin near the library and a cardboard box serves as a bin outside the English Writing Lab. There's a couple hiding in the Administration Building, but you have to know where to go.

Basically, I had a hard time finding places to recycle. I really had to look. I think I should have been tripping over them left and right.

Unfortunately, Jerry Martin, coordinator of the UI Recycling/Solid Waste Program, says his staff of ten spends a lot of their time going after recyclable materials that are already in the dumpster. This is completely ridiculous. No one should have to separate aluminum from banana peels.

To effectively recycle, one of two things must be done: recycling must be made easy, or recycling must become mandatory.

Easy recycling is the healthiest answer. If given a choice—a recycle bin or a garbage can—I believe most people would rather toss it into the recycle bin. According to Martin, there used to be an aluminum recycle bin near the University Classroom Center until it mysteriously disappeared. A staff member brought it back one day and it looked as if it had been run over by a truck. That's a main reason why other recycle bins aren't all over campus—they aren't in a controlled area, like the Student Union or in offices where someone will look over them.

If we have to chain them down, then chain them down.

The other choice is a government mandate, which at this time the state of Idaho does not have. Washington, by the way, does. I'd hate to see a mandate detailing recycling goals, but as Martin put it when describing the standard psyche, "If I don't have to do it, I'm not gonna do it."

So what can be done?

You and I can pack cans around. We can take an extra step to toss paper in the proper bins. Martin could try to find a way to get more recycle bins around, and litter the campus with them, even if it means chaining them down. The university isn't some faceless entity—it's all of us and the most important thing the "university" can do is to simply think before it tosses "garbage" in the garbage.

According to the recycle report on page three, we're doing pretty well. But it could be better.

Problems with unemployment complicate life

Jennifer Swift

I have had it. If I have to submit one more resume, dress up for one more interview, or smile intelligently at someone who already decided to hire his or her cousin, I will scream. It is not that I'm looking for some big important job, or even a semi-important job, I just want to pay my rent. I have interviewed for every position that I am remotely qualified to do, and even some that I am not qualified for. Every time I finish an interview, I am positive that I have the job. How could I not? The interviewer practically offers it to me on the spot.

Then, the phone call. Or, even worse, no phone call at all. I hate that. I went to all that trouble of retyping my resume, getting dressed up, going down for the interview and no one can find the time to give me one stupid phone call. When I was working full time I didn't have this much trouble. Now that I have decided to come back to school no one wants to hire me. What does it take? I am not related to anyone in the entire state of Idaho, I hardly know anyone here and I am not willing to sleep with someone for a paycheck. I guess those three disqualifies me from employment in the Moscow-Pullman area.

The few people I do know seem to have found a job just fine. I am wondering how long they had to wait for these jobs though. I know that once they found them, they haven't left. I moved to this area in late July in the hopes of finding a job before everyone came back. So much for that theory.

It is now the end of September and I have just enough money to pay October rent. After that, I will only have ten dollars left to my name, literally. I have officially reached panic stage. I lay awake at night wondering how I can make ten dollars last an entire semester. Even if I only ate Ramen noodles and drank water, I still don't think it is possible.

Then I have the problem of paying rent, electric, phone, and I know I will run out of shampoo eventually. I have a decent amount of pennies but they will only buy the shampoo. I know because I rolled them last night.

At twenty-five, I no longer have the option of calling Mom and Dad to come to the rescue. I know, because I tried that too. I heard this eerie laugh on the other end of the line, then some nonsense about it being my decision to go back to school so therefore it was my problem. I reminded them of the fact that someday I will have to take care of them and I've already started looking into nursing homes.

My older brother is no help either. He just quit his job and was planning on trying to get Mom and Dad to help him until he finds another one. Why couldn't he have just held on until I had paid November rent? That's the thanks I get for being such a wonderful sister.

It has come to the point that I am applying for jobs in fast-food restaurants. I didn't even work in one when I was in high school. It is humiliating to be interviewed by someone who is seven years younger than me and still has severe acne.

The one benefit I would gain by working in one of those places is the food discounts (and the spiffy uniforms, of course). This way, I could stuff my face with saturated fat, wear a humiliating uniform and only earn $4.90 per hour. Boy, am I glad I am a college student. I knew I came back to school for a reason.

It is either fast food or prostitution. This is something I seriously considered one night after my second pot of coffee. Somehow, in a caffeine haze, it all made sense. I would only have to work a few hours a week, I could set my own salary, and I could even get my own business card. "Jennifer Swift, Body Language Interpreter". Ideal, until I confronted the whole moral thing. Too bad, it was a great idea.

I guess I don't have any more options. McDonald's, here I come. I only hope I don't run into anyone I know, or anyone I want to get to know, while wearing my paper hat and asking "Do you want fries with that?"

Proposition One not hateful

It seems to me that the Argonaut is coming out against Proposition One. I would just like to see both sides of the issue covered fairly. I don't see this law changing our libraries or what we teach in higher education courses. It is not going to drastically change the way things are now. What it is going to do is ensure that homosexuals do not get special minority rights in the future here in Idaho.

If we were to give homosexuals minority rights because of their lifestyle choice, then that opens the door to polygamists, smokers, hunters, religious organizations, and everyone else who wants to have special rights just because of their lifestyle. Should a homosexual be hired over another person just because he is a homosexual and wants minority hiring privileges? Should homosexuals be able to legalize their relationships and adopt children? Should it be taught as an acceptable alternative lifestyle in public schools? These are the issues Proposition One addresses.

We do discriminate in our society against things we feel are harmful. Just in the last few years smokers have probably felt discriminated against because of the laws that have been passed that allow them to smoke only in certain areas. If a society feels that homosexual behavior is harmful and parents don't want their children taught that it is OK in public schools, then they have a right to pass a law that way.

I do not feel that Proposition One promotes hate. A person's lifestyle is their own business. But giving people minority rights on the basis of their lifestyle is wrong.

Dance tryouts impressive

Tryouts for the University of Idaho Dance Team were held in the Kibbie Dome on Saturday, September 17. The clinic was held September 12-16.

We were impressed with the turnout. Sixteen girls tried out. All sixteen that tried out were great and showed a lot of ability. Unfortunately, we had to narrow it down. There are two coaches: head coach Jennifer Nelson and co-coach Kim Holbrook; seven members: Erica Prescott, Laura Haven, Stacey Wales, Shanda Cox, Mandy Jones, Jenny McClelland and Jewel Steed; and two alternates: Becca McWaldt and Malia Reeber. All eleven girls will practice three days a week, learning and perfecting routines. Although halftime performances are limited this year, the university will have many chances to see the Vandal dancers perform and represent their university with spirit and pride.

We all feel what we're doing is great and will only add to the university. We are blessed with the girls selected, because everyone will give their 110 percent to make this team work. Everything has been going so well so far that nothing will discourage us.

Congratulations to the new 1994-1995 UI Vandal Dance Team. We will make a difference - a good one!

way, we can protect everyone from such confusing and frightening tales of people being turned into pillars of salt, armies being slaughtered by an avenging God-like being, and entire cities being laid waste by the "Wrath" of this being. Not to mention horrifying people with the story of the son of this God-like entity being crucified! Better to read the Marquis de Sade then read such accounts of brutality.

And so, to further the cause of self-esteem everywhere, I propose we ban the Bible. It is our sacred duty as concerned citizens to do so.

Argonaut callous to animals

I'm writing regarding the Outdoors section that appears in your paper, apparently on a regular basis. I find the features in it to be both offensive and detrimental to the perception of animals among your readership.

I understand hunting and fishing may be popular quasi-sports in upper Idaho, but this is no reason to cover them in such a pro-hunting manner. For instance, the headline "Dumb grouse still challenge," in the September 2 issue of your newspaper is using some sort of human standard of intelligence and applying it to animals that have no need for contact with humans. Their behavior, like that of all non-human animals, is essentially tailored to suit their environment (reference Darwin's ideas of natural selection).

Even more disturbing is the apparent nonchalant attitude of Mr. Miller and ostensibly others at your newspaper in printing such items as "Dry flies, slack lines and BIG black hornets." Why is it that "outdoor experiences of all sorts" always have to include killing some sort of animal? Personally, I enjoy the outdoors, but I prefer not to get shot. Thus, much of the outdoors is closed off to me because of safety concerns.

Hunters intent on killing non-human animals are but a step away from killing humans. Whether it's a human, a grouse, or a fish, killing is killing, and if you consider murder to be a sport, fine. However, I suggest you take into consideration the ramifications of what hunting really means before the next edition of your Outdoors section comes out.

Libraries should ban the Bible

First, I would like to thank the librarians of Idaho for pointing out the danger Proposition One poses for our libraries. Book banning has a long and frightening history, and I'd hate to see it occur in Idaho.

However, if this proposition is passed, I would like to suggest that one book in particular be the first to meet the Scalpel of the Book Banners. This book has references to homosexuality, witchcraft, and torture. All of this is most assuredly anti-family, and could damage the "self-esteem" of our children. Therefore, I humbly suggest we ban the Bible. That

Marble issues apology to ASUI

Welcome back to another year at the University of Idaho. Normally, I look forward to writing "welcome back" letters; regrettably, this is not a standard "welcome back" letter. I am writing this letter to inform you of my failure as ASUI President to fulfill the requirements as outlined in the ASUI Rules and Regulations.

The ASUI Rules and Regulations specify that the ASUI President is to serve sixty-four hours per month during the summer. Over the course of the summer, I did not meet this time obligation, yet signed pay slips and received pay for this time. Upon the return of the Senate, the Vice President informed them of this shortcoming.

Acknowledging my insufficient office time, I chose to pay back the money for the hours that I failed to serve.

In addition, I am writing this letter of apology at the request of the Senate to the Argonaut, all living groups, Family Housing, Graduate Housing Residence, and Graduate Student Association.

In conclusion, I am very apologetic for not serving the required office hours. I will work diligently to insure that this does not happen in the future.

If anyone felt they were unrepresented this summer, please feel free to contact me and I will try to rectify this problem.

If you have any questions, comments or concerns, please feel free to call me at 885-6331, or drop in the ASUI office. I will gladly help you in any way I can.

*-John Marble
ASUI President*

Reflections of Finland

A country of lakes and spruce forests, cold and long winters, short and light summers, a small and quiet nation, this is Finland. Finland is one of the northernmost countries of Europe. Its geographical location between Sweden and Russia has played a central role in its history. Finland has in the past been a part of both countries and achieved its long-expected independence in 1917.

Finland is the fifth largest country of Europe. Its population of 5 million is small compared to other European countries. Typical features of the Finnish landscape include vast spruce forests and thousands of lakes. It is one of the cleanest environments in Europe. The typical features of Finland and other Scandinavian countries are the light summer nights and the midnight sun of Lapland, the northernmost part of Finland. In mid-summer the sun shines 24 hours a day.

The Finnish language belongs to the Finno-Ugrian languages. Less than 20 million people speak this Estonian and Hungarian related language. Officially Finland is a bilingual country. The majority speak Finnish, but the second language is Swedish, which six percent of the population uses. Another interesting fact is that there is another minority group in the northern part of Finland, in Lapland, called the Samis who have their own language that is related to the Finno-Ugrian languages as well.

The Finns differ a little from the rest of the Europeans. Finns are not as talkative as other nations. They are rather quiet and perhaps a little shy. Maybe the cold, dark and long winters have had an influence on the behavior of the nation. "Small talk" does not belong in the Finnish culture, and for a foreigner it may be a little difficult to overcome acquainted with a Finn. However, when one succeeds in getting to know a Finn, one realizes that Finns are outspoken, honest and sincere.

Maybe Finns are reticent and taciturn people, but if one makes friends with a Finn, one has a real friend for the rest of their life!

The Finnish culture and folk life have many distinctive characteristics. Every region in Finland has its own traditional folk costume. Finnish folk music and folk dances are very much alive. Every Finn knows well the national epic "Kalevala," a folk story about the history of Finland. The Finnish sauna is also a part of everyday life. Some Finns use saunas daily as part of their bathing routine, but mostly they are used on an average of twice a week.

Education is free for everybody, even at the university level. As a university student, one has "academic freedom" to plan one's studies. It is possible to combine different subjects and to spend as much time as one wants on them. The universities have special courses in English since more and more students go to Finland to study. For example, the interdisciplinary study program "Karelia, the Baltic Area and Eastern Europe," offered at the University of Joensuu has been quite popular among American exchange students.

In the past decades the economy of Finland has grown rapidly, resulting in one of the strongest economies and best welfare states in the world. However, during the past few years, Finland has experienced its worst economic crisis, which has resulted in a huge government deficit, and an overall unemployment rate of more than 20%. In the near future Finland will make one of its most important decisions since gaining independence: whether or not to join the European Union (EU). The positions between supporters and opponents is tightening. Supporters say that for the economic life and welfare of Finland it is a necessity to join the EU. To not join would mean Finland would no longer belong to Europe, and would become an outsider with no possibilities for further development. Opponents have brought forth many reasons against joining the EU.

They claim that it would be practically the same as losing their independence, and that only big companies would make use of the membership. Many are afraid the Finnish agriculture—the northernmost in the world—will disappear to a large extent, when the prices of the products drop so much that farming will no longer be profitable. In the long run, many Finns believe that joining the EU will burden the already, as they believe, too polluted environment in Finland. In any case, at this stage the Finns are split on this matter.

To Finns, "blue and white are the colors of freedom."

Blue and White
By Jukka Kuoppamäki

When I left my homeland behind me
I pondered silently over what I would tell when somebody asks me.
Would I tell about the poverty and the abandoned houses,
or about all the wealth,
until I found the answer.

Blue is the sky and blue in its eyes, blue are the lakes that reflect the blue sky.
White is the snow, white are the summer nights, white are the clouds, the sheep of the blue sky.

Attention students, faculty, and members of the community and anyone else who is interested! I desperately need your help! No one can figure out anything exciting to do in the thriving metropolis of Moscow! All there is to do, it seems, is go to the movies, stay home and watch movies, or other things that may be age inappropriate. My goal is to come up with a list, or a feature article, or a column, or something that has new, fun, exciting ideas of things to do in Moscow. I would like to encourage people to write me a letter, or fax me suggestions. I know for a fact that there are people out there who have fun, creative ideas and I would love it if you shared them with me! Please, nothing illegal! Send any ideas to the Argonaut c/o Lifestyles Editor, or fax them to Attn: Lifestyles Editor at 885-2222. Thanks for all of your input. THE FAMILY CAT POUNCES ON AMERICA

A band, a island and a cat. Take those three ingredients and mix them together with a English accented voice and you have the band called The Family Cat. Hailing from the great British isles, London based The Family Cat debut their first American release, Magic Happens. Fortunately for the United States, we were able to get a sampling of this band's rock music in August with their single, "Wonderful Excuse." Over in the isles, The Cats enjoyed a reign at number one on the U.K. alternative single chart. They are hoping to become as great a success over here as they were in their country.

The Family Cat is an entourage of three guitars, a drummer and a single smoothed over vocalist. Although the vocals are somewhat monotone, the guitars make up some of what is lost. Songs like "Wonderful Excuse" begin with hard edge guitar riffs and then flow into a nice, mellow drumming while the vocalist sings in the background. Much of the album sounds the same and begins to wear on the nerves after awhile. Yet, there is some originality in the songs. While there is no "Smells Like Teen Spirit" in this Cat family, they succeeded in making a somewhat okay album. The song "Amazing Hangover," slow with continuous recycled music, sounds good to the ear. On some of the tracks it gets hard to hear the vocalist's soft lyrics, yet on some you notice the voice a little to much. At some points the voice is whining, while at others it is still monotone.

For their first U.S. release I would have to say that The Family Cat has done well. But we will have to wait to see how these "Cats" affect America.

Their record was released on September 13 and is available on Dedicated Arista records.

This is a good CD for those who like English rock, yet it'll take time to tell if these guys really have a hit in their midst.

CONNICK BROADENS HORIZONS

It's always news when an artist ventures out of his or her usual genre. When U2 went from rock band to the "Zooropa" incarnation, some people felt it was a death, some saw it as a rebirth. Harry Connick's switch from jazz to, well, just about everything else on his latest album, She, can be seen as both.

The arrangements are simpler than his past big-band-featuring-piano works, crossing a small jazz combo with a 70s lounge act and never sounding like anything more. He bridges so many genres it's often hard to say which he's playing from. Being unable to pigeonhole his sound shows that it's a unique style, but at the same time it's irritating because it sounds almost like so many things. For example, follow the guitar: it goes from a clean, standard jazz sound to chicken-scratch 70s funk to distortion licks analogous to any rock band today.

Regardless of what's behind him, though, Harry still sounds like Harry. His voice won't disap-point the female audience: it's blend of sigh, sing, and talk is still positively dreamy, and his fingers still tickle the ivories as if he was playing in the womb. He's got more up his sleeve, too. "Booker" is performed entirely by Connick, including drums, bass, guitar, and, of course, piano. Admittedly, the beat is far from funky and the guitar solo isn't anything special, but it's clear that music comes naturally to him.

Not everything feels that way, though. Writing outside of the jazz arena gave Connick some leeway as far as experimenting with simpler ideas, but in a few cases it gets a little too repetitious. The Fender Rhodes keyboard on "That Party" is a nice touch—until you hear the same two chords for the hundredth time. The recitation of the title over and over ends a rather interesting jam session ("Funky Dunky") on a boring note. Simplicity is not always bad, though. The gentle "Between Us," a simple, soulful song about lovers reunited, would lose its flavor were it beefed up.

The lyrics are the work of a gentleman named Ramsey McLean. He does a good job with dialects, stating "to love the language/ you got to be born on the banks of the Mississippi." That seems about right: his soul is definitely rooted in Americana and jazz. But when he takes on issues like school kids killing each other, he seems out of his element. "That Party" and "Booker" both try, and both come off like the writer lives separated from those facts.

Who knows whether or not this album is the shape of things to come for Harry Connick, Jr., or if it's just a break from his usual style. In any case, it's a fresh sound and deserves a spin by jazz fans and non-jazz fans alike.

Lynne Hyland
5-foot-9 sophomore setter,
Vancouver, B.C.
Hyland nearly set a UI school record for her 84 assist performance in the Vandals' 15-10, 14-16, 15-8, 10-15, 15-13 victory over Boise State.
This marks the second time Hyland has reached 84 assists this year. The record is held by Amy Hanks.
Hyland leads the nation in assists per game.
She recorded 66 assists versus Idaho State on Friday.

Ryan Phillips
6-foot-4, 237 pound sophomore defensive lineman, Auburn, Wash.
Phillips anchored the Vandals' defensive front in their 58-26 win over Stephen F. Austin. He led Idaho with nine tackles, two of which went for losses.
Phillips' performance is commendable because he lined up against Octus Polk, the Lumberjacks' 6-foot-4, 331 pound offensive lineman.

'Jacks axed by costly turnovers

Andrew Longeteig
Sports Editor

The 10,200 Kibbie Dome fans were restless. The Idaho players stood on the sideline with shaking heads and hands placed on their hips. Even Joe Vandal conveyed a disappointed expression through his coarse, dark whiskers.

The seventh ranked Vandals were down at halftime 14-7 to the fifteenth ranked Stephen F. Austin Lumberjacks on Saturday. This marked the first time they have trailed at halftime since the Montana game last November.

Idaho, however, used a 51-point second half explosion due to timely defense and an aggressive offense to upend the Lumberjacks, 58-26. The loss dropped SFA's record to 1-2-1.

"We just told them, 'let's just go out and execute,'" Head Coach John L. Smith said. "We're good enough to make things happen. It was a great gut-check at halftime."

The key for the Vandals (3-0) in the second half was the turnovers.

On the first play of the Lumberjacks' first two possessions in the third quarter, Idaho recovered two fumbles, giving the offense excellent field position. Both turnovers led to touchdowns that put Idaho on top for good, 24-14.

"It (the turnovers) was huge for us," quarterback Eric Hisaw said. "They gave us great field position. We have a team goal of converting 80 percent of our turnovers into scores."

Yet another back-breaker for SFA occurred when Vandal linebacker Tommy Knecht intercepted James Ritchey's pass and returned it 51 yards for a touchdown. The extra-point attempt sailed wide left—the first Vandal miss in 108 attempts.

"He (Ritchey) made a bad read," Knecht said. "On that play, it didn't look like I was dropping back and he didn't see me. Cedric (West) threw a great block for me, otherwise I would have gotten caught by the 330 pound lineman."

This "monster" that Knecht referred to is 6-foot-4, 331 pound offensive lineman Octus

Polk. The SFA offensive line included two other players over 300 pounds. The Vandals did not record a sack.

"That's the most points that any team I've ever coached has given up," Lumberjack coach John Pearce said. "That's the best team we've played in three years—the second half proved that. If you're a good team, you have to respond and we didn't respond today. It was a good game up until the interception."

Sherriden May, stuffed by the quick Lumberjack defense in the first half, came to life in the second half, rushing for 85 yards on eight carries. He finished with 121 yards on 19 carries.

The Vandals altered their running scheme in the second half. They began using the speed-option and had different blocking assignments to throw a

Broncos, Bengals tough but still lose

Vandals play WSU tonight in Memorial Gym at 7:30

Dan Eckles
Staff

The University of Idaho's in-state rivals put up all they could muster over the weekend, but it wasn't enough to knock the Vandals from their nationally ranked NCAA volleyball pedestal.

Both Idaho State and Boise State took the Vandals five games, but neither could pull off the upset in the opening weekend of Big Sky Conference volleyball. The Vandals dropped the Bengals 15-9, 15-11, 5-15, 8-15, 15-12 Friday night and fought off the ills of travel as well, defeating the Broncos Saturday afternoon 15-10, 14-16, 15-8, 10-15, 15-13.

"This league is hot right now," said Vandals coach Tom Hilbert. "There are a lot of good teams in this league. I was really impressed with the play for both Idaho State and Boise State."

BSU's record falls to 7-6 and 1-1 in the Big Sky.

Mindy Rice was a one-woman wrecking crew over the weekend leading Idaho (2-0 Big Sky, 14-1) with a game-high 22 kills Friday and 29 Saturday. Rice also combined for 39 digs in the two contests. Idaho's Tzvetelina Yanchulova and Brittany Van Haverbeke didn't take a back seat to Rice, however. Yanchulova, who is third in the nation in kills per game, added 47 kills and 26 digs to the Vandal cause while Van Haverbeke chipped in 30 kills and 25 digs.

Sophomore setter Lynne Hyland continued her hot passing over the weekend. The Canadian native leads in the nation in assists per game and dished out 66 Friday and 84 Saturday. The 84 assists was one short of Amy Hanks 1992 school record and marks the second time this fall Hyland has achieved the total.

The Vandals will get a chance to claim bragging rights on the Palouse when they host the 21st ranked Washington State University Cougars (3-1 PAC-10, 10-2 overall) Tuesday night.

Cougars lead the series 29-12, including a 3-0 sweep last year.

"We just want to go out, play well, and compete," Hilbert said. "Obviously a win would be great, but conference games are what is important. This is kind of just for fun."

Idaho athletic officials are expecting a capacity crowd for the contest and have called for students to flood Memorial Gym, breaking the attendance record set last in the Vandals NCAA playoff home win against Appalachian State.

WSU beat PAC-10 foes No. 20 Oregon State Friday and Oregon Saturday has failed to hand its opponents a loss only twice, falling only to Northern Iowa and Stanford.

WSU's sophomore middle blocker Sarah Silvernail has been the focal point of the Cougar offense, compiling a team-high 190 kills for a .286 hitting percentage. Shannon Wyckoff and Keren Oighan also put the ball down for the Cougars, posting 105 and 102 kills respectively. Senior setter Krista Beightol is one of the Pac-10's best and averages over 10 assists a game.

The Idaho match marks the start of a tough road trip for the Cougars, who will face No. 13 USC (7-2, 1-1 Pac-10) and No. 4 UCLA (11-1, 2-0) later in this week.

change-up at the SFA defense, according to Smith.

May also became the all-time leading scorer in Idaho history with his three-yard touchdown scamper on the Vandals' opening drive. He scored yet another touchdown in the second half on a 48 yard run. He now has 318 total points and is closing in on the national record of 385.

"I haven't done it all by myself. The guys on the team have done a lot to help me get where I am," May said.

Hisaw had yet another stellar game, completing 21-of-36 passes for 371 yards. However, his streak of 88 unintercepted passes was broken.

The 6-foot-2, 206 pound quarterback was hot in the first half, completing seven of his first eight passes. His offensive lineman, however, in the second quarter broke down and had Hisaw scrambling for his life. Thus, the Vandals were held scoreless.

The offensive line came alive in the second half, allowing Hisaw time to find downfield receivers. On several plays, no SFA defensive back was within 15 yards of the Vandal receiver.

Senior wideout Kyle Gary caught a game-high nine passes for 143 yards.

Idaho plays the Idaho State University Bengals this Saturday in the Kibbie Dome at 1:07.
