Fifty people began by lighting candles in East City Park Sunday at 7 p.m.

The group varied in size as people joined and left it along the route from the park to the Moscow Community Center with stops at three churches along the way. About 70 to 80 people, including about twenty children and teenagers, participated. The most radical members of Moscow's gay and lesbian community were conspicuously absent.

At each stop, participants sang and listened to speakers who included Walt Miller, the First Presbyterian Church interim minister; Lynn Unger, pastor of the Unitarian Church of the Palouse; and Alan Rose of the Moscow-Pullman Jewish Community Group.

Wilhelmina Sarai-Clark of the Spokane Episcopal Diocese read the Litany of Penitence and Reconciliation used in the Episcopal Diocese of South Dakota and a poem. The litany "asks forgiveness for the hurts we have given and received by our ignorance, fear, and prejudice."

"The search for scapegoats continues for those from the radical right with small minds and small hearts," said Mike Burr, pastor of the United Church of Moscow. "The radical right is bent on co-opting the language of our faith (and) wants to say that we're Christian bashing, as if they were the only Christians."

"The same Bible that, on the basis of an archaic social code of Israel and a tortured reading of St. Paul is used to condemn all gay and lesbian people, includes metaphors of redemption, renewal, inclusion and love. These are principles that invite lesbians and gays to accept their freedom and their responsibility in Christ and demands that their fellow Christians accept them as well," Burr said.

As to the protest of blocking homosexual special rights, Alan Rose said, "It's always the same thing. Different names, different groups held out. What special rights did the gypsies and the Jewish children want as they were shoved into the ovens? The right to exist. If we don't speak out, who will?" he said.

Bruce Wollenberg, director of the UI Campus Christian Center, gave the benediction, and the group went in to the Community Center for cookies and coffee.

The march was sponsored by Moscow Voices of Faith and organized by Lynn Unger.

Campus crime finds new 'PAAL'

Women who have to walk across campus at night may soon be able to check out a personal safety alarm from the University of Idaho library.

According to statistics provided by ASUI Senator Laura West, one in four women reported being a victim of an assault or an attempted assault during her four years in college. Fifty-seven percent of college women said they had been assaulted and 60 to 75 percent of victims report being assaulted by an acquaintance.

As part of a comprehensive assault prevention program, the ASUI Safety Task Force will be providing noise emitting Personal Attack Alarms (PAAL) or "beepers" to women, said ASUI Senator Laura West, chairperson for the Safety Task Force.

"Essentially, the woman wears the beeper on her belt. There is a pin in it, and the woman has to physically pull it. Then the beeper emits a loud shriek," West said.

The Safety Task Force—comprised of students, faculty, administrators and the Moscow Police Department—also considered other options to help prevent assaults.

"We looked at making our campus a whistle campus where women wear whistles around their neck," West said. The task force chose the PAALs

Northern Idaho tourism

Shelby Dopp
Staff

Editor's note: This article is the first of a three-part series on the tourism industry. The next article will feature some aspects of the economic impact tourism has had on the economy of Idaho, including jobs, wages and benefits.

Californians contributed $295 million of the $1.34 billion spent by out-of-state tourists visiting Idaho last year, according to a study recently released by the 1993 Nonresident Motor Vehicle Travel in Idaho.

The majority of the money is spent in the northern tip of Idaho, the southwestern part of the state, and the southeastern region bordering Wyoming and Yellowstone National Park. Tourists spent the least amount of money in Region 2—a region which includes the city of Moscow.

"We get a lot of pass-through traffic during the months of June, July and August," Bill Saylor said. Saylor is the general manager at the Best Western University Inn, located on the Pullman highway in Moscow.

"If we had a big lake, then maybe we would get some tourism," he added. Most of the hotel's "tourist business" comes from one-night stays. The rest comes from the presence of the University of Idaho and the resulting business it brings in.

"I think Lewiston gets more business because it is the ending point for most river trips," Saylor said.

The number of people visiting Idaho last year totaled 9,400,000. Of that amount, 43 percent came to participate in outdoor recreation.

The summer season accounted for 46 percent—or some $600 million—of the out-of-state revenue brought in by visitors. People coming to Idaho for pleasure spent $154 on average compared to those coming for business—business travelers spent $124. Californians had the highest spending average while visiting the state, the study said. They averaged $378 per party.

According to Robert Singletary, director of communications for the Coeur d'Alene Convention and Visitors Bureau, tourism is the third largest industry in the state of Idaho. In 1993, lodge receipts for the state totaled $186.6 million—an increase of $16.4 million from 1992. More than 33,000 people in the state are employed in the tourism industry.

North Idaho's scenic Kootenai County, located just one hour from Spokane's International Airport, accounted for 16 percent of the state's lodging receipts for 1993. The county also generated 70 percent of all of north Idaho sales.

"Lodging receipt sales are up 98 percent in the state of Idaho since 1988," Singletary said.

Tourism is the number one industry in Kootenai County. Over 5,000 people are employed in the tourism industry, Singletary said. The industry generated $250 million for the county in 1993—up $1.5 million from 1992.

At the national level, tourism ranks third on the retail sales list—just below automobile manufacturing and the food industry. Travelers spent $380 billion nationwide in 1993, and the industry generated $52 billion in tax receipts. Over 6 million people in the United States are employed in travel related jobs—making it the second largest employer in the country, Singletary said.

The 1993 Nonresident Motor Vehicle Travel in Idaho study was conducted by John D. Hunt, professor and head of University of Idaho Department of Resource Recreation and Tourism; Nick Sanyal, research scientist/adjunct assistant professor; Jonathan Vlaming, senior research analyst; and Stuart R. Leidner, research analyst. The study was done in conjunction with several state and federal agencies, the Idaho Travel Council and the Boise Convention and Visitors Bureau.

WSU cuts budget

Tim Helmke
Staff

Reductions and eliminations at Washington State University will take place due to a mandate from the state of Washington legislature.

The legislature is requiring state universities to reduce spending by 2.4 percent—meaning cuts will come in most areas of operation.

WSU established an Executive Budget Committee a year ago to develop recommendations on where the budget should be cut, said WSU Provost Tom George. This committee is made up of staff, faculty and students. According to George, the committee worked to preserve the integrity of the academic program as much as possible.

"We are under pressure from the legislature to make these cuts," said George. "These cuts will not be across the board, though. Those types of cuts were severe in the past and now we are attempting to even them out."

With the proposed cuts, there would be reductions in the economics department and computer services as well as the elimination of the community relations office and a Vancouver engineering program. The committee will consider these at their next session of meetings.

The two jobs lost in the economic department would include one position presently held by a non-tenured professor, and the other is currently vacant. Computer services is facing cuts that would see a reconfiguration of the Personal Computer Center of Information Technology to reduce labor intensive activities.

The committee also recommends closing the Office of Campus and Community Relations. Known as the WSU Depot in downtown Pullman, the office employs two people. WSU would then incorporate community relations into some other entity on campus.

Due to lack of enrollment, the committee has recommended the elimination of the Master of Science in Engineering program in Vancouver.

"This is a very painful process. None of us take pleasure in making these cuts," said George.

Most areas on the WSU campus and their satellite campuses around the Pacific Northwest will face some budgetary cuts. The College of Liberal Arts, however, has been spared from any cuts this time around, according to George. The college was hit hard with previous budget cuts in recent years.

"The college contributes almost forty percent of (all) credit hours offered. Every student has to take something offered in the liberal arts area," said George.

Other budget areas escaping cuts are the university's hazardous waste cleanup and the diversity initiatives.

The largest reduction—3.37 percent—is proposed for the area of institutional services. Cuts will hit business affairs, external affairs and the administration. Institutional services may be forced to find a way to do without $789,000.

Information technology and WSU libraries, which make up the instructional support category of the university's budget, could possibly see their budgets trimmed by a total of $204,000—or 2.4 percent less than their current budget.

Under the plan, $841,000 would be taken from WSU's outreach programs. These programs include agricultural research, branch campuses and cooperative extension. The total cut accounts for 2.67 percent of their budget.

LaRocco holds forum at UI

Adam Gardels
Staff

Personal responsibility and security are the central issues in congress according to Congressman Larry LaRocco at a public forum held yesterday in the Student Union. The forum was attended by approximately 50 people.

LaRocco is running against Helen Chenoweth for the 1st Congressional District seat in the U.S. House of Representatives.

LaRocco is concerned about the proposition to limit gay rights on November's ballot.

"Now (the right wing) wants to divide Idahoans on the gay issue," LaRocco said about Proposition One. LaRocco devoted much of the forum's time to this issue and abortion as responses to questions from the audience. "I think that Roe v. Wade is well thought out. I've been a co-sponsor of the Freedom of Choice Act."

LaRocco went on the offensive when it came to discussing the religious right. "I don't campaign in churches, but I imagine that [Helen Chenoweth] does," LaRocco said as he emphasized Chenoweth's courtship with the "Christian Coalition." LaRocco stated he is consistently against government involvement in citizens' lives. He feels it is hypocritical to champion the right of gun ownership while trying to regulate abortion at the same time.

"I'm here to declare progress," LaRocco said, pointing out that he believes America has a strong economy as a result of the new government. "We've reinvented government and turned it over to the local government," he said.

LaRocco also discussed federal budget concerns with the crowd.

"We are heading into the third straight year of deficit reduction. We have frozen the budget," he said.

LaRocco made a stand against economic policies based on breaks for the rich. "We want change to happen. I don't want to turn back the clock to trickle down economics. The deficit exploded in the 80's," LaRocco said.

The congressman also voiced some concerns about opponent Helen Chenoweth. He claimed Chenoweth said she is like former Idaho Senator Steve Symms; however, LaRocco pointed out that Symms failed to pass a bill in eight years of service.

LaRocco stressed his non-partisan stance and said he will stand up to the President if he has to. According to LaRocco, Chenoweth has already signed away her independence by signing an oath of loyalty to Representative Newt Gingrich, Minority Whip.

LaRocco responded to attacks made by his opponent about the validity of his campaign ads. "Every ad that I have run has been documented as truthful," LaRocco said.

Argonaut Interview

UI alumnus Batt runs for Idaho Governor

Zachary Craig-Works

Staff

Philip E. Batt has served in the Idaho House of Representatives and the Idaho State Senate. In the Senate he served for six years as Senate Majority Leader, and two years as President Pro Tempore. Batt also served as Idaho's Lieutenant Governor from 1978 until 1982.

Batt attended the University of Idaho from 1944 to 1948, with a two year interruption when he volunteered for service in the Army Air Force. Since then, Batt has served as the first president of the Idaho Food Producers, as a member of the Board of Trustees of the College of Idaho, and as a member of the Idaho Potato Growers commission.

In 1982, Batt was the Republican candidate for Governor. He lost by 4,000 votes, about a 1% margin. In 1992, as State Chairman for the Idaho Republican Party, Batt provided leadership in the strong Republican victories in state legislative and federal races. Batt helped raise over $1 million dollars for the campaigns of Idaho Republicans.

other important measures there. Argonaut: What are some of the top priorities you would like to pursue if you are elected? Batt: The main thing is to protect and enhance the job base we have. We are such a rapidly growing state, we need to provide job opportunities both among new fields and old ones.

Fortunately, we have the high-tech industries moving into the state to a great degree in Treasure Valley. Some 70 percent of the new employment down there in Canyon County comes from Argonaut: You said you wanted to enhance opportunities for job growth. What steps would you take to pursue that goal? Batt: As I mentioned, I don't think we can afford to hamper our traditional industries. Right now, for instance, there is such a maze of environmental regulations and protests we can't harvest timber on the federal land. We're able to harvest on state lands still, although there is some question of what the environmental protests are going to move into the state arena.

Right now, we're harvesting and growing state timber at about the same rate. On the forest land were growing it at two or three times the rate we're cutting it. It's reaching the end of its natural life going up in flames, or due to bug damage. I think it's a real waste of a natural resource.

Also, our water supplies are being threatened in the state. From every corner of the state, we've drained out our reservoirs to where they're almost non-existent for the purpose of salmon recovery.

The University of Washington, through a study commissioned by National Marine Fisheries, indicated that this system hasn't done any good. I think we must protest that with the best of our ability and keep that water within the state.

There are other job opportunities which we must enhance. We must continue to develop our tourism possibilities. We must have the State Department of Commerce work in those areas that can sustain growth better, instead of going into the areas where they're already being impacted by growth.

“ We have to continue providing job opportunities. We can't afford to over-regulate or impede the natural resource industries the way we have been in recent years, and make those jobs viable to continue.

Argonaut: Are you for logging in national forests in Idaho? Batt: Well, within reasonable environmental constraints. Yes, I think it's a shame to waste the resource—to have it grow to its natural life and burn up, and I think we should use it.

Argonaut: How do you feel about the Department of Energy's proposal to use the Idaho National Engineering Laboratory as a national storage facility for nuclear waste materials for the next 40 years?

Batt: We are very highly equipped over there—both with skillful engineers and with equipment to treat nuclear waste. I think it is probably as good a facility as there is for that. However, I don't think we should continue to accept waste until we open the permanent repositories in New Mexico and grapes, mint, and I'm mainly in the dry onion business now.

I served on the potato commission when we patented the Idaho brand so we weren't being emulated by other states illegally. I was the first president of Food Producers of Idaho, which is an umbrella organization—we develop mainly some labor laws, we (were able to get) better housing for farm workers, and I developed field facilities for farm workers.

Then I went into the legislature. I wrote Idaho's first civil rights law, the formation of the human rights commission, the state personnel rules and the so-called hay plan—by which state, public employees are paid. I worked on the retirement fund and rescued it from insolvency, and a number of high-tech. We have various light industries, tourism opportunities and other types of manufacturing moving in and providing new jobs.

We have population growth because young adults are wanting to stay here now instead of moving out of the state—as they did ten or fifteen years ago.

We have to continue providing job opportunities. We can't afford to over-regulate or impede the natural resource industries the way we have been in recent years, and make those jobs viable to continue. I believe we must work with the federal government in allowing workable rules in federal land and natural resource usage, which will allow those industries to con-

Community invited to Ag Days

The College of Agriculture invites the community to attend their annual Ag Days celebration. Ag Days will be held Oct. 14 on the lawn near the Agriculture Science building. Various clubs within the college will sell hamburgers, pop and dessert from 11 a.m. to 1:30 p.m.

A kiddie rodeo that will include barrel racing and steer roping contests will take place at 11:30 a.m. On Oct. 15 there will be a barbecue from 11 a.m. to 12:45 p.m. with BBQ beef, potatoes, salad and ice cream in the J.W. Martin Laboratory (Ag Engineering building). From 9 p.m. to 1 a.m. there will be a dance in the Livestock Pavilion.

Workshops to be held

The University of Idaho Career Services will be offering an orientation on today at 3:30 p.m. A workshop on interview preparation will be held tomorrow at 2:30 p.m. followed by another workshop at 3:30 on career issues for non-traditional students. On October 13, job searching will be the subject at 2:30. Workshops are free, pre-registration is advised. Call 885-6121 for more information.

Companies to interview

Wal-Mart, Simmons Company, Chicago Bridge and Iron, Fastenal Company, BHP Minerals and Champ Sports will be visiting campus during the week of Oct. 31 to Nov. 4. Employer requested materials are due by 4:30 p.m. on Oct. 12. Lists of companies recruiting on campus are posted approximately one month in advance of the visit each Friday in Career Services in Brink Hall. Students interested in obtaining interviews with the recruiters should check with Career Services on what materials should be submitted the following Monday through Wednesday. Call Cynthia Mika at 885-6121 for more information.

Cooperative Ed. helps students

The University of Idaho Cooperative Education will be offering two workshops on Oct. 13 concerning opportunities for internships. At 3:30 p.m. in the Student Union Chief's Room, students can get tips on how to find internships from peers who found internships on their own.

Those interested in doing an internship with the Idaho state government should go to the other workshop at 12 p.m. in the Student Union Chief's Room. Call 885-5822 for more information.

ESL courses offered

The University of Idaho Enrichment Program is offering courses on English as a Second Language (ESL). The course is designed to help students whose primary language is not English to improve their English speaking abilities. Classes will run from 6:30 to 8 p.m. on Mondays and Wednesdays starting Oct. 17. The fee for the course is $20. To find out more or to register, call 885-6486.

Win a trip to France

Evian—the company which produces bottled water—is holding a nationwide contest inviting people to submit designs or toasts which conveys the theme "Evian Toasts the Culinary Arts." The winning artist and writer will win trips for two to France. Other prizes are also being offered. Entries must be submitted to Evian, c/o Ketchum, 220 East 42nd Street, 12th Floor, New York, NY 10017 by November 30. Call 1-800-633-3363 for more information.

Danish prof to give talk

Professor Marianne Ankjaer will give a talk on a new exchange program the College of Business and Economics has with the Southern Denmark Business School. Ankjaer will discuss the economy of Denmark and what can be expected as an exchange student. Refreshments will be served at the talk today at 4:00 p.m. in the Administration building, room 210.

Parade entry forms available

Entry forms are now available for the homecoming parade on Oct. 22. The forms can be picked up at the Student Union information desk on the first floor. The theme for this year's homecoming is "... and here we have Idaho." The Vandal football team is currently laying plans to smother the visiting Lumberjacks from the University of Northern Arizona. The parade will begin at 9 a.m. For more information concerning the parade, call Tina Hultberg at 885-6951.

Students should approach departments

Russ Wright
News Editor

Sid Eder, University of Idaho director of Summer Programs, wants to encourage input from students.

Although the summer of 1995 is a long way off, academic departments have to make a final decision on the summer program course offerings by Oct. 21. Once course offerings are finalized, the recommendations are passed on to the college deans for approval.

Eder believes it is important for students to realize now is the time to approach their major departments to make requests for any courses they might need to graduate to be offered next summer.

Over 3,000 people enrolled in courses last summer—roughly one-third of all students attending the main UI campus during the spring and fall semesters. Of the 3,000 students attending summer courses, 80 percent are matriculated UI students. Eder compared this to the numbers attending summer courses in 1984. "It was less than 70 percent," he said.

According to Eder, these numbers have increased dramatically both at UI and nationwide as the cost of education continues to skyrocket, and students attempt to graduate within four years to keep costs down.

"It's essential the university offer what students need rather than what professors want to teach," said Eder.

Gary Williams, chair of the UI English Department, said students hardly ever come in to request certain courses be offered for the summer. "It very rarely happens," he said. Williams added that while he would certainly try to be responsive to any student needs, he cannot guarantee a course will be offered if just one student requests it.

Eder said, "Our summer session exists to help students. Departments listen carefully when students ask for classes. There's nothing the chairs (of UI departments) listen to more than a group of students," he added, stressing the words "group of students."

"Students can be far more influential than they think," said Eder.

PAAL

because the attacker cannot stop its noise. The PAAL has been likened to a hand grenade as the pin must be reinserted into the PAAL to stop it from producing the 107 decibels of ear-piercing noise.

The force also looked at the social viability of the PAALs.

"If a woman is attacked in a dating situation the beeper is much more acceptable in a social situation," said West.

West believes women in fear of a potentially violent situation can tell their dates they accidentally bumped the PAALs and set them off.

Part of the PAAL's effectiveness relies on the responsiveness of the Night Watch—trained and employed student safety officers—and the police department, West said.

The force hopes to make PAALs available at the library in a month. Sponsorship for the PAALs are coming from the library and computer labs open at night, according to West. She hopes for funds from living groups, as well.

"Our goal is to have beepers available at the living groups so they can just leave with them on their belts," said West.

The Safety Task force will be holding a meeting today at 1:00 in the EE-DA-HO room and encourage people to attend.

Conference to discuss water needs

Sam Woodbury
Staff

The increasing demand for fresh water throughout the world and its impact on food supply will be the theme of the 11th Annual World Food Day teleconference entitled "Sharing Water: Farms, Cities, and Ecosystems."

The University of Idaho has been invited to participate in the international teleconference, which will be shown in the Borah Theater from 8:30 to noon on Oct. 14. The teleconference will be televised from George Washington University in Washington, D.C. and will be linked by satellite to over 1,000 sites throughout the western hemisphere, as well as Africa and Asia.

The teleconference was organized by the National Committee for World Food Day. The committee is a coalition of over 450 organizations which include the American College of Nutrition, the League of Women Voters of the United States, the Pan American Development Foundation and the Boy Scouts of America.

UI's Idaho Water Resources Research Institute is the organizer of UI's participation in the teleconference. The Institute, established in 1963, provides scientific information to students, faculty and the general public may obtain factual information concerning water use.

While many of their programs emphasize northwestern and Palouse issues, the Institute sees this teleconference as an opportunity for the public to have access to diverse opinions and viewpoints concerning international issues. "Our goal is to provide information so people can make informed factual decisions about water issues," said Peggy Hammel, the Institute's Program Administrator. "We do not take positions on issues—rather we facilitate research and education about water issues."

The theme of this year's teleconference is an analysis of the world's fresh water supply and how the continual increase in demand will impact food production.

A panel of international speakers discussing these themes at the GWU studios will include José Felix Alfaro, a Peruvian water policy consultant to the World Bank; Sandra Postel, director of the Global Water Policy Project in Cambridge, Massachusetts; Rita Schmidt Sudman, executive director of the Water Education Foundation in Sacramento, California; and Hans W. Wolter, chief of the Water Management Service at the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization.

The discussion forum will feature such issues as international aid in relation to urban water sanitation, impacts on irrigation as a result of declining dam construction, the impact of water scarcity on economic development, the effectiveness of governmental allocation of resources in water scarce countries and water management in relation to sustainable development.

The teleconference will feature the guest speakers and will provide opportunities for call-in questions in a format similar to radio talk shows.

Nevada—the WHHPS facility and the Yucca Mountain facility in Nevada. If we don't have some definite plan for moving it out, then we become a de facto waste repository, and I don't think we want to do that.

Argonaut: Idaho students have a relatively low cost for college education, but lately there have been some increases in tuition and fees. How would you envision keeping higher education a financial reality for Idaho citizens in the future?

Batt: This is an important question. There are three main ways we finance the institutions of higher education. One is from the state general fund. The other two are from fees collected from resident students and tuition collected from non-resident students—which was recently doubled, or in that neighborhood. It has resulted in a drop in enrollment here, and I think we may have overdone it, perhaps.

But I'm dedicated to keeping fees down as much as possible. In the days when I went to the University of Idaho, fees were a problem for us then as well. Since then, they're much higher. It's more difficult to get part-time work. Most people are going five years instead of the standard four. I think we have to continue to try to make it as affordable as possible for students.

Argonaut: What is your position on abortion as it relates to state law?

Batt: I am a pro-life candidate with the exceptions of rape, incest, or a threat to the life of the mother. Because of that belief, I don't think we should use taxpayer money for funding abortions, Medicaid abortions, except in for those reasons I just mentioned.

I believe Idaho should join some of the other states in resisting this use of taxpayer's money. There's lots of people who really resent using their tax money for that purpose.

Argonaut: How do you feel about Proposition One?

Batt: I'm not supporting Proposition One. I don't think it's necessary for the state of Idaho. Currently, we do not recognize same sex marriages, we do not have a special category for sexual preference, we are perfectly capable—through our local school boards—of regulating what is taught in our classes. And there's going to be, I think, a great number of legal challenges to this measure if it's passed. Consequently, I don't support it.

Attorney General candidates debate

Shelby Dopp
Staff

The University of Idaho Law School Courtroom was filled with approximately 50 people Friday who came to see the debate between the two candidates for Idaho Attorney General.

Both Mike Burkett's and Al Lance's campaigns agreed to the format of the debate which consisted of four questions asked of the candidates, a set amount of time for each candidate to answer the question and a time for rebuttal. The debate was then opened to questions by the audience near the end.

The questions ranged from topics such as juvenile crime to a question from the audience about Proposition I. Domestic violence was also a topic opened for discussion.

Both candidates suggested the creation of "boot camps" to treat juvenile criminals. Lance suggested the state take the Juvenile Justice System out of the hands of Health and Welfare.

Health and Welfare is part of the problem and not part of the solution, he said.

Burkett stated that it is time for Idaho to get "tough and smart." He feels the state needs to take initiative not only at the state level but also at the community level and at the Attorney General's Office.

"We need to reach out to children who are subject to domestic violence," said Burkett.

Both candidates are against Proposition I. Burkett and Lance have said they will, if elected, fight the initiative if passed by voters on Nov. 8.

On the domestic violence issue, Lance believes domestic assault should not be treated on the level as domestic battery. Presently, domestic battery is considered to the more grievous of the two offenses.

"Currently, we are dealing with the victims and not the batterers," he said.

Burkett feels domestic assault should be treated on the same level as domestic battery.

"We need to take action before it becomes problem," he said.

Burkett is running on the Democratic ticket while Lance is on the Republican ticket. Be sure to look for upcoming interviews with the two candidates in the Argonaut. Burkett will be in this Friday's edition and Lance will appear in next Tuesday's paper.

U.S. should finish what it started

Iraq wants a rematch of 1991's Desert Storm operation, it looks like. This time around, it looks like the United States has a better strategy. Or, at least a more committed one this time.

On Sunday, the Pentagon placed 15,000 more troops on standby status, after stationing 54,000 troops in the Persian Gulf. In addition, France and Great Britain have also released forces to be deployed in the Gulf, contributing to the buildup of what Secretary of Defense William Perry described as a "formidable military force." These actions are being taken in response to Iraq's mobilization of over 80,000 Republican Guards and other Iraqi troops massed on or close to the Iraq/Kuwait border.

Keeping in policy, the Clinton administration seems dedicated to a show of force as a deterrent and not as an indicator of things to come. However, both Secretary Perry and UN Ambassador Madeleine Albright have warned Iraq not to "miscalculate" and force a U.S. response like the Gulf War of 1991.

Mindful of the drawn-out nature of the last conflict, Secretary Perry said on Sunday, "We do not propose to simply be, to sit there and be pinned down for the indefinite future."

This is a good sign, and not just for the problem of leaving Saddam in power after the rout of Iraq three years ago. American credibility in the international arena has suffered greatly over the past few years, from the incomplete victory in the Gulf to the Somalia debacle to the unpopular Haiti intervention. Although perhaps a poor way to increase one's domestic popularity, a no-nonsense approach to Iraq would not only settle the issue in the Middle East but restore American credibility globally.

Among the military, one of the most commonly held sentiments was an echo of one held in Vietnam: "If the brass would just let us at the enemy, we'd have this place cleaned up in no time."

In both wars, the inability of the commanding officers to fully commit to a full-out struggle ultimately bogged down American efforts and cost this nation face among the nations of the world. Whether or not this is a just cause, or if America needs to replay this particular chapter of history, is a moot point now.

This time, perhaps our government has learned the lesson that the troops knew all along. War may be hell, but if you're going to enter a conflict, you should at least be prepared to fight. More importantly, you should let your troops fight without holding them back because of doubt or politics.

—B.N.

Calling all male feminists!

Can men be feminists? Do they really understand what feminism is? Show me a man who does and I'll show you a woman who has had a sex change operation.

I had a male friend of mine tell me he was a feminist. I asked him what he meant and he said he supported equal rights for women. Somehow the meaning of feminism has escaped him. Feminism is more than just equal pay for equal work, or even stopping sexual harassment. Feminism is recognizing women as true equals. That means recognizing women's art, literature, and realizing that there is an entire female culture that men will never have access to. Just like there are male cultural differences, such as drinking beer and watching football on Sundays. You know, that "male bonding" crap.

I have found that men really have no idea what being a feminist is. If they claim they do, they are really hoping that by saying this, they will get a little nooky. Men think that by watching Thelma and Louise they have an understanding of women power. Ha! They still think that any woman who is independent and strong is a lesbian.

I have had men tell me that sexism isn't as bad as I think. Yes, it is. We haven't made as much progress as the male dominated press likes to think we have. I once lost a job for complaining of sexual harassment. I had been constantly verbally abused by several male co-workers. They thought it was appropriate to ask me about my sex life on my second day on the job. They continued to inquire about the quality of sex I was getting and if I would be willing to give them a "test drive." Apparently they did this to several other women in the office, but no one had the guts to say anything. Now I know why. I was conveniently "laid-off" one week after I informed my boss about what was happening. Now I wish I had sued the hell out of them. No one can tell me sexism is on the decline. It wasn't three years ago and I see no evidence that it is now.

Another brilliant example of blatant chauvinism is the whole Bobbitt thing. Everyone was so shocked that a woman actually had the courage to cut off the "manhood" of her husband. He had been doing the same thing to her for years. His method was more socially acceptable, he just beat the crap out of her on a regular basis. The media had a field day. Oh my god, she actually stood up for herself! How dare she! Now I hear that John Wayne Bobbitt was in court for abusing his fiancé. This guy just doesn't take a hint very well, does he?

Women are abused so often it isn't even news anymore. When it does make the 6 o'clock edition, it is because some celebrity got caught. Ordinary women are unimportant. Look at the attention the Simpson case is getting. All of the reports are on O.J. himself, not Nicole or even the poor guy she was with. If her ex-husband hadn't been O.J., we never would have even heard about it. Our society is so used to the abuse of women that the only reason we are shocked by what happened to Nicole is that a male role model might have done it.

This is not progress. If we were really gaining as much ground as we are reported to be, more people would be outraged at the abusive history O.J. has. He never would have been allowed to get away with beating his wife as long as he did. Now that Nicole is dead, it is a little late to start the process of punishment. Still, I hope they roast him.

Sexism is still running rampant. Sure, occasionally you will meet a man who genuinely appreciates what women face, but he will never truly understand. Just as if whites could be black for a month, racism wouldn't exist either. Unfortunately, that isn't likely to happen. Until then, we women will just have to learn to tolerate men the way they are.

In Federal Way, a small city of 45,000 located between Seattle and Tacoma, motorists will soon get speeding tickets by a photo radar device nicknamed Photo Cop.

On the other side of the continent in Raritan, N.J., a borough of 6,000 residents located 30 west of New York City, citizens may be fined $500 and 90 days in jail for swearing.

That's scary. But not because I routinely speed and swear or anything—though I admit I occasionally do both, sometimes at the same time. It's scary because it's so damn repressively I feel like driving really really really fast.

These two instances tie into Sylvester Stallone's movie, Demolition Man, which had more to it than speeding cars and flying bullets. The movie is set in the near future, in a beautiful, green and technologically magnificent city. The streets are bare of trash and vehicles. The police's uniforms are reminiscent of Nazi Germany, but are somehow more sleek, more refined.

The plot is centered around Stallone (Bad-Ass Cop and Good Guy) and Wesley Snipes (Bad-Ass Criminal and Bad Guy). The two were frozen for 30 years instead of being thrown in prison for an arrest that led to the supposed deaths of some hostages. The two are defrosted—Snipes because he's needed to kill some guys, and Stallone because he has to keep Snipes from killing (no other cop can, because they've all forgotten how to fight).

Anyway, as this standard chase scene goes, a few things pop up, creating their own social commentary. The first is when Stallone helps out the police and inadvertently swears. Immediately a machine beeps and spits out a ticket. Stallone, of course, has no idea what the hell the thing is, and continues to swear. He is amused. Everyone else is mortified.

Then, after 30 years of hibernation, Stallone must "use the restroom," but cannot find toilet paper. He swears seven or eight times quietly to the machine, accepts his tickets, and takes them to the restroom with him.

When it comes to Raritan's proposed law, I feel the same way as Stallone.

But it gets worse. These machines are absolutely everywhere, monitoring language and conduct. There also happens to be a neat gadget that can locate a coded strip that each person had implanted in their hands at birth anywhere in the city.

On one level, the Photo Cop technology and swearing law appear to be good things. There will likely be a helluva lot more traffic tickets in Federal Way, which will also likely reduce speeding. The cost of the photo radar machines will eventually pay for itself. Officers won't waste their time with minor traffic infractions and instead will have the time to catch real criminals.

The anti-swearing law would eliminate the most versatile word around—the infamous F-word. If citizens could not swear, they would have to figure out more elaborate ways to express anger or frustration. Vocabulary levels would skyrocket and people would learn how to swear like Yosemite Sam.

These two issues are, however, more insidious than the above utopian view presents. Do we really want a machine recording our existence as we drive by? That's the next step.

Instead of a radar camera that activates on speeding cars, we'll have cameras on every street corner. Humans won't even have to watch them. The information will be fed through a computer that will flag certain crimes, such as knife fights or spitting. We already have cameras in private businesses, but do we want surveillance in the hands of law enforcement?

Do we want $40 tickets when we make simple driving mistakes, such as not coming to a complete stop before taking a right hand turn? Do we want someone watching us all the time, waiting tirelessly for a human error?

Do we want to go to jail for swearing after a bus drives by and splashes mud all over us? Do we want to eliminate other words that will eventually evolve into swear words since the 4-letter ones are off-limits?

Hell no.

I would rather have some traffic violations go missed. I would rather have a real, live, breathing officer of the law pull me over and ticket me. Sometimes I screw up on accident and nobody gets hurt. Simple human error shouldn't always be a crime.

I would rather see more violent crime continue to happen than to stifle human interaction and expression because somewhere, somebody is watching. I would rather swear, and let certain social contexts determine my action.

I will know what it is like to live with true freedom, but our kids, like in Demolition Man, will not know any better.

Freedom of Speech?

There are a few people out there who claim to support the right to freedom of speech. They claim to support the right to read books that have been "banned." They claim to have "open minds." They claim to "think for themselves."

Yet, interestingly enough, when someone gives an opinion that they don't agree with, those are the first people to label that person as uninformed, biased, and ignorant. Is this not a contradiction to their already stated belief in the freedom of speech? Are they not criticizing someone who obviously thinks for themselves?

Just because someone disagrees with something that another believes in, does it mean they don't think for themselves? Quite the contrary. Going against the "norm" and giving an opinion that is not agreeable with some people displays a willingness to think and criticize openly, without worry that other "open-minded, free thinkers" will tout their ideas as purely uninformed and biased.

Maybe the person whose opinion is unlike another's is actually more of a free thinker than a brainwashed cult-follower who disagrees just because everyone else does and doesn't want to seem uninformed and close-minded?

Welcome to the world. Everybody has an opinion, everybody has a right to express it, and most often times, they will. Unfortunately, we may not always agree with that opinion. Is that wrong? Should we attempt to sway them to our way of thinking, thus forcing them to think like us, and not for themselves?

Maybe it's time for some of us to look inward and realize that the "faults" we most often point out in others, are the very things that we see about ourselves that we keep locked inside, in a place that no one can see, that we dare not show the world.

It's so easy for people to be hypercritical of what others have to say, and yet in doing so they are doing nothing more than what they accuse another of doing: making uninformed opinions on something they know little about.

All this may or may not be confusing, but the message is that we need to realize that people should not be criticized for their opinions, and they should not be criticized for their beliefs.

Letters to the Editor

Outsiders think they know best

I'm writing this letter in response to the letter that was written by the Californian, Mr. Trendowski, in the Sept. 27 Argonaut. Personally, I am offended by the audacity that this person displayed by ridiculing a sport, lifestyle and culture that he has little to no idea about. He was stating that in "upper Idaho," ("North" too hard to spell?) we are all vicious killers because a portion of the population participated in hunting, and that there was a portion of the Argonaut that was directed to this audience.

Well, Mr. Trendowski, I say, "too bad!" You are just another example of the people that have little or no respect for the way of life that we regard important in Idaho. You are another one of those people that want to move to our beautiful state, then try to push your ways and philosophies on everybody that is already here. Then, you wonder why a large portion of the local population is highly irritated with you being here.

You say that you are afraid to go outdoors because you are afraid of getting shot? Most of the hunting accidents in Idaho involve out of state hunters that aren't properly trained to responsibly handle firearms. And if you want to get technical, I would be much more afraid to walk the streets of Los Angeles than go into the outdoors; your chance of getting shot there is far greater. How dare you say that hunters are one step away from "killing humans"? This is a sport, not a "quasi sport," that for many families in Idaho is a necessary means for getting their meat on the table. We don't just walk away from our fallen game; we actually eat it, believe it or not.

There is one more thing that I have to say in response to Mr. Trendowski's letter. Did you know that the leather shoes on your feet, the leather seats in your BMW and the Big Mac in your stomach came from a live animal? YOU ANIMAL KILLER! I don't know if you have ever been to a slaughterhouse, but the way hunters kill their game is far more humane than the way they do it.

On behalf of many fed-up Idahoans, mind your own business and complain about something you actually know about.

-Ian James

Chenoweth not best for Idaho

After reading with dismay the Argonaut interview (Sept. 13) with Helen Chenoweth exposing her extreme positions, I feel compelled to offer my viewpoint on a few of her radical stands. Chenoweth indicates that her positions will be that "what is good for Idaho will be good for the nation." However, any Idahoan who studies this Congressional hopeful closely will discover that what SHE sees as good for Idaho will harm our states significantly.

For example, if we let Helen Chenoweth have her way, we can say goodbye to the quality of one of Idaho's greatest natural treasures: the Sawtooth Mountains. Chenoweth has continuously advocated mining of the Sawtooths for two unpronounceable, scarce minerals that the National Geological Society has stated are of little or no use or value. Chenoweth has also vowed to add "not one more acre of Idaho wilderness," lobbied for the construction of a hydroelectric project on the pristine Henry's Fork of the Snake River and has even gone so far as to serve endangered salmon species at political fundraisers!

Also — though one would not know this from reading her interview responses, for she deliberately avoids answering the question — Chenoweth maintains the most extreme stand when it comes to a woman's reproductive rights. Though she has changed her "official" position since the onset of the campaign, the anti-choice Chenoweth is opposed to ALL abortions — even incases of rape and incest! Chenoweth is also in support of the anti-gay initiative. She is one of only a handful of contenders — statewide and of both political parties — who would like to change Idaho from a "Great State" into a "Hate State" and, in the process, waste millions of taxpayer's dollars — funds which could be better spent on education. And Chenoweth's suggestion to abolish the U.S. Department of Education is a ludicrous proposal which would cost Idaho schools, including the UI, hundreds of millions of dollars annually.

The list goes on and on. If one point is clear about Helen Chenoweth's candidacy, it is that Idaho does not need her radical-right representation in Washington, D.C. I challenge all Idaho voters to look closely at Mrs. Chenoweth, for I am convinced you will see that, if elected, Helen Chenoweth's ideologies will not be representative of main-stream Idaho. Helen Chenoweth's positions are clearly not what our beautiful state is about. Join me in opposing her on November 8!

-Nancy Shaffer

Letters to the Editor

LaRocco's attack unfair

This letter is in response to the recent attacks made by incumbent Larry LaRocco towards Helen Chenoweth. I will make my statements brief and to the point. Chenoweth is not in favor of cutting financial aid, anti-drug programs, and crime prevention; this is simply propaganda by LaRocco's staff. Chenoweth advocates a block grant program that removes the control from the inefficient federal level and returns to the state level. She is in favor of restructuring the money sucking bureaucracy that costs us money, more than we get in return. This saves money, something which Republicans do well, and helps all of us.

The second point is the poll which the Spokesman-Review conducted that placed Chenoweth behind by five points is not significant because Chenoweth's campaign is a grassroots organization. Her campaign can not be measured by money received or by polls. We will see the result in November, when voters will choose Chenoweth's responsibility and accountability over LaRocco.

If any student is willing to volunteer, I am the student chairman to elect Chenoweth. Please feel free to contact me if you are willing to help Chenoweth. Thank you.

Closets are not for people

Pain, confusion and fear summed up all my emotions I experienced when I was growing up. Pain, because I never seemed to fit in with any peer group, confusion because of the way I was feeling inside and fear because I was taught that my feelings were shameful. I was afraid to tell anyone I thought I was a lesbian.

With every ounce of strength I had, I tried to deny what I knew to be true. I sought Christian counsel from within and outside my church. I was told to pray hard and quote specific Scriptures when confronted with the temptation to be with a woman. I was told to confess my sins and God would heal me of this shameful disease. I was told God hated homosexuals. Since I didn't want God to hate me, I prayed, fasted, cried and pleaded with Him to take this struggle away from me. After 8 years of literal torture, I decided I would not buy into their lies anymore. I would no longer feel guilty or shameful for being what I know I am—a lesbian.

The Church made me feel guilty and shameful. I will not listen to them anymore.

I am amazed at the hatred I see from people who claim they follow God. I will not ask them to change like they asked me to change. We are all entitled to our own beliefs. Mine are no longer the teachings of the Church.

Since my acceptance of who I am, I no longer fear what others think. The most incredible experience I have had is waking up in the morning not feeling ashamed because I am a lesbian.

For the first time in my life I am excited about getting up in the morning and living life. I will not lie down and let someone else control my life AGAIN. Life is a journey, NOT a destination!

Big business makes rules

Recently, President Clinton was talking on nationwide television about how brutal Haiti's military leaders were. He talked about the horribly mutilated bodies found in the streets, the use of rape as a political weapon against dissidents and the killing of orphaned children.

Now, suddenly, they are not such bad guys after all and an amnesty has been granted to them. They are even allowed to still live in the country.

Can anyone imagine a leftist leader that was being deposed by U.S. forces being treated so compassionately? If this were Castro instead of Cedras, how would he be treated? How were Sukarno, Lumumba and Allende treated in the CIA-sponsored coups that overthrew their governments? They were killed!

It seems that a right-wing leader who helps the rich and powerful, underneath all the human rights abuses, is not really a vicious criminal, but just a little misguided and overzealous.

Governments run by big business, such as the United States, do not make interventions in foreign countries on behalf of the common people of that country or of the United States. They make interventions on behalf of big business!

Aristide will be restored, but only as a figurehead with no real power. He will never again be able to threaten the profits of the American assembly plants in Haiti by attempting to raise the minimum wage from 14 cents an hour to 50 cents an hour. The Haitian people lose again, as they have many times since their slave armies defeated Napoleon's troops in 1804.

An unassimilated race, 'The Chinese'

In 1908 a playwright coined the phrase "melting pot" to describe the extraordinary amalgam of races and cultures that characterized the United States, a nation of immigrants. But, the term "melting pot" virtually does not apply to Chinese descendants who have lived in Southeast Asia for many generations.

Especially in Indonesia, Malaysia, and Singapore, the Chinese are still unwilling to assimilate due to religious, cultural, and ethnic factors.

The mass migration of Chinese from southern China to Southeast Asia began in the 19th century and it ended in the early 20th century.

The migration was mainly caused by high unemployment rates, overpopulation, insufficient food, and unstable political situations in mainland China. Most of the migrants believed that migration would bring them fortune and improve their quality of life.

Due to their hard work and values, Southeast Asian Chinese has become a very prosperous race in the region. The 23 million ethnic Chinese distributed throughout Southeast Asia represent about 5% of the total population of the region. Not only are they one of the world's largest and most influential minorities, comparable with the 23 million of Hispanic origin who make up 9% of the United States population, for example, they also control economic power that is quite disproportionate to their numbers.

Nevertheless, the achievement of Chinese in Southeast Asia has triggered suspicion and hostility from others. There were occasional massacres of entire communities as far back as the 17th and 18th centuries, and resentment against Chinese economic dominance has still remained vivid to this day.

In order to overcome the Chinese economic dominance in the local economies, most of the Southeast Asian countries implemented discriminatory policies against the Chinese in the 1950s and 1960s. Some of the discriminatory policies have continued until the present.

Nowadays, the overwhelming majority of the Chinese that live in Southeast Asia were born in the region. Although most of them do not have emotional attachment towards China, significant numbers of them in countries like Malaysia and Singapore can still speak, read, and even write Chinese.

Due to their strong Chinese identity and hesitation to assimilate, some argue that the overseas

Chinese throughout the Southeast Asia are still Chinese at heart and in spirit, and they are linked to other Chinese in the world. Time Magazine reported last year that the Southeast Asian Chinese were content to grow quite prosperous in their adoptive countries, and they have knit themselves into a network of capital and enterprise.

According to Time Magazine, for the first time since a wave of immigrants left China in the 19th and early 20th centuries, the overseas Chinese are bonding with the mainland to create something like a nation without borders, linked by blood. Some other media even described the overseas Chinese as seeing China always first and foremost, with little or no sense of allegiance to the countries in which they live in.

In fact, most of the Southeast Asian Chinese, including myself, consider terms like "a nation without borders" and "linked by blood" totally untrue.

Although the patterns of social and economics behavior in this region are still organized along ethnic lines, we always regard ourselves as belonging to the countries in which we live.

There is definitely no doubt that our allegiance is to our own countries. We do not look at China as our real home; our home countries are our real home.

As the former Singaporean prime minister, Lee Kuan Yew said, "We are ethnic Chinese, but we must be honest and recognize that at the end of the day our fundamental loyalties are to our home country, not to China. After two or three generations away from China, we have become rooted in the country of our birth. Our stakes are in our home countries, not China where our ancestors came from.

The Chinese-Thai is a Thai, and in the end he wants Thailand to prosper so that his assets in Thailand can grow and his children's future in Thailand to be secure.

So too, Chinese-Singaporeans, Chinese-Indonesians, Chinese-Malaysians, and Chinese-Filipinos. They may invest and visit China frequently, but few want to make China their home.”

In addition to that, the official visits to China by Prime Minister Seri Mahathir Mohamad of Malaysia and President Fidel Ramos of the Philippines accompanied by large numbers of ethnic Chinese businessmen again reflect the loyalty of the Chinese toward their home countries in Southeast Asia.

ASUI holds first roving Open Mike

Christine Ermey
Staff

With a different location, three acts and about 60 spectators, ASUI Productions held its first "roving" Open Mike Night Saturday night in the Gault Upham Party Room.

Hosted by Resident Assistants Marcin Topolewski and Sue Pierce, Open Mike Night began with University of Idaho English graduate student, Scott Erickson, singing a humorous song he wrote called, "Why the man gets hit in the head with a pillow." Erickson also read one of his own poems, entitled "For what I did not come to see," which described life in the city of Boston.

Next up was Clark Carpenter, a very energetic and entertaining blues pianist.

Dressed in black jeans and a black leather jacket, Carpenter approached the piano and said, "I don't really know what I'm going to do tonight, I reckon I'll just jam. But you'll probably know the first song." He then jumped into Elvis Presley's "Heartbreak Hotel," which drew cheers from the audience. Afterwards, Carpenter said, "I reckon I could do a Chuck Berry song, but I don't know all the words to it, but it has the same shuffle and beat as the last song." Then he proceeded to sing "Nadine," which drew even more cheers from the crowd.

Last but certainly not least to perform was a trio calling themselves Ian, Isak and Jesse. When introducing this group, Pierce described their act as "music to groove on." Topolewski added, "Yeah, I guess they're pretty hip."

With Ian and Isak jamming on guitars and Jesse on the harmonica, this bluesy trio played everything from the Allman Brothers to Steppenwolf and everything in between.

Before their first song, Ian said, "I'd like to start out with a song that Jimi Hendrix wrote. I seem to like it because he was on drugs, and that's cool."

After a few more blues songs that drew a lot of applause from the audience, Ian switched to the piano for a song called "Gabriella."

Following "Gabriella," the trio did a song that Ian wrote about a girl who "dogged" him. "I burned a cross in her lawn," he said. "We started the fire with dynamite. Her house isn't standing, but that's cool."

Later in the act, Ian taunted the crowd by playing some country music. He asked the crowd if they'd like to hear some country music.

The response was pretty negative, but Ian said, "Too bad, you're gonna hear it anyway." They then began to play "Dixieland Delight" by Alabama.

Then about thirty seconds later Ian said, "Just kidding. I just wanted to prove that I could play country."

The trio then played a Grateful Dead song, then went right into the Allman Brothers' "Blue Sky," which featured a harmonica solo. As if that didn't cause the audience to get excited enough, the group closed with Steppenwolf's "Magic Carpet Ride" in which Ian had a "drum solo" on his guitar.

ASUI Open Mike Organizer Patty Crow said that she was pleased with the turnout for the first roving Open Mike. "We did okay for a start. Anytime you do something new it can be a risk," she said. "We had some solid performers. ASUI is trying to get the word out to make people more aware of our events."

Crow said that Open Mike Night was in the Gault Upham Party Room because they are experimenting. "We're trying to have events at other places to see if we draw a different crowd," she said. "Hopefully by having events at different locations, we can draw different people."

Neil Young returns

Mike Maas
Staff

There was a time when this world was a good place. When justice was dealt with an iron hand and love was true. This simple Eden existed before the tracks were laid, before our land became the victim of corporate hunger. Before the forests were cut down to build crap, before the death of self-respect and definitely before True Love became a proper noun.

Neil Young is a befuddled storyteller, longing for that old west while cursing expansion for driving its ideals away. On Sleeps With Angels, his latest album with Crazy Horse, he spins many an unsatisfied tale because nothing works. Not romance, not the latest blender you bought from the home-shopping network, not today's justice.

"Western Hero" begins with a wistful look at the long-coat-and-six-gun-wearing heroes of the old days and shifts to a WWII hero at Normandy, but ends with the line, "Open fire, here comes a Western Hero/ Standing there, big money in his hand," demonstrating commercialism's destruction of our heroic ideals. Who needs John Wayne when you have Snoop Dogg and his homies that don't require thought? Treasuring a hero is only good today if it makes us feel good and brings in the cash. Otherwise, it's stale rhetoric that may just cause us to look inside, to compare ourselves, and unfortunately most of us wouldn't stand the grilling.

Thankfully that doesn't stop Young. He uses the exact same melody from "Western Hero" for "Train of Love," connecting the decay of forward motion with the belief that the heart can lead us back. Love is a savior that still offers hope. "My Heart" and "A Dream That Can Last" bookend the album with saloon piano-based (complete with wrong notes) testimonies to this: "And all the lights were turned down low/ And no one wondered or had to go/ Out of the corner the angels say/ There is a better life for me someday." All we need to do is follow our hearts.

For now, though, we are still in this world. The haunted "Driveby" floats along in a seductive piano-guitar mist, getting under the skin far swifter than a headline or a G-Funk groove could ever do. "It's a random kind of thing," Young sings, "Came upon a delicate flower/ I can't believe a machine gun sings..." then the chant of "Driveby" as if he's whispering it to himself, attempting in vain to comprehend its purpose.

The music is a beautiful mix of simplicity and improvisation. The drums are thumpy and the guitars a little messy, but they are warm and sincere. It's easy to picture four guys behind their respective instruments playing from the gut. This is especially apparent in the loping groove of the epic "Change Your Mind," about the vulnerability we must feel to truly love. The lover is "the one whose magic touch can change your mind," protecting the loved from the evils of the world and the inadequacies she places on herself. But with the ability to do that comes the power to destroy and to control. This darkness is also the centerpiece for the title track, in which a man "Sleeps with Angels" and sends them running, haunting them forever.

While some of our ideals may be lost, the door is not completely closed. Sleeps With Angels stands suspended between a good world and one not too far away (and not so good). The beauty is in the stirring way it sits there, instilling in the listener both fear and hope... perhaps with those forces on our side we'll find where we went astray.

Music and food at Fire Station

Amy Ridenour
Lifestyles Editor

The music and the food will be homemade at Deary this weekend when amateur musicians jam at the fire station.

Whether or not you play an instrument, The "We Never Made It in the Music Business," Jam Session and Pot-Luck Supper may be an event you want to attend.

"Bring an instrument, or just come to eat, meet friends, listen to music and have fun. Roast turkey will be provided complete with drinks and table service. Don't worry if you are a little rusty. Remember if we were really good we'd be rich," says an advertisement for this event.

The turkey and homemade rolls will be provided by the organizer. All other food will be brought by participants. Those planning to attend should bring a favorite dish that goes well with turkey.

"My wife is cooking the turkey and my mom is fixing hot rolls, so even if you don't like music there are two good reasons to come and eat," said program organizer, Dave Lewis of Deary.

The music is planned as a community effort, featuring several Deary area musicians along with some talented people from the university community.

Attendees can expect to hear several types of music, including everything from Jimmy Buffett tunes to county western dance music to Irish folk songs.

"Everybody will have a chance to play their favorite songs, and play along on everybody else's favorite songs too," said Lewis. "We will have a set of drums and other assorted instruments for those who have a broken string or can't find their fiddle bow."

Deary is 25 miles east of Moscow on Highway 8. The fire station is on Main Street. Take the first left after the Conoco station.

The dinner starts at 6 p.m., with music to follow. The event is free and open to anyone who can find it.

For more information call Dave Lewis at 877-1555.

'Born dead' plain trash

Matt Baldwin
Staff

All I can say is "why?" Take a rapper and mix it in with heavy guitar and monotonous drum beats and you get the band Body Count. This band, headed by the infamous rapper Ice-T, has unfortunately released a second album called Born Dead.

Born Dead sounds like a person who has learned one chord on a guitar and turned it into a song. The one chord songs are not the worst piece of "music" on this CD; this album includes some very basic drum beats which repeat over and over in sequence to the heavy, single chord guitar rock.

Born Dead is the second release by Ice-T. Sometimes when I see a musician stretch their talents I see failure and other times I see success. This time though, I saw failure.

There is a total of 12 tracks, all of which sound like each other. The first song is a full two minutes and 14 seconds of two lines: "Bodycount! / Body muthaf---n' count!"

I found this album to be a brainless piece of work. This type of "heavy metal" should go back to the rap scene and stop desecrating the good name that heavy metal bands have built.

This album is laced with the single infamous four letter word

I---. I'm not saying there is anything wrong with that word. After all it has become a part of the English language, but I think if someone is going to write an album they would want to come up with some better words for the lyrics. This isn't rap we're dealing with, this is rock. Most rock songs don't have that word in every song, and if they do at least the the band knows how to play their instruments.

The only good thing I could find on this album, if it is possible to find anything good, was the dedication on the insert.

"This album is dedicated to all the people of color throughout the entire world; Asian, Latino, Native American, Hawaiian, Italian, Persian, African, Aboriginal and any other nationality that white supremacists would love to see born dead."

Other than that, the album was just plain trash. I strongly suggest that everyone in the free world should avoid Body Count's Born Dead like it was the plague.

I find it hard to imagine why Virgin Records ever produced and published this album.

It is available at most music shops, but of course, if I owned the music shop, I would pull this album from the shelves.

The kickoff return tied an Idaho record.

Emily Walpole — senior, No. 5 singles player, Kauai, Hawaii.

Walpole was the deciding factor in the UI women's tennis victory over the Montana Grizzlies. She defeated Lindsey Morgan 6-4, 7-5 to secure the Vandals' 5-4 team victory over UM Saturday afternoon.

New outdoors programs offered

Intermediate rockclimbing

Oct. 15-16. This is an excellent opportunity to advance past top rope climbing. There's a two day instructional trip that introduces to climbers the skills needed to lead climb. Participants must be comfortable in top rope climbing. Open pool session

Wednesdays, Oct. 12 from 7-9:30 p.m. at the UI Swim Center. Open to anyone, it allows experienced kayakers to hone their skills in a warm, indoor environment and beginners to practice their "Eskimo roll." Kayaks are provided on a first come basis. Beginners are required to attend an orientation given the first 20 minutes of the session.

Sea kayak instructional trip

Sign-up has already started. The trip will be held from Oct. 14-16. This trip is a first for the ASUI Outdoor Program. The trip features kayaking in Central Washington. This is an excellent chance to learn how to prepare for extended sea kayaking trips.

River canyon backpacking trip

The trip will start on Oct. 21 and will last until Oct. 23. This is a cooperative trip open to everyone. The area visited will be decided on at the pre-trip meeting. Sign-ups began Monday, so come and reserve your spot.

Unlimited depth erodes Eagles

Keith Neal and Josh Fetter — unable to play because of injuries suffered in practice.

Ryan Woolverton is wobbly after an ultimate frisbee injury.

Arnold Gunn and Eric Hisaw go down in the first quarter with knee injuries. Hisaw may be out for the season.

Freshman quarterback Brian Brennan takes the helm.

Eastern Washington leads 12-0 late in the first half. Idaho is held scoreless in the first quarter for the first time in 13 games.

For crying out loud! What's next — a John L. Smith heart attack?

Surprisingly this didn't occur, but the 4th-ranked University of Idaho football team was in poor shape Saturday afternoon before a slew of key plays by the special teams and the offense helped oust the Eagles 40-15 before 5,873 fans at Woodward Stadium in Cheney.

Embittered EWU head coach Mike Kramer said, "Our kids will look at the video and look at the missed chances and it will haunt them now forever."

Kramer said, with all the preparation and hard work in the last week, that to lose by this much was "savage."

Idaho's record stands at an unblemished 5-0 and 2-0 in the Big Sky.

EWU (2-3, 1-2) carried much of the momentum until Jake Greenslit blocked an Eagles punt which was recovered on the 7-yard line with 1:19 remaining in the half.

Senior Vandal linebacker Duke Garrett (37) sacks EWU quarterback Todd Bennett for a four yard loss in Saturday's 40-15 Idaho victory. In addition to his sack, Garrett recorded five tackles. Jeff Curtis

The streak goes on. The Idaho Vandal volleyball team is redefining the definition of great start after hammering Big Sky foes Weber State and Northern Arizona in straight games last weekend. The Wildcats put up little defense in falling 16-14, 15-7, 15-7 Friday night.

The Lumberjacks, who had beaten Idaho in five of their previous 6 meetings, fell even harder Saturday night 15-6, 15-4, 15-9.

Against Weber State, the Vandals sputtered early in the first set. Idaho fell behind 6-11, but rallied back thanks to three straight service aces by Bulgarian sensation Tzvetelina Yanchulova.

"We were fortunate to win that first game," Idaho coach Tom Hilbert said. "We didn't really pass that well and we were fortunate to get those aces when we

On the next play, running back Erriden May went untouched for a 7-yard score — the 26th consecutive game he has scored a touchdown — to cut the deficit to 12-10. "I sensed at halftime that we didn't have enough confidence in ourselves to be with these guys," Kramer said.

May and counterpart Joel Thomas dominated the opening drive of the second half, rushing for three straight first downs. Thomas capped off the quick, five-play opening drive with a 1-yard touchdown plunge.

"I'm glad he's graduating," Kramer said of May. "God, he's a dad."

May finished with 114 yards on 10 carries.

EWU, third in Division I-AA in offense, surrendered 237 yards. Idaho, fifth nationally against the offense, held the Eagles to 37 yards on 22 carries.

"We have no running game," Kramer said.

After the Thomas score, EWU trailed with an impressive drive of their own, but could only muster a field goal.

The ensuing kickoff resulted in a 100 yard return by Montrell Williams increasing the Vandals' lead to 23-15.

"It just sucked the blood out of us," Kramer said.

Williams replaced the injured Gunn in the first half and ended up with an interception, a blocked field goal and four tackles.

Kramer was not enthused by EWU's special teams. "That's a bad investment for us. We put a lot of time into it. It seems like we're wasting our time."

Brennan, meanwhile, had worries of his own. In the first Idaho offensive series, Hisaw went down with a torn ligament in his right knee. According to Hisaw, his cleats got caught in the grass and he heard a "pop."

"It was just like I got shot," he said.

Brennan admirably replaced Hisaw, completing 16 of 24 passes for 237 yards.

Kramer said, "Their ability to reach into their depth and take a quarterback off the bench and play this well is astounding."

Brennan said he was grateful for Hisaw, who counseled him on the sidelines. Brennan added that he was extremely nervous in the first half, but began to settle down after halftime. This was his first real action since high school.

The loss was a resounding blow to the Eagles' title hopes.

"We knew a conference championship had to go through Moscow," Kramer said.

The gimpy Woolverton had a tough time, too. He missed three field goals in the first half — two from 47 yards and one from 43. However, Woolverton nailed two field goals in the second half.

"That's adversity, that's growing up, that's football," Smith said of Woolverton.

"We're just going to have to count on the next guy stepping up and carrying the role," he added.

That may not be so bad. We could have lost Smith, after all, to heart failure.

did."

Idaho (18-1, 5-0 Big Sky) may not have passed very well, but the Wildcats were not any better digging just 32 balls compared to the Vandals 45 and hitting just .117 in the match while Idaho pounded the ball at a .216 clip.

Mindy Rice and Yanchulova combined for 30 kills to pace the Idaho attack.

NAU may have been a thorn in the Vandals' back in years past, but that didn't matter this time around as the Vandals pummeled the Lumberjacks (10-7, 2-4 BSC) with their varied offense.

With 26 kills and 25 errors the 'Jacks made more errors than a shortstop without a mitt. That combination produced only a .010 hitting percentage for the Flagstaff, Ariz. kids.

Brittany Van Haverbeke was unconscious for the Vandals, collecting 16 kills and hitting .480 with seven digs and six blocks. Rice and Yanchulova chipped in 11 kills in the winning effort.

The Vandals jumped to a 7-0 lead in the first set and cruised to the win.

The second set was more of the same as Idaho took an early 7-1 advantage and finished off the game with six straight points. NAU put up a fight in game three, trailing just 10-9 at one point, but once again the Idaho offense responded with the final five points to clinch the victory.

No. 20 Idaho has won 11 straight matches after falling to No. 19 Wisconsin in mid-September. Last weekend's win moves the Vandals home winning streak to 22.

Soccer evens record to 3-3-1

The University of Idaho Soccer Club slipped past Washington State University's "World" team by a 2-1 margin Sunday afternoon at Guy Wicks Field.

The WSU club drew first blood on a volley shot by team captain Embola Ernest on an assist from Burhan Girgin, but UI rallied later in the first half on a shot by Owen Vassell off a cross from Ron Rau.

In the second half, the midfield artistry of Downen Raynor along with strong defensive play in the middle by stopper Pat Kirk and sweeper Dave Davis brought the World's offense to a halt. Goalie Doug Sitton also played well.

Lenford O'Garro fired in the game winner midway through the second half on an assist from Rau.

The UI club improves their record to 3-3-1.

The Idaho club is scheduled to play next Saturday afternoon in Lewiston and Sunday at Guy Wicks against Eastern Oregon State College.
