Homecoming tradition lives on

Zachary Craig-Works
Staff

The grand university tradition of the homecoming celebration lives on at the University of Idaho this year. This year's homecoming theme will be "...And Here We Have Idaho."

Although the first official homecoming event—the Tradition Hunt—began last Wednesday, homecoming activities will go on through Saturday.

Tonight, at 7 p.m. are the bonfire and pep rally. They will take place in the plaza between the University Classroom Center and the UI Library. There will also be a homecoming concert at 8 p.m. Jazz Band I, Jazz Choir I and the UI Wind Ensemble will all be performing. It will be held in the University Auditorium and is free.

Tomorrow, homecoming weekend activities will start with a breakfast from 7:00-9 a.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. Tickets will be available at the door. UI cheerleaders and the Marching Band will be present. After breakfast, participants will march to the parade site downtown.

The Homecoming Parade is the other major event on Saturday morning. According to Vandal Marching Band Director Al Gimberling, there will be 16 area marching bands participating in the parade in addition to the 155-member Vandal Marching Band. Gimberling said the bands come from area elementary and high schools. He added that there will be a total of about 1100 band members participating in Homecoming.

According to Gimberling, all of the bands involved will participate in a sing along with the crowd at the homecoming game. Gimberling said, "This makes homecoming even more of an extravaganza."

The parade will also have at least 66 entries from various local organizations and on-campus groups. According to parade committee co-chair Jon Smith, even more entries are expected. He said the parade is getting more community participation this year.

Smith said campus living groups, both Greek and residence halls, will also be participating along with various other UI clubs and organizations.

Traditionally, the purpose of homecoming was to allow university alumni an opportunity to

Finalists announced

Michael Nelson, Tom Cuthbert, Tim Helmke, Jeremy Chase, Chris Taylor, Tucker Shaw, Paul Katovich and Matt Meyers have all been selected as finalists for the homecoming king contest this year.

Finalists for homecoming queen included Kathy Cvanara, Jenni Mudge, Kim Bauer, Tricia Durgin, Jennifer McFarland, Heather Erickson, Michelle Mahurin and Sara Stoltz.

Interviews of the finalists conducted by a board comprised of students, staff and faculty took place last Monday. The interviews will be a determining factor in selecting the homecoming couple. The homecoming king and queen will be announced at the bonfire tonight at 7 p.m.

Domestic violence a problem on the Palouse

Shelby Dopp

The much publicized murder of Nicole Brown Simpson has had at least one benefit: the public has become more aware of domestic violence.

The Palouse area has seen an increase in domestic violence reports since Simpson's murder, according to Jackie Grimesey, executive director for Alternatives to Violence of the Palouse. ATVP serves both Latah and Whitman counties.

"In the last three months, in Idaho, we have served 110 new victims of domestic violence," Grimesey said. "In Washington in the last quarter, we have served 163 new victims."

This is a substantial increase compared to the last year. ATVP helped 264 clients in Idaho and 321 in Washington during the entire fiscal year.

October is National Domestic Violence Awareness Month. It is a time to remember the women who were killed by a spouse, boyfriend or an ex. It is also a time to think of those women who are still living in domestic violence situations.

Wednesday is recognized by Idaho as the day to recognize those who are still suffering from and those who have died as a result of domestic violence. Wednesday is also the first anniversary of the death of Joanne Romero. Romero was killed by her boyfriend, William Hagedorn, last year in Moscow. Romero was in the process of leaving Hagedorn when he shot and killed her.

"Seventy-five percent of women are killed by their spouse or partner at the time she decides to leave," Kim Bouchard said. Bouchard is in charge of the education program at the University of Idaho Women's Center.

Domestic violence is an ongoing problem in the U.S. Twenty percent of all murders of women happen in domestic violence situations. Thirteen percent of the murders are committed by the spouse. The statistics are even worse in Idaho—41 percent of all murder cases of women can be directly tied to domestic violence, according to Grimesey.

"Half of all couples will experience domestic violence," she said. "This includes half of the couples in Moscow, half of the couples on the University of

Clock ticking on Clinton's vows

Saul Friedman
Newsday

WASHINGTON — While Washington anxiously watches Haiti and Iraq, the clock began ticking last weekend on another sticky foreign policy challenge—a presidential promise to seek an end to the U.N. arms embargo against Bosnia.

And according to Bosnian and U.S. sources, President Clinton is expected to keep his promise as early as this week by introducing a resolution in the Security Council to lift the embargo in six months if the Bosnian Serbs have not agreed to a pending peace plan.

The outlook for passage is in doubt because of opposition on the council from Britain and France, who fear their peacekeeping troops would be threatened and say they'll be withdrawn if such a resolution is approved. And Russia, which has generally supported the Serbs, has voiced its opposition.

Still, when it appeared that Congress might vote for a unilateral lifting of the embargo, Clinton pledged to lawmakers in August that if the Bosnian Serbs did not agree by last Saturday to the peace plan negotiated by the U.N. contact group—the United States, Russia, Britain, France and Germany—Washington would introduce such a resolution within two weeks.

Despite allies' opposition and warnings from the United Nations, a State Department official told Newsday, "There will be no wiggling out of our commitment. There will be a resolution, probably within a week."

On Monday, State Department spokeswoman Christine Shelly confirmed that Washington is working on a draft resolution to be submitted to the council within two weeks. She also said the contact group will meet in New York this week to discuss the resolution and new moves to persuade the Bosnian Serbs to agree to the group's peace plan, which would partition Bosnia.

At the United Nations, Omar Sacirbey, first secretary in the Bosnian mission, said, "Anybody can introduce a resolution. It's a very small step. The question is how hard will the U.S. fight for it? And if it is passed, will the allies and the United Nations keep their commitment?"

For several weeks, the United States appears to have been toughening its position on Bosnia in talks with European allies and U.N. officials in the region.

Defense Secretary William Perry called on the United Nations and NATO to take stronger military action against the Bosnian Serbs to protect Bosnian government enclaves such as Sarajevo, where the Serbs have again cut off supply routes.

Richard Holbrooke, the new and more assertive assistant secretary of state for European affairs, who also visited the war-torn area, has been in intensive negotiations with Britain, France and the Russians to get support for an embargo-lifting resolution at the United Nations, State Department sources said.

Sven Alkalaj, the Bosnian ambassador to Washington, told Newsday, "The U.S. has been devoting considerable time trying to reach an agreement on a resolution. The U.S. will keep its promise, but I don't know to what extent it will...get support."

Concerned for their peacekeepers, Britain and France have argued against a resolution that would set a strict deadline. But Alkalaj said, "There must be a deadline. We must stop this business of giving the Serbs a rolling, never-ending deadline."

The Clinton administration is reluctant to introduce a resolution that Britain, France or Russia could veto. But senior administration advisers have urged that Washington take a hard line and force them to follow U.S. leadership or cast a veto.

Haiti still without premier

Tod Robberson
The Washington Post

PORT-AU-PRINCE, Haiti—President Jean-Bertrand Aristide dodged questions Wednesday about his pending choice of prime minister and plans for the nation's economic recovery, although he acknowledged a sense of public urgency for him to confront those issues.

In his first news conference since the U.S. military restored him to the National Palace on Saturday, a jovial Aristide switched easily from French to English to Spanish as he deflected questions from hundreds of Haitian and foreign journalists.

Aristide has been working with a team of international advisers to promote a take-charge image amid what he acknowledged today are increasing public demands for action on pressing economic issues. But aides and close associates express skepticism about his performance.

At least one favored candidate for the prime minister's post withdrew his name from consideration this week, reportedly to avoid the "aggravation" of working with Aristide.

"The best thing to come out of the conference today was the food," a government official said dryly as he watched journalists devour trays of appetizers served during Aristide's remarks.

Aristide offered few concrete proposals to create jobs, alleviate a critical gasoline shortage and halt a wave of looting and violence aimed at supporters of the 1991 military coup that forced him into exile.

"The man is a priest. So by training he's going to be long on speeches and short on specifics," said an associate of the president.

Gasoline prices now exceed $30 per gallon—up from $20 a gallon on Monday—and are nearing the highest levels since the United Nations imposed a blockade of the country last December in an effort to force three military coup leaders to step down.

Aristide's return following the coup leaders' departure led to cancellation of the U.N. sanctions Sunday. But so far few ships have called Haitian harbors to bring food and fuel. The first oil tanker to arrive since the blockade was lifted Wednesday in the suburb of Carrefour carrying diesel fuel, gasoline and kerosene, Commerce Minister Louis Dejoie told the Reuter news agency.

Aristide acknowledged Wednesday that inflation is exacerbated by the current shortages and said it was having a particularly harsh effect on parents of schoolchildren. But the president warned that problems could get worse before they get better.

"If the cost of living is high, it is going to be tough on parents to meet educational needs. Transportation will be difficult as long as fuel prices remain high, and there will be hurdles for both students and parents who are just emerging from three hellish years" of military rule, he said.

"These matters have directly contributed to insecurity and looting," he added. He called the current lawlessness "a concocted effort to discredit our plans for democracy and reconciliation."

Haiti's reviled national police force virtually disintegrated after the Sept. 19 deployment here of 19,000 U.S. Army troops, who have been performing most police duties across the country.

But until Aristide names a new cabinet and prime minister, the Parliament is not expected to vote on a law that would formally separate the military and police, which is required before a new police force can be formed.

Business leaders this week said that Aristide's failure to name a replacement for caretaker Prime Minister Robert Malval was a primary cause of private-sector delays in reopening factories and hiring workers.

One government insider argued that Aristide has been delayed in making personnel and policy decisions because of the need to get his living and working quarters in order after a ransacking by their previous occupants.

"The palace had no phone lines and no air conditioning. They even took the toilet bowls," the source said.

Aristide refused to discuss specifics about his choice of prime minister, although he said the man or woman he selects will face a number of tasks over the next 120 days.

return to campus to see old friends and relive old times. However, in recent years the celebration has changed to give students a reason to celebrate. According to Homecoming Committee Chair Tim Helmke, this year is different. "It's different from years past," Helmke said. This year there is less involvement by the Greek System, and a more balanced membership on the committee. According to Helmke, the committee of about 20 has an equal balance between Greeks, independents and off-campus students.

Helmke said there will be more events geared toward returning alumni this year. Those events include class reunions and an alumni breakfast. The classes of 1954, 1968, 1969, and 1970 are all having their class reunions this weekend.

According to Helmke, the Alumni Office made a big effort to get alumni to come back to UI.

In addition to the committee itself, other UI organizations helped put together Homecoming 1994. The Student Alumni Relations Board organized and arranged the Friday night bonfire, the Saturday morning breakfast and the Homecoming royalty competition. The ASUI Programs Board also contributed in helping to organize the events.

According to Helmke, homecoming has been a long time in the planning. He said the committee has been working since May to make sure Homecoming 1994 is a memorable one.

Fossils found on future campus site

Dennis Sasse

Staff

Neal Farmer, a University of Idaho graduate student in geology, found fossils in a 15 million year old lava flow on Sweet Avenue.

The site is an area undergoing remediation to remove soil contamination by previous tenants. Farmer went to the site after the work crews had left for the day.

Farmer was poking around the site Oct. 13, photographing various geologic structures.

"I was just curious," he said. His curiosity paid off when he found three good fossilized specimens—two leaves, a pine needle and a possible acorn seed. Farmer found more fossils Oct. 18. Magnolia, oak and sequoia leaves have been identified, and there has been a tentative identification of a cypress twig.

Bill Rember, UI postdoctoral fellow, who is working to positively date the fossils said, "I can verify these as Miocene fossils."

The Miocene epoch lasted about 21 million years and started 25 million years ago. The Miocene was characterized by warmer winters and cooler summers. Farmer said, "There were less extremes in temperature." The climate was similar to that found in the southeastern United States.

Farmer said these are the first documented fossils found within Moscow city limits. "Germer Construction was nice enough to pull out a few scoops of clay for study. They may well be the only samples we get out of the sight," said Farmer. The samples were removed by a backhoe which may have damaged remaining fossils.

Farmer said the soil decontamination work and proposed temporary parking lot will not damage the fossils. UI officials have plans to purchase the Sweet avenue site. "I think there is a higher probability of vertebrate fossils being found here than in Clarkia," said Farmer. Farmer reasoned this due to the fact that the Sweet avenue site is part of a flood plain. The site near Clarkia was formed by a lake.

"The probability of (vertebrates) being preserved in a deep lake is less than that of a shallow flood plain." Animals were more likely to live on a flood plain because the water was shallow and there was more abundant food. It is also a more likely spot to find vertebrate fossils because animals rarely venture out into the deeper water of lakes. Farmer said, "The deposits are there due to the flooding of Paradise creek."

UI geology classes currently go over 50 miles to view the geology of the Clarkia beds. Farmer said it is ironic geology classes have been walking over these fossils for years on their way to Clarkia. "There's great geology down there, classes could go down and see lots of neat stuff."

The find is unusual because nothing has ever been found and documented in this area. Farmer said this is a "fairly significant find. It is not going to be the quality of Clarkia. We were hoping it was going to, but it is still good and research and science could be done."

Internships available for spring semester

Adam Gardels

Staff

University of Idaho students of all majors have the opportunity to participate in spring semester internships at the Idaho capital in Boise during the 1995 legislative session.

As part of a comprehensive Idaho Government Internship Program, prospective students can choose from 12 different organizations for internships.

Each spring five to ten students have received real-world experience from this program, said Landon Curry, UI associate professor of Political Science.

"The program provides students with a unique opportunity to develop expertise in a wide range of public policy issues and to develop contacts which often lead to career opportunities. Students typically analyze policy, monitor legislative committee work, and develop reports," she said.

Students interested in an internship can contact Curry at 885-7401 or Director of Cooperative Education Alice Pope at 885-5822.

Micron to build new facility

Shelby Dopp
Staff

Micron Semiconductor, Inc., is planning to expand their plant in Boise, Micron Technology President and Chief Executive Officer Steve Appleton announced Tuesday.

Plans for the 900,000 square-foot manufacturing facility will cost the corporation $1.3 billion dollars and create about 4,000 new jobs.

With these plans in process, it could make the debate even hotter about whether Boise State University should have its own engineering program rather than expanding the University of Idaho's extension program in Idaho's state capitol.

"There is going to be a demand all over Idaho for courses taught in engineering," Idaho State Representative James "Doc" Lucas said. Lucas represents Latah County in the state legislature.

According to Lucas, engineering courses should be taught by one school to avoid fights over funding. "I think we're (UI) ready," Lucas said.

Associate Dean of the College of Engineering Weldon Tovey said, "Micron has been making a lot of noise about making a program in Boise rather than expanding the University of Idaho's program."

The decision should be left up to the State Board of Education, Tovey said. The State Board of Education will consider appointment of a task force to assess statewide needs for engineering education on Monday and Tuesday at its meeting in Pocatello.

"It's pretty iffy at this point," Tovey said. "The effects will not be known for about four years when the (new Micron) facility is completed."

"Certainly, there is a need for engineering in Boise," he said, "but we [UI] are supplying those needs."

"We're eager to meet the needs of engineering students," Tovey said.

In September, Micron offered $6 million if the state would agree to a separate college of engineering at BSU. Instead, the State Board of Education gave its endorsement to a cooperative engineering education plan between UI and BSU, according to Wednesday's edition of the Moscow-Pullman Daily News.

As part of the plan BSU and UI have proposed spending about $1.5 million each, over the next two years, to bring the Boise program to a higher level, the Daily News said.

The plan calls for BSU to bolster its lower division pre-engineering courses and UI to expand its mechanical and civil engineering programs at its Boise center.

VIOLENCE

Idaho campus, half of the couples in the state of Idaho."

"One third of these couples will experience domestic violence as an ongoing process," she said.

Domestic violence does not discriminate among age, race and class, Betsy Thomas said. Thomas is director of the Women's Center.

"The only area where domestic violence does not run even is gender," Thomas said. "There are battered men but the numbers are not even close to fifty percent."

Domestic violence is one of the most common of all crimes. An act of domestic violence occurs every 18 seconds in the United States. Each year, 6 million women are beaten by their husbands or boyfriends. Unfortunately, 4,000 of these women are killed.

Battering is the single major cause of injury to women—more frequent than auto accidents, muggings and rapes combined, according to a handout from ATVP.

Over 1 million women seek medical help each year for injuries caused by domestic violence. It is said that victims of domestic violence are three times more likely to be victimized again than are victims of other types of crime.

According to the National Crime Victimization Survey Report released by the U.S. Department of Justice, six times as many women victimized by intimates as those victimized by strangers did not report the crime for fear of reprisal from the offender. The report was based on data from 1987-1991. A new report will be released this Fall based on 1993 data.

According to a pamphlet from ATVP, domestic violence works in a three-cycle denial process. The number one cycle is tension building. In this cycle, the woman denies she is being abused and even blames herself for the abuse. The man blames the tension on the woman and will deny responsibility for his actions.

The second stage is explosion. The woman denies her injuries, even though they are minor at this stage. She does not seek police or medical help. The man, again, blames it on her and stress.

The final stage is called the honeymoon. The woman believes it will not happen again. She minimizes her injuries believing it could have been worse. The man also believes it will not happen again.

These three stages occur over and over again until the problem becomes more serious.

A candlelight vigil will be held in Friendship Square, downtown Moscow, on Wednesday at 6 p.m. Everyone is encouraged to attend. The vigil is a time to remember women who have died, to celebrate those who left the violence and to think of those still in violent relationships. The vigil is dedicated to the memory of Romero.

There are people willing and able to help victims of domestic violence at the Women's Center at 885-6616 or ATVP at 883-HELP in Moscow and 332-HELP in Pullman.

Students register to vote

UI students took advantage of voter registration booths Tuesday and Wednesday by surprising planners with a large turnout.

About 300 people registered at the booths set up at the library and at the Wallace Complex, said Damon Darakjy, Student Issues Board chairperson, who expected about one-third of that number.

"I felt it went very well at the library. We need more participation by young people in our political process," said Dana Idol, a deputy clerk who helped register voters at one of the booths.

Students who still need to register can do so at the county court house before Oct. 28. To register to vote one needs to county residence for at least 30 days.

Darakjy was very impressed with the turn-out and said, "I'm going to see if I can get the county to come back with more booths (before registration closes)."

Argonaut brings readers new balance

The history of the Argonaut dates back to 1898, when it was first created with $25 and a vision. Throughout the years, the Argonaut has changed in many ways, though the vision has remained the same: to bring the university the highest quality news coverage possible.

This goal has been achieved through coverage of everything from Homecoming to World Wars, with a healthy dollop of student issues tucked between the Argonaut's pages. This semester, the entire Argonaut staff is attempting to meet that goal by offering the students a balance of coverage.

Between this fall's pages, readers have found exclusive Argonaut interviews with Idaho candidates, including those running for the U.S. Senate and Idaho Governor's office. We've covered the State Board of Education, Proposition One, and domestic violence. Closer to home, we've captured successful Idaho sports teams and recorded the initial stages of a move to the Big West Conference. We've covered new changes to Greek Rush, student services of all kinds and renovations to the Student Union.

Today, we're covering our nation and world in an in-depth manner this paper hasn't been able to in years—we've accessed the Los Angeles Times-Washington Post News Service. The decision to purchase a news service was a hard one to make, with the question, "Will the Argonaut sacrifice university coverage for the events of the world?"

We don't think so.

We believe that all news is important to UI students, and that to ignore the major happenings of the world will lead to a level of ignorance students tucked away in Latah County will have to face. Covering the campus strictly with homecoming results and student elections creates a dangerous balance toward a world that revolves around the Administration Building.

With the news service, we'll have access to the two of the most prominent papers on either side of this continent—that equates to true coverage. Students will find the Nation/World page on page two every Tuesday. In today's debut issue, readers will find two stories—one about Haiti President Jean-Bertrand Aristide's difficulties in taking charge of his country, the other about President Clinton's vow to end Bosnia's arms embargo. We toyed with the idea of running extensive O.J. Simpson trial coverage, complete with graphics—just because we can—but elected to pass up the media circus this time. We believe everyone's had enough of Simpson.

The university students will always remain, however, our primary focus. For instance, our readers will never find a news service story on the front page—in our minds, the campus is more important.

America is a box of chocolates...

Sitting in front of me is an article I received in the mail with the forbidding title "Why Young Americans Have Lost Substantial Interest in Entering the Fields of Science and Technology." In it, a leading educator has dissected and analyzed the reasons why America seems to have lost the lead in scientific ability and skills. Although this conclusion is certainly up for debate (most, if not all, of the recent Nobel laureates in science were American, for example), it is true that America has slipped in her once-overwhelming global advantage.

Most of the article looks at simply the educational aspects of the problem, which is all well and good, as most of the problems probably arise from the poor presentation of "hard" areas like math and physics. However, there is another aspect to this problem, an aspect that most people won't admit, let alone discuss.

This country fears intelligence. Let's look at this from a popular culture standpoint, where this anti-intellectual bias is most evident. Quick, name one sci-fi flick where trouble was not unleashed by some scientist presented as some out-of-touch lunatic. The classic stereotypical example is the '50s classic The Thing. TV shows present the same scenarios. Scientists (which are generally represented by either physicists or biologists) are classified as either ineffectual, spaced-out, or coldly psychotic. How often has a scientist been seen as a hero or at least a major good guy? Don't strain your brain answering; even sympathetic scientists, like Jeff Goldblum's portrayal in The Fly, often turn out to be at best ineffectual, at worst another menace.

Another aspect of this anti-intellect prejudice is a property of our educational system. Mathematics, almost from the start, is presented through poor teaching and national prejudice as being the hardest subject in school, with science as a close second. Every time I tell someone that I'm a math major, I invariably get the same response: "Oh, I could never do math. It's too hard," or "Wow, you must be really smart," or my personal favorite, "Eww!"

Every time I hear that, I want to slap them upside their defective little heads. Math is a language for expressing concepts, much the same as English or Swahili or C++ or FORTRAN. It's just one hell of a lot more logical and in a different notation, that's all. If you can stretch your mind around the mind-numbing complexities of A, B, C, D, etc., you can master +, -, integrals and other mystical mathematical objects.

I once had someone tell me they thought math was totally beyond them, and then turn around and say something to someone else in French, which is a lot less structured and comprehensible than mathematics (I know what I'm talking about; I studied French for almost five years). If you can understand the rudimentary concepts of logic or can grasp the rules of another language, you can learn mathematics or physics or any of the so-called "hard" sciences. It's that simple.

But this attitude continues. People remain prejudiced against the mathematical and scientific disciplines, and the knowledge gap widens. Meanwhile, the Japanese and Germans, just to name two, keep pushing knowledge to their children and closing the global gap. We watch Forrest Gump; they do their homework. Who'll be on top in coming years?

Even math-poor people can figure it out.

What ever happened to the value of an education?

Somewhere along the line, we forgot something. We forgot to enjoy life. I don't know how or why it happened, but it did.

See, I'm in my fourth year of college. I have a very high cumulative GPA, a few honor societies, and other academic related awards.

But there's just one thing: I don't have anything to show for it. I don't feel as though I've really learned anything, except how to cram for an exam and spew forth meaningless information.

For the past three years, I have sat in classrooms, frantically taking notes, only to regurgitate them on an exam, and forget them three weeks later.

I'm rather disillusioned with this university, and college in general.

What happened to all the fun we were supposed to have? What happened to all the good times we were supposed to experience? What happened to all the opportunities we were supposed to get in college?

Sure, I've had my share of laughs, I've done some fun and interesting things, and many opportunities have opened up for me. But it doesn't mean anything anymore. Maybe I'm just in a "senior slump," but these feelings have been festering inside of my brain for quite awhile now, and they have formed themselves somewhat coherently in my consciousness only recently.

As I sat in one of my classes the other day I was almost in tears. I just sat there, mechanically writing down information. What is wrong with this? It's a hard question to answer, but I'll try my best.

I've always had a hard time in school because of the way I learn information. I need to interact with it, discuss it, think about it, enjoy it. I cannot just sit in class and write down meaningless details only to memorize them at a later date and spill them out semi-consciously in a blue book or a scantron.

Late the other night I walked into my dining room, and there were so many people in my living group studying, memorizing, sweating, and staying up all night for a midterm examination. There is something wrong when college students spend the majority of their time studying this way. And it's not just during midterms. Anytime there are tests, this happens.

Isn't there some other way to measure the acquisition of relevant information instead of spitting up details that have been jammed down our throats in a less than friendly and non-conducive to learning environment?

We are nothing more than a bunch of lab mice; the maze is our college career, the cheese is graduation. I can further break that analogy down and explain that the maze is the exams we endure, the cheese the "A" which we hope to earn. Does anyone else feel this way?

I think that we need to find a better way to evaluate our learning, we need to find a better way to learn. There's something wrong with our present system when I walk by several classrooms in the Administration building and there are many students staring off into space, looking out the window, or even worse, sleeping.

As a future educator, if this is what I saw in my classroom everyday, I would realize that a change was desperately needed! Maybe I'm just a know-it-all senior with strong opinions and not much to back them up with, but this is something I know I am qualified to criticize. I live this story every day of my life.

I have never been so disappointed in myself or an entire institution in my whole life. Not only are students forced to endure long exhausting lecture classes, but they must stay up at night memorizing lists and terms and concepts only to forget them a week or two later. Is this learning? Is this worth paying $7000 a year to do? Are we really going to be prepared for the future?

I ask myself these questions often. I wonder if I have wasted time here at this university.

I am issuing a challenge to students and faculty: Speak up, don't be afraid to say that we need a change. Don't be afraid to ask that your needs be met. Don't go through college like a robot; get up each day and live. Don't be ruled by your class syllabi. Interact, think, discuss, imagine, feel, and learn.

Education is not a thing to be wasted. It is a privilege, it is an honor. Let's make it better for each other.

Educators: listen to your students. Don't be afraid to try new things. Students: speak up and tell your professors if you don't like what's happening.

I would hate to think that so many bright, intelligent people go through four years of college and end up with the same disappointed, let down feeling that I have.

UI, wake up: it's time for a change.

Letters to the Editor

Equal time for family values

I don't usually write letters to the editor, but I feel it is time your paper gives equal time to all views on the Proposition One / homosexuality issue. First, since the beginning of humanity, societies of mankind have defined what was considered abhorrent behavior in some form of code or law. Perhaps this quality even defines humanity. It works against the chances of survival and procreation to condone such practices as murder, dishonesty, and homosexuality...this seems like obvious common sense!

Isn't the real issue here protection from over-zealous proponents of 'equality for all' giving special rights to those who sodomize each other? I do question the necessity to enact a law of this type in our state at this point in time, but just wanted to get a clear picture of the issue.

Second, I would like to address the young woman who wrote in on 'Coming Out Day,' expressing her disillusionment with religion with regard to dealing with her feelings of homosexuality. I don't believe God offers us a magic bullet that will make us all perfect. I do, however, appeal to you not to give up on what Jesus Christ has to offer. No, I'm not going to preach a sermon, just simply state that I don't think there is a person around that calls him or herself a Christian that hasn't had to struggle with 'the war within.'

It seems the apostle Paul knew what he was talking about when he described the conflict between the body's desire to do bad and the spirit's desire to do good. Jesus himself acknowledges the fact that humans will have to suffer through temptations; he understands us because he, too, had a human body for his time here on Earth. The perfection he attained transcends the experience of the rest of us, but he did leave a legacy of love and forgiveness that may relieve much of your burden. Not only that, I know from personal experience and from talking to others, that he can give hope, freedom, and a great feeling of love through what he calls the Holy Spirit. It's all in the Good Book. Give it a try!

Well, how about it, Argonaut? I believe you would call this "Family values." Will you give more traditional views equal time?

—Margo Welch-Giles

Bible justifies discrimination?

Proponents of Proposition One have been attempting to encourage people to vote for the proposed proposition by labeling those who would vote against it as either gay, or a "flaming liberal," or both. Now, in a new twist present by Dan Whiting and Michael Rogers in their recent letters to the Arg (Oct. 14th) they'd have you believe that we are atheists, as well. "God," Whiting states, "is on our side."

For centuries the Bible has been used to defend the undefendable; anti-semitism, slavery, the suppression of women and minorities. In keeping with that tradition, Whiting and Rogers are going to use Christianity to defend discrimination against homosexuals via Proposition One. They profess that if you don't agree with their view of Christian doctrine, you are supporting what is "unacceptable to God." In labeling the Proposition One's opponents' behavior as such, Whiting and Rogers suggest that we are totally void of moral integrity and incapable of knowing right from wrong. To add insult to injury, they also assert that we are hypocrites. They claim that in our haste to promote tolerance of the gay and lesbian population, we have been intolerant of them, the "fundamentalist, Bible-believing Christians." Rogers declares that we are not truly open minded if we cannot accept his position.

Well, Mr. Rogers, we open-minded, liberal individuals accept that your views differ from ours. We accept that our views of family are different, that your faith and interpretation of the bible differ from ours. We accept that you think that homosexuality is a sin. We accept that you feel that the white Christian male is the most persecuted figure in history. We even accept that you view yourselves as authorities on morality and look at us with holier-than-thou condemnation. Those are your views and you have a right to have and express them. However, don't ask us to agree with you, and don't ever look to us to allow you make your religious beliefs into a law.

There is no need to protect against their obtaining minority status. It is important to point out that homosexuals in Idaho do not have, nor is it likely they would be able to acquire, special rights. A vote for Proposition One is not a vote against "special rights," it is a vote for discrimination. If Mr. Rogers is in favor of this discrimination, it is no wonder that he has been ostracized, and labeled as "hateful, homophobic and intolerant."

Greeks lend a hand on Palouse

Have you ever heard this punchline to an old joke, "You want to go where?! Oh, you can't get there from here!" The humor is in the fact that the protagonist can stand so close to his destination but no one recognizes that it is possible to successfully make the journey if you are determined enough to do so.

This is what must feel like for a low income family that is seeking safe and affordable housing in the Moscow area...it sounds so reasonable, but they just can't get there from here. This is where Palouse Habitat for Humanity comes into the picture. This volunteer, non-profit organization provides the avenue for a family to get into home ownership, when there are no other means available. But, don't be mistaken, this is not a hand-out program; it is a hand-up to a family that is willing to put in hundreds of hours of work into the construction of simple and safe affordable homes.

A home is a reality for the Daniel and Stacey Lumen family of Moscow. They are living in the house recently completed by Palouse Habitat for Humanity that is in Pullman. More donated lots are needed for more families who want to be a part of this unique program. Likewise, more workers and materials are going to be needed as the ground is broken on the site of the second house.

Thanks to the hard work of some of the living groups and Greek houses at the University of Idaho, the Habitat program raised over $11,000 at the Sep. 25 "Pound the Pavement" Walk-a-Thon. There are some very caring people on this campus that deserve more than just a word of praise for their fund raising efforts for this event. These volunteers include the residents of French Hall and the houses of Alpha Gamma Delta, Alpha Kappa Lambda, Delta Gamma, Delta Sigma Phi, Delta Tau Delta, Farm House, Kappa Kappa Gamma, Lambda Chi Omega, Phi Delta Theta, Phi Gamma Delta, and Sigma Nu. In addition, gift certificates for building supplies were received through the work of some house members. Hats off! to the University of Idaho students who worked so hard for the next house by Habitat. There are some great people on this campus! At the time of this letter writing, about $2000 has come from these UI groups. The walk-a-thon proceeds, and any future fund raising events that may be planned by campus groups, will make a safe roof over another young family's heads.

A big thank you to the UI Women's Basketball team who worked at the walk!

You are invited to supper; the community, as well as these groups are invited to an appreciation potluck supper on Tuesday, Oct. 25 at 6:30 p.m. in Moscow. This will be at the St. Mary's Catholic Church, 618 E. First Street. For more information about volunteering with this fine organization, call 883-8502.

Homosexuals not protected

In his Oct. 14 Argonaut letter in support of Proposition One, Michael M. Rogers facetiously suggests that minority rights be extended to him as a fundamentalist Christian who has "come out of the closet." I have good news for Mr. Rogers: he does, as a member of a religious group, indeed have such rights. He is, for example, free to express his views in public. He is protected from discrimination on the basis of his religion; if he were to be fired for coming out of his closet, he would have legal recourse.

Homosexuals, however, do not currently enjoy the rights enjoyed by Mr. Rogers; they are not seeking special rights but equal rights. Actually, in this election, they are not seeking anything, but are trying to ward off the attempts of the radical right to deny their humanity and to promote government control of private behavior. I invite Mr. Rogers, members of other minority groups, and all Idahoans to resist unconstitutional government intervention and fight hate by voting "NO" on Proposition One on Nov. 8.

—Walter Hesford
Associate Professor of English

Prop. One costly for Idaho

I have been following the Prop. One debate lately, and I am scared. I am worried that the lies and scare tactics being used by I.C.A. and the Committee to Stop Special Rights will convince Idaho citizens to vote yes on Prop. One, which will cost us citizens more than just wasted tax dollars.

First, the Proposition is unconstitutional. The Attorney General and other knowledgeable persons agree. Even the I.C.A. itself knows that it is unconstitutional. But it is pushing its passage, because once it passes, the liability to pay for defending the law in court will be transferred to the State of Idaho. If this proposition passes, it is a guaranteed law suit. The A.C.L.U. has told us so. Idaho will be placed in the awkward position of defending a law it knows is unconstitutional and paying for it too.

Second, section two acts to prevent homosexuals from being granted special rights. What one may not know, is that no group in Idaho is granted special rights, including minorities. To do so would require the legislature to repeal two statutes and to pass a referendum. So this section of the proposition is moot. Yet, the I.C.A. wants us to believe that homosexuals are on the verge of getting preferential treatment. No group is on the verge of getting special treatment.

Third, section three is also moot. Idaho already has a statute that assures its citizens that same-sex marriages and domestic partnerships will not be recognized. What is the purpose of this section, then? I.C.A. included it, because they wanted the proposition to look better to the citizenry.

Fourth, I.C.A. wants us to believe that homosexuality is running rampant through our schools. It fears that if tolerance of homosexuality is taught in our schools, then the children will become homosexual. It believes and wants Idaho citizens to believe that homosexuality can be prevented if we can stop thinking about it and discussing it in our schools. Nothing could be further from the truth. Homosexuality is not like fire. It does not and will not die when smothered.

Fifth, section five of the proposition is akin to censorship. It puts the state of Idaho and librarians, not the parents, in the position of deciding what information is and should be available to children. It directs that no public funds should be spent promoting homosexuality. The I.C.A. would have you believe that our tax dollars are being spent on a campaign to convert our children to homosexuals. This is also untrue.

Sixth, the I.C.A. wants non-job factors, such as sexual orientation to be grounds for termination. What it fails to tell you is that Idaho is an employment-at-will state. An employee can be fired for any reason without recourse, with the exception of any federal rule violations.

The I.C.A. has a grip on our fears. It knows that a majority of society does not tolerate homosexuality and it wants to capitalize on that intolerance. It wants to erode the constitutional rights of a group of people because it morally disagrees with its practices. Any citizen familiar with Idaho history is aware that at the time of Idaho's statehood, Mormons were in the same place as homosexuals are today. Mormons were denied the right to vote, a fundamental right. We recognized that we had made a mistake then and we changed it. Once again we are treading on the edge of another historical mistake. By eroding the rights of any citizen, we open the door to eroding our own constitutional rights. Just as erosion in nature continues until nothing is left, erosion of constitutional rights will continue until all that is left is communism or anarchy.

Please vote NO on Proposition One. Your constitutional rights may very well depend upon your vote.

—Cheyanna L. Jafke

Homosexuals seen as unequal

In Friday's Argonaut, Michael M. Rogers offers up the following analogy as support for Proposition One: "If you [homosexuals] claim you deserve special rights because of your sexual behavior, then I should be given special rights for any behavior or anything else I wish." I gather the "behavior" Mr.

Rogers would like "special rights" for is the practice of Christian Fundamentalism. Well, Mr. Rogers, I am happy to report that you have those very special rights—Idaho law currently prohibits discrimination on the basis of race, creed, gender, and, lucky you, religion!

As a heterosexual, you are free to work, marry, shop, house yourself and practice Christian Fundamentalism in the state of Idaho unmolested by those who believe something different from yourself. Alas, I am not so fortunate. If I am discriminated against as a Caucasian, a Quaker, a Democrat, or a woman, the law protects me, but if I encounter discrimination as a homosexual, Proposition One will make sure that I have no legal recourse. In effect, it will declare that I am not equal to you, Mr. Rogers.

Proposition One is not about "minority status." It's not about quotas, religion, or open-mindedness—Proposition One is about making one person inferior to another under the law. This is the proposition that you, Michael Rogers, encourage everyone—homosexuals included—to support.

You might just as well ask the NAACP to join the Klan.

Idaho too great for Prop. One

I feel compelled to write, because I believe that we, as Idahoans, should appreciate diversity. It is important to remember that we, as a nation, and as a state, are a melting pot. Our culture has become a little of this and little of that. We are what we are because we have blended our various cultures to create the lifestyle we as Idahoans, enjoy.

We need to remember that when we try to legislate someone else's lifestyle, your lifestyle might be the next one to be discriminated against. It has always been the Western mentality to accept people for who they are, even though we may not always agree with them. We accept them because they are good neighbors, caring individuals, co-workers, and, yes, even friends. It is my hope that you will join me on in voting against Proposition 1. Idaho is too great for hate.

—Sarah Rial

Sexism changing in society

In the Oct. 11 issue of the Argonaut, Jennifer Swift wrote an editorial on the problem of sexism. At the risk of being labeled a male chauvinist, I must express my disagreement with her views.

There can be no doubt that our society is sexist, yet it is changing for the better. Today you can turn on the television and catch an ad asking you to make a difference in the fight against domestic violence.

In her article, Jennifer mentions that she was the victim of sexual harassment, and that she should have 'sued the hell out of them.' Little more than a decade ago, that would not have been an option. Society changes, however slowly. Sexism is on the decline, however slowly.

I was shocked by the actions of Lorraine Bobbitt. It was not her 'courage' that shocked me, but the violence of her retaliation. It would have taken just as much 'courage' to get out of the situation she was in: to call a friend, a shelter, or the police. Before you say, see 'an example of blatant chauvinism,' let me also say that I was appalled by the actions of her husband. I can not use the word shocked here because you are correct. This type of behavior occurs far too frequently for anyone to be shocked by it anymore. Most men however, do not beat the women in their lives. Most men despise those men who do. The actions of both John and Lorraine Bobbitt were criminal.

In regards to the O.J. Simpson case, it is not a fair reflection of how society views domestic violence. This case is further complicated by the problem of racism. Personally, I believe that if O.J. Simpson was white, much more attention would be focused upon the violence that was present in his relationship with Nicole.

Sexism is still present in our society, but to say that men can not understand the problem is simply wrong. To be correct, the statement would have to be 'men can not experience the problem.' Experience certainly aids in understanding but it is not a requirement for comprehension. The motivation behind the first statement is the anger and frustration women must feel, but to accept it as true only creates a barrier that prevents a solution. If half of society truly is unable to understand the problem, then half of society will never understand the solution, or the need for one.

Prop. One supports rights

As a citizen of Idaho I feel that, as individuals, homosexuals should have the same basic rights as any other citizen, and I would not support any form of persecution, harassment, or violence against them. However, there are good reasons for opposing attempts in Idaho to give special legal privileges to gays, lesbians and bisexuals that aren't even given to heterosexuals. This is why I am in support of Proposition One. Proposition One maintains the basic constitutional rights of all Idahoans, including those involved in homosexual behavior.

First, Proposition One guarantees every citizen their full constitutional rights without granting special rights to homosexuals. Second, it prohibits marriage of homosexuals. Third, it prohibits the positive presentation of homosexuality within our elementary and secondary public schools. Fourth, it prohibits the spending of taxpayers money to promote homosexuality. Fifth, it prohibits the State of Idaho from considering private sexual behavior to penalize any employee.

Proposition One provides the citizens of Idaho a safeguard from state sanctioned behavior which threatens the health, morals and rights of all. Idaho law now judges sodomy as a criminal offense. Let's keep it that way!

—Kevin W. Davis

Problems with Prop. One

How Proposition One reads in type and what people interpret it to mean are not quite equivalent realities. And after sampling many possibilities over the past months of news coverage, I still don't know what will REALLY happen if Prop. 1 passes. Is it guaranteeing that no special rights be allowed to "minority groups"? Will it make literature a controlled substance, or sexual discrimination legal? Is it up to par with our nation's moral code?

Let's address the last question. Our nation's moral code is the reason why there is no unified position about Prop. 1. Our moral code is confused. In fact, we may not have much of a national code at all. In the recent push for embracing diversity, I fear we may have let chaos in as well. We may be one nation, but we are not one people. This great melting pot we call the United States is boiling down to a pile of goo. Where's the consistency? A strong nation must be unified. That does not mean uniform to the last detail on the smallest scale. It allows almost infinite diversity, but it maintains some few basic principles of unanimous agreement. A moral code is such a foundation, and ours is crumbling.

I've heard so often that you can not legislate morals; yet that is what we do every time we vote. The laws and various regulations determine what is right, those things legal, and what is wrong, those things illegal. Only a perfect society creates perfect laws, which it does not need. Our real world has real laws that can only work most of the time. But the law is not the final authority; the people are. In the largest scheme of things it is the synthesis of every individual's ethical and moral code that yields the law. Of course, this generality doesn't hold absolutely true because the system is flawed. This is our United States.

We are having so much trouble with Prop. 1 because we no longer agree on the most important rights and wrongs. Who would really draw up a proposition that balances human rights and bans Encyclopedia Britannica at the same time? This is ludicrous. In fact, this is not the case with Prop. 1; it is what the population is led to believe. We can't distinguish between science and politics.

We need to get a grip. This nation exists because of a much more abstract purpose than most people initially acknowledge. It is here for unity. There is room for disagreement on many things. But there MUST be a foundation of truth for our country to rest upon. We need to forge the United States into an alloy—strong, uniform, yet complex with its many metals, suitable for an extreme set of working conditions. Individuals need to willingly forget their excessive pride in their "uniqueness and MY personal rights" and begin to work and think as a whole body once again. If this ever happened, Prop. 1 wouldn't be such a toothache. We'd know what to do with it.

Hansens to head Parade down Main

Orval, June to serve as 1994 Grand Marshals

The front of the Homecoming Parade is always reserved for special guests and this year is no exception to the rule.

Grand Marshals for the 1994 Homecoming Parade will be Orval and June Hansen. Orval is an alumnus of UI and June is an honorary alumna. Both are members of the UI College of Letters and Science Advisory Council.

June will also be serving as a judge during the MasterCard ACTS Talent Show tomorrow night at 7 p.m. in the Student Union Ballroom.

Nine years ago, the two were founding members of this council and this weekend will mark the completion of three terms on the council. It is unusual for any member to stay on for more than two terms or six years. Three years ago, the two were asked to commit to another term due to transitions going on in the college's dean's office and they graciously accepted the positions.

Orval has attended every meeting over the past nine years while June has missed a few due to scheduling conflicts. They have even hosted one council meeting in Washington, D.C. They held a reception at the town house for college representatives as well as staff members on Capitol Hill. They also hosted a dinner for the council at their home in Arlington.

While on the council, the two have been instrumental in such issues as recruitment and retention of college faculty, campus planning, technology in education, the general education of all university students and the role of arts at the UI.

The Hansens are also well known for helping UI students in whatever way they can. They have given guest lectures during several of their visits to the UI campus. Orval has done so in the department of Political Science and June in the theatre department.

The two have also helped students with career options and have also offered UI students free rent while interning in Washington, D.C. When the Vandaleers took their trip to D.C. a few years back, the Hansens hosted the group for a barbecue the first night they were in town.

During their last visit to UI, June took part in a presentation of readings of Shakespeare's women. She took part with UI President Elisabeth Zinser, Kim Bouchard and Kim Lombardoti. The event was a fund raiser for a fellowship.

Orval and June are generous in their support of the university. They purchased a painting during an art auction. They are also founding members of the Teaching Excellence in the Humanities Endowment. Orval has also served on the steering committee for more than five scholarship and program fund-raising projects. The couple also hosts the UI Silver and Gold celebration for alumni in the Washington, D.C. area.

Orval is a former Congressman and is the current President of the Columbia Institute in Washington, D.C. The institute brings elected officials, government, business and the public together to discuss public policy issues in formal meetings. For the past three years, he has also been active in health care issues.

June is an award-winning actress on the Washington Stage and holds five nominations for Helen Hayes awards. She was born in England but considers Idaho as her home.

Orval is a native of Idaho and considers that his real home. They have their permanent house in Arlington, Va. and a summer residence in Stanley, Idaho. They are parents to seven grown children, four of which are UI graduates.

Royalty adds tradition to Homecoming '94

Two University of Idaho students will be crowned Homecoming King and Queen at the annual Bonfire tonight.

At the 7 p.m. event, the 1994 Royalty will be announced in front of a crowd of students, parents, alumni, staff and faculty. This annual event is typically one of the most popular events of Homecoming and this year should be no exception.

There were originally 20 women and 15 men nominated for the Royalty positions. Response forms were sent to these people and they were to return them to the Student Alumni Relations Board, who is in charge of the Royalty competition. Sixteen women and nine men turned them in.

These forms were then sent to each living group on campus. Off campus students were allowed to vote at Student Advisory Services.

The votes were then tabulated and this year's finalists to go on to the panel evaluation were determined.

Last Thursday afternoon, SARb hosted "The Royal Affair" to honor nominees and to announce finalists. Guest speakers during the event were UI Provost John Yost, 1993 Homecoming Queen Denise Hopkins and 1993 Homecoming King Mike Smith.

Monday and Tuesday evenings, the finalists went in for interviews with a panel of nine judges made up of students, staff and faculty members.

These judges rated each candidate on a series of questions and the information recorded on their response forms.

Combining their panel evaluation with the student vote, the 1994 Royalty court was determined.

The 1994 Homecoming Royalty Court will be made up of King,

Queen and two attendants for each. These six people will then have a full schedule of events to attend and take part in over the remainder of the weekend.

This year's finalists for Homecoming King are: Jeremy Chase, Phi Gamma Delta; Tom Cuthbert, Alpha Kappa Lambda; Tim Helmke, Alpha Kappa Lambda; Paul Katovich, Sigma Chi; Matt Meyers, Beta Theta Pi; Michael Nelson, Kappa Sigma; Tucker Shaw, Farm House; and, Christopher Taylor, Phi Gamma Delta.

The 1994 Homecoming Queen finalists are: Kim Bauer, Delta Gamma; Kathy Cvancara, Off Campus; Tricia Durgin, Delta Delta Delta; Heather Erickson, Alpha Gamma Delta; Michelle Mahurin, Carter Hall; Jennifer McFarland, Alpha Gamma Delta; Jenni Mudge, Forney Hall; and, Sara Stoltz, Forney Hall.

Everyone is welcome to attend the crowning of the 1994 Homecoming Royalty court. The Bonfire is in the Library Plaza between the library and UCC.

The 1994 Royalty will be special guests at the Homecoming Warm-Up Breakfast and will also speak during the short program.

The court will also be featured in the Parade tomorrow morning. They will be following the grand marshals.

The court will also have reserved seating at the football game Saturday afternoon in the Kibbie Dome against Northern Arizona University. They will then take to the football field at half-time to be presented with their trophies and medallions.

The 1994 Homecoming court will conclude the day with an appearance at the Homecoming Dance offered at the University Inn starting at 8 p.m. with the Senders providing the music.

MasterCard ACTS showcases talent

Some of the University of Idaho's finest student talent will be showcased in the MasterCard American Collegiate Talent Search show tomorrow night in the Student Union Ballroom.

At 7 p.m., the free event will kick-off the final evening of the 1994 Homecoming celebration. Members of ASUI Productions have been busy with the planning of the event which is part of a national talent search with a final prize for the national winner being $15,000.

Kim Dutchak and Kelly Stephens have been heading up the organization here on the UI campus. They have held auditions for Saturday's show and have put together a line-up of 15 performances.

The line-up includes: Ed Provancha singing "You'll Never Walk Alone"; Jac Hernandez singing a selection of Mexican folk songs; J. Erik Anderson playing a cello solo; the New Vaudville Duo performing a skit and song; Michael A. Sommes singing "A Bit of Earth"; Joey Wellman playing Aram Khachaturian's "Tocatta in E Flat Minor" on the piano; Cedric Brenard West singing "Summer"; Kate Maresh singing "Unusual Way"; Michael Maas singing and playing piano on one of his own songs, "In My Thoughts Tonight"; Wanarat Jayphorn performing a monologue; Christina Amonson performing an aria; Paula Dambra singing "I Will Always Love You"; Malia Reeber performing an authentic hula dance; Sean Wilson and Eric Cannavaro performing modern instrumental jazz on saxophone and piano; and, Sibyl Hammond performing an Italian aria.

The winner of the UI MasterCard ACTS talent show will compete in the regional competition set to be in Las Vegas, Nevada later this year. From there, the winner goes to nationals in Los Angeles to compete against other regional winners.

During the intermission, there will be special guests performing for the audience. There will be dance performances and other talents displayed during the break between competitions.

The Student Union Ballroom will be set up in a lounge style with round tables. This will add to the atmosphere the competition organizers are aiming to achieve for the audience as well as the performers.

Doors open at 6:30 p.m. and people are encouraged to show up early to ensure a good seat. Seating will be open to everyone on a first-come, first served basis.

Songs bring spirit to life

Being entertained by college students singing and dancing was what an audience Tuesday evening witnessed when they attended the kick-off to Homecoming 1994.

Vandal Jingles was held in the Student Union Ballroom and drew over 650 people to perform and watch the first living group competition of the week. As groups took to the stage to perform their routine, they were judged for their overall stage presence and performance.

The groups were required to use the phrase "...and here we have Idaho" somewhere in their performance. Performances were also limited to seven minutes and there were no solos allowed.

Vandal pride was strongly encouraged and was apparent in all performances.

The first group to perform was the combination of Graham Hall and Carter Hall. Their performance was well received from the audience and they seemed to enjoy themselves while on stage.

The second combination was made up of Delta Gamma, Delta Tau Delta and Pi Kappa Alpha. This group did their 'jingles' to television advertising tunes and the audience loved them.

Alpha Kappa Lambda and Alpha Gamma Delta were up next with their performance of "Wild, Wild West." As singers sang, dancers danced line dances and swings. This performance livened up the audience.

The next group was the combination of Sigma Nu and Alpha Phi. This Greek combination entertained the audience with their performance filled with song and dance.

Kappa Kappa Gamma, Phi Delta Theta and Alpha Tau Omega were up next with their version of "Do-Re-Mi" from "The Sound of Music" in "V-A-N-D-A-L-S."

Pi Beta Phi, Sigma Chi and Phi Gamma Delta were up next with their performance. These three groups entertained the crowd with their routine full of Vandal pride.

Delta Delta Delta and Delta Sigma Phi followed with a performance to a song from "Grease." With hair greased back and white t-shirts, the performers fit the part for their jingle.

Olesen Hall, Tau Kappa Epsilon and French Hall were the next set of performers. They did a simple routine choked full of Idaho spirit.

Farm House and Kappa Sigma took stage next and did a routine about the Northern Arizona University Lumberjacks. This performance was warmly received by the audience.

Gamma Phi Beta and Beta Theta Pi concluded the performances for the evening. These two groups were not lacking in school pride as it showed through in their performance.

Winners for the event were announced at the conclusion of the evening. First place went to Alpha Kappa Lambda and Alpha Gamma Delta. Second place was awarded to Delta Delta Delta and Delta Sigma Phi. Alpha Phi and Sigma Nu placed third. Fourth place went to Delta Gamma, Delta Tau Delta and Pi Kappa Alpha.

Judges for the evening were: ASUI Program Advisor Jan Abramson, UI Greek Advisor Linda Davis, UI Associate Director of University Residences Stuart Davis and UI alumna Jill Matsuoka.

Breakfast starts Saturday schedule

According to the old phrase, "the early bird gets the worm."

There won't be any worms served, but early risers can take advantage of the Warm-Up Breakfast tomorrow at 7 a.m. in the Student Union Ballroom. The University of Idaho Homecoming event will feature a buffet-style meal complete with meat, potatoes, breads, juice and coffee and will be served until around 9 a.m.

There will be a short program during the breakfast starting at 7:45 a.m. This program will feature UI President Elisabeth Zinser, UI Alumni Director Flip Kleffner and UI Homecoming Chairperson Tim Helmke. The 1994 Homecoming Royalty will also speak.

Musical entertainment for the morning will be the UI Marching Band, the Vandaleers and the living group winner's of the Vandal Jingles competition held Tuesday night.

Throughout the meal, attendees can view student art work from the UI College of Art and Architecture. People are encouraged to take in the art and see what sort of talent UI has to offer.

Tickets for the 1994 Homecoming Warm-Up Breakfast are $6.50 and can be purchased at the door. If you have any questions about the breakfast, feel free to call the Alumni Office at 885-6154.

Bonfire moved to draw parents, alumni to event

The 1994 Homecoming Bonfire tonight will be the start of what should be some long standing university traditions.

This year, the event was moved to Friday night to make the event more appealing to parents, community members and alumni as well as students, staff and faculty. The Bonfire was usually been held on Thursday evening but attendance has been low in the past few years.

The Bonfire has also been moved from Guy Wicks Field to the Library Plaza. The asphalt area in between the library and UCC will be the site of the traditional event. This move was made to make the site more central for students from the residence halls and the Greek system.

Highlights of this year's Bonfire will start with the University of Idaho Marching Band. The group will wind itself through campus encouraging students in Greek houses and residence halls to come out for the event. Students are encouraged to tag along with the band to eventually end up at the Plaza.

UI Head Football Coach John L. Smith will talk again this year. Smith is known for getting the crowd into the event and getting them pumped up for the football game.

The UI cheerleaders will also be on hand to do cheers and get people excited about Homecoming. They will be performing routines and stunts throughout the event. Joe Vandal will also be on hand and he will have a special guest.

This special guest will help in the introduction of one of the new traditions of Homecoming. This guest ties in with a spirit competition that will be led by UI Alumni Director Flip Kleffner. Living groups are encouraged to stick together at the Bonfire so they can participate in this competition.

The announcement of 1994 Homecoming Royalty will be done by 1993 Homecoming King Mike Smith and 1993 Homecoming Queen Denise Hopkins.

Everyone is welcome at the event and is encouraged to bring friends and family along.

Food drive to help area residents, food banks

Often times when most people sit down to dinner, they take for granted the opportunity they have to eat a healthy meal or at least a meal at all.

To help those area citizens who are less fortunate, the 1994 Homecoming Committee has organized a food drive competition between University of Idaho living groups. Soup, canned vegetables and macaroni and cheese top the list of items donated so far.

On Tuesday, the first night of the food drive, the living groups donated 2,642 items. Homecoming committee members Katie Jolley, Kim Dutchak, Marcin Topolewski, Tim Helmke and Tom Cuthbert were kept busy carrying boxes of food.

As they helped load and unload food, the pile kept getting larger and larger.

On the first night, living groups were competing for Homecoming competition points. Winners for the men and their total items donated are: Alpha Kappa Lambda, 1237 items; Phi Gamma Delta, 639 items; Beta Theta Pi, 145 items; and, Farm House, 50 items.

Women winners and their total items donated are: Alpha Gamma Delta, 248 items; Delta Delta Delta, 75 items; Pi Beta Phi, 30 items; and, Delta Gamma, 26 items.

Food from the 1994 Homecoming food drive is going to area food banks. Plans are being made to have entries in the Saturday morning Homecoming Parade from the food banks which will be receiving the food.

Homecoming committee members who were behind the planning wanted to give something back to the community of Moscow.

They feel that the students should help to give back to a community that has helped them in so many ways and to help those who are less fortunate.

Living groups did not stop giving Tuesday. They also donated at least 20 items at two other events held Wednesday evening and Thursday afternoon.

They will also be turning in items today in the Student Union and when they register for the Homecoming Parade at 8 a.m. tomorrow morning at Rosauer's.

Organizers are ecstatic about the turnout of support for this event. ASUI Program Advisor Jan Abramson, who also serves as Homecoming Advisor, expressed her pleasure Wednesday morning when looking at the pile of food in the lobby of the Student Union.

Parade to highlight Idaho life

Downtown Moscow will come to life tomorrow morning with floats, bands and cars will fill Main Street.

The 1994 University of Idaho Parade will take to the streets running from Rosauer's on north Main through downtown Moscow. People can line the street and are encouraged to take part in the interaction entries that will be going down the street.

Entries for the 1994 Parade include living group floats. UI students have been stuffing paper into chicken wire to liven up their trailers as well as other types of floats. These entries help to give the parade a student feeling. These entries will be judged by three judges. This is the final competition for living groups competing for the overall title for 1994 Homecoming.

High school and junior high school bands will take part as well. These bands are in town for a competition being offered by the UI Lionel Hampton School of Music. These entries will be judged by music professionals as they march down the street.

Local and state politicians are also filling in the holes of the parade. As elections quickly approach, this is one of the last big campaign stops for the candidates. The candidates will be walking with their respective party entries.

Orval and June Hansen will be serving as grand marshals for 1994. These two have been active in the College of Letters and Science for many years. The UI Homecoming Committee is honored to have them as special guests this year.

A tale of the longest continuously published college paper in the Northwest. . .

WOOL CONTESTANTS—University of Idaho students are participating in the Make-It-Yourself-Wool contest held Saturday at the Home Ec. Building. In the competition were Mary Kay Wolf, Campbell, Beth Britt, Heuser; Bonnie Green, Beth Stealy and Kathy Kinsey, Alpha Phi.

The Argonaut Story

ONCE IT STOOD ALONE — The first Administration Building at the University of Idaho. At the turn of the century it was the lone building of significance on the campus.

The beginnings: 1898 to 1949

By Orval Hansen
1949

The "Arg," as it is called by Idaho students, was born about the middle of the November 1898 and was christened "The University Argonaut," Searcher of the Golden Fleece.

Barely six years before that date the University of Idaho had swung open its doors and beckoned the youth of Idaho. When the Argonaut was founded the student body numbered less than one hundred students.

UI consisted of one building and a handful of instructors. Moscow had no paved streets. Main Street was lined with hitching posts and watering troughs.

At the time the Argonaut was being conceived the United States was embroiled in the Spanish American War. UI had responded to the need for volunteers with a higher percentage of its male population answering the call to colors than any other institution in the nation. Scarcely seven months had passed since the "Old Guard" had left the campus for the battle fronts.

Such was the picture when the Argonaut had its beginning. In the absence of a student organization comparable to the present ASUI, students gathered together at regular meetings to transact business that came up from time to time. At one of these meetings someone suggested that a paper be published. At the moment it seemed like a good idea so a committee was appointed to study the matter further.

The committee's report was submitted and favorably received at the next meeting. The next step was to select an editor and business manager. Guy W. Wolfe, a senior in Letters and Science from Moscow, seemed the logical choice in view of his literary experience. He was named both editor and business manager of the new paper and with $25 in his pocket and a head full of ideas he went to work to give the "Arg" its start in life.

Difficulties, mostly financial, were encountered during the first year. It wound up the first year's operation in the red. It is not certain what would have happened to the paper had not the editor's father paid the bill at the printers, making up the deficit so that the Argonaut could continue the next year with a clean slate.

During the first few years, the Argonaut was published in the form of a magazine. Its pages, measuring six by nine inches, contained news of the university, alumni news, original stories, book reviews, editorials and stale jokes.

The Argonaut progressively grew in size. In 1902 it changed to a bi-monthly and finally to a full weekly in 1904. At the beginning of the 1904 school year, it changed from a magazine to a newspaper. By 1923 it was being published twice weekly.

The few pictures printed in the early issues were usually of university buildings and of students, particularly athletes and graduating seniors. The old "Ad" building was a favorite subject for photographers before its destruction by fire in 1906.

For many years the Argonaut was available only through subscriptions. Later, as the paper grew and became a more integral part of student affairs, it was supported by student fees and made available to all students registered in the university. The same policy has continued until the present day.

In 1925, the University Argonaut became just the Argonaut. The present title, the Idaho Argonaut, was officially adopted in 1927.

Both World Wars had a marked effect on the Argonaut. Both times the paper was kept up almost entirely by women. Both times its pages reflected the seriousness with which the students regarded the war: They were filled with news of the war and of former students scattered over the globe. In both wars, too, the university played a vital part in providing a training ground for members of the armed forces. In World War I the Student Army Training Corps was quartered on campus. In the last war it was the Army Specialized Training Program and the Navy V-12 Program.

During the second World War, the paper shortage forced the Argonaut to reduce its size and to cut the frequency of issue to one per week. A staff from the AST Unit edited a page of the Argonaut reserved for its exclusive use. In both wars, service news occupied a prominent place in the "Arg."

And so as the Argonaut passes the half century mark it can look back with pride on a record of continual growth and progress. Born out of one war, it has survived two others and a major depression to become one of the few college papers in the nation with a comparable record of continual active existence.

Few papers, too, can boast a history as eventful and colorful as that of the Idaho Argonaut.

Student Life remains much the same

By Chris Miller
1994

Forty-five years later after Orval Hansen's 50 year history of the Argonaut that originally ran in 1949, I—the current Editor in Chief—will attempt to continue from where my predecessor left off, though from a slightly different viewpoint.

To do this, I first dove into our morgue of Argonauts and realized something important: not much has changed. In 1951, one of the biggest stories in the paper was a plan to make Idaho "the bloodiest campus in the nation." And Idaho did become the bloodiest campus in the nation—UI students donated more pints of blood than any other school, including Harvard. Last year, UI again had a blood drive, though on this occasion we weren't the "bloodiest."

In 1953, there was a student book exchange designed to save students money on textbooks. This year we have the ASUI Bookswap. In the same year, KUOI was looking to increase its coverage either by pumping the noise directly into buildings or by getting a new transformer for $150.

Greek Rush activities were modified fairly frequently, and in 1953 on headline read, "Outdoor hazings are taboo." Today, all hazing is taboo.

The Argonaut covered the Blue Key Talent Show, which is still going strong. When new buildings were going up on campus, the Argonaut was there to record it. Most buildings on campus can be found captured in the Arg's pages. Notably, the Kibbie Dome, the Library (the old and renovated), the Administration Building (both of them—the first burned down in 1906), the Kiva on the Education building, Theophilus Tower and the Wallace Complex are a few.

The Argonaut apparently always had a sense of humor, including a few April Fool's issues here and there. A 1955 Arg headline read, "Cops smash call girl operation." I was fooled. A 1993 "Cosmonaut" featured President Zinser's face in the moon and, consequently, a "drastic change in the behavior of New Guinea tribesmen."

A 1959 story addressed the issue of low UI professors' salaries, which were lower than at other comparable institutions. Today, UI salaries are about $13,000 less on average than at similar schools.

In 1958, Idaho athletics were at a conference crossroads—the Pacific Coast Conference was gone, and Idaho football needed to find someone to play. Today, we're currently working on entering the Big West conference and are facing similar problems.

A new switchboard hit the campus in January of 1959, and students and departments had to deal with the complexities of using new technology. Today, departments are still losing people on the current new phone system.

Nearly every year had some sort of car accident involving students—the last couple years we've had a few, but have complicated it by adding students who fall from buildings while under the influence, or press their buttocks through plate glass windows while attempting to moon their friends.

Since 1927, the Moscow Volunteer Fire Department has been a home to UI students who, of course, volunteer. Today, they pack personal beepers to class.

In 1960, the Student Union Building provided fire for controversy during a $1.8 million renovation project, and in 1971 its name was changed to the Idaho Union Building to "improve its image." Last year, the name was changed to the Idaho Union to "improve its image." On both occasions, a strong student backlash successfully changed the name back to retain the important word, "student."

In January of 1963, the pizza delivery industry rocketed into student's lives with four, radio dispatched pizza trucks. At that time, the popular student meal went for $1.65 for a "king size" 12-incher.

Letters and gripes really took off in the late fifties and continued strongly to the present, where the JOE VANDAL — This show was sculpture of the student mascot was created by George Robert, assistant professor of Art and Architecture. It is the reason for naming the first floor lounge in the new Student Union addition the Vandal Lounge.

MORE CLASSROOM SPACE — The new $1,450,000 classroom building will be partially paid for as students register in Memorial Gymnasium across from the building site. Above is an architect sketch showing the building as it will look. The inset shows the outside corridor on the second floor. The building is scheduled to add classroom space during the 1995-96 school year.

Argonaut still gets more flack than praise.

1971 saw one of the first in-depth reports on the Moscow housing situation. Students were upset that rent went up $20 to a whopping $85. Today, we're camping outside of apartment offices, waiting to get on a list.

In initial campus alcohol evaluation stories in 1971, the director of Student Health services said, "It takes an older person to be a real alcoholic. College-aged people haven't drunk enough to be confirmed alcoholics." Most issues following the statement built enough evidence to prove him wrong, and last years alcohol awareness programs can be seen as the epiphany of the issue.

In 1972, the Arg covered the political action group BLOSSUM (Basic Liberation of Smokers and Sympathizers of Marijuana). Last year we had the Hemp Festival in East City Park and the Cannabis Action Network promoting marijuana on campus.

The first "parking is hell" story appeared in 1973. It's been a tradition ever since.

That same year no-smoking rooms in the Student Union were created. Last year, the Argonaut recorded the fall of all indoor campus smoking.

Phil Batt found his way into the Arg pages when he ran for Lieutenant Governor in 1978. This fall, we captured him again in an Argonaut Interview. He's running for the top seat this time.

In all, we've covered every aspect of campus life, from food to sex to dance to sports, spiders and flies on leashes. We've covered World Wars and Gulf Wars, local politics and national issues. We've seen men on the moon and the women's movement. We've addressed AIDS, urged condom use and promoted "family values."

We've looked behind the scenes and brought UI students the man who invented the trigger for the A-bomb. We showed you Kathy Acker close up, gave students room to share their own voices and recorded enrollment statistics religiously.

Over the years, the technology has changed from typesetting to full-page computer layout, but the Idaho Argonaut has always carried the proud tradition of being an entirely student run newspaper—a newspaper that can boast the longest continuous production history for any college paper.

What's a Pocket Girdle???

• You can find out Saturday morning, Oct. 22 by dropping in at the U of I Bookstore between 10:00 and 12:30.

• Meet 1969 University of Idaho grad Marianne Love when she autographs copies of her hilarious new book Pocket Girdles and Other Confessions of a Northwest Farmgirl.

Pocket Girdles is a 220-page illustrated paperback collection of humorous tales about the author's 4-H disasters, Catholic guilt, junior high traumas.....and, yes, University of Idaho cigarette experiences. $9.95 plus tax.

"I ... lit up my life soon after moving into Carter Hall at the University of Idaho...then she showed me the talent that truly separated the wusses from the pros in smoker land---French inhaling....the grand finale came out of her nostrils in the form of two dark gray vapor trails...."

Homecoming adapts from year to year

Sam Woodbury
Staff

Since its official recognition in 1921, the University of Idaho Homecoming celebration has included a myriad of traditions including parades, bonfires, fireworks, pajama clad serpentine marches and the infamous nine mile "Loser of the Battle of the Palouse Walkathon."

In the old days, the Vandals most common Homecoming challenger was the Washington State College Cougars, and the losing team usually ended up walking the nine miles between Pullman and Moscow (or vice versa, though most of these sorry trudges through the Palouse were undertaken by the Vandals). In fact, most of Idaho's Homecoming traditions derived from the competitive spirit generated by the annual Battle of the Palouse.

Originally the Homecoming game was played at McLean Stadium and Neale Stadium before the Kibbie Dome was constructed. In 1938, the Vandals and the Cougars battled in several inches of snow as blizzard conditions ensued.

Competition between the on campus living groups has always been a part of the Homecoming tradition.

In the years before World War II, the competitions focused on decorations and light displays on dormitories and Greek houses. The Phi Delta Beta house won the 1929 competition by displaying an old covered wagon representing Homecomings of the past century next to a brand new 1929 Buick to represent the "modern era."

After the World War II, the house decorations gave way to float competitions, which have continued into the 1990's. In 1959, the winning women's float earned that living group five cartons of Marlboro cigarettes in addition to the traditional trophies.

In 1935, the freshman bonfire and rally was banned after a fifty foot high bonfire cost the university property damages. The bonfire was replaced by colored fireworks, until the 1970's, when students were entrusted with fire once again.

The Homecoming dance has evolved throughout the century. In 1935, the fourteen piece Morey O'Dornell's Orchestra provided musical entertainment while in 1978, a 1950's style sock-hop was featured.

Also featured in 1978 was a huge collection of high school and college marching bands from throughout the Inland Northwest playing such 70's themes as "Happy Days" and a Barry Manilow arrangement of "Even Now."

GRECSO
THE INTERSECTIONS OF GENDER, RACE, ETHNICITY, CLASS, AND SEXUAL ORIENTATION IN SCHOLARSHIP AND TEACHING

FEBRUARY 24-26, 1995
WASHINGTON STATE UNIVERSITY
PULLMAN, WA

Featuring Keynote Speaker Cherrie Moraga

Graduate students from all disciplines are invited to attend this interdisciplinary graduate students conference which is designed to explore any and all GRECSO intersections.

We Invite Your Participation

Present a Paper related not only to academic research but also to your classroom experience. Papers may be in all styles and genres.

Paper abstracts should:

- be approximately 300 words
- outline a 20-minute presentation
- have an explicit thesis

Present a Workshop providing important insights, points of view, skills, tools, and/or strategies that highlight exemplary programs, approaches, and models capable of being replicated or adapted by other institutions. Workshop can take a variety of forms; be creative.

Workshop abstracts should:

- be approximately one page in length
- outline no longer than a 90-minute session
- provide a detailed description of the session(s) for participants, and the method/means of conveying the information.

To further assist participants in selecting panels/workshops best suited to their own level of development, all abstracts should conclude with the following sentence: "This paper/workshop will be of particular interest and/or benefit to those conference attendees who..."

All accepted abstracts will be published in the conference program. Cover letter and abstract should be postmarked no later than November 1, 1994. Please indicate in your cover letter if audiovisual equipment will be needed.

Mother Tongue built on faith

The stage lights-up with warm red and yellow lights as the band Mother Tongue takes the stage. Some bands out there like to just stand and sing; Mother Tongue is a band who brings the crowd into the show, with the guitarist jumping from the stage into the thriving mosh pit. Mother Tongue erupts into a giant stage show.

Mother Tongue was formed in the fall of 1990 in the city of Austin, Texas. They began as a band just playing instrumental since at that time they didn't have a vocalist. They began playing in a club called the Cannibal club every Monday night. As the vocalist puts it, "our set was basically instrumental jams. A lot of our songs came from was just jamming. Getting know each other musically and connecting as people."

Moving to Los Angeles was the big step for Mother Tongue. "We just started playing. A friend of mine hooked us up with some shows. Naturally we wanted to make records but we didn't put this manic energy into it. We just believed in ourselves and the purpose of our music. So we went and played our music, it was heard and we were very fortunate," says the vocalist.

The root of all bands is their inspiration for their music; for Mother Tongue it was life. "I had to play music to save my own life. We all come from very different places, but like for any of us we didn't want to be like Eddie Van Halen. I think we all desperately needed music and we all found a tremendous place in music. Our songs come from life experiences. Things that you see and feel. Whatever inspires your heart. When you try to express those experiences you can't get it out necessarily just through words," the vocalist says. "I think we are trying to get out things that are inside of us. We all write in the band—we all write the lyrics. What made me go into music was at a young age I decided I didn't want to put needles in my arms and I didn't want to shoot people. I put a tremendous amount of respect and faith into music and it in turn gave me a lot of respect back. My writing comes from personal experiences. I also try to write about things that don't have voices. We definitely have things that we are trying to say."

Mother Tongue has just released their first album on the Epic label. The music on this album is passionate music. Mother Tongue is influenced by Black Flag and other music. "We play whatever we want and we will take the music with us and that will be our passion."

With charisma and a wonderful set, Mother Tongue pulls off what few bands accomplish: stealing the show. Their music is a living thing that will grow on you.

Bart Stageberg

Members of the band "Mother Tongue" perform their brand of music at the Candlebox concert Oct. 1 in the BEasley Performing Arts Coliseum. Mother Tongue was one of the opening acts for the concert.

WSU Museum presents art of storytelling

Amy Ridenour
Lifestyles Editor

The Washington State University Museum of Art is currently exhibiting "Tales and Traditions: Storytelling in Twentieth-Century American Craft," through Nov. 19.

The exhibit features quilts, weaving, ceramics, jewelry, and furniture and each piece tells a story.

There are also some Palouse artists whose works are included in the showing. They are Marilyn Lysoshir, Victor Moore, and Patrick Siler.

The exhibit also has works done by turn-of-the-century immigrants who brought their craft traditions to the United States.

Patricia Watkinson, director of the WSU museum, said, "We are reminded today by medieval stained-glass windows and tapestries that materials and processes long considered 'craft' are revered for their storytelling power.

In the hands of creative artists, crafts that were once associated with homely utilitarianism are regaining recognition for their expressive potential."

The exhibition is organized by the Craft Alliance and made possible by a grant from the Lila-Wallace-Reader's Digest Fund. Funding is provided by WSU, the Friends of the Museum of Art, and the Washington State Arts commission.

The museum is open 10 a.m. to 4 p.m. Monday through Friday, 10 a.m. to 10 p.m.

Tuesday, and 1-5 p.m. Saturday and Sunday.

Native American Heritage month celebrated

Mitch Pond
Contributed Story

I would like to start out by saying thanks. Thanks to the university and the multicultural departments in allowing our club to exhibit our culture for the already functioning Native American Heritage Month. I have taken upon the task of reporting the upcoming events set up by our club, the Native American Student Association, with a weekly column until the end of the month.

Overall, our club is planning activities that reflect upon the issues of cultural heritage not only with local tribes, but a lot of other tribes in the United States. Our club will show our heritage through dance exhibitions, an Indian film festival, guest speakers, a display of Indian artifacts and arts and we will finish the month with a friendship feast at the Student Union on Nov. 11 at 6 p.m. Throughout the month there is a display case located in the Student Union and on the second floor of the Library for the public to view.

We are in our first week of activities. We had our opening ceremonies this past Monday with a dance exhibition at the Student Union lounge and the author Janet Campbell Hale spoke Wednesday about her autobiography Bloodlines, Odyssey of a Native Daughter.

Tonight, our club begins the Indian Film Festival with the movie Thunderheart at the Borah Theatre at 7:45 p.m. There is a brief rundown of the movie prior to the showing, and our club is also asking for donations at all of our movies to help defray some of the minor costs of running the film festival and other activities.

I am always asked, "What is an Indian?" This question seems to lack definition both to the Indians and non-Indians alike. Today, there are 350 recognized tribes in the United States with a total population of about 2 million people. Indian Treaties were made with most of the tribes beginning in 1830 and the last treaty was made in 1871 when the United States covered what is the lower 48 states today.

About 15 years ago, recognized tribes numbered around 250 after the Termination era in the 1950s cut out several tribes, but with proper documentation, the other 100 tribes, including areas in Alaska, added to make up today's total of 350. There are probably another 150 tribes who are trying to be recognized today, but only time will help them be restored.

The tribes recognized today own about 5-10 percent of the total United States. These are called Indian Reservations and they are from the Florida Seminoles to the Connecticut Mashantuckets, Midwest Sioux and Cherokee, Western Navajo and Nez Perce tribes.

To be a tribal member, one has to show or document records which state you have at least 1/4 Indian blood for that tribe. As a tribal member, one is entitled to health, housing, and education. Fishing and hunting rights are also allowed through cooperation with Federal and State agencies. Federal and State policies have collided with the tribes about their guaranteed rights, but the tribes are recognized as a sovereign people.

Pizza & Diamonds are a lot alike.

Pizza

- No two pizzas are the same.
- Someone's medium size pizza is another's large or small.
- Cheaper isn't always better. Quality does vary.
- Pizzas are being sold by people who don't know anything about them.

Diamonds

- No two diamonds are the same.
- Comparing diamonds is hard; and some claim them to be a certain quality and they aren't.
- The lowest price doesn't mean the best quality and in the long run is not the best value.
- Anyone can sell a diamond but do they know any more than you?

When buying a diamond, Consider Integrity, Quality & Real Value.

At Dodson's Jewelers we know diamonds.
As the Inland Empire's oldest family owned jewelry store, we know Integrity, too.
Let us show you the way quality makes a difference in the value of a diamond.
We assure quality and representation through GIA Certified Diamonds.
You will see that we have the lowest prices in the area.
Choose from a large selection of rings in contemporary and traditional styles.

1/2 DEAD HALF TALENTED

For every new sound that arrives on the music scene, there are two types of people. The originators, who came up with the sound and who actually have it in their blood, and the copycats, who ride the ideas all the way to the bank. For instance, some people will debate weather or not Stone Temple Pilots copied the likes of Pearl Jam just to make money. While the jury may be out in that case, it definitely has a verdict for Lil' 1/2 Dead's The Dead Has Arisen.

Dr. Dre and Snoop Dogg brought into the rap scene the G-funk sound a few years ago, and since then have enjoyed incredible success. So it's probably only natural that the evil demon of cash would tempt guys like 1/2 Dead to pick up a mic.

The press release for this album would lead you to believe that simply growing up with Snoop and Dre gives 1/2 Dead unlimited musical integrity, but unfortunately this isn't so.

The album opens with a string-synth loop that sounds like the demo setting on a $19.99 Radio Shack keyboard, but that's okay because a few bars later the all-important BEAT arrives. The music doesn't matter of course, it's the beat (and the "controversial" lyrics, but we'll get to that). Unfortunately, the beat is nothing new. Your basic drum machine and two fingers could come up with most of the loops on this record, and the samples are banal in the extreme.

The horn-section sample in "It Don't Stop" is so irritating you want to start listening to what 1/2 Dead is saying. Unfortunately, there's not a lot of solace there.

The chorus that goes on top of that minimal horn sample is "It won't quit and it won't stop, nigga/ It won't stop and it won't quit, fool/ It won't stop and it won't quit/ Cuz 1/2 Dead's drop-pin' nothing but gangsta s" repeat chorus, repeat chorus, repeat chorus, fade.

The subject matter is standard gangsta, only it seems a little forced here. As if Lil' 1/2 Dead is performing Affirmative Action on his lyrics, making sure he pulls out all the stops to guarantee the consumer base will debut this album at #1. In "You Know Me" he raps, "So sit down before you get smacked/ bitch ass nigga you know where my heart is at." It is clearly somewhere between his ego (read penis) and his, well, ego. He throws out the standard lines about killing cops, getting drunk, smoking weed, and screwing women.

1/2 Dead's rapping doesn't make up for anything, either. He seems to believe that with enough vocal overdubs on top of himself he'll sound strong.

Ditto with the moaning he likes to end words with. "You had to be a hustler/ cuz if you were a buster you know we wouldn't trust ya/ you had to be a hustluhhhh" isn't any more engaging than another screwing reference. Every song is formulated with a chorus recited (or minimally sung) by some background singers, but usually they are made up of dry rhymes and cliché vocalises.

There is no rest for the weary on The Dead Has Arisen. 1/2 Dead states that he's ready to "bust up the industry." While he may sell a zillion records to all the 13-year-old G-funk wannabes out there, for the rest of us this is mindless music.

Cliché rapping, banal music, and empty messages do not a major statement make.

—Mike Maas

Perce Tribe to issue a $10 steelhead license are issues that have come to an importance today for Federal, State and Indian policy.

The Nez Perce Tribe will be the focus of our film festival next Tuesday, Oct. 25, beginning at 7:30 p.m. in the Borah Theatre. The Nez Perce Tribe is a people that ceded, or gave up, lands that cover the Palouse area. We thought it would be appropriate to showcase this tribe because it is in the general area and people can visit the tribe since it is only a 45 minute drive south from Moscow. Most of the Indian students here at the UI are also of Nez Perce descent. Also included in the film festival are the films How the West Was Lost, and I Will Fight No More Forever.

I Will Fight No More Forever covers the plight of the Nez Perce in their war with the United States in 1877. Thirteen battles occurred during the 1200 mile plight as the Nez Perce tried to cross the Canadian border. They never made it.

The title of the film is also the last of a surrender speech from Chief Joseph at the Bear Paw mountains in Montana, only a day's ride to the Canadian border. Chief Joseph and his people lived in Oklahoma and later moved to the area near Colville, Wash. The Nez Perce people have a reservation at Lapwai, Idaho, but some of the Chief Joseph band still live in Colville and they have no land at Wallowa Lake where they used to live in Northeastern Oregon.

Donald Sampson will speak Oct. 28 at the College of Forestry. He is sponsored by the UI Fisheries Department and Native American Student Association. Sampson will talk about Salmon restoration from a tribal perspective. Sampson is a member of the Umatilla Tribe, located 10 miles east of Pendleton, Oregon, and is currently the chairman of the Umatilla Tribes governing body. Sampson is also a UI alumnus in Fisheries. He will talk about the recent steelhead licensing by the Nez Perce Tribe and the other fishery issues in the Northwest.

Students and the general public are invited to attend our club events. I have only begun to answer the question, "What is an Indian?" That will fully be answered as the month comes to a close. For more information, contact Mitch Pond at 882-9427.

Laugh at life, love with Berman

Amy Ridenour
Lifestyles Editor

Women: listen up! There's a great new cartoon book out there for you to read! It's called Adult Children of Normal Parents, by Jennifer Berman, and it is a must-read!

While this book doesn't have a lot of confusing, mind boggling prose, it has some real life insights into love, relationships, and, most importantly, men.

I read each cartoon and nearly laughed out loud. They are so true-to-life it's unbelievable.

On the back cover there is a cartoon entitled, "Thought frequency as pie charts." For men, the most they think about is sports, sex, and career, and the least they give thought to is the relationship, going bald, aging, and "strange ear and nose hair growth." For women, the most they think about is the relationship.

The least is sex, pets, food, "things we shouldn't have eaten," "having to pee," aging, and "men thrashing."

Each of her cartoons strikes a familiar chord, and while it doesn't cause you to re-examine your life, think really hard, or intellectually analyze your place in the solar system, the cartoons are funny, lighthearted, and make you laugh at yourself—something none of us do very often.

Somewhere it says that laughter has healing power, and we all need to be healed. If you're mad at a guy, your parents, pets, whatever, read this book. It takes what can be a frustrating situation and sheds humorous light on it.

Adult Children of Normal Parents is a Pocket Books Trade Paperback Original. It is due out this November at $8 a book. I encourage anyone with a sense of humor, or anyone that would like to acquire one, to pick up this book as soon as it is on the shelves.

A Moscow weekend. Ugh! Not another beer! Why not take a gander at a few of the suggestions below:

A dateless Friday night? (Yes, again). Well, there are some pretty cheesy flicks on TBS's Friday Nite Date Nite where you can see more one and two star movies than your appetite can really stand.

Usually they consist of a series of love stories, bad '80s hairstyles, and predictable plots. But hey, break out that blue eyeshadow, the hairspray in a steel aerosol can, and a two liters of your "fave" soda and have a ball!

This weekend the movies are She's Out of Control, No Small Affair, and Killer Party (this last one sounds like a winner—sorority sisters and haunted houses!).

If this doesn't sound like your bag, cross your fingers and hope for Valerie Bertenelli's series of flicks, First Love, Young Love, and Promise of Love (write TBS and ask for a replay!).

Okay, so you don't want to hang in the good ol' dorm room, apartment or what have you all night.

All of a sudden you get this monstrous craving for gourmet ice cream.

You're probably thinking Ben and Jerry's, but let me introduce you to Safeway Select's Indulgence ice cream (a.k.a. sexual ice cream).

Not only is the taste totally yummy, but the caption that describes it is quite sexual: "a climatic crescendo..." and will definitely make you laugh for hours if deliriously exhausted from mid-term studying or if you are still on that sugar high from eating a whole pound of candy corns.

Frisbee tourney at Wick's field

Frisbees will fly at Wick's field during the Recreation Club's Ultimate Frisbee competition.

Ultimate Frisbee is a team sport with similarities of both football and soccer with some distinctive characteristics thrown in for color.

There are seven players per team. The object of the game is to move the Frisbee down the 100 yard field and across the goal line. Since it is against the rules to move down the field while holding the Frisbee all yardage is gained by passing.

Defense is usually man to man or woman to woman. The Rec. Club's tournament allows both men's teams and women's teams, but no mixed gender teams.

The games will be played until one team scores 15 goals. The tournament will start at 3 p.m. each day.

"If every team would call me by Oct. 21, that would be extra special," said tournament organizer Brietta Sjostrom.

The registration fee is $10 per team. Tee-shirts will be available for sale.

To register call Brietta at 883-8373 or Jappo at 882-8279.

Environmental clean-up is key

Dave Lewis
Outdoors Editor

A University of Idaho geologist has worked to characterize mine tailings, studied fossils and tested the sediments along the Coeur d'Alene River with a device that works like an industrial homemade ice cream freezer.

Bill Rember, UI geologist, is a native Idahoan who believes the problems of environmental clean-up should be solved in the laboratory, not in the courtroom. He backs up this philosophy with creativity and hard work.

Characterizing mine tailings, said Rember, is discovering the level of public hazard if any present in a potential clean-up site.

For the last four years Rember, working with fellow UI geologist, Ken Sprence, has been studying the mining contaminated sediments in the Coeur d'Alene River on its flood plain and in the lateral lakes adjacent to the river. The method Rember used to collect the sediment is ingenious. He freezes the sediment to a stainless steel box.

Cave Lake, Blue Lake, Medicine Lake, Bull Run Lake, Kilarney Lake and other lakes along the Coeur d'Alene River are called the lateral lakes. These lakes and Coeur d'Alene Lake itself served as settling ponds for mine waste legally discharged into the river from the 1885 until 1968.

Rember has tested core samples taken from the mud and found some of the sediment from the early days of mining is as much as four percent lead. He said if there were sufficient volume, the sediment would be ore.

Using a method developed by a palynologist in Finland, Rember and his assistants take sediment samples using a stainless steel box and a physical refrigeration system. The box is 3 feet long, 2 1/2 inches deep and 12 inches wide. Dry ice is placed in the box, then alcohol is poured in to fill the box.

The box containing the dry ice and alcohol is then lowered into the soft lake bottom sediment and left for 30 minutes.

Just as salt melts ice in a home ice cream freezer causing the cream to freeze, the alcohol melts the dry ice, cooling the outside surface of the box to chilly minus 70 degrees centigrade.

When the box is raised a sample of mud is frozen to its sides with the stratigraphy of the sediment preserved. Lake water is then poured into the box, replacing the cold mixture and warming the box until the sediment melts. The sample is then taken back to Moscow to be studied.

Rember likes to use to innovative technologies to solve environmental problems. The Triumph

Mine situation is an example of his and his UI colleagues' quest to pay for environmental clean up by selling the minerals that can be extracted from the tailings.

As a boy Rember lived for ten years at the Triumph Mine near Sun Valley. Some years later, He worked on a projected clean-up of the abandoned mine as a UI geologist.

"Roy Mink and I were traveling by car to Coeur d'Alene, en route to a meeting about the Coeur d'Alene sediment study. Roy said he wished we could find a smaller, more manageable clean-up site where we could test whether or not the science and the economics of our plan to defray or even cover the cost of site clean-up would work. I immediately said, I've got one. I grew up there."

"There is between $3 to $9 million worth of gold in only 900,000 cubic yards of tailings at the Triumph Mine," Rember said. He cautioned not to be fooled by that amount of material. "When considering that much material is routinely moved in some construction jobs, 900,000 cubic yards isn't so much. We figured we could move it in six months."

Rember and Mink plan that the gold which contains pyrite be separated from the tailings, then hauled to an existing smelter or autoclave where the gold would be removed and sold to pay for the clean-up. The tailings would be mixed with cement on site and pumped back into the mine.

"The townspeople living near the mine derailed this plan, although there was some political maneuvering that hurt the Triumph Mine clean-up plan. It cost this university a possible project," said Rember. The whole environmental clean-up controversy is rooted in unwillingness to compromise.

"The thing that I see as being so tragic in this whole environmental movement is the polarization between the two sides involved," said Rember. "The lawyers for both sides are getting tremendously wealthy and nothing is being done. A couple years ago the Environmental Protection Agency's budget was made public. It was exposed that for the last twenty years 70 percent of all their funds were spent on legal fees. The other side has spent an equal amount, if not more, and that is a horrible waste of money. I think compromises have to be worked out or the whole country is going to go broke."

The original idea of these studies was to find an economical way to clean up the environment without draining the treasury. However, Rember doesn't want to dredge up the bottom of the lakes to remove contamination.

In the years since discharging mine waste was stopped, the contaminated sediment has been encapsulated by newer sediment, effectively sealing the heavy metals away from the biosphere. Disturbing the bottom would do a terrific amount of damage to the environment.

The good news is the lakes and river are recovering on their own anyway. Rember said the water in Coeur d'Alene Lake was tested for heavy metals in 1972, four years after the mines quit discharging tailings into the river. The lake was again tested in 1992. The amount of heavy metals found in the 1992 test was only 10 percent of the levels found in the 1972 test. "Conducting dredging up there now would, in my opinion, cause severe damage," said Rember.

There is no such good news for the Triumph Mine. Even if the tailings were covered with a cap as some propose, fluctuating ground water would still seep into the tailings from below and leach out arsenic, zinc, cadmium, and lead.

Mostly walking with guns

Helen W. Hill

Anyone who thinks pheasants are stupid has not hunted them in north Idaho, at least not recently.

It only takes a couple of years to forget the more frustrating details of hunting. My recently ended hiatus was longer than that by about a decade. I have shot targets during that time but mostly with pistols and a 410/22 over-under combination which we no longer have.

When my husband and I took our two children out after pheasants not long ago, I was reminded of some of the forgotten bits. Walking long distances in freezing weather will wait a little longer, but I don't plan to take the kids for that.

Finding a place was the first problem. Latah county hardware stores must do a booming business in "no hunting" signs. Areas with "ask first" signs seldom had anyone home. With cultivated fields, we often ask at the wrong house since there is seldom anything to indicate which patch of wheat or oat stubble belongs to whom.

Still, with perseverance we found a hunting spot and piled out of the car to walk along a mostly dry ditch between two fields.

With open fields all around, the birds consistently flew towards the road, towards the children who were trailing a little behind or towards a neighboring house.

Shooting across a road is not only illegal, it can get the occupants of a vehicle that just happened to be anywhere near the point at which you shot shooting back. Not, therefore, the best of ideas.

Shooting at children is unthinkable. Well, on the worst of days it is more of a seldom acknowledged guilty fantasy so quickly repressed as to be nonexistent.

Shooting at the house of someone who is letting you hunt on their land is stupid and impolite, not to mention unneighborly.

Stupid birds figured all this out? In an afternoon, we only got off three shots.

Shooting on the fly brought to light another thing I hadn't considered. In the time since I was a kid shooting with my brother, my body has changed. Let's just say that not only do I have no interest in trying on a Wonder Bra at the Bon Marche, I have no need to do so.

As a result, the straight lift from my gun carrying position to my shoulder doesn't work any more. The kick pinched some delicate flesh when I tried it. Needless to say, my shots were off, even after I developed a slightly slower circular lift to my shoulder. The birds won't have much to fear from me for the long while it will take me to learn to do that naturally.

That's all right though, since hunting is mostly just walking with guns.

We had a very pleasant walk, despite muddy feet and complaints of someone stepping on someone else's heels. Whether our luck improves or not, we look forward to more of them.

Rapid fire shooters

Dave Claycomb
Staff

With the passing of recent gun control laws, many gun enthusiasts may be worried that sport shooting semi-autos are in danger. I, however, am here to tell you that your worries are over. Even if semi-automatics are banned you can still convert your bolt-action into a rapid fire weapon. I have talked with some local experts and they all agree to accomplish this you MUST be in a panic. All three had different approaches as to how to get in this state of panic, so let's discuss them now.

The first professional I spoke with was...Mark. That is not his real name but I would have to kill you if I were to divulge these expert's real names. Mark is an accomplished hunter (two crows/one dove) who attributes all his rapid fire success to being panicked.

"If at all possible, get your trigger finger stuck in your nose moments before a herd bull elk walks broadside to you at 20 yards. You must concentrate on not paying attention."

Thank you grasshopper. Apparently the rapid fire starts just after the elk has moved on to safety and you have freed yourself from the precarious position. Although you won't hit anything, you will get some rounds down-range in a hurry. The lubricated trigger finger and state of panic together enable you to equal performance akin to that of an M-60 machine gun.

The second expert I spoke with was...Ben. Ben says the key to becoming panicked is to get yourself treed by a large carnivore. Anything from a wolverine on up will work, but to really impress your friends nothing smaller than a Bengal tiger will do, with a grizzly bear being ideal.

"Only when being viewed as a turkey pot pie can one hope to achieve an unparalleled state of panic" said Ben.

Once again you shouldn't expect to hit anything, but the amount of lead you deposit in the ground below you should be sufficient to make the carnivore believe that the neighborhood is becoming too crowded and noisy, and it will move on.

The last expert I spoke with was...Brian. Brian believes the most important aspect of being panicked is fogged-up optics.

"Optimally you would have at least two fogged up pieces of glass. Though having just your scope fogged up will work, to truly maximize your performance you need to fog up your spectacles as well."

Brian went on to say that of the many big game animals he has taken (one raccoon), the vast majority were with fogged up optics. Apparently when the Boone and Crockett size deer presents himself to you, not being able to see him will cause you to unleash a barrage of bullets equaled only by the last World War. Again you won't hit anything, but the heat generated by your rapid fire will cause the fog to burn off in time to see your trophy deer run away unscathed.

Look before you shoot

Russ Wright Commentary

Most of you have probably heard by now the story of the man killed while hunting near Couer d'Alene, Idaho. The story has been, pardon the pun, splashed all over the pages of the Spokesman-Review.

"Don't get me wrong. I think it's good that the Spokesman is pushing this story. It highlights a problem we have. The problem is it takes just one stupid hunter to screw up the image every other hunter has been trying so hard to build. It's the proverbial one percent which manages to mess it up for everyone else."

Idaho is one of the few states which doesn't require people to wear hunter orange while hunting big game. Good idea? I don't know. Statistics show that, despite ever increasing numbers of hunters in Idaho, fatalities are dropping. Check out the Spokesman if you don't believe me. There were no people killed at all last year in hunting accidents. A person probably stands a higher chance of dying in an automobile accident than dying in a hunting accident. I don't think it's necessary to go into a knee-jerk reaction here and begin requiring hunters to wear hunter orange vests, as some have already begun to do. It's a good idea to wear hunter orange—you're less likely to be shot by an idiot—but don't force me to wear it.

Please don't misunderstand me. I am sorry a person died while hunting. By all accounts, he was a great person and died too soon. What we do need to keep in mind are comparative analyses: more hunters, less fatalities—remember? According to the Spokesman, baseball has a higher ratio of injuries than hunting. Perhaps we should require all baseball players to wear hunter-orange vests.

Hunting is a common sense sport. If you're not sure what you're shooting at or what may be behind it, DON'T SHOOT. If you keep that rule and a few other obvious rules in mind, chances are you won't run into problems.

NAU seeks to spoil Homecoming

The fourth ranked Vandals aim for their best start in school history

Andrew Longeteig
Sports Editor

Two years ago, the 6-0 and 2nd-ranked University of Idaho football team lost to Northern Iowa. Last season, the Vandals, 6-0 and ranked number one, lost to Montana State.

Some would say the third time's a charm.

Idaho, 6-0 and ranked 4th in the nation, is shooting for its best start in school history. The only thing that stands in their path are the feisty Northern Arizona

Lumberjacks, 4-3 overall and 3-2 in the Big Sky who will visit the Kibbie Dome Saturday for Idaho's homecoming. The Vandals have won eight of the last nine homecoming games. Game time is 1:05 PST.

Idaho definitely has a legitimate shot at going 7-0 considering NAU hasn't beaten the Vandals since an eight field goal performance that produced a 24-0 win in 1986 — the last time UI has been held scoreless.

"Hopefully, we can be prepared and be a little more healthy than we've been in the past," UI head coach John L. Smith said.

The Vandals hope to return wide receiver Keith Neal and linebackers Josh Fetter and Tommy Knecht — all of whom missed last week's MSU game. Quarterback Eric Hisaw was throwing this week but is doubtful for Saturday.

Broncos, Bengals invade Memorial Gym

Andrew Longeteig
Sports Editor

Who cares about the football game, anyway?

The 19th ranked University of Idaho volleyball team will face intrastate rivals Boise State on Friday and Idaho State on Saturday. Both contests will begin at 7:30 p.m. in Memorial Gym.

Despite the Vandals' first conference loss last week to the Montana Grizzlies, Idaho should be fired up for BSU and ISU.

Montana broke Idaho's 11-match win streak, one shy of the school record set last season.

The Broncos (8-10 overall, 2-5

Big Sky) played the Vandals tough down in Boise, losing the five-setter 15-10, 14-16, 15-8, 10-15, 15-13.

BSU is led by 5-foot-10 senior Melissa Dahl who is the team leader in kills with 3.88 per game and digs at 2.74.

Idaho will be looking to extend their home-court winning streak to 22 games — a streak that has dated back to 1992. In the last three seasons at Memorial Gym, UI is 34-3.

ISU, meanwhile, has dramatically improved since the 1993 season where they posted an 11-17 overall record and only 3-11 in conference play.

This season, however, ISU has been turning some heads. They stand at third place in the Big Sky with a 5-2 conference mark and 11-6 overall.

Again, on the Vandals' Southern Idaho roadtrip, they narrowly beat ISU in five sets, 15-9, 15-11, 5-15, 8-15, 15-12.

In the match, Tzvetelina Yanchulova, Brittany Van Haverbeke and Mindy Rice combined for 59 of UI's 72 kills.

The Bengals are led by 5-foot-11 senior outside hitter Angela Roberts who leads the team by averaging 4.37 kills per game and 2.8 digs per contest.

Roberts has 16 matches with at least 10 kills and at least 12 matches with 10 kills and 10 digs.

Idaho's record is a stellar 19-2 overall and 6-1 in the Big Sky.

Lynne Hyland, Rice, Van Haverbeke and Yanchulova have been instrumental in the Vandals' success this season.

Hyland, a sophomore, is among the leaders in assists in the nation, averaging 14.5 per game.

Van Haverbeke, a senior, is third on the team in kills per game (3.6) and leads Idaho in blocks per game with 1.2.

Rice has been perhaps the most consistent performer, as she leads the team with a .346 hitting percentage. The senior also is second on the team with 5.1 kills per game.

Yanchulova is one of the more exciting volleyball players in the Big Sky. She leads Idaho with 5.2 kills per game.

you. Their three losses were to Division I-A Nevada, 30-27, 17th-ranked Boise State and 2nd-ranked Montana. The Lumberjacks' four wins have come by an average margin of 23 points.

NAU, however, will have to contend with Idaho's swarming defense. The Vandals boast the best run defense in the country, allowing just 55.2 yards per game. Opponents are averaging 1.9 yards per carry against Idaho.

"Our defense actually controlled the game and played as good as they have all year long," Smith said of last week's 27-13 win over MSU. "(They) came up with big plays for us and that's what ended up winning us the ball game."

Sophomore defensive end Ryan Phillips was a defensive force on the field, to say the least. He led Idaho with 10 tackles, four of which went for losses, and recorded one sack. Phillips was awarded the Big Sky Conference "Defensive Player of the Week" for his performance.

The Lumberjack's run defense will relentlessly try to swing their axes at UI running backs Sherriden May, senior, and Joel Thomas, sophomore. The duo compiled 301 yards on the ground last week against MSU.

May was especially tough, gaining 242 yards in total offense. He also became the all-time leading rusher in UI history, breaking Willis Smith's 62-year-old mark of 3,029 yards. May is just two touchdowns short of breaking the Division I-AA record of 60 and needs 32 points to become the all-time leading scorer in I-AA history.

Wide receiver Kyle Gary, quicker than a cat on hot coals, has caught a touchdown pass in six straight games — an Idaho record. His electrifying 52-yard touchdown reception against MSU was the clincher.

Freshman quarterback Brian Brennan will be starting his second game in his brief career. He completed 18 of 29 passes for 242 yards last week.

The Vandals are second in the country in total offense and scoring offense, averaging 560.2 yards per game and 47.7 points per game.

NAU isn't too shabby either, as they rack up 468 yards per game.

Junior quarterback Jeff Lewis has completed 59 percent of his passes and has a remarkable touchdown to interception ratio of 14 to 1.

Lewis' favorite target is wideout Rod Alexander who has hauled in 34 receptions for 600 yards and averages 17.6 yards per catch.

Len Raney, a 5-foot-10, 190 pound senior, is their top running back, averaging 89.2 yards per game and 5.2 yards per carry.

Vandal Vibes:

— Idaho has won 15 of its last 17 games in the Kibbie Dome.

— The Vandals look for career win number 80 on Saturday.

— John L. Smith is the winningest coach in UI history with a 50-18 record.

— Since 1982, the Vandals possess the second best record in all of Division I-AA.

— Duke Garrett is third in career tackles at UI behind former Seattle Seahawk Sam Merriman and Tom Hennessey.

— Idaho is 28-20-1 on homecoming since 1945.

— The Kibbie Dome is drawing about 3,000 fans less than 1993.

Sports show in its eighth year

"Vandal Action," the University of Idaho sports highlight show is well into its eighth season.

It is produced by Instructional Media Services at the UI and can be seen several times per week on ITV 8, cable channel 17 or Prime Sports Northwest.

The show contains commentary from head coach John L. Smith and is hosted by Bob Curtis. The show also features highlights from UI football and basketball games, as well as sports trivia and interviews with UI athletes.

For more information, Kendall Kaiser, the producer of the show, can be reached at 885-7755.

Cross country meet on Sat.

The University of Idaho women's cross country team will travel to Bellingham, Wash. on Saturday to compete in the Western Washington Invitational.

Their next meet won't be until Nov. 12 at the Big Sky Championships in Salt Lake City, Utah. In 1993, Idaho placed second in the Big Sky Conference.

Earn extra money as a ref

Matt Shifley
Staff

Do you know what a basketball is? Do you have a general knowledge of the game of basketball? If you answered yes, then you have the potential to be a referee for boy's and girl's basketball games in Whitman County.

"The more basketball they have played will help but they don't have to have any previous refereeing experience," said Bob Richards, who is in charge of recruiting refs from U of I and WSU.

The type of basketball games students would be officiating are junior high boys and high school boys and girls.

Richards has students referee scrimmages and junior high games with varsity officials to help prepare them before they ref on their own.

He will have the students ref a period, then talk to them about what they are doing and let them watch another official for a period, and then send them back out to the battlefield.

All the games are played in Whitman County which includes Pullman, Colfax, Garfield, Palouse, Tekoa, Oakesdale, Lacrosse, Washtucna, Colton, Rosalia, St. John, and Endicott.

Richards said they usually need between 30 and 40 referees for the season and the majority come from U of I and WSU. The average referees earn about $800 per season.

The season for a basketball referee can run from September to March. In Whitman County, junior high girls start up in September and the basketball season ends in March with junior high girls in Pullman.

The high school boy's and girl's basketball season runs in November and December.

During the busy season, students can ref three or four games a week. However, Richards implied students only ref what they can because he does not want the officiating to interfere with their studies.

The cost to a student who wants to be a referees is about $120. There is a yearly due of $60 which goes to state and local referee's association. Then, they must purchase clothes which comprises of a referee's shirt, black pants, black socks, black shoes, and a whistle, and all of that totals about $60.

Students need their own transportation and they usually receive reimbursement for the miles they have to travel to referee a game.

"Usually, the people that drive get paid but there is times when you have to drive and you don't get paid for it, it does not work out that every time you drive you get paid but you can hook up with somebody and get a ride," said Richards.

On the most part, Richards said if you do drive there is some reimbursement for you.

The first meeting for students interested is this Sunday, Oct. 23, at Godfathers in Pullman at 6:30. The only thing students need to bring is their schedules so Richards knows when they are available to referee.

"Refereeing is really enjoyable, there is some grief with it at times, but if you enjoy working with kids then it is really rewarding because that's what it's all about, working with the kids and it's a fun time out there," said Richards.
