Virus attacks favorite Net game

Matt Baldwin
Staff

A game of fast action, quick kills and nice textured graphics, the computer game Doom has become one of the worlds major computer games. The game's latest release—Doom 2—has also become the computer owner's worst nightmare.

The beta version of Doom 2 was stolen from ID Software, the company which created the game, and was apparently distributed worldwide over standard phone lines to computer bulletin board systems as well as over Internet. Internet connects an estimated 21 million people across the planet. Doom 2 contains a computer virus known as "Goldbug."

The Goldbug virus was described in a technical report as a very complex computer virus. Written in the United States by a computer hacker going by the name of "Q," the virus was planted in Doom 2 and slipped into international distribution.

Goldbug infects the main boot record, which is an area a computer needs in order to run smoothly. The virus also infects both hard drives and floppy disks. Goldbug incorporates many different tricks to make detection and surveillance of the virus almost impossible by widely distributed anti-virus programs. In short, the virus tricks computers into thinking everything is okay, when it is not.

The virus infects random access memory and also enters the disk operating system, overwriting the information DOS uses when it boots the computer. Due to the virus' ability to cloak itself, users will see nothing wrong as long as the virus stays in the computer's memory.

Whenever a file infected with Goldbug is executed, the virus copies itself to the DOS boot record. When the virus is active it infects all files with the ending of .EXE. When a program with the .EXE extension is executed the virus creates "companion files." Companion files are created by the virus when it renames existing .EXE files and creates its own .EXE file. In doing this, the virus creates an exact duplicate of the previous file.

The virus also uses an encryption process—whenever it re-infects it re-encrypts itself. This process makes the virus very difficult to detect since the virus will not "look" the same from one computer to the other. As a result, Goldbug has been classified a "stealth" virus by the computer industry.

The following symptoms appear when a computer is infected with Goldbug: when the computer is booted from a floppy, the computer is unable find the hard drive (commonly called drive "C"). More files will suddenly and inexplicably appear in directories, and error messages will appear whenever anti-virus software is run.

A supposed report was issued by the programmer of Goldbug. The virus is also known by the names AU, Gold, Gold-fever and Goldmine. It is a new virus; many anti-virus programs are currently unable to defeat Goldbug. The programmer stated there is no detection method; however, Brian Stark, a programmer at Iowa State, said, "At this time the program F-Prot v2.14 discovers all files infected."

Currently, there is no way to completely remove the virus from a computer. To disable Goldbug, users should go to the DOS editor • SEE DOOM PAGE 2

ASUI Candidates Announce Intentions

Adam Gardels
Staff

ASUI presidential and vice presidential candidates are gearing up for a tight race that has already caused the formation of party tickets.

Sean Wilson, ASUI senator, was the first presidential candidate to declare his intentions. He addressed the Resident Hall Association on Monday. Wilson will be fighting an uphill battle as both Cade King and Brad Moeller are also fighting for the presidential seat.

Wilson, who is currently contending for the position without a running mate, stressed the fact that he is willing to be independent and stand up for important issues. "I fought hard against President John Marble," he said.

Last year, Wilson wanted to fire University of Idaho lobbyist Dan Whiting for attempting to cut the Women's Center's budget. Marble wanted to keep Whiting.

Wilson emphasized his activities on committees saying, "We are working on student retention issues."

Presidential candidate Cade King, who serves as chief of staff for President Marble, believes, "the major issue we want to accomplish is to unify students across campus." King plans to propose a campus-wide community service which would involve both the Greeks and dorm residents.

He also expressed the shared concern for safety his vice presidential running mate, Damon Darakjy also holds. "Damon is concerned with safety issues. There is a Safety Task Force now. He wants to strengthen it as vice president and take it off the ground," said King.

Presidential candidate Brad Moeller has joined forces with his vice presidential running mate Leonard Perry to improve the internal and external communication of the ASUI. Moeller would like to strengthen the ASUI public relations board. "Public relations is something the ASUI really needs. Overall, I feel there is a lack of communication, even in the ASUI," he said.

Perry is also concerned with the responsiveness of the ASUI to students needs. "We don't think the issues we feel are important are ever taken seriously by the ASUI," he said.

Batt tries to gain ground

A "meet-and-greet" function was held Oct. 21 at University Inn for gubernatorial candidate Phil Batt and other Republican political figures.

According to Andrew Arulanandam of Batt's Boise campaign headquarters, the event was "very successful."

"We didn't intend this to be a fundraiser, but we did raise some money there," he said. "People just brought checks and wanted to contribute."

Arulanandam estimated that 100-150 people were in attendance, including Senators Dirk Kempthorne and Larry Craig, former Senators Steve Symms and Jim McClure, and Boise-mayor Brent Coles.

Recently released polls have shown a narrowing in the gap between Batt and his opponent, Larry EchoHawk. Doug Cardon, a campaign worker in EchoHawk's office, said the Democratic candidate's lead fell approximately eight percentage points between Oct. 14 and Oct. 21. EchoHawk still holds the lead with 45 percent. Batt comes in at 38 percent, while Independent Ron Rankin has just five percent of the poll.

"We expect it to be very close," said Cardon. He attributed the fall in EchoHawk's lead to negative campaign ads run by Batt. A big factor could be the nine percent of poll respondents who were as yet undecided.

and load the config.sys file. To do this, type at the C: prompt "edit config.sys." In the file, there should be a place which says "DOS=HIGH." Change this line to say "DOS=LOW." After saving the file, reboot the computer. The virus will then be incapable of loading itself into memory, but this doesn't mean the virus is gone—it just means the virus is dormant. Computer programmers from an assortment of companies are working on writing a scanner capable of detecting and removing the Goldbug virus. The best chance of avoiding infection is to buy the game instead of obtaining a pirated copy from a friend or downloading it from a bulletin board system. Doom 2 has been loaded onto the network which runs most of the campus computer labs. It is unknown if this version of Doom 2 is the one which contains the virus. The company which programmed the game, ID Software, is by no means responsible for the virus. The beta version of the game was stolen from the company and then laced with the virus by a mischievous computer programmer.

Mosaic opportunities offered

Students and faculty who want to see the latest addition to the information superhighway need to experience Mosaic.

Mosaic, available to students at computer labs starting this fall, is a program that processes, displays and searches for information on various topics.

"Mosaic provides information in a format that allows students to learn in a non-serial fashion," said Kari Dickinson, who is customer support manager for the University of Idaho Computer Services.

Besides student uses, Dickinson said Mosaic is already being used by departments to provide course syllabi and lectures. "It provides a more effective method to have students find information on their own," she said.

Students may also use Mosaic as a tool to generate information, too. Dickinson said students have the ability to design their own pages that list their interests and hobbies.

"The usefulness of this product is limited only by people's imagination," she said. The more people that get involved and add information to Mosaic's expandable information base, the bigger and better the program will grow.

"It's built by everyone," she said. In the future, Dickinson said more information, including departmental information, will be accessible through Mosaic.

She also said to be aware of other information programs available at the university. Netscape, similar to Mosaic, is one such program. Netscape allows a user to access information without having to wait for the accompanying pictures. "If it's stable, then we'll put it on the menu soon," she said.

Speed is also a new factor for Mosaic. Dickinson said that the UI recently linked to the Northwest Network, which will increase the speed of acquiring information 13 or 14 times faster than before. "There will be much less frustration and much more fun," she said.

Clinton may be victim of success

James Risen
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—In October 1993, long-term interest rates fell to their lowest level in more than a decade, and the Clinton administration hailed the decline as proof that the president's economic program was paying off.

What a difference a year can make. No sooner had long-term rates bottomed at 5.83 percent on Oct. 20, 1993, than they reversed course and began climbing again.

This week they broke through the 8 percent barrier, the highest levels for 30-year government bonds since May 1992, erasing all the gains achieved since Clinton took office and threatening to slow the nation's economic recovery. What's more, the timing of the long upward march of interest rates is especially awkward for the president and his Democratic allies, because critical congressional elections are just two weeks away and the Clinton economic record is under intense scrutiny. American voters were in no mood to give Clinton any credit for the economy anyway, and so a sharp rise in borrowing costs for homeowners and other consumers with variable rate loans certainly won't make them any more sympathetic to Clinton.

But the irony is that Clinton seems to be a victim of his own success. Economists and other analysts argue that interest rates are rising simply because the economy is growing more rapidly, increasing the nation's demand for credit, a trend that has compelled the federal reserve to raise interest rates five times this year. Clinton's deficit reduction agreement that was passed last summer helped bring about lower rates, accelerating the pace of a lackluster recovery, and providing more rapid job creation in interest-sensitive sectors like the auto industry and home construction.

And today, rates are probably lower than they otherwise would be if the administration had not pushed through its economic plan last year.

"I think Clinton deserves some of the credit, because now rates are up for the right reason, which is that we are at or close to the peak of the recovery," observed David Wyss, an economist at DRI-McGraw Hill, a Lexington, Mass., economic forecasting firm. "In 1992, when rates were high, it was because of structural problems in the economy, including a large federal deficit. Rates were too high then, and they were retarding the recovery, but now we are seeing a rise in rates because of the upswing in the business cycle."

"We are seeing the fruits of the president's plan," added Rob Shapiro, an economist with the Progressive Policy Institute in Washington and a former Clinton campaign adviser.

After promoting the economic package last year on the promise of lower rates, Clinton administration officials are especially concerned about getting the message out to voters that this year's rate increases don't mean that the Clinton deficit plan was a failure. But they realize that higher rates are bad political medicine, especially right before an election in which the Republicans have a shot at taking control of one or both houses of Congress.

"You can never look at just one piece of the economic landscape, you have to look at the whole picture to understand what's going on with interest rates," argued Gene Sperling, a White House economic adviser.

"When we came into office, interest rates were high because of a public perception that the public sector, the government, was growing too fast, the deficit was not under control," Sperling added. "Now, interest rates are higher because you have a growing economy, and a perception that the demand for capital from the private sector is rising. Those are two very different scenarios for the American economy."

Of course, Republican politicians and allied economists are not willing to give Clintonomics credit for the drop in rates. And they see this fall's rapid increase in rates as proof that Clinton's plan had nothing to do with the recovery. Further, they now charge that most of the credit for faster growth should instead go to Federal Reserve Board Chairman Alan Greenspan, who they believe kept interest rates down late last year in order to help Clinton.

"President Clinton is the herald of happy talk about the economy, but the facts of life are catching up with him," said Rep. Dick Arme, R-Texas, chairman of the House Republican conference.

"The president sustained the recovery that began in March 1993—long before he came into office—primarily because interest rates were purposefully held down by the Federal Reserve," Arme said. "We know now from Bob Woodward's book 'The Agenda' that rates were held down on purpose by the Fed after Greenspan and Clinton had come to a secret understanding."

Added William Niskanen, chairman of the Cato Institute, a conservative Washington think tank: "The Clinton administration made a fundamental mistake in trying to sell deficit reduction as a means of reducing interest rates. Deficit reduction is valuable for other reasons, but not because it leads to lower rates."

Independent economists disagree over how much of the credit for last year's plunge in interest rates should be given to Clinton and his economic policies. And most agree with Robert Rubin, chairman of the National Economic Council at the White House, who argues that virtually all of the drop in rates came because of the Clinton plan. Yet many still believe that as much as half of the decline can be attributed to the deficit reduction package, and agree that rates might now be as much as one-half percentage point higher than they are today if the deficit had not been reduced.

When the Clinton administration came into office, the deficit for fiscal 1994 was forecast to hit $305 billion; the White House announced this week that the 1994 deficit actually fell to $203 billion, thanks both to rapid economic growth and the Clinton deficit plan.

Of course, bond market analysts and other economists stress that the Federal Reserve has played a more critical role in determining the direction of interest rates than has the administration's budget policy. "Deficits are cyclical beasts, they will rise and fall with the business cycle and the economy, and so deficits only affect rates and the bond market at the margins," argued Joe Lavorgna, a credit market analyst at UBS Securities in New York. "By far the biggest factor right now is the Fed."

Still, Rubin argues that proves his point; the Clinton economic policies have liberated the financial markets from their previous fixation on federal deficits. Now, interest rates in the credit markets are free to rise and fall based on economic fundamentals. The Fed has raised rates this year because the economy is better, he added.

Woman combat pilot dies in crash

Tony Perry
Los Angeles Times

SAN DIEGO—Navy Lt. Kara Hultgreen, who had dreamed as a teen-ager of being an astronaut and then became the first woman qualified as an F-14 combat pilot, was killed when her plane crashed during a training mission, the Navy announced Wednesday.

Hultgreen, 29, was attempting to land on the carrier Abraham Lincoln off Southern California when her F-14 Tomcat crashed Tuesday afternoon. The fighter's radar officer ejected and was rescued with only minor injuries but an extensive search failed to recover Hultgreen's body.

Hultgreen, a graduate of the University of Texas, was among the first group of women pilots to apply for combat training when the restriction on women flying combat aircraft was lifted by then-Secretary of Defense Les Aspin in April 1993.

"She was a wonderful, giving, generous person who loved flying, loved the Navy and loved her country," said her sister Dagny Hultgreen, a television journalist.

A high school basketball and tennis star and later an expert surfer, Hultgreen gave several interviews when she qualified last August as an F-14 pilot. She stressed the exhilaration and yet the danger of flying the F-14.

"I mean it's fun to go fast and light up the afterburner and pull out of G's and zip around the clouds," she told KNND-TV in San Diego. "I don't think I've mastered it quite yet. It's going to take a lot of hours and a lot of training."

She recalled the thrill of making her first four landings on a carrier:

"I barely remember my first four traps because all I could think of was how can I work the rest of my life to buy this drug. It's just an adrenaline rush."

Although she and other women pilots received much the same training as the men, their career options had been limited. In fact, before the restriction was lifted, Navy officials had suggested that Hultgreen leave the Navy because there were far more pilots than needed assigned to the planes women were allowed to fly.

Hultgreen was born in Connecticut. Her family moved frequently during her youth. She remarked once about being shocked when the family moved during her teen-age years from Canada to Texas.

In Canada, high school girls had been allowed to play any sport they chose. In Texas, she noted, girls were expected to become football cheerleaders.

"I just never noticed being treated any differently when I was in Canada," she told the Navy publication Compass. "The whole girl-guy issue was never an issue."

Hultgreen's mother Sally Spears, a lawyer in San Antonio, Texas, said her daughter had wanted to be an astronaut but then decided flying an aircraft was more exciting.

She joined the Navy while a senior at the University of Texas and became active-duty after receiving her degree in aerospace engineering in 1987. Before going to F-14 school, Hultgreen had flown a jet designed to jam the electronic gear of an enemy.

Hultgreen comes from a family of high-achievers: Her mother was one of the first women admitted to the University of Texas law school, one sister worked as a television reporter in Pittsburgh and Los Angeles and is now doing independent production for the show "The Crusaders," and a second sister formerly owned a fitness salon and now works with a movie production company in Los Angeles.

Kara was the youngest of the three daughters.

Her father, who is divorced from Spears, is a paper company executive in Appleton, Wis.

Capt. Mark Grissom, commander of the Navy's fighter wing for the Pacific fleet, based at Miramar Naval Air Station in San Diego, said an investigation was under way to determine the cause of the crash and whether Hultgreen ejected.

One theory is that the plane may have stalled out at 200 feet above the ocean as Hultgreen attempted the day landing.

"This unfortunate mishap should in no way (harm) the effectiveness of women in combat, the integration of women into combat units or their gaining the respect of their male colleagues," Grissom told reporters.

Grissom said Hultgreen had initially failed to qualify as an F-14 pilot: a grueling process that includes 10 daytime landings on a carrier and six night landings. One in four pilots fail on the first attempt at qualifying, Grissom said.

In her second attempt, Hultgreen qualified last August. Another woman pilot, Lt. Carey Lohrenz, has also qualified in the F-14, but Hultgreen did so first, Navy officials said.

Small, floating bombs unnerve police

Los Angeles Times

RIVERSIDE, Calif.—At least three small, crude bombs have floated over this Los Angeles suburb in recent days, dangling from helium-filled trash bags and unnerving police, who have yet to find a suspect or a motive behind them.

None of the three devices exploded, but they could easily have detonated said Sgt. Robert Hanson of the Riverside Police Department.

"They are probably designed for aerial burst, but who knows where the fragments will come down, or whether the balloons will come down prematurely and start a fire or cause serious injury to someone," Hanson said.

The makeshift bombs are metal cylinders filled with a small amount of explosives. A crude detonation device is attached to the cylinder, which is hung from the helium-filled plastic bag by a wire.

One of the devices was found on a residential street before dawn last Friday by a passerby who alerted police. A second was recovered on the ground about two weeks ago by a resident who called police. That person reported to police Tuesday that she saw a similar balloon get momentarily snagged in a tree before it blew away, Hanson said.

Vincenti steps down as law dean

Zachary Craig-Works
Staff

Sheldon Vincenti will step down as dean of the University of Idaho's College of Law effective Aug. 1. Vincenti has held the post for the past 12 years.

Vincenti plans on leaving his administrative duties and returning to the classroom.

UI President Elisabeth Zinser said in a news release that "The College of Law serves Idaho well and has a regional and national reputation for high quality. Dean Vincenti should be complimented on the fine work he's done in the past 12 years."

UI Provost John Yost added to Zinser's praise of Vincenti. "His stimulating intellect and commitment to the university have been especially helpful," Yost said.

Yost said he would begin "a professionally appropriate" search for the selection of Vincenti's successor. Yost also said he would be consulting with law faculty and President Zinser. According to the Provost's office, the process for finding Vincenti's replacement has not yet begun.

Vincenti was optimistic about both the future of the College of Law and his own. "Twelve years is the second longest any one has ever served as law dean," he said. "I'd like to spend the remainder of my career pursuing other academic challenges. I leave the deanship with confidence that our school is strong and with optimism for the future."

Vincenti has been with the UI College of Law since 1973. He served as associate and acting dean before being named full dean in 1984.

Vincenti is a graduate of Harvard College and Harvard Law School.

Polls show Demos closing gap

Thomas B. Rosenstiel
Los Angeles Times

WASHINGTON—With a smattering of new polls showing Democrats closing the gap in several key races, the Republican party announced three new attack ads Thursday that call President Clinton a liar. And the White House responded by accusing the Republicans of intellectual dishonesty.

The activity, from the tightening of the races to the charges and counter-charges, is typical of the final days before an election. Yet amid the latest round of rhetoric and statistics, there are signs of subtle shifts in public sentiment and political strategy that together suggest Democratic party losses Nov. 8 might not be as severe as many experts have predicted.

One factor, according to a new poll, is that voters are focusing more on local issues as elections draw closer, a trend likely to benefit incumbents because they have more political left than newcomers. Most incumbents are Democrats.

Another element at play is Clinton's rising popularity in response to recent foreign policy successes, and the good will may

After studying CREF's performance history, Morningstar gave five-stars—its highest rating—to both the CREF Stock and Bond Market Accounts, and an impressive four-stars to the CREF Social Choice Account.* In fact, the CREF Stock Account was singled out as having “...one of the best 10-year records among variable annuities.”*** Of course, past performance is no guarantee of future results.

“...CREF is far and away the cheapest variable annuity out there.”

Morningstar also called attention to CREF's “...rock-bottom” fees—something that can really add to the size of your nest-egg down the road.

What's more, TIAA's traditional annuity—which offers guaranteed principal and interest plus the opportunity for dividends—was cited as having the highest fixed account interest rate among all annuities in its class.

be trickling down to his fellow party members.

Clinton's improving fortunes, which have been apparent in polls for a week, showed up again Thursday in a poll by CNN/USA Today. It found that the number of Americans who approve of his job performance stood at 48 percent, compared with 46 percent who disapprove.

In turn, several prominent Democrats also seemed to be closing in races that only two weeks ago looked like shocking losses:

—In Massachusetts, a strong performance in a debate this week helped Sen. Edward M. Kennedy continue to pull away from Republican challenger Mitt Romney. According to a poll released Thursday by the Boston Globe and WBZ-TV, Kennedy is now leading by 20 points. Only two weeks ago it was a dead heat.

—In Florida, two new polls showed Democratic Gov. Lawton Chiles had either pulled even or passed Republican Jeb Bush, son of the former president, only three weeks after Chiles was down by 10 points.

—In New York, two other polls find that Gov. Mario Cuomo is catching up to Republican challenger George Pataki, a state representative, with the two now roughly even in one poll and Cuomo trailing only slightly in another. One poll shows Pataki with 37 percent support and the other gives him 40 percent. Cuomo is favored by 36 percent in both surveys.

Pataki's support is bleeding away to an independent candidate and to undecided voters, while Cuomo is stable. The polls were conducted after Cuomo received the surprise endorsement of New York City's Republican mayor, Rudolph Giuliani.

A new poll by the Times Mirror Center for the People and the Press in Washington also found considerably more support this week for Democratic congressional candidates than just a few weeks ago, though it found that other factors, besides Clinton, were driving the change.

Overall, 47 percent of registered voters said they were likely to vote Republican vs. 44 percent Democratic, a significant narrowing from the 52 percent-to-40 percent margin Republicans enjoyed Oct. 9 in the Times Mirror poll.

Nonetheless, the survey, which polled 1,577 registered voters from Oct. 20-24, suggested Republicans hold a wider lead among those people considered most likely to vote, based on their past voting performance. Among that group, Republicans still held a 51 percent-43 percent advantage.

Republican National Committee chairman Haley Barbour, in a news conference in Washington, acknowledged that Democrats were gaining in many races. However, he argued that a shift is to be expected in the late days of a campaign, a time when undecided voters often turn to their traditional party.

Barbour announced that the Republican Committee was about to spend roughly $2 million to air three new ads in 25 states attacking the Democratic party and Clinton in particular.

One ad asks voters, "Are you really fed up with Congress? Well, on Nov. 8 you've got a chance to do something."

Another says, "Their power is crumbling, the Clinton Democrats. Now they're lying about Republicans."

The third, playing off a recently leaked White House memo about ways to cut the deficit, charges that "behind closed doors the Clinton White House is discussing cuts in social security and medicare, and billions more in tax increases."

Having trouble meeting carnivorous needs on that pitiful minimum wage? How does sirloin steak at $3.49 per pound sound? Or pork chops at $2.19?

The University of Idaho's Vandal Brand Meats could be the answer to many students' problems. Located on the UI Farm northwest of the Kibbie Dome, the Vandal Brand store is open to the public Monday through Friday 12:30 to 5:30 p.m. The store operates as part of the Meat Lab of the Animal Sciences Department and most of the butchering is done by students.

These are not lab test animals that are butchered and sold after experiments; they are regular animals used to teach students butchering techniques. The meat is reportedly of far better quality than the competition's—and has less fat, too.

Vandal Brand Meats carries many varieties of meats and cuts—from lamb chops ($3.69 per pound) to ox tail ($.99 per pound). All of the cuts were less expensive than a popular local grocery store—usually by about one dollar per pound.

Ronald Richard, Meat Lab manager, has been running the store for eight years. Although it has been operating since 1968, it wasn't until the early eighties that the store began selling smaller cuts of meat to the general public.

Many students may have already tried some Vandal Brand products since the meat lab supplies smoked sausage to the Kibbie Dome and pepper steak to the UI golf course. Whether students need a whole pig for roasting ($1.39 per pound) or some sliced bacon for breakfast ($1.79 per pound), it's available from Vandal Brand Meats and is easier on the pocketbook, too.

Landfarming works to clean up future parking lot

Vernon Spencer, Jr.
Contributing Writer

How do you clean 13,000 cubic yards of dirt? You "landfarm" it.

That is what the University of Idaho is going to do with over 1,200 truckloads of contaminated dirt being excavated from a site on Sweet Avenue between U.S. Highway 95 and Railroad Street. The Burlington Northern-owned site is being decontaminated for possession by UI. UI hopes to obtain the property by November for parking and other uses.

The 11-acre site was contaminated with petroleum products and agricultural chemicals over the last 50 years or more by companies Burlington Northern rented the land to, said Dr. Ron Crawford, co-director of the Center for Hazardous Waste Remediation. The project is a cooperative effort between UI, the parties responsible for contamination, and the Idaho Department of Environmental Quality.

The dirt is being hauled to a prepared 10-acre College of Agriculture site west of the Kibbie Dome where Crawford said the dirt will then be spread one to two feet deep, "bulked" with straw for aeration, fertilized for more nitrogen and tilled once a week.

"The old site is not good for microbial action. It has insufficient nitrogen—all organisms need it," Crawford said. He also said that because the clay had little aeration at the old site, it lacked oxygen, which the bacteria need to live.

When the dirt is spread out, the compounds will evaporate, and the environmental bacteria will use the fertilizer-contaminated dirt and added fertilizer to break down the non-volatile petroleum contaminants. Crawford said this process, a type of bio-remediation, will take about two years.

Contamination in the soil runs from a few parts per million to several percent, said Crawford. The remediated soil may be used for construction fill.

Since the site is next to Paradise Creek, Crawford said air vents and monitoring wells may also be installed in the decontaminated lot. Some wells are already in place. The monitoring wells are normal water wells which will allow workers to check subsurface water for contaminants that may need to be removed with the air vents. The air vents collect underground water and vent to the surface so volatile contaminants can evaporate. "Regulations don't permit much petroleum near stream(s) and near-surface groundwater," Crawford said.

The landfarming site was used for pasture until recently. Now the topsoil has been bermed around the contaminated soil and an erosion control system has been installed around the site to control erosion and collect water run-off.

Clean soil to fill the excavated lot has been stockpiled at the landfarming site while the College of Agriculture has been compensated for lost pasture to buy hay, said Crawford. "I can't say (enough) about how cooperative the College of Ag has been," he said.

The Burlington Northern lot is not the only dirt being landfarmed on the campus site. Soil around a leaky underground storage tank on UI's west farm is also being remediated at the landfarm.

After two years of determining characteristics of the Burlington Northern site, excavation of contaminated soil is moving full-steam ahead. Four trucks are hauling out a total of 60 to 80 loads a day, said Ken Hall, UI construction manager. Over 12,000 yards have already been removed. He said he had hoped to be done hauling three weeks ago, but is now hoping to be done by the end of this week.

A petroleum smell could still be detected at the site. It came from a hole 100 by 150 feet and approximately 14 feet deep. A workman said excavation has been completed unless soil tests reveal more needs to be done.

Vandal game on TV

The University of Idaho Vandals and the University of Montana Grizzlies will go head-to-head tomorrow in a battle to determine the leaders of the NCAA I-AA division. UM is ranked number one, while UI comes in at number three in national polls. Fortunately for Vandal fans who can't travel to Missoula, the game will be televised live here in Moscow on channel 17 beginning at 11 a.m.

Illegal aliens charged with crime may face deportation

William Booth
The Washington Post

MIAMI—Illegal immigrants charged with misdemeanors and non-violent felonies may soon face speedy deportation in a national pilot program announced here Thursday by federal and state officials.

Continuing to tap into strong resentment over the cost of illegal immigration, Florida Gov. Lawton Chiles (D) unveiled the initiative, promising voters that "deporting criminal aliens is an important part of the strategy to open up space in our prisons for more dangerous offenders."

Chiles, in a tough race against Republican challenger Jeb Bush that has focused on crime and taxes, called the new program "historic," although in reality it will enforce existing federal immigration laws and specifically target criminal aliens.

Bush spokesman Cory Tilley called the program "another political stunt."

According to Chiles and his staff, about 12 officers from the U.S. Immigration and Naturalization Service and the Florida Department of Law Enforcement will be assigned to jails to identify illegal aliens arrested for misdemeanors and nonviolent felonies such as burglary or theft.

The INS officers will work with state prosecutors, who will attempt to convince the illegal immigrant charged with a crime that he or she should accept a plea bargain and voluntary deportation.

Cubans would not be sent back to Cuba because Fidel Castro's government refuses to accept deported criminals.

The pilot program, which will run for three months and include four counties from Palm Beach to Key West, will target only nonviolent offenders. Illegal aliens charged with serious, violent crimes will not be deported.

Criminal illegal aliens have long been subject to deportation, but few are sent home. Officials said that deportable aliens are rarely identified—and are almost never offered plea bargains in exchange for voluntarily leaving the country.

Florida spends at least $43 million a year on the 2,700 aliens in state prisons—an estimated $16,000 per inmate. In another program, the state has begun deporting some illegal immigrants serving prison time for nonviolent crimes.

Board should take Micron bribe

If benefiting students of the state of Idaho is the true goal of higher education, the State Board of Education should accept Micron Technology's $6 million donation.

According to Oct. 26 Moscow-Pullman Daily News reports on the board's meetings in Pocatello earlier this week, Micron offered the $6 million donation on the condition that an engineering program be established at Boise State University. Five million would go to BSU, and the remaining $1 million would be spent on statewide technology needs. The only condition of the donation is the engineering program must be administered by BSU—a stipulation proposed under Micron's theory that the only way to have a "world-class" program is through local control.

Whether Micron's offer is a bribe, as board member Keith Hinckley says, or a sincere offer designed to create a world-class program is beyond the point. Micron has offered Idaho students $6 million. The state isn't ever going to offer students that. In fact, the board has already approved a request for only half that amount, which would bolster the existing UI-run engineering program at BSU. The plan is to have both universities contribute $1.5 million each over two years.

The board could truly help state students by giving the students what they need—a program in Boise. Idaho's largest population base exists in the Boise area, where surprise, surprise, most students live. Engineering education in Boise would allow students to live in familiar environments, closer to their homes. Students could also live off-campus with their parents and save a lot of money. Traveling to Moscow entirely removes that option for the vast majority of UI students.

The other factor the board hasn't seemed to consider is that a program in Boise would give students heightened job opportunities, since the Boise area is home to more engineering jobs than Moscow—Micron Technologies, Morrison-Knudson and Hewlett-Packard, to name a few.

In 1983, the State Board defined mission statements for each higher education institution to prevent schools from duplicating services. Theoretically, more money could be spent at one school to improve one program, instead of money spread at several schools that would result in two or three mediocre programs. As of now, those mission statements have not been able to provide students with what they really need. They should be fine-tuned to allow electrical engineering at BSU with Micron funds—unless Idaho is willing to pay for its own "world-class" program.

Idaho isn't willing to do that, especially while the board is allowing itself to get caught in petty politics between schools.

It's time for the students of Idaho to get help from wherever they can. Unfortunately, that includes Micron at BSU.

—Chris Miller

Signs of the Season

Equal time a sorry myth

In all the bandying about of loaded terms and declarations during the latest round of debate on moral and political issues, one concept has reared its hideous head repeatedly. Cleverly disguised as a rational idea, it worms its way into the hearts and minds of stubborn ideologues everywhere. What, you may ask, in the hell is he talking about?

I'm talking about equal time. Frankly, it's a crock.

Now on the surface, it sounds quite reasonable. Everyone should have equal time to present their differing opinions and let the unwashed masses decide for themselves. For years, that was the rallying cry of any group that struggled to make itself heard. Civil rights groups, especially, were concerned with equal time, equal facilities and so on. Equal time for everyone. That sounds fair. So, when groups like Students for Family Values and any deviant group that Jerry Falwell belongs to start clamoring for "equal time," we should grant it to them to be fair, right?

Well, there's a difference between being fair and being stupid. If you want to convince someone that you have a valid viewpoint, but their basic beliefs are geared against some of your views, you have to work much harder. If you have to fight to be heard over someone who is allotted the same amount of time to argue that you're wrong or dangerous in addition to the cultural bias, you're screwed.

Homosexuals in this country have been fighting for the right to live without fear that some group of drunken rednecks will come to their homes and beat the crap out of them, fire them from their jobs, etc. Now, in a clever move, many groups like Students for Family Values, are claiming that they as (conservatives, white males, serial killers or whatever) are being discriminated against, and they deserve...what's that phrase? That's right, "equal time."

What are they going to argue with their newfound equal time? That gay people are morally unsound, that they spread disease, that Satan loves them because they make good firewood. You know, the usual.

Generally, equal time is most heard in debates about homosexuality and religion in schools, which coincidentally is where the highest number of righteous fools tend to congregate. That alone should set off bells and whistles. Actually, equal time is a misnomer; most of the groups who claim it just don't feel that the American bias toward Judeo-Christian mores is enough to slop the hogs with anymore.

So, to establish equal time, I think we need to take a few major actions. First of all, we'll tax the hell out of the churches. If they want to continue the trend of uniting the far right of the GOP with religious groups, let them pay for the privilege. Then, we'll step up gay and civil rights activism.

Get advertisers working on this. Hell, let's follow every (religious, conservative, right-wing, etc.) ad with a matching ad for (gay rights, church/state separation, Planned Parenthood—take your pick). Get some debates going; accuse the other side of immorality and inform them they're going to hell for their beliefs.

Why not? Us vs. them; we haven't had any real value clashes since Tailgunner Joe did his old black magic back in the '50s with the help of the House Un-American Activities Committee.

Equal time. Be careful of what you wish for. You just may get it.

A user's guide: how to tell if you're an insensitive person

Of all the popular movements today (conservative, socialist, bowel), by far the most visible is the quest to make our society sensitive to other cultures and alternate lifestyles. It is impossible to travel around the U of I campus without noticing signs that say, "Embrace Diversity," "No on One," "Join the Lesbian Avengers and Win a Free Apron!," "Come Out of the Closet (and Pull Your Pants Up!)," and "Twenty-five Kegger at Joe's! Bring Your Own Goldfish." Obviously, U of I students are a very diverse crowd, or there would not be so many brightly colored fliers posted all over the place.

Which brings me to insensitivity. I am a very insensitive person, which is unfortunate, because I often find myself being physically abused by persons more sensitive than I.

Aaron Schab

"How do I know if I'm insensitive?" you may ask. Well, I shall help you in your search to connect with your inner self. With the assistance of my roommate (who is insensitive but not as insensitive as me), I have compiled a list of seventeen scenarios/viewpoints that can help you determine whether you are insensitive or not.

You are insensitive if:

1. When, on National Coming Out Day, someone asked if you would like to wear a pink triangle, you replied by saying, "Hell no, I ain't wearin' no pink triangle! That's for sissies!"
2. You erupt into howls of derisive laughter whenever you see that flier for "The Lesbian Avengers" (insert superhero music here).
3. You think that "NAMBLA" is one of the frat houses on campus

(for those people even less-sensitive than me, "NAMBLA" stands for North American Man-Boy Love Association or some sick thing like that).

4. You can be overheard in the dormitory cafeteria telling your friends, "I wish they'd quit serving all this damn foreign food and serve some good old fashioned American cuisine like meat and potatoes!"
5. You still think Anita Hill was a liar.
6. You think Clarence Thomas is an all-American success story, and should be a role-model for all youth, regardless of race.
7. You're a guy and the thought of lesbianism turns you on.
8. You think D.J. Simpson should get the electric chair.
9. You get nauseous whenever you see those commercials with women talking about their yeast infections.
10. You think that homeless people are mostly just a bunch of drunks, junkies, and whores.

11. You think that Bill and Hillary Clinton personify everything that is wrong with the United States government.

12. You get sick of seeing all those stupid red ribbons that rich (but sensitive!), promiscuous, sexually deviant Hollywood-types always wear on award shows.

13. You personally like the taste of dolphin in your tuna fish.

14. You are pro-logging, pro-farming, or disagree with the E.P.A., Greenpeace, and Earth First! in any way, shape or form.

15. You thought "Philadelphia" was a really stupid movie.

16. You think hunting for spotted owls is fun.

17. You are going to vote "yes" on Proposition One.

Friends, if you answered yes to two or more of those scenarios, you are most likely an insensitive person. You have several options. You could find the nearest liberal and have him/her take you out into the street and shoot you, but since most of them don't believe in the Second Amendment and don't own a gun, this is not a logical option. Another idea would be to join the Democratic Party and have yourself "sensitized." If your body should reject the "sensitization" you could end up hospitalized, but, as a liberal, you could always have Dr. Jack Kevorkian drop by to give you a "check-up" and then his infamous "check-out."

The last option is to do what I have done. Accept your insensitivity. The biological fact is, we were born this way, and no matter how much counseling we have, how many diversity seminars we attend, or how many gay bars we go to, we will always be uncaring, callous, unsympathetic, insensitive jerks. My message to you is to come out of the closet and reveal your true, cold-hearted self before it's too late. As the self-esteem crowd can often be heard shouting, "You must love yourself before you can love anybody else."

Letters to the Editor

Protesters show heroic spirit

In 1943 Berlin, the "Rose Street Women" made an amazing and courageous stand for the lives of their loved ones—Jewish husbands being deported to concentration camps by the Nazis. Now, fifty years later, these dozens of women are regularly honored every February for defying the Nazis by standing on Rose Street and yelling for the SS to return their husbands. In the face of machine guns and military orders to clear the street, they kept their vigil for six days. They risked their lives to save lives. And the Nazis—miraculously—gave in. Will you stare down the guns when it really counts?

On Oct. 2 in Pullman, many students and regular citizens peacefully gathered to protest our own nation's temporary descent into the insanity of holocaust. Law abiding, God fearing members of the community risked their jobs, security, and safety to stand along Grand Ave. for an hour protesting the holocaust of abortion. It's a kind of bravery we rarely see in America these days. I want to thank them for showing up and tolerating the harassment they annually endure from some passersby when Pullman takes part in the 900-city International Life Chain. You're the kind of people who made this country possible.

As history has repeatedly shown, not machine guns, discriminatory laws, threats, nor media bias can suppress the truth. Heroic people willing to stand up for what's right have always existed, and—thanks to the human spirit—always will. See you next year.

—Denise Ortiz

Homosexuality a true perversion

I am happy that those of you who were offended by my letter last Thursday instigated such a response as was displayed. All of you took my comments out of context, but that is all right. However, I explained that fundamentalist Christians like myself are against your behavior, without stating why we are against it. I will give you two reasons why homosexuality is such a perversion.

To begin, I will give you a Biblical argument. Romans 1 says that although people knew God existed they chose to suppress this truth in their wickedness and worshipped creature rather than Creator. For this reason, God let them continue in their sinful way. As a result, people gave up natural relations for that which is unnatural. Men were seen committing unlawful sexual acts with other men, women committing unlawful sexual acts with women. They, in turn, received the penalty due their perversion—death—a life separated from God. Furthermore, God declared the behavior an abomination in the Old Testament in Leviticus. God, who sanctions a particular behavior such as homosexuality as unnatural, gives us no reason to believe He would ever change His mind about what He declares to be natural.

Since once you read that the Bible says God despises your behavior, you dismiss this as being "antiquated" or "contradictory" because you feel God does indeed sanction your behavior. You might even think the Bible is not the ultimate source of morality and virtue, because you incorrectly argue that all people who agree in Christianity agree with the wrongs committed by it in the past. You must then succumb instead to a "human" argument. Why must you engage in homosexual behavior? Being born that way just does not cut it. How do you advance the human species? Men cannot have children naturally with other men. Women cannot have children naturally with other women. Sexual intercourse for men upon men is ultimately destructive to your bodies. Women cannot engage in sexual intercourse with other women except with an object unconnected with your body. Just mentioning sexual relations in this way shows how perverted the behavior is.

AIDS has been spread almost exclusively through the homosexual population, spreading to the heterosexual population through numerous homosexuals who claim to be bisexual, and engage in intercourse with both sexes. Only a tiny percentage of cases are spread through IV drug users and blood transfusions. To top this off, male homosexual sex with a condom is not safe at all since a high percentage of condoms break in the rectum, leading to further spread of the virus. Thus, your behavior is ultimately destructive to society. Your corrupted behavior is killing other people by your total demand to have your perverted sexual lusts satisfied!

Unfortunately your behavior has no positive benefits, including your desire for companionship. Why is it so hard for you to give up this destructive lifestyle to engage in natural relations with a sex different from your own? Try obtaining companionship instead from a person of a differing sex. I guarantee you will be more fulfilled. You will also aid in protecting society from others as yourself from those of us who embrace the natural sexual relationship as being the only normal and proper way to exist. Furthermore, if you turn from yourself and accept Jesus Christ as your Lord and Savior, He will aid you in overcoming the perverted lusts which burn inside you. He may not totally remove the sinful desires from you, but He will aid you in shunning the desires when they are at their strongest.

—Michael M. Rogers

Re-elect great legislators

Latah County has a great team of state legislators in Senator Gary Schroeder, Representative James "Doc" Lucas, and Representative Maynard Miller.

Senator Schroeder is a member of the Senate Transportation Committee. His influence with the Idaho Transportation Board will continue to increase as he gains seniority. This influence is critical to untangling Moscow's worsening traffic problems.

Representative James "Doc" Lucas' influence is also critical. As a member of the House Appropriations Committee, his presence assures us that the University of Idaho's needs will get a fair hearing before this budget-setting legislative committee.

Representative Maynard Miller is on the House Education Committee. Here he will renew the fight for a fair public school funding formula for Moscow School District as well as promote University of Idaho programs.

District 5 has a great team representing us. Let's all vote to re-elect Gary Schroeder, Doc Lucas, and Maynard Miller on Nov. 5.

Wildlife needs land, not cattle

I would like to respond to Suzanne Collett's Oct. 25 letter concerning grazing land. First of all, grazing land is not a resource. Grazing is exploitation of the land. Cows/sheep are the resource. Privately owned lands east of the Mississippi feed the United States. Only a small percentage of U.S. beef is produced on western public lands where the biggest controversy lies. Grazing lands are not the foundation for America's wildlife. It's land that wildlife needs, not grazing land. Is wildlife really better off with cattle? She said 87% of cattlemen have "areas" that support wildlife. What is an "area" and does that mean that 13% of cattlemen have no wildlife on their land? She said, "17% of cattlemen set aside land specifically for wildlife." First of all, "percent" of cattlemen is not the same as "percent" of land area. Based on your own numbers, assuming 17% of cattlemen own 17% of grazing land (which is 67% of 64% of all U.S. land), and they set it all aside for wildlife (a preposterously high estimate), the result would be 7.3% of all U.S. land set aside for wildlife by cattlemen. And how much of this is taken out of grazing due to financial incentives at taxpayer expense? (Incidentally, if 13% of cattlemen have no wildlife on their land as implied by her numbers, then 5.6% of all U.S. land (all of it grazing land) is devoid of wildlife assuming equal ownership. Do the math.)

So what if cattlemen feed wildlife. Is that a good thing? If the habitat is so good on their land, then why feed wildlife? Maybe feeding artificially increases wildlife populations on private grazing land. And are cattlemen really qualified to determine wildlife populations? I know that cattlemen have a good handle on relative abundance of spectacular wildlife (deer, elk, etc.) on their land. They live there every day. But what about small birds, mammals, reptiles, amphibians, fish, insects, plants, and fungi? Do cattlemen know how these populations are changing with respect to abundance and species composition?

I believe that grazing and wildlife can coexist. I've seen some (although few) ranches with good riparian areas, stable stream banks, diverse uplands, and apparently high species diversity. They also had cows that were moved around and kept away from stream banks. On private land this can be done, on public land the cattle are let loose to fend for themselves. Cows don't use public land indiscriminately. They concentrate along streams and destroy riparian areas needed by wildlife. And, if you think they improve water quality, you drink it.

My point is that few cattlemen employ grazing practices designed to let cows and wildlife coexist. It's difficult, it takes effort, and it requires cattlemen to change values. But times, they are a changin'. Recently, the president of the Wyoming Cattleman's Association quit his position to work for (gasp!) The Nature Conservancy. He now manages a working cattle ranch in Wyoming that grows cows and preserves several endangered native plant species.

Keep liberal left out of Idaho

I am a returning student who is continuously amazed by the liberal left's attempts to malign and attack the character of conservative candidates running for office. I am referring to the letter submitted by a Miss Nancy Shaffer. Miss Shaffer attacked Congressional Candidate Helen Chenoweth for her stands on various issues which were either misquoted or blatantly false.

Miss Shaffer claims not to be able to pronounce the names of the minerals located in the Sawtooth National Recreation Area and claims there are only two. Have you difficulty with gold, silver, tungsten and platinum, to name a few? I know of a corporation with nine active claims in the SNRA with gold reserves alone worth over 135 million dollars (active claims means they are mining there as you read this). As Mr. Darakjy noted, Helen Chenoweth has a position of not locking out possibilities for the future with regards to future mining claims.

I am particularly amused by the remark made in reference to the Endangered Salmon Bake, because I was the organizer for the event held in Lewiston. The salmon was quite possibly the best that I have eaten in years. The run into Idaho is what is threatened, Miss Shaffer, not the species. The flap about the remark Mrs. Chenoweth made about abolishing the Department of Education is also out of context. Another student made a statement that there would be 49 or so additional departments if the federal government would return to the states the budget for education. There is a Department of Education in all 50 states, and I for one would be much happier to have state control of my tax dollars. Or did we forget that the federal government receives its tax dollars from the citizens of the states?

The Federal Government should reduce our tax burden by the amount in the Department of Education Budget. I realize that most of you students don't pay much, if any, income tax, but I do, and after owning two businesses in Idaho, I can tell you the bureaucracy, regulation, and taxes are out of control. Mrs. Chenoweth has not advocated elimination of programs, only the elimination of a bloated federal bureaucracy.

In addition, I, for one, believe Helen Chenoweth is the only candidate representing Idaho's best interests. Bill Clinton received less than 30 percent of the vote in this state, yet Larry LaRocco votes with the President 82 percent of the time. Larry LaRocco is not mainstream Idaho. Helen Chenoweth is, and with your vote on Nov. 8, we can send a message to the liberal left to keep their leftist agenda and the Clinton Agenda out of our great state.

HALLOWEEN THRILLERS

Students of Tau Kappa Epsilon fraternity plan to scare candy corn out of little kids and fellow students at their annual haunted house this weekend.

The normally innocuous house at the top of the hill at 745 Nez Perce Drive will be transformed into an alive monstrosity after the TKE members bring in bodies and blood. Past years have included putrid swamps and labyrinths of doom, and this year, which will be the house's twentieth consecutive year of celebration, promises the maze and more.

"Last year's biggest hit was the chainsaw massacre because nobody was expecting it," said Mark Hansen, president of the TKE house. "This year we'll have a graveyard, maze, mock operating room, a guillotine..."

Members of the house will decorate their own rooms in horrific ways, and Hardee's is co-sponsoring the event for the second year in a row by advertising and printing tickets, which have a coupon on the back good for a $1 off a combo or chicken dinner.

"This is a chance for the house to get more support for the haunted house," said Kevin Myers, a supervisor at the Moscow Hardee's. "(It's) also a chance for Hardee's to help the community."

Hansen said over 400 UI students, community members, and of course, children had their pants scared off last year. "We have tour guides to help the little ones not get too scared," Hansen said.

Proceeds from the haunted house will go to Tau Kappa Epsilon's international philanthropy—the Special Olympics. Ticket prices are $2 or $1 plus a can of food, which will go to the Moscow Food Bank. The Special Olympics gained $700 from last year's house.

The haunted house is open to the public and will run from dusk to midnight this Sunday and Monday nights.

The Palouse Empire Mall will have its annual trick-or-treat event Monday from 5-8 p.m. for children under 12. Parents are encouraged to "trick-or-treat" with younger children as they move from store to store in the mall, where each merchant will hand out goodies.

Theophilus Tower is preparing for a swarm of ghosts and goblins to arrive Oct. 29. Community children will participate in the annual "Tower Trick-or-Treat" from 6-9 p.m.

The program is sponsored by tower resident assistants and candy is donated from local businesses. "In the past, approximately 1,000 children showed up for the event," said French Hall R.A. Hydee Tubbs.

Volunteer residents will hand out candy. Escorts will be available, free of charge, to take children around the tower while refreshments will be served in the lobby for parents. "We are asking that escorts and volunteers dress up for the occasion," said Tubbs.

Any left over candy will be donated to the Moscow Food Bank. "If possible, kids are encouraged to bring a can of food to donate to the food bank," Tubbs said.

A haunted house will also be set up in the basement of the tower.

Any tower residents interested in passing out candy should contact their R.A.

—Joey Wellman

Farghee Hall will have their ninth annual haunted house from 7 p.m. to midnight Oct. 29. On the corner of Blake and Taylor avenues on the University of Idaho campus. The price is a $2 donation, which will go to the Wishing Star Foundation.

The University of Idaho student chapter of ASID will hold a pumpkin carving contest Oct. 29 in Art and Architecture South in the third year crit space. Pumpkins are due at 4 p.m., and the contest is open to anyone, with a limitation of one entry per person. There is a $1 entry fee and prizes will be awarded for 1st, 2nd and 3rd places. The pumpkins will be awarded to needy recipients.

Palouse Adventures plays roles with a twist

Christine Erme
Staff

"The demons took the book from the ghost."

"Her soul was stolen."

Such are the sounds of the role playing group, Palouse Adventures. PA is a role playing group in which the players, or "gamers" as they call themselves, take on characteristics of a character from a game. These characteristics are given to the gamers on a sheet, and they use their imaginations to act them out. Each gamer has a sheet telling the strengths and weaknesses of their character, what the character can and cannot do, and the special equipment and powers that he or she has. These things help the gamers to picture and personify the characters.

"The role playing helps in developing social skills because the character reflects what the person is thinking," said PA Vice President Jill Foster.

With members from academic majors all across campus, PA has at least 12 members attending each Monday night.

"PA has been around for about 12-15 years. Right now we're trying to keep going because all of the people who were really into gaming graduated last year," said Foster.

Monday night PA ran a game called "Champions," which is a role playing game that involves war. "Champions" is a very math oriented game because you have a point spending range and you can't exceed it.

It also helps with communication skills, because you're talking with the other players," said PA Public Relations Officer Mike Jones.

Foster said that most PA members tend to be non-traditional students or residence hall members. "We hardly have any fraternity and sorority students in PA, and that's because fraternities and sororities have their own gaming system in the Greek system, but they are always welcome to come," said Foster.

Many of the members of PA have interests in science fiction, fantasy and history. Some of the PA members are also members of the Society for Creative Anachronisms, which is a group which reenacts parts of the middle ages through dress, battles, and dances.

"We have a lot of different people with a lot of different interests," said PA President Buell Richardson. "We even have two members who create their own science fiction and fantasy art."

Lately, gaming has been gaining in popularity. "It first began with the popularity of Dungeons and Dragons, but that game started getting a bad reputation, and people became bored with it," Richardson said. "A few people lost conscious control and committed suicide, which is why people think the game is satanic."

But people who think that the game is satanic don't realize that the people who commit suicide have psychological problems before they play the game."

Richardson plans to organize a gaming convention next semester. "We have had gaming conventions in the Student Union Ballroom in the past," said Richardson. "There is a gaming convention in Spokane every year. We're a small group here. Some conventions get as large as 10,000 people."

These dozen or so dedicated gamers can be found in the Student Union every Monday night from 6-11 p.m. "I wouldn't say that we're doing this to escape life," said Foster. "But it's a good way to meet people, expand your mind and work with groups. It's relaxing because you see yourself doing successful things in the games."

Richardson said that PA runs many different games. "We decide which games to run by who ever wants to run game campaigns, and notifying gaming groups," said Richardson. "At the beginning of the year we have an organizational meeting to see which members own books and games. We are hoping for a larger group in the future so we can have three or four games going on at one time, like we did when I first started with PA four years ago."

Foster said that PA was one of the reasons she decided to come back to college four years ago. "I was going through a divorce at the time, and I started meeting a lot of people, and it got me back into school," she said.

Richardson said that he met many new people and acquaintances since he became a member of PA four years ago. "I've gamed with a lot of people who are still around, but can't be members because they don't have the time," he said. "But I've kept in contact with many of the graduates I've gamed with and made lifelong friends."

Anyone interested in Palouse Adventures is encouraged to call Richardson at 882-5762, or Foster at 883-0621.

Lady Vandals on cable

Jeannette Hunter
Staff

Seven years have passed since Lady Vandal volleyball was on television. The joint effort between the Student Telecommunication Society, the UI Media Center, and other volunteers changed that with the production of the Oct. 21 game between UI and Boise State.

"I think it's great that the students have taken the initiative and done all the hard work," Assistant Athletic Director Kathy Clark said. "Now a whole new group of people can be introduced to volleyball."

The cooperative effort met popular approval. Show producer Mike Nelson said, "The way it turned out is fantastic and this is only the beginning of what students can do."

Associate Director of University Communications Jeff Olson said, "Part of the problem is we are a little isolated media-wise, so larger market stations can't get down to cover the necessary events. To have students participate in the production of these events is a real plus."

Head volleyball coach Tom Hilbert said in a phone interview, "This was something KUID has never done." Hilbert said the students were able to do a terrific job, even though KUID claimed there were too many problems, like lighting, to produce the game.

Now that the students have demonstrated their quality product, "we want the area stations to stand up and take notice," Nelson said.

Hilbert explained the production showed the Conference local markets like volleyball. It provided opportunity for sponsor visibility and gave people not at the game a chance to see it. "The team loved it," he added.

The School of Communication provided volunteers, two cameras, and a switcher. The Media Center provided the rest of the equipment. The crew used the Media Center's video PIG, so named due to its weight.

The equipment was designed to be a "versatile portable production facility," Media Systems Manager Chris Plonski said. Plonski encouraged the School of Communications to take advantage of the facility's potential.

Not only was the production a learning experience, but the students can take these skills and apply them in the real world, Plonski said.

"I gained the experience I probably never would have had in two years of school. What I have gained from being a producer could never be learned by opening a book," Nelson explained.

Associate Professor Alan Lifton said the production "demonstrated to the Media Center, to me, and to my colleagues that the students have the promise to make well produced programs." Now that the organization has shown the work it can do, they are expecting more community support through underwriting and sponsors.

"I was skeptical," School of Communication Lecturer Lynn Major said, "but everyone pitched in and helped and it came off nicely. For a first time production I couldn't ask for a better end result." She said everyone spent many after class hours, especially the show's producer. "I was pleasantly surprised at the good job Mike Nelson did getting people pumped up to pull this off," Major said.

The production went smoothly with only minor technical prob-

UI Pianist performs con spirito

Shelby Beck

University of Idaho pianist Miki Kurosawa performed before an audience of more than 100 students and UI faculty Tuesday night, demonstrating the depth of her ability to expressively and accurately render compositions by masters of music of western civilization. Kurosawa began her recital with a three-part piece by J.S. Bach entitled "Italian Concerto" in F major, in which she went from the spirited allegro movement to a haunting, almost regretful interpretation of the andante, ending the piece with the brisk presto.

Next, Kurosawa performed

"Andante Favori" in F major, by Ludwig van Beethoven. Though a darker piece in the beginning and played mostly on the lower end of the piano, it moved on to become light and spirited. She kept the audience on its toes with good use of tempo changes and dynamics.

The most contemporary piece of the evening was Robert Muczynski's "Sonatina for Piano." A brighter, tonal piece, it began with fast moving lines, slowed and decrescendood, finishing with a strong contrast of energy and intensity. Following the intermission, Kurosawa performed what was, perhaps, the most recognizable piece of classical music by a musically illiterate audience member, "Vocalise," Op. 34 No. 14 by Sergei Rachmaninoff. Her rendition of "Vocalise" was both melancholy and poignant.

Kurosawa finished her recital with three pieces by Johannes Brahms, the dark and dramatic "Ballade" in D minor, Op. 10 No. 1, followed by his "Ballade" in B major, Op. 10 No. 4, a somber and reflective piece. For her finale, Kurosawa, very appropriately, chose Brahms' "Capriccio" in G minor, Op. 116 No. 3, a grandiose composition filled with contrasting dynamics and tempos.

Kurosawa's recital was expressive and very well prepared. Other recitals throughout the semester are at the Lionel Hampton School of Music Recital Hall and are always free and open to the public. For information, 885-6231.

lems. Better headsets and a faster graphics machine would help the production go smoother. STS hopes to correct these problems before the next game.

The Oct. 21 game will be broadcast 6 p.m. tonight on channel 17 and next week it will be broadcast in Coeur d' Alene, Lewiston, and on two Boise channels.

"STS is proud to be involved with Lady Vandal volleyball, as well as, other on and off campus activities. As an organization we are eager to assist with UI productions and any interested party who can make use of our services," acting STS Chairman Robert Reed said.

STS is a student organization open to anyone who is interested in telecommunications. Nelson said that the more students that are involved the better the group will be as a whole. The next meeting will be held Nov. 1 in the KUID lounge.

'Light' music to die for

Matt Baldwin
Staff

From the hilly city of San Francisco comes an exciting and creative band, Sordid Humor.

When asked to describe their music, bassist Jim Gordon responded with, "it is light music for dying people." The name of their newest album, which was released right before their breakup is named Light Music for Dying People and is a 12 track album.

The songs are light edged, with nice guitar riffs. The first single off of the album, "Barbarossa," begins with a squelching, yet ominous guitar hum. It breaks into gentle playing by Tom Barnes as he begins singing "She's almost 17 / she breaths in gasoline / and when she falls asleep / she's got these crazy dreams."

After the soft lyrics by Barnes, the song moves into some medium guitar with all the band members singing then moving back into the soft lyrics that the song opened with.

The song "Gun Man" begins with monotonous guitar echoed to the soft playing on an accompanying guitar. "Gun Man" is a medium rock song, filled with light guitar riffs and gentle drumming.

"Lolita," the album's fifth track begins with the bassist playing quietly. The lyrics in "Lolita" seem outspoken about not wanting to be in society anymore: "tell me something, it's too hot to be here / seems like I've been walking / with just the river talking, / only time goes by / only the days go by, / I'm no longer walking." Throughout the song the bass is the main overriding sound that you can hear.

The bass and the vocals mix in well, matching with ease as if the voice was made for the bass.

Light Music for Dying People

is definitely an album for someone who is into medium rock. Light Music is not alternative mind you, but easy going light music and lyrics.

This Bay area band is a sensation, with original music leaning heavily on light music played easily on a guitar. It is an album that one can groove to. Sordid Humor's Light Music for Dying People can be acquired on Capricorn Records at most record stores.

Twin sisters hunt just for fun

Dave Lewis
Outdoors Editor

Many student hunters don't fit the common image of an outdoorsman. Two student hunters from Bonner's Ferry aren't even men. They're twin sisters who enjoy trying to outwit ducks, deer, grouse, geese, wild turkeys and even raccoons.

Julie and Tamie Bremer are freshmen at University of Idaho. Both work at the Gem of the Mountains and both are majoring in subjects selected to further their family's business, an ornamental nursery. When hunting, Julie focuses on deer and geese, Tamie goes after raccoons.

The twins grew up in the northwest corner of Iowa where they lived on a farm and enjoyed its outdoors setting. Julie says she can't remember the first time she went fishing, because she was so young when it happened.

Before they graduated high school their parents purchased a ranch and moved the family to northern Idaho.

There are plenty of geese near the Bremer ranch, so it was natural Julie would hunt them, and she does remember the first time she went goose hunting.

It was when she was 14. She also remembers "bending the trigger" of a shotgun.

"The geese kept flying over where I was sitting near a fence line," said Julie. "Every time a group would fly over me, I'd raise the gun and pull the trigger. But the gun wouldn't go off. I checked the safety, but it was OK. Finally, after all the geese were gone, my brother asked why I didn't shoot. I said I tried to but the gun wouldn't go off. Then he asked if I pulled the hammer back. After that I never forgot to pull back the hammer again."

Her problem with the shotgun didn't dampen her enthusiasm, and it wasn't many years before Julie bagged her first goose. She also shot a deer last year.

However, Julie had more trouble with a big buck surprise than shooting her first deer.

A big buck surprise is a shooting competition that uses its spectators in an interesting way. Two shooters leave their rifles unloaded on a hay bale.

They then walk slowly away from them until the crowd decides they are far enough away. Then the crowd yells "big buck." The contestants run back to their rifles, load them and shoot at a target. The winner is the one shooting first and hitting the target.

Julie and Tamie have competed against each other in this event. Julie loaded and fired first, but in her haste she didn't hold the rifle tightly enough. When she fired, the rifle jerked back and the scope cut her forehead. Tamie's concentration was ruined by the blood streaming from her sister's wound, so neither twin won the event. "Thank goodness the scar is fading," said Julie.

Getting a real deer was somewhat easier for her. Julie was skipping class, hunting with her brother, the day she shot her first deer.

"I took all the time I needed," she says about the shot that killed the deer, "because I really wanted to get it." Her aim must have been true because she made the 220 yard shot. "I didn't get buck fever, but Tamie did," Julie said.

Tamie and Julie both agree that the buck that gave Tamie buck fever must have used steroids. His rack wasn't especially large but the buck himself was huge. "The buck was only about 80 yards away, and he was walking straight at me," said Tamie. "I wasn't nervous until I started thinking about all the things that could go wrong. I hurried my shot and missed. But the deer just looked at me; it didn't run. I quickly tried to reload but couldn't. I got a little mad and swore. That's when the buck on steroids ran off."

The excitement of moving to Idaho and shooting at a deer was tempered for Tamie because she had to leave behind coon hunting. She also had to give away her dog. Tamie says, "I miss my dog, even if he was dumb."

Tamie was a member of a coon hunting club in Iowa. On competition nights, members would meet at the clubhouse at dusk and divide into groups. Each group would take a judge to a pre-arranged hunting area.

"I was the only girl," said Tamie. "My Mom really didn't like me coon hunting at night with several old men, but I knew the men thought of me as one of their own children."

There were usually four to six dogs in a group. The main idea in competition hunting is to recognize—by the sound of the barking alone—when your dog "strikes" the scent of a coon. Tamie explains, "If my dog was first to bark and I called, 'strike, Rebel' within five seconds—my dog's name was Rebel—the judge would award me 75 points for recognizing my dog by its bark."

It is also important in the competition to recognize when the dogs treed a coon. When they did, the owner of the dog would call "tree" and name the dog. To earn points, the dog then has to hold the coon in the tree for at least five minutes.

Sometimes the dog would lose interest and leave the tree before five minutes. Tamie said if they did no points were awarded. On competition hunts it was against regulation to kill the raccoon.

Biggest butte best bet for better view

I thought we would finally end up in the sky. Driving up higher and higher on a spiral road that seemed endless. I gave up counting how many times we circled around the hill before we made it to the top. This extraordinary road is the only way to the top of Steptoe Butte—the most unique attraction on the Palouse.

Though you may think of Steptoe as just another hill on the Palouse, it captures anybody's attention in the distance. It is hard to miss it because no other surrounding hill has a relative elevation of 3,612 feet. People who are new to the area and wondering what this part of the country looks like would have an excellent view of the Palouse from the top of the hill. Those who have been living here and not yet been to Steptoe would obtain a different sense of space that is not felt down in Moscow.

The daytime vistas resemble paintings. At night—if the sun has decided to go down in its full color and royalty—the most enjoyable view opens from high above the fields on top of Steptoe. In any case, the Blue Mountains can be distinguished on a clear day from the south while the eastern horizon provides the view of the Rockies.

A sign on top of the hill next to a small paved parking lot explains what can be seen and from which direction. However, all I saw was the vast Columbia plateau that spread to the west and the countless rolling hills of the Palouse—a gorgeous display.

Steptoe Butte is a unique formation and has rich geological history. In geology, the word "steptoe" means an older mountain surrounded by younger basalt. This mountain consists of granite that is over 500 million years old. Once it was surrounded by smaller mountains and hills, but was then buried by huge lava floods between 10-50 million years ago.

Later, only the very best among mountains survived the destruction of ice flows, mostly because of the height and tough resistant granite. During the Ice Age, windblown deposits called loess blanketed the landscape up to 200 feet in some areas. These deposits now form the Palouse, creating some of North America's most fertile soil.

Compared to the long history of the butte itself, the history of Steptoe Butte as a county park started only in 1946. The park's area is just 120 acres, which includes 40 acres at the summit, a spiral road leading to it and a small area at the base of the Butte. Picnicking can be enjoyed at the base of the hill at tables under apple trees. Apples are free, though available only in the fall.

To get there, follow signs in Pullman pointing to Colfax and Spokane, then continue on the highway toward Spokane. About nine miles past Colfax, look for a sign pointing to Oakesdale and Steptoe Butte, the county park.

Remember to bring a jacket, because it is usually extremely windy at the top of the summit.

The nights are cool. The air is tinged with wood smoke and crisp when dry. Ah yes, it's that time again.

No, not fall semester midterms, though they usually happen close to the same time.

It's autumn, time of color and end of harvest. Pumpkins and multi-colored leaves dominate Moscow yards.

Far across the continent, urban New Englanders plan outings to the New Hampshire, Vermont or Connecticut countryside just to see the trees change color. UI students and other Moscow residents see the same effects by looking out the window or stepping outside.

Thanks to the foresight of earlier UI administrators, students, faculty and staff, UI students walk to class surrounded by a glorious autumn landscape.

The ivies crawl up buildings in dusky crimsons. Smaller ornamental trees rustle with red, orange and yellow crowns. On clear days, Hello Walk is golden from light filtered through the yellow leaves on the arching branches of the great trees which stand around and along it.

A short walk is an invigorating and aesthetically pleasing study break. The leaves whisper more sharply than they do in milder months. Already fallen leaves, browning in heaps, crunch and crinkle beneath treading feet and release a dusty, earthy smell.

For those who want to get away from campus without going too far, the historical section of Moscow from downtown to just east of East City Park offers myriad color and form for tree lovers. Off campus, Moscow's fall wardrobe is heavily yellow and orange with fewer reds.

For those who like the New Englanders' tradition of autumn pilgrimages, wider vistas beckon from the north towards Coeur d'Alene, Sandpoint and beyond and from the east towards the town of Elk River and the Clearwater National Forest.

Few hunters admit it readily, but part of the attraction of hunting is the experience of nature in all its wonder and beauty surrounding them. Little can compare to the quiet, solitary wait in a blind near where deer or elk trails cross in a vibrant landscape of windblown trees and brush tinted with the bright colors of autumn. The meat is good enough, but the true value is in the food for the soul.

HUNT

is much harder to hear the dogs barking.

Many dogs were lost on those nights, but as Tamie said, "A good dog will go back to where he was dropped off and wait for you come back."

Tamie's dog was a Black and Tan, as are many dogs used in coon hunting. Another popular coon hunting breed is Blue Tick.

Tamie's brother Scott had a Blue Tick hound named, appropriately enough, "Blue." Blue was locally famous for one of his exploits. Blue "treed" a baby raccoon up a corn stalk. You may have heard about animals "stalking" their prey, but not with this literal of a meaning.

Tamie says, "You either like coon hunting or you don't. All you do is let your dogs go and sit around waiting for them to 'talk' to you. If you didn't know anything about coon hunting you might think those old coon hunters were talking about women."

"They sit around in the club house talking about their dogs, saying things like, 'Man, she is so good looking, she is the best looker I have ever seen.' Then they go on to describe her legs and hips and even her eyes. Then they say, 'she has great teeth and her nose is cold too.'"

In all her years of hunting, Tamie has never killed anything. However, her dog was wounded once when Tamie's brother shot at a coon ricocheted and hit Rebel's forepaw.

The dog recovered and was back on the hunt in a only few weeks.

Idaho destined to beat Montana

Andrew Longeteig

I have a Vandal Vision. Call me a psychopath—which wouldn't be the first time—call me batty, or just call me plain ignorant. This is not a bad acid trip, man. The Vandals will defeat the No. 1 ranked Montana Grizzlies Saturday in Missoula. No ands, ifs or hairy Grizzly butts. The predicted score is offered at the end of the article, with the impression that you will read the entire story.

If you don't think this game is big-time—think again. Two Sports Illustrated photographers, an NBC radio reporter and, of course, myself will be there. A sellout crowd is expected for the 11:07 PST game.

The Grizzlies (7-0, 3-0 Big Sky) attained the No. 1 ranking thanks to Marshall's loss to 15th-ranked Appalachian State last week, who moved up nine spots in the Division I-AA poll. This marks the first time in Montana history they have been ranked No. 1 in the nation.

The Griz have won 16 regular season games in a row and 22 out of 23.

Idaho, meanwhile, ain't too shabby themselves. Likewise, they are 7-0 and 4-0 in the Big Sky and sport the No. 3 ranking in the country.

The Vandals' last regular season loss was to hmmm, let me see here, could it be—MONTANA?!!

Yes, the Grizzlies waltzed into the Kibbie Dome last year and quarterback Dave Dickinson toyed with our defensive backs like they were nifty Star Wars action figures, passing for 512 yards in UM's 54-34 win.

But, alas, this is a new Idaho team with a brand new secondary—a secondary that pro-

The Idaho Vandals will look to shoot down the Eastern Washington Eagles Friday night in Memorial Gym.

The No. 21 Vandals did not move up or down in this week's Tachikara Coaches Poll after hammering in-state foes Boise State and Idaho State last week in straight games. Idaho has won 15 of its last 16 matches, and was ranked as high as 19th two weeks ago, but a loss to the Montana Grizzlies Oct. 14 broke an 11 match win streak and dropped the Vandals two slots in the national poll.

The Vandals have shown no ill effects from the loss and have picked up where they left off, sweeping all three of their opponents since the Missoula setback. Of Idaho's 21 wins, 14 have come in three games.

The Eagles, who were swept by the Vandals in Cheney last month, will not have an easy task when they make the 80 mile trek to Moscow today.

The Vandals have not lost at their Palouse home since November of 1992. A span of 24 straight wins for the Black and Gold. Idaho won all nine of its home matches this fall.

The Eagles (9-14, 3-6), currently tied for fifth in the league, desperately need a win to stay in the hunt for the Big Sky Conference postseason tourney hosted by the regular season champion. The Vandals (21-2, 8-1 BSC) must win out and hope the Grizzlies fall along the way, giving UI the conference title.

Junior Kelli Glaus must continue her impressive run of late for the Eagles to give the Vandals a contest. Glaus is hitting .245 on the year averaging 3 kills a game, but has upped her play recently hitting .295 and with 3.7 kills a game in her last 10 matches. Glaus pounded a career high 28 kills against ISU last weekend.

The Eagles would also like Carly Killen-Curtis to step up Friday. Killen-Curtis is hitting .229 on the year with a 2.7 kill per game average. Setter Jaime Dotson has collected over 900 assists on the year and averages over a 10 a game.

Mindy Rice enters the weekend with high expectations for Idaho. The senior outside hitter is just 63 kills away from becoming the sixth Vandal in school history to reach the 1,000 kill mark. Rice is averaging 5.1 kills per game and is hitting .344 on the year.

Lynne Hyland, who is averaging 14.4 assists a game, continues to lead the nation in that category. Her current pace would give her the second best Idaho season total ever.

Vandal Youth Night Oct. 28

Hello from the University of Idaho Athletic Department! We will be sponsoring "Vandal Youth Night" on Oct. 28.

This is a celebration and a time for students, fans and friends to come meet the Vandal volleyball team. All children sixth grade and under get in free and there will also be drawings with great prizes for them to win throughout the match. The first 500 fans will receive a free 1994 Vandal Volleyball poster.

The Vandals are currently ranked 21st in the nation and will be playing Eastern Washington on the 28th. After the match players will be available to autograph posters and visit with students. We want to especially invite you and your students to meet this year's outstanding team.

Leah Smith, a former Deary High School student, is the focus of the poster this year. Smith is a great person and student-athlete and would be a positive role model and inspiration to your students. We would appreciate it if you spread the word to your students. We hope to see you Oct. 28 at 7:30 p.m. in Memorial Gym.

Black Widows defeat WSU

The Black Widows, the University of Idaho's women's rugby club, played a club from Washington State last Saturday and won 22-15.

For UI, two tries were scored by both Sonya Lenzi and Janet Murakami. The conversion after the try was scored by Theresa May.

Their next game will be Oct. 29 at Spokane. The Black Widows' next home game will be also against Spokane on Nov. 12.

UI Soccer Club gets shutouts

The University of Idaho Soccer Club improved its record to 6-4-1 this season with victories over a Sandpoint club and a club from Creston, British Columbia on Sunday in Sandpoint.

Both teams failed to score against the UI club. Center midfielder Adam Lewis pulled a hat trick against Sandpoint—all of his shots being unassisted. Jayson Transtrum had two assists in the win.

The team ultimately won the game 5-0. The UI club beat Creston in the same day, 2-0.

duced five interceptions last week against Northern Arizona. It's also a secondary that will not give up 512 yards through the air ever again.

Most players on the current UI roster have never beaten Montana in their careers. The last time Idaho won was in 1990. It's not common that a school has any kind of streak on us, but Montana does.

Well, the reason why we'll beat the Grizzlies at the hostile environment of Grizzly-Washington Stadium is this—defense.

Sure, we have a great offense and all, but it all comes down to defense. If there is one defensive team in I-AA football that I would rely on in crunch time, it would be Idaho's.

"I know that in the nine years that we've been at Montana, this is the best Idaho defense that we've seen," UM head coach Don Read said. "They are very talented, much-improved up front, and very skilled in the secondary."

The Vandals' defensive pursuit is relentless. Defensive ends Ryan Phillips and Barry Mitchell each have seven sacks for the year.

Linebacker Duke Garrett is perhaps the most well-rounded defensive player because of his ability to play the run and rush the quarterback.

Fellow linebacker Tommy Knecht is a heady, quick defender who is excellent in pass coverage.

The secondary doesn't have NFL stardom written all over them by any means, but they make big plays game in and game out.

"They're going to have to carry us from here on out," UI head coach John L. Smith said of his defense.

The Grizzly defense is tough as well, allowing just 15.9 points per game, but it's nothing our potent offense can't score on.

The Vandal offense is averaging 46.7 points per game. The thing that separates us from Montana offensively, is that we can pass and run the football effectively. This is a picture-perfect offense and a complete, bloody nightmare for opposing defenses.

Montana is more one-dimensional because they throw the football 60 times per game. They have something our defense can key on, whereas if our running game falters, we have our passing to bail us out.

"You know, they can just about do what they want to do, it seems like, no matter who they are playing," Read said. "It doesn't matter if it's run the football or throw the football."

Although Montana passes quite a bit, they have a legitimate reason to because of their quarterback Dickenson.

This guy looks like the little brother you always picked on with his slight body frame and boyish features. He's listed at 5-foot-11 on paper, but he's closer to 5-foot-8. Well, this little dude puts up some big-time numbers.

Why is all the media flocking to Steve "Air" McNair of Alcorn State who is in the running for the Heisman Trophy which has never been awarded to a I-AA player? Believe me, Dickenson is just as good.

Dickenson has completed 67 percent of his passes, has thrown for 20 touchdowns and only three interceptions. The 1993 Big Sky MVP, Dickenson threw for 32 touchdowns and ran for a school record 14 scores. Jimmy Christmas, he's just a junior, too!

Additionally, he has not lost a single regular season game, winning 17 straight.

Dickenson has a trio of dependable receivers to throw to. Scott Gurnsey, Shalon Baker and Matt Wells all have at least 30 receptions.

So, if the Vandals can at least contain Dickenson, maybe hold him to 375 yards passing, they will stop Montana. The Vandals' defensive penetration is a key to this game. If they don't give him time to throw, he will suffer.

Idaho may have a difficult time getting through a Grizzly offensive line where three of the five linemen are over 290 pounds. The biggest and maybe the best is 6-foot-9 305 pound Scott Granger.

Vandal gunslinger Brian Brennan is scheduled to start, but that may change on game day.

Eric Hisaw, injured against Eastern Washington Oct. 8, is back and almost at 100 percent. He was looking good in practice this week for someone being out for two weeks, but Brennan looked noticeably sharp.

It is a wonderful time. People see a gathering storm and want to help prevent our problems; for too long people have said that our general welfare was the business of the family and the church.

Many children had no family and no church. We were unconcerned when these children grew up alone, cold and unloved. Addiction, abuse, adolescent pregnancy became a way of life. We ignored the lack of provision for their social and cultural upbringing.

We have to solve our own problems. Every problem is different, every person is different and every answer must be made carefully for that person by caring neighbors.

In East Twin Falls county they deal with juvenile and parents in just that way. Over 400 juvenile law breakers have been completely removed from criminal activity. The community gets involved with making their lives happier and more responsible. All communities can come close to duplication that result for all youth problems.

In the history of the human race, the extended family and religiosity have been very important. We have moved away from our extended families. The community must become the extended family for every child, and not just for the lonely child.

People in most communities are ready to help. The State must take a portion of money from prisons and other areas to fund community problem prevention programs.

Children are most available at school and before and after school. Wonderful things will happen the day we begin. Less vandalism, addiction and bad language. Fewer dropouts and more socially adept, happy productive children.

Kibbie Dome offers more than just Vandal football

Matt Shifley
Staff

If most students were asked where the Idaho football team played their home games, a typical response would be the Kibbie Dome. However, the Kibbie Dome is more than just the home of the Vandals.

The dome also provides many recreational activities for students, faculty, and guests.

During the past summer, the facility for these healthy-minded individuals had a few alterations.

The most noticeable changes were the new weight room and two new exercise machines—the stair climbers and life cycles. A few changes may have gone unnoticed.

“Well, some of things that you do not see but makes the building a little more pleasant is the new paint job inside,” said Bob Beals, Kibbie Dome manager. “When you are in the building, it is a little nicer.”

According to Beals and Kelly Rafferty, Kibbie Events coordinator, they would like the dome to be viewed as a enjoyable environment for users to exercise in.

The new weight room is a perfect example of this philosophy. Rafferty stated the new room is comfortable and less intimidating than the old one.

The new weight room was also completely revamped with every student in mind.

“We kept in mind that weight room gets used by P.E. classes, recreation users, and athletes and the room had to mold together to take care of everybody,” said Rafferty.

The facility also features racquetball courts, nordic tracks, running tracks, and seasonal basketball and tennis courts.

The eight racquetball courts are open year-round and reservations for a court must be made in person. The policy for the dome is that no reservations can be made over the phones, the party must come in and do it themselves.

One reason why the Kibbie has this policy is because they feel if you come all the way up to the dome to make the reservation, you will most likely come back for your designated playing time.

Beals and Rafferty also stressed the importance that racquetball players need to bring a pair of court shoes with them.

They do not want people to play in the same shoes they came to the dome in.

The basketball and tennis courts are available in the spring semester after the turf has been rolled up. The same reservation policy for racquetball applies to the tennis courts as well.

All of the exercise machines are located near the dome floor. The stair climbers are on the southeast concourse, the nordics are in the stands at the lower northeast corner, and the cycles are on the northeast concourse.

The machines in the Kibbie

Bart Stageberg
ASUI Kibbie Dome facilities include athletic ticket offices, a weightroom, raquetball courts, and electronic exercise equipment. Basketball and tennis courts will be available after the turf is removed.

Dome are some of the most used items by the students.

“I try to use all of them as much as I can because I like the diversity of the machines, I feel like I can get a different cardiovascular workout every time,” said Aaron Baldwin, a freshman from Nampa.

Ryan Latter, another freshman from Nampa, said he likes the dome because of its availability to students and its uniqueness. He also enjoys the opportunity to play intramural sports there.

Most of the facilities are available during normal business hours. If you have any questions about the hours, you can get information from the facility attendant's office at 885-6394.
