ASUI candidates tied to 'network'

ASUI politics reflect real world partisan loyalties or so say former and current people involved with the ASUI.

Some have even claimed a former president created a "political machine" which still gives him influence in the ASUI.

Student politicians thirsty for a real life experience have caused the ASUI to be broken into two separate groups. Believing ideology has cemented relationships which have caused divisions in the ASUI, many point to a network created by former president Richard Rock.

"If I had to summarize Rock's network within the ASUI, I would say 'machine,'" said Michael Smith, chair of the Programs Board and senator during Rock's presidency from 1992-93. "I think he had a personal agenda to put in place the people that he liked, regardless of qualification. I still think he has that agenda."

Rock admits he keeps in touch with John Marble and others on a regular basis through e-mail. Rock said, in defense of the network he created, "Politics comes down to organization. I've striven to develop an organization that could communicate effectively and get students out to vote."

Others claim the intent of this network is to further party goals.

"Rock was always out for Rock and the Republican party. I think Rock thought he was working for the ASUI but he was really working for himself and the candidates he had groomed to follow him," said Amtul Sheikh, a senator from 1990-93 and presidential candidate in the fall of 1993.

Sheikh, who claims to be a Republican herself, feels the party's influence has unduly encroached on the ASUI. "I know him (Rock). It's not so much what is good for the ASUI but what's good for their conservative moral values. They have a personal agenda, and if you get in their way, you get run over," she said referring to senator Sean Wilson's attempt last spring to fire Daniel Whiting from his lobbyist position. Wilson was

Police have suspect in attack

Thanks to a man overcome by guilt, the Moscow Police Department has narrowed the suspect list down to one person in an unprovoked attack on a University of Idaho graduate student.

Charges will be filed when more details become available, according to Moscow Police Department Sergeant Neil Odenborg.

The suspect told authorities Friday that he was the man responsible for the attack on Chong Cho the night of Nov. 4 near the Alumni Residence Center. According to the Moscow-Pullman Daily News, the suspect reportedly turned himself into police because he needed to clear his conscience and provided investigators with a written confession of the attack.

Problems remain, however. The Daily News reports that the suspect's confession and Cho's account of the attack differ in several details. Moscow police are attempting to clear up the matter.

Authorities will re-interview Cho and will also make an attempt to interview the driver of the car the suspect fled in.

The suspect is facing charges of aggravated battery, Odenborg said, due to the seriousness of the injuries Cho suffered and since the attack was intentional, according to yesterday's edition of the Daily News.

The Moscow police cannot release the name of the suspect until formal charges are brought against him.

"Hopefully we can conclude this case and file charges in the next day or two," Odenborg said.

International students and others were concerned this was a racially motivated attack.

However, Odenborg said, "There is no evidence that this is a hate crime or was racially motivated."

Cho had left his office in the Mines Building and was walking home when the attack occurred.

An unknown assailant began kicking Cho's legs, causing him to fall to the ground. Cho's left leg was broken in two places as a result of the attack. He was recently released from Gritman Medical Center, where he was rushed to the emergency room by a witness on the night of the attack.

Presidential hopefuls begin blasting

Adam Gardels

Integrity became the latest casualty in the ASUI presidential race—following the candidates' forum held Sunday and the candidates' debate last Thursday.

Character became a hotly contested issue in the presidential debate. Leveling a blast at the "accountability" of his opponents, Brad Moeller said, "I'm sick of hearing about accountability. (Cade) King and (Sean) Wilson both missed cabinet meetings this week." Believing his opponents were absent at that meeting to run their campaign, Moeller said, "It's more important for these candidates to run for office rather than carry through with their responsibilities."

Sean Wilson quickly replied with a question for Moeller. "Why is the only unfinished bill book in the ASUI history under your term as vice president?" Wilson asked. Cade King refused to reply to the remarks saying, "I think it is sad that Brad questions my dedication." Here is a summary of issues discussed by the candidates at the debates:

Diversity as a strength: "I feel that I am diverse. I'm from Virginia. I've been in the Greek system for four years. I haven't been totally rapped up in the ASUI," King said, who emphasized his role as Delta Chi president.

"Diversity makes people stronger. I would tend to disagree with (King). I, too, am in a fraternity, and I don't see where a fraternity and diversity come together," Moeller said, who stressed the fact that his running mate Leonard Perry lives in married student housing and is a "minority."

"I'm very proud to be running along with David Hisel, president of the International Student's Association," Wilson said, who served on the International Advisory Board.

Growth of organizations on campus: "I think we definitely have a problem," Wilson said, stating the need to have a deadline for the funding of student organizations.

"It's important for the ASUI to listen to all of the groups at the same time," Moeller said, acknowledging that this is the only way the ASUI can compare various organizational needs.

King wants to encourage more community support for these organizations. He feels that small business would be willing to share their equip-

'Drug money' has new meaning

Cocaine sticks to three-quarters of all paper bills in Los Angeles

Alan Abrahamson
Los Angeles Times

LOS ANGELES—More than three-quarters of all the paper money in Los Angeles has some amount of cocaine or some other drug stuck to it, according to a federal appeals court decision that vividly illuminates how extensively the drug trade touches mainstream commerce.

Of every four bills in circulation in Los Angeles, more than three have traces of cocaine or another illicit drug actually stuck to the paper, according to the 9th U.S. Circuit Court of Appeals, which relied on that fact to dismiss a case against a man suspected of drug trafficking.

In powdered form, the court said, cocaine is so sticky that a bit stays behind when a drug dealer wraps it in a bill folded like an envelope or a user snorts it through a dollar used as a makeshift straw.

As that bill is pressed against another in a wallet or counted in combination with others in a bank or cash register, those other bills get contaminated, too.

That means, the 9th Circuit court said, that virtually everyone in Los Angeles is conceivably at risk of being barked at by drug-sniffing police dogs.

"The bottom line," echoed attorney Jerold L. Bloom, who defended an Inglewood, Calif., man carrying $30,060 that prosecutors charged was drug money, "is that anyone with tainted currency can be stopped and alleged to be a drug dealer. That's guilt by association."

The notion that most U.S. currency is tainted with drugs has been well-known in law enforcement and scientific circles for about 10 years. However, the 9th Circuit decision, issued Tuesday by the San Francisco-based court, underscores just how amazingly widespread the taint has become.

Because it's so widespread, the court ruled, the ability of police and prosecutors to rely in court on a "positive alert" from a drug-sniffing dog will now be "seriously diminished" — a serious drawback in cases in which authorities have seized cash and the federal government is seeking the forfeiture of drug money.

Such a "positive alert" used to be "strong evidence" that a person bought or intended to buy drugs. No more, the court said, ordering police officers to show other evidence "clearly connecting the money to drugs."

California city may make concealed weapon permits easier to get

Richard C. Paddock
Los Angeles Times

STOCKTON, Calif.—City Councilman Nick Rust, a card-carrying member of the National Rifle Association, is pushing a new plan to fight crime: Give all law-abiding citizens the right to carry a hidden weapon whenever they leave their homes.

At a time when many California communities are trying to get guns off the streets, Rust has proposed a city ordinance that would allow as many as 130,000 people—most of Stockton's adult population—to obtain a concealed weapon permit.

"My ultimate goal is to make Stockton a safer place for people to live," said the 48-year-old councilman and management consultant. "What I'm saying is, people have the right to defend themselves."

The proposal has sharply divided this San Joaquin Valley city, which gained national attention five years ago when a gunman opened fire with an assault rifle on children in a schoolyard, killing five and wounding 29. The tragedy inspired city, state and federal assault rifle bans.

Stockton's mayor and police chief, as well as national gun control groups, strongly oppose the proposed ordinance, which would be the first in California to make it easy to obtain concealed weapon permits.

They argue that allowing citizens to roam about armed would lead to deadlier domestic violence and a greater number of accidental shootings.

"Everything we know about firearms misuse and abuse tells us this sort of approach is insanity," said Sandy Cooney, western regional director of Handgun Control Inc. "It can only do one thing, and that is add to the epidemic of injury and death from guns."

Whatever its merits, foes and supporters agree that the ordinance has a good chance of passing when it comes before the seven-member City Council Monday night.

The proposal has struck a chord with many people who are fed up with crime and the inability of

Oil spill limits Russian workers' options

Los Angeles Times

RUSSIA—Today, the Kolva River is coated with more than a foot of frozen oil. Moose and bears fled the area long ago. But tundra swans, ducks and geese still nest in nearby marshes in springtime.

Even the gruff oil workers are praying that the migrating birds will not stop in Usinsk this year. Last week, they found the corpse of an oil-drenched Arctic fox.

Cleanup workers on Russia's worst oil spill ever say the new capitalist oil companies care as little about the environment as their Soviet predecessors—and far less about the oil workers. The laborers jumped, though, at the chance to earn $9.70 in cash a day from a cleanup company called Priroda, as former state-owned oil giant Kominest has not paid their salaries in five months.

Instead of money, the workers have been receiving coupons that are valid only at stores supplied by Kominest. The coupons have been dubbed "Leonidovs" after former Kominest General Director Valentin Z. Leonidov.

The despised company scrip will buy food, soap, razor blades, cheap boots and other essentials. But Leonidovs cannot be used to pay a phone bill or buy a train ticket, and only one bread store in this city of 40,000 will accept them, said Natalia Nikolayevna, a 32-year-old shopper, who added: "If the kids get sick, I give them whatever medicine we still have left."

One oil worker complained that he had forgotten the taste of vodka. Another said he could not get Kominest to pay his back wages in cash in time for him to attend his mother's funeral.

Media Center looks to future with editing equipment

Justin Beller
Contributing Writer

Several videotapes are piled one on top of another as someone frantically searches for a ten second piece of footage that will help complete a video news story. A deadline is near and the footage is yet to be found.

What may sound like working under the gun and torture is what goes on in small-market television stations and universities across the nation. It's a typical video editing room. News reporters and video production students working on assignments go through this every week. The process of editing video is a long and tedious process, but thanks to technological advances in the field, news stories and video assignments can be ready on time. The introduction of digital editing often makes the job of the video editor much easier.

Harvey Hughett, the director of campus media services at the University of Idaho, says the biggest change that has come to the Media Center is the introduction of digital video editing equipment. Old analog editing equipment currently used at UI is large and bulky and is being replaced with digital editing equipment which takes up far less space.

Looking down the road, Hughett said future changes are in store with the commonplace VCRs used throughout campus by faculty and students.

"Right now VCRs have very simple functions like playback and recording, but the new ones coming out can be programmed to do other things like digital editing," said Hughett.

According to Hughett, the advantage of digital technology allows future equipment updates to take place with the mere replacement of a chip or two.

For now, digital editing is done through the use of a computer. Footage from a video tape is transferred to a computer where the information is stored in a binary code. A computer program stores the information to be put together in any desired sequence. Digital editing makes it easier for a person to assemble footage from a video tape and spend less time in the editing process. The most popular digital editing program on the market is called the "Video Toaster."

Digital editing is currently used by the Media Center as well as at the studios of KUID where a Video Toaster program is installed. The digital editing system at KUID is used by an advanced video class taught by Alan Lifton, a professor in the School of Communication.

Hughett hopes to see digital editing readily available and easily accessible to faculty and students in the near future.

Helping them meet their video needs, such as preparing a video for class presentation, is one of many goals he has in mind. He expects to set up programs to provide assistance and training to the faculty and students when everything is up and running.

Daily ASUI operations: "We could have everybody watch football and then talk about team work," King said, who feels that "teamwork" is most important in the senate.

"The first thing you need to do is take out the politics. Some people are using the ASUI as a stepping stone," Moeller said.

Wilson believes accountability is lacking in the ASUI and has caused a "breakdown in communication."

Major Concert at UI: "Sounds like a money loser," Moeller said about the $100,000 cost to have the concert. He cited concerns about the Kibbie Dome's acoustics and the poor success at Beasley.

"I think its completely doable," Wilson said.

King agreed with Wilson.

Future plans as president: King wants to create a campus-wide community service as well as a pep rally to foster unity in the student body.

"Have all the students meet in the Kibbie Dome. Have the band there, the football team and Jon L. Smith give an inspirational speech," King said.

Moeller would like to keep the student body aware of ASUI details by printing a biweekly ASUI report in the Argonaut.

Wilson stressed his continuing effort to establish a strong book-swap on campus.

Free testing offered for chlamydia

Geoff McClelland
Contributing Writer

The state of Idaho is offering free chlamydia testing through the University of Idaho. The free testing, which began Nov. 7, usually costs $16.

The project is part of a national program which began in 1988 when the Sexually Transmitted Disease section of the Centers for Disease Control collaborated with National Family Planning on a grant to research chlamydia.

Chlamydia is sexually transmitted and is curable if treated with antibiotics. If left untreated, it may lead to infertility.

There are no symptoms of chlamydia in 70 to 80 percent of those infected until complications occur. The remainder usually suffer from a mild, mucus-like discharge. Testing is the surest method of detection.

Chlamydia is most prevalent among people in their teens or early twenties. A college campus is therefore an ideal place for such a study.

Cathy Fitzpatrick, a nurse practitioner at UI, said between 12 and 14 percent of women tested in Latah County had chlamydia in 1988. It is currently down to five to six percent. The national average for chlamydia infection is 12 percent.

Fitzpatrick said there are no accurate statistics for men due to the fact that most of the testing for the disease has been done through family planning and birth control programs which mainly attract women. Testing for chlamydia does not appeal to men since it involves a direct swab in the urethra.

People who want to be tested for chlamydia should go to Student Health Services. The office has a walk-in policy so no appointment is necessary. The hours are 8 a.m. to 4:30 p.m. Monday through Friday except on Thursdays when it opens at 9 a.m.

Wedding bells rang at half-time

Michelle Kalbeitzer
Staff

Thirteen months ago Cupid pierced the hearts of Tonja Nichols and Andy Ray. The relationship was cemented Saturday in the first-ever marriage ceremony at the Kibbie Dome.

As the couple walked down the aisle the marching band formed hearts and played "Here Comes the Bride." It was not the most serious of ceremonies, however. A grim reaper was seen roaming the football field during the ceremony, and the groom left the wedding with a ball-and-chain locked around his ankle.

"Since we were both in marching band, and we met on a marching band trip, it seemed like a fun thing to do," Tonja said about the Kibbie wedding.

Tonja and Andy met one year ago on the marching band trip to Vancouver, B.C. Andy proposed on Valentine's Day with the song "Unforgettable" by Nat King Cole. "It was a fast relationship because we just hit it off," Tonja said.

Tonja is a 1991 graduate of Kellogg High and has been with the Flag Corps for three years. Andy is a 1985 graduate from Mead High in Spokane, and he has been with the marching band for four years.

How much does a couple need to pull off a wedding these days? Tonja and Andy haven't looked at the total bill yet—which is probably for the best. Although the wedding dress of the bride cost approximately $800, the tuxedo for the groom was donated from Creighton's and the floral arrangements were donated by Scott's flowers.

Tonja and Andy are headed for the Love Boat this January. The couple plan on selling all of their possessions to go to work on a cruise ship.

Challis girl honored

Former Idahoan J. Michael Mahoney of Larkspur, Calif., recently donated $155,000 to establish the Stephanie Crane Honorary Scholarship Fund at the University of Idaho. Crane, who would have been ten in September, has been missing for more than a year from Challis. Mahoney learned of the little girl's disappearance while on a recent trip to Idaho. He said he and his family spent summers at a ranch near Stanley and had many friends from Challis.

For information about how to contribute to the Stephanie Crane Honorary Scholarship Fund, call the UI Foundation at 885-7069.

behalf of the UI, was appointed by Rock. Last semester Whiting attempted to cut funding for the women's center because he felt they were using funds to further ideological motives, such as providing phone lines for gays and lesbians.

When Wilson attempted to fire Whiting for lobbying against the center, he was met with firm opposition from president John Marble. Rock helped Marble run his campaign following Rock's term in office. "Sean (was) run over by the machine that he was part of at one time," said Smith.

Rock revealed his vision to ASUI Senator Scott Wimer and others at a campaign meeting for Marble last year. "Rock said the goal we have for the next 10 or 12 years is to ensure that the people in power are the ones we want," said Wimer. He said he joined this network of senators and candidates because they stressed a common belief in conservatism and strong political backing.

Critics of the network claim senatorial candidate Christa Manis typifies the kind of agenda to be carried out by this network. Manis, who met Rock during their mutual support for the Republican party this summer, was last year's president of the Associated Students of North Idaho College. She gained national attention when she attempted to stop funding for a homosexual organization on that campus. Contrary to those who believe she acted out of ideological motivation, Manis claims her only reasons were budgetary in nature.

Rock has backed the Cade King and Damon Darakjy ticket by giving them advice. Rock's critics believe that Darakjy's known involvement in the Republican party has bound him to Rock.

Contrary to the belief that Rock encouraged King to run, Darakjy said, "Cade came to me at the beginning of the semester, and he said he was thinking about running for president." Darakjy made clear his dislike for party politics in the ASUI before he reluctantly admitted, "He (Rock) shouldn't be involved as much as he is (with the ASUI)."

Elections' integrity hurt by apathy

Only 12 percent of the student body voted in the last ASUI elections. 70 votes determined the winner and the loser in the last presidential election—on a campus of over 11,000 students. Elections aren't close because of tight races. They're close due to voter apathy.

Seventy votes is close enough to make the elections a "popularity race"—a common criticism of these elections. Well, if you want the ASUI to continue being a "good old boys" organization, then stay home when the polls open.

Too many people do not have a clear idea of just what the ASUI does. For those who want to make an educated decision and have the ASUI reflect the student body and concerns, here are a few tips and issues to consider before casting your ballot.

What does the ASUI do?

The ASUI allocates its budget of $1 million to various programs, organizations and functions across the campus. The executive branch administers the ASUI departments and argues on behalf of the students to the UI administration, the Board of Regents and the State of Idaho.

What to look for in a candidate? Look for specific answers to specific problems and concrete stands on important issues. Don't expect a "cure all" or "snake oil" for all that ails the campus—this only proves that the candidate doesn't have a detailed understanding of UI and student needs. Some of these general, canned answers are "consensus, accountability, and informing students."

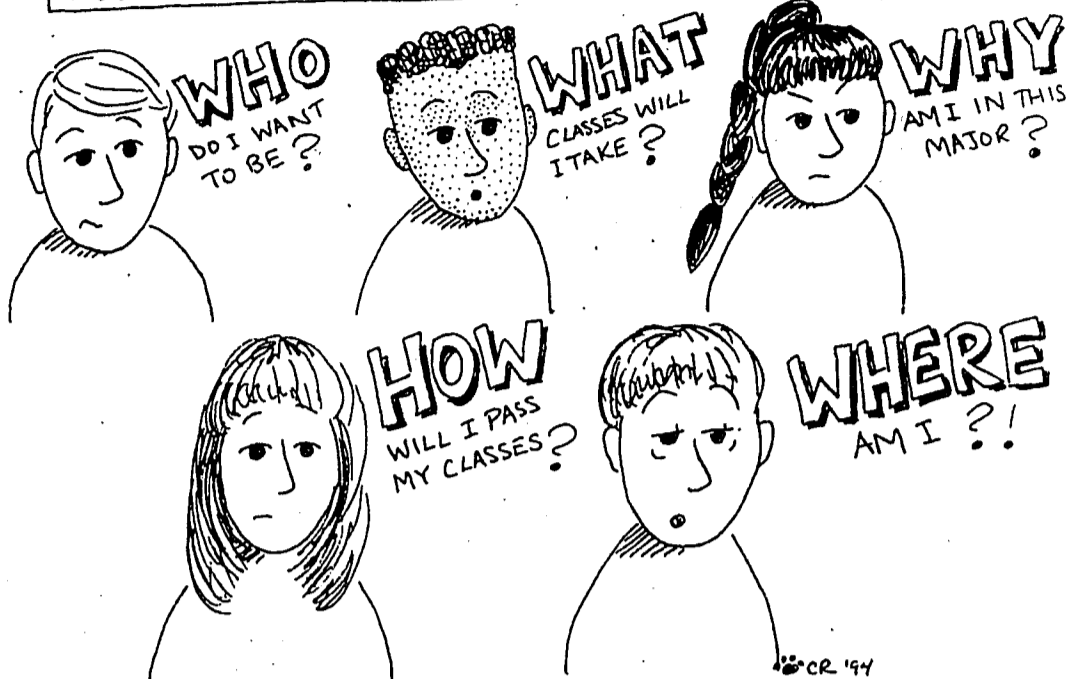

What are some important issues? Student representation on the State Board of Education. Meeting the needs of the growing number of student organizations on campus. How much power the president should delegate. How to fund a major concert or program. How to increase student involvement in campus activities. Having tail gate parties at sporting events. Who can best strengthen student diversity, both on campus and in the ASUI. Who can keep the ASUI solvent and "running smoothly."

Look for a candidate that has addressed your own concerns and needs, as well as the larger issues that concern UI students. Remember, "If you don't vote, then you can't complain about the outcome of the elections."

—Adam Gardels

If you want the ASUI to continue being a "good old boys" organization, then stay home when the polls open.

TYPICAL PRE-REGISTRATION QUESTIONS

Mud flies at UI elections, too

It is a sad statement of our political future when student elections are reduced to the level of the nationwide elections held last Tuesday. This past year has proven to be especially ugly on the national and state levels across the country. Between Nethercutt and Foley, Richards and Bush in Texas, and the California races, the public should have gotten their fill of dirty campaigning. Apparently we here at the University of Idaho have not.

There has been a lot of complaints about the fact that campaigns are no longer a question of where a person stands on issues, but whether or not the opponent has filed an honest tax return. If candidate for any public office does something illegal, we as voters need to know. If a candidate smoked a little pot twenty years ago, does that really affect their ability to do the job? Does anyone out there really care if someone isn't pristine? No one could possibly stand up to the kind of scrutiny that most politicians are put through before they ever get into office. No one is that clean.

If people are really tired of the innuendo and political maneuvering, why is it happening here at

Jennifer Swift

UI? When a race for student senate president inspires the same back-stabbing dishonesty as a race for governor, the future of American political campaigning is depressing. If the students of today are our future leaders, we are in big trouble. We should be setting a standard for future politicians to live up to, not blindly following the lead of the previous generation.

It is difficult to believe that anyone would seriously consider planting a microphone on another student just to find out campaign strategy. This is a student election, not Watergate, and should be treated as such by both students and the press. The fact that another student would blab an innocent conversation to a reporter smacks of personal vendetta. Anyone who read the story should have questioned the validity of it. When we assume the guilt of another person based on hearsay, our future looks a little shaky.

What is worse than just reducing this race to a question of who can be the bitchiest, a good student leader is being roasted in the process. Sean Wilson has proven to be an effective representative of the students and deserves a fair race. If he is not elected, let it be because of where he stands on the issues, not because of a conversation that was taken way too seriously.

With the refusal to pass Senate Resolution One, the ASUI Senate has made it quite apparent that it is in need of strong leadership. This cannot be accomplished if the new president is elected because he dug up more dirt on the other candidates. As students, it is our responsibility to find out what each candidate promotes, whether he voted the way we would have on student issues, and then cast our vote based on knowledge. When we as a student body are reduced to voting merely based on popularity, looks, gossip, who has the best signs, or worse yet, not voting at all, UI is in big trouble. Being a part of a university that doesn't care is not something to be proud of.

Is Moscow so boring that we have to seek entertainment in the form of people bashing? Is this the kind of student leader we want?

Each of the candidates for Student Senate President has something to say about issues that affect us as students. Let's give each of them a chance to have their say, then get out there and vote.

Oregon's new suicide law a success for all humanists

From the state that brought us the first embryo of proposed homophobic law with Measure 9 two years ago, the terminally ill will get a brand new law that actually will do good for humanity—Oregon's "Death with Dignity Act."

The act is an unprecedented law that will allow terminally ill patients to commit suicide. Oregon's voters passed the measure with only 52 percent of the vote. Naturally, the law brings up the question, "Is it ethical to allow someone to kill himself?"

The answer, of course, is simple: Yes. But only if they prepare the rest of the world for it. That is, make sure their estate is in order and that cleaning crews are readily available to take care of the remains. (Messy suicides aren't polite in any case, and should be discouraged.) Here, it is important to note that the Oregon law doesn't address needless suicides; it addresses logical ones.

Inherently, the question becomes one of ethics, and no matter how you look at it, the Oregon law is the most ethical and human law that I've ever seen.

However, the American Medical Association opposes the law. So does the Catholic church—the church's position is understandable, the AMA's, however, is not. By opposing this law, the AMA is blatantly ignoring the very people they have pledged to help. How is that ethical?

The AMA seems to feel that if a person wishes to commit suicide to relieve suffering, it reflects a deeper problem of the quality of medical care the sufferer is given.

If patients were given better drugs and more comfort, the AMA argues, patients would not want to commit suicide. The AMA might as well prescribe a heavier dose of morphine and eight hours of Barney a day, for all the good their inaction will do.

The Oregon law is targeted to help those who are truly ill and aren't going to recover. Take, for instance, Ernest Hemingway, who ate the business end of a shotgun. Why did he do it? No one knows for sure, but I'd say it had something to do with him not being able to live the rigorous life he did when he was young and robust.

If I were terminally ill, I'd like to think I could exit if I really believed I'd had enough. While bed-ridden, I don't think more empathy from a nurse, even a pretty female nurse in my case, would do me much good. If I couldn't do it like Hemingway, I'd like to be able to do it with the help of a doctor, and the constraints of the Oregon law wouldn't be too bad.

The suicide law is so structurally tight that it would be almost impossible to abuse, and that's the main reason I like it.

For instance, The Washington Post reported Sunday that the law strictly states that doctors can essentially only write the prescription for the suicide. The law requires more than what the master of doctor-assisted suicide, Jack Kevorkian, would have hoped for. If anything, the law places an undue burden on those who are so ill they can barely function.

Here are some of the restrictions: only patients who are expected to live less than six months are eligible. They must also be 18 years old and an Oregon resident—Oregon doesn't want out-of-staters coming just to die.

Only after the doctor has explained all the possibilities for more treatment can suicide be mentioned. The patient must request the suicide three times, the first orally, the second in writing and the last again orally. The patient must also wait through 15 days of terminal illness until the final request can be made.

A second physician must consult with the patient and concede the problem is terminal; two witnesses other than the doctor must be present, and the patient can stop the process at any time. If the patient seems to be mentally incompetent, he must be referred to counseling.

Finally, the physician must offer the patient a chance to withdraw the request directly before the suicide.

The law is ethically sound. Doctors' main goal should be to help people get better. Sometimes this is impossible.

If I'm ever terminally ill, I hope someone is around who will help me, not just offer comfort.

Letters to the Editor

Moeller makes sense for ASUI

I am writing this letter in support of ASUI presidential candidate Brad Moeller. I have not always supported him as president; actually, I did not know whom I was voting for until I went to the presidential debate last Thursday night. Unfortunately, not very many students attended this debate, but allow me to tell you why Brad Moeller showed the audience why he should be the next ASUI President.

In a nutshell, Brad made a lot of sense. When it would have been easy for him to give broad statements that sounded like the same old story, he gave sensible, specific ways to deal with the concerns facing the students at UI. The candidates were asked how they would solve the problem that students are unaware of what goes on in the ASUI. Both Cade King and Sean Wilson talked about seeing that the senators did visitations to their living groups, and enforce existing disciplinary action on those who did not. This sounds great, but I was a senator for a year, and this was tried to no avail. Brad came up with an ingenious solution to this problem...hold on to your hats: THE ARGONAUT. Why can't the senate spend some of the $1 million budget to utilize the Argonaut more efficiently? It is probably obvious to most of us that we don't know what the ASUI does. Brad would use the Argonaut to supplement the senate reports, and if, heaven forbid, if your senator does not do reports, you could count on the Argonaut to give you the scoop. Doesn't that make sense?

Another question the candidates were asked was what they would do for the non-traditional students to keep them informed and involved. After the same old type of response from the other candidates, Brad was quick to point out that he would not be on the same ticket with Leonard Perry, who is a non-traditional student, if Leonard did not believe he could properly represent these students. Then he was apologetic that he kept bringing up this solution, but he said once again that more effectively using the Argonaut to reach married and non-traditional students to not only inform them, but also to see what their specific needs are. Brad realized that these students are less concentrated, and it is hard to get them all together, so why not take advantage of the fact that about 98% of the students read the Argonaut, including non-traditional students. It makes sense to me.

Another question the candidates were asked was concerning how they would keep communication going between the senators and the president. After some of the same old stuff from the other candidates, Brad simply said he would have a "First Priority" policy. This means that whenever a senator called him or stopped him on campus, he would give that senator first priority over anything he was doing. If a senator called him at home, he would drop everything and put that senator to the top of his priority list. I wish that Richard Rock had that policy when I was a senator. I think you would be hard pressed to find a senator that would say our current president has a policy that is even close to this. Simple yet very effective, and of course it makes sense.

Brad has taken a new approach to the same problems that I dealt with when I was in the senate and the problems that we all face at the University of Idaho. Like I said before, I went into the debate not knowing whom I was going to vote for, and after the debate was over I went up to Brad and told him I would write a letter. The normal process is that the candidates ask (beg) for people to write on their behalf, but in this case, I was more than happy to share with the students of the University of Idaho why a vote for Brad Moeller just makes sense. VOTE BRAD MOELLER NOV. 16!

—Michael Smith
ASUI Programs Board Chair

Accusation not founded in reality

I would like to respond to the Nov. 4 article in the Argonaut with respect to Christa Manis. Ms. Manis would like students to believe that I am some demonic secret agent man, bent on covert surveillance of Cade King's campaign (that she is currently working for).

If she honestly believes that my joking reference was in any way serious, then maybe she should take a step back into reality.

This is a student government election, and there are much more real and substantive issues to deal with, such as campus safety, fighting in-state fee and out-of-state student tuition increases, the move to the Big West, putting a student on the State Board of Education and improving the efficiency of the ASUI as an organization.

These are the real issues, and the things I would like to work on.
—Sean M. Wilson
ASUI Presidential candidate

King represents student interest

I would like to take this opportunity to encourage all University of Idaho students to vote Nov. 16 for ASUI elections. It is once again time for us to elect our new student leaders. I hope the majority of students have had the chance to meet our three presidential candidates; Brad Moeller, Sean Wilson, and Cade King.

The decision of narrowing it down to one candidate will be the choice of the student body. When candidates come to speak to your living group or when they pass out literature, ask them questions. This is your chance to get to know each individual. Hopefully you can select one candidate that best represents you.

We need a candidate who has had a great amount of experience in the ASUI; one that holds honesty, fairness, integrity, and trust in their ideology. We need a candidate who best gets along with the faculty, staff, and students. I encourage to look at the characteristics Cade King represents. As a past ASUI senator and the current Chief of Staff of the ASUI president, Cade understands the network system linked to the faculty/staff, administrators, and students.

Cade King understands the importance of working together as a whole student body on campus related issues. His experience as past Delta Chi Fraternity president has helped him become aware of problems university students face on a daily basis.

As a member of the ASUI senate, Cade participated in the Candle Light Vigil March. He took on the role of the Governmental Operations and Appointments Committee Chair. He spent weeks creating the bylaws used today by the Student Union Board. As you can see, Cade has devoted his time and efforts in improving our student government.

I encourage full and part time students, traditional and non-traditional students, and undergraduate and graduate students to vote in the ASUI elections Nov. 16. Voting will only take five minutes. In order to vote, you must bring your student identification card to the voting booth. Remember to vote for the candidate who best represents you. Thank you for your time.

—Zahrah Sheikh

Wilson for President

Over the last two years, Sean Wilson has shown that he has the qualifications, talents and drive to be your next ASUI President. He has a track record of hard work for the students of this university that will only continue to improve if he is elected. I encourage you to vote for Sean Wilson on Nov. 16.

—Clint Cook

Letters to the Editor

Wilson best candidate for Pres.

In light of the recent news story concerning presidential candidate Sean Wilson, I felt it necessary to write this letter.

Sean Wilson has always been a staunch advocate for student issues on this campus. During the year that I have been associated with the ASUI, I have found Wilson to be one of the few student-elected officials for whom I have any respect.

While serving as a member of the Communications Board, and now as the chair of the restructured Student Media Board, I have seen Wilson's dedication to fulfilling his responsibilities as a member of the ASUI Senate. I believe that this dedication ensures that Wilson is the best candidate for the position of ASUI President.

One of the reasons that I sought appointment to the chair of the Student Media Board is that I wanted to implement the ideal of "reinventing government," a goal which has been partially achieved through the restructuring and transformation of the Communications Board into the Student Media Board. In order to continue our efforts to make the student media better for students, I feel that the ASUI needs a capable and knowledgeable person in the president's chair. Of the three presidential candidates, I know that Wilson has the most recent, and the most applicable ASUI experience to fulfilling the duties and responsibilities of the ASUI presidency.

With regard to the recent article about Wilson's alleged plot, I cannot believe that he would seriously attempt to overhear or record any conversation of rival candidates. I am disheartened when I walk around campus and talk to people who have already made up their minds about the election based upon that single article. I urge all ASUI students not to jump to conclusions based upon the misinterpretation of a joke.

Sean Wilson will receive my vote for ASUI President, and I hope that all ASUI students will take the time to be informed voters, choosing a candidate based upon experience and familiarity with the ASUI government. Candidates should not be chosen on the basis of a single article.

Food Drive a success

Congratulations and thanks to the Homecoming Committee and living groups for their most successful Homecoming Food Drive and support of the Moscow Food Bank. The efforts and generosity of all who contributed are indeed appreciated.

Our food bank is an all volunteer organization that is able to operate because of the willingness of our supporters to so generously share their time, money, and food. We will again, this year, provide Thanksgiving and Christmas food baskets to those in our community who need them. The food drive donations will support that effort.

PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES

Cade King

What experience do you have that qualifies you for an ASUI position?

I feel that because I have had extensive experience in both the ASUI student body government, as a past senator and currently the chief of staff, and have been a member and president of my living group, I am well qualified for the position of ASUI president. I have the balance of experience that is needed to effectively deal with both students and administrators on a real and professional level.

As president of the Delta Chi Fraternity I had to construct and allocate a budget for our house members as well as our Housing Corporation and Alumni Board of Trustees. This has matured me and developed responsibility needed to deal with the ASUI's $1 million budget. I had to effectively deal with everyday conflicts, problems and complaints in conjunction with handling publicity, alumni, parents and university officials.

As a past ASUI senator and the current chief of staff, I understand the intricate workings of the senate and president and how to get things done within the legislative and executive branches. It is necessary that I have experience on all levels; the legislative and executive branches of the ASUI as well as having been committed and dedicated to my living group. These are things I have done and which make me the right choice for the students.

What do you feel is the most important issue facing students that the ASUI should deal with?

The most important issue facing the students today is getting their voice heard. The students' voice is not being heard enough on this campus. When it comes to issues such as campus safety, tuition increases, student health insurance increases, student representation on administrative committees, student representation on the State Board of Education, the publishing of teacher evaluations and better benefits and resources for teaching assistants and research assistants, the students are not having their voices heard.

These student concerns are not being taken seriously. It is time to start making things happen instead of waiting for things to happen like we have in the past. It is time for the students and student representatives to become proactive and not reactive on these important issues. As the ASUI president, I will lead in having these issues heard on the university level and also the state level. The U of I needs to and will be the leading voice for the students in the state of Idaho.

We will get our voices heard and goals accomplished. It is time we demand to be heard and results to be seen. As president, I will help be the voice for the students and I will be an activist for the students.

"OUR LIVES BEGIN TO END THE DAY WE BECOME SILENT ABOUT THE THINGS THAT MATTER."

Brad Moeller

What experience do you have that qualifies you for an ASUI position?

My broad ASUI experience may be my best qualification for ASUI president. I have held three positions in the executive branch of the ASUI: vice president, chief of staff and first assistant to the president. I began my higher education in the fall of 1990. It was during that semester that I was appointed to be the first assistant to the president. Through this position, I obtained experience and a full understanding of the ASUI executive branch. Not only did this job give me ASUI experience but also a complete realization of what the ASUI president's job entails.

In November of 1990, I was elected to the ASUI senate. In the senate, I served on the Government Operations and Appointments Committee and spent a year on the Communications Board. In November of 1991, I was elected to serve as ASUI vice president. Through this position, I increased my knowledge of what the ASUI president's responsibilities are. Perhaps most importantly I learned the importance of an "open door-open mind" policy. It is vital for the ASUI executive branch to be approachable and to listen without bias. The final position I held in the ASUI executive branch was chief of staff. I held this position in the spring of 1994. I am the only candidate that will not need time to learn the position of ASUI President.

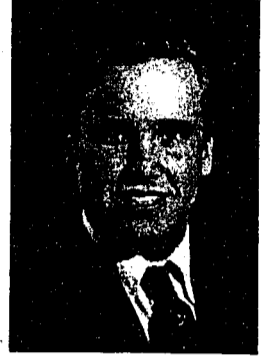

What do you feel is the most important issue facing students that the ASUI should deal with?

As one current ASUI senator worded it, "The ASUI is just treading water right now." It is for this reason that there are no pertinent issues currently facing the students. Sure, I could bring up parking, safety and State Board of Education fee increases; but I consider all these ASUI issues the bare essentials or necessary requirements. The most important issue facing students is lack of information and knowledge in regards to ASUI operations. What do you know about the ASUI? Typically speaking, student knowledge is very little. This could all be changed if Leonard Perry and I are elected. Our wish is to regularly inform the students by press releases, on a bi-monthly basis, what elected officials are working on.

By doing this, we will not only solve the uninformed student problem, but in a sense we will hold elected officials accountable for their progress. "Holding elected officials accountable"—that has a nice ring to it. The students' biggest concern should be how their money is being used. When students are informed bi-monthly, this will no longer be an issue to address. Increased information will start the ball rolling for increases in knowledge, participation, approval and productiveness. In essence, the students will receive a "receipt" for their ASUI fees. Aren't we ready to be informed?

Sean Wilson

What experience do you have that qualifies you for an ASUI position?

Especially when running for ASUI president, experience is a key. After all, to be president one must know what boards do what, what are the powers of the senate, and the other thousand little things a president must have a grasp on.

I can rattle off my list of qualifications just as fast as the next guy (president pro-tempore, chair, ways and means, finance committee, former chair rules and regulations, I've sat on activities, communications, student issues and production boards).

Anyone can have resume filler, but I think accomplishments while in office are the most important qualification.

What have I done lately?

- Authored the ASUI Code of Ethics—this prescribes mandates for ethical behavior for "ASUI officials."
- Started and currently organize Academic Affairs student teaching enhancement committee—this committee deals with everything from teacher evaluations to TA and professor praises and problems.
- Founded the Dean Vetrus/ASUI Memorial scholarship—this is a group of five $500 scholarships.
- Fought student fee increases—I was the only presidential candidate to fight last spring's out of state student fee increases.
- Lobby the state legislature—I'm the only candidate who has recently lobbied.
- Campus Safety—I have assisted the campus safety task force.
- Started and ran the ASUI bookswap—saves students money when buying or selling a book.

I hope my past accomplishments show my enthusiasm for the future.

What do you feel is the most important issue facing students that the ASUI should deal with?

Depending on who you are, there are two. 1. Campus safety—We need to take immediate action on making this a priority within the minds of the administration. That is where the money is, and that is a big part of the solution.

What the administration sees is a campus that is comparatively and statistically safe. What I see is a lot of people whose academics, social life, and sense of security are threatened by a feeling of uncertainty.

We need: 1) to repair existing lighting, 2) more night watchmen, 3) installation of new lighting, 4) emergency call boxes, 5) a campus safety coordinator to oversee all of the other ideas and details under this umbrella.

2. Student fees—The passing of the buck for who pays the bills is now in full swing. The cycle is simple: the taxpayers pressure the legislature, the legislature pressures the State Board of Education, the State Board of Education pressures the administration. UI students have no other formal way to combat this cycle except for ASUI.

Student fees (especially out of state) are growing faster than the inflation rate. We must institute our own united front against student fees. That is why I would like a voting student on the State Board of Education.

Graduate Students' Association

PRESIDENTIAL CANDIDATES

Melissa Bailey

What experience do you have that qualifies you for a GSA position?

Some of the experiences that I feel qualify me for the GSA presidency include being past president of the University of Cincinnati Mountaineering Club. Specifically, the duties for this position required that I conduct the weekly meetings as well as allocate money from several bank accounts for the purchase of the club's new outdoor equipment.

As an undergraduate at the University of Cincinnati, I also spent several years as an assistant manager of the Cincinnati Youth Hostel. In this position, it was essential that I communicate with people of many ethnic and cultural backgrounds. Since I started graduate school at the UI, I have served on the committee for the 1994 Research Exhibition as well as participated in the talks concerning the relocation of the GSA office in the SUB.

I am also the departmental representative for geography. I am pursuing the position of GSA president because I feel I would do well in representing the organization. I enjoy working with people and look forward to serving GSA in the best interest of all graduate students.

What do you feel is the most important issue facing students that the GSA should deal with?

Melissa Bailey and Kelsey Hartman are running on a ticket as a president/vice president combination because we have similar goals and understand the need for clear communication.

We feel the main issue affecting graduate students at the UI concerns the multicultural relations on campus. We are graduate students searching for new and alternative solutions to issues that affect all of us; because we have witnessed a change in the amount of respect on behalf of the international students, our concern is that the sense of community has diminished due to these feelings of isolation and segregation. It is also our intention, if elected, to continue the emphasis on the current administration's financial goals.

Bill Owens

What experience do you have that qualifies you for a GSA position?

I have had much experience in dealing with student issues. In 1992, I was elected the GS(P)A vice president and was also elected ASUI Senator representing the GSA. I was the president of the Cartography and Geography Club and served on the University Curriculum Committee and the Financial Committee. In 1993, I was the GSA Office Manager and was re-elected GSA VP.

I graduated from Eastern Oregon State College in 1991. I was an EOSC Senator for two years and served on the EOSC President Advisory Committee and other committees.

I attended Anchorage Community College (ACC) and the University of Alaska, Anchorage (UAA) before moving to EOSC. I was an ACC Senator from 1986 to 1988.

During the period of restructuring the Alaskan Post Secondary Education, I served on 27 committees including Campus Advisory Board, the ACC/UAA Reconstruction Board, the Subcommittee Registration Planning for the Fall, Spring, Summer of 1988, the ACC/UAA Administration and Tuition Study Committee and the ACC/UAA Integrated Catalog Committee. I was asked to participate in the setup on a Legislative University Network. I was the UAA Administration's Liaison with the Japanese consulate in Anchorage. I served as a student lobbyist to the legislators.

My involvement in student government as I have outlined shows that I am not new in promoting student activities and rights.

What do you feel is the most important issue facing students that the GSA should deal with?

The mandate of the GSA Assembly is for the GSA Executive Committee to continue working for TA tuition and fee waivers. The question is how. I would work with the ASUI president in using the ASUI lobbyist to advance this concern to the legislature. This is undoubtedly going to be an uphill fight as both houses in the legislature are now top-heavy with fiscally conservative Republicans. And, we are looking at a 1.25 million funding for TAs. I would suggest that as graduate students we voice this concern (and of course other concerns) to the Board of Higher Education. We should also acquaint ourselves with the senators and representatives representing the Idaho panhandle. I would suggest that they be invited to some of our GSA assembly meetings and let them get to know us. As graduate students, we should be prepared to "blitz" the legislators with letters requesting support for this budget increase. I trust this answers your question.

I would like your vote. I thank you.

OTHER CANDIDATES

Hartman Kelsey

For Vice President

•What experience do you have that qualifies you for a GSA position?

All of my 34 years of life, experience has never before led me up the path to a vice presidency or any other office for that matter; yet, I sense it's time for me to stop complaining and do something about the concerns and issues I see around me. So I guess my first qualification is that I care enough to act. I try to act wisely and considerately, even in the face of others who seem bent on accomplishing something no matter what the cost; yet, I also see the benefit to being bold and taking risks. Being human and being intent on embracing all that being human means is the most important qualification I possess to help serve graduate students as vice president of GSA.

•What do you feel is the most important issue facing students that the GSA should deal with?

Melissa Bailey and Kelsey Hartman are running on a ticket as a president/vice president combination because we have similar goals and understand the need for clear communication. We feel the main issue affecting graduate students at the UI concerns the multicultural relations on campus. We are graduate students searching for new and alternative solutions to issues that affect all of us; because we have witnessed a change in the amount of respect on behalf of the international students, our concern is that the sense of community has diminished due to these feelings of isolation and segregation. It is also our intention, if elected, to continue the emphasis on the current administration's financial goals.

Randy Paulin

For Vice President

•What experience do you have that qualifies you for a GSA position?

As a high school teacher with seven years' experience, I was very active in my local education association, serving as its president for two years.

In addition, I have been an active member of several professional organizations for a number of years, and I am very familiar with organizational structures and protocols. I also believe my experience in working with people in organizational settings will serve me in good stead as GSA vice president.

What do you feel is the most important issue facing students that the GSA should deal with?

There are a number of important issues facing the graduate student community at the UI today, but I believe the most important issue is the emerging power of the GSA as an organization capable of effectively representing the interests of the UI's graduate students. The GSA needs continued strong leadership in order to continue to evolve as a voice for graduate students; a voice that will be heeded by 'the powers that be.' I want to serve the graduate students of this university by helping to provide

Mohammed Kaleemullah

For Secretary

•What experience do you have that qualifies you for a GSA position?

I think being a graduate student is the main reason that encouraged me to run for this position, and I don't believe that special experience is required to run for any position in the students government—either ASUI or GSA. We students should not hesitate to participate just because we don't have any experience. We need sincere students in this organization, not professional politicians. The main job of GSA secretary is to put together the Newsletter. I was involved with Mirza this year and worked on the newsletter. Although the newsletter is at a stage where further improvement would not be an easy task, I am accepting this challenge and will hopefully meet it with the active cooperation of graduate students.

•What do you feel is the most important issue facing students that the GSA should deal with?

I would like to remove the concept that the aim of any such organization is just to deal with issues. We have to differentiate between the academic organization that GSA is and a trade union. We are here for a limited time and it provides us an opportunity to prepare ourselves with the future challenges of world. All our efforts should not be confined to fighting for TA/RA benefits—there is a silent majority that are paying on their own, and we have to work on their problems as well.

GSA should work on improving extra-curricular activities, and it should focus more towards providing better learning opportunities to the students by improving the quality of education and research. Although the university takes great pride in its reputation as an outstanding research, service and teaching institution, there is little acknowledgment of the major role graduate students play in a variety of research related activities. We should also pay attention to the long ignored problems like campus security, parking, housing and health care for students and their families. In the end, I would like to thank all the graduate students for unanimously supporting my nomination.

Mike Willey

For Treasurer

Editor's Note: Mike Willey did not participate in this pre-election coverage issue.

OTHER ASUI CANDIDATES

Damon Darakjy, For Vice President

What experience do you have that qualifies you for an ASUI position?

My name is Damon Darakjy, and I am running for ASUI vice president. I am running with Cade King who is a candidate for ASUI president. Cade and I feel that two individuals are more effective than one. We feel that we make a great team and are excited to work for the students.

This is my second year at the University of Idaho; I transferred from North Idaho College where I ran cross-country and track. Before coming to Moscow, I enlisted in the Marine Corps Reserve; I am currently an E-3. I also was married before I came to Moscow to the former Jennifer Jaeger, now Jennifer Darakjy whom I love very much. I became a leader in the Marine Corps and being married has taught me to be responsible. I feel these are two important qualities to be a leader in the ASUI.

While at the university here, I served the ASUI as the Student Issues Board chair. I was responsible for the student elections and bringing speakers to Moscow. I brought Helen Chenoweth in and, with help from the Young Democrats, Larry LaRocco to campus. I worked with the Women's Center to have a series of forums on Prop 1 before the election.

What do you feel is the most important issue facing students that the ASUI should deal with?

I feel that there are many issues that are important instead of just one. These issues include getting a student on the State Board of Education. Currently we have no student voice when it comes to tuition hikes.

With the help of Senator Laura West, I would like to see the safety task force become active once again. They were very effective last semester.

I want to increase student participation in the Kibbie

Dome, and I am currently looking at ways to implement this with Senator Bill Gilbert.

I would like to see more student representation. A current state representative told me recently, "If the students get behind something there is nothing that can stop them." Cade and I will work for you, the students. We need your vote Nov. 16th. Thank you.

Leonard Perry, For Vice President

What experience do you have that qualifies you for an ASUI position?

The experience that qualifies me for the position of ASUI vice president is simple. I am a student who has seen the university from every angle imaginable. I have been a student athlete, lived in Wallace complex for three years, and I am currently a resident of married student housing. Perhaps most importantly, I am a student without a political agenda. I feel it is time the ASUI was run as an organization rather than a political stepping stone for future politicians. By simply being a student, I have become aware of student needs. I have also become aware that these needs are seldom met. As ASUI vice president, I will work with a student-oriented mind rather than a personal agenda which seems to be common place in ASUI government. ASUI experience is not the issue. Yet, if it were, the Moeller/Perry ticket exceeds its competitors in this category.

What do you feel is the most important issue facing students that the ASUI should deal with?

The most important issue facing students is lack of information. As an average student, I see this as a very serious problem right now. One of the things that Brad Moeller and I plan to do is put bi-monthly reports in the Argonaut. By so doing, the students will be up to date on all pertinent issues. In addition, this technique will hold ASUI-paid officials accountable for performing their duties. Throughout my five years at the University of Idaho, I have invested well over $300 into the ASUI. However, I haven't been aware of or felt the impact of my contribution's uses. There's not a college student alive who has money to spend without receiving something in return. Yet, this semester we all contributed over $40 in fees to the ASUI—What did you get? I think that it's time for the students to receive benefits or at least knowledge of what their money is used for. Don't you?

Clint Cook, For ASUI Senator

What experience do you have that you feel qualifies you for a position in the Senate?

There are five important things that qualify me to be your ASUI Senator: experience with financial management, service on the ASUI Activities Board, contacts with student clubs, ownership of a small business and my attitude about the job. My financial experience comes from my position on the ASUI Activities Board as vice chair. In that capacity, I was involved with distributing $30,000 to various student clubs. Furthermore, I learned how to get things done within ASUI. I also had the opportunity to meet between 80 and 100 energetic leaders from different student clubs. As your senator, my contacts within the student body will provide the network needed to represent you and your concerns effectively. Ownership of a drafting firm has taught me dedication, hard work and fiscal responsibility. All things considered, I believe my foremost qualification for ASUI senator is my attitude about the job. ASUI has only one purpose: "to represent students and their needs." As your senator, I will remember who elected me and who my boss is: YOU. I have the dedication and enthusiasm to help you cut through the red tape that surrounds this institution.

WILSON FOR PRESIDENT

In the aftermath of bloody campaigning for seemingly endless public offices, there is one more campaign that University of Idaho students cannot ignore. The races for our ASUI senators and president.

If you are still reading this, then you must be concerned about the choices at hand. As president of Chrisman Hall, I have seen many senators and a few presidents come and go, except one. Sean Wilson came to us and stayed, He came to us when he was supposed to, He came to us in his spare time. He kept talking to us when the others apparently had something better to do. The "scandal" a week ago is rubbish. He has and will continue to make this campus a safer, better place.

Every student on or off campus, has a senator. Do you know who yours is? Our "official" senator never showed, so Sean came on his own.

We will have many boxes to check tomorrow, but there is only one choice. Make it count.

Ryan Hoke,
Chrisman Hall President

Someone once said, "Chances and opportunity favors the prepared mind."

Sean Wilson is that prepared mind. He is a hard working student leader that exemplifies the honesty and experience necessary to exceed all expectations of an ASUI President.

I urge you to support Sean Wilson, I do!

What do you feel is the most important issue facing students that the ASUI should deal with?

There are two very important issues. The first is fiscal responsibility. Last year, ASUI lost $62,971 on Programming and Activities. The loss for the yearbook was $14,000. As your senator, I will see that this money is spent wisely. I do not want to shut down these services but rather work to restructure them so they bring more back to the students of this university. The second issue is safety. The Safety Task Force was created last year, and I would like to ask how many of you feel any safer now than last year? The response I have gotten from living groups shows that nothing really has changed. The Task Force has made progress, but they need help and money. I will make radical progress toward a safe campus by lobbying for more money so we can obtain additional lighting and security.

David Hisel, For ASUI Senator

What experience do you have that qualifies you for an ASUI position?

Qualifications:

- Junior Year in Computer Science
- As president of SLA, I've represented students and their concerns to the staff and faculty at U of I
- Kept in touch with ASUI Senate and the issues they face
- Served on several planning committees to include the International Afternoon and International Week committees
- Six Years of leadership experience in the Marine Corps

What do you feel is the most important issue facing students that the ASUI should deal with?

I am running for ASUI senate because I strongly believe that an education is more than just studying and taking tests—it is also a growing process. I will put my resources and leadership skills to work for you because I want to enhance my experience while helping to improve student life here at the U of I.

Brian Kane, For ASUI President

What experience do you have that qualifies you for an ASUI position?

As a junior in political science, I have accumulated the leadership experience to become a mature, professional member of the ASUI senate. I spent four years in the army as a Polish Linguist in the Military Intelligence field. My last two years in the army were spent as a squad leader responsible for six soldiers and the maintenance and upkeep of over $25 million in electronic equipment. As vice president, I represented over 10,000 soldiers. Some of the programs I was responsible for implementing were a Lunch and Learn program which gave soldiers the opportunity to take college classes at lunch, two single soldier days, which were paid holidays recognizing the commitments single soldiers make to their nation, and continuous improvements in the living conditions and barracks of the soldiers. I attended the Primary Leadership Development Course. I graduated number one out of 318 with a 100% average. Since completing my service, I have been a member of the Delta Chi Fraternity, chairing our brotherhood committee, and I am member of the scholarship and social committees. I actively participate in intramural sports and university functions. As senator, I will commit myself to the review and response to student issues because I recognize that our futures are at stake. I have the focus, determination and commitment to insure student voices and ideas are heard—NOT silenced.

What do you feel is the most important issue facing students that the ASUI should deal with?

With a university as diverse as the University of Idaho it is difficult to label one issue as the most important, however CAMPUS SAFETY is rapidly becoming a serious issue. No longer is our campus the safe zone it once was. Cars are broken into on university lots, people are being viciously attacked walking across campus, and random acts of vandalism threaten our integrity. If students cannot safely walk across campus, how can we expect them to attend class—especially at night. There are many unlit walkways around the dorms and other campus areas that invite incidents. Not only are well lit walkways essential to a safe campus but we must employ safety measures that will ensure the prevention of campus violence and vandalism. Emergency or even pay phones placed around campus to provide a means for victims or potential victims to call for help would be a deterrent factor. Additionally, improved campus patrolling—especially on the weekend nights after dark—would keep the criminal element off of our campus.

Christa Manis, For ASUI Senator

What experience do you have that qualifies you for an ASUI position?

I am running for ASUI because I think my unique experience and background would be beneficial for students. As a former college student body president, I have worked with ASUI. I have also gained experience working with the State Board of Education and have successfully lobbied the legislature for increased capital expenditures for various schools in our state.

What do you feel is the most important issue facing students that the ASUI should deal with?

As an ASUI senator, I will work hard and aggressively address the issue of campus security? Although the crime rate on campus is relatively low, women especially do not feel secure. I am the only woman running for election this term, and I have experience dealing with campus security. I think it is very possible to implement emergency phone systems, increase lighting and re-implement the night time escort service. This issue needs to be solved; we have talked about it for too long.

Sean McAteer

For ASUI Senator

What experience do you have that qualifies you for ASUI position?

In my opinion, one of the most important qualifications for my candidacy is the fact that I am a student. I have had four previous years of listening and reading about the activities within the ASUI. I have helped ASUI presidential hopeful Brad Moeller with his previous campaigns as senator, vice-president, and in his current campaign as president. I have also assisted former senators Mason Long and Rob Blinzler with their campaigns.

Of course, my actual experience in student government is limited. But my desire to make something happen while I am in office, and the fact that I would like to be senator to help the students and not to further my own interests is important to point out.

I have no desire to use this position for any gains other than those which I feel are in the students' best interests. I believe that my past years as a student will give me an edge over the other candidates, not because I may or may not do a better job, but the fact that my age and my experiences here at Idaho will be useful to me in dealing with the administration and in voicing the opinions of the student body.

What do you feel is the most important issue facing students that the ASUI should deal with?

It is difficult to point out the one most important issue that the ASUI should deal with, for I think that there are many that should be addressed. Without trying to take the wind out of their sails, I support the Moeller/Perry ticket's idea of improved communication between students and the ASUI.

I feel that this is an important issue due to the fact that most students probably do not know what it is that the ASUI does. Publishing bi-monthly reports not only allows student insight into student government activities, but it also allows the student body an opportunity twice a month to voice the way they feel about issues and concerns directly back to the ASUI.

I would also like to see a re-implementation of the former Nightwatch program. Being a delivery driver for a local sandwich shop, I have the opportunity to observe what the campus is like late at night. Needless to say, I don't like what I see. On several occasions I have gained access into Theophilus Tower to deliver when the doors should have been locked. I have driven on campus in the evenings and almost run over pedestrians because I could not see them.

There are many more issues that I would like to address, but I will save their solutions for the Senate meetings.

Scott Wimer

For ASUI Senator

What experience do you have that qualifies you for an ASUI position?

I have been an ASUI senator for a year and during that time have had the opportunity to work for the students as their representative. Being a senator, to me, means utilizing all of my drive and desire to work on behalf of the students on issues they are concerned about. To that end, I am an active member of the Teaching Enhancement Committee, seeking ways of improving the quality of education every student receives. Last year when the Gem of the Mountains was under threat of being cut for lack of sales, I authored a bill that established the position of Gem of the Mountains Promotions Manager. The person in this position has the job of devising and implementing promotion strategies to sell more yearbooks, so you don't have to subsidize it. What do you feel is the most important issue facing students that the ASUI should deal with?

In my mind there is one issue that is important to the students of this university—campus safety. Campus safety was an issue unknown to the ASUI senate until last year when Senator Laura West brought this issue to the forefront with phenomenal student backing. In order to meet this issue head on, I am currently working on funding strategies for the ASUI Campus Safety Task Force.

I will continue to use my time, effort and talents to work on your behalf.

GSA

Otey Enoch

For Faculty Council Representative

What experience do you have that qualifies you for a GSA position?

In large part, I am qualified for this position because of the personal qualities I possess. These qualities include integrity, compassion and servanthood. Others say that I am a responsible, sincere and innovative leader and team member.

I am self motivated and persistent in areas where I am given responsibility. The graduate students at the University of Idaho can expect me to be a consistent servant for them as I represent them and advance their concerns and issues in Faculty Council. Besides these personal qualities, I bring several strong leadership abilities to this position. I have excellent interpersonal skills, am a capable facilitator, and am effective in working with a team. In previous leadership positions, I have proven that I can challenge the process when necessary, and am not afraid to confront situations, issues and people when necessary.

Additionally, I listen to others and am able to receive their feedback in a constructive manner.

My work the past ten years has given me the opportunity to integrate and apply the above qualities to team leadership, and group decision processes. I look forward to applying these qualities and skills in my work with GSA and Faculty Council.

What do you feel is the most important issue facing students that the GSA should deal with?

From my perspective of representing graduate students in Faculty Council, the most significant issue facing graduate students has recently been identified by GSA. The issue has been advanced to and has received support from Faculty Council. At the November 1st meeting of the Faculty Council, the following GSA resolution was adopted. The resolution reads as follows: "Be it resolved that Faculty Council supports parity with regard to salaries and/or fee waivers for its graduate assistants, with institutions comparable to the University of Idaho." Much work needs to be accomplished before the intent of this resolution becomes a reality.

A second important issue facing graduate students is the lack of available funds for quality research.

Beyond these issues I will look to the Graduate Student Association for their direction on issues to pursue as their representative to Faculty Council and as a team participant in the graduate student leadership process.

SEAN WILSON
A QUALIFIED
CANDIDATE

What does it take to be ASUI Student Body President? It takes time, dedication, responsibility, enthusiasm, openness, determination, and energy to serve as President. Who has demonstrated such qualities and concerns ever since he was elected in the fall of 1992 to the ASUI Senate?

SEAN WILSON!

Few elected officials take the time to interact with their constituents to find out what concerns are important to them. Sean has gone out of his way to talk with not only his living groups about campus issues, but with many other organizations on campus as well. Sean has served in the interests of students in the past and he will continue to do so as ASUI President.

Please get out and vote on Wednesday, November 16. Vote for a student that will put student interests first - Sean Wilson for ASUI President.

Art installation presented

Six students of the Honors Art Seminar 404, Art and the Environment, are presenting their installations in the Ridenbaugh art galleries. The opening reception was held Nov. 14 from 4 to 6 p.m., but the show will continue through Friday. The two projects, Mind Blocks and Suspended Perspectives were created completely by the students, each with different majors and backgrounds they were able to come together and work collaboratively to produce original pieces of art.

Mind Blocks is a representation of the struggle to free one's self from the constricting binds of racism, sexism, hate and fear in order to gain global appreciation. Suspended Perspectives is a journey through the experiences and feelings of life and of the views that are acquired throughout that time.

The seminar is taught by George Wray of the art department and Sally Machlas of the education department in an effort to show the use and abuse, as well as the appreciation, of the environment through art.

Creative reading to be held

Susan Baumgartner, author of My Walden: Tales from Dead Cow Gulch, former columnist for the Moscow-Pullman Daily News, and lecturer in the English Department at the University of Idaho, will read from her new book of nonfiction Nov. 30 at 7:30 in the UI Law Building Courtroom. The reading is open to the public, free of charge and will be followed by refreshments and a signing at BookPeople on Main Street in Moscow.

Brains for Breakfast, her second book, offers both general information for German Americans who know very little about their own German heritage, and a vivid picture of northern Idaho farm life from the 1880s through the 1990s.

Enjoy the imaginative fun of pre-television children, share the Baumgartners' family tragedies and joys, and never look at sausage in quite the same way again. Part family saga, part humorous tract and part philosophical meditation, Brains for Breakfast.

The reading is the last this fall sponsored by the creative writing program at UI Readings. All commence again in February, and include offerings by Diane Raptosh, Janet Campbell Hale, Karin Swenson, and Lee-Young Lee.

Melvins on cutting edge of rock

Matt Baldwin
Staff

It was Wednesday night and the DV8 club was packed with punks and hairstyles which ranged from as many colors as shapes and styles. Black leather, chains, spiked collars and punk were the attire for the evening. As the show began with Wool, I was able to catch the Melvins backstage for an interview. They come from the small town of Aberdeen, Washington, which is coincidentally the same home town of Kurt Cobain, late vocalist/guitarist and songwriter for the band Nirvana. The Melvins have been on tour with the headlining band, L7, another punk band, and Wool. The Melvins are: Buzz Osborne, vocalist/guitarist, Dale Crover, drummer and Mark Deutrom, bassist.

Argonaut: When did the Melvins form as a band?

Crover: The Melvins formed over a decade ago. A decade—ten years ago—1984.

Argonaut: How does it feel to be this far down the road?

Crover: We are amazed at ourselves for putting up with each other for this long. Actually, Mark's only been in the band for a year and a half. But Buzz and I have been together for ten long years.

Deutrom: And I have been down the road for quite a spell with you fellers.

Crover: About a year and a half. But, we've known Mark for a long time. He has been involved with the band for awhile. Producer, sound man and now he is a lowly bass player.

Argonaut: When you look back at all the shows and all the albums, what was your favorite?

Crover: It is all a blur. I can't remember a thing. I can't even remember where we played last night. There has been lots, lots of things that have happened. I've seen just about everything except a donkey show. That has got to be next. Just to see it. I would probably be offended yet strangely aroused.

Deutrom: So if there is anybody out there that wants to supply us with the information as where we can see one or take us personally to one, we would be glad to foot the expenses.

Argonaut: Do you think your music has improved over the years?

Crover: Oh yes, yes definitely.

Deutrom: It has gotten louder, anyway.

Crover: Definitely had lots of time to practice.

Deutrom: It's like bowling if you've bowled for ten years. You're going to be better than when you started.

Crover: Well, we started out with a pretty good handicap.

Argonaut: How did the formation of the Melvins come about?

Crover: The band was already formed when I was in it. And before I joined it was already happenin'.

The band probably formed out of wanting to play music. Be rock stars.

Argonaut: What type of bands were you playing in before Melvins?

Crover: Mark and I were both in cover bands. We played lots of stuff like Skinnard.

Deutrom: Yeah, I have been in a bunch of lame original bands that never went anywhere. Played in cover bands during high school. And pretty much I still play in a cover band because we still do covers.

Argonaut: Where do you draw

Comedy showcase graces Borah Theater

Christine Ermev
Staff

Take the night off tonight and head for the Student Union Borah Theater.

ASUI Productions presents "A Night Off—Comedy Showcase"

at 7:30 p.m. tonight in the Student Union Borah Theater. Featured in the show are comedians Lord Carrett of San Francisco, Michael Mancini of Santa Cruz, Calif., and Kelvin Girdy of Austin, Texas.

"All of these performers are currently touring campuses, and they appear in clubs all over the United States," said ASUI Productions speakers and performing arts coordinator Jennifer Moore.

Carrett has appeared on The Showtime Comedy Club Network and The Comedy Channel, and has headlined at many comedy clubs around the country including The Improvisation in Washington D.C. Mancini was a finalist in the Tonight Show with Jay Leno Comedy Challenge, and Girdy has been seen on HBO's Def Comedy Jam and New York's Uptown Comedy Club.

"Lord is probably the most popular one of the group," said Moore.

"A Night Off," is the first comedy show of the year on campus, and may be one of the first in a series of stand up comedy shows.

"Next semester we would like to bring two stand up comedy shows to campus," said Moore.

Moore said all three of the acts will be clean. "The university doesn't allow the F-word. We got in some trouble at the beginning of the year.

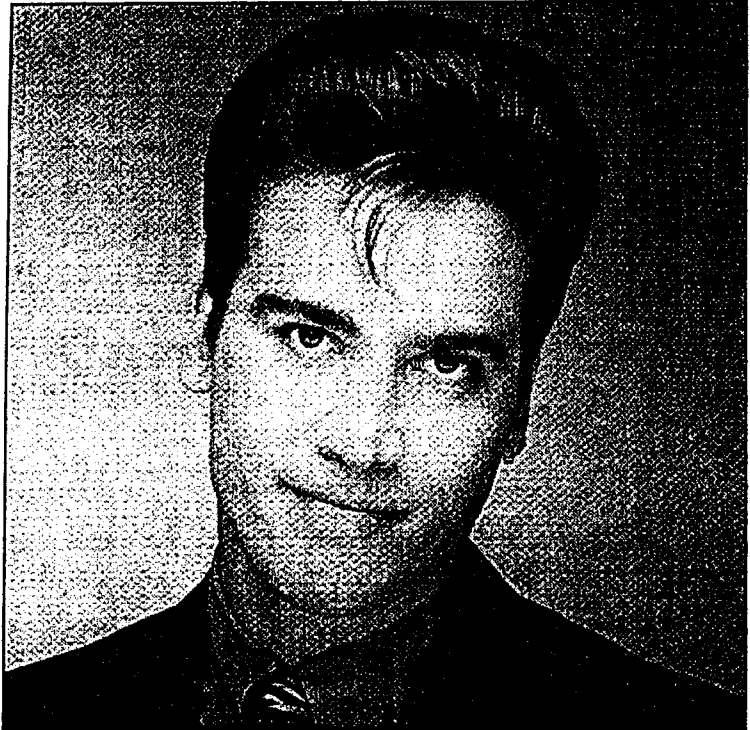

One of the performers at Lollapalouza made jokes about Mormons, and used the F-word after we told him he couldn't," said Moore. "It's something that we have to watch out for."

Immediately following "A Night Off," a concert will be held in the Student Union Ballroom.

Strangers, originally from San Francisco and later from Eugene, Ore., and Stand Up Stella, from Missoula, Mt., are two bands that can be lumped together in the same alternative college rock classification.

Shane Kimball, ASUI concert chairman said, "Strangers have been around for a while, and have been getting a following from West Coast. I'd compare them with Phish or Widespread Panic. Stand Up Stella is in the same category, with a lot of harmonica music."

This is also the first concert of the year, but ASUI is planning more for the spring. "I think that we will have a good turn out especially of people from the Portland area," said Kimball. "But the people who don't know Strangers yet should enjoy them."

Lord Carrett has appeared on The Showtime Comedy Club Network and The Comedy Channel. Carrett will be one three to perform tonight at 7:30 in the Borah Theater.

Tickets for "A Night Off" are $2 for undergraduates and $3 general admission at the door. People going to "A Night Off" will receive $2 off the concert ticket price.

"It's going to be a good time with a full night of fun and entertainment," said Moore.

ASUI presents open mike nite

Mike Maas
Staff

The Nov. 12 ASUI Open Mike Night provided a forum for UI musicians to demonstrate their talent and entertain the audience, however small it was.

Despite a dismal turnout of spectators, twelve musicians took the stage and played a variety of instruments and styles. The proceedings were emceed by Sean Wilson and Scott Wimer.

Dax Jonas began the evening. Equipped with his guitar and voice, he launched into a collection of eight hilarious satirical songs, all but one written himself. Jonas introduced the first by proclaiming it a "personal song," and indeed it was.

With each new stanza we found that Jonas is an "Italian Nazi gay fratboy" that likes little kids.

The next song was presented as a hate-list, and the utterly angst-ridden Jonas bashed various aspects of his ex-girlfriend, all the way down to the stain on her underwear.

Similar sentiment laced the rest of Jonas' set. In one song he said

"Christianity f—d me up." Another was written by a friend who, during a tough period in his life, found solace in Satan.

Jonas closed his set with a love song about a sailor named Raul with whom he had a deep and personal relationship while they sailed around Cape Horn.

The second act of the evening consisted of members of the Pullman band Circle of Knots. They performed two songs.

The subject of the first described as "the tragedy of the commons." It featured lush three-part harmonies against the beautifully sparse accompaniment of a guitar and a shaker.

For the second song, "Rhetoric," the lineup changed to two voices, guitar, and piano. The stride-piano set up an offbeat groove on top of which the vocalists dropped names of famous philosophers and scientists, asking where their ideas are today.

Adding to the fun were the improvised double-time sections and bits of skat solo thrown in by the lead vocalist.

Next up were Sean Wilson playing his soprano saxophone with Eric Cannavaro backing him up on piano and synth. The gentlemen performed the same act that they won the MasterCard Acts talent show with earlier this semester, "Modern Instrumental Jazz." Cannavaro launched into a blues progression, and Wilson improvised for a few minutes.

Then the mood changed with Cannavaro switching to slow pop-piano while Wilson composed himself on stage. After a deep breath, he began playing again.

To add texture, Cannavaro turned up his synth, which held a single string-pad note throughout the slow section of the song.

The next performer was Joe Galanak, who paid tribute to some of the greater songsmiths of our time.

Galanak played guitar and harmonica, and sang with a very Bob Dylan/Kurt Cobain type voice. It lent itself well to the classics he performed: Neil Young's "Comes a Time," a tune called "Long Black Veil" that Johnny Cash made famous, and two Rolling Stones songs: "Dead Flowers" and the crowd-pleaser "Honky Tonk Blues."

Following Galanak's set, Eric Cannavaro retook the stage with drummer Todd Stewart. Stewart laid down some beats and Eric jammed on his synth.

The general sound was much like some of Van Halen's songs with keyboard, Cannavaro a testimony to the deadly combination of triads on pedal tones.

The evening came to a close with two electric guitarists, Eli Gibler and Jeff Bronter. They said that they have been practicing for awhile and wanted to get out and "annoy people in public."

The two heated up their guitars, and launched into the distortion-laden "Paranoia" by Black Sabbath, Gibler covering the vocal. After that, Bronter left the stage and Gibler performed an improvised, power-chord-laden solo for a few minutes.

Though this particular Open Mike Night featured nothing but music, the nights are not limited to that medium. The next Open Mike will be in February, and is open to anyone that wishes to perform.

WSU to hold Olsen's work

PULLMAN—Poet and short story author Lance Olsen will present a program of his work Nov. 16 on the Washington State University campus.

The noon program, "The Cosmic & the Comic: An Afternoon of Prose and Poetry," is scheduled at the Museum of Anthropology in College Hall. It is open to the public without charge.

Olsen, director of the creative writing program at the University of Idaho, is the author of seven books, including the novels Live From Earth and Tonguing the Zeitgeist, the short story collections My Dates with Franz and Scherzi, I Believe, a poetry chapbook, Natural Selections, and the first book-length study of the cyberpunk writer William Gibson.

More than 200 of his short stories, poems, essays and reviews have appeared in the pages of many journals and anthologies.

Olsen's program is sponsored by the WSU Museum of Anthropology.

Circle of Knots and The Bedheads rock the Alley

Dax Gardels
Dax McMnamin
Staff, Contributing Writer

John's Alley spilled over with musical talent in Saturday's performances by the Bedheads and the Circle of Knots—say the concert was a success.

The following is a creative conversation describing the Circle of Knots and Bedheads concert between two music enthusiasts.

Dax: Well, it's definitely not the nicest bar in town, but I like it. It has class, it has an atmosphere of its own. Everybody was there to just hang out and be laid back.

Adam: I couldn't believe how many people they packed in there. I was looking around at a small empty bar that suddenly became a small full bar once the music started.

Dax: It's the kind of bar that I'd run. I don't know how to describe it. It's John's Alley. But let's talk about the bands. The Bedheads (Moscow band) said their influences were the Doors and They might be Giants.

Adam: They have a '70s funk baseline and a strong drummer who helped carry the band. We know who controlled the show. He just said listen to this machine. Chh, Chh, Chh, Chh!

Dax: How would you describe the guy's voice? He had a deep voice.

Adam: I wasn't all that impressed with it.

Dax: No, I wasn't either. It didn't stand out much. Sometimes his voice was lost in the music, which is cool if that's what you are going for. I asked them were they wanted to go with it. And they just want to go as far as they can. They've only been together for about a year and a half.

Adam: Do they have a CD?

Dax: They are going to record in about a week, in Spokane.

Adam: I think they kind of represent rock history. Starting with the '70s funk and your recognition of a guitar riff that was similar to the Police. And it definitely explored '90s radicalism.

Dax: Yea, I've heard that type of music a lot. None of them have broken through yet and made it big. But I definitely have heard it a lot.

They used some sounds on the synthesizer. I felt kind of gipped; they didn't use a real harmonica.

Adam: I think their best prop was the cigarette dangling out of the drummer's mouth.

Dax: What about the featured act? I don't know how you would describe Circle of Knots.

Adam: Circle of Knots is a Pullman band with proven talent.

They showed that at Open Mike Night. They brought the crowd home. They're kind of dangerous. If you listen to them, they invite you in and all of a sudden you're out there in a mosh pit that comes out of no where.

Dax: They definitely had the crowd going. They had that three part harmony going on, I dug that. Not a lot of people are willing to do that.

Adam: They had a theatrical presence—strong vocalists—they just totally involved the listener.

Dax: Well I noticed a lot of minor chords on the piano. It brings it down, serious. But they had fun with it.

Adam: They have something really unique. Something that hasn't been on the Market for about 20 to 25 years now. They are like Jethro Tull both vocally and in the serious tone of the music.

Dax: I thought of Peter Paul and Mary; they both have male and female vocals. The harmonies remind me of the Mommas and the Poppas.

I almost want to say a funky kind of southern-type feel. It had a real nice vibe. You put some soul into a southern band, lose the country feel to it, but still let it have that personal sound.

Adam: Uh, I just liked them a lot. They tend to kick butt.

Both: Penelope thanks for the moshing good time. Mark thanks for the beer.

Crover: Well, it was recorded in Hollywood, USA last July. We did it with Garth Richardson as producer. We recorded it in 19 days, which is pretty darn quick. It's a good record, I think.
Argonaut: I heard about some London sessions before this album?
Crover: Those were actually demos we did for this record. And this record called Prick came out of those demos. That's an experiment in sound album.
Deutrom: An adventure in sound.
Crover: Stoner Witch was more of a real record for us.
Deutrom: Stoner Witch is a main stream classic. Prick is an alternative classic.
Crover: Next we are doing a country album. Straight country.
Argonaut: How does this album differ from your other ones?
Deutrom: Expensive.
Crover: Yeah, we spent a lot more time on this one than ones in the past. Compared to Houdini it has been more of a band effort. This one was a lot of fun to record because we weren't pressed for time. We were working with professionals and we got a lot of different drums sounds on the record. That is probably why I like this one the best. Because we've lots of time to mess around.
Argonaut: How did you arrange the Snivlems with your record label?
Crover: We just told them that we wanted to do this really weird record and said they probably wouldn't want to release it and they said okay.

Deutrom: We do what we want.
Crover: If we put a record out on Warner Brothers then they would probably complain. As far as they are concerned it is promotion for them.
Deutrom: Because they work for us. They (the record companies) work for us. Most bands don't think that way though. You see we have everything in its correct order. We understand the scheme of things.
Argonaut: How would you describe your music?
Crover: Well we have a lot of different styles on this record. Stuff that's sort of industrial heavy metal. Stuff that is almost ballady in a way. I think some of it is pretty twisted.
Deutrom: I would describe it as a mating between a John Deer bulldozer and a saber tooth tiger.
Argonaut: How do you feel about the punk scene right now?
Deutrom: I didn't notice one. I feel it would be good if there would be a punk scene right now.
Crover: We don't have any punk ethics either. We'll make records for major labels.
Deutrom: Being punk is about doing what you want to do. Although various punk rockers think if you want to be a true punk you have to do certain things which is totally the antithesis of what punk is about. It's about freedom—do what you want.
Crover: There are no guidelines here. I think we are kind of out there on the edge someplace.
Deutrom: We are on the cutting edge of today's rock.

'Coming to America'

One day I went to the Graduate Student Residence computer lab at about 11 p.m. to type some papers that were due. I was very stressed because of the amount of work that was ahead of me. I sat down to type and became completely engrossed in my work. Most of us who come from other lands are under a lot of pressure to perform.

International Column
 —Humphrey Gitonga Tirima

The question that keeps popping up in our minds is "how can I go back home without that very important 'paper?'" After typing for what seemed to me about three hours I looked at my watch and to my amazement it was 4:30 a.m. I immediately saved my work and headed for my apartment.

When I opened the door I found my terror-stricken wife waiting for me. I could read all the fears that had been built in us from what we had seen on the movies regarding America. In fact, just before I got home she was ready to call the police and declare that her husband had been kidnapped.

When my wife and I arrived in America on July 14 of this year, this was one of the pictures ingrained somewhere in the back of our minds. After we had stayed with a family in Walla Walla, Washington last summer for about two months, we found out that we were dealing with real people.

The picture that we had about America is very different from what it really is. Movies from Hollywood have played a major role in shaping our picture of America.

The second image "shaper" is the American tourist. When we see an American tourist in our country we see dollars.

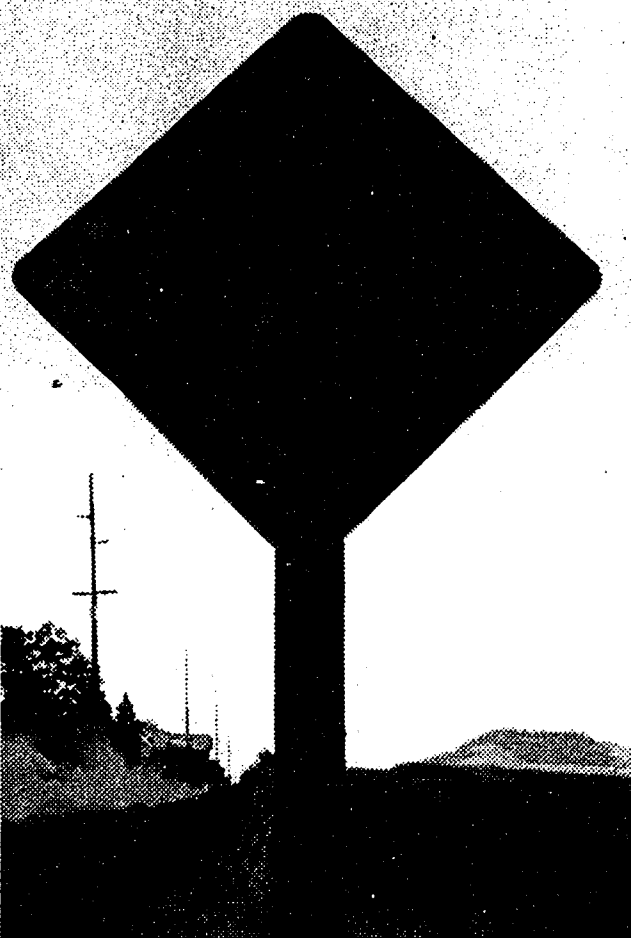

There is a saying in Kenya that "if the American tourist is not travelling, then there is no cash flow." The American tourist spends liberally. They stay in the most posh hotels and go to the most expensive entertainment amenities. Apart from the "stinking rich" picture the tourist portrays, she or he portrays another bad picture. Many people in Kenya think that Americans are sexually loose people. When the Navy ships dock in at our coastal town their presence is felt for the period they are there. All sorts of businesses do very well during this short period.

In the minds of many Kenyans, there is no poverty in America. This is probably true. Relatively speaking, I have not seen any "real" poverty since I have been here. I think the people who sleep hungry in this country in many cases choose to do so.

That is the portrait of an American according to Kenyans.

Most of the initial attitudes or pictures we had of America are slowly dissolving away as we encounter more and more real people. However, some of those pictures we had are being reinforced when we hear stories, such as that of a mother killing her two children. America is not all that we thought it was—it is not all bad after all.

I am here to make the most out of my time while applying the "Chicken Philosophy"—picking what I deem as beneficial and leaving out the rest. If you give a chicken maize (corn) and beans it will pick up the maize and leave out the beans. In other words, chickens are selective feeders.

Argonaut Athletes of the Week

Brittany VanHaverbeke, 5-foot-11 senior middle blocker, Lake Oswego, Ore.

VanHaverbeke led the Idaho volleyball team to three wins last week over Gonzaga, Montana State and Montana as the Vandals will host the Big Sky tournament Friday.

Against Montana, she had 10 kills and made only one error for a .917 hitting percentage. She finished the match with a block for the victory, improving the 20th-ranked Vandals to 25-2.

Duke Garrett, 6-foot-1, 240 pound senior linebacker, Tacoma, Wash.

Garrett was one of many Vandal defenders who wreaked havoc on the Weber State offense.

He recorded one quarterback sack, two tackles for losses, five tackles overall and returned a fumble four yards for a touchdown.

Garrett's touchdown was the first time he has scored since he played fullback in high school.

Cross country champs decided

The University of Idaho men's and women's cross country teams competed in the District VII/Big Sky Championship Saturday in Salt Lake City.

The women fared well, placing fifth out of eight Big Sky teams and 11th out of 18 regional teams that included Brigham Young and Colorado.

Freshman Shelley Zickler placed 10th overall in the race with a 5k time of 18:08.10.

Frank Bruder was the top UI finisher for the men, placing 22nd with a 31:41.65 mark in the 10k run.

The UI men finished last in the meet.

Northern Arizona won the men's Big Sky title and Montana State the women's.

Chris Jones of Weber State was the top men's Big Sky runner with a 30:26.58 time. He finished third overall out of all teams.

Rikke Pederson, a freshman from Northern Arizona, was the top women's runner. Her time in the 5k event was 17:43.98.

Overall, Colorado won both the men's and women's titles.

The Nightmare that is Memorial Gym is beginning to take on a life of its own.

The 90-year old building came to life Saturday night as a standing room only crowd of 1,600 raucous volleyball fans watched the Montana Grizzlies' Big Sky dream season come crashing down at the hands of the Idaho Vandals.

The Griz became the 27th consecutive victim in Idaho's current home winning streak, falling 11-15, 15-13, 15-3, 15-12 in the regular season finale for both schools.

The victory over UM (23-4, 13-1 BSC) gives Idaho the right to host the conference tournament this weekend along with the tourney's top seeding. The Vandals will face fourth seeded Weber State at 8 p.m. Friday while second seeded Montana opens action at 5:30 against third seeded Idaho State. The two winners will square off Saturday at 7 p.m. with the winner capturing the Big Sky's lone automatic berth into the NCAA tournament.

Ticket prices will be $5 for adults and $3 for students and senior citizens. UI student ID will not be accepted for postseason play.

Montana, which snapped the Vandals 11-match win streak in mid-October with a five game win in Missoula, gave the Vandals (27-2, 13-1 BSC) all they could handle Saturday.

'Cats clobbered 79-30, BSU next in line

Andrew Longeteig
Sports Editor

God almighty! We scored again?! Did you see the play?

No, I was looking at the cheerleaders.

Yeah, I was kinda counting the crowd.

What's the score now?
51-8 — second quarter.

Touchdowns were being scored left and right, up and down, diagonally and horizontally. Many of the 9,300 fans failed to keep up with the score as the University of Idaho Vandals destroyed the Weber State Wildcats 79-30 in the Kibbie Dome.

This victory sets up a storybook clash with chief rival Boise State in Boise for the Big Sky title Nov. 19.

"We had to win this game in order for the Boise game to mean anything," wide receiver Kyle Gary said.

Idaho, ranked No. 4 in the nation, improves to 9-1 overall and 5-1 in the Big Sky.

The Vandal defense was brutal in the first half, holding WSU to 8 total yards and only three first downs.

The Wildcats' first two drives were disastrous and a good indicator of things to come.

The first series went like this: incomplete pass, 4-yard loss on running play, delay of game penalty, incomplete pass, punt. On the first play of the second series, WSU quarterback Bryan Martin was called for intentional grounding in the end zone, resulting in a safety and a 9-0 Vandal lead.

Idaho basically sealed it near the end of the first half as defensive end Barry Mitchell and linebacker Duke Garrett each scored touchdowns on fumble returns. Their touchdowns came within 20 seconds of each other.

The scores gave UI an absurd, almost humorous, 51-8 lead.

Garrett said that was the first time he'd scored since he played fullback in high school. Mitchell said the last time he scored was in Little League Baseball.

Idaho's 79 points were the most scored since 1923, when UI compiled a school record 83 points against the College of Idaho.

UI was also one touchdown short of the record, set in the C of I thrashing 71 years ago.

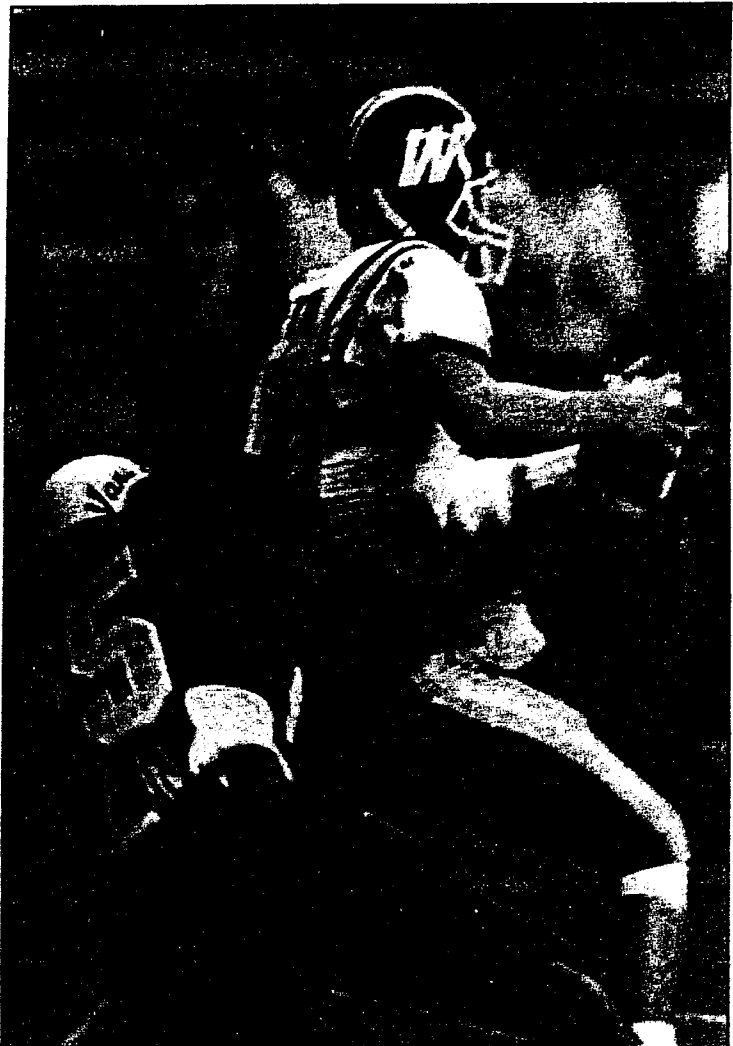

Running back Sherriden May's lone touchdown was almost lost in the scoring splurge as he became the all-time touchdown leader in Division I-AA with 61 — and counting.

May chewed up the Wildcat defense again with a 25 carry, 128 yard performance. Last year he gained 202 yards against WSU.

Sophomore running back Joel Thomas was even better. He scored three touchdowns and had a career-high 146 yards on 29 carries.

There was little need for passing as Idaho accumulated 319 total yards on the ground.

Trailing 2-0 early in game one, the Griz reeled off seven straight points before the Vandals later tied the game at 8-8. Montana middle-blockers Karen Goff-Downs and Heidi Williams dominated the net the rest of the game as UM reeled off five more unanswered points to go up 13-8 and hang on for the 15-11 win.

The Grizzlies continued to put the pressure on Idaho, taking leads of 11-6 and 13-8 in game two. It looked as if the Vandals might fall behind 2 games for the first time all year, but UI middle blocker Brittany Van Haverbeke did not let it happen.

The senior, provided two big blocks and forced Montana into three straight hitting errors, allowing the Vandals to knot the score at 13-13. Van Haverbeke, who finished with 10 blocks, served an ace at the Missoula mob to finish the game with a 15-13 Idaho win.

"That comeback was huge," said UI coach Tom Hilbert. "It set the tone for game three. They never recovered from that."

The Idaho six broke a 1-1 tie in game three to jump out to an 11-1 lead en-route to the easy win. In the fourth set the two foes traded points to a 6-6 deadlock followed by a six point Idaho run that looked to put the Griz away. Montana rallied back to a 12-12 tie before Idaho's Mindy Rice collected a pair of kills and Van Haverbeke, hammered down a block to end the match.

Rice and Tzvetelina Yanchulova smoked out 27 and 21 kills respectively in the winning effort. The duo also tallied 15 and 13 kills in UI's solid defensive performance.

"Our outside hitters brought their game up a level and we started playing defense," Hilbert said. "We really weren't staying up with them, but we finally started digging balls and then our athleticism paid off."

Idaho ended up dominating the stat sheet, outhitting UM .229 to .171, outdigging the Griz 87-75, and outblocking the bears 14-11.

The University of Idaho volleyball team celebrates after Brittany Van Haverbeke blocked a Montana kill attempt — the final point of the match in Idaho's 11-15, 15-13, 15-12 win over the 24th-ranked Grizzlies. The Vandals, now 25-2, will host the Big Sky Tournament Friday and Saturday.

Brian Brennan, however, made due when he could as he tossed five touchdown passes in just three quarters of play. One of his touchdown passes was a perfectly thrown 47-yard bomb to a streaking Gary.

Brennan, named the starter for Saturday's BSU game, was 9 of 16 for 184 yards.

The Vandal offensive line allowed only one sack as well as creating holes for the running backs.

"The offensive line did everything," Brennan said. "They gave Joel and Sherriden holes and I had all day back there."

Idaho's effective running attack and unmerciful defense had the Wildcats playing defense most of the game. In the entire second half, WSU controlled the ball for five minutes, 59 seconds. Overall, the Vandals' time of possession was 41:48 compared to WSU's 18:12.

Wildcat starting running back Von Robinson ran the ball eight times for a futile negative 24 yards.

WSU (5-6, 2-5 BSC) had 36 yards rushing despite a 50-yard touchdown run by Reggie Carter in the fourth quarter.

The Vandal defense sacked Martin five times. They have 22 sacks in the last five games.

Vandal Vibes:

- This is the second-worst loss for Weber State. Their worst ever defeat was last year's 56-0 loss to Idaho.

- The halftime wedding between a member of the band and flag corps was more interesting than the game itself for some fans.

- Idaho went undefeated at home for the regular season. They also had a perfect regular season home record in 1988 and 1992.

- Things must be going right for the Vandal offense when third-string tight end John LaJeunesse makes a diving 20-yard reception, his first reception as a Vandal. LaJeunesse, a redshirt-freshman, switched to tight end from the defensive line this year.

- The Montana Grizzlies lost to Idaho State 28-23, therefore eliminating themselves from the Big Sky championship race. 1993 Big Sky MVP Dave Dickenson, quarterback, did not play.

- BSU had a scare of their own, a 16-13 victory over Eastern Washington. The Eagles dropped a touchdown pass in the end zone and BSU blocked a last-second field goal.
